F.R.C.O. HOOD. As new. 25s. Apply, 84, Whittington Road, N.22.

ORGANS (New and Second-hand) for SALE.—Electric and pneumatic action up-to-date. Built or reconstructed. Bedwell & Son, The Cambridge Organ Works, Cambridge.

CHURCH ORGANS STANDARDISED.—Two Manuals, Pneumatic Pedals, various sizes: specially built. Five to fifteen stops. Introduced to meet the requirements of the times at minimum cost. W. E. Richardson & Sons, Central Organ Works, Manchester, S.W.

SEVERAL ORGANS, suitable for small Churches, for SALE. From £300. Erection according to distance. Bedwell & Son, The Cambridge Organ Works, Cambridge.

ORGAN.—Second-hand, WANTED. Pipe and Pedal, 1-manual. Available space 6-ft. by 6-ft. All particulars, "Morton," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

FOR SALE.—ORGAN PEDAL Attachment for American Organ. Two Sets Reeds. Good condition. £6. Apply, J. W. Burnett, 7, Victoria Terrace, Sutton-on-Sea, Lincs.

PIANO PEDAL ATTACHMENT, with adjustable Stool, FOR SALE. R.C.O. specification, perfect condition. Best offer secures. "Reg.," 2, Grosvenor Road, Norwich.

A FULL BROADWOOD GRAND FOR SALE. Nearly new. Cheap to quick buyer. Apply, F. Cleasby, "Moorland View," 2, Richmond Terrace, Darwen, Lancs.

VIOLIN (Gagliano) for SALE.—£80. Absolutely authentic. Very interesting instrument. Velvety tone. Appy, Mr. Wiltberger, notaire à Phalsbourg, Moselle, France.

BANJO FOR SALE.—Patent Zipther Cammeyer. As new. Fine singing tone. 12½ guineas. Present list price, 21 guineas. A bargain. Apply, "Box No. 56," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

VALUABLE MUSICAL LIBRARY FOR DISPOSAL; either separate or collective. Stamped, addressed envelope for list. Main, "Durban," Malvern.

FOR SALE.—Moskowa: "Recueil des Morceaux de Musique Ancienne," 11 Vols. (For details, see "Grove's Dictionary of Music," under Moskowa). Apply, "H. C. V.," c/o Novello & Co..Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

SINGING.—TO STUDENTS AND OTHERS. A Special Paper on the "Art of Singing."—Invaluable to beginners. Secure a thorough grounding in the first principles of the art. Enclose 4s. 6d. to "Singing," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, London, W.1.

AURAL TESTS.—L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., and others. Very important Paper on this Test. Showing how to acquire accuracy in naming any, and all intervals. Successful at previous exams. Enclose 4s. 6d. to "Aural Tests," c/o Novello & Co., 160, Wardour Street, London, W.1.

MUSIC COMPOSERS and LYRIC WRITERS.—Songs, Lyrics, and Musical Compositions Wanted for Publication. We compose Music to Lyrics if desired. Advice free to new authors and composers. Send MSS. (words or music) to the Carlton Music Agency, 8, Lloyd Square, London, W.C.1.

A TREATISE ON CONDUCTING.

12,000 WORDS. 1s. 9d. Illustrated Method! Post 2d. (C.O.D. 2s. 6d.). 800 Copies sold. Invaluable to Leaders and Members of any Orchestra, Band, or Choir. M. T. Cooper, M.D., 23, Beech Avenue, Blackpool.

COMMUNION SERVICE in F, complete, with 9-fold Kyrie. Specimen 1s., from R. R. Glendinning, 13, Langton Terrace, Falmouth.

MUSIC COPIED, neat work, Transposition and Duplicating. E. W. Cartwright, 25, Irving Rd., Bournemouth.

DARLINGTON'S HANDBOOKS.

"Nothing better could be wished for."—British Weekly.

FRENCH AND ITALIAN RIVIERA. 60 Illustrations, Maps and Plans, 6/-.

WEST SWITZERLAND. 100 Illustrations, Maps and Plans, 4/-.
- 2/- Paris, Lyons, and Rhone Valley.
- 2/- Chamonix and Environs.
- 2/- Lake Geneva, Rhone Valley, and Zermatt.
- 2/- The French Riviera.
- 2/- The Italian Riviera.
- 2/- Bernese Oberland and Lucerne.

NORTH WALES. 60 Illustrations, Maps and Plans, 7/6.

DEVON & CORNWALL. 100 Illustrations, Maps and Plans, 7/6.

NORTH DEVON AND NORTH CORNWALL. 50 Illustrations, 6 Maps, 4/-

SOUTH DEVON AND SOUTH CORNWALL. 50 Illustrations, 6 Maps, 4/-.

THE HOTELS OF THE WORLD. A Handbook to the Leading Hotels throughout the World, 2/6.

List of DARLINGTON'S HANDBOOKS post free.
Llangollen: DARLINGTON & Co. London: SIMPKINS. Railway Bookstalls and all Booksellers.
Paris and New York: BRENTANO'S.

PIANO PEDALS, with Octave Coupler

This wonderful invention supersedes all Piano Pedals, and is a Master Patent

St. George's Hall, Liverpool,
9th April, 1921.

"The simplicity of the attachment, and the clever sixteen-feet, eight-feet, or both combined, 'OPTIONAL OCTAVE' contrivance astonished me.

"I was delighted with the Pedal touch and with the variety in that touch, which your Attachment makes possible. It is very responsive to the movements of the feet, and is reliable."

HERBERT F. ELLINGFORD, Mus. Bac., Oxon., F.R.C.O.

Owing to increased output, we have reduced the price of our Popular Model to 14 guineas cash. Deferred payments if desired.

Write for Lists, Prices, and Clients' Opinions, and References to

THE MALKIN PATENT PEDAL CO., LTD.,

NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME.

London address: 11, Ashlake Road, Streatham, S.W.16.

Music and Books

at Great Reductions.

Foyles hold a wide range of Second-hand Copies in good condition of Pianoforte and Organ Music, Oratorios, Operas, and Choral Works of every description, Standard Musical Text-books, Dramatic Literature and Plays, which they offer at tremendous reductions. Send for Catalogue 122 (free); mentioning definite requirements if possible.

New Books and Music supplied on best terms, and prompt delivery guaranteed.

Music and Books Purchased.

FOYLE'S MUSIC DEPT.,

121-125, CHARING CROSS ROAD, LONDON, W.C.2.

MANUSCRIPT MUSIC PADS.

9-in. × 7¼-in.

500 Sheets, 4s.; 1,000, 7s. 6d. HANDY POCKET MANUSCRIPT MUSIC BOOKS, 40 Pages, 6¼ × 4¼, dozen books, 3s. 6d. Made specially for your Theory, &c. Professional Cards, Exquisitely perfumed. 3s. 6d. 100; sample cards free. SEND NOW!

FREDERICK BROWN, Manufacturing Printer, &c., BOSTON, ENGLAND.

NOW READY: No. 21, JULY, 1926. The First Number of the Sixth Volume.

THE ORGAN

A QUARTERLY MAGAZINE WORTHY OF THE INSTRUMENT.

LITERARY CONTENTS:

64 quarto pages of literary matter, well printed on antique paper.

ORGANS OF ST. MARY WOOLNOTH, LONDON.
The Rev. Andrew Freeman, Mus. B., F.R.C.O. (Standish, Glos.).
SOME ORGANS I HAVE KNOWN.
Stanley Lucas (London).
THE DEVELOPMENT OF THE ELECTRIC ORGAN.
Reginald Whitworth (Sheffield).
ORGAN AT ST. PETER'S, EATON SQUARE.
Gilbert Benham (Barnet).
ALBERT LISTER PEACE.
Orlando A. Mansfield, Mus. D., F.R.C.O., F.A.G.O.
THE ORGAN AT FINEDON CHURCH, NORTHANTS.
The Rev. Andrew Freeman, Mus. B., F.R.C.O. (Standish, Glos.).
SAMUEL WESLEY THE ELDER AS ORGAN COMPOSER.
C. W. Pearce, M.A., Mus. D. (Bristol).
THE ORGAN OF THE CATHEDRAL AT TOUL.
Félix Raugel (Paris).
A NEW BOOK ON BACH.
A. Eaglefield Hull, Mus. D. (Huddersfield).
ECHO FROM THE PAST.
REVIEWS OF BOOKS AND MUSIC.
LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

NINE PLATES:

ST. MARY WOOLNOTH, LONDON.
Old Case re-erected at the West End in 1913; Old Case on North Side of Chancel; New Case on North Side of Chancel. 3 plates.

ST. PETER'S, EATON SQUARE, LONDON.
General View; Console. 2 plates.

FINEDON CHURCH.
General View of Organ. 1 plate.

CATHEDRAL OF TOUL.
General View of Organ. 1 plate.

TWO FRENCH ORGAN CASES.
Saint-Jacques, Lunéville; Saint-Etienne, Bar-le-Duc. 1 plate.

THE ELECTRIC ORGAN ACTION.
1 plate.

Copies may be purchased for 2*s.* each (by post 2*s.* 2*d.*) at the Office of Musical Opinion, 13, Chichester Rents, Chancery Lane, W.C.2. Annual Subscription, 8*s.* 6*d.* Or of all Newsagents, or of W. H. Smith & Son establishments.

EXPERIENCE AND REPUTATION

BY APPOINTMENT.

Over thirty years' experience in the manufacture of Organ Blowing Machinery is behind the fine reputation held by the "DISCUS" Organ Blower. During this period, installations have been made with complete success to a very large number of Cathedrals, Churches, and Public Buildings both at home and abroad. We can supply blowers to suit any size or type of organ, and the motive power may be either electricity, gas, or oil. Our wide and varied experience is at your disposal. Write now for a free copy of our illustrated booklet, "Organ Blowing," and let us supply free estimate and suggestions from your particulars.

Some of the many DISCUS installations:

Westminster Abbey
York Minster
Southwark Cathedral
Bath Abbey
Westminster Chapel
City Temple
St. Martin-in-the-Fields
Malvern College
Wellington College
Eton
Harrow
Royal Albert Hall
Queen's Hall
Royal Academy of Music.

Also in Australia, India, South Africa, New Zealand, China.

THE "DISCUS" ORGAN BLOWER
REGD. TRADE MARK.

WATKINS & WATSON.
WHITE LION STREET, LONDON, N.1.

THE SUPERB

BECHSTEIN PIANOS

You can examine a magnificent selection of Bechstein Pianos—new and second-hand—at 126, NEW BOND ST., W.1.

Can be purchased by instalments, no deposit required.

Old Pianos taken in exchange, highest value allowed.

Call or write for Catalogue.

The Autoplayer Co., Ltd.,
BECHSTEIN PIANO SPECIALISTS.
Mayfair 2653.

STEINWAY STUDIOS

COMFORTABLY FURNISHED
ELECTRIC LIGHT
CENTRAL HEATING
TELEPHONE LIFT
NEW STEINWAY PIANOS

Full particulars from
STEINWAY & SONS
THE NEW STEINWAY HALL,
1 & 2, GEORGE ST., CONDUIT ST., LONDON, W.1.
'PHONE: MAYFAIR 6641-5.

PIANOS

BECHSTEIN. BORD.
SCHIEDMAYER. ROGERS

NEW AND SECOND-HAND
CASH OR HIRE PURCHASE

Pianos taken in exchange.

Apply for lists:

CHAS. STILES & CO.
74-76, SOUTHAMPTON ROW
LONDON, W.C.1.
'Phone: MUSEUM 0439.

CRAMER STUDIOS

from 3 GNS.
per term

RECENTLY RENOVATED
NEW CRAMER PIANOS

139 NEW BOND STREET
LONDON W1

RELIEVES COLDS
PREVENTS "FLU"
VAPEX
(REG TRADE MARK)
INHALANT

THE VERDICT OF SCIENCE

INDEPENDENT scientific tests prove that "Vapex" quickly destroys the germs which cause colds and catarrhal conditions. The vapour of "Vapex" is strongly germicidal, and surrounds the user with a pleasant, antiseptic atmosphere in which germs cannot grow.

Try a drop on the handkerchief each morning.

All Chemists, 2s. and 3s.

SOLE MAKERS:
THOMAS KERFOOT & CO., LTD.,
BARDSLEY VALE, LANCS.

JUST PUBLISHED.

FINAL BOOK
OF THE
BREARE VOCAL SERIES
No. 5,
"VOCAL ANALYSES:
SENSITISING BREATH—
EMOTIONAL EVOLUTION."
Price 5*s.*, by Post, 5*s.* 4½*d.*

Previous Books of the Series—No. 1, "Vocalism: Its Structure and Culture, from an English Standpoint." No. 2, "Elocution: Its First Principles." No. 3, "Vocal Faults and their Remedies." No. 4, "Vocal Technique: How it Feels to Sing."

Books No. 1 to No. 4, price 3*s.* 6*d.* each, till pre-war editions exhausted.

By W. H. BREARE, J.P., M.I.J., Vocal Adviser.
Address: HERALD BUILDINGS, HARROGATE, ENGLAND.
Publishers
London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT & Co.
Harrogate: R. ACKRILL, Ltd.

JAMES LYON, MUS. DOC.

ELEMENTS OF HARMONY
3*s.* 6*d.*

Answers to Questions and Exercises on the Elements of Harmony.
2*s.* 6*d.*

BANKS & SON, MUSIC PUBLISHERS, YORK.

JUST PUBLISHED.

NOVELLO'S SCHOOL SONGS.
BOOK 274.

FOLK-SONGS
FOR SCHOOLS.

COLLECTED AND ARRANGED BY
CECIL J. SHARP.

SET IX.

No.
1407	BLACKBIRDS AND THRUSHES
1408	DABBLING IN THE DEW
1409	THE BONNY LIGHTER-BOY
1410	THE BAILIFF'S DAUGHTER OF ISLINGTON
1411	THE TREE IN THE WOOD
1412	THE BOLD FISHERMAN
1413	MY BOY WILLIE
1414	SCARBOROUGH FAIR
1415	SEARCHING FOR LAMBS

Price Twopence each number.

Price One Shilling.
Voice Parts only, 4*d.*

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JOHN SEBASTIAN BACH

48 PRELUDES AND FUGUES

(THE WELL-TEMPERED CLAVICHORD)

A NEW EDITION, EDITED BY HAROLD BROOKE.

IN TWO PARTS.

Price Four Shillings each.

Or, Complete, Cloth, Price Twelve Shillings and Sixpence.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NOW READY.

THE ENGLISH PSALTER

CONTAINING

THE PSALMS OF DAVID

TOGETHER WITH

THE CANTICLES

AND

PROPER PSALMS FOR CERTAIN DAYS

EDITED AND POINTED FOR CHANTING

UPON THE PRINCIPLES OF NATURAL SPEECH-RHYTHM

BY

CHARLES MACPHERSON, Mus. Doc.
(ORGANIST OF ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL).

EDWARD C. BAIRSTOW, Mus. Doc.
(ORGANIST OF YORK MINSTER).

PERCY C. BUCK, M.A., Mus. Doc.
(DIRECTOR OF MUSIC IN HARROW SCHOOL).

PRICES:

Demy 8vo size ... Four Shillings net.
Imperial 32mo ... One Shilling and Sixpence net.

THE CANTICLES ONLY

Demy 8vo size ... ... Sixpence net.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NOVELLO'S HANDBOOKS FOR MUSICIANS.

EDITED BY ERNEST NEWMAN.

CHORAL TECHNIQUE AND INTERPRETATION

BY HENRY COWARD.

MUS. DOC., Oxon.

Published as a Net Book. Price, Cloth, gilt, Seven Shillings and Sixpence net.

THE TEACHING AND ACCOMPANIMENT OF PLAINSONG

BY

FRANCIS BURGESS.

Published as a Net Book. Price, Cloth, gilt, Five Shillings and Sixpence net.

THE

Interpretation of the Music of the 17th & 18th Centuries

AS REVEALED BY CONTEMPORARY EVIDENCE

BY

ARNOLD DOLMETSCH.

Published as a Net Book. Price, Cloth, gilt, Fifteen Shillings net.

APPENDIX.

CONTAINING TWENTY-TWO ILLUSTRATIVE PIECES.

Price Five Shillings and Sixpence.

THE

SOURCES OF KEYBOARD MUSIC IN ENGLAND

BY

CHARLES VAN DEN BORREN.

Professor of the Université Nouvelle of Brussels.

TRANSLATED FROM THE FRENCH BY

JAMES E. MATTHEW.

Published as a Net Book. Price, Cloth, gilt, Ten Shillings and Sixpence net.

THE THEORY OF HARMONY

An Inquiry into the Natural Principles of Harmony, with an examination of the chief systems of Harmony from Rameau to the present day.

BY

MATTHEW SHIRLAW

MUS. D., F.R.C.O.

(Lecturer in Music, University of Edinburgh, &c.)

Published as a Net Book. Price, Cloth, gilt, Fifteen Shillings net.

THE ORGAN WORKS OF BACH

BY

HARVEY GRACE.

With an Introduction by ERNEST NEWMAN.

Published as a Net Book. Price, Cloth, gilt, Nine Shillings net.

THE

ORGAN WORKS OF RHEINBERGER

BY

HARVEY GRACE.

Published as a Net Book. Price, Cloth, Five Shillings net.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

JUST PUBLISHED.

AN ABRIDGED CONCERT EDITION OF

SEMELE

A SECULAR ORATORIO

FOR FOUR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

BY

G. F. HANDEL

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE

The time of performance of this edition is about two hours, and the orchestral parts have been so cued that it may be performed with accompaniment of: (1) Strings only; (2) Strings and Pianoforte; (3) Strings, or Strings and Pianoforte, with the addition of any Wind up to the complete Score of 2 Oboes, 2 Bassoons, 2 Horns, 2 Trumpets, Drums.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

TO BE PUBLISHED EARLY IN SEPTEMBER.

AN ABRIDGED

CONCERT EDITION

OF

CARMEN

AN OPERA

NEW TRANSLATION BY

LUCIA YOUNG.

MUSIC BY

GEORGES BIZET.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

TO BE PUBLISHED EARLY IN SEPTEMBER.

AN ABRIDGED

CONCERT EDITION

OF

KING ARTHUR

AN OPERA

LIBRETTO BY

JOHN DRYDEN.

MUSIC BY

HENRY PURCELL.

PRICE, TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, London, W.1.

President:
THE RT. HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.P., G.C.V.O., C.B.E.

Chairman of Board and Director of Studies:
Professor J. C. BRIDGE, M.A., Mus. D., F.S.A.

Director of Examinations: E. F. HORNER, Mus. D.

September 20th.—Michaelmas Term begins.

September 22nd, at 3 p.m.—The Inaugural Address will be delivered by Sir ALFRED HOPKINSON, K.C., M.P., late Vice-Chancellor of Victoria University, Manchester. Subject: "Metre and Music."

September 29th, at 3 p.m.—Lecture by Mr. JAMES BROWN, Mus. B., on "Style and Quality in String Quartet Playing," with musical illustrations.

The College provides INSTRUCTION and TRAINING in all Musical Subjects (Instrumental, Vocal, and Theoretical) and Dramatic and Operatic Elocution. The Lessons are arranged to meet the convenience of both day and evening students. Entry may be made for any number of Subjects—from one to the Full Course. The College is open to beginners as well as to the more proficient student; pupils under 16 years of age are received for the Junior School at reduced fees.

The ORCHESTRAL, CHORAL, the OPERATIC, and CHAMBER MUSIC CLASSES are open to sufficiently competent persons who are not College Students for other subjects.

Tuition in the Rudiments of the Theory of Music, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Instrumentation, Composition, and the Art of Teaching is also given by Correspondence.

There are between Forty and Fifty Scholarships tenable at the College and open to all British subjects up to certain age limits, and the Bambridge Pianoforte Scholarship, value £100 per annum; also Eighteen Scholarships which provide complete preparation for the Degree of Bachelor of Music.

Particulars of the Teaching Department, with list of Professors, Fees, Scholarships regulations, &c., and the Syllabuses of the Diploma and Local Examinations, free on application to the undersigned. C. N. H. RODWELL, Secretary.

A MINIATURE
BY SIR EDWARD ELGAR

MESSRS. ELKIN & Co., Ltd., have much pleasure in announcing that they have now incorporated in their catalogue SIR EDWARD ELGAR'S

MAY-SONG

This graceful piece, which is not difficult to play, will appeal alike to the amateur and the professional, to the "man in the street" and the expert musician.

Piano Solo - 2*s.* Violin and Piano 2*s.*
Full Orchestra, 3*s.* Orchestral Score 1*s.* 6*d.*

ELKIN & Co., Ltd.,
20, KINGLY STREET, REGENT STREET,
LONDON, W.1.

BROADWOOD PIANOS

BOSWORTH & CO., LTD.

ORGAN MUSIC.

ORGAN WORKS OF FAMOUS MASTERS.
(G. RAMIN.)
KISTNER EDITION, No. 107. Price 3*s.* 6*d.*

PRELUDES ALBUM.
(HOMMEYER.)
Containing 87 Preludes and other pieces of famous Organ Masters.
STEINGRABER EDITION No. 67. Price 2*s.* 6*d.*

HARMONIUM MUSIC.

BACH ALBUM.
SELECTED COMPOSITIONS.
(E. PAUL.)
KISTNER EDITION No. 100. Price 2*s.* 6*d.*

BOSWORTH & CO., LTD.,
8, HEDDON STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.1.

JUST PUBLISHED.

No. 102.—NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS.

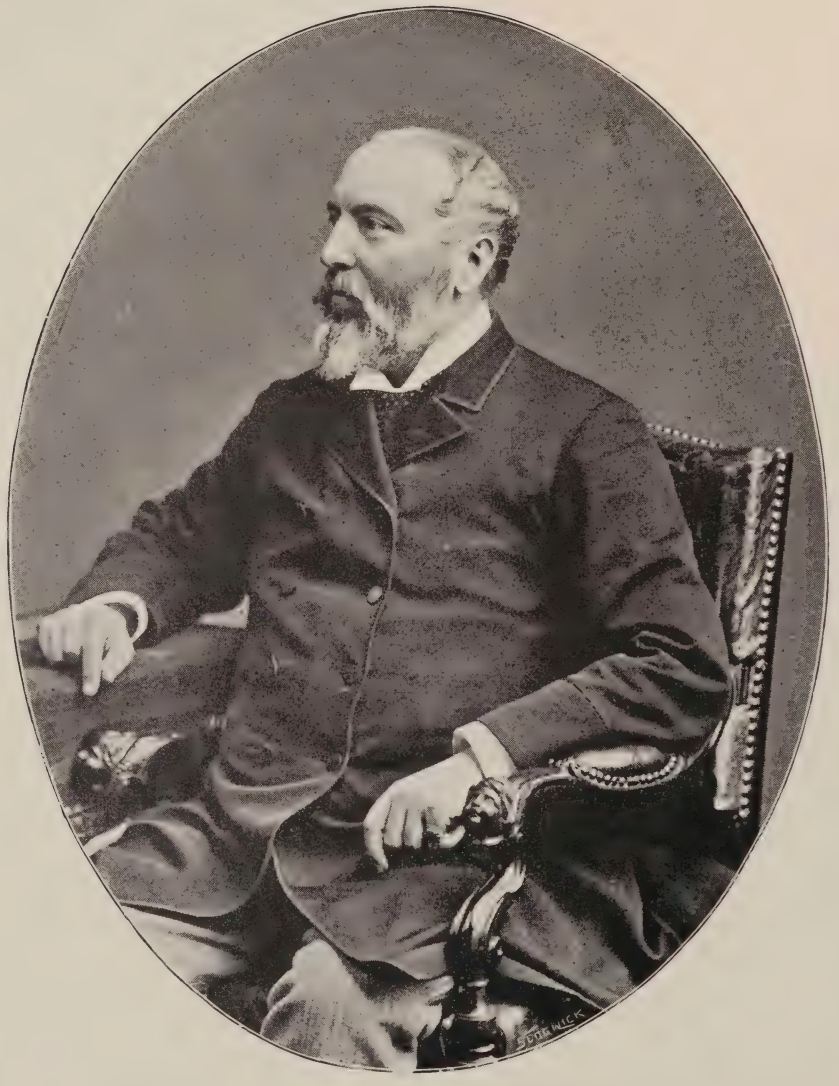
THE INSTRUMENTS OF THE ORCHESTRA.

BY
JOHN E. BORLAND

WITH ILLUSTRATIONS.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.



WILLIAM THOMAS BEST

b. Carlisle, 1826. d. Liverpool, 1897.

The Musical Times

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

AUGUST 1 1926

(FOR LIST OF CONTENTS SEE PAGE 750.)

WILLIAM THOMAS BEST

BORN AUGUST 13, 1826

In a conversation, towards the end of his life, with a young organist named Freudenberg, Beethoven said :

> I, too, played the organ a great deal in my youth, but my nerves could not stand the power of the gigantic instrument. I place an organist who is master of his instrument first among virtuosi.

The organ in Beethoven's day was still a clumsy affair, and he must have had vivid recollections of his early struggles with the example at the Minorites' Church at Bonn, where, as a boy, he played at the six o'clock Mass.

A player able to produce a thoroughly satisfying artistic result from an instrument on which little tonal variety is possible without frequent resort to mechanical changes involving dexterous (and sometimes strenuous) use of hands and feet, well deserves some such handsome tribute as that paid by Beethoven. Even to-day, when the organ is both richer in resource and far easier to handle, a first-rate recitalist probably uses more mental and physical energy than any other performer, with the additional strain of having to adapt himself to a fresh set of conditions (tonal scheme, touch, acoustics, stop-positions, &c.) with every instrument he plays on. Yet it is a notorious fact that, however fine his performance, he meets with far less recognition than the pianist or violinist of equal, or even inferior, quality.*

For these reasons, the centenary of the birth of one of the greatest organists of any age or country calls for special notice, if only by way of protest against the lack of appreciation of the organist as concert-player.

The biographical facts concerning Best are so easily accessible that there is no need to go over them in this article. It will be of more use and interest to glance at his achievements and personality.

Any discussion of Best's work must treat of him under three heads—as player, composer, and transcriber. His importance lay in the first and third of these rôles, but he is by no means negligible in the second, as I hope to show.

Best was an outstanding proof that, despite the proverb, a man may teach himself and yet not have a fool for his master. A few lessons in boyhood were sufficient to start him. Mr. Mewburn Levien* tells me that he thinks Best's first instructor was his elder sister, who was by way of being an organist. Then came a brief spell with the Carlisle Cathedral assistant, followed by a little more help from an official of the Blind Asylum at Liverpool. Some knowledge of counterpoint was obtained from John Richardson, a practitioner of whom I can discover nothing but that he is said to have done two such ill-sorted feats as drink himself into the workhouse, where he died, and compose a set of 'Lamentations' which were long in use in Roman Catholic churches.

From this humble beginning Best developed a technical and interpretative mastery so complete as to impress even such musicians as Liszt and von Bülow. 'I had no idea,' wrote the latter, 'that the organ could be played as Mr. Best played it.' And probably it couldn't be, for Best's only rival at that time seems to have been Schneider, of Dresden; and the late Heathcote Statham, a capital judge and one who heard Best play almost weekly for fifteen years, was of opinion that in the matter of execution he 'could have played Schneider's head off.'† And he points out that (like so many other English artists) Best seems to have been more highly esteemed on the Continent than in his own country. An English musician who had just returned from a tour over a great part of Europe, told Mr. Statham that 'he was surprised at Best's widespread reputation abroad; if they knew of no other English musician,' he said, 'they had all heard of Best.'

Mr. Statham rightly protests against the scant justice done to Best in the first edition of 'Grove' and in the 'Dictionary of National Biography.' The former, he says, consisted of > . . . merely the dry facts as to his various appointments, without the slightest attempt to give any real estimate of his extraordinary and quite unequalled powers as an executant and as a master of organ effect.

On the other hand, Thalberg—'a mere piano virtuoso'—was accorded a far longer and fuller article :

> . . . whereas Best was not only fully equal to Thalberg on his own instrument, but was also a much better all-round musician, with much fuller knowledge of the art.

In considering Best's attainments as a player, we may pass over, as taken for granted, his keyboard technique, and concentrate rather on the interpretative side, especially registration—a department of organ playing in which, both as performer and transcriber, he has exercised so much influence.

Concerning his manual technique, it should, however, be pointed out that he was a first-rate pianist. Mr. Statham relates that he once heard him play the pianoforte for a whole evening, and was so much struck by the delicacy of touch and

* It is obvious, however, that this disability is largely removed if the organist happens to be a foreigner. Hence an anomaly at the recent Handel Festival. Here was an occasion peculiarly English, with English vocal soloists, orchestra, and conductor; yet for the one organ solo performance a Frenchman was engaged!

* Mr. Levien knew Best well, and, for the purposes of this article, has kindly given me a good deal of information which has not hitherto been published.

† 'The Organ and its Position in Musical Art.' This excellent book contains a chapter of reminiscences of Best. As the work is out of print, I have drawn on it for some particulars.

beauty of tone that he urged him—without success—to give one or two pianoforte recitals in the smaller concert-room at St. George's Hall.

Apropos of this foundation of pianoforte technique, it is worth noting that Best, in the very first sentence of his 'First Organ Book,' is emphatic on the point:

> It is necessary that the student of the organ should be acquainted, previously, with all that concerns the technical difficulties of the keyboard of a pianoforte.

And he follows this up with a formidable list of studies from the Little Preludes of Bach, and the rigours of Plaidy, to Herz's 'Etudes de l'Agilité,' and the Op. 70 of Moscheles.

He had beautiful hands, 'rather thick at the knuckles [says Mr. Statham], and with long taper fingers, which struck the keys with the precision of mechanical levers; it was impossible to see more beautiful and yet quiet execution.'

Best's well-known vanity concerning his hands was understandable, for an Italian sculptor was so much struck by their beauty that he made a cast of one of them. (This model was presented by his widow to the late Lord Russell of Liverpool.)

Looking at Best's transcriptions, one naturally receives an impression that the prime quality in his registration was its reproduction of orchestral effects. Yet it was evidently something far more individual and artistic. After all, such reproduction or imitation may be achieved by any player, provided the necessary stops are available. Best, however, seems to have been gifted with—or, rather, to have developed—an instinct for registration corresponding to that which some composers discover for orchestration. He seems to have been the Berlioz of the organ. Concerning this faculty, Mr. Statham says:

> The intuitive perception which Best seemed to have as to the precise timbre which suited the character and expression of the music was one of the most remarkable qualities of his playing. He did not use the stops merely according to ordinary and recognised combinations; at least, he departed from these whenever the special character of the music seemed to require it. I can remember, when he was playing the Overture to 'Jessonda,' how the very sound of the first chord seemed to give a certain Oriental tint to the music; the stops had been carefully combined so as to give something different from the ordinary Great organ tone. And it was the same in everything he played; whatever the character of the passage might be, we were sure to have the stop or selection of stops that suited it best.

For the encouragement of young players who may think that Best did this sort of thing easily, it may be pointed out that there is ample evidence as to its having been the result of sheer hard work. Though nobody could more readily grasp the potentialities of an unfamiliar organ, Best would spend hours on even a small instrument, trying all the available combinations, and, if possible, discovering their effect in different parts of the building. Mr. Levien tells me that he possesses a manuscript on which is a carefully worked-out scheme for the registration of Mendelssohn's Sonatas, prepared by Best for recitals he was to give at Rome. (How many players bother much about the registration of these works, even on their own organ!)

We are reminded of this unsparing thoroughness when we read the closing sentences of the section on 'The Art of Registering' in his 'First Organ Book':

> No more fatiguing exercise for the mind of an executant can be imagined than the consecutive display of different organs of large size. Each instrument demands its own special study, and every minute detail of tone in an organ previously played must be entirely banished from the memory before a performance upon another can be undertaken with any degree of success.

Nor were these scrupulous pains confined to his solo playing. After a performance of 'Elijah,' accompanied by organ alone, he said to Statham, 'Getting up those accompaniments was the hardest day's work I ever had in my life.' Yet, so far as the mere playing of notes was concerned, he could have done it to the general satisfaction with very little trouble. But the satisfaction would not have been shared by Best, who felt it incumbent on him to reproduce as faithfully as possible the details of the orchestration. Again, at a performance of 'The Messiah,' with organ alone (says Statham):

> . . . he deliberately suppressed a great deal of the most typical organ tone, playing the pedal part, for instance, with violone tone instead of the open diapason, arranging the organ all through so as to get as much of the effect of string tone as possible where strings were to be represented. . . . As to his representation of the wind-instrument parts in Mozart's accompaniments, I remember Hullah expressing his astonishment at it. 'I went to a performance without a band,' he said, 'and I heard all the wind parts perfectly distinct, just as if the band had been there.'

And as an example of Best's unremitting attention to detail, the same authority tells us that in playing a Mendelssohn pianoforte piece in which there was a scale-passage which soared up beyond the range of the organ, instead of modifying the passage in order to bring it within the organ compass—a quite excusable step—Best began it on the Great with an 8-ft. stop, and when the limit of that keyboard was reached, finished it on the Solo with a 4-ft. stop of similar character. There was not the slightest break in the flow or change in the tone. It was, as Statham says, a little thing, but it was characteristic of his passion for accuracy.

It would be easy to multiply examples of this kind, but there is no need; readers who possess a few of Best's arrangements can easily find instances. Instead, attention may be drawn to a point that is often overlooked by organ composers and arrangers, but concerning which Best was fastidious. I quote Statham again:

> The æsthetic finish [of his transcriptions] is shown not only in the choice of stops, but in the very manner in which chords are placed; there is never a note too much in a chord; it is always placed, and the notes distributed, so as to have the best effect. . . . It is quite possible on the organ to render a chord ineffective or muddy from putting too many notes into it, or grouping them badly—a mistake that will never be found in Best's arrangements.

Side by side with this careful avoidance of muddiness should be noted Best's knack of obtaining sonority, especially in quiet passages, by the use of octaves in the left hand—an effect evidently suggested by certain uses of the wood-wind instruments of the orchestra.

By the way, there are still folk who condemn Mixtures. Here is Best's view, as expressed in this Preface:

> The Mixture work, when artistically composed and tempered in its progress through the gamut, constitutes the distinguishing test of a good organ-builder. No other legitimate means exists of adding harmonious power to an organ; without stops of this class, the effect of the great works of Bach and other composers is irreparably lost, and the organ at once descends to the low level of a mere museum of imitative stops, while the unique grandeur of its position among musical instruments is totally effaced.

—which is an over-statement of a good case!

Best's arrangements are almost invariably on the difficult side, calling for good technique, an organ of ample resource, and skilful management. Sometimes he carries his demands too far. According to Statham, the transcription of the 'Magic Flute' Overture was an early experiment. Statham suggests that nobody but Best himself could have played it; probably the present-day development of organ technique and registration facilities may have brought it within the range of practical politics. Still, it remains a forbidding piece of work, with its elaborate registration, swift manual changes, and huge stretches. It is said that when he was asked to play to Wesley, Best chose this work. Wesley's comment at its close was brief: 'Ah! you are young!' Admiration no doubt had a dash of envy in it—the more so as Wesley had competed for the post at St. George's Hall when Best was appointed.

As a composer, Best was unequal, but he wrote a few things that well deserve a long life in the repertory. His 'March for a Church Festival' is deservedly popular, but there are other pieces that are even better. He was a capital hand at a fugue, the one in E showing his powers to great advantage. There are some effective pages in his 'Six Pieces for Christmas.' These are in his 'Collection of Pieces, expressly composed for Church Use'—a set that contains other good things, including a Wedding March that might well relieve the 'Lohengrin' Bridal Chorus and the 'Midsummer Night's Dream' March. Best probably wrote it because of his objection to the Mendelssohn piece, on the ground of its being 'theatre fairy music.' He objected also to playing the 'Saul' Dead March; 'music written to commemorate a Jewish suicide [he said] was not suitable for the funeral of a Christian who died in his bed.' Hence, perhaps, the inclusion of a Funeral March in the set of pieces mentioned above. Any reference to Best as a composer would be incomplete without a mention of his admirable 'Art of Organ Playing,' wherein is the fruit of an experience all the more valuable for having been acquired largely through self-tuition. His own study, by the bye, was from a German organ book, for which he frequently expressed high admiration, but nobody seems to know the author. Was it solid old Rink?

Inevitably his skill in registration affected his playing of Bach in a direction that is now not generally approved. His own edition of Bach is over-registered, and the result is apt to be unsatisfactory, even when such treatment is comfortably manageable. Statham says that he was at his best in playing Bach, and gives instances of particularly striking performances. Putting aside the question of registration, as a matter on which widely different opinions are allowable, there can be no doubt that his playing of Bach gained enormously from a characteristic that seems to have impressed all who saw and heard him play—that is, an almost uncanny self-possession and nervous control. This, at the back of his marvellous technique, must have made his playing of a long work of Bach a memorable experience. As to accuracy, Statham says that, although he heard him play many hundreds of times, he remembered hearing him make only one mistake:

> He was playing Beethoven's Funeral March from the A flat Sonata from memory, and in the first bar of the Trio he played the tremolando through only a quarter of the bar instead of the half-bar. I saw him shake his head, and it was set right in the next bar.

His remarkable control and steadiness in playing long and difficult works has been ascribed to a peculiar source. Best had an extraordinarily slow pulse—so slow that I understand it was made the subject of an article in the Lancet by the late Dr. Charles Hayward, who attended Best medically. Dr. Hayward gave the rate to Mr. Levien, who has mislaid the note. Mr. Levien tells us that Dr. Stanley Mellville (President of the Royal Society of Medicine), who knew Best's playing, and who is himself a pianist (having, by the way, once accompanied Santley), suggests that the very slow pulse had a great deal to do with Best's steadiness and absence of flurry or 'nerves' throughout long and exacting performances.

That Best was a man of unusual force of character is evident from the technical thoroughness and brilliance which he achieved practically unaided. He was, in fact, a type of man who would have distinguished himself in almost any walk of life. That his personal popularity was far less than his merits deserved was due to his strong views and his pungent method of expressing them. The stories of his shrewd and biting tongue are so numerous that anything like a representative collection is impossible in the limits of an article. Allusion should be made, however, to a subject that called forth a great many of his best-known obiter dicta, i.e., his consistent stand on behalf of the organist's calling:

> Every small singer [he used to say] is allowed to come down to the front of the platform and get en rapport with the audience, but there am I, far away, stuck behind a sort of tombstone, perhaps, with the back of my head to the audience.

Something of this resentment creeps into a passage in his 'First Organ Book':

> The usual position given to the player, even in the largest instruments (though profitable to organ-builders), is perhaps the very worst that could be chosen. Seated within an opening scooped out of the front of the organ-case, and ignominiously placed with his back to everyone, the organist is effectually prevented from judging the various combinations of tone employed; nor can he hear the voices of the choir at all properly, being in the immediate region of many hundreds of pipes, which, combined together, produce a tumult of sound. Added to this, in a church he does not face the East end; and in a concert room, unlike every other artist, he is obliged to turn his back to the audience, is perched up at a great height, and seated practically inside the instrument he plays. The proceeding, in fact, is about as sensible as going into a belfry in order to hear the effect of a peal of bells.

He missed no opportunity of showing that, although the audience saw no more of him than the back of his head, he claimed the same courtesy that would be given to a more fortunately placed soloist. Thus, at a banquet where the after-dinner programme included an organ solo by Best, the chairman announced: 'The organ will now play.' Best continued his conversation with a neighbour as if he had not heard; whereupon an attendant came up: 'Didn't you hear, Mr. Best? The organ will now play.' 'Damn the organ! Let it play!' replied Best, quietly, but with terrible distinctness, and went on with his conversation till placated by a message from the chair. One more example: During the interval between the two parts of an oratorio he received a message that people would like to hear the organ during the re-assembling of the audience and chorus. Best, with good reason, took this ill. Would the executive think of asking a pianist or orchestra, or, in fact, any performer other than an organist, to play while folk were clattering to their seats? However, as they wished to hear the organ, they should hear it; and he promptly cut four little wedges from a lead pencil, drew the diapasons, and left the chord of C wedged down during the interval. Practical reproofs of this sort, however, make many enemies and few friends, and undoubtedly Best paid the penalty. 'You have wonderful ability,' said a friend to him, 'but though you've got the world at your feet, you have the devil at your elbow.' 'What do you mean?' asked Best. 'Your sharp tongue,' was the reply.

I cannot resist quoting one little anecdote from Statham's book:

> One day he saw on the counter of a music-shop a new organ piece by an amateur of more social than musical importance, written out in three staves for an obbligato pedal part, but with nothing for the pedal but one long note at the end. Best looked it over silently till he came to this, when he said, putting on a look of surprise: 'Ha! there's a note for the leg, I see!' And one realised that the composition was judged.

It is a pity that no biography of Best seems to have appeared. Such a volume would be of great personal interest, and might be made of permanent value to organists by the inclusion of copious information concerning his methods, both in real organ music and transcription. There seems to be an abundance of material scattered about in odd books and periodicals, awaiting a sympathetic biographer. Perhaps the centenary of his birth will stir up some suitable writer to undertake the long overdue task of worthily commemorating a great artist and a remarkable man. H. G.

SOME REFLECTIONS ON THE WORK OF SCRIABIN

By Alexander Brent-Smith

(Concluded from July Number, page 595)

A sense of motion in music is attained by a skilful use of varying harmonies. Easily assimilated harmonies, judiciously mixed with more complicated chords, give a sense of motion by reason of their clearly marked differences. We know exactly how fast the music is going because we can distinguish each separate harmony. But when the harmony is 'all my own invention,' to borrow a phrase from that half-witted philosopher, the White Knight, the musical language becomes as heavy and stilted as the most ponderous Johnsonese, and no lengthy burst of speed is possible. Although perhaps the 'palpitating whirling joy-molecules' do give a feeling of animation, they no more suggest speed than do the whirling palpitating gnats above the noisome water of a stagnant pond. Those frequent shakes (puissant, radieux) and ejaculatory snippets of sound, so beloved of Scriabin, are but the vertically rising sparks which belch forth from the chimney of a traction-engine, proving that the engine is certainly going, but at such a slow rate and upon such cumbersome wheels that progress is scarcely perceptible.

And yet to many people Scriabin is not merely a composer, he is the composer. His pianoforte compositions are spoken of as 'a distinct advance upon any of his predecessors.' Think of that! Not merely are his pianoforte pieces written from a different point of view, with a different individuality, but they are a distinct advance. Think of Bach's Preludes: of the tragic nobility of that in B flat minor; of the gaiety of that in C sharp major. But Scriabin's work is a distinct advance upon them. Think of Beethoven's Sonatas: of the Sonata in A flat, Op. 26; of the 'Appassionata,' Op. 57: of the 'Hammerclavier,' Op. 106; and yet Scriabin's work is a distinct advance upon them. We are also told that in Scriabin's tenth Sonata we have a contribution to instrumental music of the greatest importance perhaps since Beethoven. Ponder over that! Schumann's Carnaval, Etudes Symphoniques; Chopin's Ballades, Etudes, Polonaises; Brahms's Variations and Rhapsodies—all these works, great as they are, dwindle into insignificance beside Scriabin's tenth Sonata. And yet again we are told that his orchestration eclipses that of all contemporaries; that Schönberg, Stravinsky, and Strauss—masters, as all the world acknowledges—never handled the orchestra with the same sureness and certainty as did Scriabin. To compare the merits of orchestrators is always difficult, because no two men have attempted to produce the same result. It may be that Strauss has not produced such sombre orchestral tints as Scriabin has done, but perhaps he has never tried.

These extravagant opinions show to what extent Scriabin dominated his disciples, to many of whom he appeared not merely a great musician but as a prophet—an interpreter of the riddle of life and an expounder of the hidden mysteries of God. It is undeniable that Scriabin did write many works of great beauty and strength, both for pianoforte and orchestra, but to base his claim to be a prophet upon the aberrations of his closing years is as unwise, and as unfair to his memory, as it would be to claim for William Blake a similar title on the ground that he is the author of those strange dithyrambs, the Prophetic Books. No one, not even his admirers, would attempt to establish the fame of Blake upon 'Milton' or 'Jerusalem,' although they would admit that scattered through these books are many lines of great and even sublime poetry. Rather they would choose some of the 'Songs of Innocence,' and most people would select his most famous poem, 'The Tyger.' The worshipper of Scriabin, however, does not find the true message of his master in the 'Divine Poem,' or in the pianoforte works of his middle period, insisting that the prophet is only to be found in his true greatness in the works of his third period.

A close study of Scriabin's work shows that whatever claims he may have to be the greatest of great composers, he has small claims to be considered as a great prophet, lacking, as he did, those two essentially prophetic qualities—simplicity of utterance and universality of sympathy. The great prophet, he whom we feel is indeed speaking to men on behalf of God, is so consumed with his burning desire to bring his message unto all men, that he is careful to frame that message in such a way that all men shall understand; that the wayfaring men, though fools, shall not fail to grasp his meaning. If a visitor from another planet had to decide which was the greatest prophet who ever trod this earth, I think he would undoubtedly select the Founder of Christianity, not for any historical or theological reasons, but because His teaching contains the simplest truths most simply expressed. There is not much obscurity in the saying, 'Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God'; no tangle of words ending in 'ology' or 'ism'; no mention of higher planes and mystic rites; just this: 'Be pure, and being pure you shall understand God.' There is not much obscurity in the ten great utterances of Moses, nor is there any obscurity in the ceaseless refrain of Mahomet, 'God is all powerful, we must submit to God.' And, coming to modern times, there is not much obscurity in the counsel of Samuel Johnson, 'Clear your mind of cant.' Here we have the method of the real prophet revealed. He, who had the greatest command of language of any man, who had in his vocabulary more polysyllables than the average man has plain words, when he wished to state a great and valuable truth condescended to use five simple monosyllables. But what a mighty truth those simple words contain; as great in their way as those other words, 'Blessed are the pure in heart,' for both might end with the corollary, 'for ye shall see God.' But this directness of speech, this child-like simplicity, was not possible to Scriabin, because he had deliberately limited his vocabulary to a few gigantic amorphous sounds—monsters of unknown shape, like the giant emanations of William Blake, Enitharmon, Oothon, and Golgonzoola.

Again, the real prophet has an immense appeal because he has a universal sympathy. His message is so great, that it applies to all the races of the earth; to beggars and to princes; to fools and to the wise. It deals with things elemental, and speaks of those emotions which spring deathless and birthless from the mind of God. To utter such truths is not given unto many, but everyone who desires his work to reach the heart of man must identify his work with certain aspects of these elemental truths. In doing so he destroys the action of that corrosive acid—Time. The glory of Greece has passed away, but the loving words of Sophocles can never pass away. Lionel Johnson says:

> Great art is never out of date nor obsolete; like the moral law of Sophocles, God is great in it, and grows not old; like the moral law of Kant, it is of equal awe and splendour with the stars. A line of Virgil, written by the Bay of Naples in some most private hour of meditation, all those long years ago! comes home to us, as though it were our very thought; upon each repetition, experience has made it more true and touching . . . . In beauty and strength, in beauty of music and in strength of thought, the great artists are all contemporaries.

Great tunes are dateless. The emotions which gave them birth are ours when we realize their splendour. No need for historians to tell us what a composer of long ago was like, because when we feel the beauty of his tune we know him as we know our bosom friend. His spirit speaks to us not by mediums and by rappings on a board, but as man to man. The emotions which Bach felt when he wrote that most heart-breaking melody in the 'St. Matthew' Passion, 'Eloi, Eloi, lama sabachthani,' are ours each time we hear it sung. Here is no obscurity, sham nor sophistry. It is far too simple to deceive, and none but a prophet of the Lord could have penned such grand simplicity. This is no message for the few, but for all men and all nations of the earth. But are the greatest artists at their best ever for the few? I doubt it. To be appreciated by the few may certainly mean that a man is a great artist, but to be appreciated by everyone means surely that the artist is a great man.

Although he died young, Scriabin showed no signs of ultimate greatness. Rather his works after the 'Divine Poem' seem decadent and retrogressive. He did not possess the intellect for attacking great philosophies in sound. He strutted in the garments of a fashionable philosopher, but his mind was made for small emotions and not for great thoughts. Throughout his work we notice the emphasis he lays upon the sensual nature of his art—a never-far-distant, quickly stirred eroticism. Indeed, the expression marks in his tenth Sonata, when read consecutively, give an unpleasant suggestion of grossness. And on such a foundation Scriabin thought to build a world-renewing philosophy!

Has, then, Scriabin's work any permanent value? Until he fettered himself with theories to prove his independence of theories—Yes. Afterwards his work was (with the exception of a few moments when his instinctive gifts asserted themselves) sterile and futureless. But as an experimenter his work has a certain value, though of a negative sort. The awful warning from his failure—the warning against attempting to force art into predetermined channels—should be seriously considered by all who are interested in the future of music. Perhaps, then, we may say that his experimental works are of some use to posterity—the same use as that possessed by a sign-post which warns the intending traveller that the road on which he journeys is NO THOROUGHFARE.

'DER DOPPELGÄNGER'; OR, 'THE SPECTRAL SELF'

By Richard Capell

How still the night. . . . The streets are deserted.
In that house yonder one I loved did dwell.
She is far away. The place is forsaken,
And there stands the house dark and lone and chill.

And there is a man stands staring at her window.
He shakes and shudders in agony.
Saints in heaven! He turns his face towards me.
The moon comes out—'tis myself I see!

Thou ghostly double, no man but a shadow,
What dost thou, aping my old cry
And all the pangs that here I suffered
So many a night in time gone by?

The above humble attempt at solving one of the classic problems of the song-translator is respectfully dedicated to anyone who cares to make use of it. An entirely satisfying solution is perhaps unattainable. The above version is obviously not meant to be read. For what it is worth, it is to be sung. 'Dwell' and 'chill,' it need not be pointed out, are hardly a poet's rhyme. One recognises as the chief of the shortcomings the thinness of the vowel in 'see' compared with the breadth of 'stalt.' But perhaps a certain plainness in the language may be appreciated, as attempting to match Heine's straightforwardness. Some meddling with Schubert's note-values is involved. This, it may be pleaded, is less shocking in the quasi-recitative of the 'Doppelgänger' than it would be in a formally melodic song. The following are the alterations necessitated:

Bar 5. The opening crotchet and quaver ('Still ist') must change places.
Bar 11. The two slurred notes on 'mein' must be detached.
Bar 15. Two F♯ semiquavers instead of one, ('sie').
Bar 17. Detach the two slurred quavers.
Bar 27. The same thing again.
Bar 32. Prolong the high F♯ by the duration of a dotted quaver and delete the first of the low F♯'s. (This is the most damaging of the alterations, and the only one, indeed, which will be very noticeable.)
Bar 34. Detach slurred notes.
Bar 35. Slur the two crotchets to the word 'heav'n.'
Bar 40. Tie the minim and quaver of 'eig'ne.'

PERSONALITIES AMONG MUSICAL CRITICS

VII.—ALFRED KALISCH

By Basil Maine

'Men of note with verbal hæmorrhage write on music mostly in our daily journals.' This inelegant sentence was invented and afterwards published by one who has always hated the whole tribe of musical critics. In his book on 'Contemporary British Composers,' Joseph Holbrooke is constantly throwing himself into parentheses in order to declare his utter contempt for the function of criticism. He gives no specific reason for this undigested venom, or at least no reason that bears investigation. 'In any case all this writing is entirely a trade issue' is the only sentence I can find in which he attempts to support his wholesale condemnation, and that is a statement which, on the face of it, is extravagantly false. After the words which I have quoted at the beginning of this essay, there follows a list of those who are supposed to reveal symptoms of the picturesque affliction. Among the names is that of Alfred Kalisch. This to me is surprising—at least it would have been surprising had the accusation come from any other but Joseph Holbrooke. For Kalisch is surely the most wary of critics; and I use the word 'wary' in a good sense, implying, that is, discrimination and good sense. You will never hear him condemn or defend a musical work at a first hearing. There are some critics who find themselves able to deliver a sharply defined judgment of a new work immediately after the performance. They need no period for reflection; indeed, their impressions of the work become more vague and their judgments more hazardous with the passage of time. There is no precise reason why this kind of criticism should be less valuable than that which is based upon lengthier and weightier consideration. It is all a question of tempo. Some react tardily; others can precipitate their ideas, sensations, knowledge, and prejudice into a verdict in which all these elements are in true proportion. These are sometimes called brilliant men. It is curious that 'brilliancy' should be assumed to contain the attribute of speed; the assumption cannot be based on any literal meaning. I would say of Alfred Kalisch, for instance, that he is a brilliant critic, but I cannot see him in any activity which could be described as precipitation. The reception and absorption of musical experience is not a quick, straightforward process with him, but a complex and almost imperceptible movement involving all the faculties of reception and judgment in conjunction.

Dr. Odier has divided those who react to musical stimulus into classes according to the nature of the reaction. The reaction is dominated either by technical judgment, by ideas, by images, by sentiment, or by purely musical emotion. As Mr. W. J. Turner has pointed out, Dr. Odier has passed over the possible fact that two or more of these types can be combined in a single subject. Musical criticism as an official occupation tends to evolve a type which belongs almost entirely to the 'techniciens' group, although the second class ('ideatifs') claims a few. Imaginative writing on music is suspected and derided in this country. The reason is clear. When a man begins to unbridle his imagination on any question of art, the average Englishman has an unfailing weapon for his self-defence: 'I know what I like and I like what I know, and I don't wish to know why.' I once heard George Robey express the same thought at a rehearsal of a revue in which he was associated with Massine. From the wings he was watching Massine's direction of a new ballet to Milhaud's 'Saudades do Brazil.' After a few minutes he turned to a scene-shifter in confidence: 'They're all mad, quite mad, these Russians!'

I feel sure that this was Mr. Robey's honest opinion. In the same way it is impossible for the ordinary English concert-goer to realise that imaginative criticism is the result of anything but a dislocated mentality—that it is the end of all technical appraisement, and, indeed, implies the latter process. It can never be begotten by ignorance. We can hardly expect criticism to become really creative in a country where its functions are misunderstood so freely.

The practice of journalistic criticism during many years has almost completely fixed Alfred Kalisch as a 'technician.' The faculty of interpretation I find almost wholly absent from his writing. But he possesses another faculty which is not to be found to the same extent in any other English music critic. It cannot be connoted by any one word, but it is the effect of a memory which retains an amazing array of curious, out-of-the-way episodes, incidents, and facts. His collection of 'Queer Things' rivals that of Arthur Machen. Not only so, but the collection is his own monopoly. The 'good stories' about music and musicians are the inheritance of every self-respecting critic, but the odd little bits of information which Kalisch introduces during the course of a conversation or an article seem to have escaped everybody but himself. He gives the impression that he has set out to gather all the fragments which are likely to be discarded by others, so that he can supply them at peculiarly opportune moments. The fragment may concern something that Caruso once said about the acoustics of Covent Garden, or Sir Thomas Beecham's reading of one particular phrase in the César Franck Symphony, or some unprecedented occurrence at La Scala. Kalisch stores these rarities as a schoolboy stores a swallow-tail butterfly or the egg of a Montague Harrier. Securely they lie, wrapped up in the large silk handkerchief of his mind. You can never be quite sure as to what will be produced from that improvised museum, but whatever it may be, it is certain to be relevant, intact, and nicely polished.

Once in imagination I conceived an orchestral body made up entirely of musical critics. I appointed Ernest Newman as conductor of this phantom orchestra; only his authority could control the unruly elements of such a combination. There were a few other obvious choices: Edward Dent, of course was leader, H. C. Colles, first 'cello, and Francis Toye, first trumpet. The harp I gave over to Edwin Evans (having in mind the swift, arpeggio-like quality of his mind), the flute and piccolo to Harvey Grace (to ensure a dexterous handling of the Scherzo movements). Beyond that I was not very definite in my dream. Now that we are considering the case of Alfred Kalisch, however, I would like publicly to offer him the oboe as his instrument. The coincidence is so intriguing. The oboe has that idiomatic quality which enables it to 'come through' the most overwhelming fortissimo with a minimum of effort; it sounds a weird, plaintive, penetrating note which could never be mistaken; it lifts its voice unexpectedly, and adds an ultra colour to the orchestral rainbow; it is unassuming; it is intelligent; it is tactful, and knows the value of silence. Its behaviour is discreet, and although it never attempts to 'double' a part which is obviously written for the 'cello or trumpet, it is particularly good at supplying variations on a theme previously announced . . . . But I must check this flight of fancy, lest haply I am led to think of the oboe as a reed shaken by the wind. There the analogy would break; or rather it would no longer be analogy, for I did not imagine that there was the remotest likeness between Alfred Kalisch and the construction of an oboe, only that by all the laws of comparison he should be an admirable performer on that instrument.

At a recent court dinner of the Musicians' Company the Cobbett Medal for 1926, awarded annually 'for Services to the Art of Chamber Music,' was presented to Mr. Alfred J. Clements, in recognition of his work as organizer for forty years of the famous South Place Chamber Concerts, and on behalf of chamber music generally.

CHARLES WOOD

English music has had a heavy loss in the death of Charles Wood—how heavy is hardly likely to be realised by the general public. Thousands who were well aware of the work of Parry and Stanford, both as teachers and composers, knew little or nothing of Wood, whose activities—at all events in teaching—contributed almost as much as Stanford's to the recent great revival of music in this country.

That his outstanding qualities were so little recognised is due to his retiring nature, rather than to any lack of perception on the part of the public. He did little or no conducting, and so missed the most obvious of all ways of becoming a familiar figure; rarely, and even then only with difficulty, could he be persuaded to speak in public; and his portrait was hardly ever printed in any journal. It is safe to say that Wood might have appeared in almost any average gathering of musicians without being recognised—an experience that could hardly happen to any contemporary teacher or composer of equal eminence.

Photo by] [J. Palmer Clarke, Cambridge.

CHARLES WOOD

But was there a teacher of equal eminence in his own department? Hearing the eulogies of those who have worked with and under him—eulogies uttered not merely since his death, but at any time during recent years—one may doubt it. Hence there seems to be nothing extravagant in the remark (quoted in The Times memoir) made recently by a writer with a wide knowledge of Continental music teaching: 'Wood is the best teacher of composition in Europe.'

It is rather too readily assumed that Wood was not a popular composer. A fairer statement of the case would be that he was popular but not well known—an apparent anomaly due to the fact that much of his most characteristic work was widely used and enjoyed in a form that was practically anonymous. Thus, many thousands have for years past taken delight in the 'Cowley Carol Books' and the 'Songs of Syon,' without being aware that by far the greater part of the most effective arrangements and harmonizations were by this Cambridge professor. Wood's touch in all work of this kind was unerring. Whether he was treating a plainsong melody, a German Chorale, a Genevan psalm-tune, a folk-song, or an air from the Piæ Cantiones, he combined a sense of fitness, an economy of means, and an unfailing interest that even Stanford himself never surpassed.

It is hardly possible to over-estimate the influence he thus exerted in the direction of purity of standard in hymnody and other forms of communal music. His influence was hardly less felt in the school singing-class and the small choral society. At competition festivals thousands of school children, girls' clubs, and other organizations of the kind, sing his unison- and part-songs; and his setting of 'Full fathom five' has for more than a quarter of a century been one of the most widely used and enjoyed of mixed-voice part-songs. This, after all, is popularity of the best and most solid type, compared with which that of many a 'famous' song composer is a vain thing.

Yet even in the department of the solo song Wood had at least one outstanding achievement. 'Ethiopia saluting the colours' was long since hailed as one of the finest of modern songs, of this or any other country, and it still maintains that position. It would be difficult to name many songs that evoke so unmistakable an atmosphere and picture by means so simple and direct. 'The Dirge for two Veterans' may be regarded as the choral analogy of 'Ethiopia,' and to the appeal of both works is very largely due the subsequent vogue of Walt Whitman among British composers.

As a writer of accompaniments to Irish folk-song Wood again ranks with Stanford—than which no higher praise can be given.

For the church choir and organist Wood wrote much of sterling quality. As might be expected, his influence was all on the side of those who advocate a return to purer and more austere models, and it has made itself felt widely through the growing use of his 'Polyphonic Communion Service' and his fine setting of the 'Passion' according to St. Mark. His organ music, though small in bulk, is a notable addition to the literature of the instrument by reason of its rare finish and lofty spirit. All of it is based on hymn-melodies, mostly of the Genevan Psalm-tune type. A measure of austerity is in keeping with both the material and the instrument, and that these native essays in the Chorale Prelude field are firmly established in the repertory is to the credit of organists as a body. Inevitably they make a less ready appeal than do the similar organ works of Parry. This is due partly to the comparative unfamiliarity of their thematic bases, and also to their mood. Rarely in these pieces does Wood emerge from his reserve—the powerfully dramatic Prelude on 'St. Mary' is so singular in this respect as to seem almost outside the scope of the series.

The compositions mentioned above are those in which Wood was really successful in appealing to various sections of the general musical public. And it may be said that the only obstacle to a widening of that appeal was the fastidious and self-critical attitude that, combined with the calls made on him by his work as a teacher, limited his output. For, large as it was, and spread over many departments, from chamber music to a Pickwick operetta, it was small for one with so marked a power of melodic invention and so consummate a technique.

Wood's knowledge of old music of all sorts was encyclopædic, and he had the all-too-rare gift of seeing the human where so many learned folk see only the quaint and archaic. The writer will not easily forget passing an evening with him and his close friend and collaborator in 'Songs of Syon' and 'The Cowley Carol Book'—Dr. R. G. Woodward—when some delightful hours were spent in exploring the collected works of Schütz and other pre-Bach worthies. It was, perhaps, only in such a combination of intimate surroundings and congenial pursuits that one saw Wood at his best, and realised the rare blend of humour, earnestness, and sympathy that lay behind the shy front he showed to the public.

Ad Libitum

By 'Feste'

Last month I hinted that some day, when courage was high, I might write an article protesting against the tendency to overdo folk-song, Elizabethan music, negro spirituals, shanties, &c. So many readers have expressed warm approval that apparently very little courage will be needed after all. Evidently the reaction has set in rather sooner than I expected.

In regard to 'spirituals' some frank things are already being said by critics. Mr. Philip Page, for example, writing in the Sunday Express of Madame d'Alvarez's recent recital, at which some 'spirituals' were sung, said that very few of such songs have musical value :

> A far greater number are banal in every sense, and it is only the negro lingo, a touch of quaintness, and the craze now running over Europe for any form of entertainment which has a touch of the tar-brush that have given them their present vogue.

And he does not exaggerate when he suggests that if a few drawing-room ballads of the 'Because' type were sung in broken English and advertised as 'songs crooned to the prayer-wheel in the wilds of Tibet, we should hear a lot about their artistic excellence.'

Among my correspondence this month is an urgent request for a few frank words on the present craze for the negroid—the 'touch of the tar-brush' alluded to by Mr. Page. Certainly the thing has gone beyond reasonable limits. As a writer in a London daily remarked a few weeks ago, 'The artistic ascendency of the negro is in full swing.' There is little chance of escape. In the concert-hall over-harmonized 'spirituals' are sung at us; no variety show is complete without its pair of niggers delivering themselves, with sickening portamento, of drivelling rhymes set to clichés already as threadbare as any in the worst type of shop ballad; the same dismal vulgarities are gramophoned and broadcast; and the rising (or perhaps we should say 'young') generation has adopted such slovenlinesses as 'gonna,' 'whadja,' 'wanna,' and other flowers of speech plucked from the plantations of the South. The banjulele and ukulele have become fashionable, and their tonal spewings are induced even by the hands of Royal Highnesses. The air of Palais de Dance, West-end drawing-room, and East-end court is thick with slobber and gush about sweeties, cuties, Susies, babbies, and mammies (coal-black and red-headed).

There was a good deal to be said for the old nigger minstrel entertainment. Its exponents had genuine humour, and the singing was often first-rate. Readers who remember the best of such shows will agree that, although the music itself was no great shakes, some fine voices and artistic part-singing were to be heard. A Moore & Burgess soloist who consistently sang off the pitch would have had short shrift, whereas the fashionable nigger of to-day rarely does more than hang round the outskirts of the note. However, we may be thankful that the 'artistic' ascendency of the nigger is far less marked here than in America. We are getting it at second-hand, largely through the strenuous propaganda of the dance band and dance-music publishers. Over there, if we may judge from music catalogues and the Press, the negro is top dog in the entertainment world. The whirligig of time has operated as usual. The floggings and flayings in the plantations a generation ago are amply revenged. Uncle Tom is still pushed off the side-walk, and he is still liable to be lynched for crimes for which his white brother may compound; but he has got his own back by bringing Uncle Sam down to his own level in art. Tin Pan Alley is supreme, and the advent of the hundred-per-cent. American composer is farther off than ever.

Apropos of America, I am glad to see that Mr. Lawrence Gilman's recent disparagement (in the New York Herald) of London as a musical centre is not being taken lying down. Even Mr. Ernest Newman, who is not in the habit of rushing into the breach when London is attacked, puts up a defence. He makes a good point in answer to the charge that London 'is obliged to be content with poor orchestras and fourth-rate conductors, except from occasional visits from wandering stars like Koussevitsky, Weingartner, and others.' As Mr. Newman says, our best native conductors are at least equal to the permanent American conductors. He might have underlined that word 'native.' How many of America's best conductors are American born and American trained? As for those 'wandering stars,' Mr. Newman replies that 'the only fourth-rate conductors we have had in London during recent years were one or two who came over to us from America.' And in regard to our apparent backwardness in opera (which is perhaps after all a sign of growing taste for real music), he shows that the boasted long operatic season at New York is mainly due to the large foreign element in that city—an element that 'ensures support for certain operas, however bad they may be. The Italians in New York, for instance, will flock to hear Montemezzi, not one of whose operas would stand any chance of popularity here.' Well, America is welcome to all the 'supremacy' of that sort she can lay her hands on.

The odd thing is that the real cause for London's—indeed, England's—inability to maintain her old standard of orchestral playing, or to produce a large proportion of new operatic or orchestral works, is merely touched on casually by Mr. Gilman at the beginning of his indictment, and then dropped. He says our decline is due to 'reasons chiefly economic,' and then proceeds to belabour us for the results of our poverty, holding up 'the rich diversity of musical experiences' enjoyed by New Yorkers, who are bidden to 'glance toward London and count their blessings.' I am always amazed and amused by the apparent ease with which Americans are able to forget the substantial reasons for the poverty that handicaps music in this country. It is necessary to remind Mr. Gilman that America is rich and England is hard-up. I make no complaint on that score; I merely state the fact. America having won the European War (on the post, so to speak, and without committing the fatal blunder of going through a long campaign) is naturally flourishing. England, on the other hand, spent several years in expensively and industriously losing the war, and is just as naturally out of pocket. Hence those 'reasons chiefly economic,' which are ample justification for any shortcomings in our musical life. We are merely cutting our coat according to our cloth—an operation that should call for sympathy, especially from the creditor to whose demands the shortage of cloth is largely due.

I seem to be unable to get away from America this month. A visitor, from Niagara, writes:

> Will you permit an American who has been beguiling a few moments of a holiday in England by perusing 'Orpheus,' by one W. J. Turner, to inquire what you would have done to the thing in your columns if it had originated in the United States?

Evidently I seem to have given a quite unfounded impression that I am not an enthusiast concerning the music and musical literature of the U.S.A.!

As I have not yet read 'Orpheus,' I cannot say what I would have done about it had it been written by an American. I may tell my correspondent, however, that I have more than once in this journal fallen foul of the author of 'Orpheus,' none the less frankly because he happens to be an Englishman and a personal acquaintance. There will, however, be no need for me to deal drastically with the book, as a sufficiently outspoken review from a colleague appeared in last month's Musical Times.

Among the letters I have received on over-doing things is a long and interesting one from a well-known teacher and choral conductor. He is emphatic in his agreement as to the overworking of the Elizabethan revival, and gives examples of very dull specimens he has recently endured. He then goes on to say that, partly as a result of the Elizabethan fever, the reaction against the so-called 'tyranny of the bar-line' has gone too far, and he cites as evidence the performances 'of a choir trained by one of the anti-bar brigade,' in which the singing was so loose, and so free from the 'tyranny,' that at times the parts got badly out. That this is a true bill will be agreed by many whose lot it is to hear choral singing up and down the country. The trouble comes from the question of the bar being approached in the wrong way. Instead of talking nonsense about eliminating the bar-line, conductors should teach their choirs not to misuse it. Was the bar-line ever a hindrance to any singer or player who had been taught to phrase? Were there no good rhythmical performances before a few people suddenly discovered that the bar-line was 'tyrannous'? That certain early choral writers didn't use it was due to several good reasons that were peculiar to their period and circumstances—for example, the use of single voice-parts by singers. Nevertheless, the bar-line has long been, and will long be, an indispensable feature of musical notation, and any performer or conductor who lets it prove a hindrance simply doesn't know his job. I go even farther: if I had to choose between an over-barred performance and one of the over-emancipated type alluded to by my correspondent, I should hold up all my hands and feet for the 'tyranny' every time. It would probably be nearer to the composer's intentions, and would also carry the sense of security that is not the least factor in one's enjoyment of a performance.

Two further examples of overdoing things have just come my way. This time the exaggeration is in connection with Monteverde and other early composers. In the May number of Eolus (quoted in the Musical Courier), Eugene Borrel makes fantastic claims on behalf of some 17th- and 18th-century pioneers. Thus:

> All the inventions attributed to Wagner . . . are found united in the works of Monteverde, completely and artistically realised.

Note that there is no qualification — 'All the inventions . . .'; and they are not merely foreshadowed or experimental: they are 'completely and artistically realised.' In other words, Wagner developed nothing from, and added nothing to, the music-drama of Monteverde. Nor is Wagner the only modern to be put in his place, well in the back row. Mr. Borrel, still doing nothing by halves, goes on to say that in the 17th century 'are found combinations of an ingeniousness and beauty never since equalled.' What, never?

On our side of the Atlantic we have another laudator temporis acti of the whole-hogger type in Mr. Arnold Dolmetsch. I was a mere youngster when I first sat under Mr. Dolmetsch and all the little Dolmetsches, and enjoyed their delightful old instruments and music, but I have to part company with him over his extravagant claims on behalf of his beloved consorts of viols. In the prospectus of the Haslemere Festival, for example, he quotes Thomas Mace and the Abbé Maugars on the emotional effects of the music of their day, and adds:

> If these descriptions are true, music, in its evolution during the last three centuries, has lost sight of its highest ideals, its most sublime mission, whatever else it may have acquired in other ways.

And he proceeds to say that Mace and the Abbé spoke the truth, 'for the same music produces the same results to-day when it is heard under proper conditions.' Much better reasoning than this will be needed to convince me that our art reached its culminating point nearly three hundred years ago, long before Bach and Beethoven were born. True, Mr. Dolmetsch brings forward evidence as to these 'same results.' At the 1925 Haslemere Festival, we are told,

> . . . performers and auditors were transported to another sphere where pure joy and rapture replaced the cares of life. People from alien countries, former enemies who had looked upon one another with suspicion, became friends. Peace and goodwill reigned in every heart; we all felt better and happier men and women.

The prospectus winds up with a reference to 'the profound English Consorts of Viols, the highest summit of pure music'—the String Quartets of Mozart and Beethoven being placed a good way down the slope, presumably. Advocacy of this unbalanced sort does no good whatever, least of all to the early English composers whose music we are all beginning to appreciate—with reservations. In certain forms of music perfection was undoubtedly achieved centuries ago (a statement which does not imply that perfection has not since been reached again). For instance, many perfect examples of melody were produced in the palmy days of plainsong, and another peak was reached in the vocal polyphony of Byrd and Palestrina. But, for obvious reasons, concerted instrumental forms had to wait till comparatively recent times before anything approaching a similarly high standard could be reached. There is much that is delightful in these old English string works, and, given the right fruitful soil, they may even do all Mr. Dolmetsch claims in the way of inducing enemies to fall on one another's necks. But to ask us to regard them as higher achievements, either artistically or emotionally, than (say) the 'Rasoumovsky' Quartets (for this is Mr. Dolmetsch's claim, reduced to plain English), is to ask a long sight too much. (The quotations from Mace and Maugars, alluded to above, raise a further point that I have long wanted to discuss. I hope to deal with it next month.)

I have to thank an Uckfield correspondent for the copy of an air in an old set of pianoforte duet variations called 'The Fall of Paris.' It differs considerably from the tune sent by Sir Alexander Mackenzie, and is even less like the melody of 'Ça ira' as given in 'Grove.' Evidently the tune went the rounds, and by the time the numerous variation-mongers had done their worst, it would hardly be recognised by its composer. Anyway, so far as 'The Fall of Paris' is concerned, I'm through. So no more variants, please.

From a recently published translation of 'Auf flügeln des Gesangen,' I take this couplet:

> Violets fondly titter and prattle,
> And gaze at the stars above.

Pooh! a tittering violet is nothing. You should hear our hollyhocks guffaw.

MUSIC IN TOLSTOY'S LIFE

BY HIS SON, COUNT SERGIUS TOLSTOY

Translated by Aylmer Maude

(Concluded from July Number, page 635)

Prof. A. B. Goldenweizer, of the Moscow Conservatoire, an eminent musician, always prized Tolstoy's opinions about music. In a lecture on that theme, while not agreeing with many of my father's negative judgments concerning certain compositions, he acknowledged that he had true and fine musical taste, and that he loved only truly good music. Here are some of his obiter dicta:

> 25 August, 1905.—Tolstoy remarked: 'What I value almost more than anything in Haydn is his cheerfulness.' . . . Tolstoy said that Haydn's Symphonies please him more when played four-handed on the pianoforte, than by an orchestra. In reply to the question why this was so, he said: 'The first reason is that the possibility of perfection in the performance is in inverse proportion to the number of performers. The more instruments there are the more is the purity of the sound dissipated, since absolutely pure accord and intonation are impossible: finally rhythmic exactitude is almost unattainable when there are many performers. The second reason is a subjective one of my own: for me the brightness of colours does not aid, but hinders, the strength of the impression.'

17 July, 1908.—In Liszt there is an absence of the completeness of the old masters, of the clearness of the whole which makes one feel 'so it must be and it can't be otherwise.' But with him it is all invented, and not clear. Tolstoy said that the new music, since Chopin, is strange to him—it is the decline of art. . . . I am always afraid that this is a sign of old age—only to recognise the old things. However, the same is happening in literature.

4 September.—The understanding of music comes with time. Forty years ago K. A. Islavin played Chopin as something perfectly new, and it seemed obscure.

6 September.—In art the chief thing is to say something new—something of your own. All the great artists can be distinguished by that. Take Mendelssohn—his music is beautiful, but still it is like everybody's. But it is necessary to say something that is one's own. Beethoven—I do not like him, but he possesses that quality. You never know in advance what he is going to say.

29 July, 1909.—Do you remember what Schopenhauer said about music? When you listen to music it is as if something remained unsaid, there is something unsatisfying. That is perfectly true.

6 August.—It is astonishing what music is! Why do certain auditory combinations gladden one, agitate one, grip one, while to others we remain perfectly indifferent? In other arts that is more intelligible. In painting and literature an element of rationality is involved, here there is nothing but a combination of sounds, but what power! I think that music is the most vivid practical proof of the spirituality of our nature.

Dr. Makovitski, when living at Yasnaya Polyana, kept a detailed Diary. The following extracts from it relate to music at Yasnaya Polyana:

22 December, 1907.—This morning Sibor (violinist), Bukinik (violoncellist), and Goldenweizer played. In the evening we had a concert. They played Mozart, Haydn, Beethoven, Arensky. Tolstoy liked Mozart, and still more Haydn. He said: 'I particularly love Haydn. He has modesty—that artistic self-denial when an author does not show himself.' He was specially pleased with the Finale, in which Hungarian melodies are heard. 'I think Haydn was of Croatian origin, lived among the Croatians, and made use of their folk-tunes.' Goldenweizer confirmed this. After listening to Beethoven, Tolstoy remarked: 'I remained tranquil and admired the artists' performance.' When those present began to be enthusiastic about Beethoven, he said: 'I think that you are pretending. Mozart does not do it, but Beethoven began to combine the inner content with external effects, and among his followers only external effects are left.'

Arensky's Trio also pleased him. On Sibor's remarking that Tchaikovsky's fame would not last long, Tolstoy said:

> Tchaikovsky has admirable things and has poor ones. You know that Beethoven also had poor things. But the public cries up everything that Beethoven wrote!

In the evening Tolstoy said:

> Old as I am, I do not know how to define music; but it is good in that it unites people in one and the same feeling.

. . . . . .

Landovska also played old French dances, 'La Chasse,' of John Bull, and the old Italians. 'A return to the old does not narrow but widens music's domain,' said Tolstoy. In the evening, he remarked that Landovska had confirmed his opinion that > . . . the flowering period of music was in the 17th, 18th, and up to the beginning of the 19th century. But from that time began its decline.

That day Tolstoy, as it were, surfeited himself on music. As he went off to bed, he said: 'Music is a good thing—but it is still better to be without music.'

Among other things he said: 'Sculpture, music, painting, and the art of oratory, will not endure mediocrity.'

. . . . . .

We have seen that throughout his life Tolstoy was concerned with the questions: (1.) What is music? And why does it so strongly move people? Wherein lies the secret of its effect? (2.) What purpose should music serve? Is its effect on people a good one?

We have seen that already in early youth he wrote: 'Music is a means of arousing and transmitting certain feelings by means of sounds.' In 'Childhood and Youth' he calls music the recollection of feelings. Sometimes he said: 'Music is the recollection of what has never been.'

In 1906, when he was an old man, he expressed the same thought in a letter to his wife:

> The other day I thought this about music: Music is the stenography of feeling. When we speak we express the feelings which accompany what we are saying by the lowering, the raising, the strength, and the rapid or deliberate sequence, of sounds—we express by words the objects and the events we witness. But music transmits only the combinations and sequences of those feelings, without ideas, forms, or events. This thought explained to me what I experience when listening to music.

In this explanation of music's action on its hearers, Tolstoy comes nearest to Schopenhauer, who says that music never expresses the phenomenal world (concrete appearances) but only the essence of phenomena—in a word, will itself. It does not express some definite joy or sorrow, this or that pleasure or suffering, fear or impulse, but merely joy, grief, pleasure, suffering, terror, impulse, and so on, in general; it is the abstract and general essence of those spiritual movements, irrespective of the circumstances of time and place.

In Tolstoy's explanation of the action of music on the hearer, Schopenhauer's influence is felt. However, Tolstoy himself did not seem satisfied with his explanation. Some measure of perplexity remained in his soul: Why do sounds touch us, agitate us, delight us? And when quite old, in 1907, he said to Dr. Makovitski, 'Old as I am, I still do not know how to define music.'

Feeling doubtful as to the cause of the action of music on mankind, Tolstoy felt no doubt about the importance of music, the aim towards which music should strive. About that he expressed himself definitely both in private conversation and in his work on art. In the latter, he gives art in general two aims: either to serve the religious understanding of life, the establishment of the relation between God and man, or to serve as a means of union among men. The former category of works of art he called 'religious art,' the second 'universal art.' Music he classifies as belonging to the latter category. Music promotes the union and intercourse of men with one another, but it is foreign to the calls of duty; it is pflichtloses Genuss, as Kant phrased it—it is not religious art. Having said to Makovitski that he did not know how to define music, he added: 'But music is good in that it unites people in one and the same feeling.' In his opinion, in the fact that it 'unites people in one and the same feeling' lies the purpose of music. Hence his demand that music should embrace a wide circle of people, especially those of the working classes. For that reason he mentions as pre-eminently real art, the musical creations springing from the people, and after that the music of various composers. That was why he considered songs and dance-tunes, folk-songs, the Valses of Strauss, and gipsy songs, playing on the balalayka and even on the concertina, and so on, to be real art; he considered that if such art of the lower order infected the hearers with certain feelings, it achieved its purpose. Nor did he fear to love and to praise what are called hackneyed pieces. Of course he acknowledged that there is music and music—music of a high and of a low kind, trivial music, and even music that serves base ends. But first of all he demanded that it should be accessible to the great mass of hearers. In his opinion music serves its fundamental purpose the less the narrower is the circle of those who comprehend it. He even classed himself among those who have spoilt their taste on erudite and exceptional music, and he therefore distrusted his own likings.

If I may express my own opinion, it seems to me that there is some exaggeration in the demand that every musical production should be intelligible to a wide circle of people. In order to feel music properly, it is necessary to be somewhat familiar with musical language. And as long as that language is but little diffused, the circle of those who understand it must necessarily be narrow. In order that serious music should become accessible to the great mass of the people, the mass must learn to understand that music.

But I think my father was right in indicating that composers who make their musical language obscure, in their search for interesting but artificial effects, take a wrong road. Those far-fetched productions, even if they some day become intelligible to the great mass, will not afford them pleasure. The future belongs to those musicians who manifest their inspiration in a serious, clear, and intelligible musical language. And we must also agree with Tolstoy that to amuse a small group of idle people should not be the aim of art. Art is a serious and important matter, and necessary to all men.

[The extracts given above are from a series of articles, written by Tolstoy's children and intimate friends, which are to be published in book-form by Messrs. Allen & Unwin under the title of 'Family Views of Tolstoy.'—EDITOR.]

The Bradford Festival of Chamber Music (October 5 and 6) holds out a very attractive scheme. There will be concerts each day, at 11.15 to 3 (with an hour's interval) and 7.30 to 9.30. The works announced include String Sextets by Brahms and Schönberg ('Verklärte Nacht'); Pianoforte Quintets by Elgar, Fauré, and Franck; Bax's Quintets for oboe and strings, and harp and strings; Ravel's Introduction and Allegro for harp, string quartet, flute, and clarinet; String Quartets by Beethoven, Franck, Dvorák, Goossens, Debussy, &c. The players are the Virtuoso String Quartet, William Murdoch, Gwendolen Mason, Leon Goossens, Haydn Draper, Robert Murchie, James Lockyer, and Ambrose Gauntlett. Information as to tickets, &c. (early application is necessary), from the hon. secretary, Queen's Hall, Bradford.

PLAYFORD: SOME HITHERTO UNNOTICED CATALOGUES OF EARLY MUSIC

By WILLIAM C. SMITH

(Of the British Museum)

(Concluded from July number, page 639)

The last section of the Second Catalogue is headed 'Musick-Books printed for John Carr.' Playford had close business relations with Carr, who had a shop at the Middle Temple Gate. One of Carr's publications referred to is of particular interest, as no copy of it is known. It is offered as 'Twenty Sets of Triple [Tripla] Concordia, containg [sic] Choice Airs in 3 parts, viz. Treble Mean and Bss, at 2*s.* 6*d.* each Set.' This work is described in a later catalogue (Harl. 5936/422-428) as by 'Mr. Lock and Mr. Robert Smith,' and offered at 4*s.* Kidson points out that it is referred to on one of Carr's publications as having been issued in 1667. It does not occur, however, in Clavell's 1675 catalogue, but is listed in the edition of 1680. The first notice of the work in the Term Catalogues is in November, 1676, where it is described as 'Never before published.' Matthew Locke's share in 'Tripla Concordia' appears to have escaped the notice of his biographers. Robert Smith cannot easily be identified. Presumably he was the composer (1647(?)-75) whose work is reviewed in the Musical Antiquary, April, 1911, and compositions of whom exist in Clifford's 'Divine Services and Anthems,' 1664; Locke's 'Melothesia,' 1673; Playford's 'Choice Songs and Ayres,' First Book, 1673; the British Museum Manuscript Department, and elsewhere. 'A Division on a Ground for two Violins,' by a 'Robert Smith,' occurs in Playford's 'Division-Violin,' 1685.

The John Carr works advertised in the Catalogue also include twenty sets of Locke's 'Musick in Psyche . . . & . . . in the Tempest,' at 1*s.* each book.

At the end of the Catalogue is an advertisement of 'Books lately printed . . . and sold by Hen. Playford.' It includes 'The fourth Part of the Banquet of Musick, it being the Newest Book of Songs printed.' The date on the title-page of this work is 1690—approximately, therefore, the date of the Catalogue.

One other item amongst the 'Books lately printed' calls for special mention before turning to the Third Catalogue of the series. It is 'Mr. Farmer's second Consort of Musick with his Elogy, set by Mr. Henry Purcel.' Only an imperfect set of Farmer's First Consort is known (B.M. K. c. 4), although advertised in the Playford Catalogue under review in sets of fifty. In the Third Catalogue (Harl. 5936/147), the two sets of Consorts appear as '20 Sets of Mr. Farmers first sett of tunes printed in 4to' and '20 of the 2d setts of Mr. Farmers tunes printed in 4to,' and in the Fourth Catalogue (Harl. 5936/422-428) as 'Mr. Tho. Farmer's 1st and 2d Sett, with an Elegy upon the Author, 4 Parts.' The 'Banquet of Musick, Fourth Book,' 1690, advertises

> Mr. Tho. Farmer's Concert of Musick (the first Part) containing 33 Lessons. . . . The second Part of Mr. Tho. Farmer's Concert of Musick, being the last Remains left by him; to which is added, an Elegy on the Death of the Author, set by Mr. Henry Purcell.

This 'Second Consort' is advertised in the Term Catalogue, June, 1690, but no copy of it is known. The earliest edition of the Purcell 'Elegy' has been assumed hitherto to be that in 'Orpheus Britannicus,' vol. ii. (1702), and from which it has been concluded ('Grove') that Farmer died before 1695, while Davey gives the date 1693. A more accurate estimate would be 1690, or earlier, as the 'Second Consort' was a posthumous publication prefaced by the Purcell Elegy.

The Third Catalogue (Harl. 5936/147) is a small octavo of sixteen pages, three hundred and six Music items, and a hundred and thirty of Divinity, Physic, Law, &c. The title-page reads :

> A Catalogue of Ancient and Modern Musick Books, both Vocal and Instrumental with Divers Treatises about the same, and Several Musical Instruments . . . which will be Sold at Dewing's Coffee-House in Popes-Head Alley near the Royal Exchange, on Thursday, December the 17th, 1691. [No imprint.]

As has already been pointed out, this is a copy of the earliest music auction sale catalogue of which we have record. It is not unique, another copy is in the British Museum at 821, i. 9 (27). It is ascribed to Playford because of the following advertisement on the last page :

> There is newly Printed the 2d Book of Apollo's Banquet containing the Newest Tunes in use at the Publick Theatres and Dancing Schools, sold by Hen. Playford, at the Temple-Church, and most Musick Shops in London.

'Apollo's Banquet' is dealt with in the notes on the Fourth Catalogue of the series. Amongst the items to be offered by auction in the Third Catalogue are the following rarities : Peri's 'Euridice,' Caccini's 'Euridice,' Cosyn's 'Psalms,' and 'Parthenia.'

Works of which nothing appears to be known are listed as follows :

> The Chamber Musick of the Louvre 4 parts by E. F. Esq.
> The Psalms of David 4 Voices, by Richard Mison.
> Scherza recitativi, are Ital. Songs, Di Signor Tarditi.
> Songs of sundry Natures for several voices, by George Bolton. [A song writer, 'Bolton,' is mentioned in the B.M. Catalogue.]
> French Songs for 4 voices, by Adam Baret.
> French Songs for 4 voices, D. P. D. Ronsard.
> The Books that Treat about Musick by Fred. Barthusiani.
> [This may refer to works by Fridericus Beurhusius, a 16th-century theorist.]
> G. Bon's Phantasticks in 3 Books, fairly engraven 4to.

'Cantica Sacra' and the 'Banquet of Music' are offered in lots of twenty in the Third Playford Catalogue.

The title of the Fourth Catalogue (Harl. 5936/422-428) reads :

> A General Catalogue of all the Choicest Musick-Books in English, Latin, Italian and French, both Vocal and Instrumental. Composed by the Best Masters in Europe, that have been from these Thirty Years, past, to the present Time : With all the plainest and easiest Instructions for Beginners on each particular Instrument. Sold for Henry Playford, at his Shop in the Temple-Change, Fleetstreet ; and are to be had here, and in most of the Cities and Publick Places in England, Ireland and Scotland.

The Museum copy has been cut up, but it appears to have been originally a large single sheet folio. Like the previous Catalogues, it contains notices of a number of works not otherwise known or of particular interest to-day. Brief notes of some selected numbers follow here.

'Ayres Chacones, Divisions, and Sonata's for Violins, and Flutes, by Mr. Finger ; with a Sett of Ayres in Four Parts, by Mr. Banister.' No copy known. Grove states that it was published in 1691.

'Benj. Rogers Ayres, Jiggs, Sarabrands, &c. in Four Parts.' No copy known. It may be the same work as that referred to in Grove, as follows :

> In 1653 he composed some airs in four parts for violins and organ, which were presented to the Archduke Leopold, afterwards Emperor of Germany, and favourably received by him.

Following Rogers's work in the Catalogue is an exactly similar title ascribed to a work of 'Dr. Gibbon's.' Such a work by Gibbons cannot be traced. There is probably some confusion owing to a printer's error.

'Mr. Robert Wilson's Consort Three Parts, and Lyra-Viol.' Neither composer nor work identified.

'Mr. Jenkin's Royal Consort, fairly Prick'd.' Presumably one of the many works of the famous John Jenkins (1592-1678). Few of his compositions appear to have been printed. The British Museum recently acquired a very fine autograph manuscript set of movements in three parts (B.M. K.7. c. 2 (1)).

'Fantazies Ayres, &c. in 5 Parts, by Mr. Lock.' This work, apparently by Matthew Locke, appears to be otherwise unknown.

'Phillip Becket's New Ayres.' A hitherto unrecorded work by the composer who is represented in Playford's 'Division-Violin,' 1685, by 'A Division on a Ground, Mr. P. B.,' and described in the index of the 1695 edition of the same work as 'Mr. Becket.' He is referred to in Eitner, and his name occurs from 1660-78 in Lafontaine's 'The King's Musick.'

'Blaire's Sonatas.' A quarto instrumental work of which nothing appears to be known.

'Pett's Sonata's.' Not priced. An English composer of this name is mentioned in Eitner as contributing a piece to a manuscript of 17th-century instrumental music in the British Museum, but Eitner's reference cannot be identified. No copy of the Sonatas referred to here can be traced.

'The Gentleman's Diversion, or the Violin explain'd.' This refers to the very rare work by John Lenton. There is no copy in the B.M.

'The 1st and 2d Part of Apollo's Banquet.' This work, a book for the treble violin, first published as an appendix to the 1665 edition of 'The Dancing Master,' afterwards had a varied career as a separate publication, and passed through at least eight editions. Copies are very rare to-day, and as there is a good deal of uncertainty as to the dates of the various editions, it may be useful to have the particulars as recorded in the Term Catalogues (Arber). It was advertised in 1669 as a book for the Treble Violin, but the first advertisement in the Term Catalogues is 1670. This was followed by editions in 1677, 1682, 1684, 1687 (fifth edition), 1690 (sixth edition). The later issues of the work, if not the earlier, consisted of two or three parts, bound up together under the one title-page of 'Apollo's Banquet.' In 1691 appeared 'Apollo's Banquet . . . The Second Book,' in 1692 'The Second Part of the Apollo's Banquet . . . Also the First Part, both being bound together,' evidently a re-issue of the 1690 edition with the 1691 Second Book. In 1693 'The First and Second Books of Apollo's Banquet' (seventh edition of the 'First Book') were published, and in 1701 'Apollo's Banquet,' newly reviv'd . . . and contains six times as many Tunes as the little engraved Books.' It is to be noted that the above recorded dates differ from those given in the 'Dictionary of National Biography' and in some other authorities, but they agree with the three available copies of the work. The 1696 Clavell 'General Catalogue' mentions under folio music 'Apollo's Banquet, 2 Parts,' and under quarto, octavo, &c., 'Tutor to the Violin; or Apollo's Banquet.' There is no other evidence of a folio edition having been issued.

A unique copy of the fifth edition, 1687, consisting of three parts (two hundred and forty tunes), is in the Glen Collection. The composers named in this edition are Banister, Baptist, Dyer, Farmer, Farrinel, Peasable, Purcell, and the work also contains a dance in the play of 'Julius Cæsar,' one in 'Macbeth,' and one in 'The Northern Lass.'

A copy of the sixth edition of 'Apollo's Banquet,' 1690, is in the British Museum (K. 4. b. 9), and is noted in the catalogues of the department. A copy of the seventh edition, 1693, has recently been acquired (B.M. K. 4. b. 22). The title-page reads, 'The First Book of Apollo's Banquet . . . The 7th Edition Corrected: With new Additions.' The work consists of three parts (a hundred and eighty-three tunes), and contains much that is not in the fifth and sixth editions, including tunes by Courtiville, music in the play of 'The Maid's Last Prayer,' 'Ayre by R. King,' 'Mr. Mountford's Farewel by Mr. Mottley,' 'Mr. Mountford's Farewel,' tunes by Mr. Lenton, John Roffey, Mottley, and a dance in 'The Marriage Hater Match'd.' The few available particulars of the various composers mentioned can be obtained in the Museum catalogues and elsewhere, and the information in 'Apollo's Banquet' is a valuable accession to the details hitherto known. A manuscript copy of the song in 'The Marriage Hater Match'd,' by Thomas Tollett, is in the British Museum.

Bound up with the seventh edition of the first book of 'Apollo's Banquet' (B.M. K. 4. b. 22) is 'Apollo's Banquet . . . The Second Book,' 1691. The copy is unique. It is in two parts. The first consists of seventy-one tunes, two songs, two catches, and a chorus. The second part, entitled, 'A New Addition to the Second Book of Apollo's Banquet,' contains eleven tunes. The composers' names in the first part are Banister, Barrincloe, Courtiville, Finger, Franck, Keller, King, Montfort, Peasable, Purcell, Tollett. The Purcell items include five tunes from 'Amphitrion' (one supplementary to the edition of the Purcell Society) and the Catch in 'The Knight of Malta.' Montfort (William Mountfort) contributes a number of Playhouse tunes, also tunes in the play, 'The Greenwich Park,' and a song, 'When Celia I saw.' Tollett has seven tunes from the play, 'Love for Money, or The Boarding School.' Barrincloe (B. M. Berenclow) is represented by the song, 'Love's force can never be controlled.' There is also a dance from the play, 'All in Confusion.' The second part includes two more items from 'The Boarding School,' a Scotch tune in 'The Wife's Excuse,' and five tunes from Purcell's 'King Arthur.'

One of the most interesting entries in the Fourth Playford Catalogue is the following reference to a very early book on the French Hautboy, 'The Sprightly Companion, containing the plainest Instructions for the French Hautboy. . . The 2d Part to be Printed at Michaelmas-Term next.' There is no evidence that the second part was ever published, but a copy of the first part has been recently acquired by the British Museum, and is bound up with the two parts of 'Apollo's Banquet' (B.M. K. 4. b. 22) mentioned above. The complete title is as follows:

> The Sprightly Companion: Being a Collection of the best Foreign Marches, Now play'd in all Camps. With Two Farewells at the Funeral of the late Queen, One of Four Parts, by Mr. Peasible; The other of Three Parts, by Mr. Tollett; and several other Tunes. Design'd Chiefly for the Hautboy; Yet Proper for the Flute, Violin, and other Instruments: Also Plain and Easy Directions for Playing on the Hautboy. The First of this kind Publish'd. London, Printed by J. Heptinstall, for Henry Playford, at his Shop near the Temple-Church, or at his House in Arundel-Street in the Strand. 1695. Price Sixpence.

From the Term Catalogues, it is apparent, that 'The Sprightly Companion' was published in Trinity Term (1695), but in the Easter Term Catalogue of the same year appears the following entry:

> Plain and easie directions to a young beginner to learn the French Hautboy; with several Out-landish [i.e., foreign] Marches and other Tunes, not only proper for that Instrument, but also for the Violin and Flute: and The Queen's Farewell, in four Parts, by Mr. Peasible; and another by Mr. Tollet, in Three Parts.

This reference is presumably an advance notice of 'The Sprightly Companion.' The interesting preface of this work is given here in full:

> To the Reader.
>
> One would wonder the French Hautboy should obtain so great Esteem in all the Courts of Christendom, as to have the Preference to any other single Instrument. Indeed it looks strange at first sight: But on the other hand, if a Man considers the Excellency and Use of it, this Wonder will soon vanish: Of whom a great Lover of Musick gives this Encomium:
>
> Musick will give our hardest Labours Ease;
> The Hautboy Charms in War, the Flute in Peace.
> Where Love or Honour calls, these Sounds inspire;
> This charms with Love, That Courage sets on fire.
>
> For besides its Inimitable charming Sweetness of Sound (when well play'd upon) it is also Majestical and Stately, and not much Inferiour to the Trumpet; and for that reason the greatest Heroes of the Age (who sometimes despise Strung-Instruments) are infinitely pleased with This for its brave and sprightly Tone.
>
> And whereas most other single Wind-Instruments (especially the Flute) go so very high, for want of the lower Notes, that it is impossible to play upon them in Consort with the Violin, &c. The Hautboy is free from this defect, and may be play'd upon in Consort, without transposing or advancing the Key.
>
> Some Men, I must confess, endeavour to Decry the Hautboy, pretending the Learners must blow so hard, that it is apt to bloat their Faces, and prejudice their Lungs: But this is a meer Mistake, as will be found on Experience; For all that play upon this instrument to a reasonable perfection, know, That with a good Reed it goes as easie and as soft as the Flute.
>
> Now since the Hautboy is so fine and usefull an Instrument, and so portable a Companion; pity it is, no Introduction for playing upon it was ever extant in Print. 'Tis for that Reason alone I have now publisht this small Piece, which contains such exact Rules and Methods for that purpose, that there is nothing wanting, only the Time; for which I referr you to the Apollo's Banquet; in which is not only the best Instruction for Time, but above a Hundred Tunes proper for this Instrument; so that any Man, without the Trouble or Charge of a Master, may, in a little time, arrive to a Perfection therein: Which is the only Aim and Design of Yours J.B.

The writer 'J. B.' has not been identified, although the same initials occur in 'The Most Pleasant Companion . . . for the Recorder or Flute,' 1681, and also in Greeting's 'The Pleasant Companion . . . for the Flagelet,' 1682. Following the preface of 'The Sprightly Companion' are three pages of directions, one page of Henry Playford advertisements, and twelve pages of music, consisting of 'Mr. Paisible's Tunes for French Haut-boy,' 'A Scotch Tune,' 'The Duke of Savoy's March,' 'The King of Poland's March,' 'The Grand Seigniors March,' 'The Spanish March,' 'The Swisse March,' 'The Great Mogulls March,' 'Morocco's March,' 'The French Musketeers March,' 'A Minuet,' 'Cybelle by Mr. Baptista Lully,' 'The Queen's Farewell in 4 Parts by Mr. Paisible,' 'The Queen's Farewell in 3 Parts by Mr. Tollett.'

'Tollett and Lentell's Setts in 3 Parts.' Presumably 'A Consort of Musick of Three Parts, Composed by John Lenton & Tho. Tollett,' 1692, of which only an imperfect Base Viol part is known (B.M. K.2. c. 14). Another work by John Lenton appears later on in the same Playford catalogue:

> A Three-Part Consort of New Musick; consisting of Overtures, Trio's and Ayres, &c. with Variety of Fancy, for Violins, Flutes, Trumpets and Hautboys; with a Figured Bass for the Harpsicord, Lute, &c. Both by John Lenton.

No copy of this work by Lenton is available. A second edition was advertised in the Term Catalogues, 1698. The work may have been an enlarged edition of Lenton and Tollett's 'Consort,' completed by Lenton alone as Tollett died in 1696. Both composers are referred to in Grove, Eitner, &c., and earlier in this article. 'The Division Violin,' 1685, contains a 'Division called Tollet's Ground,' and a 'Division to a Ground, Mr. George Tollet.' The first of these Divisions, ascribed to Thomas Tollett, is well known. The relationship between George and Thomas Tollett is not clear. It is interesting to note that Thomas Tollett was appointed 'One of the twenty-four musicians in ordinary to his Majesty, in the place and upon the decease of Robert Carr,' January 9, 169$\frac{5}{6}$ (Lafontaine, 'The King's Musick'). Robert Carr was the son of Playford's business-friend John Carr. Tollett was succeeded in the appointment of musician-in-ordinary by John Eccles, September 2, 1696.

'Mons. Visie's Guittar-book in a large Quarto on Copper-Plates, bound: Dedicated to the French King.' This is a copy of the very rare and beautiful 'Luire de Guittarre,' by Robert de Visée (B.M. K.1. k.12) referred to in an article in the Musical Times, October, 1924.

At the end of the Playford Catalogue are the following advertisements:

> There will be Publish'd next Michaelmas-Term the First Book of Dr. Blow's Choice Songs; viz.
>
> 1. Go perjur'd Man, with all its parts.
> 2. Septimius and Acme.
> 3. In vain, in vain, brisk God of Love.
> 4. If mighty wealth.
>
> With Two New Songs lately Compos'd: And also the 3d Book of the 2d Volume of Deliciæ Musicæ will be Publish'd Michaelmas-Term next.

There is no trace of a copy of the book of Blow's Songs. 'Go perjured man' and 'In vain' appeared in 'Choice Ayres,' Fourth Book, 1683, and 'If mighty wealth' in 'The Theater of Music,' Third Book, 1686. The Third Book of the Second Volume of 'Deliciæ Musicæ' is not known. The four books of the first volume and the first two of the second volume are advertised earlier in the Catalogue, and copies exist in the B.M. and R.C.M.

From an investigation of the items in the Fourth Playford Catalogue, it is clear that it dates from about 1697, thus bringing the conclusion of these unique records of musical activity down to the threshold of the 18th century.

NEW LIGHT ON LATE TUDOR COMPOSERS

By W. H. Grattan Flood

XIX.—John Marbeck

Most of our musical historians fall into a trap by reason of following the account given of John Marbeck by Foxe, in his 'Acts and Monuments.' In this remarkable book, Foxe makes the blunder of including Marbeck as one of the martyrs of 1543. Dr. James Gairdner, in his 'Lollardy and the Reformation' (vol. i., p. 344), writes:

> Foxe had, unluckily, in his first edition, consigned to the flames, in 1543, John Marbeck, the celebrated organist of St. George's Chapel, Windsor, who was pardoned, and lived long afterwards, continuing still to play the organ in St. George's Chapel.

The biographical data of Marbeck (whose name is also spelled 'Merbeck' in our usual reference books), cannot always be reconciled with documentary evidence. For instance, he is said to have been born in 1523, but this is surely an error. He was born, apparently, almost certainly, ten years earlier, in 1514, as he was a chorister of St. George's, Windsor, in 1529, and was appointed a lay-clerk, c. 1538, becoming organist in 1540, at the age of twenty-six. There is good reason for claiming him as a Yorkshire man. While still a chorister, he gave himself to composition, and in 153$\frac{4}{5}$, wrote a five-part Mass, entitled 'Per arma justitiæ,' which, with a number of other Masses, is included in William Forrest's* collection. He also composed a hymn for three voices, printed by Sir John Hawkins.

Marbeck was a strong 'reformer,' and hence his opinions were regarded at Court as heretical. On March 18, 1543, the Privy Council ordered the arrest of Marbeck, Testwood, and Bennet, and on the following day Marbeck was committed to the Marshalsea. Another 'reformer,' Robert Wisdom (a clerical musician, and translator of some of the Psalms), was imprisoned on May 14 following, but recanted on July 7. Testwood (a singing man of Windsor), Anthony Peerson (a preacher), and Henry Filmer (a tailor) were publicly burned at Windsor, on July 28, 1543. Marbeck, owing to his musical abilities, was not executed, but was detained in prison till the following October, when he was liberated owing to the influence of Bishop Gardiner. He expressed regret for his writings against the Mass, and was pardoned by Privy Seal on September 24, and under the Great Seal on October 4, 1543, he being therein described as 'organ player alias yeoman, of New Windsor.' Incidentally, it may be mentioned that John Heywood (musician dramatist) was also indicted for heresy on February 15, 1544, but recanted on March 7, and was pardoned on June 30. (Patent Rolls.)

From 1543 to 1547 Marbeck concealed his opinions, but after the accession of King Edward VI., he became an open defender of the new doctrines, and

* Davey tells us that Forrest 'was subsequently known as a rigid Papist,' and he gives the date of the collection as 'written in 1530.'

in 1550 published his Concordance, dedicated to Edward VI., in which he describes himself as having been > . . . brought up in your Highness's College of Windsor, in the study of music and playing on organs, wherein I consumed vainly the greatest part of my life.

He had at this date a deputy-organist, George Thexton, who held the post jointly with Marbeck (October 26, 1550).

In 1550, Marbeck published his 'Boke of Common Praier Noted,' in which he adapted the old Catholic plainchant tunes (Sarum use) to the English Service—that is, the first prayer-book of Edward VI. including the 'Benedictus' and 'Agnus Dei,' but omitting the Litany. In the same year he graduated Mus. Doc. at Oxford.

Some writers tell us that after the year 1551 Marbeck gave up his post as organist of Windsor, and devoted his attention to theological and controversial works. But this is an error. He was replaced in 1553 by Thomas Preston, who, however, was deprived in 1564. Marbeck was again organist in the early years of Queen Elizabeth, as we are informed by Dr. Nicholas Harpsfield, the deprived Archdeacon of Canterbury, who in the year 1561 published 'Dialogi Sex,' from which the following paragraph, castigating Foxe for his account of the alleged martyrs, is of interest:

> For behold, you have John Marbeck, the organist of Windsor, in the year 1543 and 28 July, 'undergoing martyrdom at the fire with cheerful constancy' (I quote the words of Foxe). But he is yet living, and chants as beautifully, and plays the organ as skilfully, at Windsor, as he was wont to do.

Between the years 1574 and 1584 Marbeck published a number of books, in only one of which music is touched on, viz., in his 'Booke of Notes and Commonplaces' (1581) sub 'Musicke.' His last book was 'A Dialogue between Youth and Olde Age' (1584). For many years he had given up the active duties of organist, as we find Richard Farrant organist, as well as master of the choristers, of Windsor from 1564 to 1580. Of course, it is well to note that Marbeck's appointment was 'for life,' and he retained his post as honorary organist till his death c. 1585. This date (1585) is merely assumed, inasmuch as John Mundy is said to have succeeded Marbeck in $158\frac{5}{6}$.

As has frequently been pointed out, Marbeck's setting of the Book of Common Prayer was purely syllabic and not of a high standard, yet he deserves inclusion among the late Tudor composers, as his work is of historical interest.

THE ZÜRICH FESTIVAL

By Basil Maine

The International Music Society's Festival at Zürich at the end of June was a comparatively quiet affair. There was very little to write home about, otherwise I would have employed the Air-Post to send an account of the first part of the Festival for the July number. Here I will deal only with those works which made a definite impression—either good or bad—upon my mind: for a few of the works made no impression at all. Their function was merely to beat the air—boastfully and vainly.

We may fairly take pride in the fact that the only English work included in the Festival scheme was a distinct success. This was W. T. Walton's Overture, 'Portsmouth Point.' Even to the English members of the audience this work came as a surprise, because of its delightful freedom from calculated effect and contrivance. In point of fact, the score has been worked at and revised many times, and only a day or so ago the composer told me that he was thinking of making some cuts. Yet in spite of this, in actual performance the Overture gives the effect of absolute spontaneity. Happily it came at a moment when we needed the air to be cleared.

Atmospheric conditions had been involved quite a lot by the anti-cyclonic Wind Quintet (Op. 26) of Schönberg. This was conducted with ascetic devotion by Anton Webern, and caused a little domestic quarrel at the end: for there were those who said 'It may be,' and others who shouted 'It cannot be.' But there it was; and soon (I was told by the publisher) we shall be able to hear the same work re-written for strings. This gesture, I suppose, is intended to emphasise Schönberg's negation of tone-colour, and all things appertaining to the senses.

The performance of de Falla's 'Master Peter's Puppet Show' quickly restored the good-fellowship of the Festival. The Marionetten-Theater in the heat of high noon was a near approach to the Black Hole of Calcutta; but those superhuman puppets defeated all the exigencies of physical confinement, and led us forth into the vast open spaces of the mind. De Falla has never charmed us so wisely.

Kodály's 'Hungarian Psalm,' for tenor voice, chorus, and orchestra, opened the Festival, and to the end its deep impression remained. The fervour of this single-minded music served to show up the shallow artifice of much that was to follow. I am not thinking of Honegger's 'King David' in this connection, for although undoubtedly it makes use of artifice and 'the shows of things,' yet it is the utterance of an impassioned and picturesque mind. André Caplet's 'Miroir de Jésus' spoke neither of passion nor of colour, but merely of a man whose thoughts are obscured by clouds of incense.

One of the most popular successes was that achieved by Casella's 'Partita,' for orchestra and pianoforte, a masterpiece of imagination and shapeliness. Gieseking's playing of the pianoforte part was perhaps more brilliant than the composer intended it to be; but it was obviously a big factor in securing the complete capitulation of the audience.

ACOUSTICS OF CHURCH AND CONCERT-HALL*

By E. G. Richardson

It is well known that the sensation of sound produced, for example, by clapping the hands, reaches the ear by means of a wave or waves of compression travelling through the air, just as the ripples on a pond produced by dragging a stick to and fro in the water will set in oscillation a cork at a distance on the water. When there is a boundary to the medium, such as the walls of a room, the bank of the pond, this is not a complete statement of the phenomenon. The waves are reflected by the boundary, and produce further oscillations in the 'receiver,' which, if the reflected waves are of sufficient intensity, are prolonged for a considerable time after the original wave has passed. When such a state of affairs exists in a room, the sound produced by a musical instrument seems to reverberate through the room after the actual tone-production has ceased. A musical tone, of course, consists of a series of waves sent out at regular intervals of time; the smaller the time-intervals (and, ipso facto, the smaller the distance between successive waves, or wave-lengths), the higher the pitch of the tone. The sounds produced by musical instruments and the human voice are rarely simple tones, but contain harmonics of the prime tone, so that a single note will result in superimposed series of waves having widely different pitches and wave-lengths. All these are propagated with the same velocity in a room, but it is important to remember that all will not be equally reflected by the walls. When the sound-waves strike the wall, some of the sound energy travels on as waves in the material of the wall, and may penetrate the wall, so that a muffled sound may be heard outside the room; but with the usual hard, unyielding walls of which buildings are, perforce, constructed, about 96 per cent. of the energy is reflected as waves travelling back into the room. The reflection is never so distinct—there is never so definite a beam—as in the parallel case of reflection of light. It is this reverberation which, in its excess or deficiency, is the cause of considerable part of the faulty acoustics found in many churches and concert-halls. It is the purpose of this article to show how any one may calculate the means by which such buildings should be corrected.

* Being the substance of three public lectures delivered by Dr. Richardson at University College, London.

Firstly, we must be clear on what we regard as desirable in buildings from the acoustical point of view. In order that an auditor may hear each note distinctly, it is necessary that the sound should rise to a sufficient and uniform intensity in all parts of the building, and then rapidly decay in order to make room for the next note. For a sound produced with a given intensity this condition depends on (1) the volume of the room; (2) the proportion of sound energy which the walls can absorb. While considerable reflection by the walls adds to the general intensity in the room produced by the note, it prevents the rapid decay which is necessary to keep successive notes clear of each other in the auditors' ears. In a large hall a distinct echo may be produced when the time between the arrival of the original waves and the reflected waves exceeds a sixteenth of a second. For the present we will suppose that there is uniformity of intensity in the room; the causes of the concentration of the sound in certain places, and of 'dead spaces' in others, will be dealt with later.

A certain amount of reverberation or overlap is desirable when music is being performed, but an excess produces a smudgy presentation, while a deficiency in this respect results in an equally undesirable deadness in the hall. For any particular hall, consensus of musical opinion will determine the desirable 'time of reverberation' between the moment a tone ceases to be produced and the moment it is no longer audible. This time depends on the pitch of the tone—because the reflecting power of materials is not the same for tones of different pitches, and the sensitiveness of the ear varies with pitch—but not on the position of the source of sound nor of the auditor. The correction of halls for bad acoustics consists first and foremost in making the actual time of reverberation agree with the desirable time. From a knowledge of the materials and dimensions of the walls, one can, following the late Prof. Sabine, of Harvard, who first raised this subject out of the mystery which surrounded it, calculate, without making an actual test, the reverberation time to be expected in the hall from a source of standard power and of average pitch (middle C). The formula for this time, t, was found by Sabine to be: $t = .05 \times \frac{V}{A}$ where V = volume of hall and A = total absorption of sound by the walls and objects of the hall, the second and foot being taken as units of time and length respectively. In an existing hall, the volume can hardly be varied, but we can alter A. In order to calculate this quantity, we take this object or section of wall and multiply its area by the absorption coefficient of the material of which it is made. This 'absorption coefficient' is the fraction of the incident energy which passes into the material, i.e., is not reflected. A list of absorption coefficients is given below:*

Open window	per sq. ft.	1.00
Acoustic plaster†	,,	.30
Cabot quilting†	,,	.60
Carpets, heavy	,,	.25
Concrete	,,	.17
Curtains, chenille	,,	.23
Curtains in heavy folds ...	,,	.5 to 1.0
Glass	,,	.027
Hair-felt, 1-in. thick ...	,,	.50
Marble	,,	.03
Plaster on wood	,,	.034
,, on tile	,,	.025
Wood sheathing	,,	.06
,, ,, varnished ...	,,	.03
Audience	per head	4.7
Seat, or pew, wood	per seat	.1
,, upholstered ...	,,	1.0 to 2.0

In order to find the acceptable time of reverberation, statistics are being compiled of halls and churches, which are judged by musicians to be acoustically good. It appears that this acceptable time varies as the cube root of the volume. Those concerned will be rendering a public service if they make known the details of buildings in which they habitually perform and which, in their opinion, possess unusually good acoustics. According to the data at present available, the acceptable time is given by the formulæ:

$$t = 1 + (\cdot 022 \times \sqrt[3]{V}) \text{ for sparsely-filled hall,}$$

or

$$t = \cdot 5 + (\cdot 02 \times \sqrt[3]{V}) \text{ for hall nearly full.}$$

The person who desires to correct a hall or church need only, therefore, apply one or other of these formulæ with that given earlier. Having calculated what time of reverberation would be acceptable, he must alter the total absorption A until the value of t given by Sabine's formula agrees with the acceptable value.

The method may best be shown by a concrete example.

There is at University College, London, an oblong room known as the Great Hall, in which, unless the hall is full, the acoustics leaves much to be desired. The volume being 170,000 cu. ft., the formulæ indicate a desirable reverberation of 2.23 (small audience) and 1.60 secs. (full). Absorption units are made up as follows:

* This table is compiled partly from results obtained by the writer and partly from those of F. R. Watson. The latter are for American materials, but until further work is available in this country they may be used for the calculation of t, in which an accuracy of five per cent. is sufficient.

† Materials of special absorbent quality marketed by the May Cons. Co., Chelsea.

		Units.
Wood.	—Floor, rear of platform, and doors, 3,170 sq. ft. @ .06 =	193
Glass.	—Windows, 1,290 sq. ft. @ .027 =	35
Plaster.	—Walls, less windows and doors, 8,660 sq. ft. @ .025 =	217
„	—Ceiling 2,980 sq. ft. @ .034 =	100
Seats.	—(Wood) for 900, @ .10 each =	90
Audience.	—For 300 add 300 × 4.7 and take away 300 seats - Total approx.	2,000
	For full audience add 900 × 4.7 less seats Total approx.	4,785

Whence the actual time of reverberation =

$$\frac{.05 \times 170{,}000}{2000} = 4.25 \text{ (}\tfrac{1}{3}\text{ aud.)}$$

„ „. $$\frac{.05 \times 170{,}000}{4785} = 1.77 \text{ (full)}$$

By comparison with the acceptable times calculated above, we see that the hall is too reverberant for music, even when full: as a matter of observation, it is never tolerable for speech. It is proposed to increase the capacity of the hall, and at the same time to remedy the acoustics, by (a) adding a gallery, (b) adding a timber roof, (c) increasing the accommodation by a half. It will be noted in the table given, that the audience makes a good absorber. In its absence, the reverberations will be undesirably increased, unless the absorption can be made up by other means. In order to do this, whenever possible, heavily upholstered seats should be quoted for in concert-halls. When wooden chairs or pews are in use, the time of reverberation should be corrected for the average audience expected. In this hall the extra units will be formed as follows:

	Units.
Wood.—Gallery, 2,000; ceiling, 3,000 sq. ft.; 500 extra seats, making ...	455
Plaster.—Less 60 units; making, in all, 395 extra units.

Adding these to the previous 545, and adding in the audience, Sabine's formula gives 2.2 secs. ($\frac{1}{3}$ aud.) and 1.3 secs. (full) as the times for the new Great Hall. These are shorter than the acceptable times given by the latter formulæ, so that the hall will be rather 'dead' for music, but this particular hall is used mainly for speaking, hence the longer reverberation which will be given to it. Had it been a concert-hall, the roof probably would have been left in plaster, which is less absorbent.

Another way of allowing for uncertainty in the number of the audience is to provide carpets, thick curtains, &c., on the platform; these can be removed or drawn aside when a large audience is present or more reverberation is wanted. It should be noted that speech, and to a lesser extent song, requires a room more dead than does music. There are grades even in the latter, although, as far as the writer is aware, no statistics have been collected as to differentiation of instruments in this respect, though personally he feels that instruments of sustained tone require a more reverberant auditorium than percussion instruments and the pianoforte.*

* Lifschitz has recently published in the Physical Review, results showing a slightly longer optimum reverberation for a pianoforte than for strings, in a hall which he tested.

In a cruciform church it is preferable to treat the chancel and transepts as complete rooms, making the former, if anything, a trifle more reverberant, if, as usual, it holds the choir and organ.

Having corrected our reverberation we must now consider what intensity of sound should be given out by the source, and whether the resulting intensity in the room will be uniformly distributed. The first question must be dismissed in a few words. Obviously we cannot lay down a law for the intensity produced by our instruments, as it has to vary from pp to ff in the same room. In order to make our pp's distinctly audible, and our ff's not cataclysmic, we must proportion our mezzo-forte to the size of the room. Theory indicates that the power of the source should vary as the square of the cube root of the volume of the room. This is not the same law as that for the time of reverberation, but if we have the latter correct the former is of less importance.

Although the amount of reverberation in a room is independent of the shape of the walls, yet the intensity of sound received by an auditor in different parts of the hall is not. Large curved surfaces at the back of the hall or in the ceiling tend to focus the sound to certain parts to the detriment of others, just as curved mirrors focus light. If in such a building, for example, an organ-pipe be blown at one point, a listener walking about will perceive marked oases and deserts in the sound received. These defects occur if the surfaces are large compared with the wave-length, and unbroken, and good reflectors (therefore poor absorbers) of sound. When such a curved surface lies close behind the sound—forms, for example, the apsidal east end of a church or the shell-shaped recess for the stage in certain concert-halls—it can be of advantage in helping to give the emitted sound a uniform wave-front; but such surfaces behind the auditors are usually detrimental, and when located should be broken up by embossed ornamental work or covered with absorbent material. Echoes from high ceilings can be mitigated in the same way.

The position of the source of sound is of considerable importance in rooms possessing large, smooth reflecting surfaces. As far as possible every auditor should receive sound direct, and not have to rely on that which has been reflected or bent round corners. In a large hall, to avoid echoes, the paths by which the direct sound and the once-reflected sound can reach the audience should be of equal length; hence it is as well to raise the platform or stage above the ground level, and for orchestral performances, at any rate, the central raised band-stand possesses advantages over the stage at one end of the hall. When the latter is adopted, a shell-shaped or concave recess of reflecting material should be built behind the performers to act as a mirror or 'sound-board' to throw out the music on a more or less plane front. If the reflector consist of wood sheathing against the wall, it is well to have a space between, supporting the wood on studs at intervals. This system then acts like the sounding board of a pianoforte, being forced into vibration in sympathy with the emitted sounds. Such 'resonance' raises the general intensity without increasing the reverberation, but it is liable to distort the sound. Some judgment is necessary in the choice of absorbents, as materials like felt possess widely different qualities in respect of different pitches. Such a substance may remove the lower tones from a note on the organ, leaving the harmonics, and so make that particular stop much 'brighter' than the organ-builder intended. The harder surfaces like plaster and wood do not produce such marked distortion.

Churches, and especially cathedrals, have unusually high roofs and, with the choir in the chancel, this prevents the adoption of the equal-path idea. The usual position of the organ is not one which would commend itself to acoustic theory : it is frequently tucked away in a side chapel, so that the majority of the pipes can be heard only by diffraction or by reflection from the opposite wall of the building. As the organ cannot be placed at the east end, theory would indicate as the best position either the west gallery, with the choir in front, or the ancient position over the rood-loft, with the choir in the chancel. The heavy screen required for the latter position reduces the effectiveness of the choir in old churches, but with modern methods of construction the organ could be placed on massive girders across the chancel arch, a light open screen below allowing the sound from the choir to penetrate to the audience without interfering appreciably with the view of the east end. This position certainly best satisfies the principles of acoustics.

It is hoped that the indications given here will enable an organist or conductor to suggest a remedy for defective acoustics in his church or concert-hall, at any rate to the extent of getting rid of excessive reverberation or deadness. The question of remedial treatment for defective acoustics due to focussing of sound by curved surfaces has not been considered in such detail ; it is rather a problem for the expert.

THE HALLÉ ORCHESTRA

Sir Hamilton Harty's speech at the Annual Meeting of the Hallé Society contained so much of interest that we reprint a couple of extracts. Dealing with the much-discussed dropping of certain works in last season's concerts, Sir Hamilton said :

> During the Season we felt ourselves obliged to delete a few works which had previously been announced for performance in the prospectus of the concerts. Even to an experienced musician there are certain works whose effect cannot be properly estimated until they are heard and rehearsed. In the case of the 'Sinfonia Domestica,' which was one of the works omitted, there were two reasons why we decided not to perform it. I am ashamed of neither of them, and would act in the same way again. It is impossible to give a good performance of any work unless those taking part are enthusiastic about it from a musical point of view. It cannot be expected that the audience will feel interested and pleased when the performers are disappointed and bored, and when the work was rehearsed the orchestra were unanimous with me in their opinion that whatever the merits of the work, they did not feel that enthusiasm for the Symphony which was necessary to a good performance. When this was reported to the Committee they came to the opinion that under the circumstances they were not justified in spending the money on extra rehearsals without which the work could not have been given at all. With regard to the 'Pastoral' Symphony by our distinguished English composer, Vaughan Williams, the circumstances were different, and were explained in a letter to the Manchester Guardian, which stated clearly the grounds on which the work was dropped out. There was no attempt to criticise this work from a musical standpoint. I am anxious that this should be made clear, as there has been a certain amount of misunderstanding on the subject. The letter simply stated that the object of the Committee, and I may say of myself, is to give music which will make the widest possible appeal, so long as it is good music, and without presuming to enter into a discussion as to the value of this Symphony as music, we were convinced that its idiom and characteristics would appeal to only a certain section of our audience. In other words, the concerts are given for the majority of the Hallé audience, not for a minority.

This policy strikes us as being a bit timid for Lancashire. How are new and unfamiliar works to get a hearing if the desires of that 'certain section' are to be consistently disregarded? True, all programmes should be designed to suit the taste of the majority ; but the application of this principle should be general, not particular. If the example of the Hallé Orchestra were followed everywhere, the Vaughan Williams 'Pastoral' Symphony, and all other contemporary music of the kind that is not likely to make the 'widest possible appeal' (at all events, on a first hearing), would never be performed. When founding these concerts, did Hallé frame his programmes with no regard to the minority? As to the Strauss work, one hardly expects a tacit confession that the Symphony was entirely unfamiliar to both conductor and orchestra. And is the public to expect performers to do first-rate work only when they are 'enthusiastic' about the music? On the whole, these arguments show the wisdom of the old saw, 'Never give your reasons.'

Sir Hamilton is more convincing in his remarks on the action of the Musicians' Union concerning the broadcasting of concerts. This is not the only instance we have heard of recently, in which the policy of the Union led to a reduction of employment. Sir Hamilton said :

> The decision not to broadcast these concerts will be a disappointment to many who have come to look forward to hearing by this means our Thursday concerts, and I think it is only right to explain a little more clearly why this decision was forced upon the Committee. No one who appreciates the great expense of giving orchestral concerts in the style to which our audiences have become accustomed could ever imagine that these concerts pay for themselves, and it has been only by making the fullest use of outside sources of income that calls on the guarantors have been avoided. The fees, for instance, paid to the Society by the B.B.C. for permission to broadcast their concerts have been a considerable help, and it was hoped to continue this arrangement. The Union to which orchestral musicians belong, however, took the attitude that the musicians taking part in these concerts should be paid an extra fee when broadcast. The B.B.C., on the other hand, refused to countenance any such arrangement, and as neither side would depart from their principles in this matter, the Society was unable to make an agreement with the B.B.C. for a continuance of their useful collaboration. I am not going into the question at present of the rights and wrongs of this controversy. There are some things which ought to be said, however, with regard to the broader aspects of the question, and I propose to put them before you in a brief form. Keeping a first-class orchestra in being in this country is a difficult and anxious business, and only possible when all concerned pull together with friendliness and goodwill. The case is very different abroad, where the State and municipalities contribute largely to the support of music, and subsidize their leading orchestras ; or in America, whose citizens are enthusiastic and lavish in their financial aid. Here, however, in England, the available funds are meagre, and there is not one of our orchestras which does not lead a more or less precarious existence. Any action, therefore, which limits the available sources of support is a cruel and short-sighted one. This is peculiarly true in the case of the Hallé Society, which is in many ways a unique and ideal organization. I should like to emphasise as strongly as I can the fact that every penny made by the Society goes back without deduction to those concerned in the performance of the music. It is, therefore, impossible to look upon the Society as in any way a profit-making concern. It exists entirely for the propagation of good music, and for the support of musicians. It is the only organization I know whose total available funds are considerably less than the Pension Fund which has been accumulated for those musicians to whom it gives employment. The total available funds of the Society are, as stated in the printed report, £11,346, while the Pension Fund stands at £16,116. It would be perfectly simple, of course, to make regular calls on the guarantors until the funds were exhausted, but it does not need much insight to see that this would mean the quick extinction of the Society, as a means of giving employment to musicians who now profit by its activities. The fees paid to players in the Hallé Orchestra are in excess of those received by most other orchestral musicians in this country, and, finally, the reputation of the Orchestra is such that to be a member of it lends a certain prestige to even the most celebrated artists in this branch of the musical profession. I would not like it to be supposed that I am attacking the Musicians' Union in principle, for I am convinced that it is a desirable thing in itself, and that it has done a very great deal to improve the lot of the average orchestral musician. But, for the reasons I have stated, our English concert orchestras—and, surely, the Hallé Orchestra in particular—should not be hampered in any efforts that are made to give them a little permanence and solidity. The Musicians' Union is good for orchestral musicians without doubt, and it would be a pity if, through a mistaken policy, its influence were to decrease, but I have felt recently that it is in danger of destroying the very source of employment for many of its members by too much interference in a ticklish and difficult business—the business of giving orchestral concerts. The Hallé Society is like an aged and overworked goose which does its very best to produce as many golden eggs as its interior mechanism will allow, but too many inexpert attempts to increase the size of the eggs and the rate of delivery will only result in the speedy death of the exhausted and bewildered bird. With all respect to the aims and ideals of the Musicians' Union and its members, I wish to say something to them which is between an appeal and a warning—Leave the orchestral societies alone, especially the Hallé Society, or before long you will force them out of existence, and they will cease to be a source of profit to anyone at all. The members of the Hallé Orchestra, for their part, have always responded so unhesitatingly, and in such a friendly spirit, to any extra demands made upon their musical skill and insight, that I feel sure they will give an equally intelligent and sympathetic consideration to the problem I have just outlined.

A novel experiment is being carried out at the Ipswich Public Libraries, with a view to fostering interest in operatic music, and also making the library more widely known. With the help of the Gramophone Company, complete performances of three popular modern works—'La Bohème,' 'Cavalleria Rusticana,' and 'I Pagliacci'—are being given in a small garden at the Central Library. They are being very well attended, and in order that the audience may follow the action, a member of the staff tells briefly, between each record, what is happening on the stage.

The Vacation Course of the Training School for Music Teachers (73, High Street, Marylebone) will be held at Calder Girls' School, Seascale, Cumberland, from August 3 to 31. It includes a course for leaders of community singing.

A NOTE ON GRIEG

By Eric H. Thiman

There are one or two composers of whom it may be said that their position in the musical world has suffered from their popularity. This is so in the case of Mendelssohn, the extreme popularity of the 'Songs without Words,' and 'Elijah,' for instance, having blinded the eyes of the musical world to the beauty of the 'Hebrides' Overture, the chamber music, and other of his best works. Particularly is this so in the case of Grieg. Grieg is generally regarded only as the composer of the 'Peer Gynt' Suite and a few negligible trifles for pianoforte which may be heard any evening in a thousand suburban drawing rooms, his more important works, in which there is often a much greater amount of real beauty, being in very considerable danger of total neglect.

But not only has Grieg suffered from the popularity of much of his music; he has also suffered from foolish remarks made about him in various so-called critical works, these remarks generally taking the form of blaming him for not being other than he was. Thus, while it was known that Grieg was more successful in small forms than in large, yet his short pieces were criticised for not being sonatas and symphonies. This is as sensible a procedure as criticising Beethoven's Symphonies because they are not short lyric pieces. Parry rather loftily remarks that 'the intellectual processes of concentrated development are not in his [Grieg's] line.' Even if this statement were entirely true (and to those with a knowledge of the 'Holberg' Suite, 'In Autumn,' the first movement of the Sonata Op. 45, and other works, it is easy to doubt it), it is not fair to make it a reproach to the composer because his sympathies were largely with shorter and more lyric forms than the symphony. There are many other desirable qualities in musical composition besides 'the intellectual processes of concentrated development,' and some of these qualities, such as a gift for melody, harmonic originality, and rhythmic interest are present in a great degree in Grieg's music.

Further, why should it be assumed that a big canvas is the only one on which great works of art can be formed, and why should it be assumed that nobility and grandeur of utterance are the essential qualities of great music? Let us have nobility by all means, but it is not an indispensable quality to good music. Scarlatti never attempted nobility, and we may search Couperin and Rameau for it and not easily find it. Yet these men take a very honourable place among composers. And, turning to Bach's French Suites, are not these as beautiful as anything he ever wrote? There is surely in music room for the miniature as well as for the symphony, and to blame a composer of miniatures for not being a composer of symphonies is clearly a cardinal error.

Nevertheless, although Grieg is chiefly known by his smaller works, he is not by any means a composer of miniatures alone. How often have the three Violin Sonatas, the 'Cello Sonata, and the String Quartet been heard on the concert platform in London lately? How many concert-goers have heard the Overture 'In Autumn,' the 'Holberg' Suite, 'Bergliot,' and 'Olaf Trygvason' within the last few years? Why do pianists so consistently neglect the fine Ballade and the best of the Lyric Pieces? To these questions it is not easy to find satisfactory answers. Nevertheless, this almost total neglect of Grieg's larger works is very unfair to him, and it is time the balance was righted.

Mention is made of the Violin Sonatas, and it is difficult to see why these are so infrequently played. The Sonata in F has a capital first and last movement; that in C minor has a fine and virile first movement as loftily conceived as some of the best of Brahms, and the beautiful melody which is the principal theme of the slow movement is not easily forgotten. Singers are notoriously conservative in their outlook, but violinists seem nearly as bad. There are, naturally, many exceptions, but it is only too often that one hears the usual group of hyphenated arrangements which are unnecessary in any case, and much more so when they are so consistently played. What a delightful change it would be to hear one of the Sonatas instead! They are not particularly difficult, either for violin or pianoforte, and are very grateful to play and listen to. Perhaps some enterprising violinist will look into the matter.

Bülow, in a memorable phrase, referred to Grieg as the Chopin of the North, and this statement is generally considered an exaggeration, but, as a fact, it is truer than such sayings generally are. Grieg has all Chopin's delicacy, refinement, and pianistic effectiveness, without that luxuriance of ornamentation which sometimes mars Chopin's work. On the other hand, there are the obvious facts that Grieg's emotional range is not so wide as that of the Polish composer, and that his harmonic warmth, original and delightful though it be, is apt to pall a little when heard to excess. Still, there are probably few who have not felt that Chopin's distinctive style becomes monotonous with a surfeit of his music, such as is usually provided by a recital devoted exclusively to his works. There is little actual similarity in the quality of the music of the two men, but their points of resemblance lie in the fact that in both cases their best work was done for the pianoforte, and that in their treatment of that instrument both attained great artistic success and popularity.

Mention of Grieg's pianoforte music brings to mind the neglect of his fine Ballade. This is one of the most distinctly Norwegian of all his pianoforte pieces, and is written with a keen sense of pianistic effect. It is not, except for the last movement, of great difficulty, and with its vivid rhythms, harmonic interest, and national colouring, should be as popular as it is good. Next to 'Peer Gynt' and the Pianoforte Concerto, Grieg's fame at present largely rests on his Lyric Pieces. Some of these numbers have justly become very popular among amateur pianists; but even so, there are perhaps a score which are very rarely played, and there are even a few, such as the Notturno, the exquisite 'An der Wiege,' and the charming 'Waldesstille,' which need not be disdained even by the concert pianist. Indeed, a group of the lesser-known of these pieces would make a delightful item in many a pianoforte recital, and might well take the place of the usual and hackneyed Chopin group, without which most pianists appear to think a pianoforte recital incomplete.

There is one aspect of Grieg's music which is sometimes lost sight of, namely, his influence over a composer who is gradually coming into his own. It would be perhaps an exaggeration to say that Delius is influenced entirely by Grieg, but nobody can doubt the large part that the later characteristics of Grieg have played in forming Delius's distinctive style. To anyone who studies Grieg's Op. 66 the similarity is obvious, and in at least one of Delius's orchestral pieces—for instance, 'On hearing the first cuckoo in spring'—Grieg's influence can be easily felt. Indeed, so closely does Delius use Grieg's shifting ninths and elevenths, and so obvious is the use of a Norwegian folk-song which Grieg has used in his Op. 66, that this piece might almost have been written by Grieg himself. So rich and modern are the harmonies in this set of folk-song arrangements, that they are almost a revelation to anyone who is acquainted only with the music of Grieg's earlier periods.

Let us give the 'Peer Gynt' Suite and the Pianoforte Concerto a rest, and let us hear instead some of the orchestral and choral music, some of the songs, and some of the fine and neglected chamber and pianoforte music. It may then be found that Grieg is a greater composer than is generally imagined.

ORCHESTRAL NOTATION

By Tom S. Wotton

(Continued from July Number, page 642.)

The ordinary practice of writing the double-bassoon part is to note it an octave higher than the real sounds, in the same way as that of the double-bass. But Wagner and Debussy elected to mark the actual notes. At the commencement of 'Siegfried' there may be good reason for this:

Ex. 7.

Here, the 'Motive of Thought' given to the third bassoon and double-bassoon, is evidently intended for the second and third bassoons, should the latter possess the low A, as Wagner requested at the head of his score, and therefore probably the real sounds are advisable.*

But in 'Parsifal' there does not appear to be any reason why the part of the double-bassoon should appear at its actual pitch. In these days of crowded scores, unnecessary leger lines are inadvisable, for the sake of clarity. A stave with four or five lines above or below takes up more than its fair amount of space, which may mean that other, and possibly more important, parts are unduly compressed. In his 'Images' for orchestra, Debussy, in the first ('Gigues'), notes the double-bassoon in the ordinary way. But in the other two, 'Iberia' and 'Rondes de Printemps,' he adopts the Wagnerian method, having a foot-note to the latter that the part of the contrebasson is written at its actual pitch.

Although the treatises, with the exception of that of Hofmann, are silent on the point, there are three ways of noting the part of the bass clarinet: the 'French,' when it is written throughout in the treble clef, the real sounds (for a B♭ instrument) being a ninth below; the 'German,' when it is written mainly in the bass clef, with the treble one for the highest register, in both cases the real sounds being a second below; and what might be termed the 'Russian' method. In this, notes in the bass clef have the 'German' significance, those in the treble that of the 'French.' Or perhaps it would be better to say that the Russians use the same notation for the bass clarinet as Mozart employed for his solo clarinet in No. 9, and for his bassett horn in No. 23 of 'Titus'—i.e., when the part is in the bass clef it is marked an octave too low :

* As the low A is employed fairly frequently throughout the entire 'Ring,' it is strange that Wagner marks the alternative double-bassoon for only half-a-dozen bars in 'Siegfried.' For the first complete performance of the work in 1876, in the list of instruments employed, a double-bassoon is found as well as the three ordinary instruments.

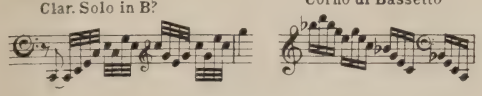
Ex. 8. (a) Clar. Solo in B♭ (b) Corno di Bassetto

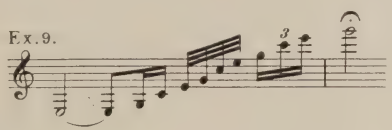


Like Mozart's two instruments, Russian clarinets descend to C, instead of E or E♭.* The only non-Russian composers who employ the method, as far as I am aware, are Liszt (from whom the Russians may have copied) and Puccini, but neither of them consistently. The former uses it in his 'Berg' and 'Dante' Symphonies, but employs the 'French' plan in 'Tasso' and the 'German' in 'Mazeppa.' The latter practises it in 'Manon Lescaut' and 'Tosca,' while he has the 'French' notation in 'La Bohème' and 'Madama Butterfly.'

The upper limit of a bass clarinet does not, strictly speaking, here concern us. But it is of interest, since it illustrates a point too often forgotten in the study of Instrumentation.†

Meyerbeer, as we all know, was the first to employ the bass clarinet, in Act 5 of 'Les Huguenots,' and in the published score the fifth bar of the solo stands thus :

Ex. 9.



But in the second edition of Berlioz's treatise (from which the English translation is derived) the arpeggio appears as :

Ex. 10.

The modification, we may be certain, emanated from Meyerbeer himself. In Berlioz's Ex. 62 (taken from the same opera) the clarinet and bassoon parts do not agree with those in the engraved score, but we know from Deldevez's 'L'Art du Chef d'Orchestre' that the composer altered them in his manuscript after the publication of the work. Though Deldevez does not mention any change in the bass clarinet part, that too must have been made by Meyerbeer, since Berlioz would hardly have ventured to make any alteration. The former evidently discovered what Forsyth and Widor have since pointed out, that the top fifth of the compass is practically useless. The upward range should finish at  (real sound). On the other hand, in Teuchert & Haupt's 'Musik-Instrumentenkunde' (1911), Edmund Weissbach, then clarinettist at Dresden Opera House, gives without comment $c^{\prime\prime\prime}$ as the highest written note, which means that the highest real sound is an octave above that given by Widor. And indeed Wagner, in 'Tristan' (p. 251), employing the 'German' system, nearly touches this height by marking  the real sound being of course a second below.*

The explanation of the discrepancy is not (as some would have it) owing to the fact that Weissbach is a performer, while the other two are (presumably) merely listeners, but because the German bass clarinet is of smaller bore than that of French make. This may affect the richness of the chalumeau register, but it must undoubtedly improve the quality of the high notes.

Such differences in the makes of various instruments account for much of the apparently contradictory information contained in the text-books. The idiosyncrasies of particular players and the custom of particular orchestras will explain the rest. We want a modern Burney to produce a completely trustworthy work on Instrumentation; someone, who would make a tour over Europe and the United States, visiting the principal orchestras, and studying the make of their instruments, their method of production, their custom and tradition. As it is, on certain points the information supplied is apt to be parochial, and resolves itself into the practice or opinion of a single performer in some particular orchestra.

Why there should be a jump of an octave in clarinet parts, when the clef is changed, it were hard to say. But we find the same peculiarity in horn parts, and perhaps it is not without some bearing on the question that the first clarinettists were horn-players. But with the latter the principle is the contrary to that of the former. In spite of the treatises (with the exception of that of Berlioz), it is the notes in the treble clef that are written an octave too high, and not those in the bass that are too low. A little consideration will show that this is so. If we take the typical horn in C (which of course invariably means a horn in C basso), the real sounds, omitting the first harmonic, are :

Ex. 11.

Since the tessitura of the first horn for ordinary orchestral purposes lay between the fourth and twelfth harmonics, it was undoubtedly convenient, in order to avoid either the use of leger lines or changes of clef, to write the part an octave higher in the treble clef. When the low notes were required, and the use of the bass clef imperative, there was no reason for writing them other than at their proper pitch. On the same stave, the second horn would conform to the same rule as the first.† But on a stave to itself it might with advantage remain at its proper pitch, as in our next example.

In 'Dinorah,' Meyerbeer, for the Huntsman's Song in Act 3, and for the preceding Entr'acte, has five horns—two valve horns in F, two natural ones in C, and 'Un 2e Cor à 3 Pistons en Ut,' noted throughout in the bass clef. Here is its part for the

* Many modern bass clarinets possess a low E♭ key to enable them to take the lowest real sound of the instrument in A, which is seldom used, its part being transposed by the performer.

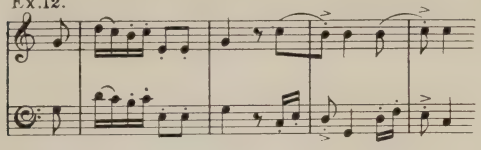
† 'Instrumentation' is here used in its exact sense of writing for the separate instruments; 'Orchestration' being the art of combining them. It is a pity that in English the two terms are to all intents and purposes synonymous. The French differentiate between them, as witness the full title of the treatise of Berlioz. Of Gevaert's two volumes on the orchestra, the first is called 'Traité d'Instrumentation,' and the second 'Cours méthodique d'Orchestration.

* It is worthy of note that Weissbach prefers the 'French' notation, and transcribes the Wagnerian examples into it.

† Rarely we find the two clefs on one stave. But this was merely a temporary expedient, and the part of the second horn was confined as a rule to holding notes, which would not tend to confusion.

opening bars of the song, with that of the second natural horn above it :

Ex.12.



For the first bar the two horns are in unison, and as the part in the bass clef represents the actual sounds, it is clear that it is the use of the treble clef that constitutes the divergence from the normal. Yet we have the text-books talking of the 'curious custom,' or some such expression, of writing horn-notes in the bass clef an octave too low. Probably in the year 2325 musical historians will draw attention to the 'quaint practice' of Meyerbeer and Wagner of writing their parts for tenor voices at their true pitch.

In some works by d'Indy, Florent Schmitt, and others the bass clef merely continues that of the treble downwards, without any break of an octave. This question of the value of the bass clef in horn music is, I believe, one of those on which Widor suggests a congress of musicians should decide. In theory, such a gathering to formulate the principles that should govern notation is an excellent idea. But in practice, it is doubtful whether any good would come of it. The congress would be attended by a number of amiable gentlemen, with a hankering after notoriety, and a selection of fantastic schemes, while the men who mattered would sit quietly at home and note the bass clarinet according to the 'French,' 'German,' or 'Russian' methods, just as the spirit moved them.

(To be concluded.)

The Musician's Bookshelf

'Sullivan.' By Henry Saxe Wyndham. ('Masters of Music.')

[Kegan Paul, 7*s.* 6*d.*]

It is curious how little that is interesting has been written about the most popular of English composers. No one with a good critical pen has yet thought fit to discuss Sullivan, either as man or musician, in a really adequate way. Mr. E. J. Dent could do it, of course. He would not suffer from that suspiciousness towards high spirits which darkens the pages on Sullivan in Dr. Ernest Walker's 'History'—pages which justly enough contemn the 'serious' works, but are blindly (or deafly) unjust to Sullivan's gay charm. Then 'Grove,' too, misses the mark pretty badly :

> If his vocal works have gained Sir Arthur Sullivan the applause of the public, it is in his orchestral music that his name will live among musicians.

Mr. Wyndham's new book is based mostly on the works of Lawrence and Findon, and on the Lives of Grove (Graves) and of Gilbert (Dark and Grey). It is non-critical, for 'the inevitable query as to his ultimate place among British musicians cannot, we think, be answered properly yet' (p. 245). The author, pretending to no expertness in the art, abstains from musical analysis. Still, in spite of his disclaimers, rudimentary forms of appreciation creep in. Although on one page he 'leaves to others better fitted the task of nicely discriminating between Sullivan's various claims to a place upon Britain's Roll of Fame,' on another 'the best in Sullivan' is declared 'equal to the best in any man from Purcell to Stravinsky.'

The book has this much usefulness, that it sets down a good number of biographical facts in a handy form. It professes no more to be intimate than critical. We cannot say we take away from it any impression of Sullivan the man. What gift or charm had he, that without any advantage of birth he was already in his young days gaily sailing in the reaches of smart society? Whatever it was, Mr. Wyndham never inquires. In fact, he lacks the curiosity proper to a biographer, or else his gentlemanly respect for the sacredness of private life unfits him for the task.

Here is his account of the Great Dissolution—the sundering of Gilbert from Sullivan, which was an English historical event to rank with the fall of a ministry. Admit that there is something positively comic in the biographer's withdrawal at the crisis of his tale :

> We now come to the period when there was an eclipse, profoundly regrettable in every way, in the cordial relationship that had existed between Gilbert, Sullivan, and d'Oyly Carte. We do not propose to delve deeply into the matter. That has been done in other accounts, and it will suffice to say that if there were perchance an error of judgment on either side, it was all amply atoned for when the reconciliation took place a short time after. In the meantime a much more important event to the biographer of Sullivan took place :

and we come to the Cambridge Circus Opera House and 'Ivanhoe.' Mr. Wyndham pries so far into his hero's private affairs as to admit him to have been an impenitent gambler. But this was, after all, only a pêche mignonne (sic, p. 248)—a peach that 'stirs a responsive echo in the breasts of millions of his fellow-countrymen, not afflicted by the curse of priggishness.' C.

'Singers' Difficulties : How to overcome them.' By Kate Emil-Behnke.

[Cassell, 6*s.*]

This is a book which may be read with profit by any intelligent student of singing. It deals in a practical and intelligible manner with some of the most serious of the many difficulties encountered by singers, and shows how they may be overcome by scientific treatment. The opening chapter—Science and Sensation—is a plea for scientific voice-training as opposed to traditional or empirical methods. The writer suggests that methods of training which suited the past, with its infinitely simpler music, may well be inadequate now :

> Traditional Italian methods, perfect for the interpretation of the music of Scarlatti, Pergolese, Buononcini, &c., are by their very nature not suited for the ever increasing complexities of modern music, sung in English and German, particularly in view of vocal difficulties which are characteristic of English and German singers, viz., contracted throat, retracted tongue, rigid jaw, inflexible mouth, lack of nasal resonance, and absence of head tones.

It is urged that the fact that success is frequently achieved on traditional lines in no way weakens the arguments for the employment of scientific methods in the teaching of singing. Moreover, we are reminded, the vocal art must move with the times :

To cling to methods that were adequate for the demands of infinitely simpler phrasing, incomparably lighter orchestration and fewer instruments, is to emulate Canute. Instead of resisting the attempt to place the study of singing on a sure foundation, on the bed-rock of physiological knowledge, teachers and singers should keep open minds and welcome every light that science can throw upon what is surely the most complex and subtle of all the arts.

Generous reference is naturally made to the valuable research work with the laryngoscope carried out by the author's father.

In the chapter on 'Breathing' we learn that the writer was probably the first to study the movements of breathing in relation to voice-use by means of the X-rays. Reproductions are given of three skiagrams taken in the course of these investigations, showing position before inspiration, correct inspiration, and faulty (upper-chest) inspiration. This much-discussed subject is treated very clearly and sanely, and is supplemented by a number of simple exercises.

Much helpful advice will be found in the chapter on 'The Open Throat,' and the importance of a correct condition of the soft palate, the jaw, and the tongue is made clear. Exercises for the soft palate and tongue are given.

A careful study of the chapter on 'Resonance,' with its simple but illuminating experiments, should do much to disabuse the young student of the idea that a big tone is necessarily a carrying one. It should also convince him of the importance of acquiring absolute freedom of all the movable parts of the mouth :

. . . it will be understood why nations, such as the Italian and French, who move their mouths flexibly and generously, produce resonant, carrying tone, characterised in particular by nasal resonance and 'head' tones, whilst the English, who do not open their mouths or make use of the movable parts thereof, are either characterised by 'throatiness' or by 'white,' lifeless, cold, empty tone.

Referring to English as spoken by the Welsh, the writer says :

Their flexible use of the mouth in speaking produces pure vowels, and therefore sweet, clear, sympathetic tone, rich in co-vibrations. I have heard exquisitely pure, polished, resonant tone from Welsh colliers that might be envied by our best English opera and oratorio singers.

Flexibility and sustained singing are considered together; for each, it is suggested, if studied independently of the other, is apt to present difficulties which would be avoided by more balanced training. It is wisely pointed out that . . . the mastery of vocal flexibility should not be regarded solely as a means to rendering florid passages, but as an important factor in developing that suppleness of muscles which enables sustained music to be sung with true beauty, because the capacity to sustain without the 'grip' which means a 'hard' tone, or, on the other hand, the looseness which means a 'wobbly' tone, is only achieved by elasticity.

Discussing 'Difficulties of Language,' some hard things are said :

English is spoken so badly . . . that the student of singing really has to learn his language anew. . . . The smudgy, sloppy speech which is heard everywhere in England would not be tolerated in any walk of life in France. The average Englishman will consequently have months of work to do before he arrives at the point where the average foreigner starts when he commences vocal training.

The author deals adequately with Attack, Nasal Resonance, Registers, and Position, and devotes a special chapter to the tenor voice. Altogether, this is a most helpful, practical handling of a difficult subject, and the book should prove a trustworthy guide to all who use it intelligently. G. G.

'Aids to Elementary Violin Playing.' By Jeffrey Pulver.

[The Strad Library, 5*s*.]

This is a capital little book, full of sound and helpful advice. The contents are a slight modification of a series of articles that appeared in the columns of The Strad, and are very easy to follow. In a short prefatory note the author says :

The book is intended only for students who for some reason or other cannot obtain good tuition, for those who once learned a little and are now plodding on alone and unaided, and perhaps for some of our younger teachers.

The Introduction gives useful hints on the selection and care of the instrument. Mr. Pulver's advice on the importance of keeping it clean and free from resin might have been even more emphatic, for there are many self-taught players who apparently believe that the more resin on the belly of the violin the better the tone.

The first half of the book deals chiefly with the left hand, and the remainder is largely concerned with bowing. All the exercises are well graded, and the author has been careful to avoid harassing or hurrying the student in any way. Each difficulty is dealt with singly, without haste, and as simply as possible. Indeed, a feature of the book is its extreme simplicity. The aspirant is not taken beyond the third position, and any attempt at the higher positions without a teacher is not recommended.

The need for constant self-criticism and checking is emphasised, and from time to time there is a helpful page of retrospection. A typical example is p. 39, which even the beginner who is receiving good tuition might well keep open before him. It would save both pupil and teacher many a bad half-hour.

It is refreshing to read Mr. Pulver's opinion on the systematic practice of scales. He says :

As far as my own personal experience goes . . . the case in favour of the scales is fully made out. There can be no better aid to the left-hand technique, no better help to ear-training, than these most essential successions of tones and semitones. . . . And the practice of the scales need not be altogether uninteresting and monotonous.

How often we find a student wrestling with passages in a study given him in place of the scales which he should have had at his fingers' ends had the good technical foundation been well laid by steady and systematic scale-practice from the beginning! There is no royal road to good technique—an oft-forgotten truism—and the student who is prepared to accept the author's advice to work slowly and thoroughly will arrive at the end of Mr. Pulver's book with as good a grounding and working knowledge of the violin as is possible without expert assistance.

A misprint in the fingering of an early exercise on p. 17, Ex. H, second bar (obvious to any but the beginner for whom the study is written), calls for notice. The second quaver should be A on the open string, and not third finger as printed. D. G.

'The Instruments of the Orchestra.' By John E. Borland.

[Novello, 1*s.* 6*d.*]

This little book, one of the Novello Music Primers and Educational Series, should find many readers, if we may judge from the frequency with which we are asked to recommend a work of the sort. It is not a guide to orchestration, but is intended rather for the listener. The technique of the various instruments is touched on, but only in so far as it concerns the production and control of the tone. Dr. Borland wisely confines himself to essentials, thus making his book specially suitable for use in schools. The illustrations are notably good. Instead of the indifferent drawings, often not to scale (and sometimes even inaccurate in detail), which frequently serve in guides to the orchestra, there are excellent reproductions of photographs, with the proportionate sizes of the instruments clearly indicated. There are also numerous music-type illustrations, showing typical passages, the notation of certain wind instruments, the relative positions of the brass wind in chordal passages, the effect of transpositions, the compass of the instruments, the tuning of the string family, &c.

BOOKS RECEIVED

[Mention in this list neither implies nor precludes review in a future issue.]

'The Directory of British Music Industries, 1926.' Pp. 642. Federation of British Music Industries, 2*s.* 6*d.*

'The Life of William Jackson (of Masham), the Miller Musician.' By J. Sutcliffe Smith. Pp. 139. A. W. Angus, Leeds, 5*s.*

'Études sur le Rythme Grégorien.' Par Dom J. Jeannin. Etienne Gloppe, Lyon, 20*fr.*

'Carlo Gesualdo, Prince of Venosa, Musician and Murderer.' By Cecil Gray and Philip Heseltine. Pp. xiv., 145. Kegan Paul, 7*s.* 6*d.*

'Haydn.' By Michel Brenet. Translated by C. Leonard Leese, with a Commentary by Sir W. H. Hadow. Pp. xii., 143. Oxford University Press, 6*s.*

'Alessandro Scarlatti, "il Palermitano" (la Patria e la Famiglia.' By Ulisse Prota-Giurleo, Naples. Issued by the Author. Pp. 42.

'La Musique Grecque.' Par Théodore Reinach. Pp. 208. Payot, Paris, 5*fr.*

'The Spell of Music.' By J. A. Fuller-Maitland. Pp. 108. John Murray, 3*s.* 6*d.*

'The Spirit of Music: How to find it and how to share it.' By Edward Dickinson. Pp. 218. Charles Scribner.

'Œuvres inédites de Beethoven.' Published with an Introduction by Georges de Saint-Foix. Publications of the Société Française de Musicologie. Vol. 2, 30*s.* London: Harold Reeves

'Vom Volkslied bis zur Atonalmusik.' By Franz Landé. Pp. 69. Leipsic: Verlag von Carl Merseburger.

'Was wissen wir über Musik?' By Erika Kickton. Pp. 32. Leipsic: Verlag von Carl Merseburger.

'Die akustischen Rätsel der Geige.' By Prof. Dr. Karl Fuhr. Pp. 187. Leipsic: Verlag von Carl Merseburger.

'The Music of Spanish History to 1600.' By J. B. Trend. Pp. 288. Hispanic Society of America, 12*s.* 6*d.*

Gramophone Notes

By 'Discus'

COLUMBIA

Two further records from 'Parsifal' show a marked improvement on the Prelude, noticed last month. The new ones are of Klingsor's 'Magic Garden' and 'Flower Maidens'—the damsels, as usual in recording, being represented by instruments. The new process gets a good show in these records—ample power and plenty of colour. I reckon them among the best things the Company has done. The orchestra is the Philharmonic, and the conductor Bruno Walter (L1746-7).

From these richnesses we come down to small forces of the restaurant type. The J. H. Squire Celeste Octet plays Järnefelt's Præludium and a Scottish Fantasia by Mulder. The Præludium suffers from an obtrusive pianoforte part. The chunky chords, even at their softest, refuse to blend with the strings. The Octet is better suited in the Scottish Fantasia (9096).

An unusually good band of its kind is that of the Gleneagles Hotel, conducted by Henry R. Hall. It is excellently recorded playing a capital Fantasia on Scottish airs by Mulder (9099).

Yet another good little orchestra is Jacques Jacobs's Ensemble, heard in a couple of Edward German's 'Nell Gwynn' Dances (3972). There should be a welcome for records such as the three just noticed. When one comes to look into it, we are not given enough light music of really good quality—the kind of thing that provides a common meeting ground for the trained musician and the mere man who likes a tune. Generally there is far too much 'space to let' between the classics and the fox-trot. There is plenty of material to fill it, and I believe the filling would be profitable. None the less, I was glad to come back to a classic, and (my luck being in) one of the best and purest—Schubert's 'Death and the Maiden' Quartet, played by the London String Quartet. True, there were a few stray flies in the ointment: several lapses from intonation of so pronounced a character as to suggest a mishap somewhere in the recording. I cannot believe the L.S.Q. would fail so badly in this particular way. Apart from these few bad bits the recording is first-rate, and the delicate passages, both in regard to playing and reproduction, are beyond all praise. If anything could make a Schubert convert, it would surely be this lovely work. It is worth a stack of the over-rated songs with their yearnings and tears (L1751-4).

The Salisbury Singers are unequal in the two items recorded on No. 3975. Their phrasing is very short in an over-harmonized version by Ivimey of 'Drink to me only.' The ending is too drawn out also. Beale's 'Come let us join the roundelay' is better material, and capitally sung.

Among the best of recent solo records is that of Edgar Coyle in Lidgey's 'Now is my Chloris,' the old song 'Earl Bristol's Farewell,' and a couple by Quilter—'Take, oh take those lips away' and 'Hey ho, the wind and the rain.' Here is musical, unforced singing, and diction that is uncommonly good (9097).

H.M.V.

Among recent developments one of the most striking is the recording of long stretches of opera in which the main feature is the ensemble. I doubt if anything better has been done in this way than the Revolutionary Scene from 'Boris Godunov,' with a strong cast of five soloists, and a capital chorus, conducted by Albert Coates. The interest of the ordinary vocal 'star' in hackneyed arias is as nothing compared with such records as this. With very little exercise of the imagination one can visualise the scene, and enjoy the music almost as well as at first hand. Indeed, I am inclined to think that some day when we shall be able to turn on all the essential portions of an opera, with records that will run for twenty minutes instead of five, the way to enjoy such works will be to take it thus, free from the distractions and conventions of the theatre. For the comfort of those to whom a performance without some outstanding solo singing is a thing of naught, I add that there is rich satisfaction for them in the work of that fine bass Edward Halland (1090-1).

'Finlandia' is rather unevenly recorded (Albert Hall Orchestra, under Sir Landon Ronald). The long, open section for brass hangs, and the drums upset the tuning at times. The best parts are excellent, but on the whole this record shows a decline from the standard lately reached (D1089).

I have never been present at a performance of 'Rosenkavalier,' but good judges find such delight in it that I am willing to believe it the masterpiece they say it is. Yet I should never have thought so if my judgment had to depend on the set of records just issued, played by the Tivoli Orchestra (augmented), and conducted by Strauss himself. Much of the playing is poor, and it is perhaps owing to this shortcoming that the usual touch of Straussian commonplace is underlined. It is a pity the services of a first-rate orchestra were not utilised. The odd side in four records is filled by the 'Midsummer Night's Dream' Scherzo, played by the Albert Hall Orchestra, conducted by Sir Landon Ronald. A reviewer in a contemporary thinks the juxtaposition of the Scherzo and the 'Rosenkavalier' shows 'a spirit of almost malevolent humour,' the implication being that poor Mendelssohn is thereby shown up. The association is certainly piquant, but, so far as the showing up is concerned, I feel the boot is on the other leg (D1094-7).

A jolly military band record is that of the Coldstreams playing Ansell's 'Private Ortheris,' a well-constructed and effective pot-pourri (B2299).

The same band is heard also in 'The Lost Chord' and 'The Distant Shore'—good examples of the cornet solo type of performance (B2313).

The latest organ record shows the pedal part coming out well, and so holds out hopes for the future. It is of Dubois's 'Grand Chœur' in B flat, and the Bridal Chorus from 'Lohengrin,' played by Herbert Dawson at Kingsway Hall. But is there room for Wagner transcriptions on organ records? Surely not, seeing how wide is the field of fine orchestral records of that composer. And in any case, why bother about such an unrepresentative sample as this feeble chorus, which is tolerable only when well sung (B2307).

A stimulating affair (provided your room is not too small) is a record of a hornpipe and reel on the Irish pipes, played by Liam Walsh. Here is a rhythm so compelling and unflagging that one sits still with difficulty (B2308).

One of the pick of recent pianoforte records is that of Backhaus in Chopin's Waltz in D flat and Study in C, and Liszt's 'Waldesrauschen' (DB929).

Isolde Menges plays Fauré's well-known Berceuse rather quickly for my taste, though it may be all right for a really modern baby: and a few high notes are a trifle shrill. She is first-rate in a Spanish Dance of Sarasate (D1099).

Liszt's Rhapsodies are a severe test from which the gramophone does not emerge scatheless. No player seems to be able to avoid hard hitting when dealing with them, least of all Arthur de Greef. His handling of No. 12 is a bit noisy, but otherwise makes a good record (D1093).

Anne Thursfield sings Debussy's 'Mandoline' and Martini's 'L'amour est un enfant trompeur,' being particularly good in the former (E428).

Marcel Journet's fine voice and style are well exemplified in 'Quand la flamme de l'amour,' from Bizet's 'Fair Maid of Perth,' and 'Devant la maison,' from Berlioz's 'Faust.' A capital record this, with humour and diablerie, and some richly fruity hiccups in the Bizet (DA759). He is capital, too, in 'La Calunnia è un Venticello,' from 'The Barber of Seville,' and 'Vous qui faites l'endormie,' from Gounod's 'Faust' (DB921).

Expressive, but with no more than fair diction, is Eric Marshall's singing of Elgar's 'Speak, music' and Cyril Scott's 'Immortality' (E425).

Diction, however, is a strong point in the record of Leonard Gowing's performance of Löhr's 'So fair a flower' and Dvorák's 'Songs my mother taught me.' But the Löhr song is given too palpable a falsetto high note at the end, and both songs (especially the second) are marred by too much portamento (B2300).

The tremolo seems to be established in Gerhardt's singing, unfortunately, but her ending of Schubert's 'Gretchen am Spinnrade' is beautiful. The long notes in 'Auf dem Wasser zu singen' are a shade flat. Paula Hegner's accompanying is delightful (DB916).

Tudor Davies is happier in Elgar's 'The River' than in Liszt's 'Loreley' (which is surely a woman's song). He is inclined to be laboured, and his production sounds tight (D1098).

Galli-Curci is not always at her best in a record of the Mad Scene from Ambroise Thomas's 'Hamlet.' There is over-nasal quality at times, and the highest notes seem to have lost a trifle of their former ease (DB927).

Why does John McCormack descend to such rubbish as 'Just a cottage small' and 'Mother, my dear'? Of course, we all know the answer, but the fault is merely explained, not excused. And he sings the songs in such a way as to abate not a jot of their miserable banality. His tone is so bad that it would put any less famous singer out of court at once (DA765).

VOCALION

If Saint-Saëns's 'Phaeton' had to be recorded, it seems a pity it could not have been helped by the new recording. It necessarily sounds feeble in tone and colour, despite the clarity as a whole. The players are the Æolian Orchestra, conducted by Stanley Chapple (K05238).

A record of the Life Guards Band in a selection from 'The Country Girl' revives pleasant memories (K05239). Good of its kind, too, is the record of the same band in a 'Traviata' selection (K05243).

Samuel Kutcher in chamber music is so good that his solo playing, as recorded in X9803, is somewhat disappointing. He plays Kreisler's 'Liebeslied' and a Poem by Fibich-Kubelik with rather mechanical rhythm and very little variety of any kind.

We have a contrast in Albert Sandler's playing of Kreisler's 'Tambourin Chinois' and Saint-Saëns's 'Le Cygne.' In the first is abundance of life, but signs of carelessness and a slapdash kind of technique. He is not dead in tune in 'Le Cygne.' Mr. Sandler probably brings down the house when soloising with his hotel orchestra, but his playing, judged by this record, will hardly stand close scrutiny (X9818).

The violoncello is a variable instrument for recording purposes, so the somewhat muffled tone in Jacques van Lier's performance of Mazzano's 'Arioso' and Florembassi's 'Arlequin Triste' must not hastily be ascribed to the player (X9819).

York Bowen plays capitally in Chopin's B flat minor Scherzo, but, as in another record mentioned above, the old recording is a drawback. We miss the range of tone and power given by the new process (K05237).

Dvorák's 'Songs my mother taught me' ought to be sung by women only, yet this month we have two tenors singing it. Only a woman's voice can give the right mood, and very few tenors have the necessary ease in the top notes. Frank Titterton breaks the phrasing overmuch, too. He commits the same fault in 'I'll sing thee songs of Araby,' but otherwise his performance in this is much better (X9817).

Malcolm McEachern's words are less clear than usual in Sanderson's poor 'Land of delight,' but his low C at the end will be held by many to cover any amount of shortcomings. He is better in every way in the same composer's 'Up from Somerset' (K05241).

Clear diction is a notable feature in Ernest Butcher's singing of Arundale's 'Parson and Me' and Henty's 'The Lazy Shepherd,' but it is a pity this excellent humorous singer seems to be developing a habit of making the ends of his songs over-strenuous with hangings around high notes (K05235).

Who would have expected to hear again 'Silver threads among the gold'? Clara Serena sings it with Besly's 'The Second Minuet.' Revivals are very much in the air to-day, but one would have thought Danks's old ballad was dead beyond revival. Miss Serena's voice reproduces well, and the words are clear (K05240).

'Love's old sweet song' is another ditty we could very well do without, and Ethel Hook's singing of it is not calculated to reconcile us to its being dug up. But is there anything too bad for performance by vocal soloists? Thank heaven, our instrumentalists of similar standing never stoop to such depths! With 'Love's old sweet song' is Johnson's 'Sweet and low' (K05236).

It is announced that negotiations are completed for a visit to London next summer of the Philadelphia Orchestra, under Leopold Stokowski, in the course of a European tour.

The Duke of Connaught attended the dinner given by the Musicians' Company, on July 13, to celebrate the Weber Centenary.

Messager's 'Mirette' was recently performed by the Sterling Mackinlay company at King George's Hall.

Player-Piano Notes

ÆOLIAN

Duo-Art.—Pianoforte transcriptions of orchestral works are notoriously unsatisfactory; hence it is worth noting that an outstanding roll this month is that of Lamond's playing of his arrangement of the second movement of Tchaikovsky's E minor Symphony (520). That there are losses is inevitable, but both transcription and performance constitute a real feat.

Ignaz Friedman gives us a pleasant performance of Chopin's Nocturne in G minor, Op. 37 (6954), despite the fact that his chord-playing tends to become irritating with the left hand always a little behind the right—noticeably in the middle section.

There are two rolls by Nadia Reisenberg—Blumenfeld's 'Moment of Despair,' Op. 21 (6783), and Moszkowski's 'Spring,' Op. 57 (6919). Both are well played, though the melody in the last-named might have been given with more point. Although this is not Moszkowski at his best, it is good to hear.

Chopin's Nocturne in A flat, Op. 32, is given a good average performance by Rudolph Ganz (6966).

Clarence Führman is heard in Moszkowski's Melodie in G flat, Op. 10 (6959), and the familiar 'Polichinelle' of Rachmaninov, Op. 3, No. 4 (0729). Both performances suffer from the same fault. The pianist himself probably calls it by that blessed word rubato, but, carried to such lengths as here, it is sheer distortion of time-values. The Rachmaninov is the worse treated of the two.

Some soloists—whatever their instrument—seem to be unwilling, or unable, to give a performance of any work as its composer meant it to be played. Long notes are cut short, short notes made even shorter, pauses added, semiquaver passages rushed, and phrases badly chopped. If only the players themselves were concerned the effect would not be so disturbing, but there must be hundreds of young aspirants who take such performances as examples, with disastrous results.

Another example of this fault is a roll by Anis Fuleihan of Chopin's Valse in F minor, Op. 69, No. 2 (3128).

The dance rolls received for review are all good, though they are, as usual, almost devoid of originality.

Hand-played.—Chopin is very much to the fore this month. His Nocturne in B, Op. 62, is well played by Ignaz Friedman (A913E), and Josef Hoffman gives us (with less brilliance than we expect from him) the Polonaise (Military), Op. 40. A delightful performance is that by Paderewski of his Nocturne in B flat, Op. 16 (A907F).

Metrostyle.—A feast of good things here. One that will give the player plenty of scope is 'Erzählung am Klavier,' Op. 5, No. 2, by Scharwenka. This is highly enjoyable, and well edited (T30265C).

Another attractive roll is Tchaikovsky's 'November,' Op. 37A, No. 2 (T30266B).

Cyril Scott's 'Danse Nègre,' Op. 58, No. 5, makes a very good roll, though should the player slavishly follow the tempo line the result would be as bad as some of the rubato performances mentioned above (L30262A).

In Richter's 'Valse de Concert,' Op. 5, No. 2, the roll-editor seems to have run riot with the line. However, the piece makes capital hearing (T30261C).

Balfour Gardiner's 'Shepherd Fennel's Dance' is as jolly as ever, and makes a highly effective roll (T24698C).

Finally, there is the G minor Prelude and Fugue from Part 1 of the '48' (T24688A).

There are several dance rolls, all good, though, as usual, very much alike; and one excellent march roll, arranged by Aubrey Winter, 'Martial Moments' (T24679C).

Song Rolls.—This is a good batch. A well-played roll is by Charles Blackmore of Vaughan Williams's 'Linden Lea' (26675). There is a misprint in the words of the last verse: it shou!d be '*d*read a peevish master,' not '*t*read.'

Very delightful are the two rolls of 'When we were very young,' by Fraser-Simson. On 26667 there are 'Happiness,' 'Missing,' and 'In the fashion,' and on 26668, 'Halfway down,' 'Hoppity,' and 'Growing up.' Children of all ages will enjoy these. The player is Maud Atkins.

On roll 26674 is Arthur Somervell's arrangement of 'All through the night,' played by Wilfred Harris.

HUPFELD

Animatic (Hand-played).—Backhaus is heard to great advantage in an Etude by Hans Seeling (50422). He gives us also a brilliant performance of Chopin's Allegro de Concert, Op. 46 (50528).

Two rolls are taken up by Leander Scheigel's Suite, Op. 4. On the first roll (57991), a long and rather superficial Allegro is followed by a Scherzo. Repeated hearings of the latter leave one still in the dark as to the time and rhythm of the opening bars, and again when the same passage recurs later in the movement. Either the artist is at fault or something untoward happened in the cutting of the roll. The player—W. Rehberg—is so good generally that one hesitates to place the fault at his door. The Adagio and Finale make another roll (57992). Both are rather too long for the interest of the music.

H. Klinger gives us very pleasant performances of Archy Rosenthal's Valse-Prelude (59516) and Moszkowski's Arabeske, Op. 15 (59245). The latter seems to call for a somewhat quicker pace than that marked.

Max Pauer's playing of Schumann's 'Kinderszenen' (Nos. 8-13) would be even better with a less spread treatment of chords (A50406).

Gabrilowitsch is somewhat disappointing in Chopin's Nocturne, Op. 37, No. 2 (A50102).

Schumann's 'Jugend-Album,' Op. 68 (58418), suffers many time-distortions at the hands of Felix Wernow, and he produces the same disjointed effect in an arrangement of Kreisler's 'Alt-Wiener Tanzweisen' ('Liebeslied') (58411).

A capital roll is of Herbert Fryer's performance of his own 'Kleiner Tanz.' The tempo marked seems a little on the slow side, by the way (57801).

Repeated notes are not a strong point on the roll of Hermann Scholtz's Menuett, Op. 62, No. 1, played by an unnamed artist (59243).

A much better roll is that of the 'Rosamunde' Ballet music, though Alfred Gründfeltz's performance hardly does justice to the grace of the original (50388).

Otto Weinrich does not succeed in making Grieg's melancholy 'Improvisata' No. 1, Op. 29, of interest throughout—probably the composer's fault (51395).

In Cyril Scott's 'Vesperale' (59093) and 'Cherry Ripe' (50268) the chord-playing is curiously clumsy at times, and the pedalling so blurred as to suggest a defect in the roll. 'Cherry Ripe,' by the way, is misleadingly described as 'Altenglischer Volkslied,' and the harmonization is such as to suggest that the fruit has got an unpleasantly long way past the ripe stage.

There are so many delightful things of Dvorák's that it is a pity Theo. Blumer should have chosen such a poor specimen as the Walzer, Op. 54, No. 1 (59154).

D. G.

New Music

SONGS

H. H. Bancroft's 'Phillis the fair,' if it fails to get its full effect, fails in spite of many good points. It has a strong vocal line, and its pianoforte part is effective, yet somehow the song never 'fires.' This may be because one tires of the two-bar phrases which persist without relief from start to finish, or, more likely perhaps, because the musical climax occurs early in the stanza, so that the glow dies down before the end is reached, leaving a slight sense of disappointment. Of Ivy Frances Klein's two numbers, which come from the same house (Augener), 'A Pedlar' is the more successful: the poem asks but little, and rhythmical vitality carries the setting through. With Bunyan it is a different matter. 'The Shepherd Boy,' small as it is in size, is a big poem in other ways, and makes the easy tunefulness and suave rhythm of the music seem unbearably trivial. 'I had a dove,' by the same composer, published together with 'Dirge,' by Murdoch, begins well, but hesitates and is lost in the middle, where some rather weak modulations destroy the feeling of unity. It was a good idea to base 'Dirge' on a long pedal point, with the effective monotony of a repeated rhythmical figure, but great skill was required to keep the monotony interesting, and things seem rather to hang in the second stanza; it is, however, a sincere and thoughtful song. 'The Foolish Lover,' from the same composer and publisher, has not the touch of distinction that an interesting idea gives to 'Dirge': the material is not striking, and the poem demands a dramatic power and climax which the music does not possess.

New settings of the old tunes to 'Mary of Argyle' and 'MacGregor's Gathering,' by Percy Kahn, come from Winthrop Rogers. The composer has written effective accompaniments, giving support where it is needed, and keeping the rhythm taut when the singer might let it sag. Musically the settings are not particularly distinguished, but, as it is, they will probably be more useful than they would have been if they had aimed higher and been less practically effective. 'Song Memories,' by the same composer (Enoch), is very weak — a conventional shop-ballad of the poorest type, both in words and in music; it is difficult to see why it should ever have been written, why it should ever have been published, or why it should ever be sung.

A good, straightforward song is Edward German's 'London Town' (Novello), with that touch of character that this composer, even at his lightest, always has. It is not easy to say where it lies, but there is generally something in the cut of the phrases, and in the general atmosphere of clean craftsmanship which give distinction to German's music. The same publishers issue two sacred songs by Eric H. Thiman, 'Jesus, the very thought of Thee' and 'The God of Love my Shepherd is,' which show a restraint and musicianship that have often been absent from songs of this type. There is a touch of facility, however, somewhere about this music, noticeable chiefly in the second number, and the 'modal flavour' seems out of place in compositions which quite clearly have their origins in a climate different from that of the English folk-song: the opening phrase of 'The God of Love,' moreover, is overworked. One hears it no less than ten times in a short song, and grows tired of it. There is repetition too in the other number, but less of it, and the material has more distinction, so that it bears it better. There is a piece of padding on page 4 which is unfortunately below the level, but apart from that, this is a very sound, sincere, and well-written work, and is sure of a welcome. Both the songs could be effectively sung with organ accompaniment. The second is especially suitable to that instrument. The same publishers send a reprint of 'The Smiling Hours,' a contralto or baritone air from 'Hercules,' the sort of plum you can pull out of any Handel pie. It wants nimble singing and clear phrasing, and will make a good study as well as an enjoyable solo. Good as it is, well-proportioned, and with that power of line that Handel had, it is the sort of thing he produced in quantity out of his technique. 'From rosy bowers,' written 'in his sickness,' 'the last song that Mr. Purcell sett,' makes the Handel air seem very matter-of-fact; the vitality of Purcell's imagination is tremendous, and it is a good thing to have this song brought to one's notice again. Augener's re-issue it, in a volume of Purcell songs edited by Edmondstoune Duncan, and it is also published singly.

Patrick Hadley's setting of a scene from 'The Woodlanders,' which has recently been heard in London, is now issued by the Oxford University Press, its accompaniment arranged for pianoforte from the original score for flute, violin, viola, and pianoforte. It loses in the adaptation, because the texture is finely suitable to the original combination, but less so to the 'percussion' instrument. Moreover, the contrapuntal writing and imitative effects are less easy to make when one has only two hands and one keyboard. When this is said, however, enough remains to make it a striking song: the emotional warmth is so clearly there, and it has real impulse behind it. It is unfortunate that the first phrase, out of which the whole thing is made, should be so reminiscent of 'The bonny blue bell.' It would be quite appropriate as an allusive reference, if this were not too fanciful; but it does not strengthen the song; and even if it is merely a chance resemblance, the listener cannot escape it. However this may be, it is a good song, deserving of good performance. Robin Milford's 'On his mistress' depends for its effect on a broad, flowing melody, and skilful accentuation of the words. The accompaniment is of plain texture, but with variety, and a good strong bass. But why, oh! why will composers nowadays write consecutive octaves between bass and melody? It isn't an unpleasant sound, but the effect is just miserably weak and fatuous: it has been felt to be silly and unsatisfactory ever since music became a civilized language, and it will always be so, let things develop as they may, and one cannot imagine why serious musicians allow themselves the liberty. E. L. Lodge, in two songs from the same publishers (Oxford University Press), is concerned with creating an atmosphere. In 'Mantle of Blue' it is 'Celtic twilight' and 'the peering of things across the half-door,' which somehow is beginning to get very stale; in 'Mistletoe' it is de la Mare's far more self-critical, far less miasmic starlight. The composer senses the difference, and adapts his music to it, so that 'Mistletoe' is stronger stuff than the other song. It will need extremely sensitive, careful handling, but, given this, should be very successful. Hubert Foss's 'The Sergeant's Song,' one of the best numbers of his song-cycle to Hardy's poems, is now issued singly by the Oxford University Press.

The touch of a very competent hand is felt in Healey Willan's. Song Album No. 2 (Frederick Harris Co.), and over and above this there is a keen sense of poetry, and restraint—Dr. Willan can pull out the Irish stop without adding the tremulant. 'Cashel of Munster' is a most attractive song: its modal feeling somehow seems quite unaffected, and the accompaniment is beautifully managed. A good song, too, is the last number, 'A Fairy Tale,' with a strong tune, and plenty of rhythmical interest. 'To an isle in the water' has charm, but loses effect because the consecutive sevenths device, out of which the pianoforte part is largely made, has become rather commonplace. 'Innisfree'—yet another setting!—is hardly so successful as some of the other numbers: the atmosphere of this strange poem, which is perilously near being terribly precious, is apt to affect composers who set it, and the music here is less firmly handled and self-controlled than that of other examples. A new song cycle by Sir Landon Ronald, 'Songs of Remembrance,' to words by Arthur L. Salmon and others, is published by Enoch.

It is often amusing to guess the name of the composer from the look of music on a page, and if one were to try this with Wilhelm Kienzl's songs, they would, some of them, certainly be put down to Richard Strauss; and in deeper ways—in method, harmonic outlook, and the general lie of the vocal phrases—they are greatly indebted to that composer. In their style, with heavy romantic colouring and that characteristic 'sweep,' the songs are undeniably efficient; but the beauty is more readily felt when the music is less obviously influenced, as in 'Ich hab keine mutter.' This is a sincere and beautiful little song, with a simple melodic line which conveys much more than elaborate 'studio-pieces,' such as 'Über Vater's Grab'—which one can hardly take seriously, so much is it like a parody of Strauss. 'An den Schlummer,' again simple and melodious, is another attractive song; whilst 'Barenspass,' more rhythmically energetic, shows a welcome sense of fun. All the songs, as one would expect of Op. 106, show skilful and effective workmanship, the lighter numbers being more individual, and musically more interesting. The seven songs are published singly, without English translations, by L. Döblinger (Bernhard Herzmansky, Leipsic).

Medtner's Op. 45, a set of four big songs, comes from T. H. Zimmermann (Riga and Berlin), and perhaps best of all is the first number, 'Elegie.' Out of a quietly beautiful beginning the music works through a powerful climax to a quiet ending, the whole thing growing and developing logically and strongly. There is full sense of the poem's possibilities, and real intensity of imagination. Another fine number is 'Das Nachtlied,' the third of the set. Here, as in all the songs, Medtner makes big demands on the singer and the pianist, especially the latter;

but the interest of the music justifies it, and the difficulties are quite manageable. Less difficult but not so distinguished are three songs by Inga Liebich, which are published by Norsk Musikforlag, Kristiania. Tennyson's 'Break, break' is set to music which seems too suave for the poem. A Danish translation of the words is called 'Barcarolle,' and this is rather the feeling of the music, so that one wonders whether the composer has got a mistaken idea of the poem from the translation. There is, moreover, an unaccountable mistake in the printing of the English words. The composer is happier in a setting of Leopold de Diaz's 'Le Clavecin,' for the music here has an undeniable charm, and a gentle swaying figure in the accompaniment is used with good effect. The interest is largely harmonic: the vocal part is quasi-recitative, based on the slow-moving harmonies, and having no real melodic line of its own. This almost inevitably means that the charm is not likely to be an enduring one. But it is a sensitive little work. 'Les Jardins de Atahualpa' is of similar style, but here is an unwelcome touch of the commonplace, and a definite weakness in the shape of a long series of semitonally-rising sevenths. Well below the level of all these songs are P. A. Tirindelli's 'Tre Liriche' (Carlo Schmidl, Trieste). 'Non sono che una bambola,' a waltz-song, derives a certain faint charm from its rhythm and easy melodiousness, but has no more ponderable distinction. 'La Tua Villa' is quieter, with a similar vein of tunefulness and a flavour of Puccini; it is quite effective—the Italian equivalent of 'An old-fashioned house in an old-fashioned town,' though here it is 'Piccolo villa sulla riva del mare.' 'Il segno della Croce' shows the same characteristics; only a change of sentiment from villa to bambino. The songs are not of any real value, but are probably useful enough in their way. None of the items dealt with in this paragraph, excepting Inga Liebich's 'Break, break,' has an English version.

A most interesting set of Hungarian folk-songs from Transylvania, arranged by Zoltán Kodály, is published at Budapest by Rozsavolgyi es Tarsa, and in London by the Oxford University Press. The interpreter of folk-song is always faced with the problem of implications; often in simple melodies there is a high concentration of feeling, and the singer or arranger must either work very simply, in the hope of letting the overtones sound clearly, or he may attempt to extract the inner meanings and re-express them in his own language. The latter is Kodály's way, and it is done with tremendous energy, command, sense of the dramatic, and many moments of beauty. In every number there are striking touches of imaginative setting, like the little accompaniment figure in No. 6, which so aptly illustrates the knocking by the children on the gravestone. 'Weeping Willow,' No. 9, in vol. 2, is a particularly beautiful example in the quieter style, and the same volume contains the bitter but highly effective 'The Heartless Wife.' The danger of the method is that by saying too much of what is implied, one may repel (Rosing used to do it in his terribly dramatic way of singing 'Lord Rendal'): at any rate, the arranger may overload, and one does feel in the bigger numbers of Kodály's examples that things have got beyond legitimate latitude. The settings become rhapsodies, based on folk-songs, but grown into a quite different sort of thing: and one remembers how very much more effectively, though quietly, some of Bartók's simple arrangements set off tunes which are quite well able to speak for themselves. This is a personal feeling, however, and there is no doubt about the skill and effectiveness of the settings in the present two volumes, which ought to receive careful attention. Lastly, published by M. P. Belaiev (agents, Hawkes), is Glazounov's 'Romance de Nina,' from 'Le Bal Masqué,' a smoothly written, well-behaved, rather uninteresting song. It is musicianly, however, and good phrasing, for which it offers ample scope, might make an agreeable item of it.

T. A.

VIOLIN MUSIC

A Suite in five movements, by Bartovsky (Bosworth), for violin and pianoforte, demands a degree of technical ability which its intrinsic musical worth does not fully justify. Its utility appears to be rather that of the study, providing various little problems the practice of which is of distinct benefit to the student.

Absolute independence of the fingers is, of course, a most desirable thing, and M. D. C. Dounis offers it in the second volume of his 'Violin-Playing on a Scientific Basis' (The Strad edition), which can be had for the small sum of 7s. 6d. It is cheap at the price. The principle is one which has already been applied, but it is here expanded very considerably. Its usefulness is beyond question, as are also its dangers. Under the supervision of the instructor, nothing but good can come of this practice. Without an instructor, nineteen modifications of a one-bar study and the twenty-three simple variants of another, are apt to produce staleness of the muscles and weariness of the soul. Moderation is advisable in the best of things.

B. V.

A 'CELLO METHOD

A new method for the violoncello (not 'violincello, as appears on the title-page), by O. Wittenbecher (Bosworth Edition), is obviously the work of one who knows his job. But like many experts Wittenbecher appears to be under-rating the difficulties of the student who starts ab ovo. The indications and directions are too copious if the beginner has the advantage of a capable teacher's advice; too few if the method is intended for self-tuition. The general directions are in four languages: German, English, French, and Italian. At the beginning, however, there is an introduction in German and English, setting forth not only the history of the instrument, but elements of music and a short dictionary of musical names. This is to the point and, of course, is an exceedingly necessary part of the study of the violoncello. But surely it is better to make a knowledge of elementary theory keep pace with progress in the technique of the instrument. By the way, portamento is bewilderingly rendered in German as getragen abgestossen! Apart from these matters the method is wholly commendable, and Wittenbecher takes the student in hand at the beginning and guides him gently but firmly towards efficiency. There are various little pieces for relaxation, some arranged for two 'cellos, others with a pianoforte accompaniment which must be sought elsewhere.

B. V.

CHURCH MUSIC

Some further issues, with Latin words, of works by Byrd and other writers of the polyphonic school, appear under the editorship of H. B. Collins (Chester). Byrd's 'Ave Maria'—an Offertory for Feasts of the Blessed Virgin—is a short, expressive little work for five voices (second tenor or baritone). The same composer's 'Beata es,' suitable for similar occasions, can also be sung as a Motet at any time. It is for the same arrangement of voices, and is not difficult. Christopher Tye's Motet, 'Rubum quem viderat Moyses,' is for use at the Feast of the Circumcision or at Candlemas. The counterpoint is vigorous and straightforward in style, and provides no serious problems for the average well-balanced choir. It is for five voices—treble, alto or first tenor, second tenor, baritone, and bass. A short Motet for Christmas Day, by Robert Cooper, 'Gloria in excelsis Deo,' is a brilliant little work for three trebles and alto. It is not difficult, and, well sung, should prove decidedly effective. It will interest some to compare two settings of 'Dum transisset Sabbatum' (second Responsory at Matins on Easter Sunday). Tallis's Motet is for five voices (second tenor or baritone), with the plainsong in the treble. That by Robert Johnson is for S.A.T.B., with the tenor singing the plainsong. In each case the difficulties are only moderate. Another admirable example of five-part writing is the setting, by Peter Philips, of 'Alma Redemptoris Mater.' It is for S.S.A.T.B., and gives scope for variety of treatment.

Recent additions to the Year-Book Press series of anthems and Church music include two Motets—'The voice of joy and health,' for S.A.T.B., by Giuseppe Jannaconi (1741-1816), and 'O come, Thou Spirit divinest,' by John Amner (organist, Ely Cathedral, 1610-41). The former is planned on broad, simple lines, and contains no subtleties and very little real counterpoint; the latter, for two sopranos and tenor, is a brief but interesting little contrapuntal setting of some words by an anonymous writer. Both are edited by Noel Ponsonby.

Included in the same publishers' series of unison and part-songs, edited by Martin Akerman, are E. T. Chapman's setting of 'Let all the world in every corner sing,' and C. S. Lang's carol, 'Tres Magi de gentibus,' words translated from the Latin text, 15th century. These are apparently written for school use. The former is a simple, dignified setting for treble and men's voices, mainly in unison or two-part harmony. For the carol, the composer has written a stately tune for unison voices, with a brief refrain at the close of each verse for eight-part chorus. Both these effectively-written works are provided with an excellent organ part.

G. G.

Occasional Notes

The Three Choirs Festival, to be held under the direction of Sir Ivor Atkins, at Worcester, on September 5-10, is more than ever an Elgar Festival. This strengthening of a tradition that has grown spontaneously is to be applauded, for nowhere do Elgar's oratorios find a better setting than in these Western Cathedrals, and in few places are they so well performed. Both 'The Apostles' and 'The Kingdom' are to be given, and the Festival programme also includes the 'Enigma' Variations and 'For the Fallen.' Other choral works are Berlioz's Te Deum, Holst's short Festival Te Deum, 'Peace,' from Parry's 'War and Peace,' Ethel Smyth's 'A Canticle of Spring,' Charles Wood's 'A Dirge for Two Veterans,' Beethoven's Mass in D, 'Elijah,' and 'The Messiah.' The London Symphony Orchestra has been engaged. Sir Herbert Brewer and Dr. Percy Hull will share the organist's duties. The following are the singers: sopranos — Beatrice Beaufort, Agnes Nicholls, Dorothy Silk, and Elsie Suddaby; contraltos — Muriel Brunskill, Astra Desmond, Olga Haley, and Millicent Russell; tenors—John Coates, Edward Roberts, and Steuart Wilson; baritones and basses — Norman Allin, Howard Fry, Herbert Heyner, Robert Radford, and Horace Stevens.

Regularly, every midsummer since the war, lying rumour has told us that there were to be no more 'Proms,' and just as regularly August has found this peculiarly London institution confounding the prophets. The present season opens on August 14, and the concerts will run on pretty much the usual lines, with the evenings allotted as they have been for some years past. The programme book arrives too near our press day for detailed discussion, but two points catch our eye. First, eight of the Beethoven Symphonies are to be played with the chronological order upside down, beginning with No. 8 and ending with No. 1. The Ninth is omitted—an odd decision, surely. It is so frequently done without the choral Finale that no exception would be taken to such a truncated method. No. 1 might well have been omitted, for after all its interest is little more than historic. The pleasant slow movement is all that an average audience wants to hear to-day, whereas the Ninth is too rarely performed.

The other point noted is that the organ solos are dropped. We presume that this is due to economic reasons, for there is no question as to the popularity of the solos last season. Whatever the cause, the matter is one for regret. Many of the general musical public welcomed the prospect of the organ taking a recognised place as a concert solo instrument (as it does in America and in France), if only for the reason that an opportunity would be given of hearing the greater (and eventually, perhaps, some of the less familiar) works of Bach, played on their proper instrument. At present the non-churchgoing musician rarely hears them save in a transcribed form, which inevitably robs them of certain qualities and effects that only the organ can supply. Meanwhile, the renovated instrument at Queen's Hall becomes again little more than a mere tap for the supply of religioso backgrounds to Largos, Solemn Melodies, and Bach-Gounod concoctions.

As a slight set-off to this, we see that the organ is to be used for solo purposes at the symphony concert on October 23. Our spirits are again dashed, however, by the fact that no British player is considered to be good enough for the occasion.

Apropos of the 'Proms' the irrepressible Robert Lorenz had a capital little article in the Daily Telegraph of July 10, in which he suggested and prophesied various developments. Among other features that he thinks will, or should, find a place in the 'Prom' programmes are chamber music and organ recitals from 7.30 to 8. In regard to the first, Mr. Midgley wrote objecting on the ground that chamber music

(Continued on page 727.)

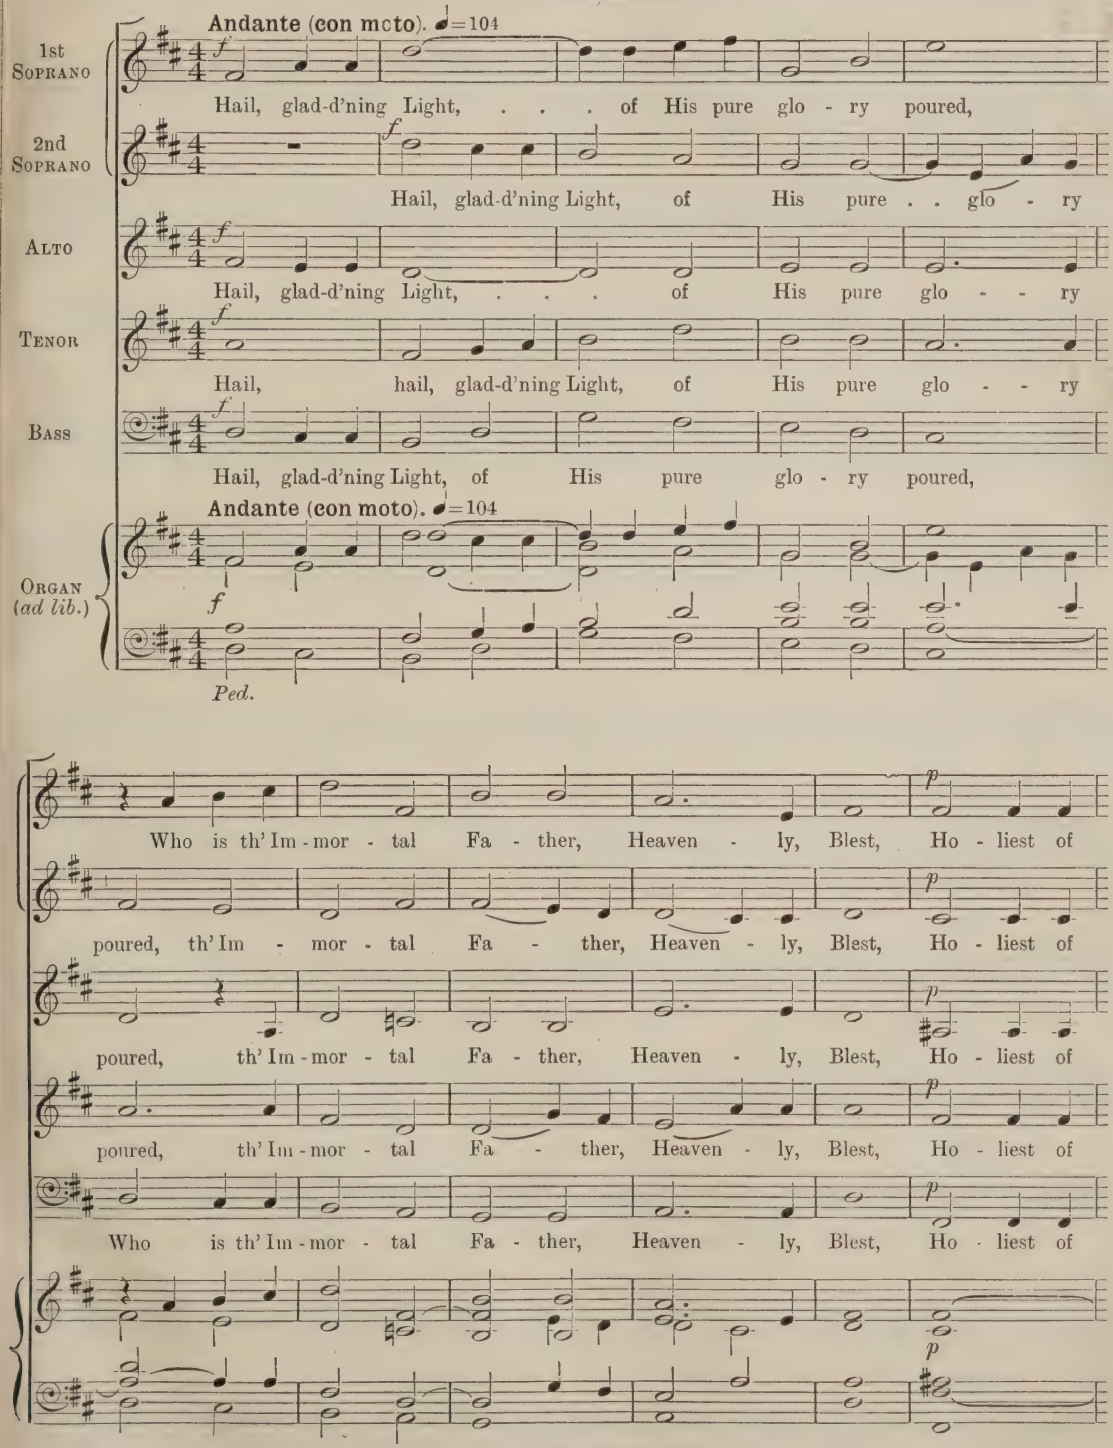
Hail, gladdening Light

UNACCOMPANIED ANTHEM FOR EVENSONG

Words by JOHN KEBLE

Music by T. A. WALMISLEY
(Composed in 1844)
Edited by JOHN E. WEST

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.



Andante (con moto). ♩=104
1st Soprano
2nd Soprano
Alto
Tenor
Bass
Organ (ad lib.)
Hail, glad-d'ning Light, . . . of His pure glo - ry poured,
Hail, glad-d'ning Light, of His pure . . glo - ry
Hail, glad-d'ning Light, . . . of His pure glo - - ry
Hail, hail, glad-d'ning Light, of His pure glo - - ry
Hail, glad-d'ning Light, of His pure glo - ry poured,
Andante (con moto). ♩=104
Ped.
Who is th' Im - mor - tal Fa - ther, Heaven - ly, Blest, Ho - liest of poured, th' Im - mor - tal Fa - ther, Heaven - ly, Blest, Ho - liest of poured, th' Im - mor - tal Fa - ther, Heaven - ly, Blest, Ho - liest of poured, th' Im - mor - tal Fa - ther, Heaven - ly, Blest, Ho - liest of
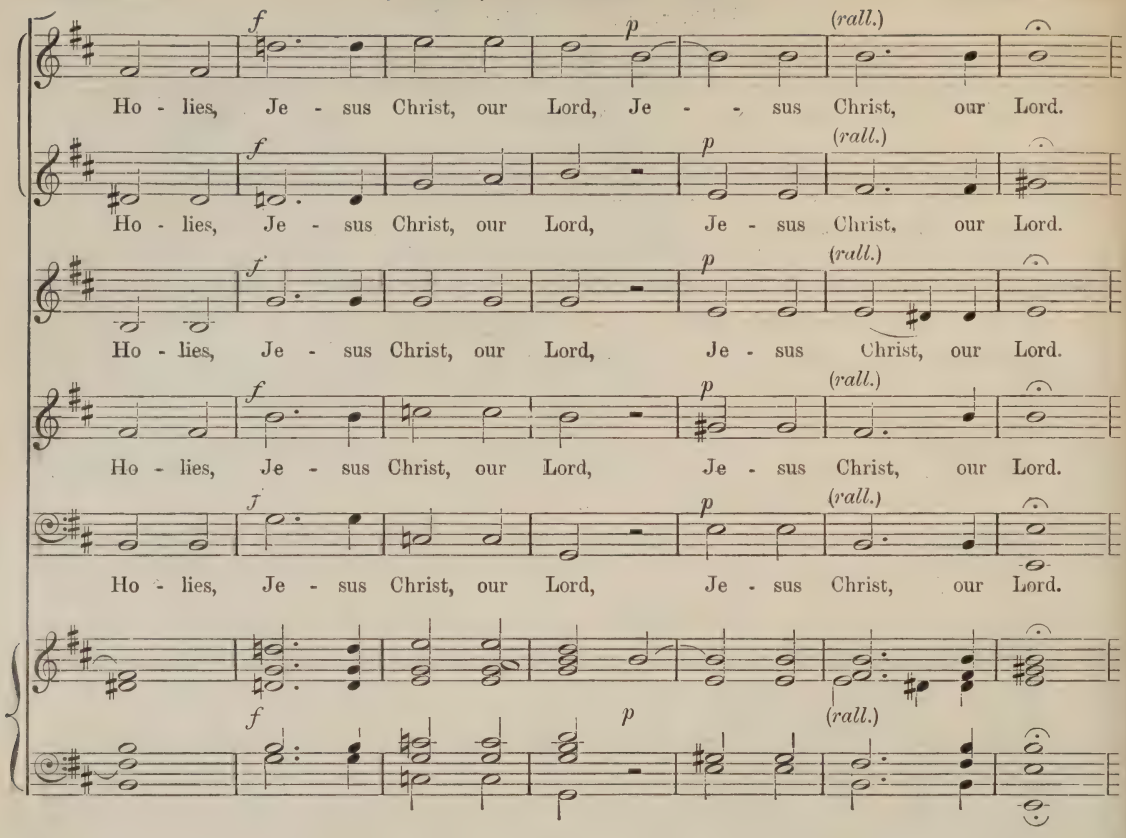
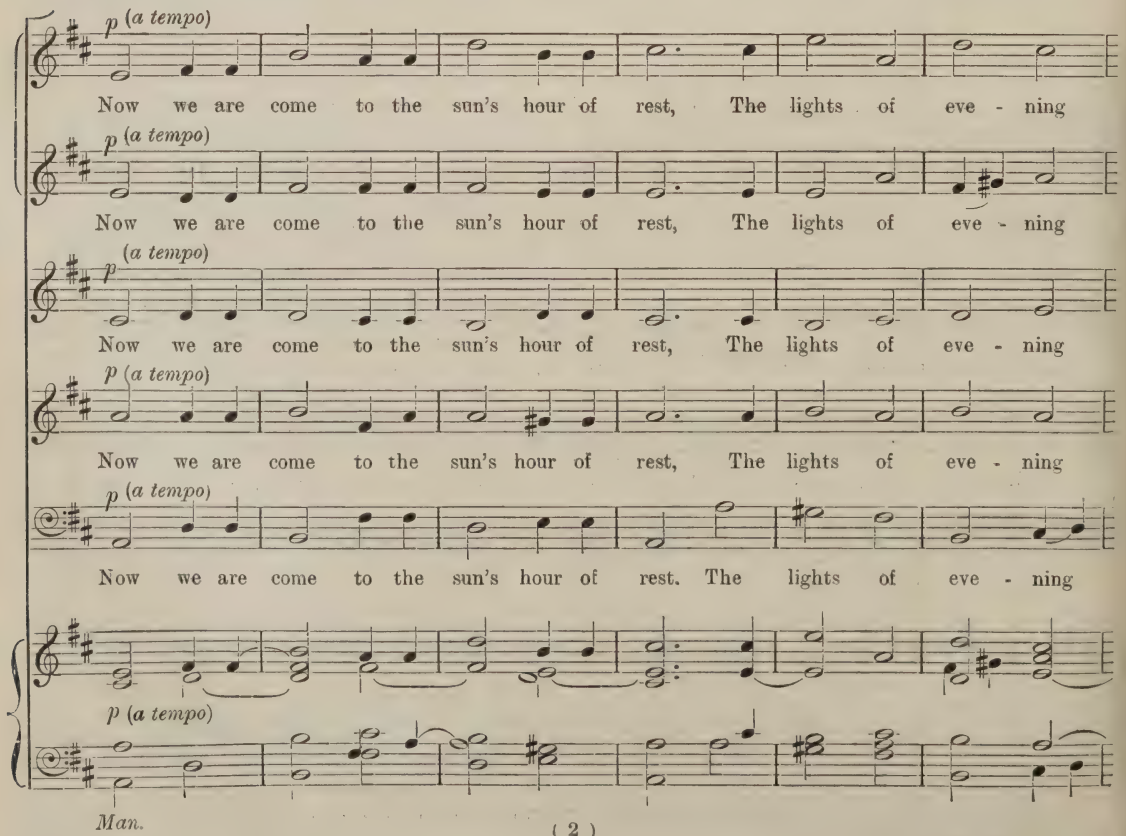
Who is th' Im - mor - tal Fa - ther, Heaven - ly, Blest, Ho - liest of

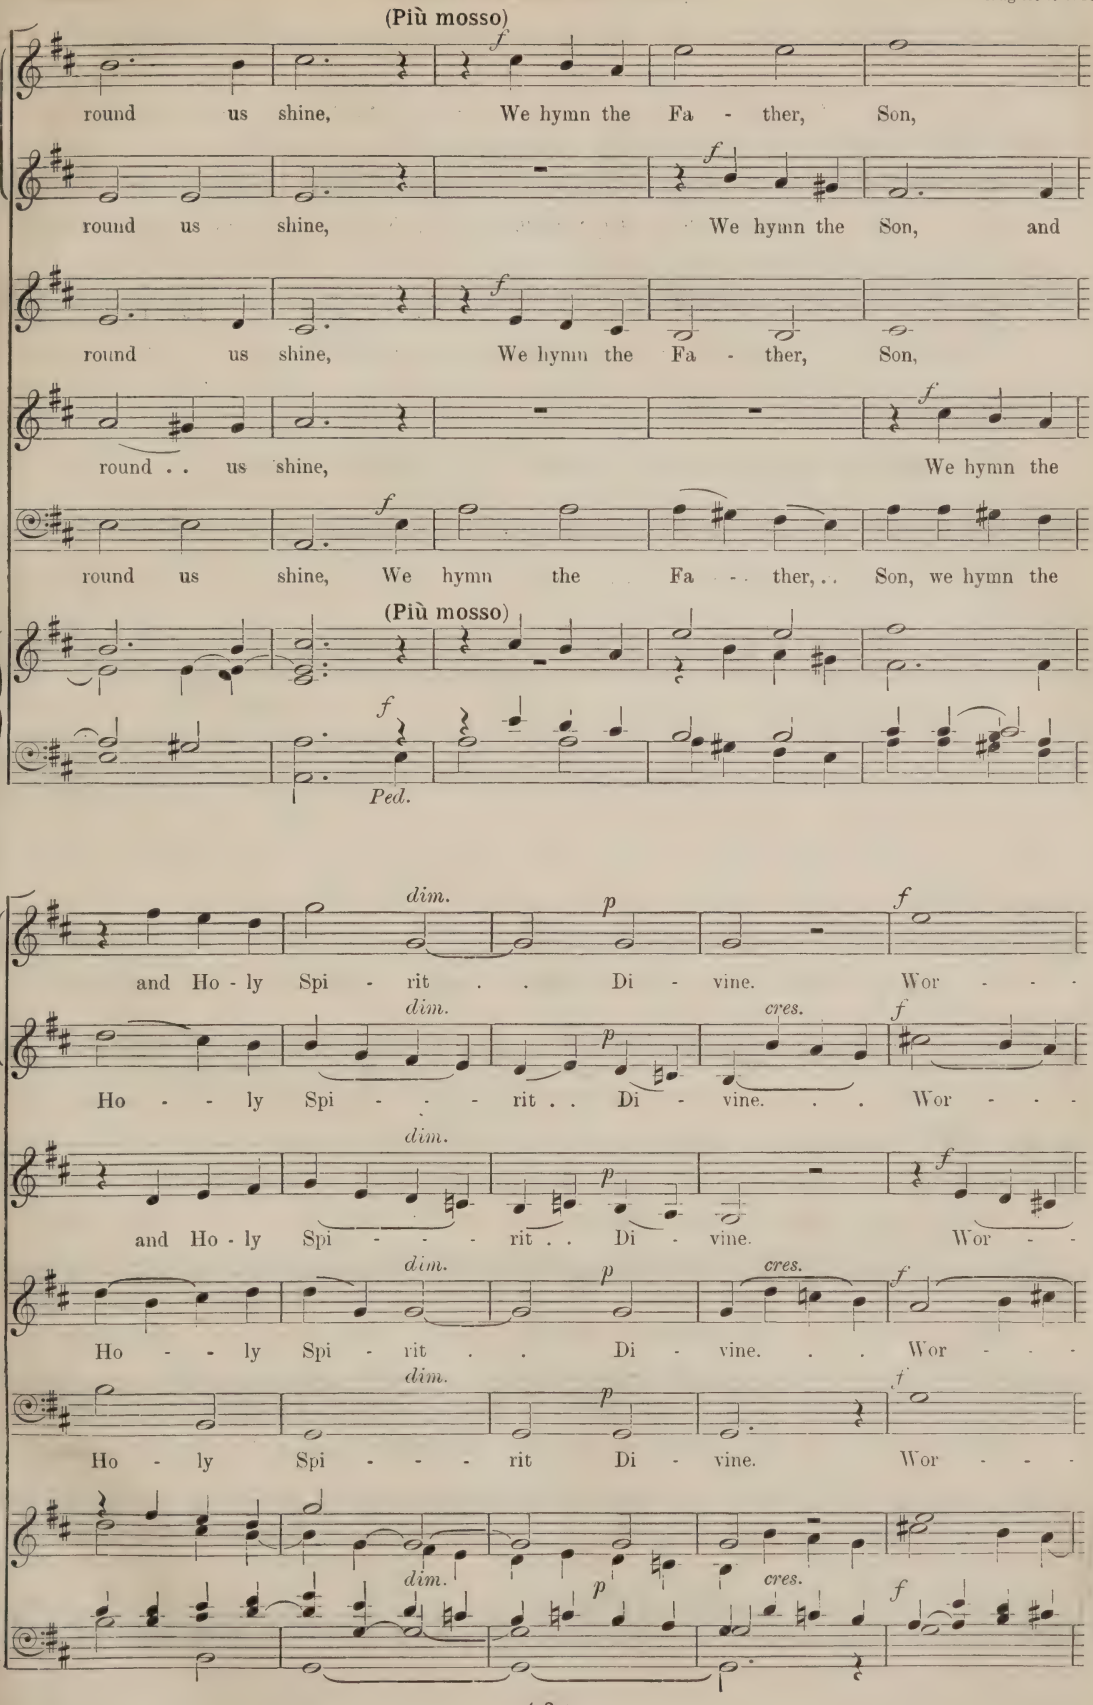
This Anthem was originally printed, without accompaniment, in Hullah's Vocal Scores. The Organ part now added is for use when found necessary.



f
p
(rall.)
Ho - lies, Je - sus Christ, our Lord, Je - sus Christ, our Lord.
Ho - lies, Je - sus Christ, our Lord, Je - sus Christ, our Lord.
Ho - lies, Je - sus Christ, our Lord, Je - sus Christ, our Lord.
Ho - lies, Je - sus Christ, our Lord, Je - sus Christ, our Lord.
Ho - lies, Je - sus Christ, our Lord, Je - sus Christ, our Lord.



p (a tempo)
Now we are come to the sun's hour of rest, The lights of eve - ning
Now we are come to the sun's hour of rest, The lights of eve - ning
Now we are come to the sun's hour of rest, The lights of eve - ning
Now we are come to the sun's hour of rest, The lights of eve - ning
Now we are come to the sun's hour of rest. The lights of eve - ning
Man.



(Più mosso)
round us shine, We hymn the Fa - ther, Son, round us shine, We hymn the Son, and round us shine, We hymn the Fa - ther, Son, round . . us shine, We hymn the round us shine, We hymn the Fa - - ther, . . Son, we hymn the (Più mosso)
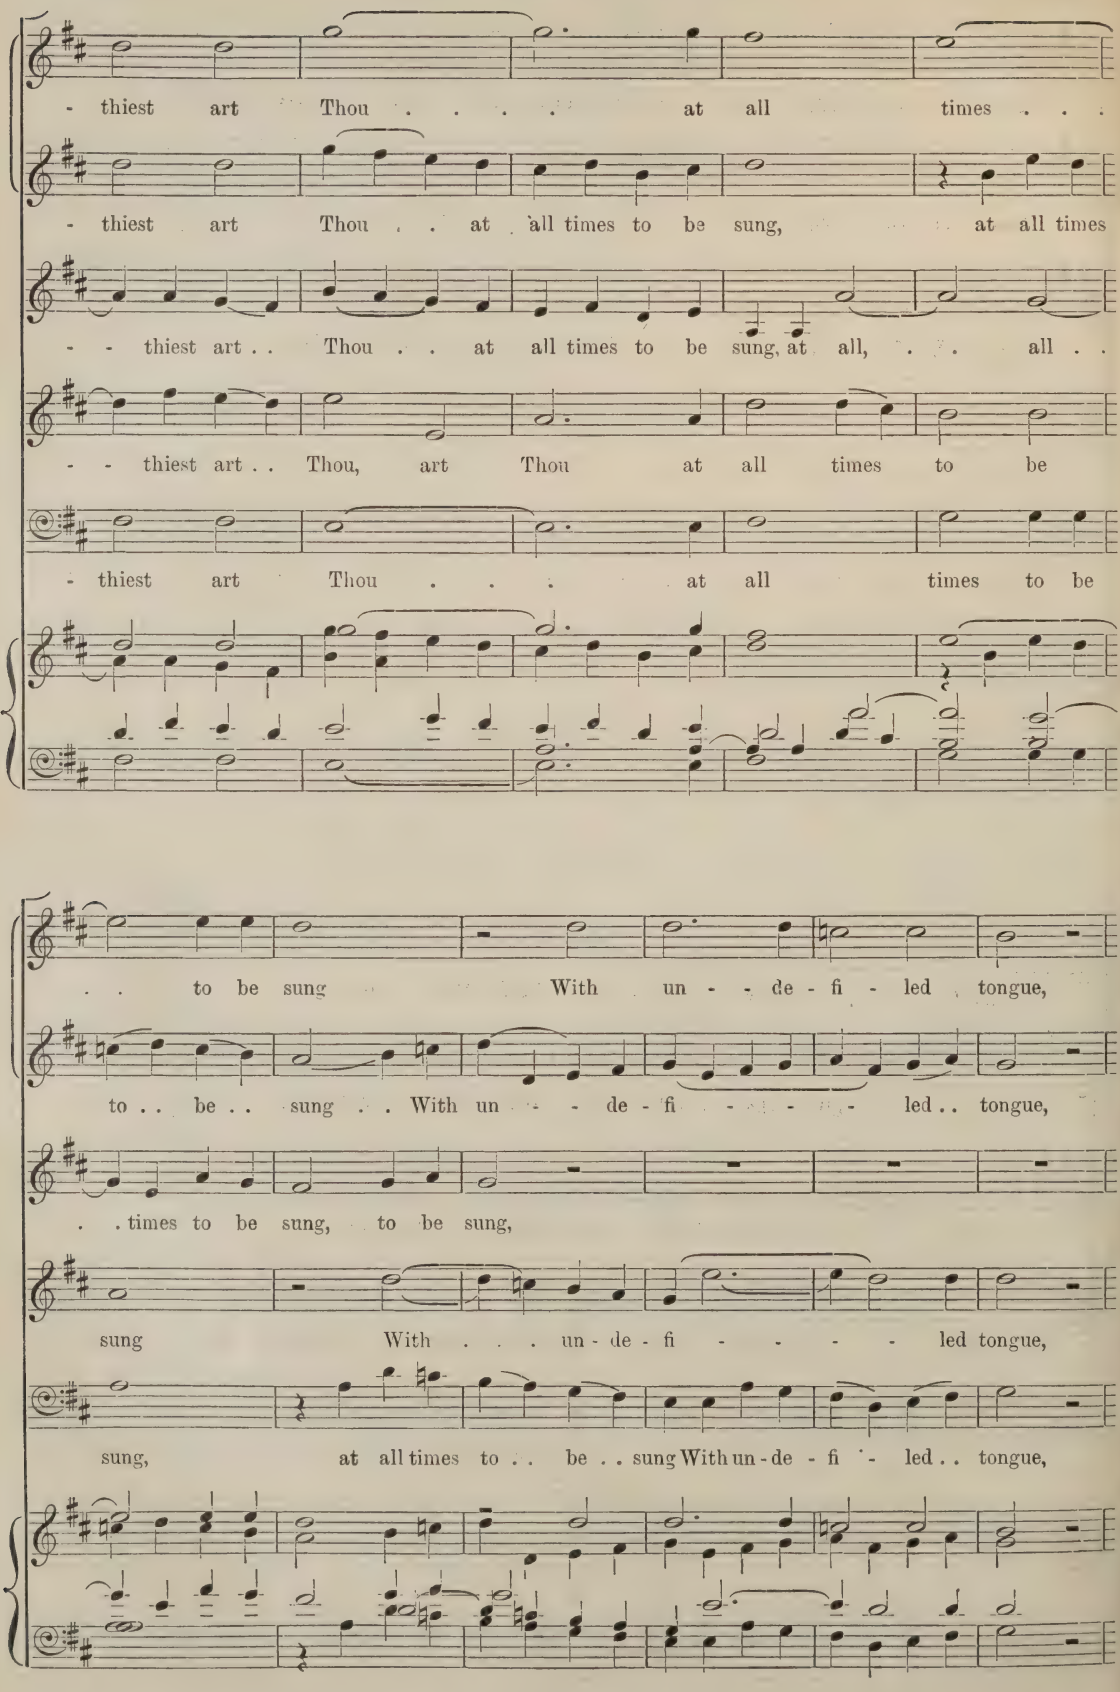
Ped.
and Ho - ly Spi - rit . . Di - vine. Wor - - -
Ho - - ly Spi - - - rit . . Di - vine. . . Wor - - -
and Ho - ly Spi - - - rit . . Di - vine. Wor - -
Ho - - ly Spi - rit . . Di - vine. . . Wor - - -
Ho - ly Spi - - - rit Di - vine. Wor - - -



- thiest art Thou . . . . at all times . . .
- thiest art Thou . . at all times to be sung, at all times
- - thiest art . . Thou . . at all times to be sung, at all, . . all . .
- - thiest art . . Thou, art Thou at all times to be
- thiest art Thou . . . at all times to be
. . to be sung With un - - de - fi - led tongue,
to . . be . . sung . . With un - - de - fi - - - - led . . tongue,
. . times to be sung, to be sung,
sung With . . . un - de - fi - - - - led tongue, sung, at all times to . . be . . sung With un - de - fi - led . . tongue,

(Meno mosso)
(f) (Più mosso)
Son of our God, Giv - er of life, a - lone: There - fore in all the Son of our God, Giv - er of life, a - lone: There-
Son of our God, Giv - er of life, a - lone: There - fore in all the Son of our God, Giv - er of life, a - lone: There - fore in all the Son of our God, Giv - er of life, a - lone: There - fore in all the (Meno mosso)
(Più mosso)
(cres.)
world . . . Thy glo - ries, Lord, they own, there - fore in
- - fore in all the world, Thee, Lord, they own, there - fore in world . . . Thy glo - ries, Lord, they own, there - fore in world . . . Thy glo - ries, Lord, they own, in all the world, . .
world . . . Thy glo - ries, Lord, they own, there - fore in all the world . . Thy glo - ries, Lord, they own, there - fore in all t e (ff) all the world . . Thy glo - ries, Lord, they own, there - fore in all the (ff) all the world . . Thy glo - ries, Lord, they own, there - fore in all the (ff) all the world . . Thy glo - ries, Lord, they own, there - fore in all the (ff) all the world Thy glo - ries, Lord, they own, . . there - fore in all the (ff)

(ff)
(rall.)
world Thy glo - ries, Lord, ... they own.
*
(rall.)
world . . Thy glo - - - - - ries, Lord, they own.
(rall.)
world . . Thy glo - - ries, Lord, ... they own.
(rall.)
world . . Thy glo - - ries, Lord, Thy glo - ries, Lord, they own.
(rall.)
world Thy glo - ries, Lord, ... they own.
(rall.)

* This note, B, is printed as G in Hullah's Vocal Scores, probably in error.

(Continued from page 720.)

requires a totally different type of hall, audience, and atmosphere; he thought, too, that the ordinary 'Prom' habitué would be driven away. We do not think there is much in these objections. After all, at the 'Proms,' and also at the Symphony Concerts, violin and pianoforte solos (sometimes as intimate in character as chamber music) are frequently heard, without suffering appreciably from the large hall. As our contributor 'Feste' pointed out some years ago when advocating the introduction of an occasional chamber work in orchestral concerts, such music provides far better relief than a vocal operatic aria in which the full orchestra plays a prominent part, besides being as a rule superior in quality. The fact is, in a long symphony concert the ear has a surfeit of the orchestra, and there is real need for a few short items in which the band has no part. We believe the success of the English Singers at last season's 'Proms' was due not only to their delightful singing, but also to the refreshing contrast they provided. And the orchestra itself gains from this relief, of course. (By the way, the English Singers also do not appear in this year's programmes.)

As to Mr. Midgley's fear that Promenaders would be driven away by chamber music, everything depends on the choice of work. Nobody would suggest, for example, one of the later Quartets of Beethoven; nor would it be advisable to play complete works, unless they are short. Now that detached movements of symphonies are played, there ought to be little objection to the use of separate movements from quartets. The Léner and other players have long since been in the habit of making gramophone records of detached movements. There is a further point to be considered. The average orchestral audience knows little of chamber music; here is an opportunity of making converts, and eventually increasing the public for this highest of all types of music.

In the matter of the 7.30 to 8 organ recitals, we part company with Mr. Lorenz, especially as he suggests that many organists would gladly do the work for a merely nominal fee. A recital given while the crowd is assembling is a slight on both instrument and player. If organ solos are to be heard in the concert-room, they should be accorded a recognised place in the programme, and the performer should be paid an adequate fee.

A Prague reader takes us to task roundly for our remarks on Shakespeare in modern language. He is just reading the 'Merry Wives,' and finds only about a third of it is intelligible. Hence his enthusiastic support of Mr. Jack Hylton's plea for translating the Bard into the language of to-day. For example, he says:

> Would not the words 'Pardon me for intruding upon you without warning' do as well as 'I make bold to press with so little preparation upon you'?

They would probably do as well, so far as he is concerned. But is a mere prosaic sentence of this kind a fair test? What would become of the poetry that is found on practically every page of Shakespeare, whether in prose or verse? What does our Prague friend suggest for the countless passages of the type of:

> She never told her love, but let concealment, like a worm i' the bud, feed on her damask cheek?

He accuses us of 'hero-worshipping conservatism' (we gladly plead guilty in this connection), adding that it is out of place 'in a musical journal which lends an ear to Bolshevik radicalism.' 'Why [he goes on, warming up], why not advocate a reading of "The Vision of Piers Plowman" in the original?' —and suggests that we should try it. As it happens, we tried it, with pleasure, many years ago, and advocate it strongly. We admit, however, that 'Piers' would suffer little from being modernized. But there is nothing in Shakespeare that need give much trouble to an intelligent reader. Our correspondent seems to overlook the value, poetry, and interest of all kinds that belong to the original forms of literary masterpieces. It will be a bad day for the English language (and for the English character) when the only form of literary expression understanded of the people is that of the easy-going journalistic type.

If an old poet is worth reading, he is worth taking trouble over. Let those whose brains reel at such frightful complexities as 'I make bold to press with so little preparation upon you,' give it up, and take to literature that is within their mental grasp.

Similarly, the music of the great composers needs no translation into the idiom of the dance band in order to make its message understandable and palatable to the normal mind. If a masterpiece is beyond us, our job is to climb up to it, not demand that it shall be dragged down to us.

As we were not present at Mr. Henry Cowell's recent pianoforte recital, we express no opinion on his playing with his forearm, plucking the pianoforte strings direct, and other novel effects. But we are interested in some of the titles of his pianoforte compositions, which certainly go one better than Scriabin. They raise the usual speculations concerning programme music. For example, how many of the audience, unassisted by the titles, would have been able to distinguish between 'The Banshee,' 'The Cauldron of Fire,' 'Anger Dance' and 'Dance Obsequious'; 'Exuberance' and 'Exultation'; and 'The Æolian Harp' and 'The Harp of Life'? The two oddest titles, however, were 'Vestiges' and 'Advertisement.'

We learn from an Australian paper that 'Phonograph records of the "Hallelujah Chorus" and Mozart's twelfth Mass, sung by Dame Clara Butt,' were used during a service at St. Peter's Church, Rockley, near Lithgow. The paper describes them, with good ground, as 'innovations.'

If ever a distinction of the kind was well earned, it is the knighthood just conferred on Dr. Henry Coward. Hearty congratulations to Sir Henry!

By the way, we see that a Lancashire paper announced the bestowal of the honour thus:

> Dr. Coward receives a knighthood, though he has spent nearly all his life in Sheffield.

With poignant recollections of Sheffield on several wet days, we feel disposed to substitute 'because' for 'though.'

Wireless Notes

By 'Ariel'

The debate between Sir Landon Ronald and Mr. Jack Hylton provided good sport and some enjoyable music—but, inevitably, it was inconclusive. I doubt if the predilections of a single listener were altered as a result. And, after all, why should they be? There is room for both classical music and the fox-trot. I believe this view is held by most musicians, their only objection to present-day dance music being based on the maltreatment of the classics at the hand of certain dance 'composers.' On the other hand, the dance music enthusiasts are usually much less tolerant, and are ready to raise a chorus of protest against any programme that contains a large proportion of classical music.

I fancy both Sir Landon and Mr. Hylton might have chosen more convincing examples. Thus, the 'Unfinished' Symphony, popular and attractive as it is, contains some weak spots, and the complacent second subject is overworked. Such a piece as the 'Meistersinger' Overture, or the Scherzo of the Ninth Symphony, would have backed up Sir Landon's claims far better; moreover, they would have given the best possible answer to Mr. Hylton's absurd statement that rhythm, melody, and harmony were not combined until 'symphonised syncopation' took the job in hand. Many other remarks of Mr. Hylton were pathetically futile—for example, his explanation of syncopation, and his quasi-defence of it as being something that is found in the works of classical composers. Bless his innocent heart! no musician objects to syncopation in dance music or anywhere else, so long as it is used with taste and discretion. What we do kick at is the over-use of it to such a degree that it loses its effectiveness as a momentary departure from the normal rhythm, and becomes irritating. In other words, Mr. Hylton and his confrères are making a rule of what should be an exception. Again, their syncopation is rarely more than elementary. In real subtlety, variety, and skill it can be beaten hollow by countless passages from such composers as Brahms and Beethoven (especially in their chamber music).

Going back to the choice of illustrations: Sir Landon no doubt pleased a good many of his listeners by playing the 'Blue Danube' Waltz. But there were plenty of Ronaldites who found the old Waltz decidedly worn. The best that could be said for it was that it was excellent to dance to. However, the Waltz by Irving Berlin with which Mr. Hylton hit back was far worse, because (1) it was poor for dancing purposes; (2) sickeningly monotonous and unwholesome in style; and (3) some of it was so pianissimo and attenuated that a couple or two waltzing would have drowned it. As for the fox-trot which Mr. Hylton said would make it impossible for us to keep our toes still, it was, so far as at least one circle of listeners was concerned, a dead failure. Nary a toe stirred—except a couple that moved doorwards after the fox-trot had hiccupped its way for a minute or two.

Mr. Hylton's wind-up with his specially scored version of Sir Landon's 'Down in the Forest,' was a good touch. It contained some amusing effects, and I was sorry we had no opportunity of hearing Sir Landon's opinion of it. Personally, I preferred it to the original version sung immediately before, partly because (despite Mr. Hylton's eulogy) it is not a first-rate song, and also because the lady who sang it wobbled and lost pitch, and Sir Landon himself overhit the pianoforte in accompanying.

To sum up, the evening left me more than ever convinced of two things: (1) that the modern dance band, in sonority, variety, and possibilities in every direction save that of grandeur, is a marvellous little force; and (2) that the music written for this almost perfect combination is usually beneath contempt in its poverty of idea. Practically all its effects are those of colour, and must soon be exhausted. (The slithering and slobbering of the saxophones, for example, has long since ceased to amuse.) Its rhythmic devices are, as I have said, confined to one or two of the more obvious types of syncopation, so there is no increase, or even sustaining, of interest to be looked for there. The harmony is usually sugary, and of a type that wears badly. Of thematic invention and development there is hardly a trace. This weakness was never so forcibly exposed as during the debate, when the extracts from Schubert, Schumann, Gounod, &c., gave us instances of exactly the reverse—i.e., thematic interest so vital that the composer could safely continue one kind of tone-colour and balance for a longish time at a stretch. No wonder the Hyltons and Berlins are busy hunting among the classics for a supply of the material they are unable to invent for themselves! Here, then, is an instrumental combination so rich in possibilities that it is to be hoped some of our composers will try their hands on it, and not only for dance-music purposes. I suggest that the B.B.C. should give us another debate of the kind. But next time I hope the disputants will avoid the unnecessary warmth that crept into their arguments—especially Sir Landon's. There is no need for acrimony. Both sides have good cases, and much more convincing arguments and examples might be brought forward than were used on July 20.

LUNGS AND THE MAN: ANIMALS AND NATURAL BREATHING

By Sterling Mackinlay

Many men and most women breathe wrongly. Why do they not learn right breathing from the animals? In the matter of breathing, animals start life with one great advantage over human beings: they have no inherited defects to overcome by force of will. Animals have never worn clothes, except to oblige human beings in the circus or elsewhere. Thus they have never known what it is to have artificial pressure applied to the ribs. As a result they have always breathed deeply and naturally, with the lower or floating ribs moving freely outwards and back again. One need only look at the dog in one's home or at the horse out of doors to see the truth of this statement. Further, a visit to the Zoological Gardens will show that rib-breathing is the universal method of the animal kingdom.

Mankind on the other hand, has to fight against wrong methods, which have been inherited from a long line of waist-loving ancestors. To obtain a waist by natural exercises is admirable, for those who admire waists. To obtain one by artificial methods is a very different matter. Gone is the tight-lacing of the Victorian era, but high breathing which was the evil effect of restriction, remains as an inherited tendency. It is noticeable more especially in what used to be called the weaker sex. The difficulty is that the athletic exercises of the present day do not involve deep breathing. High-breathing results in a certain lightness of the lower part of the body, and thus the modern craze for dancing helps to retard the disappearance of a method which has no other advantage and a great many disadvantages from the health point of view.

As soon as the lower ribs are subjected to the slightest compression, the method of breathing begins to be altered. When the waist is encompassed with rigid armour, whether it be of steel or of whalebone, the lower ribs become immovable and natural breathing ceases to exist altogether. Man places himself on a lower level than the animals in a matter which is of the highest possible importance. He is deliberately discarding the proper method of carrying on a physical function upon which his existence is entirely dependent.

Man can exist without food for many days, without liquid for many hours, but without air he cannot exist many minutes. Medical specialists are constantly putting their patients upon diets. It may be doubted whether a single food or drink can be mentioned which has not at some time fallen under the doctor's ban. ('My dear Sir, rank poison in your case!') Air alone has come through the ordeal of Harley Street without sentence of banishment being pronounced.

When the proper rib movement of filling the lungs is interfered with, only two alternatives remain, both of them bad. To breathe entirely downwards subjects the internal organs to pressures which were never intended, and if indigestion is the only aftermath, one may be congratulated. To breathe entirely upwards involves the constant effort of raising the chest, and reduces lung expansion to a minimum. Can it be wondered at, if a weak chest and lung trouble are the resultant penalties?

How rarely do animals get consumption compared with human beings! When they do suffer from this malady, it is not because they breathe wrongly. It comes often from lack of that fresh air which is the birthright of us all. Many human beings with a tendency to consumption have been cured by singing or elocution lessons; no other medicine has been necessary. Have professional singers developed consumption? Such an occurrence is practically unknown. Happy is he who sings at his play, but thrice happy is he who breathes as nature intended, for his is the priceless gift of Health.

'THE COMPLETE ORGAN RECITALIST'

A work bearing the above title is shortly to be issued. The editor, Mr. Herbert Westerby, has secured the co-operation of over thirty contributors well known in the organ world, and the result should be a volume of great interest and value. The articles will deal with the historical and educational aspects of organ playing; sundry departments of recital work; various styles of recital music; training for recital work; famous organs and organists, English and American, &c. The first issue of the book will be by subscription, particulars of which, with prospectus, are to be had from Mr. Westerby at 57, Bexley Road, S.E.9. We understand that members of organists' associations, and of the I.S.M., may obtain the work at a special low price of 7*s.* 6*d.* until September 4. The ordinary subscription rate will be 10*s.* (closing on October 4). After the subscription is closed the price will be 12*s.* 6*d.* It should be added that Editor and contributors have given their services, and the proceeds will be devoted to the Organists' Benevolent League.

Church and Organ Music

ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS

PASSED ASSOCIATESHIP, JULY, 1926

Barnes, C. A. E., London.
Barrington, E. J. W., Horsham.
Bell, E. A., Hull.
Birtchnell, E. E., London.
Blake, L. J., London.
Bornet, P., Lincoln.
Bowyer, W. H., Blackburn.
Brocklesby, J. H., Rotherham.
Brown, C. E., Malvern Link.
Chown, C. E., Northampton.
Clegg, Miss A., Todmorden.
Curtis, Miss V. F. M., London.
Etchells, A. E., Manchester.
Fuller, Miss M. C., Swansea.
Hayward, D. S., London.
*Knight, C. H., London.
Lee, F. R. M., Edinburgh.
†Maybrey, W. J., Twickenham.
Nolan, S., Nottingham.
Parkin, W., Wakefield.
Pease, A. R. H., Southsea.
Rodgers, J. M., Manchester.
Rogers, D. G., Ware.
Runeckles, E. J. F., Stowmarket.
Sharpe, H. D., Liverpool.
Sealey, F. C. R., London.
Sturman, G. W., Woodhall Spa, Lincs.
Sykes, J. A., Bristol.
Thomas, G. A., London.
Tubbs, W. J., London.
Willis, R. E., Ipswich.

* Lafontaine Prize. † Sawyer Prize.

ALAN W. SHINDLER, Registrar.

PASSED FELLOWSHIP, JULY, 1926

Ansell, G. E., London.
*Beckett, T. W., London.
Bevers, F., Batley, Yorks.
Brown, A. G. Y., Tadcaster.
Bull, A. J., Tonbridge.
Bullock, B., Stoke-on-Trent.
Bunney, A. W., London.
Chadwick, F., Huddersfield.
Cheveaux, L. N., Bury St. Edmunds.
Daniels, E. H., Gloucester.
Grant, W., Bolton.
Hamer, H. S., Leeds.
†Hart, C. T., Bury St. Edmunds.
Higgins, G. J., Bristol.
Hopkins, D. E., London.
Hunt, J. E., London.
Madge, W. J., London.
Metzler, G. J., London.
Monteath, C. E., Denstone College.
Osmond, C. E., Salisbury.
Peasgood, O. H., London.
Ramsey, C. E., Colchester.
Rhodes, G., Scarborough.
Sutton, E. B., Southsea.
Tomblings, P. B., Tonbridge.
Williams, A. B., Doncaster.

* Lafontaine Prize. † Turpin Prize.

ALAN W. SHINDLER (Registrar).

The reports of the Examining Board are appended:

FELLOWSHIP PAPER-WORK

The value of the work was very much better than usual; it it was for the most part distinctly musical, and though correct in the main, it was not nearly so mechanical. There was too much avoidance of the obvious, as if candidates were suspicious of a trap: e.g., (a) In the free counterpoint, a bass was given consisting of two bars in F major, followed by exactly the same two bars in A minor. A large proportion of workers failed to see any connection; (b) In the orchestration, an orchestra including three horns was specified. The opening phrase of the passage to be scored simply begged to be put on the three horns. The majority of workers found a much more elaborate and less effective solution.

Few candidates, to our regret, attempted the vocal polyphony, and of those who did, none realised that the basis of 16th-century counterpoint is rhythmical combination.

The questions were answered fully and well, and the fugue—a matter of stretti—was very fair, but the orchestration was too elaborate, and was unsatisfactory in the way the bass was treated. Few candidates realised that in a large 'spread' pianoforte chord the lowest note is the 'true' bass.

P. C. BUCK (Chairman).
G. J. BENNETT.
C. H. KITSON.

FELLOWSHIP ORGAN-WORK

The greatly increased number of passes is sufficient evidence of a welcome improvement in the playing of the candidates. Yet this number would have been augmented considerably if certain candidates had taken the trouble to look at the key-signature in the tests, and had played correctly the bass given to be harmonized, the theme for extemporisation, and the melody. It is amazing that a candidate for an important examination will mis-read two bars of the simplest music, both as to key and time, and even extemporise on it for some minutes without finding out his mistake; or that he will play half through a sight-test in the wrong key, and, having at last found it, will lose it again before the end. It is, perhaps, within the bounds of possibility that some hopelessly bad player could do this, but when a candidate plays his pieces with fluency and accuracy, and then commits some needless errors of this sort, one finds it difficult to understand his musical outlook. The best features of the playing were accuracy, the selection of appropriate stops, and neatness in the management of the organ. The weak side of it lay, as usual, in the rhythm and phrasing. Many candidates have not yet realised that vitality in music is in direct proportion to a sense of beat.

W. G. Alcock (Chairman).
Edward C. Bairstow.
Alan Gray.

ASSOCIATESHIP PAPER-WORK

The strict counterpoint papers show some tendency to improve, but much of the work done is still poor. There were better workings in the free counterpoint, though more attention should be given to the maintenance of the figure and style suggested in the opening bars. A marked improvement was shown in the treatment of pianoforte accompaniments and in the harmonization of the melody. An increasing use of appropriate figures and a better sense of pianoforte idioms produced workings which showed musicianship. It was very encouraging to notice the real advance made in the harmonization test. The added parts were interesting, and revealed greater freedom and individuality.

The attention of candidates must again be drawn to the importance of the ear-tests. There were often surprising failures.

Ivor Atkins (Chairman).
A. Eaglefield Hull.
H. Davan Wetton.

ASSOCIATESHIP ORGAN-WORK

Inaccuracy again marred much of the playing for the Associateship. The chief errors were distorted note-values; a general lack of precision; poor phrasing and part-playing, especially in the opening of the first group of pieces. Indefinite pedal was still prevalent, particularly in Group 4. It is a matter of surprise that so many candidates reproduced such a poor idea of the composers' rhythmical intentions. Instances of exaggerated tempi were frequent, and often imperilled not only the security of the rhythm, but the shape of phrasing.

Many candidates also failed to realise the standard required, and to grasp the spirit and style of the pieces, which seems to indicate a state of mind too fully occupied in negotiating purely technical difficulties.

Registration still continues a source of anxiety to candidates and examiners. Rarely was there shown that security of control and management which must be associated with good organ playing. The Bach Trio was usually conceived as a solo, and the selection of stops was often injudicious—e.g., the oboe and gamba neither blend well nor contrast well. Further, it is unwise to make a sustained demand upon the slender resources of the tremulant.

The vocal score was generally better. The test was not difficult, and in the expectation of a higher standard of accuracy the examiners were not disappointed. But the weakness in transposition and accompaniment deserves strong comment. Seeing that most candidates may reasonably expect, now that descants are so popular, to be called upon to perform such tests in the ordinary course of their duties, the results were little short of disastrous. Many were unable to recognize the modulations in either test. Of the first hundred candidates, eighty-four failed to secure pass marks in transposition, and ninety-two failed in accompaniment. Such results are a reflection upon the standard of the general musicianship of these candidates, and they are urged, for their own sakes, to effect a speedy improvement in these subjects.

Henry G. Ley (Chairman).
Harold E. Darke.
E. S. Roper.

NEW COLLEGE CHAPEL, OXFORD

Messrs. Rushworth & Dreaper have rebuilt the organ at New College Chapel, Oxford, and have installed electric blowing in place of the old hydraulic plant. Portions of the organ are of great antiquity, the earliest parts having been built by Robert Dallam (1602-65). Dallam's organ was rebuilt by Samuel Green (1740-96), and a further reconstruction by 'Father' Willis took place in 1875. As now rebuilt the instrument is a four-manual of forty-seven stops. There is a fine Pedal organ of nine stops—Open Diapason, Violone, Bourdon, and Ophicleide, 16-ft.; Octave, Principal, Bass Flute, and Clarion, 8-ft.; and a three-rank Mixture. Of the ten Choir stops, five are enclosed. The Great organ contains twelve stops, and the Swell twelve. There are twenty thumb pistons for the manuals, four reversible pistons for coupling purposes, and six composition pedals for the Pedal organ. The wind-pressures are from 3½-in. to 15-in.

THE GREGORIAN ASSOCIATION

The fifty-sixth annual Festival took place on June 17, beginning with a celebration of the Holy Communion at St. John's, Great Marlborough Street, at noon, when the men's choir of the Association sang the 'Missa de Angelis.' Evensong was sung at Westminster Abbey by a choir of five hundred. Fauxbourdons by Gibbons and Causton were used for the Canticles, and the anthem was Vittoria's 'Jesu, dulcis memoria.' The service throughout was finely rendered, and there was a crowded congregation. In the absence, through illness, of Mr. Francis Burgess, Mr. F. Eames conducted. Mr. Herrick Edwards was, as usual, the accompanist, and Mr. Sydney H. Nicholson prefaced the service with a recital.

MORE RECORDS OF LONG CHOIR SERVICE

Apropos of recent paragraphs on this subject, Mr. Howard J. Hadley, of Worcester, sends the following particulars of long service at Angel Street Congregational Church, Worcester: Choirmaster and organist, thirty-eight years; three members of the choir have done over forty years' service (46, 44, and 41); seven have passed the thirty years' total (38, 37, 36, 35, 34, 33, 32); and there are three mere youngsters who have been members for over twenty years. Our correspondent works out the average of each group, and even gives the total in hundreds—calculations for which we have not space. The list is one of which the choirmaster, Mr. Leonard G. Winter, and his forces may well be proud.

DR. DAVAN WETTON

After thirty years in the position of organist and director of music at the Foundling Hospital, Dr. Davan Wetton has retired, his term of office ceasing with the removal of the institution from London. The boys and girls of the Hospital showed their affectionate esteem by presenting him with three silver ash-trays, purchased out of pennies contributed from their pocket-money. Dr. Wetton has since accepted the post of organist and choirmaster at Christ Church, Lancaster Gate.

NEW ORGAN FOR MELBOURNE TOWN HALL

The Agent-General for Victoria is inviting tenders from British organ builders for a concert organ for Melbourne Town Hall, to replace the instrument recently destroyed by fire. The new organ is to be a four-manual, of eighty-nine stops and thirty-one couplers. The proposed specification is available at the Victoria Office, Melbourne Place, Strand. Tenders from British firms should be deposited with the Agent-General, at the above address, not later than September 20.

PURCELL COMMEMORATION AT WESTMINSTER ABBEY

The celebration of the Festival of St. Peter at Westminster Abbey ended on July 5 with a special Evensong to Purcell's music. Under Mr. Sydney H. Nicholson, the Abbey Special Choir collaborated with the regular choir in a number of the finest and most representative examples of Purcell's Church music. The anthems were 'My beloved spake,' 'Remember not, Lord,' 'Jehovah quam multi,' 'O Lord God of Hosts,' and 'My heart is inditing,' the magnificent Coronation Anthem for James II. The Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in G minor were sung, and the processional hymn was 'Blessed city, heavenly Salem,' sung to an arrangement of the Hallelujah from 'O God, Thou art my God.'

PRESENTATION TO MR. F. R. FRYE

At the Cathedral Hall, Chelmsford, on June 21, the sub-Dean of Chelmsford Cathedral handed to Mr. F. R. Frye a clock, a cheque for £100, and an album of subscribers' names, as a mark of appreciation of Mr. Frye's completion of fifty years' service at St. Mary's Church (now the Cathedral).

FOUNDLING HOSPITAL

The King and Queen paid a visit to the Foundling Hospital on June 10, when Dr. Davan Wetton played to them on the historic organ and the children sang some anthems. Dr. Wetton was afterwards presented to Their Majesties, who expressed their appreciation of the recital.

The Holland Choirs Triennial Festival took place at Boston Parish Church on June 17, when fifteen choirs (mostly from village Churches) were present, totalling about three hundred and fifty voices. The anthem was Crotch's 'Comfort, O Lord,' and the hymns were from the 'English Hymnal.' The collection was for the Lincoln Cathedral Restoration Fund. Dr. Gordon Slater directed the music.

Mr. P. E. Sankey has resigned the office of hon. secretary and treasurer of the Plainsong and Mediæval Music Society, after twenty-three years' service. The Council has appointed as his successor the Rev. Dom Anselm Hughes, O.S.B., Pershore Abbey, Worcestershire. A circular, dealing with the Society's present and future activities, is being prepared, and a copy may be had on application to the hon. secretary.

Mr. John Newton lectured on 'Modal Music' at Holy Trinity Hall, Bournemouth, on June 12. Examples, sung by the choir of Christchurch Priory, included portions of Communion Service settings by Charles Wood, Martin Shaw, and Henry Ley, Faburdons by Morley, and hymns from the 'English Hymnal' and 'Songs of Syon.'

The choir and congregation of Lavender Hill Congregational Church have presented Mr. J. T. Corbin, J.P., with a gold watch, as a token of esteem and appreciation on the completion of forty years' work as their organist.

A new organ has been built by Messrs. Rushworth & Dreaper for Holy Trinity Church, Llandudno—a three-manual of thirty-nine speaking stops, fifteen manual pistons, and ten pedal pistons.

RECITALS

Dr. R. Walker-Robson, St. Mary-le-Bow, E.C.—Passacaglia in D minor, Reger; Arabesque in G, Debussy; 'Ronde des Princesses,' Stravinsky; Fantasia and Fugue in C minor, Liszt.

Mr. H. C. J. Churchill, Purley Congregational Church—Trio in E flat (Sonata No. 1), Bach; Fugue in G (Sonata No. 3), Rheinberger; Sonata No. 1, Harwood; 'From Hebrid Seas,' Julian Nesbitt.

Mr. W. Wallace Thompson, St. James's, Garlick Hill, E.C.—Allegro marziale, Frank Bridge; Pièce Héroïque, Franck; Poem, Julius Harrison.

Mr. Frank E. Newman, St. Peter Mancroft, Norwich—Sonata No. 1, Mendelssohn; Two Sketches, Schumann; Choral Prelude on 'Ye holy angels bright,' Darke; Fugue, Reubke.

Mr. Charles Stott, Primitive Methodist Church, Silsden—Fugue, 'Ad nos,' Liszt; Variations on 'Hanover,' Lemare; Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, Bach; Thème varié, Widor.

Dr. Louis A. Hamand, Malvern Priory Church—'St. Anne' Fugue, Bach; Prelude, Fugue, and Variation, Franck; Allegretto grazioso (Symphony No. 6), Tchaikovsky.

Dr. W. G. Alcock, Andover Parish Church—Fantasia in F minor, Mozart; Basso Ostinato, Arensky; Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, Bach; Allegro Cantabile and Toccata (Symphony No. 5), Widor.

Mr. W. J. Lancaster, Bolton Parish Church—Concerto in B flat, Handel; Pièce Héroïque, Franck; Choral Prelude on 'Ye boundless realms of joy,' Parry.

Mr. Allan Fortune, Ingrow Parish Church—Nuptial March, Guilmant; Prelude on 'St. Peter' and Theme by Tallis, Darke; Two Preludes, Scriabin.

Miss Doris Marshall, St. Andrew's, Nottingham—Prologue, Henniker; Scherzo (Symphony No. 2), Vierne; Prelude in C, Bach.

Mr. W. Greenhouse Allt, St. Giles's Cathedral, Glasgow—Prelude on 'St. Michael,' West; Scherzo in F minor and Rêverie on 'University,' Harvey Grace; Sonata in the style of Handel, Wolstenholme; Psalm-Prelude No. 2, Howells; Pièce Héroïque, Franck; and a Karg-Elert programme.

Dr. Gordon Slater, Boston Parish Church—Chorale Prelude, 'Deck thyself, my soul, with gladness,' Bach; Prelude to 'The Dream of Gerontius'; Pastorale (Sonata No. 12), Rheinberger; Final (Symphony No. 3), Vierne.

Dr. Albert C. Tysoe, St. Hilda's, Whitby—Overture in D minor, Handel; Fantasia in E, Wolstenholme; Idyll, 'The Sea,' W. Arnold Smith.

Mr. Allan Brown, City Temple—Introduction and Fugue (Sonata), Reubke; Canon in B minor, Schumann; Fugue, 'Ad nos,' Liszt.

Master Horace W. King, St. Lawrence Jewry—Three Sketches, Schumann; Pastorale, Franck; Andantino, Frank Bridge; Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach.

Mr. W. Wolstenholme, St. Lawrence Jewry—Fantasia in G, Bach; Gavotte from 'Otho,' Handel; Prière and Toccata ('Suite Gothique'), Boëllmann; Two Ballads and Sketch, No. 3, Wolstenholme.

Mr. Cecil S. Richards, Hexham Abbey—Two Preludes, Scriabin; Fantasia Sonata (first two movements), Rheinberger; Toccata in D minor, Reger; Preludes on 'Southwell' and 'St. Mary,' Wood.

Mr. W. Wooding Starmer, East Grinstead Parish Church—Festival March, Best; 'In Paradisum,' Dubois; Fugue on B A C H, Schumann; Romance, Starmer.

Dr. Chastey Hector, Brighton Parish Church—Fugue in G, Bach; Introduction and Finale from Part 2 of 'The Apostles'; Cortège, Debussy; Tuba Tune, Norman Cocker.

Mr. Frederick J. Tarris, Chiswick Parish Church—Prelude and Fugue in C, Bach; Sonata No. 5, Mendelssohn; Bridal March, Parry.

Mr. Alban Hamer, Bloemfontein Cathedral—Preludes on 'Croft's 136th' and 'Eventide,' Parry; Adagio in F, Mozart; Allegretto Grazioso, Brahms; Toccata, Capocci.

Mr. George Ryan, St. Lawrence Jewry—Prelude in B minor, Bach; Scherzo in C minor, Guilmant; Toccata in F, Widor.

Mr. H. C. Warrilow, St. Lawrence Jewry—Triumphal March, Karg-Elert; Grand Chœur in G minor, Hollins; Pastorale in G, Watling.

APPOINTMENTS

Mr. Walter L. Booth, choirmaster, Cliff Town Congregational Church, Southend-on-Sea.

Miss Edna C. Howard, choirmaster and organist, Jackson's Lane Wesleyan Church, Highgate.

Mr. George Parker, choirmaster and organist, Parish Church, Leigh, Lancashire.

Mr. Godfrey Sceats, choirmaster and organist, Christ Church, Isle of Dogs, E.

Mr. Arthur M. Stacey, choirmaster and organist, St. Stephen's, Paddington.

Mr. Charles Stevens, choirmaster and organist, St. John the Evangelist, Waterloo Road, S.E.

Letters to the Editor

FOURTHS, FIFTHS, AND SIXTHS

SIR,—Dr. Froggatt looks on consecutives as a sort of musical Dr. Fell. He quotes a passage from a discussion at the Musical Association ; but the quotation by itself does not make my meaning clear. This may be my fault. May I put my view as shortly as the subject allows ?

In all art, incoherence is bad. In music, Form, including of course, Fugue and Canon, are studies of coherence, balance, and so on. They deal with coherence on the large scale. Coming down, it may not be too fanciful to say the ultimate elements of music classical to-day are chords, which link themselves into little groups of two, or sometimes three, which may be called doublets and triplets. As there is coherence between successive grouplets it is sometimes doubtful how a succession of chords should be analysed into grouplets. This is partly a question of metre.

Music is thus built up entirely of grouplets of two or three chords each. A discord and its resolution form a familiar grouplet. Many pairs of chords cannot combine into doublets ; the chords must be related, and the relation is generally discord-resolution ; or it depends on the cadence or half-cadence. What chords can be joined into grouplets is settled chiefly by cadence, which largely covers discord-resolution ; but the influence of scale comes in—often very strongly if the succession of chords is rapid—and the influence of sequence.

Taking common chords, many pairs will not form doublets, e.g., Dominant-Subdominant, Supertonic-Tonic. The two chords do not combine into a coherent grouplet.

Most chords a second apart will not combine into doublets. They have no notes in common to bind them together. This is not a full explanation, for chords a third apart have two notes in common, but they do not make good doublets. I suggest the reason is that they are not cadential.

The notes that settle what a common chord is, are the 'root' and fifth ; and if these are the outer parts, so as to be very prominent, they call attention to the chord and define it. Thirds have no such effect, as each third may belong to two common chords.

In discussing consecutives we must distinguish between conjunct and disjunct, and remember that there are only two pairs of conjunct minor thirds, and one pair of major thirds in the major scale.

Consecutive perfect fifths are worst when conjunct. I suggest that it is the chords which do not form a good grouplet ; and people have blamed the fifths. If you invert the chords, they are not, in the first place, so easily recognisable. Then the evil is mitigated by scale influence, especially if the chords are fast—as, for instance, in the last movement of the third Sonata ; they then become a mixture of harmony and passing-chords. A real grouplet and its components must take some time, such as a big part of a second. If the chords do not run up and down the scale they may not sound well even fast. I wonder if every organist feels quite happy playing the episode before the pedal point in the G minor Fugue.

The tritone is a danger signal calling attention to the bad doublet, Subdominant-Dominant. The cadence and the scale influence condone this to some extent. The reverse progression has no cadential reason, and the scale seems to have less influence going down. Singers have some difficulty with 'Watchman, is the night far spent?' ; but a singer who does not listen properly to the accompaniment is uncertain of the last note but one of the 'Erl-King.'

The subject is difficult and demands space, but I would urge shortly that bad melodic progressions are bad because they suggest bad harmony. There may be many forbidden that are really quite correct. The counterpoint master has had much more influence than any other ; and, for example, a general forbiddance of consecutive fifths on apparently logical grounds may rule out perfectly good cases, and people thinking them wrong may have trained themselves to dislike them as bad grammar. Many object to 'One does his best,' or 'The eldest of the two came first,' because grammarians object to 'his' and 'eldest,' though not to 'first' ; but I submit both are perfect English.

It may be said that if there were anything in all this, it would have been obvious all along. But in early days people did not mind consecutives because the harmonic groundwork did not exist. It grew gradually, unnoticed, in many centuries. Later the subject was always a question of counterpoint, not harmony ; and when harmony was studied it was essentially a discussion of isolated chords. Then chords, suspensions, and resolutions came under discussion, but the resolution was merely a kind of tail to the chord. Pairs or triolets of chords as grouplets or elements of progressions, rhyming with corresponding grouplets or sets of grouplets or progressions in corresponding parts of the strophe, have never been discussed fully.

Lichtenberg, and later Lamb, pointed out that one need not remember what each book says, any more than one should remember every meal he eats. Whether you read a fact or a convincing argument, or eat a poached egg on toast, you should merely make it a part of you. I remember that as a boy I ate Pearsall on Consecutives, and bit Macfarren on Counterpoint, so I looked them up to see what I may have been absorbing. The idea of consecutive fifths as involving incoherence is in both, but not in the same way, nor as I have put it. But the idea cannot be as Dr. Froggatt assumes, quite new, unless it is quite wrong, as he thinks it is. If anywhere near the truth it will be found, perhaps only implicitly, pretty widespread. As an example I may cite Spalding's 'Tonal Counterpoint.'—

Yours, &c.

J. SWINBURNE.

Oxted, Surrey.

THE CINEMA ORGANIST

SIR,—In the report (appearing in the July issue of the Musical Times) of Mr. Quentin Maclean's lecture at the R.C.O., we are given to understand that the lecturer strongly condemned extemporisation as a general basis of film accompaniment. This is quite astounding, and many, like myself, will find it very difficult to understand Mr. Maclean's attitude. As a cinema solo organist of much longer and wider experience than Mr. Maclean, and also as one who has closely studied the question of cinema music for fourteen years, I have not the slightest hesitation in stating that not only is the extemporised film accompaniment a necessity, but it is also the one and only reason why the cinema organist can lay claim to be recognised as an independent and unique artist, and is one of the first and chief reasons for the introduction of the organ into the cinema.

If Mr. Maclean's objection to extemporisation is to be supported, the only conclusion that can be arrived at is that the cinema organist is a makeshift ; for either he is a support to an inadequate orchestra, or, as a solo player, a 'relief,' to carry on while the orchestra has rest and refreshment ; or again (in some provincial cinemas), he provides the whole accompaniment to the programme of films. In each case, the organ and organist are employed for the sake of economy, and, if the organist is confining himself entirely to printed music, he is doing nothing which cannot be more satisfactorily done by other means—he is a makeshift. But in the extemporised film accompaniment, the solo organist is not only providing something which cannot be as satisfactorily supplied by any other instrumentalist or combination of instrumentalists, he is providing the only means of perfect synchronisation of film and music. If by 'extemporisation' Mr. Maclean implies aimless wandering about the keyboards, all musicians will support his objection ; such procedure is not extemporisation, but merely killing time. Extemporisation is impromptu composition at the keyboards, with good harmony, logical form, good style, and melodic interest—to say nothing of contrapuntal device. It is purely by virtue of the properly extemporised film accompaniment that the cinema solo organist justifies his claim to consideration as a specialist.

The Royal College of Organists is, I am sure, not prepared to sponsor makeshifts, neither are our great teaching institutions prepared to provide training, in their curricula, for makeshifts. But when they realise that the cinema demands organists of specialised ability, whose training should equip them for the unique features of their work, over and above the question of actual organ playing, then the R.C.O. and other leading institutions will be ready to take an active interest in this most important matter.

The practice of adapting existing music in film accompaniment can, at the best, be described as only a makeshift method, in which there is always bound to be a certain amount of incongruity; but, apart from a specially composed musical setting, it is the only possible method when employing a combination of players. Of the 'incidentals' composed for film accompaniment, fifty per cent. are absolute rubbish; the remainder may be indispensable to the cinema orchestral leader, but not so, by any means, to the solo organist. These pieces are specifically written to supply to the orchestra what the solo organist ought to be able to supply impromptu for himself.

If the whole question of cinema music is 'still in an experimental stage,' then experiments have been carried on for twenty years without any satisfactory result, and cinema organists, after something like ten years, are still experimenting—which seems rather ridiculous. We are, in fact, a long way past the experimental stage, and more than one musician is able to 'speak with authority' on the subject of cinema music. As for organists, exhibitors and managers are not prepared to pay a substantial salary to a man for experiments on their organs; but, on the contrary, are very much alive to the possibilities of the specialist as a box-office attraction (which is the only thing that matters to them). In proof of this (if proof it be), perhaps I may be permitted to mention that I have received during the last twelve months five offers at a salary of £20 weekly, and one of two hundred dollars weekly from America. Such salaries are not paid for makeshifts.

The extemporised film accompaniment by a competent organist, on the right type of organ, is the only method of securing an artistic and perfect synchronisation of film and music. It requires special study, and, finally, there are not, at the present moment, half a dozen organists in Great Britain who can do it.—Yours, &c.,

Douglas, Isle of Man. GEORGE TOOTELL
(formerly solo organist, Stoll Picture Theatre, Kingsway, London).

THE POSITION OF OPERA

SIR,—It is not quite fair to attribute the crowded audiences at Covent Garden this season in any large degree to the lure of Chaliapin and Jeritza. These two accounted, I believe, for not more than about eight performances in an eight weeks' season, and of the three works that can with reason be described as vehicles for these two singers, while it is safe to say that 'Thaïs' and the 'Jewels' are worthless trash, responsible critical opinion (not necessarily English critical opinion) is by no means agreed that 'Mefistofele' is worthless—nor would such a musician and artist as Toscanini subscribe to this opinion for one moment—and Chaliapin's performance, which I saw fourteen years ago at Milan, is one of the greatest pieces of dramatic art to be seen upon any stage, 'operatic' or otherwise. In no conceivable sense is it fair to class this marvellous artist, in spite of the aberrations he allows his press agent, with a mere purveyor of the cheapest, most vulgar, and crude of melodramatics like Jeritza, who, as Mr. Newman has often and most rightly said, is merely a bad film-actress—and I am told by some one present on an occasion when she was singing that the house was far from full.

Mr. Priestley, with his 'fat pawing pair,' is prehistoric and merely silly. The mountainous prime donne are as much a thing of the past as the 'Bayreuth bark' and Italy as the 'Land of Song.' On the whole, Wagner may be heartily congratulated on failing to incur the approval of the Mr. Priestleys; and a form of art that has attracted and drawn the very best of their powers from Mozart, Verdi, Wagner, Strauss, Debussy, Ravel, and Busoni is not to be dismissed with deprecatory gestures from journalists in the Saturday Review.—Yours, &c.,

KAIKHOSRU SORABJI.

175, Clarence Gate Gardens, N.W.1.

THE HANDEL FESTIVAL

SIR,—Your contributor 'J. G.,' in his article on the Handel Festival, has made a slip in his mention of Charles Lyall's cartoon, reversing the parts of Joseph Bennett and Ebenezer Prout. Bennett was the policeman, and Prout was doing the whitewashing. I have very vivid recollection of the picture, although I have lost my copy of it. I think it was the success of Franz's additional accompaniments to some of Handel's works that suggested to Prout the desirability of writing something similar for 'Samson.'

In later years, however, Prout's attitude as regards 'white-washing' changed. He told me he regretted having 'touched up' the above-named oratorio, 'although,' he added, 'I am bound to say my accompaniments were very effective.' I asked him if he really thought 'The people that walked in darkness' sounded better without Mozart's orchestration. He fidgetted a little in his chair, and replied that Mozart's work was very un-Handelian. I said: 'Professor Prout, you have not answered my question'; to which he replied, 'Then I didn't understand it' (a tarradiddle, I am afraid!). But although I repeated the question, I couldn't induce him to give a straight answer.—Yours, &c., ARTHUR T. FROGGATT.

5, Richmond Mansions, Denton Road, Twickenham.

[The error referred to in Dr. Froggatt's opening paragraph was corrected in the author's proof. Unfortunately, the proof went astray in the post, and arrived after our July issue had gone to press.—EDITOR.]

FRETS ON VIOLS

SIR,—Mr. Jeffrey Pulver, in 'The Viols in England,' reprinted from a lecture read before the Musical Association in 1920 (p. 19), says referring to his own viol:

> 'The marks of the old catgut frets may still be seen on the neck of this instrument. It was the custom to apply frets to all the instruments of this family, even when they were not used "Lyra-way," Playford saying that it was "a most sure and easie way for the first entring scholars, and after, to cut them off when they become perfect in the knowledge of all the several notes." Certain it is that the difficult divisions of Sympson could not be played decently with the frets in the way of free movement for the left hand.'

This passage recurs almost verbatim in the same author's 'Dictionary of Old English Music and Musical Instruments,' 1923 (p. 228). During the last forty years I have studied many 16th-, 17th-, and 18th-century treatises on viols in French, German, Italian, &c., including the well-known English ones. I have never seen a passage saying that viols were ever played without frets. As this is a fundamental point, may I ask Mr. Pulver if he will give chapter and verse for his quotation? It would be extremely interesting if its existence were proved.

When the viol is held and fingered in the correct manner, the frets are no impediment to the free movement of the left hand.—Yours, &c., ARNOLD DOLMETSCH.

'Jesses,' Haslemere, Surrey.

'ORCHESTRAL NOTATION'

SIR,—In the July Musical Times the author of 'Orchestral Notation' describes the different evidence as to how many of the lower harp strings are covered as conflicting. The number actually does vary; the older harps had the 35th (F) string in gut, but it is now generally found covered, as it gives a clearer tone. Incidentally, harmonics can—but probably never would—be played on the covered strings.—Yours, &c.,

Redcourt, (Miss) D. E. SHILLINGTON SCALES.
Adam's Road, Cambridge.

THE 'GENIUS' OF WILLIAM BAINES

SIR,—Never before have I been accused of modesty. I am sorry to have to dispel my friend, Mr. Denis Laughton's, illusion; but my references to the abilities of William Baines indicated no lack of faith in my own. If I failed to use the word 'genius,' it was because it was too vague for my purpose. Genius is the force within the architects who design the cathedral and the worms that undermine it. There is the genius of the tree which reaches to the light and the genius of the owl that avoids it. What distinguishes a musician, or any sort of man, from his fellows is not the genius which he cannot help, but his intelligence, his industry, and his will to public service without personal reward, and in these things William Baines was not deficient—within the limits of his 'genius.'

Since writing the article on Baines, Messrs. Banks & Son, of York, have been good enough to send four pianoforte pieces by the same composer—pieces not known to me when I wrote the article. While they add nothing to one's ideas of Baines, they are all worthy the attention of those pianists who believe that a true love of art begins at home. One of them, 'Little Imps,' is very attractive, and I confidently recommend it to Mr. White of British Columbia.—Yours, &c.,

RUTLAND BOUGHTON.

Tatsfield, Surrey.

GILES FARNABY

SIR,—I offer the following notes on Dr. Grattan Flood's article on Giles Farnaby in your July issue.

Of Farnaby's anthem, 'O my sonne Absolom,' the MS. (Add. 29,427, 23, British Museum) contains the alto part only. The anthem as a whole no longer exists. 'Rosasolis,' under Farnaby's name in the Fitzwilliam Book, is also found in Brit. Mus. Add. MS. 23,623, under Bull's name. The piece is practically the same, and the authorship is therefore doubtful. It is quite certain that the 'Meridian Almain' is by Bull, since it appears as one of a set by him in two reliable MSS., which are now at Oxford and Paris. Other pieces incorrectly ascribed to Farnaby are the 'Toye,' by Tomkins, and 'Bonny, sweet robin' by Bull.

It has been overlooked in connection with Farnaby's death that his works include a 'King's Hunt.' This piece is entirely distinct from those by Bull and Cosyn, and the authorship is not in doubt. It follows that Farnaby must have lived into the reign of James I., for whom the piece was composed, and he was doubtless alive when his new Psalm-tune was included in Barley's Psalter.—Yours, &c.,

Ewell. MARGARET H. GLYN.

COLOUR IN MUSIC

Sir,—I don't agree at all with Mr. Brent-Smith's remarks (in your July issue) about colour in music. I feel most strongly that D flat major is dark brown, that the March from 'Rheingold,' and other similar music, was written in that key for that very reason, and that it would not sound 'just as dark' in C major. As a composer himself, does not Mr. Brent-Smith feel that there is always one key, and one key only, whose tone-colour exactly fits the mood of any given composition?

Mr. Brent-Smith further says that it is permissible deliberately to invent new words 'provided that their meaning is obvious'; in support of which he quotes such words as Edward Lear's 'borascible.' May I ask what obvious meaning Mr. Brent-Smith attaches to the same author's 'runcible'? Surely the attractiveness of this adjective lies in its meaning nothing whatever, but sounding nice! Similarly, may not the language of music be enriched by the deliberate invention of new sounds—not because the composer finds existing sounds inadequate to express some profound emotion, but because of the sheer creative joy of producing something new and attractive?—Yours, &c.,

ROBERT S. ELKIN.

20, Kingly Street, Regent Street, W.1.

A CORRECTION.

SIR,—Mr. E. T. Sweeting, in his interesting article in the July Musical Times, mentions Mr. George Hopkins, now of Launceston, as a son of J. L. Hopkins. I think this is incorrect, and should be John Hopkins, late of Rochester Cathedral, a cousin of J. L. Hopkins, who died in 1873.—Yours, &c., F. GILBERT LAMB.

Hythe, Kent.

The Amateurs' Exchange

Under this heading we insert, free of charge, announcements by amateur musicians who wish to co-operate with others.

Violinist wishes to meet pianist and other string players to form trio or small orchestra.—L. N. B., c/o Musical Times.

Lady (pianist) wishes to meet violinist and 'cellist with view to forming trio. Exeter district.—A.R.C.M., L.R.A.M., c/o Musical Times.

Lady pianist wishes to meet proficient musicians for mutual practice. Manchester and district.—J. C., c/o Musical Times.

Pianist (gentleman) wishes to meet other instrumentalists for mutual practice.—F. T., c/o Musical Times.

'Cellist (learner) wishes to meet good pianist and violinists for progressive practice—solos, trios, and quartets. Croydon district.—CHARLES P. COCKS, 158, Morland Road, Croydon.

Contralto wishes to meet good pianist for mutual practice of classical music. Kensington district.—M. H., c/o Musical Times.

Pianist wishes to meet vocalists and instrumentalists for accompaniment and mutual practice. Birmingham district.—E. F. F., c/o Musical Times.

'Cellist (medium ability) wishes to meet other string players for mutual practice in or near Ealing.—H., 17, Grange Road, Ealing, W.5.

Soprano wishes to meet advanced accompanist (able to read de Falla, Bantock, &c.) for mutual practice.—5, Exeter Road, E.17.

'Cellist (good player) wanted to complete quintet. Hove-Brighton district.—F. B. B., c/o Musical Times.

[We shall be glad to receive the address of 'J. C.' It has been mislaid.—EDITOR.]

Sixty Years Ago

From the Musical Times of August, 1866:

MR. ARTHUR S. SULLIVAN'S concert at St. James's Hall, on July 11, was in every respect a highly successful one. Appealing to the public as a composer, Mr. Sullivan was perfectly right to print his own name as often as he pleased in the programme, and to stand or fall by the result. We have already given our opinion on his Symphony—which, of course, occupied a conspicuous place in the concert—and of his Overture to the 'Sapphire Necklace,' we may say that there is very much to admire, and that, without contrasting it with mature works, it contains sufficient to show that Mr. Sullivan has power to advance to a high place provided that power be rightly directed in time. A great feature of the concert was Madame Goldschmidt's [Jenny Lind's] singing of two songs by the concert-giver, and her brilliant execution of Handel's 'Sweet bird' (with flute obbligato by Mr. Wells), which made us feel how little the lapse of time can weaken the charm of a real artist. Mr. Santley's song (also by Mr. Sullivan), 'O mistress mine,' is a clever composition, and was enthusiastically encored. Bach's Concerto in C minor, for two pianofortes, was played to perfection by Mlle. Mehlig and Mr. Franklin Taylor, and later in the evening Mlle. Mehlig performed Moscheles's 'Recollections of Ireland,' at the end of which the composer, who was present, received quite an ovation. The programme also included the duet, 'In such a night as this' (well sung by Miss Edith Wynne and Mr. Cummings) and the 'Brisk Dance,' two of the best pieces in Mr. Sullivan's Cantata, 'Kenilworth.' The concert was extremely well attended.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

The summer term, the third and last of the academic year, is always a busy one, for in addition to the customary routine of work and concerts, there are the added excitements of examinations and the opera week. The students' chamber concert, on June 24, was notable for some excellent string-quartet playing in the first movement of Brahms's Quartet in A minor, Op. 51, No. 2. There is no doubt that the general standard of chamber-music performance at the Academy is at the moment very high, and in this particular instance not only was the ensemble sedulously maintained, but the tone and conception of the performance were exceedingly well sustained from beginning to end. Very good, too, was Beethoven's Quintet in E flat, for pianoforte and wind instruments, in which the pianoforte was exceptionally well played. A word of praise is due to the horn player for his clever management of this always somewhat unruly instrument. An ex-student, Miss Dorothy Howell, was represented by her Phantasy for violin and pianoforte. It was pleasantly played, but is too long. Young composers, and for that matter those of more mature years, should ever keep before them the idea that 'Brevity is the soul of wit.' Two MS. songs by a student, Mr. Norman McLeod Steel, a victim of the war in the loss of his sight, were most pleasing, if only for the fact that they both betrayed imagination—an unusual asset with song-writers. Compact and to the point were four tiny songs with string quartet accompaniment, by Miss Olive Pull. They were intelligently sung by Miss Barbara Pett-Fraser.

The students of the dramatic class gave two performances on June 25 and 26. Good acting was shown in the quaintly-named playlet, 'Six who pass while the lentils boil,' especially outstanding being the Boy. The young lady who played this part has a distinct flair for the stage, her diction is good, and she knows what to do when she has nothing to say. 'The Wonder Hat' was also well acted, and the interest sustained throughout, but the less said of 'The Queen of Cornwall' the better. Young amateurs, indeed very few amateurs, are fitted to play tragedy, and generally succeed only in making themselves and the play ridiculous.

Great praise must be accorded the Academy opera students for their enterprise during the last twelve months, and if more attention is given to details, particularly details of production, a permanent nursery may be established that should go a long way to solve the difficulties of opera in English or, maybe, opera in England. Unfortunately production is the last feature that is ever considered by operatic managers in England, but at least it is satisfactory to realise that our leading and oldest musical educational institution is devoting some of its activities to instructing its operatic students in the way they should go. Last year, when the enterprise was initiated at the New Scala Theatre, a performance of Verdi's 'Falstaff' was given. This proved full of merit, and remarkable for the representations of the parts of Falstaff and Ford by Messrs. Arthur Fear and Roy Henderson. This year an even more ambitious programme had been attempted. On Monday, July 12, the week opened with Humperdinck's 'Hänsel and Gretel,' played three times, and each evening with a different caste—an excellent idea. The two children, Misses May Turtle and Lesley Duff, had conceived the spirit of their parts, and carried them out most successfully. Miss Turtle has a promising voice. Mr. Bruce Anderson, too, as the Broom-maker, was good, and has a good voice. The orchestra under the careful and capable direction of Mr. Julius Harrison did its share right well. The singers should not, however, devote themselves entirely to the audience; it spoils the general effect, and there is no need to imitate the faults of others, even if they are prime donne. On the following evening a triple bill was presented—a too ambitious adventure, perhaps, but it is as well to err on the right side. Dr. John Blow's attractive Masque, 'Venus and Adonis,' if a long way after Purcell, was very charming; and, moreover, it revealed that Mr. Arthur Fear's voice is improving. The performance would have been better for what the Americans call a little more 'pep.' 'Dross,' a melodrame by Paul Corder, gave the dramatic students a chance. It is doubtful if wordless plays at their best provide appetising fare, especially where they are as spun out as was 'Dross'; but the performance was well done, and Miss H. Coxhead mimed the Mother extremely well. The best of the three one-Act shows was 'Gianni Schicchi.' Everybody revelled in Puccini's clever opera.

An innovation at the Academy will be a Vacation Course for Teachers during the holidays. There will be a reception by the Principal at the Academy on September 13, and lectures by well-known professors on the four following days.

The following awards have been made: Sterndale Bennett Scholarship (pianoforte) to William Frederick Hartley (Dundee); Percy Cimbro Martin being commended. Piatti Prize (violoncello) to John Richards (Cardiff); Stanley E. Tizzard being highly commended. Matthew Phillimore Prize (pianoforte) to Francis G. Britton (London); Eric Brough being very highly commended. Frederick Westlake Memorial Prize (pianoforte) to Jean Wells (Doncaster); Muriel Warne being highly commended. Swansea Eisteddfod Prize (singing) to Wilfred Miles (South Wales); Edgar Thomas being highly commended. Mario Prize (singing) to Arthur Fear (Blaina); Glyndwr Jones being highly commended. Gilbert R. Betjemann Memorial Prize (singing) to Arthur Fear (Blaina); Dorothy Ryan and Léonore Weeple being very highly commended; Lesley Duff, Margaret Hale, and Lilian Ottman being commended. Charlotte Walters Prizes (elocution) to Martie Ball and Marian Spencer. Albert Hunt Shakespearean Prize (elocution) to Hilda Coxhead. Julia Leney Prize (harp) to Ceinwen Roberts. Henry R. Eyers Prize (sight-singing) to Eric Brough. Janet Duff Greet Prize (pianoforte, improvisation, &c.) to Dorothy Manley. Walter Macfarren Prizes (pianoforte) to Dorothy Folkard and Norman Franklin. Lionel Monckton Scholarship (composition) to Freda Patricia Robertson. Charles Lucas Prize (composition) to Ivor Richard Davies. Cuthbert Nunn Prize (composition) to Guirne Creith. Alexander Roller Memorial Prize (pianoforte) to Margaret Grummitt. Sir Edward Cooper Prize (quartet playing) to Phyllis McDonald, Hilda Parry, Winifred Copperwheat, and Joan Mulholland. Parepa-Rosa Prize (singing) to Wilfred Miles. Alfred J. Waley Prize (violin) to Phyllis McDonald. Messrs. Chappell & Co. Pianoforte Prize to Eric Brough. Pianoforte Advisory Board Prize to Dorothy Phillips. Messrs. Challen & Son Pianoforte Prize to Doris Hibbert. Blakiston Memorial Prize (pianoforte) to Phyllis Sellick. Anne E. LLoyd Exhibition (singing) to Lesley K. Duff.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC

During the past month several performances of Wagner's 'Parsifal,' in its entirety, have been given in the Parry Memorial Theatre. This was an enterprise of considerable dimensions, demanding, as has been said, both courage and imagination, and it may be allowed that neither of these qualities was found wanting when the performers came to the crucial test of representation. The opera was produced by Mr. Cairns James, and Mr. H. Grunebaum and Mr. Adrian Boult shared the conductor's task, each directing two performances. The cast also was varied. Of the big characters, Parsifal and Gurnemanz were taken throughout by Mr. Trefor Jones and Mr. John Andrews, the part of Kundry alternately by Miss Carys Davies and Miss Odette de Foras, that of Amfortas by Mr. Karl Melene and Mr. H. Leyland-White, and that of Klingsor by Mr. Philip Warde and Mr. Charles Draper. The extent to which the resources of the College personnel were drawn upon may be gauged by the statement that stage, chorus, and orchestra absorbed very nearly two hundred performers.

The last Patrons' Fund Rehearsal of the term, held on July 16, was a composers' morning, when four new works were played through. The Royal College contributions were two songs by Rupert Erlebach, 'Ecstasy' and 'Beauty,' sung with admirable insight and musical feeling by Mr. Philip Warde, and a ballet suite, 'Drumstick's Dream,' by Anthony Collins; Reginald Redman represented the Guildhall School of Music with a tone-poem,

'Moods'; and the fourth work was another tone-poem, 'Countryside,' by William J. Fenney, who was educated at the Birmingham and Midland Institute. The titles of these compositions may be said sufficiently to indicate their scope and limits, but, seeing that complaints are often heard of the dearth of light music by British composers, it may confidently be hoped that givers of orchestral concerts will turn their attention to Mr. Collins's ballet suite.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC

The term just ended has been a busy one. On June 26 the orchestral concert took place at Queen's Hall, under the direction of Mr. Joseph Ivimey, when the programme included Franck's Symphony in D minor. The singing of Mair Thomas and the violin playing of Miss José a'Beckett were worthy of high commendation.

The choir and chamber music concert at Æolian Hall on July 15 attracted an overflowing audience.

But the outstanding feature of the term's work was the three performances, by the Operatic Class, of Offenbach's 'Princess of Trebizonde,' at the New Scala Theatre. These were most enjoyable. The opportunity of hearing this sparkling music played by a first-rate and complete orchestra, combined with talented acting and singing, with stage effects adequately carried out, was taken full advantage of by the public, who filled the theatre.

It is pleasant to relate that two College students have been successful in University examinations: G. S. A. Bone, in the literary portion of the Mus. Bac., at Oxford, and A. W. Beecham, whose Exercise for Mus. Bac. has been approved at Durham. The Grosvenor Gooch Prizes for regularity and diligence, given each term, were awarded to Miss Irene Kohler and Mr. Ted Warburton.

Distributions of prizes and certificates gained at the Local Examinations were held during the past month at Folkestone, Golders Green, and Newbury. The two latter were attended by Prof. J. C. Bridge, who delivered an address on each occasion.

THE ASSOCIATED BOARD

The thirty-seventh annual meeting of the Associated Board of the Royal Academy of Music and the Royal College of Music was held at the Royal Academy of Music, York Gate, Marylebone Road, N.W., on July 13. Mr. Ernest Mathews took the chair. There was a large attendance.

The minutes of the previous meeting having been read and confirmed, the secretary read the Report for the year. The number of candidates in the United Kingdom was 8,840 in the Local Centre Examinations, and 46,448 in the 'School' Examinations. The exhibitions offered by the Board in the United Kingdom during the year were gained by Eileen L. Willmott, Gravesend (pianoforte); Leonard Isaacs, Manchester (pianoforte); Claudia James, Cardiff (violin); Valerie Tunbridge, Swansea (violin); Barbara M. Johnston, Liverpool (violoncello); Irene K. Hitch, London (singing). Exhibitions were also awarded in the Dominions and Colonies as follows: in Australia, Doris Woodland, Sydney (violin), and Margot Macgibbon, Melbourne; in New Zealand, Leah Haughton, Hawera (pianoforte); in Canada, Mary Graham, Winnipeg (violin); in India, Enid Blake, Bombay (pianoforte), and Irene Platel, Calcutta (pianoforte); in Ceylon, Madeleine de Zilwa (pianoforte), and in Jamaica, Edna F. Foster Kingston (pianoforte). Twenty-nine exhibitions previously gained have been renewed—twenty-two for a further period of one year, six for a further period of two terms, and one for a further period of one term.

The Chairman, in moving the adoption of the Report, said:

> 'In rising to move that the Report and audited balance sheet be received and adopted, I feel that before we go into any business there is one feeling that must dominate at least every one in this room who has seen the morning papers, and that is the death of Dr. Charles Wood, Professor of Music at Cambridge University and a member of the Board, who, I understand, as I have only just seen the paper, died yesterday. One of our greatest musicians, one who for an even longer time than the secretary has assisted the Associated Board, and who, for the last two years, has been a most valuable member to the Board. I am sure that it is your wish that we should pass the usual resolution, that is, by standing up.'

There were also other deaths which he greatly regretted to have to report, those of two honorary local representatives—Dr. Taylor (Stafford) and Mr. Basil Murray (Perth, W.A.)—and of two examiners—Mr. Herbert Sharpe and Mr. Arthur Thompson.

Although there was but a slight increase in entries as compared with previous years, the position considered broadly and in view of the difficulties caused by the uncertain industrial situation was very satisfactory. Certainly it had been a year of progress. After the much lamented death of Mr. Waring Davis, most efficient and zealous in his capacity of resident secretary in Canada for the past sixteen years, the Dominion had for organization purposes been divided into four districts, each in charge of a resident secretary directly responsible to the Central Office in London, and it was hoped that further advances would result from this decentralization. Again, the examinations held for the first time in India, in 1925, by Dr. Charles Macpherson, organist of St. Paul's Cathedral, had been most successful, and gave promise of considerable expansion in the future.

In conclusion the Chairman expressed the Board's great regret at having had to accept the resignation of Brig.-Gen. Sir Alfred G. Balfour, also its heartfelt gratitude to the honorary local representatives, whose enthusiastic co-operation was so essential to the furtherance of its work.

Mr. Raymond W. Ffennell seconded the motion, and the report and balance sheet were unanimously adopted.

A vote of thanks to Mr. Ernest Mathews for presiding, proposed by Sir Hugh Allen and seconded by Dr. John B. McEwen, terminated the proceedings.

UNIVERSITY OF MANCHESTER

RESULTS OF MUS.B. EXAMINATIONS, JUNE, 1926

The following satisfied the examiners:

First year: Samuel Chapman; Alan Rawsthorne.
Second year: Teasdale Griffiths; W. Harold Wolfenden.
Third year: George Parker.
External examiner, Dr. H. A. Harding.

SOCIETY OF WOMEN MUSICIANS

This Society held its fourteenth annual Composers' Conference on June 25 and 26. The speaker on the Friday evening was Miss Rebecca Clarke, whose subject was 'Some American Aspects of Music.' Dealing first with the American attitude towards music generally, Miss Clarke spoke of the immense keenness to hear music and the desire to have the best of everything, which, coupled with a lack of traditional taste, have made the Americans invest 'press notices' with a fictitious value. She also considered the prevailing idea that the more they paid the more they must be getting, to be a natural consequence of the pre-occupation of a young people with winning material prosperity; and she regarded the fact that so many towns had full orchestras as an instance of money's power. An orchestra was an expensive affair to maintain: ergo, to maintain an orchestra was one way of proving a town's prosperity. As features of special interest to the Society which she was addressing, Miss Clarke spoke of the ubiquitous Music Clubs which are largely run by women, and of the Coolidge Chamber Music Festivals, at Pittsfield, and Mrs. Coolidge's recent transference of the Festival to Washington, making reference to her munificence in the erection of a concert-hall (Jordan Hall) and a permanent endowment.

Turning to American music itself, she said that the focus of national attention being directed so predominantly to practical matters, it was not surprising to find the country up till the present more or less barren as regards musical composition. Edward MacDowell had had a vision of a national music of his country, but neither he nor the more recent composers had succeeded in making this a reality. Kelly and Cadman had gone to Red Indian sources for inspiration, but so far there had been no development of a White American tradition. The strongest creative musical force in the country was to be found in the Jewish element. The Swiss Jew, Ernest Bloch, who had now settled in the States as an American citizen, was, in Miss Clarke's opinion, one of the most significant and powerful composers living.

Miss Edith Reed, Editor of Music and Youth, followed Miss Clarke's paper with a résumé of her own observations on American musical education, made during a recent stay of some months at Boston. She had been struck by the enthusiasm for music to which Miss Clarke had alluded, but had found ideas on musical education very superficial; and had been surprised at the dearth of choral music in schools, finding, however, a greater proportion of instrumental students than is usual in England. There was a great tendency to reinforce the aural appeal of music by introducing visible devices at musical entertainments—for instance, the use of colour as an adjunct to a performance.

At the second meeting of the Conference, three papers were read: the first on 'Song Writing,' by Mrs. Mary Sheldon, the second on 'The Study of Composition,' by Mrs. B. J. Dale, and the third on 'The Training of the Composer's Ear,' by Miss Dorothy Erhart.

London Concerts

EMORY GLEE CLUB

A band of young men from Dixie came over in June to make us aware—most of us for the first time—that there was a University at Atlanta, Ga. Emory University, established in 1914 by the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, consists of concrete, steel, and Georgia marble in the beautiful Druid Hills, six miles from the heart of Atlanta. It was on the campus of old Emory College, at Oxford, Ga. (named after the historic English University), that the Emory Glee Club was organized in 1917-18. Mr. George Baker is president, Dr. Malcolm H. Dewey is director—i.e., conductor—and both are young. The Glee Club sang at Æolian Hall on June 23, and at Queen's Hall on July 7.

English Universities may be more historic, but they have not travelled so far. The longest journey of their glee clubs, that one remembers, is from Cambridge to the Coliseum. If Cambridge, or even Oxford, were to send a choir to Georgia, it might have something to teach to Emory—the existence of a number of splendid glees in the English language, for instance. Of choral singing it would probably have nothing on Emory, for undergraduate, recently-fledged voices are the same all the English-speaking world over. They are apt to do without the owners' control, refusing to blend in a chord, or to go where they are pitched. The Emory singers were probably doing all that could be done in this undisciplined field. Where tone was wanted they were wanting. Where music moved their neat movement showed that they had practised well. Undoubtedly they are the best student glee club that has ever visited us from the Southern States.

One thing they gave us that was certainly their own. They live in the land of 'negro spirituals' and have a right to commandeer them, enslave them in any chains of harmony that they think fit, and drag them from the cotton fields to the café chantant. So long as the preacher's back is turned and nobody is warning us that the negro song is holy, we must admit the utility of these things in keeping a light choral entertainment alive. Both audiences, smiling and unashamed, enjoyed these sophistications immensely, and were evidently glad that they took up so much of the programmes. M.

B.B.C. CHAMBER CONCERTS

The B.B.C. has lately taken to giving select chamber concerts at Chenil Galleries, broadcasting whatever it thought fit for the public ear and reserving the rest for its little gathering of the intelligentsia. Thus Pergolesi's 'Stabat Mater' was the public portion at a recent concert, and some careless bright things by young moderns were kept in camera. It has been suggested that this was not giving the public what it wanted, nor, considering that the 'Stabat Mater' was not particularly well done, what it ought to have. But let us not complain of the B.B. Company. Will the new Post Office régime give us chamber concerts at all? At a later concert the broadcast music included Eric Fogg's setting of the 'Ode to a Nightingale,' for baritone (Mr. Dale Smith), harp (Miss Sidonie Goossens), and string quartet (the Virtuoso). This was unimpeachable music, but continents away from Keats. Happy Mr. Fogg, who can play at magic carpets with such faith! There followed three 'Aquarelles' by John Foulds, whose particular form of magic is the quarter-tone. By using one he expressed an idea that could not have been got across in any other way. But this was a mere accessory to all that we liked in these well-made pieces. M.

COVENT GARDEN OPERA

The 1926 season of the London Opera Syndicate at Covent Garden was a decided advance on the first venture in 1925. The German performances were at least as good, and the Italian were better. Until the last week or so, the public support was enthusiastic.

The house nearly always looked well filled. But in the present conditions of opera-giving, that does not prove financial success. We must wait for a statement from Mr. Blois and his backers, on that head. To ordinary music-lovers the prices must have seemed high, and even prohibitive. The difficulty lies in the fact that Covent Garden for all its spaciousness contains too few seats.

Nothing new was performed this season. Boïto's 'Mephistopheles' and Wolf-Ferrari's 'Jewels of the Madonna' were the least familiar operas. There were personal reasons for their revival: Chaliapin sang in the former and Madame Jeritza in the latter.

Chaliapin is the most gifted and most engrossing of modern singers. Genius is not too strong a word for him. He is now slightly past his prime. He husbands his voice more than formerly, but it remains an organ of unmatched expressiveness. He is also, of course, an actor rich in vitality and in imaginative invention. Londoners went, frankly, to see him and not to hear Boïto, who all too certainly has few friends here. It must be admitted that Covent Garden merely tolerated him for Chaliapin's sake. Opera-goers lacked the historical background which would have explained Boïto's weaknesses, and had not the patience to look into the work for its points of interest and beauty. Apart from Chaliapin the performance was conventional, and the prolonged intervals made the evening drag. But we shall all remember for long Chaliapin's various Satanic phases. O quanta qualia sunt illa Sabata! Witches' Sabbaths, Grecian Sabbaths—Satan imperious, Satan bestial, Satan cynical and witty.

Chaliapin also sang Basilio in Rossini's scintillating 'Barber.' It was a richly considered, abounding bit of grotesqueness.

Musically the justification of the season lay in the large attention given to Mozart, Wagner, and Verdi. Wagner is, of course, an infallible attraction. We had 'The Ring,' 'Tristan,' and 'Mastersingers,' under Bruno Walter, who has become an established favourite. He is invaluable in such opera-producing as Covent Garden knows, for, while he lacks the very finest instincts, he knows his job and abounds in vitality. Opera needs a man whom nothing can depress.

The Wagner performances were much like those of last year, save for a decided improvement in the tenors (Krauss, Laubenthal, and Melchior). Schorr, the 1925 Wotan, was not here. The burly Schipper took his place. The German men still spit and hiss over their consonants. Their women are better—indeed, are as a body the best women singers of the day. We heard a wonderful series—Lehmann, Leider, Olczewska, Willer, Kappel, Schumann.

Wagnerians were, with justice, enthusiastic over 'The Ring.' Are there more than half-a-dozen opera houses in the world where it is done as well?

Bruno Walter also conducted 'Figaro' and 'Don Giovanni,' the former in German, the latter in Italian, but with cuts. German is the last language on earth fit for 'Figaro,' but the singing of the women was compensation—an exquisite compensation. Richard Mayr was a comfortable middle-aged Figaro. A small part was found for Mr. Norman Allin (who also sang as Hunding). There were other English singers heard here and there in the season—a welcome sign. We hope the Syndicate may see fit to extend such admissions as time goes on, for an Opera that is wholly a matter of importation is nothing to be really proud of.

'Don Giovanni' had not been sung here so well for many a year. The women were Mesdames Lehmann, Leider, and Schumann. A newcomer, Mariano Stabile (who also sang Iago and Falstaff), was Giovanni. He was welcome, being a finely-equipped singer and a very useful and confident, if not supremely distinguished, actor. Aquistapace was Leporello. It was a feat on the part of the Germans to do so well in Italian. But then they are, no question about it, serious workers. The intervals were long, the scenery old, and the stage too persistently dark. Hence it was a rather sombre 'Don Giovanni.' But what good music!

'Othello' and 'Falstaff' were conducted by a newcomer, Vincenzo Bellezza. Early in the season he proved to be impetuous, and we hoped that as he got used to things further qualities would display themselves. To the last M. Bellezza was impetuous. He lashed out, he made things hum, and he obtained the most handsome testimonials from organs of the daily Press. For our part, we cannot see that all opera-conducting can be embraced by mere violent impetuosity.

'Othello' was magnificently sung. The tenor, Zenatello, lacked, it is true, the merit of seeming easefulness. His Othello was on the rack. But his singing (allowing that in a part written for a giant, he was not a giant) was that of a master-artist. Madame Lehmann's Desdemona was her masterpiece. It proved her one of the greatest of singers. She struck both the heroic and the lyric chords.

We also had a scene from 'Othello' (Act 4) on the night of Melba's farewell, and very beautifully was it sung. There are quarters in which Melba is regarded with positive antipathy, so consistently has she, all through her brilliant career, left the nobler side of music disregarded. There has indeed been something like effrontery in her implication that the sweet carolling of the Jewel Song, from 'Faust,' and 'Coming through the Rye' is the whole of music. But now that she is leaving the scene let us pay her whole-hearted tribute for having at least done one thing—this sweet carolling of hers—supremely well.

A coming Queen of Song is obviously Madame Jeritza. How long will she reign? She has a fine voice which she uses unequally, and she knows how to excite public interest in her person. The writer has to admit he fails to be enchanted, in the lack of any spontaneity in her art. She is intensely self-conscious, and to a point that preoccupation with gesture often seems to distract her thought from singing. She never creates the illusion of having sunk herself in her part. But at the moment the public is beguiled.

Towards the end of the season we had a few French operas. 'Thaïs' (with Jeritza) was one of these. Others were 'Manon' and Ravel's 'L'Heure Espagnole,' in which a new soprano, Fanny Heldy, sang. Her singing was a diversion from the fruity and heavily-covered voices of the German women. Not that she was ever hard—she is too good an artist for that. But she consistently sang with a very bright, forward production, such as would infallibly make for hardness in an unskilful artist. Madame Heldy was a charming creature, and it was a delight to watch her successful skating on the thin ice of her method. In 'Manon' the tenor was Ansseau. He remains a rather wooden actor, but what a superb singer!

Verdi's wondrous 'Falstaff'—with Stabile doing well as an Italian mask, not a Shakespearean Falstaff at all—was the last opera of the season. C.

RUSSIAN BALLET

M. Diaghilev is to be congratulated on having found at His Majesty's Theatre a more appropriate home for his Ballet than the music-hall at which it had previously alighted. With a theatre all to itself, and a proper orchestra (conducted by no one less than Eugène Goossens), it was almost like a return to the palmy days of the Russian Ballet.

Not quite; for the Company has lost many of its leading lights, and, what is much more important, it shows the signs of having lost touch with any serious national life. It is no longer Russian and it is not quite French. Its territory, the land it knows and interprets, is now the lounge of the expensive hotel. Hence the clever futility of its recent productions.

Still they are clever. When we feel most ruffled by Diaghilev's Monegascan developments, let us have the justice to admit that there is still no one else at all like him—no other public entertainer who employs brains like his in the confection of frivolity.

The first new ballet of the season, Stravinsky's 'Wedding,' was indeed a thoroughly Russian affair, but it is not one of Diaghilev's recent pieces. The music, for choir, four pianofortes, and percussion, flouts Western civilisation. Western civilisation will probably return the compliment, for our musical functions provide no frame to fit the work. The Russian Ballet itself could not provide a frame. Apart from the music, the show was uninteresting and lacking in invention. (Only Mr. H. G. Wells rushed in to say how good it was.) But the music is a first-class curiosity—one of the documents of our hapless age. And Stravinsky has a fist—a will—a way with him. That comes home to you when, alongside him, M. Diaghilev sets up a minor idol such as Satie or Auric.

Auric's 'Sailors' is the best of the new French ballets. It is animated, in a marionette-like way. His new 'Pastorale' was full of strained cleverness without a moment of ease or charm. It is a ballet of a kinematograph troupe who invade a quiet countryside on a summer day. This is perhaps symbolic of the ugliness of the modern world's encroachments. Certainly one took away an impression of restlessness and disgust.

Constant Lambert's 'Romeo and Juliet' was a simpler affair. This ballet of behind-the-scenes is a playful little manifestation of high spirits, and as such, agreeable. The young composer has talent. Another night was given to the ineptitudes of Erik Satie. Not even M. Diaghilev was clever enough to foist Satie on us on this side of the Channel, where M. Cocteau is a voice in the wilderness. Happily, the Diaghilev repertory remains, and such things as 'Petroushka,' 'The Three-Cornered Hat,' 'The Good-Humoured Ladies,' and 'La Boutique Fantasque' were the mainstay of a highly-popular season. C.

SOME PIANISTS OF THE MONTH

Miss Rene Cook selected a Chopin programme for her recital at Grotrian Hall—somehow forgetting to include a Chopin 'atmosphere.' Technique and facility of finger were there, but too many of the attacks were extraordinarily slovenly and meaningless—a great pity, as Miss Cook is undoubtedly talented. Her tone was not helped by the pianoforte being somewhat out of tune.

Mr. Jeffry Reynolds played among other things Mozart's Concerto in C minor with the London Chamber Orchestra, conducted by Anthony Bernard. This was an entirely delightful performance, which one appreciated all the more after the rather noisy works by John Ireland and Stravinsky which Mr. Reynolds had previously played. In the Mozart there was a grateful absence of that smashing tone which so many of our younger pianists use, and which too often, instead of imparting vigour, merely makes an almost unbearable noise.

Miss Fanny Davies gave a Bach-Schumann recital at Wigmore Hall, opening with Bach's Chorale Prelude, 'Wachet auf,' arranged by Leonard Borwick, and finishing with Schumann's 'Carnival.' Miss Davies played with her customary vigour and artistry, but there was some left-handed heaviness at times.

Mr. Solomon has reduced pianoforte-playing to a certain pellucid perfection in which there is no note of passion. At his recital at Wigmore Hall he chose a more or less stereotyped programme, beginning with Busoni's arrangement of Bach's Chorale, 'Wachet auf,' and a spirited and sparkling D major Sonata by Haydn. Then came Beethoven's Sonata, Op. 31, No. 3, and Schumann's 'Carnival,' which had character and brilliance if it lacked warmth and abandon.

Miss Ania Dorfmann, though brilliant, by the use of exaggerated rubato destroyed the flowing movement of the Brahms-Handel Variations and Schumann's 'Carnival'; but a Scarlatti Sonata and a Gavotte by Arne were admirably rhythmical and full of charm.

At his recital at Grotrian Hall, Mr. Willibald Richter beautifully accompanied some new songs of his own, which displayed sincerity of expression and real musicianship. They were ably sung by Miss Lily Zachner.

Mr. Backer-Gröndahl's playing at Wigmore Hall proved to be of the robust if not 'cast-iron' order.

Miss Jessie Hall has a decided personality, and a keen sense of rhythm and tone-colour which enable her to give spirit and character to whatever she plays. Her programme at Æolian Hall was no light one. Beginning with Bach's French Suite in E, she went on to Schumann's Etudes Symphoniques, the 'Waldstein' Sonata, Prelude, Fugue, and Variation by Franck-Bauer, and ended with Albeniz.

Josef Hofmann is a great master of his craft, possessing that rare power of filling his audience with new life and vigour. He has appeared twice recently—the first time in a violin and pianoforte recital with Madame Lea Luboschutz, also a fine artist, in which they played three Sonatas—Grieg in F, César Franck in A, and the 'Kreutzer' of Beethoven—all old friends whom one was delighted to hear again. The fine style and perfect ensemble were memorable. At his own recital he made a great opening with the rarely-heard Schumann Sonata in F minor.

Perhaps the most notable feature of Miss Youra Guller's recital at Æolian Hall was her exceptionally pure, delicate, and restrained playing of Scarlatti, Couperin, and Dandrieu.

Miss Everal de Jersey has a very sensitive touch and the gift of creating atmosphere in no small degree. A large part of her programme at Grotrian Hall consisted of Medtner, Scriabin, Dohnànyi, and César Franck, who was represented by the Prelude, Aria, and Finale. The last-named seemed a little beyond her powers at present, but in the smaller things—particularly the eight Scriabin Preludes from Op. 11—she showed a real appreciation of tone-colour.

Mr. Orloff, at an earlier recital at Wigmore Hall, played a Fantaisie quasi Sonata by Liszt (a work composed after a reading of Dante), which is a turgid stream of blatant banality. It is extraordinary how many patrons of pianoforte recitals appear to love agility and hard hitting whether the result be music or no. This work was received with rapturous applause by a large proportion of Mr. Orloff's audience.

D'A.

STUDENTS IN OPERA

Both the Royal Academy and the Royal College invited us to operatic performances in the week ended July 17, and in each case we were unusually interested.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

The Academy students occupied the New Scala Theatre for the whole week, with three different bills, all of which Mr. Julius Harrison conducted. The students are fortunate in his operatic leadership, for Mr. Harrison possesses a fund of zest, and also has had much practical experience in conducting opera.

'Hänsel and Gretel' was sung three times with varying casts. We speak here of the opening night, July 12. The orchestra was rather small for Humperdinck's Wagnerian scoring, but then the students' voices were naturally rather small too. The Children were Miss May Turtle and Miss Lesley Duff. They must be given credit for acting with ease and grace, and at least for not forcing their young voices. In the more lightly accompanied passages we heard sweet tone but not enough of the words. The Mother (Miss Grace Reynolds), too, struck us as rather intimidated by the large scene. The Witch (Miss Dorothy Astra) fell to the temptation of forcing. Excellent was the performance of the Father by Mr. Bruce Anderson. Other parts were sung by Miss Valetta Jacopi and Miss Dorothy Hall. The orchestral playing was decidedly above the level of the singing. Details both in strings and wind proved that sensitive and skilled young artists were there.

The programme of the second night opened with the Masque, 'Venus and Adonis,' of Blow—a stately and beautiful old work, reminding us of Purcell, but without Purcell's melody. A large part was properly given here to a display of dancing, and so neat and skilful was it that one foresaw the day when we shall no longer depend on Muscovy for our ballet-dancers. Miss Joan Morris, as Cupid, both danced and sang. The singing of the Venus (Miss Freda Rich) must be reproached for shallow and unsteady tone. The Adonis, Mr. Arthur Fear, had a good voice insufficiently nuanced. Mr. Harrison had effectively re-scored Blow's music.

The Masque was followed by a piece of a novel description—a one-Act opera, 'Dross,' by Mr. Paul Corder, which was not sung but mutely mimed. The scenario is a French 18th-century peasant drama. An elderly pair, in the last stage of destitution, proudly refuse the help of a daughter who has gone to the bad. The money she surreptitiously leaves in their cottage is stolen by the brutal bailiff, but he enjoys its possession only a moment, for he is assassinated by his servants. Here we see the influence of the kinematographic art making itself felt in the academic world. The six performers showed a decided talent for the films, but on this stage they were made to drag out the expression of their emotions at unendurable length. The kinematographic suggestion was heightened by the music, which indulged in sentimental agitation by stereotyped means.

The evening ended with a lively success—Puccini's 'Gianni Schicchi,' the whole performance of which redounded to the credit of the R.A.M. Certainly it was a pity that some one with a notion of singable and colloquial English had not been allowed to revise the stilted translation of Forzano's clever libretto. This little work is incontestably Puccini's masterpiece. Schicchi was Mr. Bruce Anderson, a young baritone for whom we make bold to prophesy a smiling future. He has decided gifts. After the embarrassment of nerve-ridden performers (so natural at students' entertainments), it was a relief to hear one so self-assured—and justifiably self-assured. Not only had he a voice: he also had it so far in control that he articulated most distinctly. And he acted a comic part as though he enjoyed it. Lauretta (Miss Jean Kemp) sang prettily. The Rinuccio (Mr. Murray Brown) had a too dry light-tenor voice. The Notary (Mr. Maurice Webbe) sang well, if a trifle stiffly. The ensemble was excellent, and the audience was well entertained.

Verdi's 'Falstaff,' on the sixth night of the strenuous week, was practically a repetition of the Academy's production last year. It was a delightful success, what with the individual talents (all the principal parts were really adequately played, a certain tentativeness being observable only in some of the minor ones) and the well-drilled ensemble. In some ways this English production captivated its audience more surely than did the 'grand' one at Covent Garden.

Mr. Arthur Fear is to be heartily congratulated on his Falstaff. His performance had a remarkable easefulness and ripeness. We thought some of his lower notes might have been more loosely produced. The better quality of his upper range made the impression that the music lay rather low for him. Mr. Roy Henderson was Ford. This young singer has gained golden opinions in the last year or so, and his Ford was a success—elegant, articulate, and assured. All the same, the sound of certain words here and there indicated that he does not as yet always sing with an ideal freedom of the jaw muscles. Mr. Frederick Griffiths and Mr. Ronald Cliff were excellent as Bardolph and Pistol. Mr. Murray Brown's singing was a trifle immature and dry for Fenton.

Delightful were the women. The music asks for no great voice, but for several faultlessly pretty ones. Perhaps Mistress Ford (Miss Jessie Hewson) was a shade too reserved, but her quality was perfectly musical. Miss Leonore Weeple was Mistress Page. Miss Lesley Duff (Anne Ford) gave us some delicious girlish singing, exactly just and clear. She seemed much more at home here than in 'Hänsel and Gretel.' Miss Ethel Barker's Quickly could not easily have been bettered.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC

'Parsifal,' at the Royal College, was divided between two evenings—a capital plan, particularly appreciated in July weather. The first performance was on July 14 and 15. Mr. Aveling's translation was used.

The choice of 'Parsifal' was courageous to the point of audacity, and few (even though knowing that the students had been at work on it for nearly a year) can have gone expecting anything like so complete an achievement. Everything was surprising—and less, perhaps, the ability of the orchestra, which Mr. H. Grunebaum conducted, than that of the singers, who were naturally not beyond criticism, but did, every one of them, put up a very serious and defensible representation. (Somehow we usually expect instrumental students to be on a higher plane than the vocalists.)

As for the staging, it was in some respects far better than we get in full-fledged performances. Covent Garden has certainly never seen the Grail Scene or the opening of Act 3 so beautifully lighted. A defect of the otherwise attractive landscape in Act 1 was the too military alignment of the fir forest. The striped background of the apse in the second scene was hardly a success. It suggested an awning. And we were not sure about the illuminated flower-bed in Act 2. The mind went back to Wembley.

We were seriously impressed by the singers' grip on their formidable parts. The music was thoroughly well known, and one had not the unhappy feeling, common at students' operatic performances, that the singers were straining their interpretative faculties before they had laid a foundation of good vocal technique. Not that anyone was perfect. Gurnemanz (Mr. John Andrews) acted with nobility and yet not pompously. He sang the big things best. A certain stiffness was betrayed by the murkiness and indistinct diction of some of his more casual utterances. Parsifal (Mr. Trefor Jones) was extraordinarily good in Acts 1 and 2, where he succeeded in making the impression of eager, simple youth. In Act 3 he wanted a few more inches for dignity's sake. He sang English clearly, with a Welsh accent. This young man will certainly have a successful career, for no one can resist such a good voice used so spontaneously and buoyantly. His tone-colour was hardly enough varied for Parsifal. After a time we felt we knew how he was going to sing. Perhaps he could manage to reflect more clearly the changes of mood. It was an admirable accomplishment, anyhow, to do as he did in Act 2.

Kundry was a Canadian soprano, Miss Odette de Foras, who had an uncommon voice and general ability. If she develops the full-throated (which means the fully open throated) style she may well become a great singer. Mr. Leyland-White's Amfortas struck us favourably. It was truly sung, and with measured pathos. With experience, he will intensify the great Lament in the Grail Scene. Neither he nor the Klingsor (Mr. Charles Draper) forced—which is the expected fault when young singers tackle tremendous Wagnerian parts. The treble voices in the Grail Scene had moments of insecurity. The men were vigorous. There was charming quality in the Flower Maidens' chorus.

It was, then, a notably successful undertaking, but we hope the R.C.M. opera classes will now put aside Wagner for a little. Let them give us a Handel opera! That tropical chromaticism of 'Parsifal' was made to turn the heads of the young. Fancy being drenched in it for a year! The experience must have left a lifelong impression on some of the 1925-26 students. Now for an antidote.

C.

Competition Festival Record

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF COMPETITIVE CHOIRS ANNUAL CONFERENCE.

The first annual Conference promoted by this Association was held at the 'White Swan' Hotel, Halifax, on Saturday, June 19, the president, Mr. John E. Turner, of Halifax, being in the chair. The delegates, numbering over seventy and including representatives from various musical festivals, received a cordial welcome to Halifax by Mr. F. W. Gelder, chairman of the Halifax Musical Festival committee.

The agenda, comprising suggestions to Festival authorities, elicited many opinions of a useful character, and at the close of the Conference it was agreed that the occasion had proved both successful and helpful.

The first item that came up for discussion was a suggestion that the fact of choirs singing with or without copies should not be taken into consideration by the adjudicator when making his award. It was stated that some judges declared that choirs should not sing without music in front of them, and furthermore Prof. Bantock was quoted as stating that a choir singing from music reminded him of a parson reading his sermon. Others took opposite views—e.g., that singing without copies savoured of 'swank.' Several representatives declared that it would be a mistake to demand that choirs should conform to one way or the other, but nevertheless voiced the opinion that a choir sang better without copies than with them. A case was cited of a judge who insisted on the importance of singing without copies, but who himself conducted from the score a massed performance of choirs which had been singing his own composition. Another representative held that the duties of a judge were to adjudicate by the ear and not by the eye. Mr. A. T. Akeroyd, secretary of the Wharfedale Musical Festival, and chairman of the North Eastern Area Council of the British Federation of Musical Competition Festivals, thoroughly agreed with judges who insisted on singing without copies in the case of soloists, but certainly not in the case of choirs. He hoped the Conference would pass a resolution and send it to the British Federation of Musical Competition Festivals, pointing out that this matter did not come within a judge's jurisdiction. Such fads were becoming more or less a nuisance to choirs. The duties of a judge were confined to giving his impressions of the musical effect. Whether this effect was gained with or without copies did not matter. Mrs. Bourne, conductor of the Barrow Madrigal Society, opposed any rule being made on the subject, and went on to remark that there were such things as nerves, and that singers most often to be trusted at practice were frequently the first to go to bits on the platform.

The Resolution was ultimately agreed upon, as also was the following: 'That festival accompanists should first give the full chord, and then the chord in arpeggio form.'

The next three items all suffered rejection. For purposes of record they are subjoined: (1) 'Where only one point divides the last finalist from the first non-finalist, both choirs should go through to the final'; (2) 'Where there is more than one judge in any one class, they should be apart from each other, and give their adjudications separately, the choir with the largest aggregate being adjudged the winner'; (3) 'That a second ballot be taken for order of singing in the finals.' The arguments against the overcrowding of festival programmes very largely defeated No. 1, and it was stated to be almost impossible to adopt No. 2, particularly at the larger festivals. Concerning No. 3, Mr. Akeroyd maintained that it was a mistaken idea that singing first was a hardship or disadvantage.

A further proposal to the effect that judges' marking-sheets should contain detailed marks in addition to the total and 'remarks,' was made by Mr. Fletcher Sykes, conductor of the Huddersfield Vocal Union, who claimed that marks should verify an award. He submitted that the only safe and satisfactory scheme was that of detailed marking, which was the method adopted by examiners. He pointed out, however, that a judge had stated that detailed marking did not always find the best choir, nor did it always agree with the adjudicators' mental impressions. Several years ago the chief desiderata in choral competitions were intonation and quality, but just now interpretation and general effect came before everything else. Interpretation could embody anything. He advocated a return to the fundamentals of choir-training, which placed intonation first. In modern music the most difficult problem was how to maintain the pitch. Mr. Sykes went on to suggest that musical competitions might be made to pay by inducing those who composed pieces for competitions to attend and sing in public the works they had written. He pleaded for a revision of the allocation of values, and urged that adjudicators should be told quietly but emphatically exactly the scope of their duties and privileges. Mr. Akeroyd said this was one of the most important items on the agenda, and agreed that there was a very marked tendency on the part of judges for a bulk result. He knew judges who would like to give 'fifty-fifty' for technique and artistry. To dismiss choirs with such an award showed a lack of appreciation of their work. He hoped that the Association would send the result of its findings on this question to every festival in the country. Adjudicators who never put a mark on their sheets were not worthy of their job. Mr. Marriott, of the Bradford Philharmonic Society, referring to a performance of his choir at a festival, said that the judge's remarks were only, 'Travels along nicely'—for which information his Society had to pay a shilling! Eventually it was agreed to instruct the executive of the Association to draw up a more satisfactory sheet, and submit it to the annual meeting to be held in October next.

Other suggestions, viz., 'That festivals should state the definite time of commencement of each class,' and 'That shorthand writers accompany the judges to obtain fuller remarks,' were agreed upon almost without discussion.

On a question of choirs not keeping their appointments as competitors, the chairman urged on those who decided to drop out to have at least the courtesy to inform the authorities.

A suggestion made by Colne Orpheus Glee Union to increase prize money, which, in view of the expenses, was not at present adequate, met with opposition from many quarters. A Bacup representative pointed out that unless a festival had a good list of patrons it was impossible to make it pay, and added that while four years ago their festival showed a profit of 2*s*. 9½*d*., two years ago they lost £25, simply through increasing the prize-money. A delegate contended that if the resolution were carried choirs would be departing from the admirable principles laid down for competitive festivals.

Other recommendations were 'That only two pieces be chosen in any one choral competition, and that both be sung by all competitors at the preliminary test'; also 'That it is desirable for festivals to publish a complete list of judges' remarks and detailed marks after each festival.' These were not adopted. The Conference recommended that one judge only is desirable in any one choral class.

Thanks to the chairman were extended by representatives from Bacup and Grutland, Mr. Turner suitably responding.

BRITISH FEDERATION OF MUSICAL COMPETITION FESTIVALS.

SUMMER CONFERENCE IN LONDON, JUNE 26

It was a happy thought to hold the first summer meeting of the Federation in the House of Lords at Westminster. Interest in the useful work which the Federation is doing, and the novelty of the surroundings combined to fill the stately Moses Room of the Upper House comfortably at the forenoon session, and to crowd it in the afternoon.

Sir Henry Hadow presided, and was supported by the Vice-Chairman, Mr. F. H. Bisset; the Hon. Treasurer, Mr. T. Driffield Hawkin; the General-Secretary, Mr. H. Fairfax Jones; and the members of the Central Board.

A Report submitted by the Central Board showed that there were affiliated to the Federation a hundred and ninety-three Festivals, covering England, Scotland, Northern Ireland, the Irish Free State, Canada, South Africa, India, and Australasia. The absence of Wales from the list is noteworthy. The discussion of the Report raised several points of interest. A query as to whether the Federation had a definite policy in dealing with applications from festivals for affiliation drew from the chair the statement that the Federation did not interfere in any way with the autonomy of festivals, that every application was examined and dealt with on its merits, that the giving of money prizes was no hindrance to affiliation, but was a disqualification from eligibility for a grant from the Carnegie Trust Funds.

Dr. Markham Lee, London, emphasised the desirability of securing the affiliation of competitions run by Women's Rural Institutes. Subsequent discussion indicated that the general and desirable trend was for such competitions to be absorbed by the district festivals organizing special classes for women's rural institute competitors. One advantage was that the better-equipped women's institutes were encouraged to venture out of their confined classes into the open classes.

The Rev. C. J. Beresford, People's Palace, introduced a discussion on 'How the Competitive Festival Movement may be of greater service to Church and Chapel Choirs.' He gave it as his personal experience, in visiting a great many parishes as a preacher, that church choirs which had had competitive festival experience were vastly better than those which had not. Dealing with the objection urged by church organists that their choirs had no time to practise festival work, he urged that the intensive study of the small amount of music required for festival purposes reacted on the choir generally, and rendered unnecessary much of the routine work which absorbed most of the time. Mr. Beresford alluded to the objection sometimes made to using sacred music in competition. This was an idea he himself did not share, but where it existed it could be overcome by the substitution of secular music. His own experience was that the qualities which should be consecrated to the music of the Church were best acquired by the study and performance of other kinds of music. The substitution, sometimes recommended, of a Church Choir Festival of combined, in place of competitive, singing seemed to him to lack the very stimulus (that of competition) which created the fine singing characteristic of competition festival choirs. In conclusion, Mr. Beresford referred, without committing himself to any personal opinion, to a suggestion that church choirs might be more readily induced to compete if certificates of proficiency were substituted for placings in order of merit.

Mr. Sydney H. Nicholson, Westminster Abbey, expressed the view that more might be made of church choirs in competitive festival work if the idea of 'giving a performance' could be eliminated, and it was arranged that they should sing with organ accompaniment in the environment to which they were accustomed. Why not hold the competitions in church? he asked. If it be not wrong to sing sacred music in competition, it could not be wrong to compete in a sacred place. He agreed with Mr. Beresford as to the value of secular music to church choirs. People who sang only sacred music nearly always sang it in a sloppy way. Church choirs should be given secular music to sing, and the singing should be judged by the same standards as were applied to secular choirs—as either good singing or bad, instead of as 'not bad for a church choir.' Mr. Nicholson thought that insufficient distinction was apt to be made in competition work between what was appropriate to rural church choirs and what was suitable for urban church classes. Personally, he strongly advocated services for united church choirs in association with competitive work.

Sir Richard Terry, London, said that the practical difficulty was to get church choirs to enter, but he had no constructive suggestions to offer. He found much greater readiness to compete and a finer feeling of sportsmanship in country choirs than in town choirs. The difficulty was neither religious nor ethical. It was simply that in towns the church choirs were too much wrapped up in their own little circles. It was the choirs who competed regularly that gave the best service in the church.

Dr. Eaglefield-Hull, London, said the root of the trouble lay largely with the attitude of the clergy and churchwardens. A choirmaster who had to go back and tell his vicar or wardens that he had been placed, say, third, or perhaps not at all, had often to face a loss of professional prestige.

Dr. James Lyon, Wallasey, said that in his district the entries of church choirs had been greatly stimulated by giving them as test-pieces an anthem suitable for the season, and a secular piece. The anthem they used in church about the time of the Festival, and the secular piece came in useful for the choir concerts.

Mr. William Ryall, Cleethorpes, suggested that if Festivals would organize a Festival Sunday, get the combined church and chapel choirs to unite, and ask the chief adjudicator to conduct the services, it would help to achieve the object they were aiming at.

Mr. F. H. Bisset, Glasgow, Vice-Chairman of the Federation, introduced the subject of 'Giving the young adjudicator an opportunity.' Unless, he said, Festivals took steps to increase the supply of experienced adjudicators, they would bring the whole movement to an ultimate position of stalemate. A recent article in the Music Teacher pointed out that of three hundred adjudicators listed in the Federation Year-Book, a dozen had between them no fewer than two hundred engagements in the year. Even if this were a case of the survival of the fittest, that did not help very far. Emerson's dictum that if a man made the finest thing of its kind, were it only a mouse-trap, the world would find its way to his door, though he should live in the midst of an impenetrable forest, might be true, but probably wasn't—unless he advertised. But in its application to adjudicators, the difficulty was that not only the adjudicator, but his children, and his children's children, would be dead before his virtues were discovered. As a matter of self-interest alone the Festivals must go out and experiment with and discover new adjudicators. Some of the larger Festivals were doing this systematically. In what might be called the two-adjudicator size of Festival the sound idea was to combine continuity with variety of experience by retaining one man and changing the other each year, in this way giving each satisfactory adjudicator a two-years' period. The rural type of Festival was specially valuable for the trying out of new men, as, without making invidious comparisons, it would probably be conceded that audiences and competitors were, as a whole, less sophisticated and critical, and therefore less trying to the nerves of a newcomer than the urban type of Festival. The less experienced adjudicator might be expected to work on a low scale of fees during his apprenticeship, so to speak, and could without undue extravagance be bracketed with, and learn from, one of the 'old hands.' The necessity for widening the field of choice was becoming urgent with the great expansion of the movement, and, just as every Festival, through its autonomy and special circumstances, had the opportunity of contributing its share of research or experiment, in the matter of new classes, &c., towards the general enrichment of the movement, so every Festival should make it a point of honour to experiment in the matter of younger and less-experienced adjudicators. It had been arranged to discuss at the Chester Conference, in October, what were the qualities required to make a successful adjudicator (how many adjudicators realised that their first duty was to be articulate?), but, as most Festivals fixed up their adjudicators during the summer months, he would like to press the matter under discussion upon the attention of Festivals as one of immediate importance.

Mr. W. R. Anderson, London, as the writer of the article in the Music Teacher referred to by Mr. Bisset, renewed his plea for the keeping at Festival headquarters of a central register of adjudicators, with records of their experience, and confidential reports on their work. He knew personally of a number of men of excellent qualifications, men of character and individuality, who were not getting an adequate opportunity of having their qualities tested and made known.

Sir Richard Terry, London, vehemently opposed the suggestion of a central register, and condemned—lock, stock, and barrel—anything savouring of codification, officialdom, ring, combine, label, class, or organization, all of which would be fatal to the artistic success of the movement.

From the subsequent discussion it appeared that a considerable number of inquiries were received at Festival headquarters as to the suitability of particular adjudicators, and that the practice in replying in such cases was simply to pass on any relevant information received from other Festivals. Where Festivals asked for definite suggestions as to suitable adjudicators, the practice was to send a substantial list of names of adjudicators who had acted at similar festivals and about whom reports had been reasonably satisfactory.

Mr. Bisset, replying on the discussion, said that the views of Sir Richard Terry as an incorrigible individualist must not be taken too seriously, but he agreed with him that the keeping of a kind of private register or 'crimes' book at headquarters was inadvisable. Mr. Anderson, he thought, over-estimated the difficulty of getting reliable information under existing conditions. A reference to the 'Year-Book,' followed up by a private chit to one or two festival secretaries, would give most of the information desired.

On the resumption of the Conference, after lunch, Sir Henry Hadow, in a brief but characteristic address, referred to the almost monotonously regular course of progress and success of the Federation. The work of fertilising the whole of the country with the idea of and delight in good music was spreading wider and wider, and was proceeding on lines which made for increasing strength, vigour, and prosperity. The Festivals had done a good deal of valuable and useful service in raising the whole tone of standard and taste in music in this country. After piquant reference to the people who held the very word 'competition' in abhorrence, Sir Henry went on to refer whimsically to friends of the movement who were troubled and perplexed by occasional adverse criticism of it, and proceeded to comfort them with the familiar dictum that in this country liability to criticism was a mark of a successful institution. He made the interesting announcement that at future Conferences, beginning with Chester, opportunity would be provided for adjudicators and Festival secretaries to meet informally round a table and discuss matters of common interest. He concluded with a reference to the financial position of the Federation, pointing out that the Carnegie Trust grant, like the ass's skin in Balzac's fantastic tale, was rapidly diminishing. The hon. treasurer, Mr. T. Driffield Hawkin, said that the work of the Federation could only be carried on efficiently under these circumstances by a large accession to the number of individual members, and made a strong appeal for additional nominations.

Mr. Sydney H. Nicholson, Westminster, spoke on 'Boy Scouts and the Festival Movement.' The Boy Scouts, he said, were musically the hope of the future. First, because practically all boys could sing. Boys' voices were more musical than those of girls at the same age. The girls' voices became powerful and useful choral pieces of apparatus later, but the boy had the power of beautiful singing while quite young. Second, the boys of to-day were the men of to-morrow, and everybody knew that in choirs men were the chief difficulty. He was prepared to maintain anywhere and against anybody that the men who were good choristers were the men who had sung as boys. Third, no people who were indisciplined by nature could possibly be good members of choirs. Most choirs suffered not so much from lack of musical capacity or good voices as from lack of discipline and sense of responsibility. The same qualities were required in a good chorister as in a good scout—the team spirit, the sporting spirit which could take a beating, the spirit of adventure which loved to do what it had never done before, the spirit that did things without expectation of reward. The difficulties to be faced were that in the Scout movement music was not taken very seriously, and there was a lack of appreciation of the value of the artistic side of the boy's nature. So much attention was paid to the physical side that the other was apt to be forgotten. But in the last three or four years music had been taken more seriously by the Scouts, and in London they had been successful in organizing competitions on quite a considerable scale and on absolutely sound lines. Mr. Nicholson went on to plead for Boy Scout classes in all Festivals, and gave some hints as to choice of music for competition.

The difficulties which were disclosed in the discussion which followed were the breaking of the boys' voices, the lack of interest and of musical knowledge among scoutmasters, the shortage of trainers, and in some cases the alleged lack of time for singing practice. Mr. Bisset supported Mr. Nicholson's plea for closer association between the Scout movement and the Festival movement, but commented on the fact that Mr. Nicholson had asserted rather challengingly and indeed submitted as one of his strongest arguments that all good male choristers had sung as boys. It followed that in Scotland, where boys as choristers were the exception, not the rule, there were few good male choristers; it also followed that a world-famous choir hailing from Glasgow had few good male choristers. So sweeping an assertion simply refused to stand up against the facts as they knew them. But, his protest made, he suggested a way of interesting the Scout authorities. Special classes for folk- or country-dancing made an immediate appeal to the Scouts and scoutmasters. Get them in on these, and the battle would be won, since, like everybody else, once into the Festival spirit they are yours, and you can proceed to interest them in the singing classes as well.

Mr. Millar Craig, of the B.B.C., spoke on 'How the British Breadcasting Company can co-operate with the Festivals,' and said there were three immediate ways in which the B.B.C. might offer to assist: (1.) It might, whenever possible, broadcast from its stations announcements of forthcoming Festivals and their special features; (2.) It might later on, if desired, broadcast something in the nature of a general appeal for financial assistance when the Carnegie Trust grant ceased; and (3.) It might spread interest in the movement by broadcasting, whenever possible and when desired, the most interesting parts of Festivals. Mr. Millar Craig concluded by giving an interesting account of some of the methods used, and some of the difficulties inherent, in arranging for broadcasting from a public place—technical difficulties, difficulties as to wayleave, rent, copyright, entertainment tax, &c.

After a short discussion, the Conference closed, and the large company adjourned to the terrace, where tea was served, and a social hour spent in the pleasantest of surroundings and the choicest of weather.

It was announced during the day that the annual general meeting and autumn Conference of the Federation would be held at Chester, on October 1, 2, and 3. An attractive programme has been arranged, particulars of which can be had on application to the Federation Offices, 3, Central Buildings, Westminster, S.W.1.

S. B. N.

ENGLAND AND WALES

BRIGHTON.—The second competitive Festival, postponed owing to the strike, was held on July 13-17, and seemed to suffer very little from being held out of season. There were over a hundred classes. Concerted playing was more prominent than concerted singing, and brass band contests were the most flourishing part of the Festival. The chief choral awards went to Portsmouth Excelsior Temperance Choral Society, Henfield Musical Society, Diocesan Training College (ladies' choir), and Madame Dorothy Kennard's Male-Voice Choir.

CLEETHORPES.—This Festival inevitably suffered from the coal strike and the resultant unemployment. There was, however, a record entry, and some fine work was done, especially in the pianoforte solo and choral classes. The singing of the winners in the open male-voice choir class—Scunthorpe—well deserved the term 'magnificent' applied to it by the adjudicators. To Scunthorpe went also the chief mixed-voice event, the Musical Society of that town getting home three marks ahead of the Scunthorpe Choral Society. Scunthorpe is evidently a nest of singing birds! The British Federation of Music Industries Cup for the best individual performance of the Festival went to Mr. F. W. Backhouse, of Grimsby, a young baritone of exceptional promise. The judges were Messrs. T. F. Dunhill, Julius Harrison, and Harvey Grace.

LEAMINGTON.—The Leamington and County Festival was held on June 12, 17, 18, and 19. Village choirs were heard on the first day. The singing as a whole showed remarkable improvement, though a few choirs turned up who found it impossible to keep in tune for more than a bar. The choice of test-pieces still leaves much to be desired. The Kinwarton and Great Alne Women's Institute Choir was first in this class, and carried off the Lady Bird Challenge Trophy. Hall Green Wesleyan Choir was the winner in the class for church and chapel choirs, and Allesley Church Choir won in the competition for village church and chapel choirs. The last day was given over chiefly to choral singing. The female-voice choirs had Gibbons's 'Silver Swan' and Brahms's 'The Miller's Daughter'; in the class for mixed voices Bateson's 'Hark, hark ye not' and Rhodes's 'Orpheus with his lute' were the test-pieces. Mr. E. Dunton's Willenhall Choir won the highest marks, though there was not a real failure anywhere. G. W.

PEOPLE'S PALACE, EAST LONDON.—This Festival, postponed from May, was carried through with complete success on various days in the middle of June. Happily, very few entrants were prevented from appearing by the change of date, and the total entries again showed an increase over those for last year. In every department there was evidence of hearty and wholesome endeavour, and a complete absence of 'point-making.' Women's meetings provided some of the best interest, several of the members being over eighty. Girls' Clubs also came up well, and half-a-dozen church choirs in one class showed a fine ardour. Vocal quartets and trios were strong, and those choirs attempting the sight-singing tests received well-deserved praise, both for their pluck and the quality of their work. The combined singing of pieces not set for competition is always a capital feature of the final concert, and the performance, on June 19, under Mr. Adrian Boult, of Purcell's 'Soul of the World' and the choruses of Stanford's 'Songs of the Sea' formed a fitting culminating point of a Festival which has a valuable influence throughout East London both musically and socially. The first-prize winners in some of the principal classes were as follows: Advanced Choral Societies, Stepney Orpheus Choir (Rev. C. J. Beresford). Intermediate Choral Societies, All Hallows Fellowship, East India Docks (Mr. E. G. Beck). Madrigal Singing, Stepney Orpheus. Ladies' Choirs, advanced, Gill Street Girls' Club (Mr. T. H. Burros). Church Choirs, men and boys, St. Stephen's, Bow (Mr. W. E. Pepper). Church Choirs, mixed voices, Approach Road Wesleyan (Mr. A. Morgan).

At IPSWICH the Suffolk Competitions were held, after postponement, on June 18 and 19, and in spite of the consequent loss of competitors last year's figures were exceeded. The choral classes, however, were poorly supported. On June 19 there were Festivals at FOLKESTONE held by the Co-operative Societies of Kent; LEICESTER, held by the Leicestershire and Rutland Women's Institutes; and GOMERSAL, where thirteen choirs and glee unions came to a competition organized by the Gomersal Working Men's Club. The four days' Worcestershire Festival, disorganized by the strike, was reduced to its children's competitions, and was held at MALVERN on June 21. The folk-song and folk-dance section of the PONTEFRACT Festival was held with great success on June 24, twenty-eight classes competing. The main Festival was held in March. A countryside Festival organized by the Gloucestershire Rural Community Council was held at the Shire Hall, GLOUCESTER, on July 2 and 3, and drew nearly a thousand competitors. The National Temperance Fête was held at the CRYSTAL PALACE on July 3, and brought choirs from far and wide. Reading Temperance Choral Society was first in the chief contest.

The entry list for the National Eisteddfod at Swansea on August 2-7 is exceptionally large. Seven choirs have entered for the chief mixed-voice competition, eleven for the second; seventeen for the chief male-voice competition, five for the second; eighteen in the female-voice class; and over sixty juvenile choirs will compete. There are more solo singers than usual, and thirty-two brass bands have entered.

SCOTLAND

Border Counties Festival.—The Border Counties Festival, postponed from May on account of the strike, was held at Hawick and Galashiels, and attracted large audiences. There were 470 entries, representing over 3,000 competitors. As usual at this Festival, the best work was done in the school classes. Adjudicators, Mr. George Dodds (Newcastle) and Mr. Percy A. Scholes (London). During the run of the Festival Mr. Dodds gave a lecture on 'Some Aspects of Modern Song,' and led a demonstration of community singing. Mr. Scholes demonstrated the musical value of the player-piano. Principal results: Women's, Men's, and Mixed Choirs: Hudson Scott's Choirs, Carlisle. Junior Choirs: Trinity School Former Pupils' Choir, Hawick. School Choirs: Galashiels Academy; Dun's Public School; Glendinning Terrace School, Galashiels; Heiton Public School. Country Dancing: Kelso Public School; Dun's Public School; Galashiels Burgh Public School. Solo Singing—General class, gold medal: Mr. Lewis Anderson, Galashiels. Solo Singing—Scots song, gold medal: Miss Mary S. Laidlow, Hawick.

Wick.—The third Wick (Caithness-shire) Musical Festival extended over three days, had 278 entries, representing 1,500 competitors, and attracted large audiences. This must be the farthest outpost of the competitive festival movement in the United Kingdom, being held only a few miles from the extreme northern coast of Scotland. Its nearest neighbour is the Northern Counties Festival, at Inverness, a six hours' railway journey south. To find in so isolated a district so good an all-round level of performance was gratifying indeed, and a high testimonial to the educative value of the two previous Festivals, and the quality of some of the teaching in the district. Specially interesting features were the readiness with which the audiences responded when invited to join in communal singing, the promising character of the material in the Women's Rural Institute Choirs, and the monopoly by boys of the Junior Violin classes. The adjudicators were Mr. Harvey Grace (London) and Mr. F. H. Bisset (Glasgow). Principal results: Mixed Choirs—Wick Mixed-Voice Choir; Men's Choirs—Wick Male-Voice Choir; Women's Choirs—Wick High School; W. R. I. Choirs—Keiss Rural Institute; Church Choirs (Open)—Wick Parish Church; (Country)—Halkirk Parish Church; Junior Choirs—Wick Junior Choir; School Choirs—Wick High School, Wick North School, Pulteneytown Academy; Vocal Solos (General)—Isobel Clyne; (Scots Song)—Isobel Bremner.

Music in the Provinces

Birmingham.—The complete set of programmes for the eight symphony concerts to be given by the City Orchestra next season are to hand. The day for the concerts is to be altered from Tuesday to Thursday, which will be a better arrangement for many people in the outside towns where Thursday is the early-closing day. The first concert of the series will be held at Central Hall, but the other seven are to take place as usual in the Town Hall, which is at present undergoing reconstruction. The general scheme for the series is fairly enterprising, yet does not include any work of the ultra-modern school likely to frighten off the more timid concert-goer. The principal items in the first programme are Beethoven's Pianoforte Concerto No. 5, in E flat (the 'Emperor'), with Mr. Harold Bauer as soloist, Schubert's 'Fierrabras' Overture, and the 'Enigma' Variations. Four movements from Holst's 'The Planets' are promised on November 11, and Mr. Albert Sammons will play Elgar's Violin Concerto in B minor. At the third concert Bruno Walter will be the conductor instead of Mr. Boult, who, however, will conduct all the other programmes. The great C major Symphony of Schubert should have a fine performance with Herr Walter in charge. Tchaikovsky's 'Romeo and Juliet' will be given on the same evening. At the December concert, Mr. Harold Samuel will play Brahms's rarely-heard Pianoforte Concerto No. 2, in B flat, and will also take part in the Triple Concerto in A minor, for pianoforte, violin, and flute. Mozart's Symphony No. 38, in D (the 'Prague'), figures in the same programme. The next concert includes a novelty in the shape of Mahler's Symphony No. 4, in G. Very little music by this composer has been heard at Birmingham, and the event will be awaited with special interest. The work requires a soprano soloist in the last movement, and Miss Dorothy Silk has been called upon to fill the rôle. Dukas's 'L'Apprenti Sorcier' is included in this programme. Mr. Johan Hock, the well-known 'cellist in the Catterall Quartet, is to appear at the sixth concert, and will play a 'Cello Concerto of Schumann, and he will, presumably, also be the Don Quixote in a performance of Strauss's symphonic poem of that name. An almost unknown Overture by Weber, 'Ruler of the Spirits,' will be of special interest, and with Debussy's 'L'Après-midi d'un Faune' completes a programme which should suit all musical tastes. Composers of very varying styles will be represented in the programme of the next concert—Brahms, Mozart, Bantock, Vaughan Williams, and Delius all appear in turn. Delius's symphonic poem, 'Paris,' is something of a novelty, and will be heard with interest by those who love the music of this composer. Miss Jelly d'Aranyi is the soloist on this occasion, and will play Mozart's Violin Concerto No. 4, in D, and a piece by Vaughan Williams, 'The Lark Ascending.' Bantock's 'Dante and Beatrice' and Brahms's 'Tragic' Overture will also be heard. The chorus of the Festival Choral Society is to help in the final concert of the season, which will be a celebration of the Beethoven centenary. The 'Egmont' Overture, songs from 'Egmont,' and the big Choral Symphony will be given.——The Sunday concerts are to be held this season in the West-End Cinema, where there is more seating accommodation.——The Children's concerts will be given as usual, and a series of Lunch-hour concerts is being arranged.

Bradford.—The programme of the coming Festival of chamber music (October 5 and 6) has been announced. The four programmes include Brahms's Sextet and Clarinet Quintet, Schönberg's 'Verklärte Nacht,' Bax's Oboe and Harp Quintets, Elgar's Pianoforte Quintet, Debussy's Quartet, the second Violin Sonata of Delius, the Phantasy Quartet of Goossens, Ravel's Introduction and Allegro for strings and wind, and works of Mozart, Beethoven, Franck, Dvorák, and Fauré. The principal artists will be the Virtuoso Quartet.

Brighton.—The Charlier Quartet from Liége played at the Pavilion on July 2 and 3, the programme including a 'Selection in Old Style' from the works of Grétry, a Quartet in C sharp minor by Rogister, and two Serenades by Joseph Jongen.

Cambridge.—Bach's 'Sing ye to the Lord' and Rootham's 'The twa Sisters o' Binnorie' were performed at the Guildhall on June 19, at a notable concert given by the University Musical Society under Dr. Rootham's direction. The orchestra played the 'Meistersinger' Overture, Haydn's D major Violoncello Concerto (with Mr. Howard Bliss), Debussy's 'L'Après-midi d'un Faune,' and the 'Boutique Fantasque' Suite.

Harrogate.—The symphony concerts are in full tide of popularity, and a high standard is maintained both of music and of performance under the direction of Mr. Basil Cameron. Works recently played include a set of six Handel pieces arranged for string orchestra by Thomas Dunhill (conducted by Sir Dan Godfrey, who was away from Bournemouth on holiday), the Handel-Harty 'Water Music,' a Scriabin Pianoforte Concerto, and many classics.

Hove.—The Symphonic String Players, under Mr. Herbert Menges, recently joined Mr. Harold Samuel in the performance of Bach's D minor Pianoforte Concerto at Hove Town Hall. They also played the 'Symphonie Spirituelle,' No. 6, of Asgar Hamerik, and four pieces by Domenico Scarlatti.

MANCHESTER.—Musical interest has been sustained by the concerts given by pupils of the College of Music, and by the Tuesday mid-day concerts. The last of this series, on June 29, was undertaken by the local Contemporary Music Centre. The music included Huré's Violoncello Sonata and Prokofiev's Sextet, 'Overture on Yiddish Themes,' in which Mr. Harry Mortimer was clarinettist. —— The Children's Concert Society is to be disbanded after ten years of service.——Two of next season's Brand Lane concerts will be conducted by Dr. Richard Strauss.

OXFORD.—A light opera, 'Castle Creevey,' by Mr. Hughes (Corpus) was produced recently by the Oxford University Opera Club.

REDDITCH.—To celebrate the jubilee of St. George's Church, the Choral Society and other parishioners performed Bach's 'Peasant' Cantata as a pastoral play on July 7, 8, and 10. In order to provide story and movement, scenes of the plot against Malvolio in 'Twelfth Night' were interpolated, and they fitted into the music admirably. The orchestra was conducted by Miss Howes, and the dances were arranged by Miss Penzer.

Music in Wales

ABERYSTWYTH.—The Aberystwyth Festival now ranks with the larger triennials, for it occupies four days with first-class performances of major works, and well-known musicians take part in the conducting. Moreover, the Festival takes place every year. Important novelties are not a feature, but recent works that have won approval are kept before the public ear. This year's programme, for instance, contained 'Men and Angels,' the cantata by Sir Walford Davies (conductor-in-chief of the Festival) which was produced at Gloucester last year, the 'Grecian Urn' movement from Holst's first 'Choral' Symphony, and Vaughan Williams's 'The lark ascending.' Other contemporary works were Holst's 'The Evening Watch,' W. H. Reed's 'Æsop's Fables,' the 'Old King Cole' Ballet Suite of Vaughan Williams, and his Mass in G minor, which was performed twice under the composer's direction. The standard choral works were 'Elijah,' Brahms's 'Requiem,' Palestrina's Motets, 'O Bone Jesu' and 'Beauty eternal,' Bach's 'God's time is the best,' Parry's 'There is an Old Belief,' and Dr. David de Lloyd's 'Beyond the Veil,' a National Eisteddfod test-piece. A number of classical works, including Concertos with soloists, were played by the Welsh Symphony orchestra under Mr. Adrian C. Boult's direction. The novelty was a Suite of movements by Handel arranged by Kenneth Harding. The Festival was held in the University Hall during June 25-28. It had an unusual preliminary, for the opening day consisted of the third Cardiganshire Musical Festival—seven hundred children singing and the Aberystwyth Junior Orchestra playing in the morning, and 'Elijah' performed by adults in the evening.

HARLECH.—The Harlech Castle Musical Festival was held on June 24 with great success, for which the credit may be shared by the excellent organization and the weather—for Harlech Castle has no roof. The principal work was 'Samson,' sung under Dr. Hopkin Evans, by a massed choir of sixteen hundred voices. The Festival Orchestra and a contingent from the Welsh Symphony Orchestra took part in the oratorio and, under the direction of Dr. J. R. Heath, played the 'Meistersinger' and 'Freischütz' Overtures. The principal vocalists were Miss Gwladys Naish, Miss Blodwen Hughes, Mr. Frank Mullings, and Mr. Norman Allin. A special welcome was given to Madame Cordelia Rees, who sang at the first Harlech Festival in 1868. About six thousand people were present at the evening concert.

Music in Ireland

BELFAST.—The Lisburn Choral Union, in which twelve choirs took part, had a special Festival service on June 14, at Christ Church, Lisburn, under the direction of the Rev. Dr. Aldwell, Rector of Drumbo, with Mr. P. A. Kimber at the organ. Archbishop Gregg, of Dublin, delivered an appropriate discourse. As a first effort the service proved an unqualified success, and will, probably, be made an annual event.——The forty-second annual report of the Philharmonic Society was a creditable record, the work of the season showing a credit balance of £38. Votes of thanks were extended to Mr. Godfrey Browne (conductor) and Mr. J. H. MacBratney (accompanist), and also to Sir Charles Brett and Mr. Robert Watts as hon. secretaries.——On June 26, at the Oval, the second annual all-Ireland Championship for Pipe Bands took place, the adjudicators being Pipe Major Chisholm and Pipe Major Gray, of Glasgow. The senior and junior contests were won respectively by Willonfield and Ards, and the individual piping championship by Francis J. Bigger Hope.——At the Mountstewart Fête, on July 3, 'The Immortal Hour' was admirably presented, the caste including Miss Gwen Davies and Mr. Heseltine.

DUBLIN.—On June 17, Mr. James Taylor, who has had sixty years of unbroken service as organist of St. Werburgh's Church, was presented with a substantial cheque by parishioners and friends. At the same time, Mrs. Taylor was given a handsome rose-bowl. The Rev. W. J. McCreery, who presided, spoke in cordial appreciation of Mr. Taylor's long association with the church.——Quite an interesting concert was given by the Leinster School of Music, at Engineers' Hall, on June 21, in the presence of President Cosgrave and a large number of visitors, the school orchestra being particularly fine in its accompaniment of Miss Irene Lister's performance of Mendelssohn's Pianoforte Concerto in G minor.——At a meeting of the executive committee of the Feis Ceoil Association, on June 21, the result of the Composers' Competitions was announced. In Classes Nos. 1 and 4, out of nine competitors, the pieces marked 'Pippa' were respectively awarded the prizes by Prof. Granville Bantock. No entries were received for Classes Nos. 2 and 3. 'Pippa,' the winner of both prizes, is Miss Rhoda Coghill. She is a Mus. B.——Dr. Walter Starkie, on June 22, gave an interesting lecture at 80, Merrion Square, under the auspices of the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom, on 'Gipsies and their Music.' The gipsy cult throughout Europe, especially in Spain, was traced in graphic style, and Dr. Starkie played some delightful selections on the violin—with pianoforte accompaniment by Miss Eileen Buckley—which gave an added value to this enjoyable scheme.——A pianoforte recital by the pupils of the Read School took place in the Abbey Lecture Hall, on June 29.——At the conferring of degrees at Trinity College, on June 29, Mr. T. F. Bye and Mr. F. L. Harrison graduated Mus. Bac., and Mr. C. H. O'Brien, Mus. Doc. ——The D'Oyly Carte Opera Company finished a successful three weeks' season at the Gaiety Theatre, on July 3, with 'The Gondoliers.'——Miss Rhona Clark and Miss Dinah Copeman have been appointed teachers in the R.I.A.M.——The J. H. Squire Celeste Octet opened a week's engagement at the Theatre Royal on July 12.

OPERA RECORDS: II.—BERLIN

BY WAKELING W. DRY

The Intendant of the State Opera, Berlin—which, apparently, retains its old title in spite of changes in government—has sent me details of the performances of the various works to date.

The repertory of this famous house is an interesting and comprehensive one. We find some rare works, such as the 'Christelflein' of Pfitzner; 'Feuerklang,' by Schecker; the 'Harlequin' of Busoni, the composer of a better-known opera, 'Turandot,' which, curiously enough, Puccini took as the story for his 'swan song,' having decided, as he once told me, to abandon Pierre Louys's picturesque story 'La femme et le pantin' as savouring too much of 'Carmen.' Then we have Meyerbeer's pompous 'L'Africaine,' which is evidently popular, as its performances number two hundred and forty-five, only a few short of the total reached by 'Aïda,' i.e., two hundred and fifty-four. 'Rienzi,' the early Wagner work, still keeps its place as a popular example. It has been given a hundred and fourteen times, and three times last season.

Richard Strauss's 'Frau Ohne Schatten' as yet seems to remain unfamiliar; and apparently Offenbach's 'Tales of Hoffman,' which totals only ninety-eight performances, is not one of the first favourites. But it should be recalled that there is another comic-opera house at Berlin for the lighter works; and this must have been played there many times. It will be remembered that the whole of the company paid a visit to England in 1908, under the conductorship of Fritz Cassirer, and played this work at the Adelphi. While he was here, Cassirer gave a very interesting Strauss evening with the Queen's Hall Orchestra.

'Jenifa,' by a Hungarian composer, Janacek, 'Leierkasten,' by Kool, and 'Mona Lisa,' by Schelling, are other works which are certainly among the unfamiliar. The ever-popular 'Carmen' is one of those that have exceeded five hundred performances, with a total of six hundred and fifty-four; but Mascagni's 'Cavalleria' exceeds this with six hundred and seventy-nine, as also does Mozart's 'Don Juan,' with six hundred and seventy-four. Next comes the 'Marriage of Figaro,' which I saw most beautifully performed at the Festival in the Residenz-theater, at Munich, with Mottl at the harpsichord for the recitatives, and a chamber orchestra of twenty-five, as in the days of its first production. The other 'six-hundreds' are, as one would naturally expect, 'Lohengrin,' six hundred and ninety-one, and 'Tannhäuser,' six hundred and seventy-three. The 'Magic Flute' nearly reaches this number with six hundred and thirty-seven.

Gounod's 'Faust' is included in a list that is certainly restricted so far as French operas are concerned. It is called 'Margaret,' by the way, at Berlin, and is exceeded, in its total of four hundred and twenty-four performances, by Thomas's 'Mignon' with four hundred and fifty-seven. It is remarkable, in a way, that 'Pagliacci'—here called 'Bajazzi,' reaches to four hundred and twenty, only six less than such a masterpiece as 'The Barber of Seville.' 'Fidelio' is evidently appreciated at its due worth, as its five hundred and sixty-five performances show; and 'Der Freischütz' maintains its popularity, having been given seven hundred and forty-two times—and as many as seventeen in the past season. The same composer's 'Oberon,' written specially for Covent Garden, has been given three hundred and eleven times.

Of the Richard Strauss works, 'Der Rosenkavalier' has been given a hundred and ninety-four, and 'Salome' a hundred and seventy-seven times. The interest in Puccini seems to vary somewhat. 'Madame Butterfly' heads the list with two hundred and forty performances—thirty-two in the last season; 'La Bohème' comes next with a hundred and seventy-seven, 'Tosca' attains to only sixty-two, and the single example from the trilogy of short operas, 'Gianni Schicchi,' received a bare eighteen representations.

The complete cycle of the 'Ring' does not appear in the list; but separate performances of this mighty trilogy are: 'Rheingold' a hundred and sixty-one, 'Walküre' two hundred and seventy-nine, 'Siegfried' a hundred and eighty-eight, and 'Götterdämmerung' a hundred and seven, while 'Tristan' reaches two hundred and eighteen. It may here be recalled that the 'Ring' was first given, in its entirety, at Bayreuth, under Richter, in 1876, the year that saw the inauguration of the first Wagner festival. It reached Berlin in 1881, and London in the following year, under Anton Siedl.

My best thanks are due to the Intendant for his highly interesting information, and there is another official of the Berlin Opera of whose kindness also I have very pleasant recollections. This is Herr Braunschweig, the stage-manager, who was the director of the Bayreuth Festival in 1906, which I had the good fortune to see. It was a memorable one, in that it was the thirtieth anniversary of Richter's conducting of the 'Ring.' Herr Braunschweig took me over the huge stage, and explained all the details of the wonderful mechanism, the moving platforms, by which one scene is set in readiness for the next, the elaborate lighting arrangements (the electrician in charge follows the marked score for the manipulation of these!). Several of the devices were afterwards adopted at Covent Garden. At Munich (the place originally chosen by Wagner for his Festspielhaus) is the Prinzregenten-theater, a noble brick and stone structure in place of Wagner's wooden building, well situated, and tastefully decorated. It preserves the Greek auditorium plan for the audience, by which a clear view of the stage is obtained by everyone, along with the hidden orchestra, that great asset in the way of musical unanimity. One wonders greatly why this admirable arrangement was not adopted for the new London Opera House in Kingsway, which, had it succeeded in keeping to its own special domain, would have proved an immense gain to the musical life of London.

Musical Notes from Abroad

GERMANY

PUCCINI'S 'TURANDOT' AT DRESDEN

After the first performance of 'Turandot' at La Scala, the European opera houses vied with each other for the second performance of the work. The Dresden Staatsoper was in the forefront of this ambition. It may be that a desire to be extolled by foreign critics is at the root of the Staatsoper's ardour; or that Fritz Busch, the general-music-director, is anxious as often as possible to demonstrate to his fellow citizens his powers as a conductor, and how excellent is the institution which he is destined to lead. This performance of 'Turandot' had rather a strange prelude, for a stage-manager who had dared to object to a première which was to take place at the end of a long season had been dismissed, in spite of his undoubted great merit. The engagement of Issai Dobrowen, the Russian conductor, as stage-manager for this special occasion, made it possible to present the opera on July 4—when usually the greater part of the German public has started for its summer holidays. This time, however, the curiosity of music-lovers was great enough to secure a large attendance for what was considered to be a musical event, the name of Puccini proving particularly attractive.

To those who had attended the first performance under Toscanini it was clear that the second presentation of 'Turandot' had derived considerable advantages from it. This was particularly evident in the stage-management, which, although richly conceived at Milan, had nevertheless betrayed the use of too much tinsel, especially in the second part of Act 2, where the scene of the three riddles is going on. In this, as in some other points, a higher level was attained at the Dresden performance. Fritz Busch is not, of course, like Toscanini, who, after many rehearsals, had presented an ideal execution of the score. Busch's conducting, however, did the work full justice. It is well known that both the libretto and the music of 'Turandot' have found many detractors. I must confess that, in spite of the difficulties arising from the libretto, I find Puccini much more sympathetic here than in others of his works. What we call 'Puccinian' melody may not indeed be so effective in this opera as it is in 'Manon,' 'La Bohème,' or 'Tosca,' but on the other hand its very effectiveness in those cases enhanced the difficulties attendant upon the latest setting, and the manner in which they are partly overcome does much credit to the composer. The choral part, the Chinese colour, and the combination of these two elements may detract from the more human side of his music; his melody, however, though not so rich in effect, has become nobler than it ever was before. A real obstacle in the way of effect is Alfano's conclusion, replacing the personality of the master by more cosmopolitan, Wagnerian musicianship.

The main difficulty lies in the performance, for which it will not be easy to find adequate singers. In this case the problem was solved in the best possible manner. The part of Turandot, which is very difficult on account of a plenitude of high notes, was sung by Anne Roselle, who, though not in the first flight among dramatic artists, proved one of the best living singers. Liu was represented by Julia Röhle in a very touching manner, and the unknown Prince by Richard Tauber, who had assumed his part only at the last moment, in place of Kurt Taucher, who had fallen ill. The success of the work was undoubtedly greater than after the first Italian performance; whether this means its full rehabilitation in the eyes of the public cannot be foresaid. That it proves effective in particular circumstances, is beyond doubt.

SCHOOL OF CONDUCTORS

At the present moment, when conductors are looking for orchestras and orchestras for their supporters, it is of interest to note that a new generation is far from being discouraged by this situation. The Berlin High School for Music has a class for conductors, led by Prof. Julius Prüwer, former general-music-director at Weimar. Some of his pupils appeared recently before a large audience, and each afforded proof of good training. Among them was Martha Linz von Kriegner, who, already known as an excellent violinist, yet as a broadminded musician is striving for higher laurels. Another pupil, Werner Richter, a born conductor, has been already chosen as assistant for Bayreuth. Of course, the real test of conducting lies in the faculty of performing a work after rehearsals held without the assistance of a master. Anyhow, a new generation of German conductors may be said to be half-way along the road to a career.

ADOLF WEISSMANN.

HOLLAND

Utrecht has a Municipal Orchestra that maintains its standards by refusing to lay down its instruments in the summer. In the third week in June, under their regular conductor, Evert Cornelis, these players gave an excellent Summer Music Festival, the programmes of which combined in happy measure the classical and the modern. Handel's 'Water Music,' Beethoven's 'Ninth,' Mozart's 'Haffner' Serenade, Mahler's 'Lied von der Erde,' as well as shorter works by these same composers, were followed quite appropriately by Debussy's Three Nocturnes, Chausson's 'Chant Funèbre' (orchestrated by d'Indy), and Honegger's 'Cantique de Pâques,' besides songs by Rimsky-Korsakov and Moussorgsky, sung by Vera Janacopulos. In spite of her excellent singing, this artist is rather wearing out the welcome of some of these numbers. She and Lotte Leonard were the visiting vocalists. It is pleasing to record that the Dutch singers—Suze Luger, Louis van Tulder, and Thom Denijs—were in every respect their worthy associates, and that the orchestra and the local branch of Toonkunst played and sang well. The maintenance of these provincial orchestras is a difficult problem here as elsewhere, and unless something unforeseen happens it appears likely that the orchestra at Gröningen, an outpost that needs all the musical help that can be given to it, will not resume its activities next season. The summer season at Scheveningen has started with bad weather and few visitors, but with programmes that are thoroughly good and, if not exciting, at least contain a number of items one seldom hears in England. The one sensation has been a two days' visit of Paul Whiteman and his band, and although critics and public alike have been quick to see that many of his 'new methods' and 'new ideas' are simply old ones made prominent by advertisement or by actual manner of performance, the brilliant instrumentation of his repertory, the remarkable virtuosity of his players, and the novelty of some of his tone-colour have won favourable comment. Publicly and privately, however, much comment has been made on the lack of newness and piquancy in his rhythms. Of actual novelties there have as yet been two, a 'Jüdische Trilogie' by Asger Hamerik, the Danish-American composer, and a group of three songs with orchestral accompaniment by Leo Ruygrok, the second 'cellist and, in the winter, second conductor of the Residentie Orchestra. Hamerik's work is a pleasant, richly scored miniature Symphony, reminiscent in its thematic material of various 19th-century leaders and in its orchestration chiefly of Wagner. A long solo for bassoon lightly accompanied forms the bulk of the middle movement, 'Lament,' and proved not only unusual but highly effective. The songs of Ruygrok, sung with pure tone and good expression by Madame Stotijn-Molenaar, are evidently exercises in writing for voice and orchestra by a composer who is a master of the latter but scarcely yet master of the art of combining the two. Among other items of outstanding interest already performed have been a Concertino for oboe and orchestra of which the one really striking section is the middle 'Romance,' beautifully played by J. H. Stotijn; Strauss's 'Also sprach Zarathustra,' played in the same programme as Wagner's 'Faust' Overture and Beethoven's C minor Symphony; two performances of Strauss's 'Don Juan' and of Tchaikovsky's 'Romeo and Juliet' Overture; and smaller items by Alex Voormolen, Joh. Wagenaar, Lekeu, &c. Under Georg Schnéevoigt and his capable assistant, Ignaz Neumark, the Residentie Orchestra is playing better than ever. Other music is represented chiefly by organ recitals, and military band concerts in the open air, the former being on a higher standard of programme selection though not of performance, than the latter. Mention must be made of the incidental music to outdoor plays, written by local composers, a good example being that by Emile Enthoven for the Utrecht University Lustrum Feast play 'Ichnaton,' in which the spirit of the piece is reflected without any arbitrary attempts at reproducing the Egyptian instruments or their effects. This was performed by the Municipal Orchestra, under Evert Cornelis.

HERBERT ANTCLIFFE.

VIENNA

THE CRITICAL STATE OF THE OPERA

The season of the Staatsoper closed amid lethargy on the part of both management and public. The inertia which had prevailed at the Opera during the last few months, and the seemingly total apathy of the public towards the institution—the receipts had descended to a level never before experienced—were inter-related, the attitude of the Viennese press being in a high degree responsible for such a state of affairs. There can be no doubt concerning director Schalk's abilities, or the excellent results attained by him since he took sole charge of the Staatsoper. If only a part of his aims materialised, this was largely due to the hostile attitude of the pro-Straussian press, which attributed to him all the mistakes committed by his predecessor, an incubus under which he has been labouring during the two years that he has superseded Strauss. Bureaucratic interference—inspired in no small degree by the severe criticism to which director Schalk has been exposed in the press—is a third factor which has made productive work difficult. Schalk, drawing his conclusions from this state of things, tendered his resignation. It has not, so far, been accepted by the Government, and moreover is not likely to take effect, chiefly owing to the impossibility of finding a suitable successor. Various reforms are being considered by the powers that be, principally with regard to the financial administration of the State theatres. As the situation stands at present, Schalk is likely to remain director, and to be invested with wider powers.

THE VOLKSOPER ALSO AILING

The Volksoper, after a fleeting prosperity, is again preparing to close its doors. A makeshift season was made possible by a co-operative scheme of management, but this device has proved short-lived. The complacence of the public which made the idea possible and, for a time, lucrative, is now exhausted, owing to the very mediocre quality of the performances. At present the Volksoper, once a theatre coveted by enterprising managers, is vainly looking for a director with sufficient courage and financial backing to undertake a new season.

The last novelty given at the Volksoper was 'Halka,' the three-Act opera by Stanislaw Moniuszko. When it was produced at Wilna in 1847 in concert form, and again in operatic dress seven years later, this work was hailed as the first national opera of Poland. Moniuszko was the composer of twenty operas, five ballets, seven Masses, two Requiems, and many smaller works. 'Halka' raised him to the position of a national hero, and the popularity of this opera still survives, so far as Moniuszko's native Poland is concerned. To hearers of other than Polish nationality this seems hardly intelligible, for, viewed without patriotic preoccupations and solely on its musical merits 'Halka' presents only a pale example of misunderstood German romanticism transplanted into foreign soil and decked with some national melodies which constitute its sole, but insufficient, redeeming quality. It must be remembered that this mild and essentially undramatic piece, dull in orchestration and epical in structure, is virtually as old as 'Lohengrin,' and its composer a contemporary of Moussorgsky! At the Volksoper only a few dances, executed by the corps de ballet of the Warsaw Opera, relieved the monotony of the proceedings and lightened the dense atmosphere of historical curiosity which surrounded Moniuszko's opera eighty years after its first production. Mlynarski, the director of the Warsaw Opera, was guest-conductor, and made the best of the Volksoper's limited resources.

SYMPHONIC CONCERTS

One of the surprising events of the season was the small response which the complete Mahler cycle of the Tonkünstler Orchestra, under Clemens Krauss, found from the Viennese public. It cannot be denied that Mahler's Symphonies have been overdone during the last few years, and a reaction is easily understood. Moreover, Krauss is anything but a Mahler conductor: he is too reserved and too matter-of-fact for this ecstatic music. That there is still great interest in the less hackneyed Symphonies of Mahler was proved when a sold-out house listened to the rarely-heard (and incomplete) 'tenth,' and especially by the three big audiences which heard the 'eighth' (sub-named 'Symphony of the Thousand'), under Anton von Webern. This modernist composer is not an experienced conductor, but what he lacks in technique is amply compensated by his fanatic enthusiasm. The performance of the eighth Symphony marked the two-hundredth Workers' Concert promoted by the Socialist party—a great educational scheme hardly to be over-rated. Mahler's ninth Symphony, also less often performed, was conducted by Robert Heger, who replaced Krauss at short notice, and did magnificent work.

Berlioz's 'Requiem,' though not a 'symphony of the thousand,' remains, dynamically, one of the most overwhelming compositions of the world's musical literature. When Weingartner performed this product of the bizarre Frenchman, after an interval of many years, we found that much of its effect has paled. The battery of brass instruments which Berlioz demands for the 'Tuba mirum' has lost its horrors in this post-Straussian era, and one is inclined to take it with the calmness which Habanek, the conductor of the first performance at the Dôme des Invalides, Paris, displayed by taking a pinch of snuff at the stupendous moment—much to the discomfiture of Berlioz, who, in a letter, recorded with pride that three ladies at Lille fainted 'in his honour' during this movement. Such brass bombardment inspires, in our time, not awe, but almost hilarity, and the banality of the entire work (save, perhaps, the 'Lacrimosa' movement) is all too apparent.

In the Mahler cycle, Krauss included also the latest composition by Josef Marx, called 'Symphonic Night Music.' Following shortly upon the same composer's 'Idyl,' with which it forms two parts of a symphonic tryptich, it was received with the greater interest, since the former piece had been somewhat disappointing in substance. The 'Symphonic Night Music' is a far bigger effort, and much more characteristic of Marx's personality. It is intense in expression and glowing in orchestral colouring. A tendency to instrumental opulence is again in evidence, as in the 'Romantic' Pianoforte Concerto and in the 'Autumn' Symphony. Marx loves to keep his orchestral men playing almost continually, and incessantly he hitches-up his passion. There is a sustained pathos in this music which makes one wish for points of rest now and then. In the first movement, Marx employs themes from his older compositions, much as does Strauss in his 'Heldenleben.' On the whole, the piece is replete with atmosphere and 'moods of nature.'

Few contemporary composers, especially among the younger generation, demand as big and as sonorous an orchestra as that of Marx in his new piece. The predilection which our young composers display for the chamber orchestra and for the small forms is as characteristic in its way as the complete absence from their music of pathos and ethos. The Western artists, more particularly the French musicians, are generally less ecstatic, and strive more for fluidity and elegance of utterance. Alexander Tansman, a young Polish composer who lives at Paris, has absorbed such French influences. In his music, heard here during a recent visit of this young musician to Vienna, it is possible to trace his evolution from the somewhat cerebral tendencies still current in Central Europe, the domain of Arnold Schönberg, to what may be termed the Western idiom fertilized by Igor Stravinsky. Tansman's second String Quartet belongs to the former class, and his later compositions, notably the 'Sonata Rustica' (splendidly played by the composer himself), for pianoforte solo, belong to the latter. The Stravinsky model manifests itself not only in the occasional Russian national taint derived from his ballets, but also in certain lapses into the neo-Bachism now preached by this Russian composer. Withal, Tansman is one of the most talented among the young composers of our day; his temperament and inspiration are beyond doubt.

At a song recital by Maria Olszewska, the splendid contralto of the Staatsoper, Alfred Rosé made his début as a composer with seven songs. These short, melancholy pieces are reminiscent of young Rosé's famous uncle, Gustav Mahler, both in the Japanese subjects and in their atmosphere; not in melodic invention, however, which betrays a commendable striving for independence and self-assertion.

The new String Quartet by Franz Schmidt, a classicist Viennese composer, achieved a notable success and many hearings during the latter half of the season. Schmidt is a composer of more learning than originality, in fact his craftsmanship—which manifests itself in a predilection for fugue writing and variation—mars the spontaneity of his music. The Quartet is not startlingly novel or interesting, but is a good specimen of solidly worked if rather academic music of the conservative variety. A new Hungarian composer was heard in the person of Eugen Zador, a Hungarian resident of Vienna. His orchestral songs proved distinctly operatic, in the style of Strauss and Wagner, with a few neo-French elements to complete the picture of the current contemporary Esperanto. Hubay's Violin Concerto No. 3, heard on the same occasion (with Eduard von Zathurezcky as soloist), was pure virtuoso music, and rather grateful. To consider a composer like Hubay as an exponent of present-day musical Hungary would be as unjust towards Bartók and Kodály as it is unjust towards a Schönberg or Berg to regard a conscientious, diligent musician like Franz Schmidt as a representative composer of contemporary Austria.

PAUL BECHERT.

Obituary

We regret to record the following deaths :

GEORGE HERBERT PALMER, priest and musician, on June 20. Born in 1846, at Grantchester, he graduated at Trinity College, Cambridge. He was early attracted by the organ, and frequently played at King's College Chapel. Later, during his first curacy, at St. Margaret's, Anfield, Liverpool, he was a friend and warm admirer of W. T. Best, the admiration being mutual, the St. George's Hall organist frequently seizing the opportunity of hearing Palmer accompany a service. Subsequent appointments were as priest-organist of St. Barnabas, Pimlico (1876-83), organist to the Sisters in Queen's Square (1883-1900), choirmaster of St. Mary's, Primrose Hill, and (during the war) organist at the Cowley Fathers' Church. He also did much work in training English communities in the singing of liturgical music. For some years he served on the committee of the Gregorian Association, and co-operated with the late H. B. Briggs in founding the Plainsong and Mediæval Music Society. In 1917 he received the Canterbury degree of Mus. Doc. His best-known work is the 'Sarum Psalter,' the inception of which dates from his association with the Rev. (now Dr.) G. R. Woodward, at St. Barnabas, Pimlico. His interest in music was not confined to plainsong. An enthusiastic Wagnerite, he was more than once a pilgrim to Bayreuth, and was a regular habitué of the gallery at Covent Garden when Wagner was being performed. During recent years Dr. Palmer (who had been called the Dom Pothier of the English Church) acted as a kind of honorary adviser to all and sundry on matters concerning his special branch of knowledge. In this capacity, as well as through a personality of singular charm, he exerted a wide influence among Church folk.

LOUIS FLEURY, suddenly, at Paris, on June 10. It has been well said that Fleury did for the status of the flute what Mühlfeld did for that of the clarinet. A player with no superior, and perhaps no equal on the technical side, he brought to bear also an impeccable taste and an encyclopædic knowledge of the repertory of his instrument. His playing of Bach, in particular, will be an abiding memory to London concert-goers. As leader of the Société Moderne des Instruments à Vent he exercised a potent influence on recent developments in regard to chamber music for wind. As editor of Bach's Flute Sonata, and other early music for his instrument, Fleury did much valuable work. From a lengthy memoir by a correspondent in The Times of June 28, we quote the following :

> Fleury has lastingly fixed in our minds the passionless Elysian pathos and beauty of the flute, and has so harmonized them with its queer, insect-like humours and agilities, that never again can we allow the vanity of the virtuoso-player to bring about the neglect of the spirit of that early 18th-century chamber music which is so great in art and so small in volume of sound.

MARIE RÔZE, at Paris. She studied at Paris under Auber, and later became a popular operatic singer in London. She married Colonel Henry Mapleson, and her son, Raymond Rôze [d. 1921], met with considerable success as a composer for the stage. After her retirement from public singing, she devoted herself to teaching.

CHARLES WOOD, at Cambridge, on July 12, aged sixty. He was born at Armagh, on June 15, 1866, his father being a lay-vicar at the Cathedral. Young Wood was educated at the Cathedral School. At Cambridge he was for a while at Selwyn College, whence he removed to Gonville and Caius, where he was organist. In June, 1894, he was elected Stanford's successor in the Cambridge Chair of Music. He was Professor in Harmony at the Royal College of Music. (An article on Dr. Wood appears on p. 696.)

HAROLD JAMES ELLINGFORD, suddenly, in London, on June 23. As an amateur violinist and organist he had been active in musical circles since boyhood. For many years he played in the Bow and Bromley Institute Orchestra, during the conductorship of Dr. W. G. McNaught ; afterwards he assisted the West Ham Philharmonic Orchestra. He was organist and choirmaster of Holy Trinity, Harrow Green, Leytonstone, for twenty years.

HENRY CHARLES TONKING, suddenly, at Glasgow, aged sixty-three. He was born at Camborne, studied at the Royal Academy of Music, and held posts as organist at Westminster Chapel (1883), St. Lawrence Jewry (1890), Dudley Parish Church (1900), and Wesleyan Church, Newquay (1905). Well known and popular as a recitalist, he was often heard at the Albert Hall about thirty years ago.

GERALD CUMBERLAND (C. F. Kenyon), at Southsea, on June 14, aged forty-seven. He is best-known as the author of 'Set down in Malice' and 'Written in Friendship,' two volumes of a highly personal nature, but he wrote much dramatic and musical criticism, general journalism, and a volume of poems, several novels, and a volume of short stories.

NICOLA COVIELLO, suddenly, at Coney Island, New York. A native of Italy, he came to England about forty-five years ago, and was a familiar figure in London musical circles. He founded and for many years directed the Balham School of Music.

J. H. LUCAS, on July 3. As school teacher, conductor, and organist, he did much good work at Plymouth. He will, however, be most widely known and remembered as founder of the Plymouth Competitive Festival.

Answers to Correspondents

LONDONER (Perth, W. Australia).—(1.) You ask, 'Is choral singing detrimental to a student of solo singing?' The answer is : 'It all depends on the choirmaster.' A solo singer can get nothing but good from joining a choir conducted by a first-rate trainer. There will be not only a gain vocally (for choir practice under such a trainer will be full of useful tips concerning production, &c.) ; there will also be a development of rhythmic sense, musicianship, and sight-reading, a thorough acquaintance with much fine music that the student might otherwise miss, and an insight into conducting and training that is likely to be of service later. Many good solo singers fail miserably when called on for ensemble work of any kind—a failure that is not likely to happen to one who has put in a spell with a really good choir. Finally, choral singing is good for the budding soloist, because it helps to keep him at least moderately humble.

CELESTE.—(1.) The diploma you ask about is of little value. The reason you see no mention of the College in the Musical Times is a good one : we refuse to insert its advertisements, or any news concerning it. (2.) The Musical Era is, apparently, extinct.

'A. E. C.', Ohio, wants to hear of 'a good book of choir experiences and anecdotes.' The only works of the sort that occur to us are rather old and out of print. Can a reader oblige with information ?

H. R. B.—(1.) For voluntaries without pedal, try Ropartz's 'Au Pied de l'Autel,' a set of sixty pieces; Louis Vierne's 'Twenty-four Pieces in Free Style,' in which the pedal part may be played on the manuals, the music being on two staves; and Gigout's various albums of Gregorian pieces. All these may be had at Novello's. There is also an excellent set of a hundred short pieces by Gigout, published in three sets by Chester. Most of these are for manuals only, and many are modal. (2.) Sing the Tallis Responses as nearly as possible according to the rhythm of the words, avoiding a sudden change to long notes of strict time on the last four syllables of the example you quote. Make good, free chanting your model in all such things.

Choralist.—You ask: 'Is an adjudicator justified in criticising the various conductors in choral competition? Surely the choir should be judged, not the conductor.'—Criticism of a choir is necessarily criticism of the conductor, by implication. But direct criticism of a conductor's methods is rarely given. Occasionally, however, an adjudicator who observes some glaring elementary fault in conducting will deal with it briefly on the marking sheet, not for reading in public with the comments on the choir, but for the conductor's eye alone. Most judges, we believe, would deprecate direct public criticism of a conductor, on the ground that it would undermine his authority.

F. B.—(1.) Durand's issue a good many modern French orchestral works arranged for two pianofortes. Send for a list, or inquire through Novello. We will suggest some other works next month. (2.) We do not know if the 'Meistersinger' Overture is so arranged. Perhaps a reader can tell us. (3.) Copies of Frederick Corder's two-pianoforte version of Chopin's D flat waltz are to be had from Mr. Corder himself (13, Albion Road South, N.W.6).

Chorister.—Treble (boy) singers of nineteen and twenty-two are less rare than you imagine. Sometimes the singer is a genuine unbroken treble; sometimes the voice is a falsetto. In both cases there is apt to be an unnatural effect that, personally, we dislike. When a boy's voice has lost the freshness of the early 'teens, its great charm has gone, surely.

H. G. P.—We wish you well in your effort to improve the anthem repertory of your choir. But we cannot usefully suggest a list without a knowledge of the size and capabilities of the choir. As you live in London, your best plan would be to pay a visit to Novello's, and look some over at your leisure, or write to them for a selection on approval, making clear the style and degree of difficulty required.

Exile.—(1.) The most comprehensive operatic guide known to us is 'The Complete Opera Book,' by Gustave Kobbé (Putnams). Another excellent work of the kind is Paul England's recently published 'Fifty Favourite Operas' (Harrap). (2.) Your song shows a distinct feeling for the right expression, but you have practically everything to learn.

Blanc.—Neither of the diplomas for which you think of sitting carries much weight. Both institutions are of the type mentioned in the reply to 'Celeste,' and their advertisements are refused by the Musical Times and several other journals.

L. H.—All the questions you ask concerning Descant are answered in the Preface to Geoffrey Shaw's set of Descants recently issued by Novello.

A. M. W.—We think your pupil in his present stage will find all he needs in Alcock's 'The Organ' (Novello).

F. A. G.—Probably the Oxford University Press can supply you with the Latin works of Byrd about which you inquire. Chester's have just issued several works of the kind. See Review on p. 720.

S. S.—Write to Messrs. W. E. Hill, 140, New Bond Street, W.1, who will readily give you information on all three points.

CONTENTS.

	Page.
William Thomas Best: b. August 13, 1826 (with Portrait)	689
Some Reflections on the Work of Scriabin. By Alexander Brent-Smith (concluded)	692
'Der Doppelgänger'; or, 'The Spectral Self.' By Richard Capell	694
Personalities among Musical Critics.—VII. Alfred Kalisch. By Basil Maine	694
Charles Wood (with Portrait)	696
Ad Libitum. By 'Feste'	697
Music in Tolstoy's Life. By his Son, Count Sergius Tolstoy (concluded)	699
Playford: Some hitherto Unnoticed Catalogues of Early Music. By William C. Smith (concluded)	701
New Light on Late Tudor Composers.—XIX. John Marbeck. By W. H. Grattan Flood	704
The Zürich Festival. By Basil Maine	705
Acoustics of Church and Concert-Hall. By E. G. Richardson	705
The Hallé Orchestra	708
A Note on Grieg. By Eric H. Thiman	709
Orchestral Notation. By Tom S. Wotton (continued)	710
The Musician's Bookshelf	712
Gramophone Notes. By 'Discus'	714
Player-Piano Notes	716
New Music	717
Occasional Notes	720
Wireless Notes. By 'Ariel'	728
Lungs and the Man: Animals and Natural Breathing. By Sterling Mackinlay	728
Church and Organ Music	729
Royal College of Organists	729
Letters to the Editor	732
The Amateurs' Exchange	734
Sixty Years Ago	734
Royal Academy of Music	735
Royal College of Music	735
Trinity College of Music	736
The Associated Board	736
University of Manchester	736
Society of Women Musicians	736
London Concerts	737
Students in Opera	739
Competition Festival Record	740
National Association of Competitive Choirs: Annual Conference	740
British Federation of Musical Competition Festivals: Summer Conference in London	741
Music in the Provinces	744
Music in Wales	745
Music in Ireland	745
Opera Records.—II. Berlin. By Wakeling W. Dry	745
Musical Notes from Abroad	746
Obituary	749
Answers to Correspondents	749

Music.

'Hail, Gladdening Light.' Unaccompanied Anthem for Evensong. By T. A. Walmisley 721

TWO EXTRA SUPPLEMENTS are given with this number:

1. Portrait of William Thomas Best.
2. 'Every Good Gift.' Harvest Anthem. By George Rathbone.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

Charges for Advertisements:—

	£	s.	d.
Two Lines	0	3	0
Three Lines	0	3	4
For every additional Line	0	0	10
One inch (displayed)	0	10	0
Half a Column	2	0	0
A Column	4	0	0
A Page	7	10	0

Special Pages (Cover, &c.) by arrangement.
A remittance should be sent with every Advertisement.

No. 1144 NOVELLO'S OCTAVO ANTHEMS Price (4d.)

EVERY GOOD GIFT

HARVEST ANTHEM

James i. 17; Romans viii. 32, 31; and Habakkuk iii. 17—19.

MUSIC BY

GEORGE RATHBONE

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Copyright, 1926, by Novello and Company, Limited

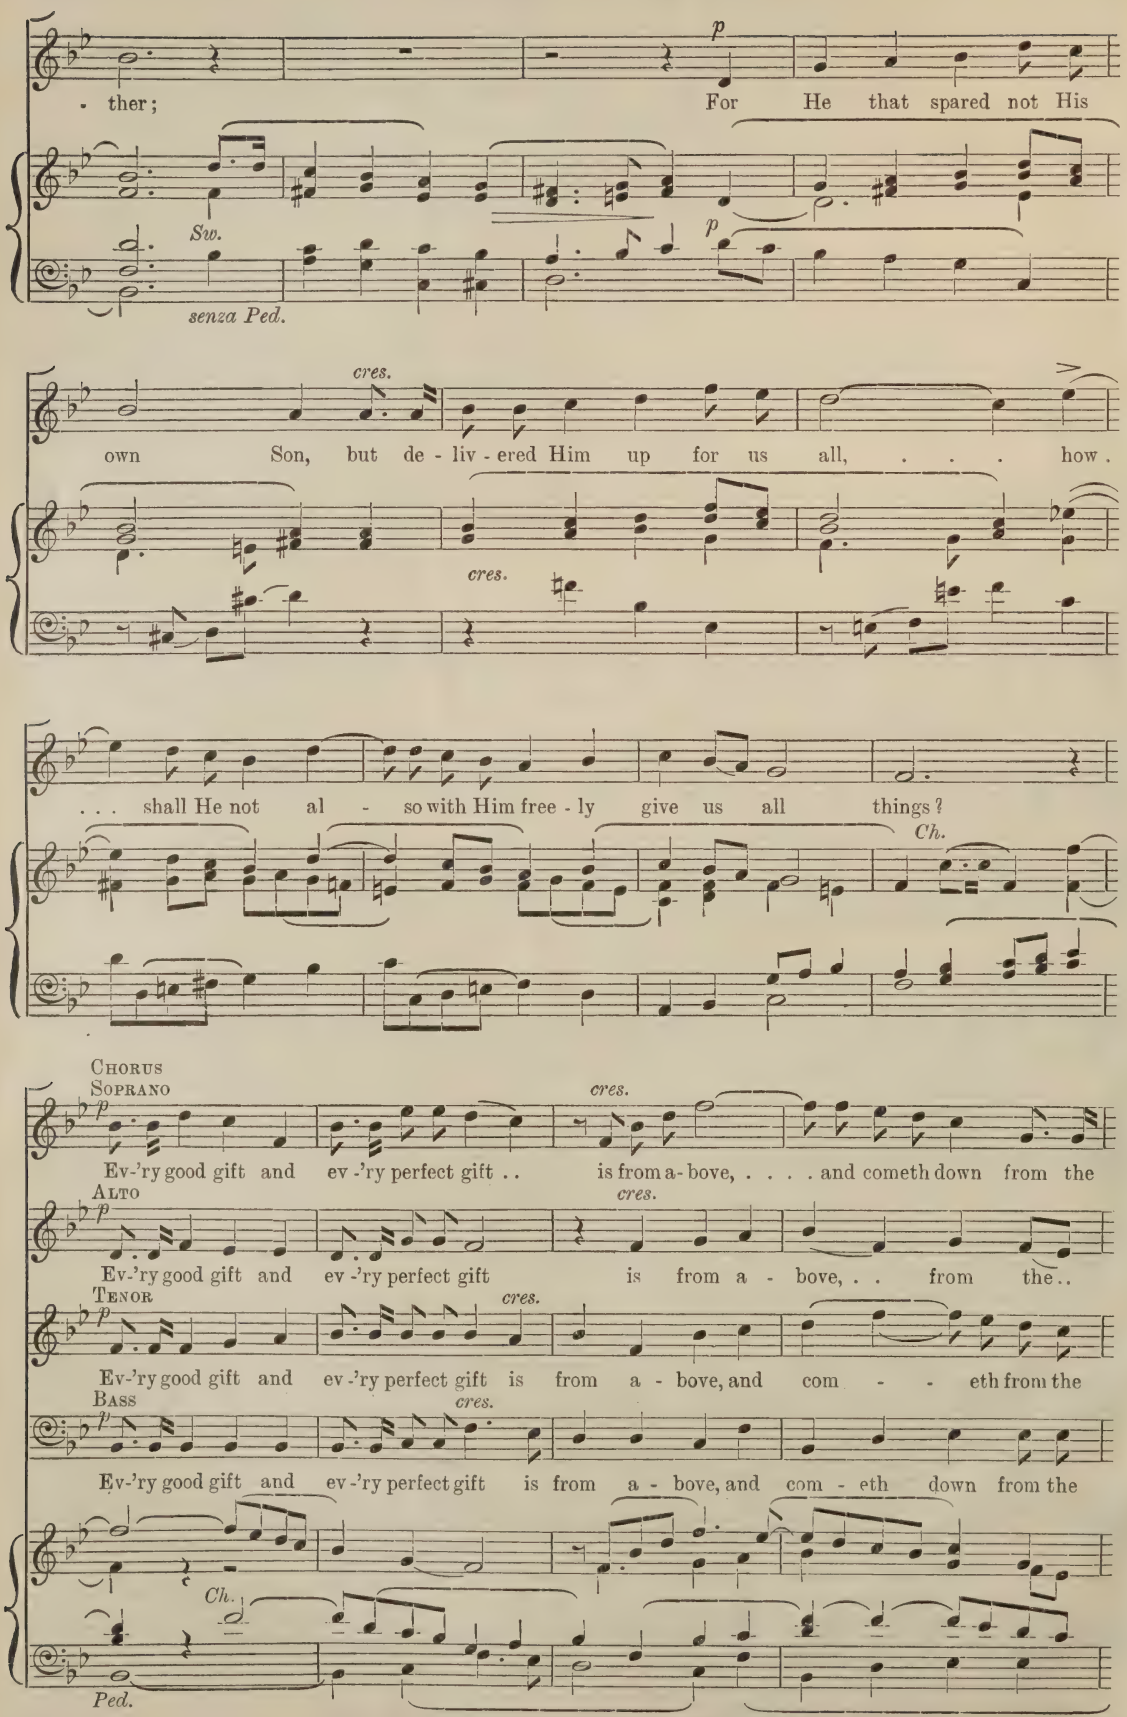
MADE IN ENGLAND



ther;
For He that spared not His Sw.
senza Ped.
own Son, but de - liv - ered Him up for us all, . . . how .
. . . shall He not al - so with Him free - ly give us all things?
Ch.
Chorus
Soprano
Ev-'ry good gift and ev-'ry perfect gift . . is from a-bove, ... and cometh down from the
Alto
Ev-'ry good gift and ev-'ry perfect gift is from a - bove, . . from the . .
Tenor
Ev-'ry good gift and ev-'ry perfect gift is from a - bove, and com - - eth from the
Bass
Ev-'ry good gift and ev-'ry perfect gift is from a - bove, and com - eth down from the Ch.
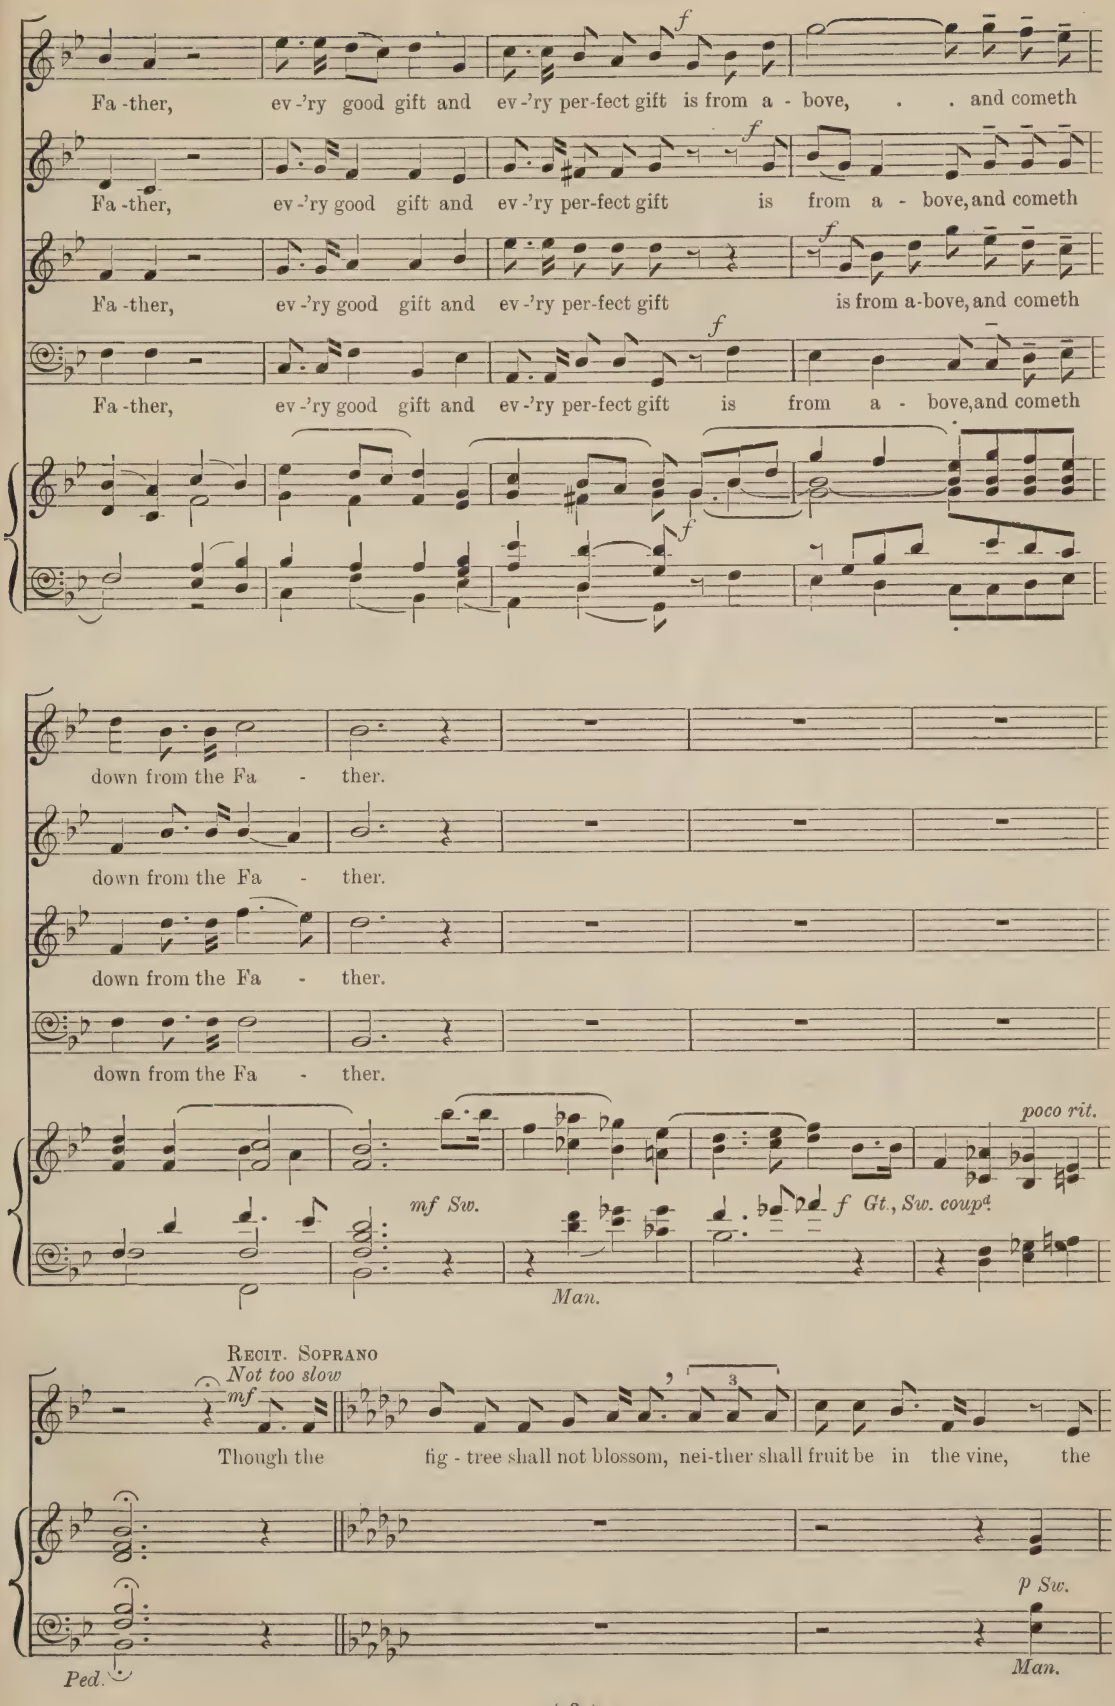
Ped.

EVERY GOOD GIFT



Fa-ther, ev-'ry good gift and ev-'ry per-fect gift is from a-bove, . . and cometh
Fa-ther, ev-'ry good gift and ev-'ry per-fect gift is from a-bove, and cometh
Fa-ther, ev-'ry good gift and ev-'ry per-fect gift is from a-bove, and cometh
Fa-ther, ev-'ry good gift and ev-'ry per-fect gift is from a-bove, and cometh
f
down from the Fa - ther.
down from the Fa - ther.
down from the Fa - ther.
down from the Fa - ther.
poco rit.
mf Sw.
f Gt., Sw. coupd.
Man.
Recit. Soprano
Not too slow
mf
Though the fig-tree shall not blossom, nei-ther shall fruit be in the vine, the p Sw.
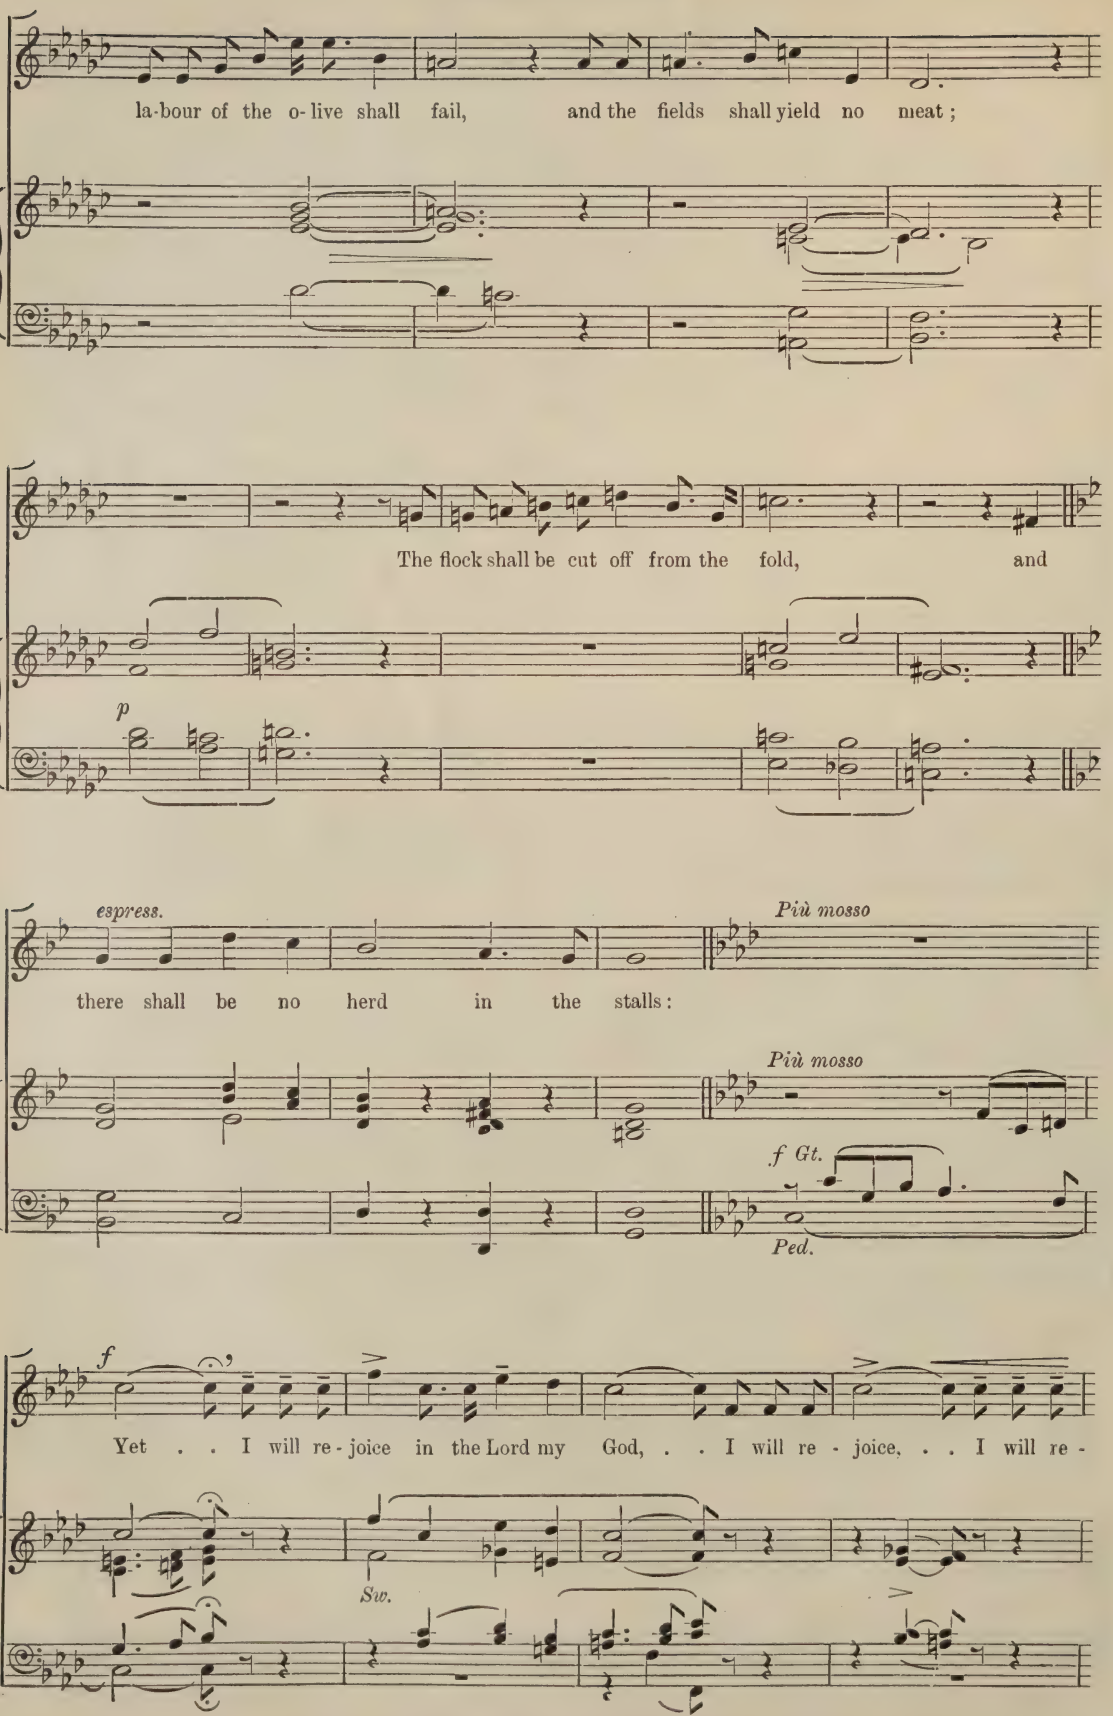
Man.
Ped.



la-bour of the o-live shall fail, and the fields shall yield no meat;
The flock shall be cut off from the fold, and
p espress.
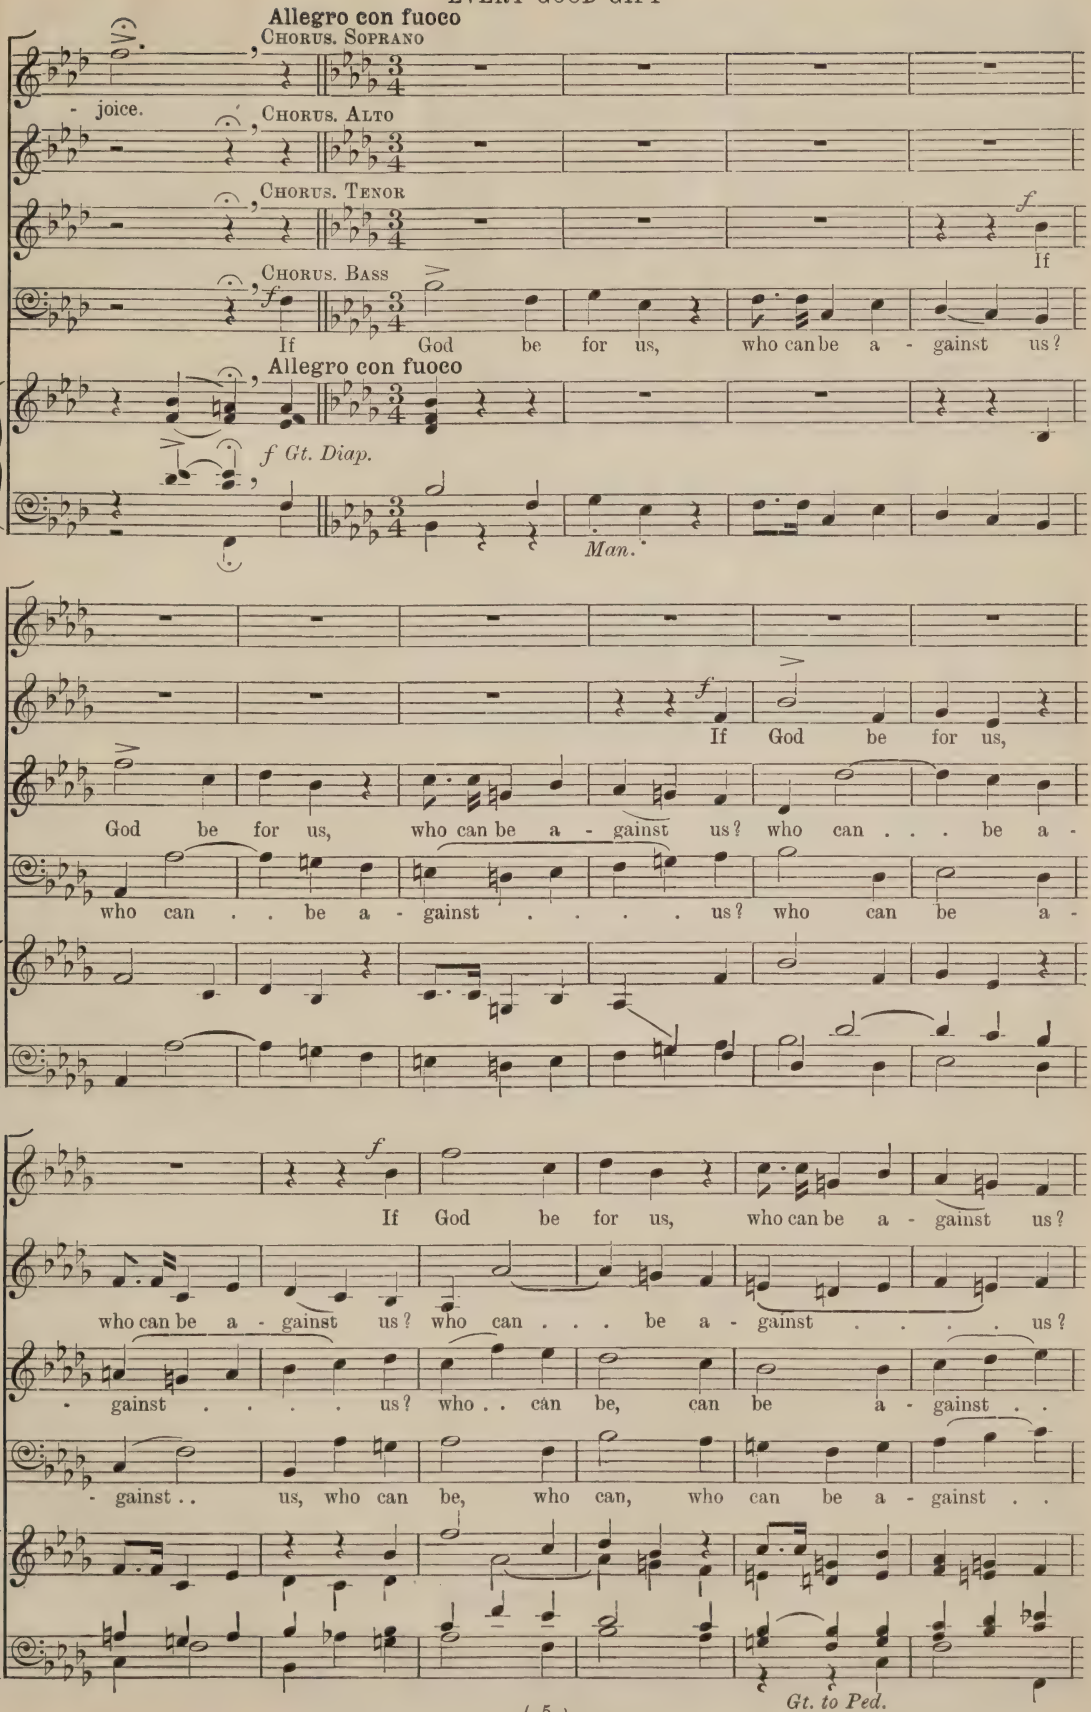
Più mosso
there shall be no herd in the stalls:
Più mosso
f Gt.
Ped.
f
Yet . . I will re-joice in the Lord my God, . . I will re-joice, . . I will re-
Sw.



Allegro con fuoco
Chorus. Soprano
- joice.
Chorus. Alto
Chorus. Tenor
f
If Chorus. Bass
f
If God be for us, who can be a - gainst us?
Allegro con fuoco
f Gt. Diap.
Man.
f
If God be for us,
God be for us, who can be a - gainst us? who can . . . be a - who can . . be a - gainst . . . . us? who can be a -
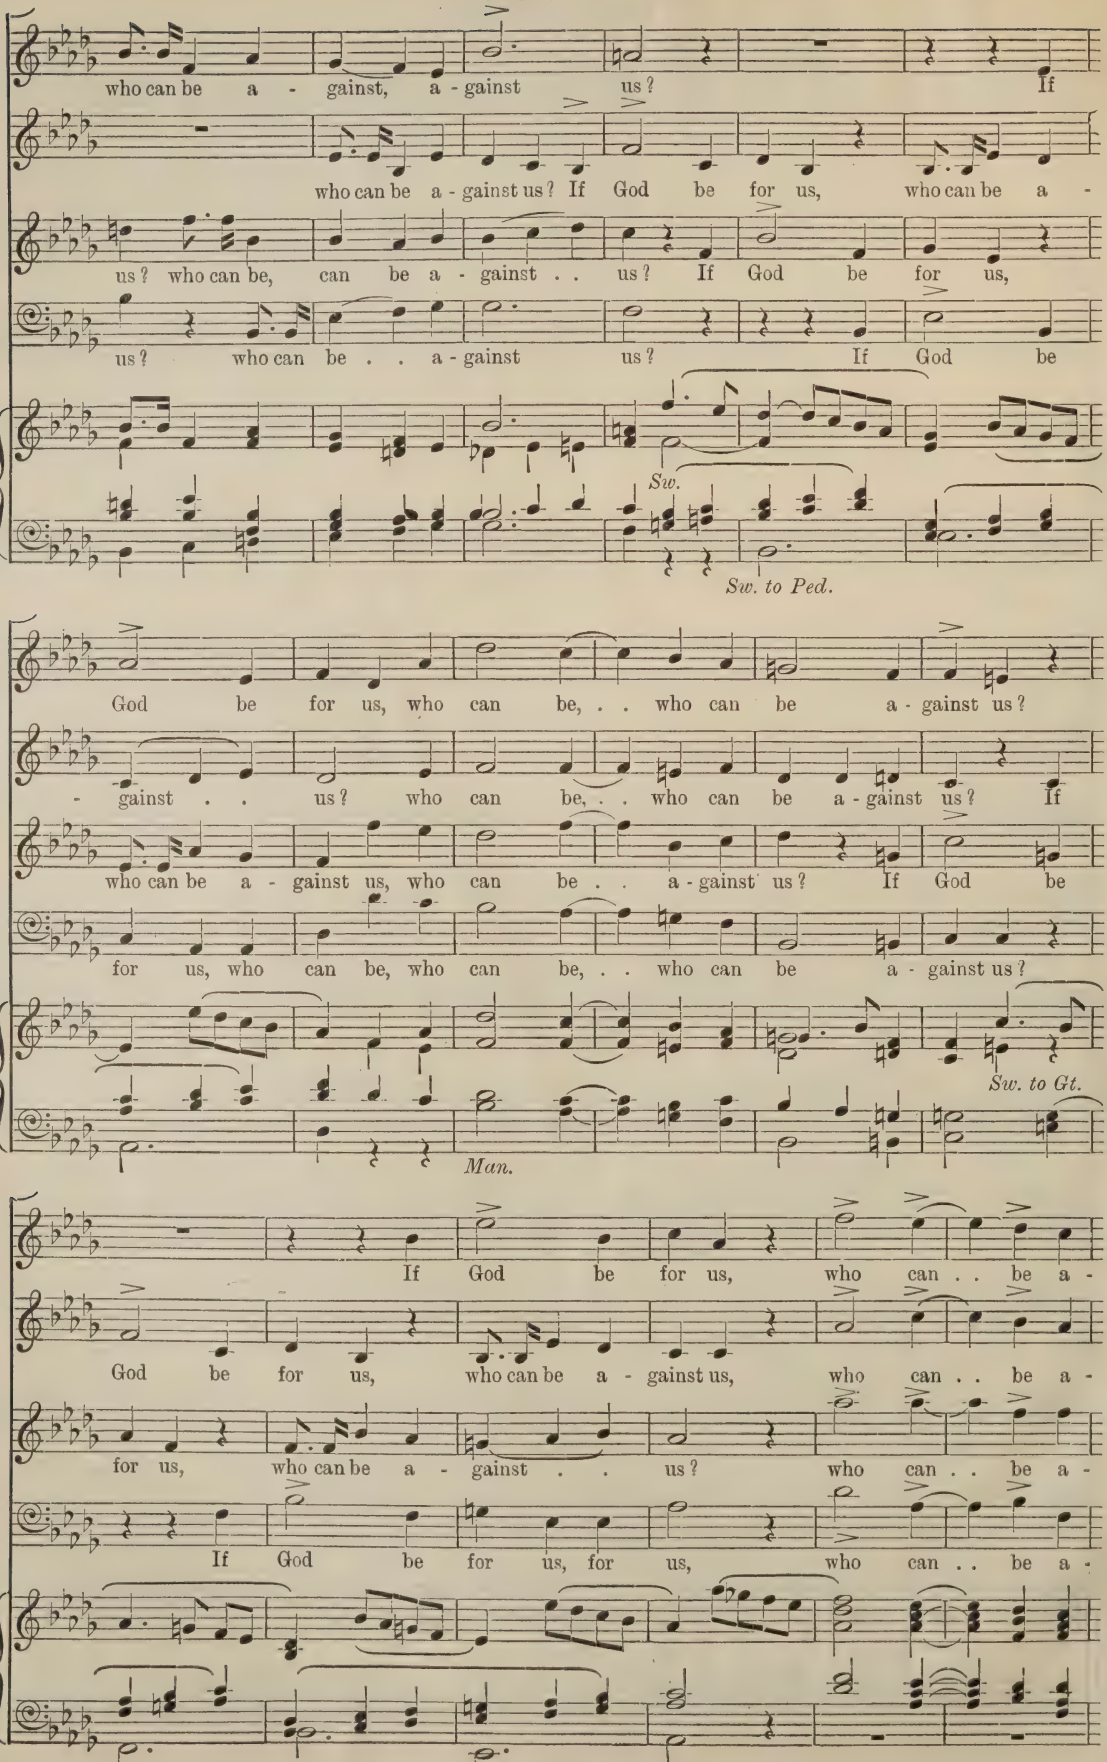
f
If God be for us, who can be a - gainst us?
who can be a - gainst us? who can . . . be a - gainst . . . . us?
- gainst . . . . us? who . . can be, can be a - gainst . .
- gainst . . us, who can be, who can, who can be a - gainst . .
Gt. to Ped.



who can be a - gainst, a - gainst us? If who can be a - gainst us? If God be for us, who can be a - us? who can be, can be a - gainst . . us? If God be for us, us? who can be . . a - gainst us? If God be Sw.
Sw. to Ped.
God be for us, who can be, . . who can be a - gainst us?
- gainst . . us? who can be, . . who can be a - gainst us? If who can be a - gainst us, who can be . . a - gainst us? If God be for us, who can be, who can be, . . who can be a - gainst us?
Sw. to Gt.
Man.
If God be for us, who can . . be a -
God be for us, who can be a - gainst us, who can . . be a - for us, who can be a - gainst . . us? who can . . be a -
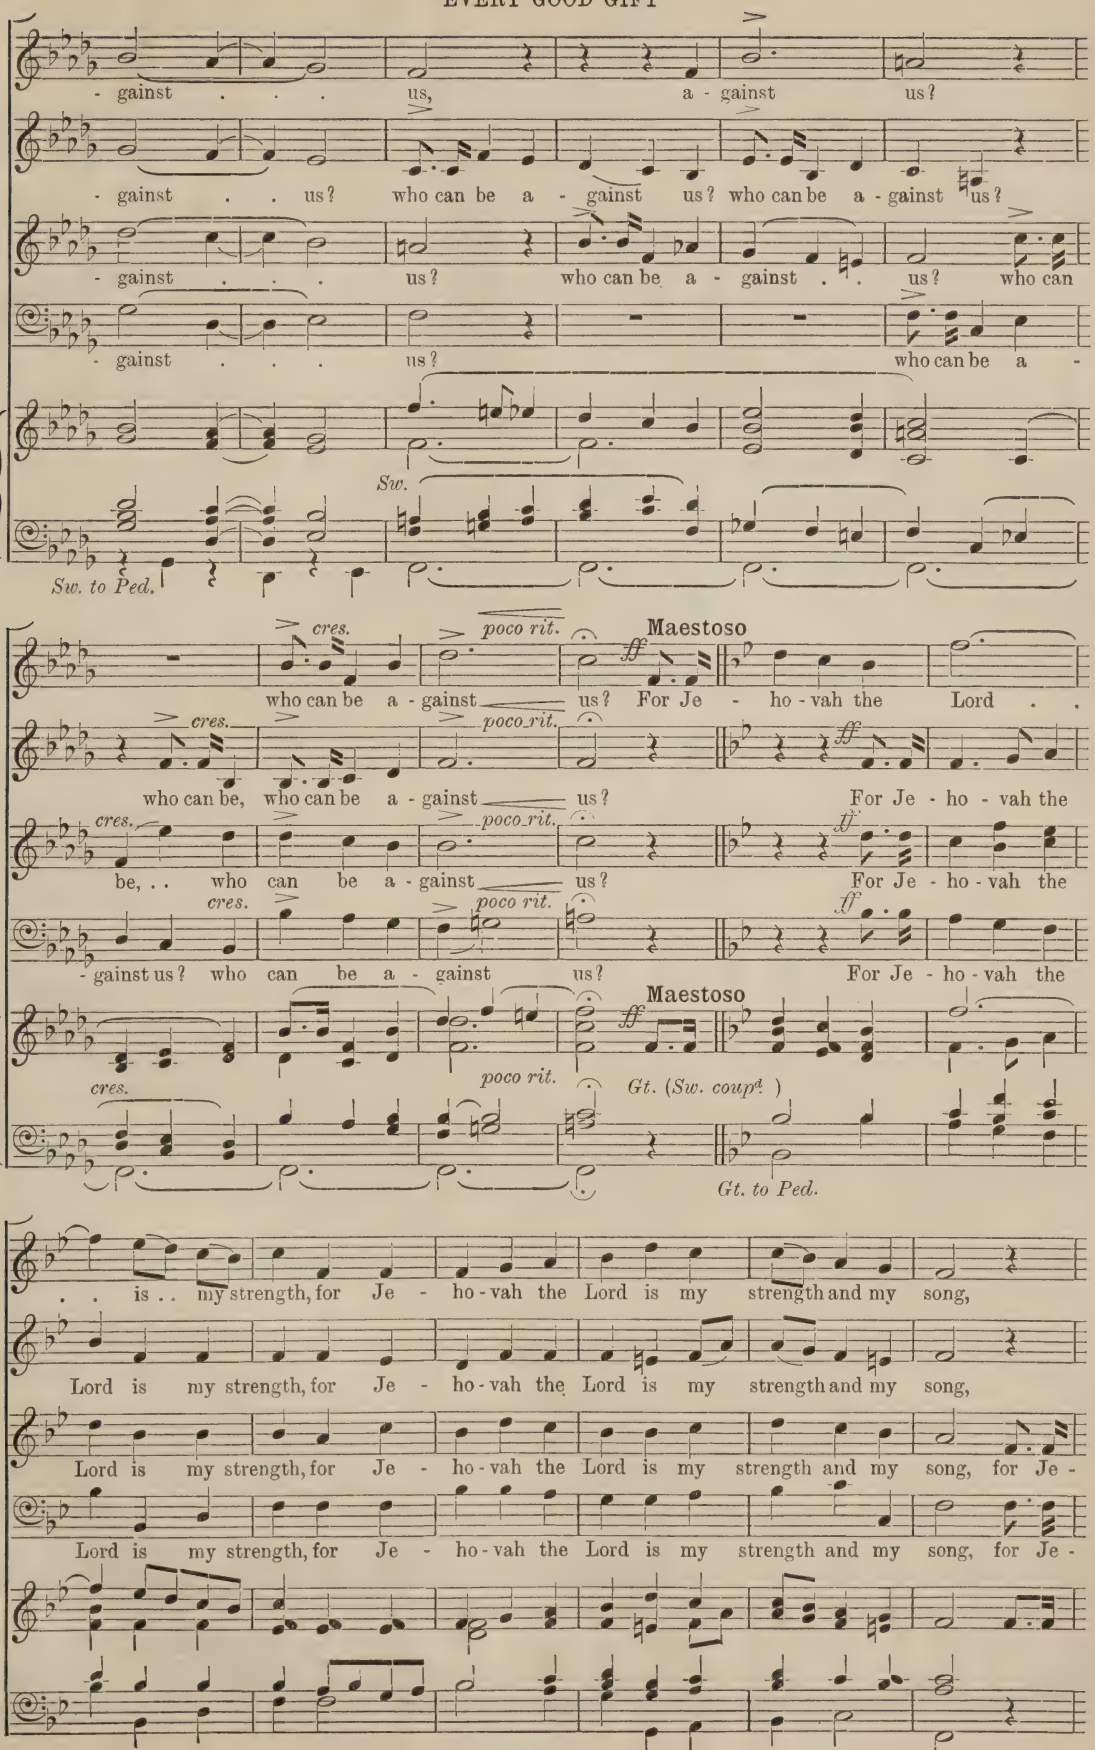
If God be for us, for us, who can . . be a -
Ped.



- gainst . . . us, a - gainst us?
- gainst . . us? who can be a - gainst us? who can be a - gainst us?
- gainst . . . us? who can be a - gainst . . us? who can
- gainst . . . us? who can be a -
Sw.
Sw. to Ped.
cres.
poco rit.
Maestoso
who can be a - gainst us? For Je - ho - vah the Lord . . who can be, who can be a - gainst us? For Je - ho - vah the be, . . who can be a - gainst us? For Je - ho - vah the - gainst us? who can be a - gainst us? For Je - ho - vah the Gt. (Sw. coupd.)
Gt. to Ped.
. . is . . my strength, for Je - ho - vah the Lord is my strength and my song,
Lord is my strength, for Je - ho - vah the Lord is my strength and my song,
Lord is my strength, for Je - ho - vah the Lord is my strength and my song, for Je -
Lord is my strength, for Je - ho - vah the Lord is my strength and my song, for Je - for the Lord . . . . is . . my strength, for Je - ho - vah the for Je - ho - vah the Lord is my strength, for Je - ho - vah the

- ho - vah the Lord is my strength, is my strength and my song, for Je -
- ho - vah the Lord is my strength, is my strength and my song, for the Lord . . . . is my strength, is my strength and my song, . .
Lord . . . is my strength, is my strength and my song, . .
- ho - vah the Lord is my strength, is my strength and my song, . .
Lord . . . is my strength, is my strength and my song, . .
Slower
fff
my strength and my song. . . .
Slower

DURING THE LAST MONTH.

Published by NOVELLO & CO., LIMITED.

ANDREW, N.—Holy Communion Service, in C. 1s.

BACH, J. S.—"Ready be, my soul, alway" ("Mache dich, mein Geist, bereit"). Cantata No. 115. (For the 22nd Sunday after Trinity). For four Solo Voices, Chorus, and Orchestra. Edited by Ivor Atkins. English text by Charles Sanford Terry. 1s. 6d.

BREWER, HERBERT.—Cloister-Garth. (Original Compositions for the Organ (New Series), No. 105.) 1s. 6d.

COLBORN, A. G.—Supplementary Chants. 2d.

DUNHILL, THOMAS F.—"The Ash Grove," arranged for T.T.B.B. (No. 599, "The Orpheus.") 4d.

—— "The Minstrel Boy," arranged for T.T.B.B. (No. 600, "The Orpheus.") 3d.

FLETCHER, PERCY E.—"Evening Song." Two-Part Song. (No. 225, Novello's Two-Part Songs.) 4d.

—— "Bees." Two-Part Song. (No. 226, Novello's Two-Part Songs.) 4d.

HARRISON, H.—"Levavi Oculos." Solo, or Quartet, and Chorus. 6d.

HOLST, GUSTAV.—First Choral Symphony. Op. 41. Full Score. £3 3s.

JACKSON, W.—"By Marykirk a sweet bird sang." Four-Part Song. (No. 1430, Novello's Part-Song Book.) 3d.

KNIGHT, J. D.—"The Old Cavalier." Song. 2s.

RATHBONE, GEORGE.—"Every good gift." Harvest Anthem. (No. 1144, Novello's Octavo Anthems.) 4d.

SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW, No. 410, contains the following music in both notations:—"The old woman" and "The little old man." Unison Songs by BERNARD JOHNSON. 2d.

SCHOOL SONGS.—Published in two forms. A. Voice Parts in Staff and Tonic Sol-fa Notations, with Pianoforte Accompaniment (8vo). B. Voice Parts only, in Tonic Sol-fa Notation.

		A.	B.
No. 1435.	"Laughing Song." Two-part Song. PERCY E. FLETCHER	—	3d.
1436.	"Bees." PERCY E. FLETCHER	—	3d.
1440.	"Noël de Strasbourg" (Christmas Carol of Strassburg). Harmonized by GUSTAVE FERRARI	2d.	—
1441.	"Berceuse" (Lullaby). Harmonized by GUSTAVE FERRARI	2d.	—
1442.	"Le Moulin" (The Water Mill). Harmonized by GUSTAVE FERRARI	2d.	—
1444.	"Le Miracle de Saint Nicholas" (The Miracle of Santa Claus). Harmonized by GUSTAVE FERRARI	4d.	—

DURING THE LAST MONTH—continued.

SCHOOL SONGS—(continued.)		A.	B.
No. 1445.	"La Ronde du Rosier" (The Rose Tree). Harmonized by GUSTAVE FERRARI	2d.	—
1446.	"Chanson à Baller" (Dancing Song). Harmonized by GUSTAVE FERRARI	2d.	—
1447.	"Le Beau Galant" (The Gallant Soldier). Harmonized by GUSTAVE FERRARI	2d.	—
1448.	"Légende des Pélerins" (The Legend of the Pilgrims). Harmonized by GUSTAVE FERRARI	2d.	—
1449.	"Le Premier Jour de Mai" (May Day). Harmonized by GUSTAVE FERRARI	2d.	—
1450.	"Les Trois Jupons Blancs" (The Three Petticoats). Harmonized by GUSTAVE FERRARI	2d.	—
1451.	"Celui que j'aime" (The one I love). Harmonized by GUSTAVE FERRARI	2d.	—

THIMAN, ERIC H.—"Shepherd's Evening Song." Two-part Song. (No. 224, Novello's Two-Part Songs.) 3d.

THOMPSON, ROY.—A Jingle ("Ding Dong Bell" and "Bobbie Shaftoe's gone to Sea"). Three-part Song. (No. 508, Novello's Trios for Female Voices.) 4d.

WALMISLEY, T. A.—"Hail, gladdening light." Edited by JOHN E. WEST. Unaccompanied Anthem for Evensong. (No. 1002, The Musical Times.) 2d.

WILLERTON, A.—"Beyond the darkness." Arranged as an Anthem, for Soprano Solo and Chorus. By T. W. HANFORTH. 6d.

PUBLISHED FOR

THE H. W. GRAY CO., NEW YORK.

BANKS, J. H. C.—"A Summer Idyll." For Organ. (St. Cecilia Series, No. 361.)

BECKER, R. L.—"Chanson Céleste." For Organ (St. Cecilia Series, No. 365.)

ELLINGFORD, H. F.—"A Civic March" (St. Cecilia Series, No. 395.)

MCCOLLIN, F.—"Now the day is over." Mixed Voices. Unaccompanied. (Church Music Review, No. 817.) 15 cents (8d.).

YATES, J. H.—"O Praise the Lord." Anthem for General Use. Mixed Voices. (Church Music Review, No. 819.) 12 cents (6d.).

SPECIAL NOTICE.

To insure insertion in their proper positions, Advertisements for the next issue should reach the Office, 160, Wardour Street, London, W.1, not later than FRIDAY, AUGUST 20 (FIRST POST).

ENGLISH LYRICS

SET TO MUSIC BY

C. HUBERT H. PARRY.

EACH SET, PRICE FOUR SHILLINGS.

FIRST SET.

1. *My true love hath my heart ...Sir Philip Sidney
2. Good-night ... ... Shelley
3. Where shall the lover rest ... ... Scott
4. Willow, Willow, Willow ... ... Shakespeare

SECOND SET.

1. O Mistress Mine ... ... Shakespeare
2. Take, O take those lips away ... Shakespeare
3. No longer mourn for me ... ... Shakespeare
4. Blow, blow, thou winter wind ... ... Shakespeare
5. When icicles hang by the wall ... Shakespeare

THIRD SET.

1. To Lucasta, on going to the wars ... ... Lovelace
2. If thou would'st ease thine heart ... ... Beddoes
3. *To Althea, from prison ... ... Lovelace
4. *Why so pale and wan ... ... Suckling
5. Through the ivory gate ... ... Julian Sturgis
6. Of all the torments ... ... William Walsh

FOURTH SET.

1. *Thine eyes still shined for me ... ... Emerson
2. *When lovers meet again Langdon Elwyn Mitchell
3. *When we two parted ... ... Byron
4. Weep you no more ... ... Anon.
5. There be none of beauty's daughters ... ...Byron
6. Bright star ... ...Keats

FIFTH SET.

1. *A stray nymph of Dian ... ... Julian Sturgis
2. *Proud Maisie... ... ... Scott
3. *Crabbed age and youth ... ... Shakespeare
4. Lay a garland on my hearse Beaumont & Fletcher
5. Love and laughter ... ... Arthur Butler
6. A girl to her glass ... ... Julian Sturgis
7. A Lullaby ... ... E. O. Jones

SIXTH SET.

1. *When comes my Gwen ... ... E. O. Jones
2. *And yet I love her till I die ... ... Anon.
3. *Love is a bable ... ... Anon.
4. *A lover's garland ... ... Alfred P. Graves
5. At the hour the long day ends ... Alfred P. Graves
6. Under the greenwood tree ... ... Shakespeare

SEVENTH SET.

1. On a time the amorous Silvy ... ... Anon.
2. Follow a shadow ... ... Ben Jonson
3. Ye little birds that sit and sing Thomas Heywood
4. O never say that I was false of heart Shakespeare
5. Julia ... ... Herrick
6. *Sleep ... ... Julian Sturgis

EIGHTH SET.

1. Whence ... ... Julian Sturgis
2. Nightfall in winter ... Langdon Elwyn Mitchell
3. Marian ... ... George Meredith
4. Dirge in woods ... ... George Meredith
5. Looking backward ... ... Julian Sturgis
6. Grapes ... ... Julian Sturgis

NINTH SET.

1. Three aspects ... ... Mary E. Coleridge
2. A fairy town (St. Andrew's) Mary E. Coleridge
3. The witches' wood ... ... Mary E. Coleridge
4. Whether I live ... ... Mary E. Coleridge
5. Armida's garden ... ... Mary E. Coleridge
6. *The maiden ... ... Mary E. Coleridge
7. There ... ... Mary E. Coleridge

TENTH SET.

1. My heart is like a singing bird Christina Rossetti
2. Gone were but the winter cold Allan Cunningham
3. A moment of farewell ... ... Julian Sturgis
4. The child and the twlight Langdon Elwyn Mitchell
5. From a city window Langdon Elwyn Mitchell
6. One silent night of late ... ... Herrick

ELEVENTH SET.

1. One golden thread ... ... Julia Chatterton
2. The spirit of the Spring ... Alfred Perceval Graves
3. What part of dread eternity ... Author unknown
4. The Blackbird ... ... Alfred Perceval Graves
5. The faithful lover ... ... Alfred Perceval Graves
6. If I might ride on puissant wing Julian Sturgis
7. Why art thou slow ... ...Massinger
8. She is my love beyond all thought Alfred P. Graves

TWELFTH SET.

1. When the dew is falling ... ... Julia Chatterton
2. To Blossoms ... ... Herrick
3. Rosaline ... ... Lodge
4. When the sun's great orb ... ... H. Warner
5. Dream pedlary ... ... Beddoes
6. O World, O Life, O Time ... ... Shelley
7. The sound of hidden music ... Julia Chatterton

* Published separately, price 1s. 6d.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE DESCANT HYMN-TUNE BOOK.

A COLLECTION OF WELL-KNOWN TUNES

ARRANGED BY

GEOFFREY SHAW

TUNES, AND APPROPRIATE HYMNS.

TUNE.	METRE.	HYMN.
Austria	8.7.8.7.D.	Glorious things of thee are spoken
		Praise the Lord ! ye heavens, adore Him
Bishopthorpe	C.M.	This is the day the Lord hath made
Darwall's 148th	6.6.6.6.4.4.4.4.	Ye holy Angels bright
Ein' feste Burg	8.7.8.7.6.6.6.7.	A safe stronghold our God is still
		Rejoice to-day with one accord
Eisenach	L.M.	Great God, Who, hid from mortal sight
		O Love, how deep ! how broad ! how high
Hanover	10.10.11.11.	Disposer Supreme, and Judge of the earth
		O worship the King, All-glorious above
Hyfrydol	8.7.8.7.D.	Alleluia ! sing to Jesus
Irish	C.M.	The Son of Man from Jordan rose
Lasst uns erfreuen	L.M. (with Alleluias)	Light's glittering morn bedecks the sky
		Ye watchers and ye holy ones
Leoni	6.6.8.4.D.	The God of Abraham praise
Luther	8.7.8.7.8.8.7.	Great God, what do I see and hear?
Melcombe	L.M.	New every morning is the love
Morning Hymn	L.M.	Awake, my soul, and with the sun
Nun danket	6.7.6.7.6.6.6.	Now thank we all our God
Old 100th (1st Version)	L.M.	All people that on earth do dwell
Old 100th (2nd Version)	L.M.	Before Jehovah's awful Throne
Old 104th	10.10.11.11.	Disposer Supreme, and judge of the earth
		O worship the King, All-glorious above
Richmond	C.M.	Praise to the Holiest in the height
Rockingham	L.M.	My God, and is Thy Table spread ?
		When I survey the wondrous Cross
St. Anne (1st Version)	C.M.	O God, our help in ages past
St. Anne (2nd Version)	C.M.	The Son of God goes forth to war
St. Theodulph	7.6.7.6.D.	All glory, laud, and honour
St. Thomas	S.M.	The Advent of our God
Surrey	8.8.8.8.8.	The Lord my pasture shall prepare
		We have not known Thee as we ought
Tallis' Canon	L.M.	Glory to Thee, my God, this night
Unser Herrscher	8.7.8.7.8.7.	Come ye faithful, raise the anthem
Victory	8.8.8.4.	The strife is o'er, the battle done
Wareham	L.M.	O Saviour, Lord, to Thee we pray
Warrington	L.M.	Now that the daylight fills the sky
Wiltshire	C.M.	Through all the changing scenes of life
Winchester New	L.M.	On Jordan's bank the Baptist's cry
Winchester Old (1st Version)	C.M.	When God of old came down from Heaven
Winchester Old (2nd Version)	C.M.	While shepherds watched their flocks by night

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.

Voice Parts only, 8*d*.

F LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

HARVEST FESTIVAL MUSIC.

CANTATAS.

A GOLDEN HARVEST

FOR TENOR AND BASS SOLI AND CHORUS
WITH HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY THE CONGREGATION

THE WORDS AND HYMNS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY
H. KNIGHT

THE MUSIC BY
THOMAS ADAMS.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.
Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.; Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

THE RAINBOW OF PEACE

FOR TENOR AND BASS SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORGAN

THE MUSIC BY
THOMAS ADAMS.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

HARVEST-TIDE

FOR TENOR AND BASS SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORGAN OR SMALL ORCHESTRA

THE MUSIC BY HUGH BLAIR.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence; Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling.
Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.
Full Score and Orchestral Parts can be hired.

HARVEST CANTATA

FOR CHORUS, SEMI-CHORUS, AND ORGAN.

THE WORDS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY
J. F. WALLER

THE MUSIC BY
G. M. GARRETT.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.
Tonic Sol-fa, 8d. Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100; or 3d. each with Music to the Hymns. Full Score and Orchestral Parts can be hired.

RUTH

FOR SOPRANO, CONTRALTO, AND BASS SOLI AND CHORUS

THE WORDS BY
E. OXENFORD

THE MUSIC BY
ALFRED R. GAUL.

Price Three Shillings; Paper boards, Four Shillings.
Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. Choruses only, 1s. 6d. Book of Words, 6s. 6d. per 100.
Full Score and Orchestral Parts can be hired.

HARVEST CANTATA

FOR SOPRANO (OR TENOR) AND CONTRALTO (OR BARITONE) SOLI AND CHORUS

THE WORDS BY
R. D. BETJEMANN.

THE MUSIC BY
JULIUS HARRISON.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.
Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.; Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.

SONG OF THANKSGIVING

FOR SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BASS (OR CONTRALTO) SOLI AND CHORUS.
WITH HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY THE CONGREGATION

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND ARRANGED BY
S. WENSLEY

THE MUSIC BY
J. H. MAUNDER.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence:
Paper boards, Three Shillings and Sixpence.
Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.; Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100;
String Parts, price 13s. 6d.; Wind Parts, 21s. 5d.; Full Score, MS.

THE JUBILEE CANTATA

FOR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

THE MUSIC BY
C. M. WEBER.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.
Paper boards, Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.
String Parts, 12s.; Wind Parts, 9s. 8d.; Full Score on hire.

SEED-TIME AND HARVEST

FOR SOPRANO AND TENOR SOLI AND CHORUS

THE MUSIC BY
JOHN E. WEST.

Price Three Shillings. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d.
Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100; or 3d. each with Music to the Hymns.
Orchestral Parts can be hired.

A HARVEST SONG

FOR SOPRANO SOLO AND CHORUS

THE WORDS BY
J. BENNETT.

THE MUSIC BY
C. LEE WILLIAMS.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.
String Parts, 9s. 9d.; Full Score and Wind Parts, MS.

HYMNS AND CAROLS.

BARNBY, J.—Come, ye thankful people, come ... ... 1½d.
Harvest-tide thanksgiving, The. (Tonic Sol-fa, 1½d.) ... 2d.
Words only, per 100 2s.
Let all our brethren join in one ... ... 1½d.
Words only, per 100 3s.
Lord of the harvest, Thee we hail (Two Versions) each 3d.
O Lord of heaven and earth and sea ... ... 1½d.
Praise, O praise, our God and King ... ... 3d.
Sing to the Lord a joyful song ... ... 3d.
Sower went forth sowing, The. (Tonic Sol-fa, 1½d.) ... 2d.
BUNNETT, ED.—Sing to the Lord a joyful song ... ... 1½d.
CRAMENT, J. M.—Sowing and reaping (Carol)
Words only, per 100 2s.
DYKES, J. B.—Holy is the seed-time ... ... 2d.
Words only, per 100 3s.
GILBERT, B.—Come, ye thankful people, come ... ... 1½d.
HARVEY, W. C.—We thank Thee Lord for this fair earth (Children's voices) (Staff and Sol-fa Notations) ... ... 1½d.
HERVEY, F. A. J.—Make melody within your hearts (Carol) 2d.
KETÈLBEY, A. W.—God with plenty fills the hours ... ... 4d.
LEE, T.—King and Ruler of Creation 4d
LOWE, A.—Holy is the seed-time (Carol) ... ... 2d.
Words only, per 100 3s.
MAUNDER, J. H.—Harvest Hymn of praise, A. (Tonic Sol-fa, 1½d.) ... ... 3d.
Words only, per 100 3s.
Joy of Harvest, The. (Tonic Sol-fa, 1½d.) ... ... 3d.
Words only, per 100 3s.
STIRLING, E.—Now Autumn strews on every plain ... ... 2d.
TOZER, F.—Lord of the rich and golden grain ... ... 3d.
Words only, per 100 3s.
TWELVE HYMNS selected from The Hymnary ... ... 1½d.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NOVELLO'S HARVEST ANTHEMS

SELECTED LIST.

EVERY GOOD GIFT. By GEORGE RATHBONE.
Price Fourpence.

THOMAS ADAMS

ALL THY WORKS PRAISE THEE
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

IT IS A GOOD THING TO GIVE THANKS
Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

W. G. ALCOCK

GIVE EAR, O YE HEAVENS
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

E. C. BAIRSTOW

I WILL GREATLY REJOICE
Price Fourpence.

J. BARNBY

THE EYES OF ALL WAIT UPON THEE
Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

HUGH BLAIR

OH, BRING TO THE LORD
Price Fourpence.

A. HERBERT BREWER

LET THE PEOPLE PRAISE THEE
Price Twopence.

EDWARD BUNNETT

BLESSED BE THOU, LORD GOD
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

O CLAP YOUR HANDS
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

PERCY C. BUCK

GOD BE MERCIFUL UNTO US
For Boys' Voices.
Price Fourpence.

H. A. CHAMBERS

IF YE WALK IN MY STATUTES
Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

EDWARD ELGAR

FEAR NOT, O LAND
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

PERCY E. FLETCHER

LET THE PEOPLE PRAISE THEE
Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

ALFRED R. GAUL

O BE JOYFUL IN THE LORD
Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

A. M. GOODHART

LET US NOW FEAR THE LORD
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

CUTHBERT HARRIS

AND GOD SAID
Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

SING A SONG OF PRAISE
Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

ALFRED HOLLINS

GOD THE ALL-FATHERLY
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

ALBERT LOWE

THE EARTH IS THE LORD'S
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

ARTHUR W. MARCHANT

I WILL MAGNIFY THEE
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

GEORGE C. MARTIN

THUS SAITH THE LORD GOD
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

E. W. NAYLOR

I WILL CAUSE THE SHOWER
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

J. VARLEY ROBERTS

BLESS THE LORD THY GOD
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

I WILL MAGNIFY THEE
Price Fourpence.

F. W. WADELY

PRAISE, O PRAISE OUR GOD
Price Twopence.

HERBERT W. WAREING

THE LORD GOD PLANTED A GARDEN
Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

HAROLD E. WATTS

THE GOD OF ABRAHAM PRAISE
Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

JOHN E. WEST

PRAISE TO GOD, IMMORTAL PRAISE
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

FATHER OF MERCIES, GOD OF LOVE
Arranged for Boys' or Female Voices.
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

W. WOLSTENHOLME

O THAT MEN WOULD PRAISE THE LORD
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

"Such settings as these cannot do otherwise than tend to popularise the Church Service."—Musical Standard, June 6, 1891.
"Good, effective, easy, and dignified."—Musical Times, April 1, 1891.
"Admirably adapted to meet the requirements of the majority of choirs and congregations." "Deserve extensive recognition and use."—Musical News, September 4 and 25, 1891.
Also recommended by the Guardian, Church Times, &c., &c.

POPULAR CHURCH MUSIC
BY
J. H. MAUNDER

	Staff Notation.	Tonic Sol-fa.
HARVEST ANTHEMS.
Sing to the Lord of Harvest	4d.	3d.
While the earth remaineth	4d.	3d.
Blessed be the Name of the Lord	4d.	3d.
SERVICES.
SERVICE IN G	2s.	1s. 4d.
Or, separately:—
Te Deum	4d.	3d.
Benedicite, omnia Opera	3d.	3d.
Benedictus	3d.	3d.
Jubilate	4d.	3d.
Office for the Holy Communion	10d.	8d.
Pater Noster from the above	3d.	3d.
Amen ditto	1½d.	1½d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis	4d.	3d.
SERVICE IN CHANT FORM (No. 1)	1s. 4d.	10d.
Or, separately:—
Te Deum, &c., with Kyrie	4d.	3d.
Office for the Holy Communion	8d.	6d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis	4d.	3d.
Te Deum in B flat	4d.	3d
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in C (partly Unison)	4d.	2d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in D	4d.	3d.
ORGAN.
Voix Seraphique (for Recitals)	2s. 6d.	—
CHURCH CANTATA.
Penitence, Pardon, and Peace (for general use)	2s.	1s. 4d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

SCHOOL MARCHES
FOR PIANOFORTE SOLO
BOOK III.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

CONTENTS.

Arrival of the Visitors	H. Hofmann
Bright and Buxom Lasses, from "Martha"	Flotow
Instrumental Band, The	Percy E. Fletcher
Little March, A	J. D. Davis
March from "Egmont"	Beethoven
March from "St. Polycarp"	F. A. G. Ouseley
March	Th. Kullak
March from "Tannhäuser"	Wagner
Marching off to Bed	Myles B. Foster
March of Priests, from "The Magic Flute"	Mozart
Soldiers' Chorus, from "Il Trovatore"	Verdi
Toy Soldiers' March	Tschaïkowsky

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NEARLY EIGHT MILLION COPIES OF CALEB SIMPER'S Compositions in Church Music now sold.

NEW HARVEST ANTHEMS, Etc.
COMPOSED BY CALEB SIMPER.

*RIPENED GRAIN. Just Published	4d.
Exceptionally interesting. Strong, sonorous choruses.
*LORD OF THE HARVEST	10th Edit. 4d.
Very effective Solos and irresistible Choruses.
*REJOICE WITH THANKSGIVING	10th Edit. 4d.
*RENDER THANKS AND PRAISE	11th Edit. 4d.
*REJOICE IN ALL THE GOOD THINGS	12th Edit. 4d.
Contains imitative parts and rich modulations.
*SING FORTH HIS PRAISE	11th Edit. 4d.
*BE THANKFUL UNTO HIM	10th Edit. 5d.
*A BOUNTEOUS HARVEST	5th 1000 4d.
*LET EVERY THING PRAISE THE LORD	7th Edit. 4d.
THY BOUNTEOUS GIFTS	5th Edit. 8d.
Short Work. Solos and Choruses. Occupies about 18 minutes.
NEW NO. 11 VOLUNTARY BOOK	7th Edit. 2s.
NEW NO. 12 VOLUNTARY BOOK	6th Edit. 2s.

Seventeen pieces in each on Two Staves with Pedal part indicated.
*Those marked * are also issued in Tonic Sol-fa.*
London: A. WEEKES & Co., 14, Hanover Street, Regent Street, W.1.
Chicago, U.S.A.: CLAYTON F. SUMMY Co., 429, S. Wabash Ave.

These Compositions are exceptionally Melodious, Interesting, and effective. Have attained world-wide appreciation.

POPULAR HARVEST ANTHEMS.
COMPOSED BY EDWYN A. CLARE.

*THOU CROWNEST THE YEAR	31st 1000 4d.
*SING UNTO GOD WITH THANKSGIVING	36th 1000 6d.
*HOW GREAT IS HIS GOODNESS	26th 1000 4d.
*THE FRUIT OF THY WORKS	23rd 1000 6d.
*HE GIVES US FRUITFUL SEASONS	12th 1000 6d.
*THE EYES OF ALL WAIT UPON THEE	72nd 1000 4d.
Sung at a Festival of 1,500 voices at Newcastle-on-Tyne.
FEAR NOT, O LAND	11th 1000 4d.
*SING PRAISES TO HIS NAME	15th 1000 4d.
O LORD, HOW MANIFOLD ARE THY WORKS	10th 1000 6d.
PRAISE THE LORD, O JERUSALEM	50th 1000 4d.
Sung at Choral Festivals, Wem and Downpatrick Cathedral.
*ALL THY WORKS SHALL PRAISE THEE	5th 1000 4d.
*THE BLESSINGS OF PEACE	5th 1000 4d.
FAVOURITE MAGNIFICAT AND NUNC DIMITTIS IN D	31st 1000 6d.
Full of flowing melody and effect. Sung at a Choral Festival.

*Those marked * may also be had in Tonic Sol-fa.*
London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.
New York: THE H. W. GRAY Co., Sole Agents for the U.S.A.

SACRED SONG (for Soprano or Tenor).
"MY GOD, MY FATHER."
MUSIC BY
REV. ERNEST H. MELLING, F.R.C.O.
Novello & Co., Ltd., price 2*s*. No performing fee.
Suitable for Organ Recitals or Hospital Broadcast.

HARVEST ANTHEM.
ALL THY WORKS PRAISE THEE
BY T. MEE PATTISON.
Tenor or Treble Solo and Two Choruses.
Price 3*d*.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NOCTURNE
FOR VIOLONCELLO (OR VIOLIN) AND PIANOFORTE.
BY COLIN MACLEOD CAMPBELL.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.

ARRANGEMENT FOR SMALL ORCHESTRA.

	s.	d.
Piano Conductor	1	6
String Parts	2	8
Wind Parts, &c.	4	0
Harmonium	0	8

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NOVELLO'S EDITIONS.
ORATORIOS, CANTATAS, ETC.

(S.A.T.B. EDITIONS ONLY.)

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE EACH.

ADAMS, T.—†Cross of Christ, The.
——†Golden Harvest, A.
——†Holy Child, The.
——†Nativity, The.
—— Rainbow of Peace, The.
ALCOCK, W. G.—And I heard a great voice.
ANDERTON, T.—Norman Baron, The.
——†Wreck of the Hesperus, The.
ASPA, E.—Gipsies, The.
ASTORGA.—Stabat Mater.
AUSTIN, F.—†Songs in a Farmhouse.
BACH.—†Bide with us.
——† Ditto. (Welsh Words).
—— Christ lay in death's dark prison.
—— Christians, grave ye this glad day.
——†Christmas Oratorio. Parts 1—2.
Ditto Ditto, Parts 3—4.
Ditto Ditto, Parts 5—6.
——†Come, Jesu, come (Motet).
—— Come, Redeemer of our race.
—— From depths of woe I call on Thee.
—— Give the hungry man thy bread.
—— God goeth up with shouting.
——†God so loved the world.
——†God's time is the best.
——† Ditto (Welsh Words).
——†How brightly shines yon star of morn.
—— If thou but sufferest God to guide thee.
——†Jesu, Priceless Treasure (Motet).
——† Ditto (Welsh Words).
—— Jesus, now will we praise Thee.
—— Jesus sleeps, what hope remaineth.
—— Let songs of rejoicing be raised.
—— Lord is a sun and shield, The.
——†Lord is my Shepherd, The.
—— Lord, rebuke me not.
——*†Magnificat in D.
——†My spirit was in heaviness.
—— O Christ, my all in living.
—— O Jesu Christ, Thou Prince of Peace.
——†O Light Everlasting.
—— O praise the Lord for all His mercies.
—— O teach me, Lord, my days to number.
—— Praise our God Who reigns in Heaven.
—— Praise thou the Lord, Jerusalem.
—— Rise, O Soul.
—— Sages of Sheba, The.
——†Sing ye to the Lord (Motet).
——†Sleepers, wake.
——†Spirit also helpeth us, The (Motet).
——†Stronghold Sure, A.
—— There is nought of soundness in all my body.
—— Thou Guide of Israel.
—— Wailing, crying, mourning, sighing.
—— Watch ye, pray ye.
—— When will God recall my spirit.
—— Whoso doth offer thanks.
BARNBY, J.—†Rebekah.
BARTON, M.—Mass in A.
BEETHOVEN.—†Choral Fantasia.
—— Engedi.
——†Mass in C (Latin).
——*Mass in C.
—— Mount of Olives.
BENNETT, G. J.—Easter Hymn (On the morn of Easter Day).
BENNETT, W. S.—Exhibition Ode.
——†May Queen, The.
——†Woman of Samaria, The.
BETJEMANN.—Song of the Western Men.
BLAIR, H.—†Harvest-tide.
BRAHMS, J.—Song of Destiny, A.
—— Songs of Love (Vocal Part only).
BREE, J. B. VAN.—†St. Cecilia's Day.
BREWER, A. H.—O praise the Lord.
—— Song of Eden, A.
BRIDGE, J. F.—Hymn to the Creator.
——†Inchcape Rock, The.
——†Lord's Prayer, The.
——*†Rock of Ages.
CARISSIMI.—*Jephthah.
CHERUBINI.—*Mass, Requiem, in C minor (No. 1).
—— Mass (Coronation) in A (No. 3).
—— Mass, in C (No. 4).
COBB, G. F.—My soul truly waiteth.
COSTA, M.—Dream, The.
COWEN, F. H.—†He giveth His beloved sleep.
DALE, B. J.—†Before the paling of the stars.
DAVIES, H. W.—†Hervé Riel.
—— Ode on Time.
DUNHILL, T. F.—†Tubal Cain.
ELGAR, E.—†For the Fallen.
——†Fourth of August, The.
—— Te Deum and Benedictus, in F.
ELLICOTT, R. F.—Elysium.
FRANZ, R.—Praise ye the Lord.
GADE, N. W.—†Christmas Eve.
——†Erl-King's Daughter, The.
—— Zion.
GARRETT, G. M.—†Harvest Cantata.
GAUL, A. R.—†Ruth (Choruses only).
GOETZ, H.—†By the Waters of Babylon.
——†Nœnia.
GOODHART, A. M.—Earl Haldan's Daughter.
GOUNOD, CH.—Daughters of Jerusalem.
—— De Profundis (Latin).
—— Ditto (English).
——†Faust (Selection for Concert Performance).
——*†Gallia.
—— Messe Solennelle, Ste. Cécile (Latin).
—— Out of Darkness.
—— Passion, The.
——†Redemption (Part 2).
—— Ditto (Part 3).
GRAUN.—Passion, The (Choruses only).
GRAY, A.—Legend of the Rock Buoy Bell
GRIMM, J. O.—Soul's Aspiration, The.
HANDEL.—†Acis and Galatea.
—— Chandos Te Deum.
—— Dettingen Te Deum.
—— Dixit Dominus.
——*Except the Lord build the house.
——†Israel in Egypt (Pocket Edition).
——†Judas Maccabæus (Ditto.)
——†Messiah (Ditto).
——*Nisi Dominus.
—— O come, let us sing unto the Lord.
——†O praise the Lord.
—— Ode on St. Cecilia's Day.
—— Passion of Christ, The (Abridged).
—— Utrecht Jubilate.
—— Ways of Zion, The.
HARRISON, J.—Christmas Cantata.
——†Harvest Cantata.
HARRISS, C. A. E.—Sands of Dee, The.
HARWOOD, BASIL.—Love Incarnate.
HAYDN.—†Creation, The (Pocket Edition).
——*Mass, in B flat (No. 1).
—— Mass, in B flat (No. 1) (Latin).
—— Mass, in C (No. 2) (Latin).
—— Mass, in D (No. 3) (Latin).
——*Mass, in D (No. 3).
——*Te Deum Laudamus, in C.
—— Seasons, The, From:
†Spring, Autumn.
Summer, Winter.
—— Seasons, The (Choruses only).
HECHT, E.—O may I join the choir invisible.
HIGGS, H. M.—Erl-King, The.
HILLER, F.—†Song of Victory, A.
HOLST, G.—Ode to Death.
—— Ode on a Grecian Urn.
HUMMEL.—Mass, in B flat (No. 1).
—— Mass, in E flat (No. 2).
—— Mass, in D (No. 3).
JENSEN, A.—†Feast of Adonis, The.
JORDAN, W.—Blow ye the trumpet in Zion.
LEMARE, E. H.—'Tis the spring of souls to-day.
LEO, L.—Dixit Dominus.
LLOYD, C. H.—O give thanks unto the Lord.
—— Song of Balder, The.
MACCUNN, H.—†Lord Ullin's Daughter.
——†Wreck of the Hesperus, The.
MACFARREN, G. A.—†May Day.
—— Outward Bound.
MACKENZIE, A. C.—†Bride, The.
MENDELSSOHN.—†As the hart pants.
——†Athalie.
——*Ave Maria (Saviour of Sinners).
——†Christus.
——†Come, let us sing.
——†Elijah (Pocket Edition).
—— Ditto (Choruses only).
MENDELSSOHN.—continued.
——†Festgesang (Hymns of Praise).
——†Hear my Prayer.
——†Hymn of Praise (Lobgesang).
——*†Lauda Sion.
——†Lord, how long.
——†Loreley.
—— Man is Mortal.
——*Not unto us.
——*St. Paul (Pocket Edition).
—— Ditto (Choruses only).
——†Walpurgis Night, The First.
——†When Israel out of Egypt came.
MEYERBEER.—91st Psalm (Latin).
—— 91st Psalm (English).
MOZART.—King Thamos.
——*Mass in C (No. 1).
—— Mass in B flat (No. 7) (Latin).
—— Mass in G (No. 12) (Latin).
—— Mass in G (No. 12) (English).
——*†Mass in G (No. 12).
—— Mass, Requiem, in D minor (No. 15) (Latin).
——*†Mass, Requiem, in D minor (No. 15).
NORTH, S.—†In the Morning.
PALESTRINA.—Surge Illuminare.
PARKER, H. W.—Kobolds, The.
PARRY, C. H. H.—†Blest Pair of Sirens.
——†Chivalry of the Sea, The (Naval Ode).
—— Glories of our Blood and State, The.
—— Te Deum Laudamus (Coronation).
PINSUTI, C.—Phantoms.
PROUT, E.—Freedom.
——†Hundredth Psalm, The.
PURCELL.—Te Deum and Jubilate, in D.
——†Te Deum, in D.
—— Te Deum, in D (Latin).
ROMBERG.—Harmony of the Spheres, The.
——†Lay of the Bell, The.
—— Te Deum Laudamus, in D.
——†Transient and the Eternal, The.
ROSSINI.—*†Stabat Mater.
SACHS, ED.—King Cups.
—— Water-Lilies.
SCHUBERT.—Mass, in A flat.
—— Mass, in B flat.
—— Mass, in C.
——†Mass, in F.
—— Mass, in G.
——†Song of Miriam.
SCHUMANN.—Advent Hymn, "In Lowly Guise."
—— King's Son, The.
—— Manfred.
—— Mignon's Requiem
——†New Year's Song.
—— Pilgrimage of the Rose.
SCHUTZ, H.—Passion of our Lord, The.
SELBY, B. L.—Dying Swan, The.
SILAS, E.—Mass, in C.
SMITH, A. B.—In Glorious Freedom.
SMITH, A. M.—Ode to the North-East Wind
SPOHR.—Christian's Prayer, The.
——†God, Thou art Great.
—— Hymn to St. Cecilia.
——†Last Judgment, The.
STEPHEN, D.—†Laird o' Cockpen, The.
STOCKER, S.—Song of the Fates.
STOJOWSKI, S.—Springtime.
SULLIVAN, A.—Exhibition Ode.
—— †Te Deum (Thanksgiving).
THOMAS, A. G.—†Sun Worshippers, The.
THORNE, E. H.—Be merciful unto me.
TOURS, B.—Festival Ode, A.
WAGNER.—Flying Dutchman (A Selection from Act II.).
WALKER, E.—Hymn to Dionysus, A.
—— Ode to a Nightingale.
WEBER, C. M.—Jubilee Cantata.
—— *Mass in E flat.
—— *Mass in G.
—— Preciosa.
—— Three Seasons.
WESLEY, S.—Dixit Dominus.
WESLEY, S. S.—O Lord, Thou art my God.
WEST, J. E.—Lord, I have loved the habitation of Thy House.
—— Song of Zion, A.
WOOD, C.—Ode to the West Wind.
WOODMAN, R. T.—Falmouth.

*The Works marked thus * have Latin and English words. Those marked thus † may be had in Tonic Sol-fa Notation.*
Cantatas, &c., for Female and Male Voices (see Novello's Catalogues).

LONDON: NOVELLO & COMPANY, LIMITED.

JUST PUBLISHED

OVERTURE IN D MINOR

COMPOSED BY

HANDEL.

ARRANGED FOR THE ORGAN

BY

H. F. ELLINGFORD.

FROM THE ORCHESTRAL TRANSCRIPTION

BY

EDWARD ELGAR.

Price Two Shillings and Threepence.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

TWELVE
Short Introductory Voluntaries

FOR THE ORGAN

BY

W. G. ALCOCK.

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

Recent Organ and Church Music

BY

BASIL HARWOOD.

	s.	d.
FANTASIA, "CHRISTMASTIDE"	3	6
RHAPSODY	3	0
IN AN OLD ABBEY	2	0
WEDDING MARCH	2	0
THREE PRELUDES ON ANGLICAN CHANTS	2	0
VOLUNTARY IN D FLAT	2	0
A SHORT AND EASY COMMUNION SERVICE IN E FLAT ... (Voice part only, for Congregational use, 6*d*.)	1	0

ANTHEMS.

GREAT GOD, WHO, HID FROM MORTAL SIGHT (General use)	0	6
O HOW PLENTIFUL IS THY GOODNESS (Harvest) ...	0	6

HYMNS.

LEAD, KINDLY LIGHT (Tune, "Bradfield College") ...	0	2
AUTHOR OF LIFE DIVINE...	0	2

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

HOLY COMMUNION IN C, including AGNUS, BENEDICTUS, ETC.
By HERBERT ROLFE, F.R.C.O.
Third thousand, 9*d*.
"... One of the most pleasing and devotional compositions of its class with which we have met for some time."—Church Review.
"... thoroughly devotional in tone."—Musical News.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

JESUS, THE VERY THOUGHT OF THEE.

SACRED SONG.

THE WORDS BY

BERNARD OF CLAIRVAUX,
tr. E. CASWALL.

THE MUSIC BY

ERIC H. THIMAN.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE GOD OF LOVE MY SHEPHERD IS.

SACRED SONG.

THE WORDS BY

GEORGE HERBERT.

THE MUSIC BY

ERIC H. THIMAN.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY Limited.

NO. 101.—NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS.

EAR-TRAINING

INCLUDING

MUSICAL APPRECIATION AND

RHYTHMIC MOVEMENTS

BY

MABEL CHAMBERLAIN.

COMPLETE, SIX SHILLINGS,
Paper Boards, 7*s*.
Or,
In Two Books: Letterpress and Illustrations, 4*s*.
Music only, 3*s*.

The Ear-Training Course outlined in this book is intended primarily for Class use, but if a judicious selection be made from the exercises, the course can be used with equal benefit by private teachers for individual pupils. Senior pupils and students who desire to Study music, and who have received little or no previous tuition, cannot do better than work rapidly through these progressive exercises and tests. A Prospectus will be sent on application.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

Produced at the Gloucester Musical Festival.

A SPRIG OF SHAMROCK

FOUR OLD IRISH AIRS.

For Soprano or Tenor Voice, with String Quartet or Pianoforte Accompaniment.

POEMS BY F. W. HARVEY.

MUSIC ADAPTED AND ARRANGED BY
A. HERBERT BREWER.

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE
STRING PARTS, Price 8*s.*

An Edition for Contralto or Baritone is also published.
Price 3*s.* 6*d.*

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

Produced at the Gloucester Musical Festival.

LOVE INCARNATE

A SETTING OF LINES
BY ROBERT BROWNING.

With a Verse of the Hymn, "Jesu, dulcis memoria,"

BY
ST. BERNARD OF CLAIRVAUX.
Translated by the Rev. J. M. NEALE.

Composed for Chorus, Semi-Chorus, Orchestra, and Organ

BY BASIL HARWOOD.
(Op. 37.)

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

HIAWATHA'S WEDDING-FEAST

AND

THE DEATH OF MINNEHAHA

COMPOSED BY
S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR.

ARRANGED FOR PIANOFORTE SOLO
BY JOHN POINTER.

Price Five Shillings and Sixpence each.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

LONDON TOWN

SONG.

THE WORDS BY
JOHN MASEFIELD.

THE MUSIC BY EDWARD GERMAN.

IN TWO KEYS.
Price Two Shillings each.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

ON A NANKIN PLATE

SONG.

WORDS BY AUSTIN DOBSON

MUSIC BY HARVEY GRACE.

TWO KEYS.

Price Two Shillings each.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

NOVELLO'S SCHOOL SONGS.
BOOK 273.

THIRTY SONGS

BY FRANZ SCHUBERT.

BOTH NOTATIONS.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NOVELLO'S MUSIC FOR SMALL

	Full Orchestra.	Small Orchestra.	Full Score.	Piano Conductor.	Violin Conductor.	Piano Solo.	Violin and Piano.	Violin 1mo.	Violin 2do.	Viola.	'Cello and Basso.	'Cello.	Basso.	Piccolo.
AUSTIN, E., Sweet Night	...	2/-	...	...	...	...	2/3	4d.	...	...	8d.	...	...	...
BENDALL, Pas Seul	...	7/4	...	...	...	1/6	...	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	8d.	8d.	...
BENNETT, Eventide Melody	...	4/4	4/-	...	...	2/3	...	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	8d.	4d.	...
BLAIR, Serenata	...	5/4	...	...	8d.	2/3	...	8d.	4d.	4d.	...	4d.	4d.	...
BREWER, Auf Wiedersehen	...	4/4	...	...	8d.	3/-	3/-	8d.	...	4d.	...	4d.	4d.	...
CAMPBELL, Nocturne	...	7/4	...	1/6	...	...	2/-	8d.	8d.	4d.	...	8d.	4d.	...
CARSE, Barbara Allen Variations ...	...	6/-	...	2/3	...	...	...	1/6	1/6	1/6	1/6	...	...	...
„ Gavotte in G	...	5/4	...	...	...	2/3	2/3	8d.	4d.	4d.	8d.	...	...	...
COLERIDGE-TAYLOR, Waltzes, Four ...	...	19/5	...	...	...	4/-	4/6	2/3	2/3	2/3	2/3	...	...	...
„ Hiawatha (Selection from Wedding-Feast)... ...	...	23/9	...	2/3	...	...	...	2/3	1/6	1/6	...	1/6	1/6	...
„ § Nero Music. Prelude, 2nd Entr'acte ...	17/-	...	...	3/-	...	3/-	3/-	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	8d.	8d.	...
„ § Nero Music. Intermezzo	7/4	...	...	8d.	...	2/3	3/-	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	8d.	4d.	...
„ § Nero Music. Finale, 1st Entr'acte ...	18/2	...	...	2/3	...	3/-	3/-	1/6	8d.	8d.	...	8d.	8d.	1/6A
„ § Nero Music. Eastern Dance	11/8	...	...	1/6	...	3/-	3/-	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	8d.	8d.	...
„ § Novelletten, Nos. 1, 2, & 3 ea.	...	3/8	4/-	...	...	...	3/-	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	8d.	8d.	...
„ „ No. 4	...	6/2	4/-	...	...	...	3/-	1/6	1/6	1/6	...	8d.	8d.	...
COWEN, English Dances, Four ...	...	22/2	...	...	...	4/-	4/6	2/3	2/3	2/3	2/3	...	...	...
„ February (Months, No. 2)...	...	6/4	...	...	...	3/-	...	8d.	8d.	4d.	...	8d.	4d.	...
„ May („ „ 5)...	4/-	...	...	...	...	3/-	...	4d.	4d.	4d.	...	8d.	4d.	...
„ June („ „ 6)...	4/8	...	...	...	...	3/-	...	4d.	4d.	4d.	...	4d.	...	4d.
„ September („ „ 9)...	10/-	...	...	...	...	3/-	...	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	8d.	8d.	...
„ November („ „ 11)...	11/10	...	...	...	...	3/-	...	1/6	8d.	8d.	...	8d.	8d.	...
„ December („ „ 12)...	7/8	...	...	...	...	3/-	...	4d.	4d.	4d.	...	4d.	4d.	...
„ Menuet d'Amour	5/8	...	5/6	...	...	2/3	3/-	8d.	4d.	4d.	8d.	...	...	...
DAVIES, Solemn Melody (str. & org.)...	...	2/4	3/-	...	...	2/3	2/3	4d.	4d.	4d.	...	4d.	4d.	...
DUNHILL, Chiddingfold Suite...	...	9/9	7/6	...	...	...	...	2/3	2/3	2/3	...	1/6	1/6	...
ELGAR, Chanson de Matin	...	4/-	4/-	8d.	...	2/3	3/-	4d.	4d.	8d.	...	4d.	4d.	...
„ Chanson de Nuit	...	3/8	4/-	8d.	...	2/3	2/3	4d.	4d.	4d.	...	4d.	4d.	...
„ Pleading	...	3/4	...	...	...	...	...	4d.	4d.	4d.	4d.	...	...	...
„ Serenade (Wand of Youth) ...	...	2/4	...	1/6A	...	2/3	3/-	4d.	4d.	4d.	8d.	...	...	...
„ Canto Popolare	...	6/4	4/6	...	...	3/-	3/-	4d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	...
FLETCHER, Bagatelles (strings only) ...	...	3/6	...	...	...	3/-	...	8d.	8d.	8d.	1/6	...	...	...
„ The Toy Soldiers' March...	...	8/-	...	...	8d.	2/3	...	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	8d.A
„ Valse Lyrique	...	9/6	...	...	...	2/3	...	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	...
GOUNOD, There is a green hill ...	4/8	...	...	8d.	...	...	...	4d.	4d.	4d.	4d.	...	...	...
HANDEL, Dance of Sailors	7/8	...	...	...	...	1/6	...	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	...
HAYNES, Westwood Gavotte	...	6/4	...	...	...	3/-	3/-	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	...
HOLBROOKE, Souvenir de Printemps ...	...	4/4	...	...	...	3/-	3/-	4d.	4d.	4d.	8d.	...	...	...
IRELAND, Bagatelle	...	7/8	...	...	...	...	3/-	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	...
JOHNSON, Elves (Faerie Suite, No. 1)...	...	8/-	...	1/6	...	3/-	...	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	8d.	8d.	...
„ Pavane in A	...	6/8	...	8d.	...	2/3	...	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	...
KREUZ, Conversation Amoureuse ...	...	6/10	...	1/6	...	3/-	3/-	8d.	8d.	8d.	1/6	...	...	...
LEMARE, Adantino	...	5/8	...	1/6	...	...	3/-	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	...
„ Chant sans Paroles	...	5/-	...	...	8d.	2/3	3/-	4d.	8d.	8d.	...	4d.	4d.	...
„ Menuet Nuptiale	...	4/4	...	8d.	...	...	...	4d.	4d.	4d.	8d.	...	...	...
MACKENZIE, Benedictus	4/8	...	7/6	...	...	...	3/-	8d.A	A	8d.	8d.	...	...	...
PURCELL, Gordian Knot Untied, 1st and 2nd Suites ... each	...	2/8	4/-	...	...	...	...	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	...
„ Suite	...	2/8	1/6	...	...	...	...	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	...
„ The Virtuous Wife (Incidental Music)	...	...	4/-	...	...	...	...	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	...
RAMEAU, Gavotte	6/-	...	...	...	...	2/3	...	4d.	4d.	4d.	8d.	...	...	...
RAWLINSON, Serenade	...	3/8	...	...	8d.	2/3	...	8d.	4d.	4d.	8d.	...	...	...
„ Aubade	...	6/-	...	...	8d.	2/3	...	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	...
REED, Serenade (Suite Venitienne) ...	...	4/8	...	8d.	...	...	...	4d.	4d.	4d.	8d	...	...	...
ROËCKEL, Graceful Dance	6/8	...	...	...	...	3/-	3/-	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	...
ROWLEY, Andante Religioso in $\frac{7}{4}$ time	...	2/8	...	...	...	...	...	4d.	4d.	4d.	...	4d.	4d.	...
WADDINGTON, Intermezzo	...	7/4	...	1/6	...	...	...	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	8d.	8d.	...
WAREING, Summergold Gavotte ...	7/4	...	...	...	...	3/-	...	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	...
WENDT, Air de Ballet	7/4	...	...	1/6	...	3/-	3/-	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	8d.	8d.	...
WEST, Intermezzo	...	5/-	...	8d.	...	...	2/3	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	...
„ Marjorie Gavotte	5/8	...	...	...	...	3/-	...	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	...
„ Maypole Dance...	14/-	...	...	2/3	...	3/-	3/-	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	8d.	8d.	...
WOLSTENHOLME, Allegretto in E♭ ...	6/-	...	...	...	...	2/3	2/3	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	...

N.B.—Parts marked A, B, C, D, E, or F, are printed together.

ORCHESTRAS. SUITABLE FOR CINEMAS, &c.

Flauti.	Oboi.	Clarinetti.	Fagotti.	Corni 1 & 2.	Corni 3 & 4.	Trombe.	Cornetti.	Tromboni 1 and 2.	Trombone 3.	Euphonium.	Tuba.	Timpani.	Cassa.	Piatti.	Side Drum.	Triangle.	Tambourine.	Harp.	Solo-Cornet or Euphonium.	Organ or Harmonium.	Harp or Piano.	Bells.
4d.	...	4d.	...	...	...	...	4d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	4d.	...	...	...	...	4d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	8d.	...	8d.	...	...
8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
4d.	4d.	8d.	4d.	8d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	4d.	...	...	...	...	...	...
4d.	4d.	8d.	4d.	8d.	...	...	4d.	...	4d.	...	...	4d.	...	...	...	...	...	8d.	...	8d.	...	...
...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
4d.	4d.	8d.	4d.	8d.	...	...	4d.	...	4d.	...	...	4d.A	...	...	...	A	...	...	...	...	...	...
1/6	1/6	2/3	1/6	1/6	...	1/6	...	...	...	...	...	8d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
2/3	1/6	2/3	2/3	2/3	...	1/6	...	...	8d.	...	...	8d.	8d.	...	...	...	...	1/6	...	...	...	...
1/6	1/6	1/6	1/6	1/6	1/6	8d.	...	8d.	8d.	...	8d.	8d.	8d.A	A	A	A	...	8d.	...	...	...	...
8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	4d.	...	8d.	...	...	...	...
A	1/6	1/6	1/6	1/6	1/6	8d.	...	8d.	8d.	...	8d.	8d.	8d.B	B	4d.	B	...	8d.	...	...	...	...
8d.	†8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	8d.	4d.	...	4d.	8d.A	8d.B	B	A	4d.C	...	8d.	...	...	...	C
...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	4d.A	A	...	...	...	...	...
...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	4d.A	A	...	...	...	...	...
3/-	1/6	3/-	1/6	1/6	...	...	8d.	...	8d.	...	...	8d.	...	8d.A	...	A	...	...	...	...	...	...
4d.	8d.	8d.	4d.	8d.	4d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	8d.	...	...	...	...
4d.	4d.	4d.	4d.	4d.	4d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
x8d.	8d.	8d.	4d.	4d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	4d.
8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	8d.	4d.	...	4d.	4d.	...	...	4d.A	A	...	...	...	...	...	...
8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	8d.	8d.	...	8d.	8d.	...	4d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
4d.	4d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	4d.	...	4d.	4d.	...	4d.	4d.	...	...	...	...	...	4d.	...	4d.	...	4d.
8d.	4d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	8d.	...
...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	8d.	...	...
...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
4d.	4d.	4d.	4d.	4d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	4d.	...
4d.	4d.	4d.	4d.	4d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	4d.	...
4d.	...	4d.	4d.	4d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	8d.	...
4d.	...	4d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	A	...	...	...	...
8d.	4d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	4d.	...	...	...	...	...	8d.	...	...	...	...
...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
A	8d.	8d.	8d.B	8d.	...	...	8d.	8d.	...	B	...	...	...	...	8d.C	C	...	...	...	...	...	...
8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	8d.	8d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	8d.	...	...	...	...	1/6	...
4d.D	D	4d.	4d.	4d.	4d.E	...	E	4d.F	F	...	...	F	...	...	...	...	...	...	8d.	...	8d.	...
8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	...	...	...	4d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
8d.	8d.	8d.	4d.	8d.	...	...	4d.	...	...	...	...	4d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
4d.	4d.	8d.	4d.	8d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	4d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	8d.	4d.	...	...	...	8d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
8d.	4d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	8d.	4d.	...	...	...	4d.	...	...	...	4dA.	A	...	...	...	...	...
8d.	4d.	8d.	4d.	8d.	...	...	8d.	...	4d.	...	...	4d.A	...	...	...	A	...	...	...	...	...	...
8d.	...	8d.	...	...	...	...	8d.	...	8d.	...	...	8d.A	...	...	...	A	...	...	...	...	...	...
8d.	4d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
4d.	4d.	8d.	4d.	8d.	...	...	4d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
4d.	4d.	4d.	4d.	8d.	...	...	...	4d.	...	...	...	4d.A	...	...	...	A	...	...	...	...	...	...
8d.	...	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
...	...	...	...	8d.	...	...	4d.	...	...	4d.	...	4d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
4d.	4d.	4d.	4d.	4d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
8d.	8d.	8d.	4d.	4d.	4d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
8d.	...	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	8d.	...	...	...	...	8d.A	...	...	...	A	...	...	...	...	...	...
...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	4d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	8d.	...	...
8d.	...	8d.	8d.	8d	...	...	8d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	8d.	...	...	...	...	...	...
8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	8d.	4d.	...	...	...	4d.A	...	...	...	A	...	...	...	...	...	...
8d.	8d.	8d.	4d.	8d.	...	...	8d.	...	...	...	...	4d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
4d.	4d.	4d.	4d.	4d.	...	...	4d.	...	...	...	...	4d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
4d.	4d.	8d.	4d.	8d.	...	...	4d.	...	...	...	...	4d.A	...	...	...	A	...	...	...	...	...	...
1/6	1/6	1/6	1/6	8d.	...	...	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	8d.	8d.A	...	...	...	A	8d	...	...	...	...	...
8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...

† Oboe has the Melody. X Flute has the Melody. § May be had as a complete Suite.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE BEAUTIFUL FOLK-SONGS OF FRANCE

BOOK I.

(Novello's School Song Book, No. 277)

COLLECTED BY

AUSTIN DE CROZE

AND HARMONIZED BY

GUSTAVE FERRARI

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS COMPLETE

Or, Separate Numbers:

No.		PRICE
1440	NOËL DE STRASBOURG	2d.
1441	BERCEUSE	2d.
1442	LE MOULIN	2d.
1443	HOPSA! LISELLA	2d.
1444	LE MIRACLE DE SAINT NICOLAS	4d.
1445	LA RONDE DU ROSIER	2d.
1446	CHANSON À BALLER	2d.
1447	LE BEAU GALANT	2d.
1448	LÉGENDE DES PÉLERINS	2d.
1449	LE PREMIER JOUR DE MAI	2d.
1450	LES TROIS JUPONS BLANCS	2d.
1451	CELUI QUE J'AIME	2d.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

INCLUDED ON THE LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL REQUISITION LIST.

THE BEAUTIFUL SONGS OF FRANCE

BOOK II. (1925).

TWELVE SONGS AND DANCES

OF

FLANDERS, ARTOIS, PICARDY, NORMANDY, CHAMPAGNE, LORRAINE, and ALSACE

COLLECTED AND EDITED BY

AUSTIN DE CROZE

WITH PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENTS

BY

LEOPOLD ASHTON, GUSTAVE FERRARI, AND OTHERS.

With Illustrations, English translations, and descriptions and diagrams of the dances

PREFACE BY DR. W. H. D. ROUSE, Perse School, Cambridge.

FOREWORD BY HARVEY GRACE and LASTWORD BY EDWIN EVANS

CONTENTS.

FLANDERS-ARTOIS	Ah! le joli Bois, Mesdames; Sur les Clanquarts.
PICARDY	Les trois Canards; Semons la Salade.
NORMANDY	Les trois Pommes blanches; Compère et Commère.
CHAMPAGNE	Le petit Bonnet rond; Eh! qui marierons-nous?
LORRAINE	Vous n'êtes pas mon Berger; Je vais entrer dans la Danse.
ALSACE	La Chanson des Beignets; Le Maître et Jacquot.

Messrs. NOVELLO & Co. beg leave to announce that they have acquired the Sole Agency for all British Territory and the United States of America for the sale of the Work above described, and that copies are now on sale.

PRICE FOUR SHILLINGS EACH.

NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED, 160, WARDOUR STREET, LONDON, W.1.

JUST PUBLISHED.

TWELVE COUNTRY DANCE TUNES

COLLECTED BY

CECIL J. SHARP

ARRANGED FOR

BRASS OR MILITARY BAND

By GORDON JACOB.

IN THREE SETS.

PRICE ... ... 4*s.* 6*d.* EACH.

Separate Parts, 3*d.* each.

SET 1.	SET 2.
THE BUTTERFLY	GATHERING PEASCODS.
GALOPEDE.	RUFTY, TUFTY.
HASTE TO THE WEDDING.	HEY BOYS.
NANCY'S FANCY.	THE BLACK NAG.

SET 3.

IF ALL THE WORLD WERE PAPER.	SELLENGER'S ROUND.
THE OLD MOLE.	THE MARY AND DOROTHY.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NATIONAL SONGS

WITH DESCANTS

ARRANGED BY

GEOFFREY SHAW.

NOVELLO'S SCHOOL SONGS. BOOK 271.

SET I.

THE BAY OF BISCAY (English)	EARLY ONE MORNING (English)
A HUNTING WE WILL GO (English)	OH, DEAR! WHAT CAN THE MATTER BE? (English)
JOHN PEEL (English)	THE BRITISH GRENADIERS (English)
ALL THROUGH THE NIGHT (Welsh)	THE ASH GROVE (Welsh)
SCOTS, WHA HAE (Scottish)	GOOD KING WENCESLAS (Traditional)
THE OAK AND THE ASH (Scottish)	THE FIRST NOWELL (Traditional)

JUST PUBLISHED.

NOVELLO'S SCHOOL SONGS. BOOK 275.

SET II.

COME LASSES AND LADS (English)	THE YOUNG MAY MOON (Irish)
WI' A HUNDRED PIPERS (Scottish)	THE GOLDEN VANITY (English)
DAVID OF THE WHITE ROCK (Welsh)	THE FLIGHT OF THE EARLS (Irish)

JUST PUBLISHED.

NOVELLO'S SCHOOL SONGS. BOOK 276.

SET III.

MEETING OF THE WATERS (Irish)	LET ERIN REMEMBER (Irish)
THERE 'S NAE LUCK (Scottish)	THE BAILIFF'S DAUGHTER OF ISLINGTON (English)
DRINK TO ME ONLY WITH THINE EYES (English)	THE BELLS OF ABERDOVEY (Welsh)

PRICE EIGHTPENCE EACH SET.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

TWENTY SHORT AND EASY PIECES FOR THE ORGAN.

SET I.

No.		No.
1.	Andante ... ... Alfred H. Allen	11.	Allegro. Op. 21 ... ... Gustav Merkel
2.	Spring Song ... ... W. H. Bell	12.	Andante. Op. 162 ... ... Gustav Merkel
3.	Andante con Moto ... ... G. J. Bennett	13.	Introductory Voluntary on the Russian Hymn J. T. Pye
4.	Song of Thanksgiving ... ... Josiah Booth	14.	Prelude No. 2 ... ... A. Redhead
5.	Church Preludes No. 5 ... ...R. E. Bryson	15.	Larghetto and Allegro ... ... J. Varley Roberts
6.	Postlude ... ... H. Elliot Button	16.	Allegretto Pastorale ... ... C. Steggall
7.	Postlude ... ... G. Calkin	17.	Contemplation ... ...John E. West
8.	Prelude ... ... Percy E. Fletcher	18.	Postlude ... ...John E. West
9.	Andante ... ...J. W. Gritton	19.	Moderato Maestoso ... ...Kate Westrop
10.	Allegro Moderato ... ... Kate Loder	20.	Andante Pastorale ... ...W. G. Wood

SET II.

No.		No.
1.	Allegretto Grazioso ... ...G. J. Bennett	11.	Andante quasi Allegretto ... Gustav Merkel
2.	Church Prelude ... ...R. E. Bryson	12.	Cavatina in G ... ... Ernest Newton
3.	Andante Tranquillo ... ... George Calkin	13.	Epilogue ... ... J. Rheinberger
4.	For Holy Communion ... ... J. Baptiste Calkin	14.	Andante in A ... ... J. Varley Roberts
5.	Postlude ... ... Percy E. Fletcher	15.	Andante in G ... ... C. Steggall
6.	Largo ... ... G. F. Handel	16.	March in G ... ... Henry Smart
7.	Berceuse ... ... Oliver King	17.	Andante Doloroso ("Marcia Funèbre") John E. West
8.	Adagio, from Sonatina No. 2 ... ... Kuhlau	18.	Pastoral Melody ... ...John E. West
9.	Allegretto... ... ... Kate Loder	19.	Andante ... ...Kate Westrop
10.	Andante in G ... ...G. F. Wesley Martin	20.	Allegretto Grazioso ... ... W. G. Wood

SET III.

No.		No.
1.	Melody ... ... A. Herbert Brewer	11.	Cavatina ... ... Joachim Raff
2.	Maestoso ... ... George Calkin	12.	Monologue No. 5 ... ... J. Rheinberger
3.	Ave Maria ... ... Edward T. Chipp	13.	Melody in F ... ... Anton Rubinstein
4.	Interlude ... ... Percy E. Fletcher	14.	Dreaming... ... ...R. Schumann
5.	Intermezzo ... ... Alan Gray	15.	The Poet Speaks ... ...R. Schumann
6.	Postlude ... ... Alex. Guilmant	16.	Soft Voluntary ... ... B. Luard-Selby
7.	Sursum Corda ... ... John Ireland	17.	Menuetto ... ... Berthold Tours
8.	Lieder Ohne Worte No. 22 F. Mendelssohn-Bartholdy	18.	Aspiration ... ...John E. West
9.	Andante ... ... Gustav Merkel	19.	Sketch in C minor ... ...John E. West
10.	Duettino in G ... ... Ernest Newton	20.	Andante con Moto ... ... W. G. Wood

SET IV.

No.		No.
1.	Romance ... ... W. H. Bell	11.	Lieder Ohne Worte No. 44 F. Mendelssohn-Bartholdy
2.	Minuet and Trio (Symphony in G minor) ... ... W. Sterndale Bennett	12.	Trio ... ... J. Rheinberger
3.	Canzonetta ... ... César Cui	13.	Short Postlude ... ... B. Luard-Selby
4.	Interlude ... ... Th. Dubois	14.	Andante Maestoso ... ... B. Luard-Selby
5.	Elegy ... ...Edward Elgar	15.	Prelude ... ... Henry Smart
6.	Allegretto ... ... Niels W. Gade	16.	Fughetta ... ... Henry Smart
7.	Judex ("Mors et Vita") ... ... Ch. Gounod	17.	Choral Song ... ... S. S. Wesley
8.	Intermezzo No. 3 ... ... Alan Gray	18.	Lamentation ... ...John E. West
9.	Chanson de Joie ... ... R. G. Hailing	19.	Allegretto Pastorale ... ...John E. West
10.	Hymnus ... ... A. C. Mackenzie	20.	Andante ... ... W. G. Wood

SET V.

No.		No.
1.	Chorale Prelude—Erbarm' Dich mien, O Herre Gott ... ... J. S. Bach	10.	Prelude ... ... J. Rheinberger
		11.	Monologue No. 9 ... ... J. Rheinberger
2.	Allegro Maestoso e Vivace ... ... W. T. Best	12.	Chanson Orientale ... ... Schumann
3.	Meditation ... ... Hugh Blair	13.	Four Sketches, No. 1 ... ... Schumann
4.	Cantilène Religieuse ... ... Th. Dubois	14.	Larghetto from Sonata in D ... B. Luard-Selby
5.	Intermezzo No. 1 ... ... Alan Gray	15.	Andante ... ... E. Silas
6.	Then round about the Starry Throne ("Samson")... ... ...G. F. Handel	16.	Six Short and Easy Pieces, No. 6 ... Henry Smart
		17.	Intermezzo founded on an Irish Air C. V. Stanford
7.	Lieder Ohne Worte No. 4 F. Mendelssohn-Bartholdy	18.	Andante in G ... ... S. S. Wesley
8.	Moderato ... ... Gustav Merkel	19.	Lament ... ...John E. West
9.	Ave Verum ... ... Mozart	20.	Canzona ... ... W. Wolstenholme

Price, Paper Cover, Four Shillings each Set. Cloth, Six Shillings each Set.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

READY BE, MY SOUL, ALWAY

(MACHE DICH, MEIN GEIST, BEREIT)

CANTATA

(For the Twenty-Second Sunday after Trinity)

FOR FOUR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA.

BY

J. S. BACH.

(Cantata No. 115).

Edited by IVOR ATKINS.

English Text by CHARLES SANFORD TERRY.

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

NOVELLO'S EDITIONS

OF THE

FAVOURITE OPERAS

ADAPTED FOR

CONCERT USE.

BALFE.
*THE BOHEMIAN GIRL.
Price 3s.

DONIZETTI.
*THE DAUGHTER OF THE REGIMENT.
Price 3s.

FLOTOW.
*MARTHA.
Price 3s.

GOUNOD.
*FAUST.
Price 2s. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d.

VERDI.
*IL TROVATORE.
Price 3s. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d.

WAGNER.
TANNHÄUSER.
Price 3s.

WALLACE.
MARITANA.
Price 3s.

* Orchestral Parts for Reduced Orchestra may be obtained from the Publishers.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST REPRINTED.

LIFE OF CHOPIN

BY

FREDERICK NIECKS.

Chopin as a Man and Musician, with a Portrait etched by H. R. ROBERTSON, and Facsimiles of the Composer's MS.

Two Vols. Cloth, Gilt. 25s. net.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

Produced at the Leeds Musical Festival, 1925

FIRST

CHORAL SYMPHONY

THE WORDS SELECTED FROM THE POEMS OF

JOHN KEATS

AND SET TO MUSIC FOR

SOPRANO SOLO, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

BY

GUSTAV HOLST.

(OP. 41.)

PRICE FOUR SHILLINGS.

FULL SCORE (Just Published), PRICE £3 3s.

Separately from the above:

Ode on a Grecian Urn

FOR CHORUS AND SMALL ORCHESTRA.

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE.

Band Parts of the Complete Work and of the

SCHERZO

which may be played as an Orchestral Piece without Chorus may be had on hire.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

FOUR

TENNYSON LYRICS

SET TO MUSIC BY

PERCY E. FLETCHER.

1. A LULLABY.
2. THE CITY CHILD.
3. THE REIGN OF THE ROSES.
4. THE THROSTLE.

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

No. 100.—NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS.

PRONUNCIATION

FOR

VOICE-PRODUCTION

FROM

EURHYTHM: THOUGHT IN ACTION

BY

H. H. HULBERT.

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

SOLOS FROM THE CHURCH CANTATAS

JOHN SEBASTIAN BACH.

In Twelve Books—each Book, One Shilling and Sixpence.

FIRST SET.

SOPRANO.

Air — Within my heart of hearts ("A Stronghold Sure").
Air — Our Jesus hath for aye ("God goeth up").
Air — My heart ever trusting ("God so loved the world").
Air — O grant us, mighty Lord ("Jesus, now will we praise Thee").
Air — Sighing, weeping ("My spirit was in heaviness").

ALTO.

Air — Thou, Whose praises never end ("Bide with us").
Recit. — The Father hath appointed Him ("God goeth up").
Air — My Spirit Him descries ("God goeth up").
Air — Into Thy hands ("God's time is best").
Air — Rejoice, ye souls, elect and holy ("O Light Everlasting").

TENOR.

Air — Lord, to us Thyself be showing ("Bide with us").
Recit. — Why hast Thou then ("My Spirit was in heaviness").
Air — Fast my bitter tears ,, ,, ,,
Air — Rejoice, O my spirit ,, ,, ,,
Recit. — The mighty Guardian ("Thou Guide of Israel").
Air — His face my Shepherd ,, ,, ,,
Air — And why art thou, my soul ("When will God recall")

BASS.

Recit. — He comes, the Lord of lords ("God goeth up").
Air — 'Tis He, Who all alone ("God goeth up").
Recit. — It is not mine ("God so loved the world").
Air — On my behalf ,, ,, ,,
Recit. — Yea, this Thy Word ("Thou Guide of Israel").
Air — Whom Jesus deigns ,, ,,
Air — Yet silence ("When will God recall").

SECOND SET.

SOPRANO.

Air — Open wide, my heart ("Come, Redeemer").
Air — Father, what I proffer ("Give the hungry man thy bread").
Air — Come, visit, ye glowing ("How brightly shines").
Air — I have waited for the Lord ("If thou but sufferest").

ALTO.

Air — God's ensample thus to follow ("Give the hungry man thy bread").
Air — Jesus sleeps ("Jesus sleeps, what hope remaineth").
Recit. — Incline Thine ear ("Lord, rebuke me not").
Air — The Lord hath heard ("Lord, rebuke me not").
Air — All earthly powers from God inherit ("Praise thou the Lord").

TENOR.

Recit. — The Saviour now appeareth ("Come, Redeemer").
Air — Come, Jesu, come ("Come, Redeemer").
Air — What voice is with the tempest ("From depths of woe").
Air — Tuneful harps and voices ("How brightly shines").
Air — Thou art my God ("Lord, rebuke me not").

BASS.

Air — The Paschal Victim here we see ("Christ lay in death's dark prison").
Air — Do thine alms ("Give the hungry man thy bread").
Air — With Jesus will I go ("Wailing, crying").
Recit. — Ah, when on that great day ("Watch ye, pray ye").
Air — Blessed Resurrection Day ,, ,,

THIRD SET.

SOPRANO.

Recit. — O Lord, hear me when I call ("Lord, rebuke me not").
Air — How long, O Lord ,, ,,
Air — O praise the Lord ("O Praise the Lord").
Recit. — O Jesu, our Redeemer ("There is nought of soundness").
Air — Hearken when with trembling accents ,, ,,
Air — Though reviling tongues assail me ("Watch ye, pray ye").

ALTO.

Air — Be welcome, thou great angel ("O teach me, Lord").
Air — Ah, tarry yet ("Praise our God").
Air — God is ever sun and shield ("The Lord is a sun and shield").
Recit. — Be steadfast in affliction ("Wailing, crying").
Air — Pain and sorrow work salvation ,, ,,

TENOR.

Recit. — Lord, why so far away ("Jesus sleeps").
Air — In billows the rivers of Belial ("Jesus sleeps").
Recit. — O happy town, O favoured land ("Praise thou the Lord")
Air — O blest are all that fear Him ,, ,, ,, Recit. — Reject it not ("Sages of Sheba").
Air — Saviour, take me for Thine own ("Sages of Sheba").
Air — Uplift your heads on high ("Watch ye, pray ye").

BASS.

Air — God, Whose power ("Let songs of rejoicing").
Recit. — Although an host encamp ("Lord, rebuke me not").
Air — O Lord, thy mercy ,, ,,
Air — Fare ye well ("O teach me, Lord").
Recit. — These things that Isaiah of old ("The Sages of Sheba").
Air — Gold of Ophir is but vain ,, ,,
Air — Ah, where shall I succour ("There is nought of soundness").

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

PROGRESSIVE STUDIES

FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

EDITED, ARRANGED IN GROUPS, AND THE FINGERING REVISED AND SUPPLEMENTED BY

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

THIS Collection of Studies is intended to illustrate the various elements of a complete course of pianoforte technique, and to provide students with the means of attacking and overcoming the different special difficulties which have to be encountered. With this view, the Studies have been arranged in groups, those in each group being placed in progressive order, and having reference to some one particular difficulty. The greater part of the Studies themselves have been selected from the standard works of the most eminent Study-writers, and with these are included numerous others, which, though of equally great practical utility, have hitherto been less generally accessible.

1.	FIVE-FINGER STUDIES	...	...	...	Part	1
2.*	,,	,,	...	...	...	,,	2
3.	SCALES	...	...	...	...	Part	1
4.	,,	...	...	...	...	,,	2
5.	BROKEN CHORDS	...	...	...	Part	1
6.	,,	,,	...	...	...	,,	2
7.	,,	,,	...	...	...	,,	3
8.	,,	,,	...	...	...	,,	4
9.	,,	,,	...	...	...	,,	5
10.	LEFT HAND	...	...	...	...	Part	1
11.	,,	,,	...	...	...	...	,,	2
12.	,,	,,	...	...	...	...	,,	3
13.	,,	,,	...	...	...	...	,,	4
14.*	ARPEGGIO	...	...	...	...	Part	1
15.	,,	...	...	...	...	,,	2
16.	,,	...	...	...	...	,,	3
17.	VELOCITY	...	...	...	...	Part	1
18.	,,	...	...	...	...	,,	2
19.	,,	...	...	...	...	,,	3
20.	,,	...	...	...	...	,,	4
21.	,,	...	...	...	...	,,	5
22.	,,	...	...	...	...	,,	6
23.	,,	...	...	...	...	,,	7
24.	FIGURES IN SEQUENCE	...	...	Part	1
25.*	,,	,,	...	...	...	,,	2
26.	BROKEN THIRDS, SIXTHS, AND OCTAVES	...	...	...	...	Part	1
27.	BROKEN THIRDS, SIXTHS, AND OCTAVES	...	...	...	...	,,	2
28.	SHAKES	...	...	...	...	Part	1
29.	,,	...	...	...	...	,,	2
30.	,,	...	...	...	...	,,	3
31.	DOUBLE NOTES	...	...	...	...	Part	1
32.	,,	,,	...	...	...	...	,,	2
33.	,,	,,	...	...	...	...	,,	3
34.	,,	,,	...	...	...	...	,,	4
35.	OCTAVES	...	...	...	...	Part	1
36.*	,,	...	...	...	...	...	,,	2
37.	CHORDS	...	...	...	...	Part	1
38.	,,	...	...	...	...	...	,,	2
39.*	STACCATO
40.	REPETITION	...	...	...	...	Part	1
41.*	REPETITION AND TREMOLO	...	...	,,	2
42.	,,	,,	...	...	,,	3
43.*	PART-PLAYING	...	...	...	Part	1
44.	,,	,,	...	...	...	...	,,	2
45.*	ORNAMENTS	...	...	...	Part	1
46.	,,	...	...	...	...	,,	2
47.	ACCOMPANIED MELODY	...	...	Part	1
48.	,,	,,	...	...	,,	2
49.	EXTENSIONS AND SKIPS	...	...	Part	1
50.*	,,	,,	...	...	,,	2
51.	RHYTHM	...	...	...	...	Part	1
52.*	,,	...	...	...	...	...	,,	2

53. EXERCISES FOR THE WEAKER FINGERS. By J. A. O'NEILL.

54. WRIST STUDIES (Handgelenksübungen). By ARNOLD KRUG.

55. EXERCISES FOR FACILITATING INDEPENDENCE OF THE FINGERS (Übungen für die Selbständigkeit der Finger). By ARNOLD KRUG.

56. PRELIMINARY STUDIES IN PLAYING POLYPHONIC MUSIC (Vorübungen für das polyphone Spiel). By ARNOLD KRUG.

* These Books contain Studies composed by Mr. Franklin Taylor specially for this Series.

FIFTY-SIX BOOKS, PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE EACH.

FROM THE ABOVE:

SELECTED PIANOFORTE STUDIES

PROGRESSIVELY ARRANGED BY

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

THE present collection of Studies is designed to provide teachers with a short course of Pianoforte Technique adapted to the needs of the average pupil, the intention being to spare the teacher the labour of choosing a sufficiently varied selection from the large mass of material existing, and at the same time to ensure that the different departments of technique shall be undertaken in the order which experience has proved to be the most beneficial.

The Studies are grouped in two Sets, and are so arranged that the different Books in which they are contained may be taken in consecutive order, but pupils who are already further advanced than the elementary stage represented by Set I. may commence at once with Set II., which will be found to be complete in itself, and to illustrate all the essential elements of technique.

Where additional studies are desired, or studies on certain subjects which are not touched upon in this series, the larger collection, published under the title of "Progressive Studies" (from which the present examples have been selected), is of course available.

IN TWO SETS (EIGHT BOOKS), PRICE TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE EACH BOOK.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

A Remarkable New Work on Singing

THE MELBA METHOD

DAME MELBA'S
Personal Advice on
The Art of Singing

PUBLISHED at the climax of a wonderful career Dame Melba's description of her Method of Voice Production and Singing is of outstanding importance to every vocal teacher and student.

This historic work unfolds the principles which have made Melba's voice so flawless in its purity, such a miracle of flexibility, and so perfect in its preservation.

"The Melba Method" is so lucid and so practical that teachers and students can watch every step of Melba's Work, and understand how her wonderful voice has become what it is.

All the chit-chat of the average "celebrity" has been avoided in this book. Instead, Dame Melba takes the student into the very workshop of her art, and shows why and how each principle is applied; covering every essential point with the clarity which comes only from those who really understand the art of singing.

To possess this book is to own a memento of this great artist, and to gain the advice of a singer whose name will be conjured with for generations to come.

COMPLETE, PRICE SIX SHILLINGS NET.
(By Post, 6*s.* 6*d.*)

CHAPPELL & CO., LTD., 50, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON, W.1.
NEW YORK AND SYDNEY.

JUST PUBLISHED.

MINIATURE SCORE
OF IGOR STRAWINSKY
LES NOCES

RUSSIAN CHOREOGRAPHIC SCENES.

ACCOMPANIED BY FOUR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS, FOUR PIANOFORTES, AND PERCUSSION.

Price ... Six Shillings net.

"Les Noces" is perhaps Stravinsky's most remarkable achievement, notwithstanding "Petrushka" and "Le Sacre du Printemps"—notwithstanding even the largely adverse criticism that has been showered on it. The intense annoyance it provoked in some quarters, no less than the boundless enthusiasm it caused in others, is a sure proof of its immense vitality. No musician who wishes to keep abreast of the most significant modern movements can afford to ignore this important work, into which this serviceable and convenient little score will afford him the best possible insight.

J. & W. CHESTER, LTD., 11, Great Marlborough St., London, W.1.

London:—Printed by NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited, at Novello Works, Soho, and published at 160, Wardour Street, Soho, W.1. Saturday, July 31, 1926.

+ A041.230.67.9 m

No. 1003

THE MUSICAL TIMES

Price 6d.

FOUNDED 1844

SEPTEMBER 1, 1926

SPENCER PIANOS

Once you have played on a Spencer, you'll understand why nearly 81,000 Models have already been sold. Every Spencer is fully warranted and will last a lifetime.

New Overstrung Uprights from Sixty Guineas. For fullest details write to Murdochs, The Great Piano House, 461 / 463 Oxford Street, London, West One . . .

Illustrated Art Catalogue Free

REC. SEP 13 1926 B. P. L.

ARCHIBALD RAMSDEN, LTD.

Pianoforte Merchants.

Established 1864.

SCHIEDMAYER PIANOS.

Sole IMPORTERS of the

BEULHOFF PIANOS

also the horizontal Grand Pianos, manufactured by

BORD

PARIS.

65, Wigmore Street, London. 12, Park Row, Leeds.

Branch Establishments at Scarborough, Doncaster, Darlington, and Middlesbrough.

The Great English Piano.

ALLISON PIANOS LIMITED

LEIGHTON ROAD, KENTISH TOWN, N.W.5.

Telephone: NORTH 1660.

— AND —

60, WIGMORE STREET, LONDON, W.1.

Telephone: LANGHAM 1418.

ESTEY ORGANS
ESTEY PIANOS

ONLY ONE GRADE OF EACH.
THE HIGHEST POSSIBLE.
Largest Stock of Organs in the World.

DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE POST FREE. CORRESPONDENCE INVITED.

Telephone: Museum 1317. Telegrams: "ESTEY WESTCENT, LONDON."

Estey Organ Co.
- 12 -
RATHBONE PLACE,
OXFORD STREET,
LONDON, W.1.

METZLER'S
OPERATIC TWO-PART SONGS
SIMPLY ARRANGED FOR BOYS' OR GIRLS' VOICES.
(OLD NOTATION AND TONIC SOL-FA).

1. THE SPINNING CHORUS - - - - Wagner
("The Flying Dutchman.")
2. GIPSY AIR (Carmen) - - - - - - Bizet
3. MARCH and TOREADOR SONG (Carmen) - Bizet
4. THE BOYS' CHORUS (Carmen) - - - Bizet

Price, 6d. each net.

SPECIMEN COPIES FREE.

METZLER & CO. (1920), Ltd., 142, Charing Cross Road, London, W.C.2.

(ESTABLISHED 1788.)

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

FOUNDED IN 1844

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST OF EVERY MONTH

No. 1,003—Vol. 67.
Registered at the General Post Office for Canadian Postage.

SEPTEMBER 1 1926

Price 6*d.*; Postage, 2*d.*
Annual Subscription, post-free, 7*s.* 6*d.*

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.
General Conductor: MR. H. L. BALFOUR, MUS. BAC.

(Season, 1926—1927.)

There are now VACANCIES in the CHOIR for SOPRANOS, CONTRALTOS, TENORS, and BASSES. Applicants should have STRONG VOICES OF GOOD QUALITY, and must be prepared to pass an examination in SIGHT-READING. Address, The Secretary, Royal Choral Society, Royal Albert Hall, S.W.7.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W.1.
Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.
President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, K.G.
Principal: JOHN B. MCEWEN, M.A., Mus. D., F.R.A.M., F.R.C.M.

VACATION COURSE FOR TEACHERS.

Lectures will be given each day from 14th to 17th Sept., inclusive, on the following:

PIANOFORTE - - - Ambrose Coviello, F.R.A.M.
AURAL TRAINING - Ernest Read, F.R.A.M.
CLASS SINGING - - Stanley Marchant, Mus. D., F.R.A.M.
INTERPRETATION AND APPRECIATION, Stewart Macpherson, F.R.A.M.

Complete Time-Table and List of Fees on application.

MICHAELMAS TERM

begins Monday, 20th September. Entrance Examinations on and after 8th September.

TEACHER'S TRAINING COURSE, entirely re-organized (with a special Examination and Diploma), will begin next Michaelmas Term.

J. A. CREIGHTON,
Secretary.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

PRINCE CONSORT ROAD, SOUTH KENSINGTON, S.W.7.

Patrons: { HIS MAJESTY THE KING
HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.
Director: SIR HUGH P. ALLEN, C.V.O., M.A., Mus. Doc., D. Litt.
Honorary Secretary: GEORGE A. MACMILLAN, Esq., D. Litt.
Registrar: CLAUDE AVELING, Esq., M.A.
Bursar: E. J. N. POLKINHORNE, Hon. R.C.M.

The College offers a Complete Course of Musical Education to pupils of both sexes, both professional and amateur. Upwards of seventy Scholarships and Exhibitions are founded which provide free musical education.

Classes for Score Reading, Conducting, Training of Teachers, Musical Criticism, and Ballet, are held at the College.

The OPERA CLASS has the use of the fully-equipped College OPERA THEATRE, with SUNKEN ORCHESTRA.

EXAMINATIONS for Associateship of the College (A.R.C.M.), in all subjects, held three times a year, in April, September, and December. Syllabus and all particulars may be obtained from the Registrar of the College.

LONDON SOCIETY OF ORGANISTS.

FOUNDED 1913.

PRESIDENT FOR 1926: HARVEY GRACE, F.R.C.O.

Organists, Assistant-Organists, and Choirmasters of all denominations are eligible. Register of vacant appointments.

Particulars and application to the Hon. Sec., DR. J. WARRINER, De Crespigny House, Denmark Hill, S.E.5.

Guildhall School of Music.

(Founded in 1880 by the Corporation of London, and managed by the Music Committee.)

VICTORIA EMBANKMENT, E.C.4.

PRINCIPAL: SIR LANDON RONALD, F.R.A.M., F.R.C.M., &c.

PRIVATE Lessons in any single Musical Subject, and STAGE TRAINING in Elocution, Gesture, Dancing, Opera; Classes in Conducting.

Complete Musical Education at inclusive fees, £9 9*s.* and £12 12*s.* Opera Class, Saturdays. Special Training Course for Teachers (approved by Teachers' Registration Council). Autumn Term begins September 20.

Prospectus and Syllabus of Local Centres and Schools Examinations (open to general public) free.

H. SAXE WYNDHAM, Secretary.
Telephone: Cent. 4459; and City 5566.

The Royal College of Organists.

The SOLO-PLAYING TESTS for the next F.R.C.O. EXAMINATION are:

Trio in C minor, J. S. Bach. (Novello, Book 12, page 108; Augener, page 1173; Peters, Old Edition, Vol. 9, No. 7; New Edition, Vol. 9, No. 9).

Fantasy Prelude, Charles Macpherson. No. 21 of Recital Series. Edited by E. H. Lemare. (Novello.)

Andante from a Pianoforte Duet, Mozart. Arrangements for the Organ by J. Stainer, No. 2. (Novello.) (New and Revised Edition only.)

The 10 selected pieces and the book set for the Essay for the January, 1927, A.R.C.O. Examination, are the same as those set for July, 1926.

All Candidates for the next Examinations must send in their names for Fellowship by December 9th, for Associateship by December 16th. In the case of NEW MEMBERS, proposal forms, duly filled up, must be sent in before December 2nd. No names will be entered after the above dates.

Regulations, List of College Publications, Lectures, &c., may be had on application.

Examples indicating the character and approximate difficulty of the NEW TESTS, set for the first time at the July, 1924, Examinations, may be obtained at the College. Associateship or Fellowship, 6*d.* each (post free).

The College is open daily from 10 to 4: Saturdays, 10 to 1.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Secretary.
Kensington Gore, S.W.7

96 & 95, WIMPOLE STREET, W.1.

TOBIAS MATTHAY PIANOFORTE SCHOOL

Instruction under his teachers, and under his own supervision.

Open to Professionals and Amateurs, and also to Children.

The Staff consists of thirty-nine senior Professors of thorough experience and platform reputation, all trained by the founder.

Special Short Courses for Teachers during term and vacation.

LECTURE-LESSON CLASS by Mr. MATTHAY on the practical teaching of Technique and Interpretation, diagnosis and correction of faults, musical analysis and synthesis, &c., alternate Wednesday evenings.

MR. FREDERICK MOORE takes alternate Wednesdays.

COMPLETE TRAINING COURSE FOR TEACHERS.
(Approved by the Teachers' Registration Council.)

This ONE-YEAR Course may be joined at the beginning of ANY TERM.
For further particulars please apply, MRS. MARION COLE, Secretary.

BIRMINGHAM & MIDLAND INSTITUTE
SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Visitor ... Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M., Mus.Doc., LL.D.
Director ... GRANVILLE BANTOCK, M.A., D.Mus. (Ed.).

SESSION 1925-1926.

The Season consists of AUTUMN TERM (September 22 to December 20); WINTER TERM (January 14 to April 11); SUMMER TERM (April 20 to July 4).

Instruction in all branches of Music, Students' Orchestra, Chamber Music, Students' Rehearsals, and Concerts.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from—
H. M. FRANCIS, Secretary.
Paradise Street, Birmingham.

ROYAL
MANCHESTER COLLEGE OF MUSIC
Founded 1893. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1923.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF YORK, K.G.
Principal: DR. ADOLPH BRODSKY.
Registrar: STANLEY WITHERS, M.A.

Students are required to enter upon a complete course of Musical instruction, and are not admitted for a shorter period than one year.

Fee for the year, £36. Special fee for Organ Course, £30, and for Wind Instrument Course, £18.

Systematic Course for the training of Teachers, approved by Teachers' Registration Council.

The Prospectus, with Scholarship information, Diploma Regulations, and Entry Forms, on application.

New Pianoforte Professor, Mr. CLAUD BIGGS.

New Professor of Singing, Miss MARGUERITE SWALE.

GLASGOW
ATHENÆUM SCHOOL OF MUSIC.
SESSION 1926-27.

The Session consists of Three Terms: September 14 to December 5, December 7 to March 13, and March 15 to June 11.

Complete Musical Curriculum. Day and Evening Classes.
Single Subjects taught.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from:
STUART S. FORSYTH, Secretary,
ATHENÆUM BUILDINGS, GLASGOW.

MANCHESTER SCHOOL OF MUSIC.
16, ALBERT SQUARE.

Principal and Founder (1892): J. A. CROSS
Late Principal (1897-1925): ALBERT J. CROSS, A.R.A.M.

The oldest Institution in Manchester devoted solely to the interests of music.

All branches of Music taught. Day and evening Private Lessons Opera Class. Full Orchestral Class. Intermediate and Elementary String Orchestras, Classes for Ensemble Playing, Elocution, Choral Singing, Harmony, &c. Single Subjects taught.

New Pianoforte Professor:
MR. ROBERT GREGORY.

Mr. Gregory was Professor of the Pianoforte in Vienna for many years, having studied there under the eminent Leschetitzky, teacher of PADEREWSKI.

Prospectus from the Secretary, 16, Albert Square.

LONDON SCHOOL OF SINGING.
20a, Henrietta Street, Cavendish Square, W.1.

President: A. NETTLEFOLD.
Principal: DAVID GODELL.

Complete training in all subjects for the Vocalist, Professional and Amateur. Evening Lessons. Particulars from Secretary. Mayfair 3819.

UNIVERSITY OF MANCHESTER.
FACULTY OF MUSIC.

The Prospectus, containing information as to the Courses of Study for the Mus. B. and Mus. D. degrees, will be forwarded on application to the Registrar. The Hargreaves Scholarship of the value of £30 per annum (renewable for a second year), is awarded on the results of the first Mus. B. Examination. The Session commences on October 7th.

BATTERSEA POLYTECHNIC, LONDON, S.W.11.
Principal: ROBERT H. PICKARD, D.Sc., F.R.S.

Head of Music Department:
H. DAVAN WETTON, Mus. D., F.R.C.O.

CLASSES IN THEORY OF MUSIC, HARMONY, AND COUNTERPOINT.

UNIVERSITY COURSES FOR DEGREES AND HIGHER EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., and L.G.S.M., Associated Board of the R.A.M. and R.C.M.

Class and Private Lessons in MUSICAL APPRECIATION and AURAL TRAINING, SOLO and SIGHT SINGING, PIANOFORTE, VIOLIN, VIOLA, VIOLONCELLO, and DOUBLE-BASS.

SOUTH THAMES MUSICAL UNION. ORCHESTRA and CHORAL CLASS.

Lessons on CONCERT ORGAN (Reconstructed and Modernised). PREPARATION FOR R.C.O. EXAMINATIONS.

SPECIAL CLASSES FOR TEACHERS. (Recognised by the London County Council.)

NEXT TERM BEGINS Monday, September 27th, 1926.

Particulars of all Classes on application to the Principal.

SOUTH WESTERN COLLEGE OF MUSIC.
296-298, BALHAM HIGH ROAD, S.W.17. 'Phone: Battersea 0916.

Principal: ALLAN BROWN, F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.

L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. SEPTEMBER EXAMINATIONS (Vocal, Pianoforte, Organ, Violin, Pianoforte Accompaniment, &c.).

SPECIAL SINGLE LESSONS covering all the requirements. Many recent successes. Address, The Secretary.

UNIVERSAL CORRESPONDENCE COLLEGE.
Principal: ALFRED W. HOLMES.

COMPREHENSIVE POSTAL COURSES for the Study of THEORY OF MUSIC, HARMONY, ETC., given by qualified Professors. Special Tuition for preparation of Candidates for Examinations.

Details of the fees can be had from the undersigned.

Analyses of Pianoforte Compositions written. Music Copied, Transposed, or Scored. MSS. revised.

Miss W. E. OAKLEY, Hon. Sec., 38, Worcester Rd., Sutton, Surrey.

THE EDITHA KNOCKER SCHOOL OF VIOLIN PLAYING.

AUTUMN TERM BEGINS SEPTEMBER 20.

Two Scholarships to be competed for on September 11 and 13.

Entrance Forms must be in not later than September 6.

For all particulars apply to Secretary, Editha Knocker School of Violin Playing, 7, Lambolle Road, N.W.3.

THE
CHARLES A. GILLETT
PIANOFORTE SCHOOL.
"The Real Use of Relaxation" in Pianoforte Playing.

PERSONAL LESSONS DAY AND EVENING.
ALSO
CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS IN "APPLIED WEIGHT TOUCH."

NEXT TERM COMMENCES MONDAY, 6TH SEPTEMBER.

Write or call—
THE CHARLES A. GILLETT
PIANOFORTE SCHOOL,
11, SOUTH MOLTON STREET, LONDON, W.1

PAPER WORK BY MUS. B., F.R.C.O.

OVER 1,100 SPECIMEN WORKINGS.

"Your lessons and ideas splendid."
"Your excellent models make my attempts look cold."

RECENT SUCCESSES,
including the only pupil sent up, January, 1925.

2s. 6d. per lesson and postage.

"E. B.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

CITY OF LONDON CHORAL UNION.

President: SIR STANLEY BOIS, 12, Fenchurch Street, E.C.
Conductor: HAROLD E. DARKE, Mus. Doc. Oxon.
Organist of St. Michael's, Cornhill, E.C.
SESSION 1926-27.

The Session begins Tuesday evening (5.30-7 p.m.), 21st September, at St. Michael's Church, Cornhill, E.C. The works to be rehearsed for performance early in 1927 are Stanford's "Stabat Mater" and Elgar's "Dream of Gerontius." It is desired to raise the membership of the choir to 250. There are vacancies for all voices—tenors and basses being specially wanted.

Particulars and application forms from Hon. Sec., MR. W. REID, 11, Queen Victoria Street, E.C. ('Phone: City 7223.)

SOUTHEND
MUSICAL FESTIVAL.
TO BE HELD
NOVEMBER 5th to 13th, 1926, inclusive.

OPEN CLASSES (Amateur or Professionals).
SINGING (any Voice).
PIANOFORTE PLAYING.
VIOLIN PLAYING.
ELOCUTION.
MUSICAL COMPOSITION.

Send halfpenny stamp for SYLLABUS to
MR. HORACE BAYLISS, Hon. Secretary,
63, Alexandra Road, Southend-on-Sea.

"MASTERY OF THE KEYBOARD."
C. PALMER.
SIGHT-READING LESSONS.
COMPLETE COURSE OF SIX POSTAL LESSONS.
PRESS EXTRACTS.

The Times: "Deals with the subject systematically from the first stage."
Musical Times: "The idea is so simple and practical that we wonder it has not been dealt with systematically long ago."
Music: "Mr. Denham goes fully and thoroughly into his subject from every possible standpoint. Cannot fail to be of service.
Aberdeen Press and Journal: "The scarcity of good sight-readers, and even among capable pianists, is proof of the need for a more systematised form of training than obtains at present, and Mr. Denham's system has the double advantage of being both simple and practical."

Personal Lessons if desired.
GEORGE DENHAM, L.R.A.M., ETC.,
41, AVONDALE ROAD, S. CROYDON; AND 32, WIGMORE STREET, W.1.

THE LONDON COLLEGE FOR CHORISTERS.
6 and 7, BLOMFIELD CRESCENT, PADDINGTON, W.2.
Founder: MR. JAMES BATES.

Solo Boys and Chorus Boys supplied at short notice for Church Services, &c. Telephone: Paddington 5990. Sec., ARTHUR G. BATES.

WIGMORE HALL STUDIOS.—These splendidly appointed Studios are the recognised centre of the best musical activities in London. Forty-five rooms. Grand Piano in every room. Lift, telephone, and every comfort and convenience. Low inclusive rates. One morning or afternoon per week the minimum time arranged for. Apply, 38, Wigmore Street, W.1.

PIANO PEDALS, with Octave Coupler

This wonderful invention supersedes all Piano Pedals, and is a Master Patent

St. George's Hall, Liverpool,
9th April, 1921.

"The simplicity of the attachment, and the clever sixteen-feet, eight-feet, or both combined, 'OPTIONAL OCTAVE' contrivance astonished me.
"I was delighted with the Pedal touch and with the variety in that touch, which your Attachment makes possible. It is very responsive to the movements of the feet, and is reliable."
HERBERT F. ELLINGFORD, Mus.Bac., Oxon., F.R.C.O.

Owing to increased output, we have reduced the price of our Popular Model to 14 guineas cash. Deferred payments if desired.
Write for Lists, Prices, and Clients' Opinions, and References to
THE MALKIN PATENT PEDAL CO., LTD.,
NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME.
London address: 11, Ashlake Road, Streatham, S.W.16.

MEMORISE YOUR MUSIC

WITH EASE, CERTAINTY, AND CONFIDENCE, AND WITHOUT THE MONOTONY OF CONSTANT REPETITION.

Thousands of promising musicians have failed to achieve the success they deserve through their inability to trust their memory. You can be sure of attaining that sense of certainty, that knowing that there is no risk of breaking down, if you memorise your music by

The Master-Method
OF Memory-Playing

No one who can play from the music need be a failure. Take the first step to-day by writing for my free descriptive Book, or by filling in the Coupon below.

NO KNOWLEDGE OF HARMONY REQUIRED.

SUCCESS GUARANTEED.

POST COUPON FOR FREE BOOK.

(Unsealed envelope, ½d. stamp only.)

MR. REGINALD C. FOORT, F.R.C.O.,
19, BEACON HOUSE, HEMSTAL ROAD,
LONDON, N.W.6.

Please send me, free and post free, a copy of your Book, "The Master-Method of Memory-Playing." I play the Piano, Violin, 'Cello, Organ, and am a Beginner, Intermediate, Advanced Player. (Cross out which do not apply to you.)

Name.....
(Mr., Mrs., or Miss.)
Address.....
(I) .....

MEMORISE YOUR MUSIC

BY MEANS OF THE

Mackinnon Musical Memory Course

FOR PIANISTS.

A Pupil writes:—

"To-day I have played Ravel's 'Jeux d'eaux' from memory, and six months ago it was a struggle to memorise a chant! I consider your course to be the best investment I have ever made in my musical education." 20/7/26.

Write for free booklet, giving particulars and the testimonials of famous musicians, to

MISS LILIAS MACKINNON,
1, PAULTON'S SQUARE,
CHELSEA, LONDON, S.W.3.

MENTAL HEARING.

A pupil in Asia writes:

"I am sorry I've not written earlier to tell you how much I appreciate your Mental Hearing Course, and how much I have derived from its study. I have worked all exercises 1 to 5, and notice a tremendous difference. There is no doubt your method is admirable, and your course has enabled me to acquire a degree of Mental Hearing that I never possessed before. Your setting out of the Lessons is beautifully clear and concise, and nothing is complicated."

Full particulars of Course of Seven Lessons from

W. H. WATSON, F.R.C.O.,
20, CULBARD STREET, ELGIN, MORAYSHIRE.

A.R.C.M.
A.R.C.O.
L.R.A.M.

Candidates for these examinations cannot afford to neglect the enormous advantage of a Postal Course in my "From Brain to Keyboard" System, to which many pupils attribute their success.

OPINIONS OF PUPILS.

"One of the greatest assets a pianist can have."
"Worth twenty times the fee charged."
"I have passed my examination with honours."
"The technical rules are alone worth the fee."
"I have acquired easy trills, at sixty."
"The exercises are a veritable treasure trove."
"The effect sometimes seems supernatural."
"To me it has been a veritable godsend."

"From Brain to Keyboard"

Macdonald Smith's System of Pianoforte Playing.

20,000 SUCCESSFUL PUPILS OF ALL AGES.

My illustrated book, "LIGHT ON PIANOFORTE PLAYING," will gladly be sent to any pianist. It fully explains the principles and advantages of the methods used in the System. When applying please do not omit to state whether comparative beginner, average, or advanced pianist. The book will be sent free of charge, and post free.

M. MACDONALD SMITH, 19, BLOOMSBURY SQUARE, LONDON, W.C.1.

MODERN CORR. COLLEGE

Principal: ARTHUR McALISTER, B.A. (Cantab.).

Letters of appreciation from SUCCESSFUL STUDENTS:

(1) MATRIC. (Durham).
"Your METHOD of coaching made my work most interesting and helpful. It is your method, I am convinced, that ensures success."

(2) MATRIC. (Durham).
"I shall most certainly tell any of my Pupils about you, and recommend your College most strongly."

(3) MATRIC (London).
"I wish to thank you and the other Tutors of the College, particularly the Tutor in Mathematics and Chemistry, for all the help I received."

(4) FIRST M.B.
"Every detail is attended to in the corrections, and I can safely say that I have learnt more from these criticisms than from any text-book I have yet come across."

(5) FIRST M.B.
"A Mus. Doc. has had a chat with me on my Papers, and commented upon the corrections and extraordinary care with which they have been marked."

(6) A.R.C.O.
"You will be pleased to hear that I have passed the Paper-Work section of A.R.C.O. at the first attempt. Your Lessons were extremely valuable in securing this success, the MODEL WORKINGS of Counterpoint and Melodies showing clearly the style required."

(7) A.R.C.O.
"I attribute my success at the FIRST ATTEMPT to the system and thoroughness of your Courses of Training."

(8) F.R.C.O.
"It was my first attempt at F.R.C.O., and I attribute much of my success to the fact that your SYSTEMATIC METHOD of dealing with my work has enabled me to see exactly where I stood with regard to the STANDARD OF WORK required."

(9) F.R.C.O.
"From beginning to end I never felt that I was merely ONE OF A CROWD, for the criticisms and advice always responded to my particular trouble."

(10) F.R.C.O.
(Failed six times under other tuition.) "I feel that I cannot speak too highly of your wonderful system of Correspondence Tuition. The Lessons, and Corrections of work sent, have been a perfect revelation to me."

(11) A. MUS. T.C.L.
"You will be glad to know that I have gained the following high marks in the ART OF TEACHING, 88%, and COUNTERPOINT, 91%."

(12) A. MUS. T.C.L.
"I gained 86% ART OF TEACHING, 80% Harmony, 93% Counterpoint."

(13) L. MUS. T.C.L.
"I obtained 95% for ORCHESTRATION."

(14) A.T.C.L.
"I gained 93% out of a possible 100 in the ART OF TEACHING."

(15) A.R.C.M. (Singing).
"Many thanks for the excellent coaching."

(16) A.R.C.M. (Mus. Appreciation).
"I take this opportunity to thank you for all you did to help me to gain the A.R.C.M. I consider you deserve great credit for selecting the chief principles, and grouping them in such a carefully graduated Course."

(17) L.R.A.M. (Singing).
"I was complimented by the Examiners for my Paper on Vocal Physiology."

(18) L.R.A.M. (Voice-Culture).
"The questions were quite easy to answer, owing to your suggestions and training, generally."

(19) L.R.A.M. (Pianoforte).
"The system of marking adopted by you is excellent,—every correction being written out distinctly and clearly, so that anyone can understand."

(20) L.R.A.M. (Pianoforte).
"Before taking up your Course, I obtained only 61% for Paper-Work."

GUARANTEE COURSES - - Matric., Mus. Bac., A.R.C.O., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., A. Mus. T.C.L., A.T.C.L.

SINGLE SUBJECTS - - - - Elocution, Singing, Art of Teaching, Form, Orchestration, Counterpoint, &c.

PLEASE STATE EXAM. OR SUBJECT.

"CLOVELLY," 20, SHERWIN ROAD, NOTTINGHAM.

CORRESPONDENCE COACHING
FOR EXAMINATIONS.

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING
Mus. Doc. (Lond.).

THIS MONTH'S SPECIAL COURSES.

1.—A.R.C.M. and L.R.A.M. Full Preparation now commencing for Christmas, 1926, and Easter, 1927.

2.—Mus. Bac. & Mus. Doc., Lond., December, 1926.

3.—1st Mus. Bac., Durham, March, 1927.

4.—A. & F.R.C.O., January, 1927.

NUMEROUS SUCCESSES AT FIRST ATTEMPT
IN

Final Mus. Doc.; Mus. Doc. "Exercise"; Final Mus. Bac.; Mus. Bac. "Exercise"; A. & L. Mus. T.C.L.; A. & L.T.C.L.; A. & F.R.C.O.; L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M.

Candidates who are entering for the first time, and also those who have previously failed to pass any examination, should communicate with

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING,
46, CLARENDON ROAD,
REDLAND, BRISTOL.

Telephone: Bristol 3033.

THE TECHNIQUER
Invented and Patented by R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac.

FOR FLEXING, STRENGTHENING, STRETCHING, and DEVELOPING THE HANDS.

Send for testimony of LAMOND, POUISHNOFF, FRYER, REDDIE, WALENN, and many other eminent musicians.

"The excellent 'Techniquer' of Mr. Pitcher has been used by the writer with advantage. It does a good many things."—The Music Teacher, April, 1926.

Treatise on "Hand Development," with Photos, 1s. 6d.

Full particulars from the Secretary—
MISS F. J. FITCH, F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M.,
21, Boundary Road, N.W.8 'Phone: Maida Vale 1715.

THE "SIMPLEXA" FINGER TRAINER.
(Registered No. 692810.)

FOR ALL INSTRUMENTALISTS.

A SIMPLE AND VERY EFFECTIVE APPLIANCE FOR GIVING STRENGTH AND FLEXIBILITY TO THE FINGERS.

Extract from "Musical Times."—"We have given a trial to the 'Simplexa Pocket Finger Trainer,' and have no hesitation in recommending it to our readers as a means of stretching the fingers and keeping them generally in good playing condition. Instrumentalists who are travelling, or unable to obtain regular practice, will find the appliance a boon. It is well-named, being simplicity itself, and so portable that it can be carried in the waistcoat pocket."

IMPROVED MODEL, 2s. 6d., POST FREE.
1, LONGFORD TERRACE, FOLKESTONE.

MUSIC COPYING, Transpositions, Arrangements, Scoring, &c. Smith, 40, Coniston Road, Muswell Hill, N.10.

MUSIC COPIED, neat work, Transposition and Duplicating. E. W. Cartwright, 25, Irving Rd., Bournemouth.

RESIDENT STUDENTS.

LADY (Professor at the Tobias Matthay Pianoforte School) receives a few resident students in London or country. Excellent pianos for practising.

Students' Concerts and R.A.M coaching &c.

Vacation Courses.

"Box No. 11," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

TO COMPOSERS.

MR. NICHOLAS GATTY

is prepared to undertake the revision and arrangement of MSS., and to advise on any matter concerning composition and orchestration.
For terms, &c., apply, 12, Upper George Street, W.1.

ORGAN RECITALS.

ALBERT ORTON

L.R.A.M., F.R.C.O.

(Organist and Master of the Music, St. Anne's, Soho),

Will be motoring in the North during September, and can arrange to give Recitals en route (viâ Boston, Hull, Scarborough, Darlington, Newcastle, Carlisle, and the Lakes). Applications, with full particulars, to 19, Clarendon Gardens, W.9.

A.R.C.O. EXAMINATION AIDS.

A series of practical papers outlining courses of study and giving helpful hints with expert advice on the following Tests:

SOLO-PLAYING.	SCORE-READING.
TRANSPOSITION.	ACCOMPANIMENT
ESSAY.	(with list of 75 Solos).

3*s*. each. 10*s*. 6*d*. the set.

At the request of many who have derived valuable help from the above, the writer has now prepared a similar AID to the

A.R.C.O. PAPER-WORK TESTS.

Price 5*s*.

"A.R.C.O. EXAMN. AIDS," 166, COUNTY ROAD, WALTON, LIVERPOOL.

MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS REVISED.

LYRICS SET TO MUSIC, MELODIES HARMONIZED, MUSIC TRANSPOSED AND COPIED, BAND PARTS WRITTEN, MSS. PREPARED FOR PUBLICATION BY A MASTER HAND, ACCOMPANIMENTS OF DISTINCTION WRITTEN TO SONGS.
For terms, write, A. CARRINGTON BRIGGS, Glennholme, The Common, Hessle, E. Yorks.

PROFESSIONAL NOTICES.

MISS WINIFRED DENHAM (A.R.C.M.).
SOPRANO.
"A clear, well-produced voice—exceedingly well sung."—Musical Standard.
41, Avondale Road, South Croydon.

MISS LYDIA JOHN

(A.R.A.M., L.R.A.M.), CONTRALTO.
Concerts, Oratorios, Organ Recitals, &c.
Recital-Lectures of Folk-Songs, Elizabethan Songs, &c.
Pupils received for Voice-Production and Singing.
Prepared for L.R.A.M., Associated Board, &c.
28, ALBION ROAD, LONDON, N.W.6.
Tel.: Hampstead 5797.
Lessons given at West-End Studio or above address.

HAROLD KNOWLTON

TENOR.
St. Paul's Cathedral, E.C. 4.
1, Hatherley Gardens, Crouch End, N.8. Mountview 5289.

EDMUND LANG

TENOR
ORATORIO, CONCERTS, ETC.
47, Leigh Road, Highbury, N.5.

VERNON HARRISS,

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., Gold Medallist. BASS.
Oratorio, Concerts. Vocal Coach and Adjudicator.
Senior Music Master, Downside School, near Bath.

FRANK POULTON (L.R.A.M.).

BASSO-CANTANTE.
Available for Oratorio, Choral Societies, &c.
33, Hounslow Avenue, Hounslow. 'Phone: Hounslow 1536.

VICTOR UTTING (L.R.A.M.).

BARITONE, ROCHESTER CATHEDRAL.
56, Boundary Road, Chatham, Kent.

GLADYS FREEMAN, A.R.M.C.M.

(TRAINED TEACHER.)
PIANOFORTE, EAR-TRAINING, RUDIMENTS.
TEACHES LONDON AND BECKENHAM.
For terms, apply:
16, Ilchester Mansions, Abingdon Road, Kensington, W.8.

MAUD GRUNDY (HARPIST).

Can accept single engagements for Choral Societies, &c., in the North, prior to and after Scottish Orchestra season.
17, Narcissus Road, London, N.W.6.

R. ARNOLD GREIR

F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M.
Organist to the Royal Choral Society, London.
RECITALIST AND ACCOMPANIST.
2, Highview Road, West Ealing, W.13. Ealing 201.

MISS MARY LINDSAY

L.R.A.M. (Teacher's Diploma).
Gives lessons in Voice Production and Singing.
Moderate Terms.
17, Cromwell Road, South Kensington. Tel.: Western 3595

ELIZABETH LEVY

L.R.A.M., GOLD MEDALLIST.
TOBIAS MATTHAY'S PIANOFORTE METHOD taught by her at pupils' houses or her studio. SPECIAL COACHING for Scholarships, Medals, and all Examinations. 52, Fairhazel Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.6.

H. FORSTER RICHARDSON

R.C.M. (Leipzig), A.R.C.M., L.R.A.M.
(Pupil of Tobias Matthay, Plunket Greene, Gregory Hast), gives lessons in Pianoforte Playing, Voice-Production and Singing
Tuition on the most modern technical principles.
Coaching for Concert Work and Examinations.
Wigmore Hall Studios, Wigmore Street, W.1, and 2, Connaught Avenue East Sheen, S.W 14.

MISS MARY WILSON, F.R.A.M.

Professor of Singing at the Royal Academy of Music, London,
Gives SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS to Candidates entering for the L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Singing Teachers' Diplomas.
Particulars on application.
Address: 10, Harley Street, London, W.1.

MISS MARGARET WITHY

(A.R.C.M., L.T.C.L.).

Postal Tuition for L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., and T.C.L. paper-work.
Practical work. Personal lessons in Bath or Salisbury.
Full particulars from 29, Church Field, Salisbury.

MADAME ALBA.—Dramatic Soprano, Professor of Singing (Italian Bel Canto). Vocal Training in four languages. Art of Breathing, Breath Control, Voice-Production and Culture, Effective Speaking, Clear Enunciation, Stage Deportment, Coach, Pianoforte Playing and Technique. Audition by appointment.
Studio: 139, New Bond Street, W.1.

DR. ALLISON instructed by Post Candidates who OBTAINED DEGREES OF MUS.B. and Mus.D. at Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, London, and Durham Universities, Diplomas of L.L.C.M. (April & Dec.), L.R.A.M., F.R.C.O., L. Mus. L.C.M., A.R.C.M., Gold Medals, Silver Medals, Scholarships, Prizes, Certificates, and valuable professional appointments. Dr. Allison is willing to teach those who neither require nor desire to pass examinations. Harmony, Counterpoint, Orchestration, and Analysis of Compositions by Post, to correspondents anywhere. Personal instruction in Theory, Singing, and Piano. 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

REVISION OF MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS.
Dr. Horton Allison, 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

CAPTAIN PERCY BAKER, M.C., F.R.C.O., L. Mus. T.C.L. (Author of "Compend of Musical Knowledge," "Studies in History and Form," &c.). Specialist in Tuition by post for T.C.L. and R.C.O. Essay Models, Sight-Reading Courses, Study Aids, 9*d*. Studies in Modulation, 3*s*.
Send for interesting Pamphlets on Methods.
HAZELDENE, TEWKESBURY.

MR. J. PERCY BAKER, Mus. B. Dunelm., F.R.A.M., gives Postal Tuition and prepares for Examinations. Personal Lessons (Pianoforte and Theory), at 14, Hanover Square, W.1. Address, 12, Longley Road, Tooting Graveney, S.W.17.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:—
(1.) L.R.A.M. Paper Work.
(2.) A.R.C.M. Paper Work.
(3.) Interesting Courses of Study in Rudiments, Harmony, Form, &c.

L.R.A.M. Exams. 1910-26 ... 296 Correspondence Pupils successful.
A.R.C.M. Exams. 1914-26 ... 78 " " "

MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus.Bac., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.,
Waterloo Buildings, Piccadilly, Manchester.

In response to many requests, MR. BIBBY begs to announce that he has prepared the following additional CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:
(1.) The "Mus.Bac." Degree.
(2.) A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O. Paper Work.
(3.) A.T.C.L. and L.T.C.L. Paper Work.
(4.) The Associated Board Examinations in Rudiments, Harmony, and Counterpoint.

(Address as above.)

MR. BIBBY also gives PERSONAL Lessons in Manchester. Complete Preparation (Practical and Paper Work) for L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., A.T.C.L., &c. Address as above.

J. C. BRYDSON, Mus.B. (Dunelm.), L. MUS. T.C.L. Postal Tuition for Mus.B., R.A.M., R.C.M., R.C.O., and T.C.L. (Ordinary and Guarantee Courses). Send for particulars of Free Scholarships and special offer to new Students. Balcary, Kegworth, Derby.

SELF-PREPARATION.
(THEORETICAL AND PRACTICAL.)
Many Music Students are at times perplexed, where but a little guidance will help them towards their goal.
Single Lesson, or Course by arrangement.
A. GRAVES, F.R.C.O., 30, Salop Road, Oswestry.

FREDERICK GREEN, L.R.A.M., ETC. Voice Specialist, Vocal Coach, and Adjudicator. Preparation for L.R.A.M. c/o Rushworth & Dreaper, 11, Islington, Liverpool.

MR. ALLAN BROWN, F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Organist and Musical Director, The City Temple). 298, Balham High Road, S.W.17. Telephone: Battersea 0916.

Special preparation for F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O. Also L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. ORGAN EXAMINATIONS.

SINGLE LESSONS and PRACTICE on facsimile R.C.O. instrument. Pieces registered.

RECENT SUCCESSES IN ORGAN WORK:

1 L.R.A.M., Dec., 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.
1 A.R.C.M., April, 1920.	1 A.R.C.O., July, 1921.
1 L.R.A.M., April, 1924.	3 A.R.C.O., July, 1922.
1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1922.	1 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1923.
1 F.R.C.O., July, 1922.	4 A.R.C.O., July, 1923.
3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1923.	1 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1924.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1923.	3 A.R.C.O., July, 1924.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1925.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1925.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1925.	5 A.R.C.O., July, 1925.
1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1926.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1926.
4 F.R.C.O., July, 1926.	4 A.R.C.O., July, 1926.

"Hints for R.C.O. Candidates" to be obtained from the Publishers, Reid Bros., 26, Eastcastle Street, Oxford Circus, W.1.

MR. J. D. HANDS, Mus. Bac. (Dublin), L.R.A.M., gives lessons in Harmony by post. Music composed to Lyrics. Pianoforte Accompaniments written to Airs. Moderate terms. 114, Wellesley Road, Clacton-on-Sea.

SEPTEMBER EXAMS., L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M., Vocal and Pianoforte, Special preparation courses during July and August, under Mr. Frederick C. Haggis, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M., L.T.C.L., at the Wigmore Hall Studios, W., and at Streatham, S.W. Address, The Ward End, Wallington, Surrey. 'Phone, Wallington 1293.

DR. CUTHBERT HARRIS, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O., SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE TUITION. 410 Successes in Mus. D., Mus. B., F.R.C.O., and A.R.C.O., &c. 58, Avondale Road, Gorleston-on-Sea.

DR. HARRIS REVISES and PREPARES MSS. FOR PUBLICATION. Accompaniments to Songs written.

MISS H. HEALE COACHES for all EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC (at private residence or at West-End Studio), in Pianoforte, Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, Form, Orchestration, "Teaching," Modulation, Transposition, &c. For Terms, &c., apply, Dunraven House, 41, Albert Bridge Road, S.W.11.

DR. CHASTEY HECTOR, D. Mus. Oxon., 1922, L.R.A.M., instructs Candidates, personally or by post, for Degrees and Diplomas in Music. "The Downs," Old Shoreham Road, Hove, Sussex.

HERBERT HODGE, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M., Organist and Choirmaster, St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, Queen Victoria Street, London, has, since 1908, made a speciality of coaching Candidates for the Organ Playing Examinations of the Royal College of Organists, and can arrange a private course of instruction (or single lessons) to organists visiting London, at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey. Many recent F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O. successes.
5, Streatham Place, S.W.2. Telephone: Streatham 2195.

A. EAGLEFIELD HULL, Mus. Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O. For Lectures, address E. L. Robinson Direction, 199, Piccadilly, London, W.1; for personal and correspondence lessons, address Dr. Eaglefield Hull, 19, Berners Street, W.1. For Organ Recitals, address Secretary, 48, New North Rd., Huddersfield.

DR. REGINALD H. HUNT, D. Mus., Lond., F.R.C.O. Individual Coaching by Correspondence. 7, Woodgrange Avenue, North Finchley, N.12.

DR. A. G. IGGULDEN, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O. SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE COACHING. Latest Successes: Durham, Sept., 1925, 7 Final Mus.Bac. passes. Also 1st Mus.Bac. pass. Mus.Doc. and Mus.Bac. Exs., after prelim. course in composition, also in 1925. Both Mus.Doc. passes in 1924. 170 Successes at Durham alone, besides R.C.O. Diplomas. The Durdans, Reigate.

DR. F. J. KARN (Mus. Bac. Cantab.; Mus. Doc. Toronto) continues to give lessons in Harmony and other Theoretical subjects, and prepares for all Musical Examinations. Compositions revised and Analyses written. Candidates prepared by Dr. Karn have gained the Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc. degrees at the Universities and diplomas from the Musical Colleges.
Address: 106, Haverstock Hill, London, N.W.3.

DR. KNOWLES (Manchester 1919, Durham 1920) specialises in preparing candidates by post for the Paper-work of all examinations in music. Solutions, with methods of working. Address, "Cramond," Oakhurst Avenue, East Barnet, London, N.

MR. C. E. de M. LEATHES, M.A., MUS. BAC., F.R.C.O. Tuition in Piano, Harmony, Composition, &c. Pupils successfully prepared for all examinations. Cramer's Studios, 139, Bond Street, W.1, and 128, Kensington High St., W.8.

DR. ORLANDO A. MANSFIELD, MUS. DOC., University of Toronto; Mus.Doc., Trinity University, Toronto: F.R.C.O.: F.A.G.O., &c., Sirsa House, Cheltenham. Correspondence Lessons. Revision of MSS. Scoring, editing, and arranging. Examination pieces analysed and annotated.

PREPARATION L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., and all Associated Board Exams. 1925 Successes include 5 L.R.A.M. (Pianoforte). Courses of study, or single lessons, arranged at home or West End. Alan May, 31, Bonham Road, S.W.2.

DR. H. H. L. MIDDLETON, Mus.Doc., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Twenty-five years' experience in Private Tuition and Coaching for Degrees. More than 800 of Dr. Middleton's Pupils have obtained Degrees at the Universities, R.A.M., R.C.M., and R.C.O. Address, 60, Berners Street, W.1.

DR. PERCY WOOD, Mus. Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O.
SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:
(1) Elementary Harmony and Counterpoint.
(2) F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O.
(3) A.R.C.M. (Theory of Music).
(4) A. Mus. T.C.L. and L. Mus. T.C.L.
Several recent successes in all these examinations.
R.C.O. EXAMINER says: "Your system is undoubtedly an excellent one."

SUCCESS GUARANTEED—given any pupils with the requisite musical ability for the examination in view.
285 A.R.C.O. Successes since 1909.
180 F.R.C.O. " " "

RECENT SUCCESSES IN PAPER WORK:

2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1916.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1916.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1916.	5 A.R.C.O., July, 1916.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1917.	2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1917.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1917.	4 A.R.C.O., July, 1917.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.	2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.
4 F.R.C.O., July, 1918.	2 A.R.C.O., July, 1918.
1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., July, 1919.
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.	10 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1920.	6 A.R.C.O., July, 1920.
3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.	7 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.
6 F.R.C.O., July, 1921.	8 A.R.C.O., July, 1921.
5 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1922.	5 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1922.
4 F.R.C.O., July, 1922.	5 A.R.C.O., July, 1922.
8 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1923.	6 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1923.
7 F.R.C.O., July, 1923.	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1923.
7 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1924.	9 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1924.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1924.	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1924.
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1925.	8 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1925.
7 F.R.C.O., July, 1925.	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1925.
5 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1926.	6 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1926.
6 F.R.C.O., July, 1926.	6 A.R.C.O., July, 1926.

"Tralee," Warwick Road, Cliftonville, Margate.

F.R.C.O. AND A.R.C.O. PAPER WORK.

A SPECIAL COURSE OF CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS for the January, 1927, F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O. Examinations is now commencing. The chief reason why this system of tuition is so successful is that pupils are taught how to work. Experience has proved that a large number of candidates fail because they do not reach a high enough standard in their work, which is often the result of training on wrong lines. Now in this system of tuition pupils are trained to produce work which is above the standard required by the examiners.

Special attention given to the Pianoforte Accompaniment Test, as most organ students fail to utilize the distinctive idioms of pianoforte writing, and make their work look like an organ accompaniment.

F.R.C.O. pupils are trained to work on a definite plan in such tests as Episode and Middle Entries, Stretto, and Song Writing, so as to acquire speed, which is a most vital factor, especially in the afternoon when so many candidates come to grief.

Hints on how to study the score selected for the January examination as well as a complete analysis (which will give answers to likely questions) will be sent to all pupils.

All the new tests will be covered in these lessons, and complete musical illustrations will be sent to each candidate showing exactly what the examiners require.

The whole aim of this method is to teach the principles which underlie all highly artistic music, and also the application of these principles to examination work, so that a pupil who is thus equipped is enabled not only to pass the F.R.C.O. or A.R.C.O. examination, as the case may be, but also to develop to the utmost the musical ability with which he is endowed.

DR. PERCY WOOD, Mus. Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O.
"TRALEE," WARWICK ROAD, CLIFTONVILLE, MARGATE.

MISS F. HELENA MARKS, Author of "The Sonata: Its Form and Meaning," prepares for L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., and all other examinations, Pianoforte, Harmony, "Form and Teaching," &c. Personal or Correspondence Lessons in all Paper-Work subjects, including those for L.R.A.M., "Aural Training and Sight-Singing," and A.R.C.M. in "The Teaching of Musical Appreciation," &c. Pupils received and visited for the Pianoforte. Many recent successes L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c.
10, Matheson Road, London, W.14.

CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS.

Graded Lessons especially prepared to suit individual needs—every student assured of personal care and attention. Rudiments, Harmony, Counterpoint, Orchestration, &c. Preparation for Diplomas and other examinations. Interesting courses also for those not wishing to enter examinations.
ALFRED MORRIS, L.Mus., T.C.L., 9, West Lorne Street, Chester.

PIANO TEACHING EXAMS., A.R.C.M., L.R.A.M., ETC.
(a) Outline of Course of Instruction, 5s.
(b) Studies for Special Purposes (first bars given), 5s.
(c) Four Special Test-Papers for A.R.C.M., £1 (including corrections).
"J. H.," Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M., &c., c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

MR. R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M. (Double Dip. Singing and Piano), L.R.A.M., Class A, Performer and Teacher.
Prof. Singing, G.S.M., 1905-1915. Special Lect. on Musical Appreciation to L.C.C.
"Recit. and its Rendering." 1s. 6d. "Vade Mecum for Singers." 6d.
Preparation for all Exams. by Post and Personal Lessons.
Special Courses of Papers: Singing, Piano, Touch, Musical Appreciation, &c.
Nearly 1,000 Successes for Degrees and Diplomas.
Send for Prospectus,
21, Boundary Road, N.W.8. 'Phone: Maida Vale 1715.

W. J. FREDERICK PUGH, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., prepares for L.R.A.M. (Aural Culture and Voice Culture Diplomas), A.R.C.M. (Appreciation Diploma). Recent Successes. 34, Wilmington Avenue, Chiswick, W.4. Chiswick 3267.

DR. TAYLOR'S POSTAL PUPILS HAVE passed Mus. Bac. 1st and final. A.R.C.O.; L.R.A.M.; A.T.C.L. Pupil gained the Stillie Bursary at Glasgow for Counterpoint. Latest success, A.R.C.O. for 1924. Portland Place, Lancaster.

W. G. WEBBER, F.R.C.O. Recitalist, &c. Preparation for Exams. Organ lessons given on new four-manual Willis. Address, Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road, London, S.E.1.

MISS MARGARET YOUNG, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Pianoforte); A.T.C.L. (Vocal and Pianoforte), Registered Teacher, T.R.C. Postal Tuition for Theoretical, above Diplomas; also General Musical Knowledge and Advice. Bawburgh, Norwich.

THE WESTMINSTER CHORAL SOCIETY.

There are a few VACANCIES in this CHOIR for ALL VOICES. Applications should be made to the Hon. Secretary, Mr. E. W. A. Campbell, 471, Green Lane, Goodmayes, Essex.

LICHFIELD CATHEDRAL CHOIR.

There will be a TRIAL OF VOICES on Saturday, 16th October, to fill a VACANCY for a LEADING BOY. Candidates must have very good voices, and be good readers of music, and should be between nine and twelve years old. Board, lodging, education, and medical attendance free. Apply, Rev. M. Hardey, Subchanter, 9, The Close, Lichfield, Staffs.

SOPRANO, A.R.C.M., WANTS POST as SOLOIST in choir. Splendid Reader. At-Homes, &c.; also takes pupils. Miss Evetts, 123, Portsdown Road, W.9. 'Phone: Maida Vale 2782.

ALTO WANTED for Armagh Cathedral. Salary, £100 per annum. Apply, with testimonials, to Dr. Chaundy, Cathedral Hill, Armagh.

BASS WANTED.—Soloist and good reader, £16. Also ALTO, £16. Experienced Choristers. For Holy Trinity Church, Wandsworth. Sundays only. Write "Organist," 20, Sutherland Grove, S.W.18.

HEREFORD CATHEDRAL.—BASS SINGER WANTED (not baritone). Good sight-reader essential. Cathedral experience desirable. Salary, £110. Non-contributory Pension, subject to conditions. Applications, stating age, and whether married, and enclosing copies of not more than three testimonials, to be sent to The Chapter Clerk, 30, Castle Street, Hereford, before September 15.

ORGANIST-CHOIRMASTER WANTED for the Parish Church of West Norwood, London. Churchman, Trainer, Accompanist, Recitalist. Large choir and congregations. Cathedral Service. Great opportunities. £100 per annum. Apply, Vicar, West Norwood, S.E.27.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER REQUIRED for St. Margaret's Church, Dunham Massey, Altrincham. Communicant. Remuneration, £110 per annum to commence. Applications to the Vicar, St. Margaret's Vicarage, Altrincham.

SOUTHWELL CATHEDRAL.

ASSISTANT-ORGANIST WANTED AT ONCE. Must be keen Choir-trainer, and able to play simple Service well. Salary, £52 per annum, with help in preparation for Degree or Diploma if required. Apply, H. W. Tupper, Mus. Bac. (Oxon), F.R.C.O., Vicars' Court, Southwell, Notts.

WILL any gentleman undertake to train Voluntary Mixed Choir in North London Church? Apply, Rev. Hackforth, 34, Canonbury Park South, N.1.

THE ORGANIST of Ripon Cathedral has a VACANCY for an ARTICLED PUPIL. Pupils recently appointed to Hexham Abbey and St. Mary's, Hull. Address: Dr. C. H. Moody, C.B.E., Ripon.

GENTLEMAN REQUIRES POST AS TUTOR in Musical College or Music School. Pianoforte, Organ, Theory. "A. L.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd. 160, Wardour Street, W.1

PIANIST, L.R.A.M., desires ACCOMPANIMENT WORK to Violinist, Singer, or Quartet. Apply, Mrs. B., 30, Tierney Road, Streatham, S.W.2.

GENTLEMAN (25), possessing Musical and Commercial Qualifications, DESIRES POSITION as:—

(a.) Music Master, or Assistant, in College or School within easy access of London;

(b.) Administrative post in music publishing business or Music warehouse.

The highest references can be supplied. Write, "A. G. W.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

PIANOFORTE TUNING.—Postal Lessons given by qualified Tuner. Quick tuition. Terms and Testimonials, W. Cawson, 117, Armley Road, Leeds.

£250 SINGING, Pianoforte, and Elocution Free Scholarships, Cups, Medals, and Cash Prizes. The Clifton Cooke Open Competitions: Elocution, 23rd October; Singing, 30th October; Pianoforte, 6th November. Results at Lecture Recital, "Practical Singing," King George's Hall, Wednesday, November 10th, at 7.30 p.m. Prospectus from Secretary, 26M, Guilford Street, W.C.1.

WILL ANYBODY HELP Ex-Service Man with Musical Studies? Keen musician. Pianoforte or Organ. East London. Letters to "H.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ORGANS (New and Second-hand) for SALE.—Electric and pneumatic action up-to-date. Built or reconstructed. Bedwell & Son, The Cambridge Organ Works, Cambridge.

CHURCH ORGANS STANDARDISED.—Two Manuals, Pneumatic Pedals, various sizes: specially built. Five to fifteen stops. Introduced to meet the requirements of the times at minimum cost. W. E. Richardson & Sons, Central Organ Works, Manchester, S.W.

SEVERAL ORGANS, suitable for small Churches, for SALE. From £300. Erection according to distance. Bedwell & Son, The Cambridge Organ Works, Cambridge.

ORGAN PRACTICE.—1*s.* 4*d.* an hour (pupils, 9*d.*). Hydraulic-blown, two manuals and pedals (R.C.O. scale). ORGAN LESSONS at St. Stephen's Walbrook, E.C.4. Large three-manual Organ. Moderate fees. Special courses of combined lessons and practice at reduced fees. Write for prospectus. G. J. METZLER, F.R.C.O., Principal, Fulham School of Music, 2, Edgarley Terrace, Fulham Palace Road, S.W.6. Tel.: Putney 4208.

MUSIC COMPOSERS and LYRIC WRITERS.—Songs, Lyrics, and Musical Compositions Wanted for Publication. We compose Music to Lyrics if desired. Advice free to new authors and composers. Send MSS. (words or music) to the Carlton Music Agency, 8, Lloyd Square, London, W.C.1.

A TREATISE ON CONDUCTING.

12,000 WORDS. 1*s.* 9*d.* Illustrated Method! Post 2*d.* (C.O.D. 2*s.* 6*d.*). 800 Copies sold. Invaluable to Leaders and Members of any Orchestra, Band, or Choir. M. T. Cooper, M.D., 23, Beech Avenue, Blackpool.

COMMUNION SERVICE in F, complete, with 9-fold Kyrie. Specimen 1*s.*, from R. R. Glendinning, 13, Langton Terrace, Falmouth.

FOR SALE.—Full Scores of ORATORIOS, ORCHESTRAL WORKS; bound concerted Pianoforte Music. Stamped, addressed envelope for list. Forster, Castle Café, Forfar.

AMATEUR ORCHESTRA DISBANDING. Many standard works for DISPOSAL. List with pleasure. "S. C.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

MORE DON'TS.

By JOHN NEWTON. READY SEPT. 1ST.

Second edition, "Don'ts for Choirmasters." Fresh matter, New Exercises. 1*s.*, postage 2*d.*, of Heffer, Cambridge; and the Author, Christchurch, Hants.

"WE WILL MERRIE BE." Charming Song, by Florence Mackintosh. Old English style. In two keys. 2*s.* each net. Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour St., London, W.1.

PALESTRINA.—Choice Selections from, set as Short Anthems (S.A.T.B.), to English words. Specimen copies gratis to Choirmasters, from Dr. H. G. Smith, St. Margaret's, N.C.R., Dublin.

MUSICAL BOOKS.

48-Page List (Cat. B.) post free—Æsthetics—Biography—Criticism—Essays—History—Orchestra—Organ—Pianoforte—Technical—Theoretical and Elementary—Violin—Vocal—Wagner—Tutors—&c.

REEVES'S, 83, Charing Cross Road, London, W.C.2.

DARLINGTON'S HANDBOOKS.

"Nothing better could be wished for."—British Weekly.

FRENCH AND ITALIAN RIVIERA. 60 Illustrations, Maps and Plans, 6/-.

WEST SWITZERLAND. 100 Illustrations, Maps and Plans, 4/-.

2/- Paris, Lyons, and Rhone Valley.
2/- Chamonix and Environs.
2/- Lake Geneva, Rhone Valley, and Zermatt.
2/- The French Riviera.
2/- The Italian Riviera.
2/- Bernese Oberland and Lucerne.

NORTH WALES. 60 Illustrations, Maps and Plans, 7/6.

DEVON & CORNWALL. 100 Illustrations, Maps and Plans, 7/6.

NORTH DEVON AND NORTH CORNWALL. 50 Illustrations, 6 Maps, 4/-

SOUTH DEVON AND SOUTH CORNWALL. 50 Illustrations, 6 Maps, 4/-.

THE HOTELS OF THE WORLD. A Handbook to the Leading Hotels throughout the World, 2/6.

List of DARLINGTON'S HANDBOOKS post free.

Llangollen: DARLINGTON & Co. London: SIMPKINS. Railway Bookstalls and all Booksellers.

Paris and New York: BRENTANO'S.

Save Half the Cost of your Music Library

by buying from Foyles. Call and inspect the exceptionally wide range of second-hand copies (in good condition) of Standard Text-Books, at about Half Published Prices. Including, amongst others, the Works of

MACPHERSON, Stewart.		PEARCE.
MATTHAY.	OAKEY.	PETERSON.
MRS. CURWEN.	PARRY.	PROUT.

NOVELLO'S PRIMERS AND TEXT-BOOKS.
GROVE'S DICTIONARY of MUSIC and MUSICIANS.
THE MUSICAL EDUCATOR, 5 Vols. 25*s.*
CURWEN'S PUBLICATIONS.

If unable to call, write, mentioning requirements or interests. Catalogue of Dept. 15 (Music) sent free of charge.

ORCHESTRAL, STRING, VOCAL, ORATORIO, AND PIANOFORTE MUSIC.

Foyles hold a wide range at greatly reduced Prices.

NEW MUSIC AND TEXT-BOOKS.

Foyles supply on the best terms and guarantee quick delivery.

MUSIC AND BOOKS PURCHASED; BEST PRICES PAID.

FOYLE'S MUSIC DEPT.,
121-5, CHARING CROSS ROAD,
LONDON, W.C.2.

SELECTED PORTIONS
OF THE PSALMS
AND CHANTS WITH DESCANTS
BY ALAN GRAY.
PRICE 6*d.*

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

EXPERIENCE AND REPUTATION

BY APPOINTMENT.

Over thirty years' experience in the manufacture of Organ Blowing Machinery is behind the fine reputation held by the "DISCUS" Organ Blower. During this period, installations have been made with complete success to a very large number of Cathedrals, Churches, and Public Buildings both at home and abroad. We can supply blowers to suit any size or type of organ, and the motive power may be either electricity, gas, or oil. Our wide and varied experience is at your disposal. Write now for a free copy of our illustrated booklet, "Organ Blowing," and let us supply free estimate and suggestions from your particulars.

THE "DISCUS" REGD. TRADE MARK. ORGAN BLOWER.

SOLE MAKERS

WATKINS & WATSON, WHITE LION STREET, LONDON, N.1.

Telephone: North 2039.

JUST PUBLISHED.

FINAL BOOK OF THE BREARE VOCAL SERIES No. 5,

"VOCAL ANALYSES: SENSITISING BREATH— EMOTIONAL EVOLUTION."

Price 5*s.*, by Post, 5*s.* 4½*d.*

Previous Books of the Series—No. 1, "Vocalism: Its Structure and Culture, from an English Standpoint." No. 2, "Elocution: Its First Principles." No. 3, "Vocal Faults and their Remedies." No. 4, "Vocal Technique: How it Feels to Sing."

Books No. 1 to No. 4, price 3*s.* 6*d.* each, till pre-war editions exhausted.

By W. H. BREARE, J.P., M.I.J., Vocal Adviser.

Address: HERALD BUILDINGS, HARROGATE, ENGLAND.

Publishers

London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT & Co.

Harrogate: R. ACKRILL, Ltd.

JAMES LYON, Mus. Doc.

ELEMENTS OF HARMONY

3*s.* 6*d.*

Answers to Questions and Exercises on the Elements of Harmony.

2*s.* 6*d.*

BANKS & SON, MUSIC PUBLISHERS, YORK.

JUST PUBLISHED.

NOVELLO'S SCHOOL SONGS.

BOOK 274.

FOLK-SONGS

FOR SCHOOLS.

COLLECTED AND ARRANGED BY

CECIL J. SHARP.

SET IX.

No.
1407	BLACKBIRDS AND THRUSHES
1408	DABBLING IN THE DEW
1409	THE BONNY LIGHTER-BOY
1410	THE BAILIFF'S DAUGHTER OF ISLINGTON
1411	THE TREE IN THE WOOD
1412	THE BOLD FISHERMAN
1413	MY BOY WILLIE
1414	SCARBOROUGH FAIR
1415	SEARCHING FOR LAMBS

Price Twopence each number.

Price One Shilling.

Voice Parts only, 4*d.*

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

THE SUPERB

BECHSTEIN PIANOS

You can examine a magnificent selection of Bechstein Pianos—new and second-hand—at

126, NEW BOND ST., W.1.

Can be purchased by instalments, no deposit required.

Old Pianos taken in exchange, highest value allowed.

Call or write for Catalogue.

The Autoplayer Co., Ltd.,
BECHSTEIN PIANO SPECIALISTS.
Mayfair 2653.

STEINWAY STUDIOS

COMFORTABLY FURNISHED
ELECTRIC LIGHT
CENTRAL HEATING
TELEPHONE LIFT
NEW STEINWAY PIANOS

Full particulars from
STEINWAY & SONS
THE NEW STEINWAY HALL,
1 & 2, GEORGE ST., CONDUIT ST., LONDON, W.1.
'PHONE: MAYFAIR 6641-5.

PIANOS

BECHSTEIN. BORD.
SCHIEDMAYER. ROGERS

NEW AND SECOND-HAND
CASH OR HIRE PURCHASE

Pianos taken in exchange.

Apply for lists:

CHAS. STILES & CO.
74-76, SOUTHAMPTON ROW
LONDON, W.C.1.
'Phone: MUSEUM 0439.

CRAMER STUDIOS

from
3 GNS.
per term

RECENTLY RENOVATED

NEW CRAMER PIANOS

139 NEW BOND STREET
LONDON W1

RELIEVES COLDS PREVENTS "FLU"
VAPEX
(REG TRADE MARK)
INHALANT

THE MAGIC DROP

A DROP of "Vapex" looks very small, but when placed on the handkerchief its effects are far-reaching. A single inhalation is sufficient to bathe all the complicated passages of nose and throat in an antiseptic atmosphere. "Vapex" grows stronger on exposure to air, and it is, therefore, very economical in use.

All Chemists, 2s. and 3s.

SOLE MAKERS:
THOMAS KERFOOT & CO., LTD.,
BARDSLEY VALE, LANCS.

JUST PUBLISHED.

AN ABRIDGED CONCERT EDITION OF

SEMELE

A SECULAR ORATORIO

FOR FOUR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

BY

G. F. HANDEL

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE

TONIC SOL-FA (in the Press).

The time of performance of this edition is about two hours, and the orchestral parts have been so cued that it may be performed with accompaniment of: (1) Strings only; (2) Strings and Pianoforte; (3) Strings, or Strings and Pianoforte, with the addition of any Wind up to the complete Score of 2 Oboes, 2 Bassoons, 2 Horns, 2 Trumpets, Drums.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

TO BE PUBLISHED EARLY IN SEPTEMBER.

CARMEN

AN OPERA

BY

GEORGES BIZET.

SELECTED AND ADAPTED FOR CONCERT PERFORMANCE

BY

W. McNAUGHT.

THE LIBRETTO FROM THE ENGLISH VERSION OF THE COMPLETE OPERA BY

LUCIA YOUNG.

PRICE, THREE SHILLINGS.

Tonic Sol-fa, Price 2s.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

TO BE PUBLISHED EARLY IN SEPTEMBER.

AN ABRIDGED

CONCERT EDITION

OF

KING ARTHUR

AN OPERA

LIBRETTO BY JOHN DRYDEN.

MUSIC BY

HENRY PURCELL.

PRICE, TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

PATERSON'S PUBLICATIONS.

BACH BACH

CHOIRMASTERS MAY ALWAYS HAVE SINGLE COPIES ON SALE OR RETURN.

READY SHORTLY.

THE ST. LUKE PASSION.

A Selection from the Passion of our Lord according to St. Luke.
Arranged by REV. A. HASTINGS KELK, M.A., and J. MICHAEL DIACK.
Staff, 2*s.* 6*d.* Sol-fa (Choruses), 1*s.*

THIS early work of Bach's has many interesting and beautiful features. It supplies the need for a short, dramatic, and dignified setting of the Passion, and is written throughout in a simple style quite within the compass of ordinary Church Choirs or small Choral Societies. Time of performance, 50 minutes.

THE PEASANT CANTATA.

Soprano, Baritone, and Chorus.
Staff, 3*s.* ; Sol-fa, 1*s.* 6*d.* ; Choruses, 1*s.* 6*d.*

THE COFFEE CANTATA.

Soprano, Tenor, Baritone, and Chorus.
Staff, 2*s.* 6*d.* ; Sol-fa, 1*s.* 6*d.* ; Choruses, 1*s.*

PSALM CXXI.

For Chorus.
Staff, 2*s.* ; Sol-fa, 1*s.*

THE HUNDREDTH PSALM.

For Chorus.
Staff, 2*s.* ; Sol-fa, 1*s.*

For further Bach publications see our special Bach leaflet.

SELECTED STUDIES

For Pianoforte.
From the Classic Study Composers.
Price, 2*s.* each.

OWING to the success of the four graded books issued last Autumn we invited MR. CUTHBERT WHITEMORE to select a book of very simple studies. This book is now ready, and with the other four books makes a complete library of all that is best and most useful in the department of Studies. Students for Diplomas will find them invaluable for reference.

PRELIMINARY SELECTED STUDIES.

Edited by CUTHBERT and FREDA WHITEMORE.

BOOK I. ELEMENTARY GRADE.
DESIRÉE MACEWAN, A.R.A.M.

BOOK II. LOWER GRADE.
CUTHBERT WHITEMORE, F.R.A.M.

BOOK III. INTERMEDIATE GRADE.
NANCY GILFORD, A.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.

BOOK IV. HIGHER GRADE.
FELIX SWINSTEAD, F.R.A.M.

PATERSON'S PUBLICATIONS, LTD.,

152, BUCHANAN STREET, GLASGOW, C.1. 95, WIMPOLE STREET, LONDON, W.1.

RECENT ISSUES.

Abide with me (Anthem), S.A.T.B. Cyril Jenkins. 6*d.*
*Praise the Lord (Anthem), S.A.T.B. Adam Carse. 1*s.*

MADRIGALS (S.S.A.T.B.) By GESUALDO
(Prince of Venosa.)
EDITED BY J. B. McEWEN.

Cease then to give me sorrow ... ... 4*d.*
Death alone can still my grief ... ... 6*d.*

*THE BLESSED DAMOZEL
(D. G. ROSSETTI.)
Music by ARTHUR SANDFORD (Mendelssohn Scholarship).
Soprano Solo, Chorus, and Orchestra.
Vocal Score, 5*s.* net.

ORGAN MUSIC.

Festivity. Cyril Jenkins ... ... 2*s.* net.
Six Pieces. Op. 50. Arthur Foote ... ... 3*s.* net.
Five Pieces. Op. 32. Charles Quef ... ... 3*s.* net.

Orchestral Parts may be had on hire.*

List of Church Music } Free on application.
List of Organ Music }

JOSEPH WILLIAMS, LIMITED,
32, GREAT PORTLAND STREET, LONDON, W.1.

TEXT-BOOKS
BY
ALBERT HAM, MUS. DOC., F.R.C.O.

OUTLINES OF MUSICAL FORM
WITH ANALYSES FROM
WELL-KNOWN CLASSICAL WORKS.

Price ... Five Shillings.

"In all respects this is an admirable little work, with no waste, no hiatus of a serious nature, handy in size, and with a practical scheme well carried through."—Musical Times.

DR. C. W. PEARCE, in alluding to the above work, says:

"Quite the best I have ever seen, and I shall lose no opportunity for recommending it."

THE RUDIMENTS OF MUSIC AND ELEMENTARY HARMONY.
THIRD EDITION.

Price ... Five Shillings.

"Dr. Ham's admirable little work may be cordially recommended."
—Musical Times.

	s.	d.
MINUET AND TRIO FOR ORGAN	2	0
PEDAL AND MANUAL SCALES AND ARPEGGIOS ...	2	6
ANTHEMS: The desert shall rejoice. S. or T. Solo and Chorus (S.A.T.B.)	0	3
I heard the Voice of Jesus say. Bar. Solo and Chorus (T.T.B.B.)	0	4
PART-SONG: Music, when soft voices die (S.A.T.B.)	0	3

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, London, W.1.

President:
THE RT. HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY,
K.P., G.C.V.O., C.B.E.

Chairman of Board and Director of Studies:
Professor J. C. BRIDGE, M.A., MUS. D., F.S.A.

Director of Examinations: E. F. HORNER, MUS. D.

The FOLLOWING CANDIDATES were SUCCESSFUL at the DIPLOMA EXAMINATIONS held at the COLLEGE and at certain centres recently:

FELLOWS (F.T.C.L.).—Marguerite A. Caseau, Florence N. Daniels, Rose V. Kemp, Eric A. Smith, Jeanie J. Smith, Mus. B., John E. Tidnam.

LICENTIATE IN MUSIC (L. Mus. T.C.L.).—John C. Brydson, Mus. B., Albert E. Vaughan.

LICENTIATE (L.T.C.L.).

PIANOFORTE.—Doris Aldred, Bertha J. Allender, Doris Benjamin, Alice Blackledge, May Brierley, Gladys M. L. Budge, Nuel M. Clark, Phyllis N. Davies, Iva E. Dacombe, John T. Digger, Evelyn M. Dodge, Mary E. Donohoe, Norman J. K. Edmonds, Eliza D. Filby, Margaret F. C. Fitchett, John Gardiner, Katherine D. Gibson, Greta Gillam, Muriel E. Green, Ethel W. Hart, Leonard Hughes, Grace F. Jeffries, Lilian S. C. Knight, Edith A. Langdon, Winsome H. Lawson, Jessie M. Lee, A. Violet Lewis-Evans, Charles H. Matty, Gladys F. Meadows, Eileen M. Moore, James H. Morgan, Violet C. Proctor, Dorothy Randell, Alice Richards, Wilfred P. Rickard, Minnie M. Riddle, Lita Rigby, Gladys M. Roe, Hilda M. Ross, Gladys D. Smedley, Lieba P. Smollan, Dorothy A. Stone, Mary M. Talbot, Arthur Taylor, Nancy E. Thatcher, Dan Thomas, Marion Turner, Rubie Tyner, Doris E. Walker, Olive D. Webster, Kathleen V. Welch, Ada E. White, Kathleen R. Wood, Fred Woodhead, Dorothy Woolley, Gladys F. M. Wright.

ORGAN.—Cecil C. Arnold.

VIOLIN.—Israel Katzoff, Arnold Partington, Florence J. Worsdell

SINGING.—Edith O. de Pauley, Hilda M. Hounsell, Mrs. Fanny W. Joseph, Ted Warburton, Eleanor V. Wood.

ELOCUTION.—Lilian Bird, Doris E. Fosh, Mary Harris.

ASSOCIATES IN MUSIC (A. Mus. T.C.L.).—Josephine H. Emerson, Margaretha K. Jeffcoat, Harold G. Kirkham.

ASSOCIATES (A.T.C.L.).

PIANOFORTE.—Dorothy O. Akers, Leo J. Anderson, Mildred Andrews, Elsie A. Baker, Kathleen H. Baker, Elsie Barry, Elsie Baxter, Helen V. Beck, Barbara A. Benson, Irene R. Bose, Dora Bratley, Kathleen F. Burke, Phyllis E. Burman, Marjorie Carveth, Helen M. Chaffer, Harry Conolly, Grace N. Couch, Alice N. Craik, Beryl M. Crane, Gwyneth A. Davies, Arthur Eaves, Olive V. Edwards, Stanley H. Firth, James E. Forte, Elsie G. Fox, Kathleen M. Fryer, Phylip J. George, Lillian M. Gibbons, Jane K. Gibson, Dorothy M. Gill, Edith M. Gower, Elsie Grayston, Edith Gregory, Ella Gromett, Robert G. Gunnell, Winifred E. Haglington, Hilda M. Hallam, Annie Halldearn, Nellie L. J. Ham, Sibyl E. Hannaford, Gwendoline M. Hardaker, Olive M. Hanes, Gladys Hart, Kathleen J. R. Hellier, Kathleen Herbert, Henry F. Hughes, Nora M. Hunt, Florence I. James, Lovis M. Johnson, Eleanor Jones, Maud M. Javet, Winifred M. Kimber, Mrs. Ethel M. A. Lambert, Alice M. Lindap, Laura P. Lloyd, Dorothy Loader, Mary J. McInnes, Winifred Martin, Gwyneth E. Mitchell, Sydney Morecroft, Kathleen Munro, Joy M. A. Noyce, Marjorie Nutbeem, Muriel H. G. Outen, Joan A. Pace, Patricia G. Palmer, Winifred C. Payne, Mary R. L. Payton, Joan M. Peasgood, Catherine Pleming, Irene E. L. Pobjoy, Janet H. Pollard, Rose M. M. Puncher, Edith Ride, Iris B. M. Robbins, Ceridwen G. Roberts, Gwendolen M. Roberts, Vera C. L. Roberts, Elizabeth Rook, Goldie Rosenway, Kathleen M. Rowley, Arthur Russell, Mary Sanderson, Doris I. Scone, Mabel F. Searle, Kathleen A. Secretan, Doris Selway, Olga V. Sendall, Leonard Seymour, Ivy Shilling, Kathleen A. Shipley, Dorothy A. Short, Fred Sidebotham, Bessie Smart, Wilfred L. Southwell, Margaret L. Sparks, Mary E. E. Stephen, Florence Stoneman, Edith E. Stothard, Nancy P. Sturgess, Kathleen Swift, Olive M. Symonds, Edward S. Tate, Margery E. Taylor, Nellie G. Taylor, Elizabeth G. Thom, Ada E. Thomas, Rigmor Trim, Margaret Usher, Stella Walters, Herbert P. Warburton, Hilda N. Ware, Margaret V. Watkins, Frederic S. Watkins, Marjorie V. Webb, Audrey Webster, Vera E. Webster, Linda Wheeler, Dora M. Wilkins, Gwladys Williams, Nellie Williams, Annie M. Wilson, Jessie L. Wright, Miriam Wright, Mary E. Wyke-Alder.

(Continued on page 784)

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC (contd.).

VIOLIN.—Kenneth Anderson, Marjorie M. Edge-Riley, Evelyn M. Evans, Lily M. Laskey, Vera I. Munday.

ELOCUTION.—Ida Ellison, Mrs. Agnes G. Johnston, Linda Lynas.

SINGING.—Lucy A. Bonner, Kate Booth, Marjorie Dawson, Florence K. Hackman, Lilian Hedges, Lucy D. Thurston, Lottie Turnbull, Hilda Wallis, Flora Wilkinson.

ORGAN.—Muriel Ballard, Leonard Barrett, George W. V Borsley, George Brady, Donald K. Cocker, Ernest Mason, Arthur R. Osborne, Edward S. Whitehead, Leonard G. Williams, Donald Wood.

CERTIFICATES.

PIANOFORTE.—Dora M. Barnett, Muriel A. Battrum, Elsa M. Baxter, Edith M. Beckett, Elizabeth S. Bennetts, Sister M. Baptist Brennan, George L. Brown, Mildred Buckley, Annie Chaplin, Dora Dunn, Brynley Evans, Eleanor Green (Hons.), Frances G. Harper, Gwendoline M. Harper, Richard M. Haygarth, Clarissa M. Martin, Sara A. Mason (Hons.), Margaret May, Gladys Riley, Marjorie Spedding, Mabel M. Spracklin, Alice W. Stallard, Gwendolen Sutherland, Alfred H. Wheatcroft (Hons.), Eunice E. Wrath (Hons.).

ORGAN.—Mary D. Baker.

VIOLIN.—Mildred C. Dale, Edith N. Richardson (Hons.).

SINGING.—Janie A. Cooke, Amy M. Evans, Nina F. Robinson.

EXAMINERS.—H. L. Balfour, Mus. B., Prof. Granville Bantock, M.A., Mus. D., W. H. Brereton, Prof. J. C. Bridge, M.A., Mus. D., Avalon Collard, Sir Frederic Cowen, Mus. D., W. Creser, Mus. D., Edric Cundell, Edward d'Evry, Paul Edmonds, F. J. Gostelow, H. A. Harding, E. F. Horner, Mus. D., Thomas Keighley, Mus. D., Charlton Keith, Ludwig Lebell, Albert Mallinson, E. Medd-Hall, S. Myerscough, Mus. B., G. Oldroyd, Mus. D., C. C. Palmer, Mus. D., L. Pecskai, A. W. Pollitt, Mus. D., Alec Rowley, W. Sanderson, Mus. B., J. Speaight, D. Vaughan Thomas, M.A., Mus. D., Anderson Tyrer, Ivor Warren, John Warriner, Mus. D., Alexander Watson, Maud A. Winter.

NEXT DIPLOMA EXAMINATIONS will take place at the College in London and at certain centres in JANUARY. Last day of entry, December 4.

Particulars of the Teaching Department, with list of Professors, Fees, Scholarships regulations, &c., and the Syllabuses of the Diploma and Local Examinations, free on application to the undersigned.

C. N. H. RODWELL, Secretary.

SCHOOL SONGS

IN

ELKIN & CO.'S

CHORAL SERIES.

ELKIN & Co.'s Choral Series contains many Unison Songs and Part-Songs suitable for use in Schools.

Will teachers please write for specimen copies on approval, mentioning for what voices they are required?

ELKIN & CO., LTD.,

20, KINGLY STREET, REGENT STREET

LONDON, W.1.

BROADWOOD

PIANOS

BOSWORTH & CO., LTD.

ORGAN MUSIC.

ORGAN WORKS OF FAMOUS MASTERS.

(G. RAMIN.)

Vincent Lubeck, J. S. Bach, J. Brahms, J. Rheinberger, and others.

KISTNER EDITION, No. 107. Price 3*s.* 6*d.*

PRELUDES ALBUM.

(HOMMEYER.)

Containing 87 Preludes and other pieces by Fischer, Vogler, Handel, Bach, Beethoven, Mertke, Schwalm, Wolff, Hommeyer, and others.

STEINGRABER EDITION No. 67. Price 2*s.* 6*d.*

HARMONIUM MUSIC.

BACH ALBUM.

SELECTED COMPOSITIONS.

(E. PAUL.)

Containing 27 Compositions:
Sarabandes, Choral Works, Preludes, Fugues, &c.

KISTNER EDITION No. 110. Price 2*s.* 6*d.*

BOSWORTH & CO., LTD.,
8, HEDDON STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.1.

JUST PUBLISHED.

FIRST

CHORAL SYMPHONY

THE WORDS SELECTED FROM THE POEMS OF

JOHN KEATS

AND SET TO MUSIC FOR

SOPRANO SOLO, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

BY

GUSTAV HOLST.

(OP. 41.)

FULL SCORE.

Price ... £3 3*s.*

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

The Musical Times

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

SEPTEMBER 1 1926

(FOR LIST OF CONTENTS SEE PAGE 847.)

THE NATURE OF HARMONY

BY MATTHEW SHIRLAW.

IV.

Since the last article dealing with this subject appeared in the December issue of the Musical Times, there is evidence that the demonstrations there given as to the connection between harmony and rhythm have aroused some favourable interest. It may be objected that if there is indeed any relationship between rhythm and consonance, why then do they appear to be so dissimilar, and why does the effect of the one differ so greatly from that of the other? What resemblance does a succession of bars in duple time bear to the consonance of the Octave, and who that has never heard such a consonance could gain by such means any idea of its real effect? This question may be answered by asking another. A musical sound 'of singular force and purity'—to quote Prof. Tyndall—may be produced by means of a rapid and periodic succession of taps. Some one has said that a beautiful musical sound is itself a fact of considerable æsthetic importance. But who, in listening to such a beautiful manifestation, could possibly deduce—until he had investigated the matter properly—the effect from the cause, or imagine that musical sound could have anything to do with a succession of taps? And who would suspect that the same rhythmical principle that is the cause of musical sound reveals itself again in light, and colour? Yet a close analogy exists between sound and light. Light is caused by the vibration of the ether: sound by the vibration of the air: and there is a wave-theory of light as well as of musical sound. More surprising still, the various colours of the rainbow exist in white light, just as partial tones exist in the compound musical sound. And, as is known, Sir Isaac Newton postulated a scale of colours that in its proportions is closely analogous to the musical scale. Rameau even traced a connection between the natural principles of harmony and the graphic arts. He was not without excuse, as all will agree who are acquainted with the exquisite figures that may be obtained from vibrating strings. Some of these Tyndall describes as 'of marvellous complication, and indescribable splendour.' These natural phenomena consist of curves, and intertwining spiral and circular figures, a fact that recalls Hogarth's famous portrait of himself in the National Gallery, with the palette and curved line, and the words, 'The line of beauty and grace.' The connection between beauty and the curve was further demonstrated by Hogarth in his work, 'The Analysis of Beauty' (1753).

Indeed, nature is full of surprising facts; and the task of science has been to elucidate such facts, sometimes in the face of considerable opposition, for the findings of science have frequently appeared to be in flagrant contradiction with what we call 'common-sense.' Anyone not endowed with a sense a little above the common would conclude that this old earth of ours, together with many people in it, does not move. Still, as Galileo remarked to the inquisitors, 'it moves.' And to any objection that may be urged against a demonstration of the relationships that exist between various rhythms and the musical intervals to which these correspond, the reply may be given—test them. Each of us is endowed with a little cerebral gray matter. Besides, there are acoustical instruments, such as the syren, that may be used.

In examining the nature of consonance we cannot afford to neglect one or two clear and simple facts. As was demonstrated in my last article, the proportions existing in the resonance of musical sound reproduce themselves in various ways in musical rhythm. Conversely, musical rhythms reproduce themselves in various intervals that arise in the harmonic series. Thus, for example, the proportion of the Octave, 1 : 2, we find again in the measure of two beats, while, on the other hand, such rhythms or proportions as:

representing duple, triple, and quintuple times, and so on, if performed in such a way that the successive beats fell on the ear with sufficient rapidity, would give birth to the musical intervals that correspond to these proportions. We are led to conclude, therefore, that a close relationship exists between musical rhythm and consonance. If this be really the case, we may expect to find several points of analogy between them. Further, that by means of the one we shall be able to arrive at a clearer understanding of the other.

Let us take first, then, what is known as the consonance of the Unison. Is the Unison really a consonance? The objection might be urged: What sort of a consonance is that which consists, not of the blending of two different sounds, but of one and the same sound? For this is just what the term Unison signifies. If consonance means the union of diverse tonal elements, sounds of different pitch, the Unison would not appear to find a place among the consonances. And yet it is difficult to exclude it. We do feel that when two voices come together on the same sound they are in consonance with one another. If this be so, where is the musical rhythm that corresponds to it? A single beat cannot constitute a rhythmical formation. The answer to this question will appear immediately.

Next comes the Octave. This is the first and most perfect of consonances that arise in the harmonic series. Between the consonance of the Octave and the measure of two beats the analogy is so close that it can scarcely be closer. In the former, the lower sound forms a tonal centre to which the Octave sound relates itself:  In the latter, the accented beat forms a rhythmical centre to which the unaccented beat becomes related  A single beat cannot determine a rhythm; we cannot even tell whether it is accented or unaccented. Nor can the fundamental sound begin to develop itself as a tonal centre—the very term 'fundamental' is without meaning, until the Octave sound makes its appearance. Hauptmann starts off with the assertion that 'the Octave is the expression for the notion of indentity, unity, equality with self.' The truth is, Octave sounds are not identical. They are, however, so closely related that the one may be said to represent the other, to have the same, or a similar tonal significance. More of this when we come to treat the consonances of the Twelfth and Fifth. The reason for such a close resemblance, a resemblance shared by no two other sounds of different pitch, has always remained something of a mystery. The explanation of Helmholtz, viz., that in Octave sounds the partial tones coincide, so that no beats can arise, appears to be quite satisfactory. In order to make assurance doubly sure, let us write down the partial tones of the Fundamental, Octave, and Twelfth. Here it is evident that the partial sounds of the Twelfth coincide at least as closely with the partial tones of the Fundamental:

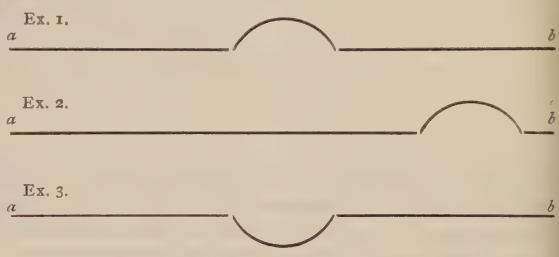
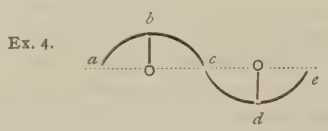
as do those of the octave. The Twelfth then, on Helmholtz's hypothesis, ought to resemble the Fundamental as closely as does the Octave. Of course it does not. Even if he admitted that the partial tones of the Twelfth and Octave do not coincide so completely with one another as do those of the Twelfth and Fundamental, it must be remembered that the explanation of Helmholtz applies to the fundamental sound also. And if such an explanation were entirely valid, it would by no means reveal to us the real nature of the Octave.

If Helmholtz is here not quite successful, he at least knew more than most the well-nigh incredible difficulty of the subject. The distinguished physicist devoted over eight years to the consideration and investigation of this and kindred matters, and it might well appear to be the wisest procedure on the part of others to leave such a problem severely alone. But this leads nowhere. Let us instead take our life in our hands, and make an attempt to dissipate some of the obscurity that surrounds the subject.

Some of us may recall, in making our first acquaintance with the science of acoustics, the boyish delight we took in watching the eccentric behaviour of certain sound-waves—or what corresponded to such—running along a string or tube. The diagrams illustrating these wave-motions were somewhat as follows:



In Ex. 1 we have to suppose that a wave, or inflection, is making its way from a towards b. In Ex. 2 the wave has reached the end of the tube; but it does not vanish there into nothingness. Instead, it proceeds to make its way back again, from b to a, but this time with its position reversed. It is turned upside down. In other words, it is inverted. Thus it is not only in intervals and chords that the principle of inversion obtains. Inversion is a constituent part of the sound-wave itself. A complete sound-wave consists of two parts: a crest and a trough:



In the case before us, we would naturally call that part of the wave above the dotted line, the crest; and that part below the dotted line, the trough. The reason of course for this is that we are accustomed to associate the crest with height and the trough with depth. The terms height and depth are, however, merely relative. All depends on the point of view. Thus, if we place Ex. 4 upside down, it is found that the portion of the wave a b c has become the trough; while the portion c d e has become the crest. It is necessary to bear this in mind. What is true of transverse holds good also for longitudinal vibrations, or sound-waves. These consist also of two parts, a condensation and a rarefaction: a condensation corresponds to a crest, a rarefaction to a trough. Are condensation and rarefaction also relative terms, and is it possible to say of longitudinal vibrations what was affirmed of transverse vibrations?—that is, Can such a wave be considered from a different point of view, so that the condensation becomes a rarefaction, and the rarefaction a condensation?

In order to understand whether this be so, let us turn again to the simple wave form (Ex. 4). If we suppose the point at o to be originally in a position of rest, its upward and downward movement, as the wave advances through a complete wave-length, may be traced as follows: First, o ascends to the crest of the wave at b; returns to o; descends to the trough b; and finally ascends to its original positon of rest at o. In moving in this way the point o is said to make one complete vibration. In so doing, it is evident that it must travel through twice the distance between the points b and d. Such vibrations, giving rise to simple wave forms, are known as pendular vibrations, because they correspond to the periodic oscillations, backwards and forwards, of a pendulum. We may assume that the pendulum travels along the position of the straight line b-d, thus, b——————d. Supposing it to swing from the point b to the point d, and back again from d to b, it will have travelled through twice the distance between b and d, and performed one complete vibration. The forward swing of the pendulum may be taken to correspond with the crest; the backward swing with the trough of the sound-wave. We have called the first movement of the pendulum, from b to d, a forward swing, and the movement in the opposite direction a backward swing. But once again it is evident that such terms are merely relative, for we would be equally justified in describing a movement of the pendulum from d to b as a forward, and that in the opposite direction as a backward swing. In fact, between the forward and backward swing there is no difference whatever except that which results from our point of view. So that, by changing our point of view, condensation becomes rarefaction, and rarefaction, condensation. As the pendulum makes, let us say, a forward swing from b to d it makes a condensation about the point d; as it swings backward from d to b it makes a rarefaction about the point d. But while it does this it makes at the same time a condensation at the point b. The backward swing is really a forward swing in the opposite direction, and the rarefaction a condensation reversed. The one is the same as the other, but in the opposite direction, i.e., inverted.

Ex. 5.

Let us make this as clear as possible by means of a few simple illustrations. As we proceed, the reader may begin to suspect that we are dealing, not merely with simple acoustical fact, but with a principle that operates everywhere in Nature. Day and night; positive and negative; here and there; high and low; life and death, all these, and more, might be cited as familiar illustrations of it. These are not merely opposites; they are counterparts one of the other. Such opposites are really complementary, and it is impossible to destroy the one without at the same time destroying the other. The reader may recall Edgar Allan Poe's remarkable story of the young man who throughout his life had been harassed by a companion, the same age as himself, similar in appearance, alike in dress and manner, his double, who opposed and thwarted him at every turn, until finally in desperation he forced him to fight and mortally wounded him, only to realise too late, as he saw his reflection in a mirror, with ashen face and wounds similar to those he had inflicted, that in slaying his opponent he had destroyed himself.

A complete pendular vibration may be compared with a complete revolution of our planet. In one such revolution day will succeed night, or night day. Let us compare the forward swing of our pendulum to the point d to day, and let us mark its arrival at d by a small bell placed at that point. This will serve as a little alarum to apprise us that day has arrived. Night, represented by the backward swing from d to b, will be marked by silence. This represents a state of matters familiar to every one. Whatever part of the globe we inhabit, for us night is night and day is day, and night follows day with unfailing regularity. Similarly, so long as we do not allow our clock to run down, the pendulum will make a forward swing to d and a backward swing to b. Let us not forget, however, that day at Edinburgh means night at Melbourne. This we may represent acoustically by removing our bell from d to b. We are not sensible, however, of any change. The same state of matters prevails, even if in the reverse direction. Night still follows day, and rarefaction follows condensation. We have here the notion of identity. The sound of the bell at d is exactly the same as at b, and successive sounds follow each other at exactly equal intervals of time. But what of the Octave? Even if we admit that the complete vibration or sound-wave consists of two equal and complementary parts, this would serve to indicate only that the Octave exists there potentially. Well, this is something. But it is also possible actually to hear it. How, it may be objected, is it possible to transform a rarefaction into a condensation, or a condensation into a rarefaction? That is to say, does there exist a spot on this planet where day is turned into night, and night into day; or, where night is not night, nor day day? Yes! If, during June or July, we take a trip to Norway, or still farther north, we shall find ourselves in the 'land of the midnight sun.' If, at the same time of year, we prefer to sojourn in the Antarctic regions of the far south, we shall be in the land of noon-day night. The acoustical parallel is easily discovered. Thus, if the arrival of the pendulum, not only at the point d but also at the point b, is marked by the sound of the bell—and this can be brought about by moving the bell quickly from one point to the other—we hear two sounds where formerly we heard only one. The Octave begins to emerge. We may travel to the opposite acoustical pole. Thus, if we move our bell to the point b when the pendulum arrives at d, and again to d when the pendulum arrives at b, the result is—no sound.

In place of the bell, let us substitute two pieces of tubing, and over one end of each tube stretch a small membrane. Attach these ends, one at each of the points b and d, and let the pendulum, as it oscillates, touch the membrane at either point. If now we place to the ear the free end of the tube attached at d, the repeated contact of the pendulum with the membrane at this point will mark the performance of a succession of complete pendular vibrations. Substituting for this the tube attached to the point b, the result appears to be in all respects the same—i.e., the contacts occurring at b will have the same periodic times as those at the point d. Place to the ear both tubes. We now hear two successive sounds where formerly we heard but one. That is, they are twice as fast. The proportion is that of the Octave, 1 : 2. Replace the pendulum by some body capable of acting in a similar way, and of performing about a hundred vibrations a second. If we compare the sound of one tube with that resulting from both, the latter sound will be the Octave of the former.

Thus the Octave sound is but the echo, the shadow, the replica, of the principal or fundamental sound; and when it does make its appearance, as in the harmonic series, it impresses the ear, not as a new sound, but as for the most part a repetition of what has already been heard. It is not so much another as the other sound, similar to the fundamental, but in the opposite direction, i.e., inverted. Let it be remembered that it is just this Octave that makes possible the inversion of intervals and chords.

(To be continued.)

PERSONALITIES AMONG MUSICAL CRITICS

VIII.—W. J. TURNER

By Basil Maine

The idea of a Critics' Orchestra, which I so lightly embarked upon in the last article of this series, becomes more complicated when we have to appoint men like W. McNaught, F. Bonavia, J. B. Trend, Nicholas Gatty, and Dyneley Hussey. Bonavia's versatile spirit would enable him to be equally at home with any instrument; I would be nervous of Trend, lest he should forget to watch the beat; the only safe place for him would be among the first violins, immediately behind Dent. Dexterous Mr. Hussey would do well with a clarinet, if he were careful not to overblow it. McNaught, with his soundness and solidity, would be wasted if he were not given a double-bass. I like restraint in the brass, and therefore fearlessly entrust the trombone to Gatty, who will play it as it were any nightingale. But these allocations are not altogether obvious, and I can well imagine that there might be a little discontent among the members of our orchestra. But at least there is one appointment about which we can make no mistake. Without a shadow of doubt we must give over the whole of the percussion to Mr. W. J. Turner. For a long time he has been qualifying for this enviable position, and no longer can we deny him his just reward. But Ernest Newman must watch him very carefully, and especially in the Beethoven Symphonies, lest this champion defeat the object of his zeal.

. . . . .

Criticism of any branch of art covers so wide a field of knowledge, temperament, and judgment, that no one critic can ever hope to identify himself with the thing itself, nor can he afford to be self-sufficient. There must be subdivisions and specialisings in all criticism, and perhaps most of all in musical criticism. The heredity, environment, and prejudicial composition of each critic will determine the quality of his work, and the point of view which he can most naturally express. English musical criticism is fortunate in having a representative for nearly every point of view and predilection.

W. J. Turner represents the protesting element; indeed, he is that element, so far as this country is concerned. He regards the rest of us as Customs officials, and to our continual embarrassment is for ever declaring his possessions with megaphonic shouts and wild, extravagant gestures. It is useless for us to tell him that we are quite willing to let his luggage go through without payment of duty if only he will be wise and pacific. He insists on opening his trunks and allowing us to discover the most questionable things, in the hope that we will tax him for lawlessness.

On most occasions I find that I am able to allow for, and even enjoy, his indiscretions; for instance, 'This is what Mozart has done for us in his opening theme [of the G minor Symphony]. He has reduced the universe to an aural sensation'; or this ill-favoured redundancy; 'Those works [of Reger] where the resemblance to Bach is as great as the resemblance of Charpentier's operas to Wagner's, resemble Bach in the sense that their workmanship is so masterly that it might be mistaken for Bach's, whereas nobody could possibly imagine any of Charpentier's compositions to be by Wagner.'

But there are other times when I confess I have been moved to unrighteous indignation, which is as good as acknowledging that Mr. Turner has scored a point, for there is nothing which delights him more than to practise the blunt art of irritation. There are some men who, when they rebuke or condemn, can fill you with a burning shame. Usually they are men of few words. Mr. Turner is not only effusive, but unsubtle; his words—and they are many—are sledge-hammer blows. A man who can in a single sentence condemn all Baptists, Methodists, Wesleyans, Anglicans, Catholics, Mohammedans, Buddhists, Christian Scientists, Mormons, 'and all those people known to-day as "religious"' invites ridicule. There are times when I feel that to be in conflict with Mr. Turner over any point is sufficient proof that one is in the right. The most offending thing about his writing is the way in which he is constantly assuming the philosophic manner. There is little of the true philosopher in him; over and over again his words bewray him. 'When I say, as I do emphatically say, that Beethoven is a greater composer than Bach . . .' Here we have one of those percussion effects which he loves so dearly.

But does it help at all? I am all in agreement with Mr. Fox-Strangways here. Even if there is such a thing as the superiority of one great composer over another, we have no possible way of discovering it by any law of mensuration. It is a comparatively simple matter to distinguish the great composers from the small; but he is a bold man (and Mr. Turner is that) who will attempt to distinguish the great from the great, and say which is greater. A great composer differs from another as distinctly and definitely as he differs from a great athlete or a great river; that is, his greatness is his own exclusive property, which gives no ground for comparison with other greatnesses except in so far as it is great.

As a logician, Mr. Turner has one unfailing method. Having started a hare, he gives chase for a while and, finding himself outdistanced, suddenly turns aside, naively remarking: 'Let us play cricket instead.' There is an instance of this in his book 'Orpheus: the Music of the Future.' He has embarked upon the question: 'Why has the music of Bach outlasted that of Frohberger?' After a long and difficult pursuit he carries us to the point that 'we find all Bach is Frohberger plus something more which is not Frohberger.' And this leads us to assume that Frohberger is not unique, which is as good as saying that he has not existed. Now this is a difficult thing, because we all know that Frohberger existed. The hare is out of sight. What are we to do? Mr. Turner is equal to the occasion. He turns and answers, 'Ah, but you have misunderstood me. Frohberger's uniqueness may not have been in his music. Here at last we have it.' But this is hardly fair play. We all understood (didn't we?) that we were considering Frohberger as a composer, not as a citizen, or as an organ-blower—although, incidentally, he was unique in this rôle, as we learn from his MS. notes—or as a specimen of human physique. There is no sequence here. And then at the end of the argument, 'what should that alphabetical position portend?'

$$\text{Bach} = \text{B} + (\text{F} - \text{X}).$$

Throughout this theorem Mr. Turner brings vividly to mind the figure of Malvolio in the act of reading Maria's counterfeit letter. 'B + (F — X),' he muses, 'this simulation is not as the former; and yet, to crush this a little, it would bow to me.'

. . . . . .

It is when Mr. Turner ceases to play the naughty heretic that he is most impressive. Later on in his book, 'Orpheus,' he sets his face towards the East, and in a loud voice sings his 'Credo' in clauses of Georgian prose. The object of his faith is Beethoven, and the reverberation of his ecstasy is such that it is impossible not to be shaken a little. Here at last the man is in earnest, and even if we cannot see eye to eye with him in the extravagant imagery which he calls up for the last Pianoforte Sonata, at least we are moved by the passion of his utterance.

Ad Libitum

By 'Feste'

Last month, when speaking of Mr. Dolmetsch's somewhat extravagant claims on behalf of our early instrumental writers, I said that the passages he quoted from Thomas Mace and the Abbé Maugars reminded me of a topic that invited discussion. It is this: Are we less responsive than our forbears to the emotional stimulus of music? If so, why?

Let us begin with a little evidence as to what music meant to hearers a few generations ago. The passage Mr. Dolmetsch took from Mace was as follows:

> We had for our Grave Musick, Fancies of 3, 4, 5, and 6 Parts to the Organ, Interpos'd (now and then) with some Pavins, Allmaines, Solemn, and Sweet Delightful Ayres; all which were (as it were) so many Pathetical Stories, Rhetorical, and Sublime Discourses; Subtil, and Accute Argumentations; so Suitable and Agreeing to the Inward, Secret, and Intellectual Faculties of the Soul and Mind; that to set them forth according to their True Praise, there are no Words Sufficient in Language; yet what I can best speak of Them, shall be only to say, That They have been to myself, (and many others) as Divine Raptures, Powerfully Captivating all our unruly Faculties, and Affections, (for the Time) and disposing us to Solidity, Gravity, and a good Temper; making us capable of Heavenly, and Divine Influences.

And the Abbé Maugars, writing from Rome in 1639, describing Italian music, said that a certain performance by three voices and three instruments so ravished him that he forgot his mortal condition, and felt himself to be already among the angels.

There is no doubt that these and similar old records of experiences are genuine. The history of music contains many well authenticated instances of much later date. We all know, for example, the delight Berlioz felt when one of his works caused members of the audience to faint. Tears must have been a common feature of the concert-room in Beethoven's day, judging from contemporary reports; moreover, he said, in one of his cynical moments, 'Pooh! 'tis not their tears we musicians want, but their applause.' Yet he himself wept as he wrote the Cavatina in the B flat Quartet, and could never hear it afterwards without being overcome. Much as we enjoy that beautiful movement, I doubt if it has turned on the lachrymal tap for many a long day. In fact, there is no doubt that the recent decline in Beethoven's popularity is partly due to this strongly emotional quality in his music. Emotion being out of fashion—or, at all events, the kind of emotion roused by fine music—the most frankly emotional of composers must needs be under a cloud.

We are even less responsive to the macabre and terrific. For this reason I believe the attempts to make something like a Berlioz boom are unlikely to succeed. Take away the 'fat boy' element in Berlioz, and there is too little left to enable him to compete with the really big all-round composers. No doubt he made our forefathers'—and especially our foremothers'—flesh creep, but his most horrific moments cannot now raise so much as a square inch of goose-flesh. We are merely amused at his madness, and interested in his method. The last time I heard the 'Fantastic' Symphony, the 'March to the Scaffold' and the 'Witches' Sabbath' roused in me, and in all my neighbours so far as I could see, nothing more than a suppressed hilarity of the kind we should feel if somebody read Mrs. Radclyffe to us. I almost wrote Poe for Mrs. Radclyffe, but remembered that Poe at his best moments has still the authentic touch of horror. In fact, the 'fat boy' in literature and painting is much more lastingly successful than in music.

In his 'Studies in Modern Music,' Sir Henry Hadow says that Berlioz

> . . . can inspire wonder but not awe, terror but not reverence, and much of the work which he intended to be most impressive resolves itself into a series of scenes which sometimes rise to the level of the Inferno, and oftener sink to that of the Musée Wiertz.

It is only fair to remember that this was written nearly forty years ago. I doubt if Sir Henry would still find Berlioz so terrible and wonderful; music depending largely on sensational elements is invariably the first to suffer from old age. Yet I imagine that, so far as horror is concerned, the mad painter can touch the spot more frequently and completely than the not quite sane composer. At all events, I well remember that I got more nightmarish feelings in five minutes at the Musée Wiertz than from the whole of Berlioz.

I believe this to be a common experience. If so, it proves that music has not only ceased to be a lachrymatory stimulant; it has lost its power to harrow as well.

This is natural enough, for two reasons. First, the war made such an assault on both our pity and terror that for a long time to come the provocative powers of any kind of art must be badly discounted. A man who has had a real tragedy in his life is apt to be unmoved by the imaginary sort, no matter how skilfully presented; and when a whole continent has had four years of accumulated tragedy, the inevitable result is a public that is indifferent to, or frankly contemptuous of, pre-war emotional stimuli. True, we do not remain stony. On the contrary, we have exchanged the old emotion for hysteria, which is easily aroused by a variety of things, from a cause célèbre to a cricket match. Thus we have a great cricketer telling the press that he is 'heartbroken' because he has been left out of a team—on his own suggestion, too. And not long since, during the closing stages of an international golf match, the defeat of a popular champion so profoundly affected the onlookers that many of them watered the green and filled the fatal final hole with their tears. It is true that the majority of these afflicted ones belonged to the race that under the hardest of exteriors carries the softest of hearts—the Scots; but even we comparatively reserved English are little better. We have lost the despised Victorian stolidity and solidity, religious outlook, and response to emotional music; instead we babble and slobber over a hundred things that don't matter; and we are too clever to be religious, but sufficiently foolish to be superstitious. (Soothsayers make a good living, and a few weeks ago a civic council solemnly acceded to a petition that in the numbering of a street the unlucky 13 should be omitted!)

I said above that there were two reasons for this. I have mentioned the more obvious one—the war. But perhaps the other is hardly less powerful. I believe that the decline of the appeal of music on the emotional side is due to our having a surfeit of it. To old Thomas Mace and the Abbé Maugars music was a refreshing experience largely because it was new and even more because they had so little of it. Moreover, the making and hearing of music was then an end in itself, whereas to-day we not only have far too much music, but an immense proportion of it is a mere humble constituent in another function. For example, we have first-rate orchestras playing at restaurants, and often playing good music. But which matters most to the hearers—the music or the meal? Admitting the value of light music as a background to social and recreative occasions (it has to be remembered that to this function of music we owe many delightful things by Mozart and Haydn), I fancy most of us are beginning to feel that the art is suffering from being cheapened as it is to-day by its constant association with eating and dancing, and the prominent part it plays in a hundred forms of entertainment of tenth-rate quality. A close time for music of all sorts—or a year's abstinence from concerts—would do us and the art a power of good. Orpheus with his lute might then get back some of his old powers. At present he is so much of a standing dish that for the sake of his credit and our appetite he should go off the menu for a bit.

I suppose there is none of us who hasn't wept at music some time or other. Even music critics were of penetrable stuff before their dreadful calling hardened them. Has anybody ever seen a music critic beguiled of a tear during the execution of his duty? The question seems fantastic, but the answer is in the affirmative. I know, because I happen to have seen the prodigy—once. True, the time and circumstances were unusual. It was at one of the war concerts at Queen's Hall, during the performance of the finest bit of music inspired by the war in any country—Elgar's 'Carillon.' (Why hasn't this vivid bit of music taken a regular place in the concert répertoire? It has long since been made available as a purely instrumental work without the recitation.) Next to me was ——, critic of the ——, and at the end, in the act of blowing my nose aggressively and unnecessarily, and turning my head in order to hide a furtive tear, I saw that my neighbour was in the same plight. 'Tis a dreadful thing to see a strong man weep, and the sight broke down defences already breached by the 'Carillon.' I believe I may claim to be the only one who has ever seen a critic thus melt.

It would be interesting to put a questionnaire to half-a-dozen average readers, thus: (1) Have you ever been moved to tears by a piece of music? (2) If so, how many of such occasions can you easily remember? and (3) What was the music? I don't mind exposing myself in the interests of scientific inquiry, so I lead off by replying: (1) Yes; (2) Four; (3) The opening bars of the 'Meistersinger' Overture; a short passage in a Mozart chamber work, the identity of which I have forgotten; 'The Death of Minnehaha'; and the 'Carillon' aforesaid. With reference to (2), I ought in fairness to add that I do not count (I couldn't, because of their number) the occasions when I have been bowled over by the singing of a crowd, or by children's choirs at competitive festivals (a man must have bowels of leather to be able to hold up against the more appealing of these youngsters). But here the cause is largely non-musical. In fact, I think it will usually be found that even when we are moved by a piece of pure music (independent of any text or programme, that is) there will often be found some contributing cause.

Thus, I have heard the 'Meistersinger' Overture many hundreds of times, but only once has it affected me in this particular way; and on the solitary occasion there was a reason, though a curious one. (I set all these things down, at the risk of being called an egoist, because I think there is real interest, and even value, in analyses of our reactions to music. Perhaps it is Mr. Frank Howes's recently-issued book, 'The Borderland of Music and Psychology,' that has made me thus reckless in the pursuit of knowledge. Anyway, I believe Mr. Howes is right in saying that concert-givers, and performers generally, have thought too little about the psychology of their audiences.) As to that 'Meistersinger' Overture and the tear it drew: The occasion was an afternoon concert, and I had come almost direct from a City church, where I had writhed under some of the worst singing of Palestrina I had ever heard. It was still in my mind, and I was reflecting on it (not without bitterness), when the orchestra began the 'Meistersinger' piece. The contrast between its splendid opening phrase, delivered by a disciplined force, and the scratchy, out-of-tune outrage on Palestrina that I had heard an hour or two before, was overwhelming, and simply knocked me off my perch.

The Mozart passage made its effect simply as pure beauty of sound. It had no special expressive significance, nor was there any striking effect of rhythm or dynamics. It was just a sudden glimpse of sheer loveliness of part-writing and tone-colour. (I fancy it was one of the chamber works for string quartet and one wind instrument.)

As for the Coleridge-Taylor work: here of course the poignant text is so largely responsible as to disqualify it for inclusion in my list. But we must give the composer credit for music that greatly heightens the appeal of the poem. In order to gauge the extent of his contribution you have only to ask yourself how much the poem would have affected you had you read it before hearing the setting. As things are, even if you never hear the music again, you will never be able to read the poem unmoved. The passage I refer to specially is that beginning on p. 106 of the vocal score, 'Farewell, Minnehaha'; and I remember the occasion particularly well, because the first time I heard the work was at a rehearsal in which I was one of the choir. When this page came along I had to give up singing, and I was not the only one. A few stout fellow-basses held on, but a large proportion of the singers found it necessary to adjust their glasses, or fumble with their copy, or cover up their sudden silence in some such way. (If I remember rightly, much the same thing happened at the first performance of the work—at Hanley, wasn't it?—the choir being so overcome as to break down temporarily.) This happened a good many years ago, when I was young and susceptible; but, although now toughened by age and by much hearing of music, I doubt if I could trust myself to sing 'The Death of Minnehaha' without an occasional choke.

I go back to the 'Carillon' for a moment to add that here of course the emotional appeal lay largely in the poem and the war-time conditions. The same remark applies to 'For the Fallen,' which has probably roused more emotion than any other work of the period.

On the whole, one comes to two conclusions: (1) The occasions on which one is moved to tears by a piece of music—especially a piece for instruments only, and so free from the added appeal of text and human voice—are few; (2) That even in those few cases it will be found that there is often some predisposing condition of the hearer, or other fortuitous element. And if you want proof of the failure of music, compared with literature or drama, as a provocative of tears, you have only to note that dozens will weep at a theatrical performance of (say) 'Romeo and Juliet,' whereas Tchaikosvky's orchestral work of the same title draws never so much as a sniff.

A third point is sufficiently curious to deserve a paragraph to itself. I don't know whether my experience is singular, but I have found that slow movements of the classical school, marked patetico, appassionata, con gran espressione, dolente, and the like, almost invariably fail to touch the spot however much they may delight quâ music Probably this is because fashion changes in emotional stimuli, as in other things, and what moves one generation may easily bore the next.

I suggest as a further reason that the actual slowness of the average slow movement is against it. Emotion of the moist and irrepressible sort is more often than not the result of a sudden appeal, or a touch of the unexpected. A leisurely and calculated affair, such as a slow movement, however beautiful, may induce a pensive melancholy, but rarely does more. Few even do so much.

Hence the loss of appeal of such things as the Adagio of the ninth Symphony, which to many people to-day is infinitely less moving than the mysterious opening passage, certain passages in the Scherzo, the emergence of the theme of the Finale, and the two presentations of it immediately following, with their exquisite polyphony.

The conclusion of the whole matter is that we have lost something the Abbé Maugars and Thomas Mace possessed—the power of being rapt away easily by music. With them, almost any concord of sweet sounds was enough; with us, there must usually be something to back up and accentuate the appeal of the music—associations, a programme (what doesn't the rather poor opening movement of the C sharp minor Sonata owe to its title 'The Moonlight' and the absurd legends attached to it?), a war, or what not. Often a touch of liver is responsible, and then the matter is physiological rather than psychological.

But what we have lost in one direction we appear more than to have made up in another. The great bulk of the finest music is something far better than a mere stimulus to the more facile emotions. Not till to-day, apparently, have rank-and-file music-lovers (hearers as well as performers) been able to appreciate music whose appeal is largely—even primarily—to the mind. Hence the great and growing public for the organ and clavier works of Bach (especially the '48'), and for classical instrumental music generally. Kindred signs are the revival of old polyphonic choral music, and the tendency of the best modern music to develop along the lines of polyphony rather than of harmonic experiment. Last month I said, in answer to a correspondent, that I had not read W. J. Turner's recently-published book, 'Orpheus, or the Music of the Future.' I have since done so, and in the best portion of the book—that dealing with Beethoven—I see further evidence of this tendency. The article by Ernest Newman in the Sunday Times of August 15 points the same way. The particular quality that distinguishes music of this kind is difficult to define. Mr. Turner is convincing without being quite clear (an unusual combination, explainable by the fact that he is primarily a poet, and only secondarily a music critic). Mr. Newman is clearer, and shows that the quality is often absent from exquisite music (Chopin's, for example), but always present in music that is generally held to be great. He describes it as a 'moral and philosophical implication'—a description that loses its somewhat forbidding sound, and is seen to be true when he goes on to say that > . . . it is one of the things that makes Palestrina, for instance, greater than Monteverde, or Brahms greater than Ravel, or Wagner greater than Verdi; and it is the general lack of it in the music of the last fifteen years, that will make the bulk of that music a mere curiosity of cerebration in fifteen years more.

Perhaps the quality may be described in one word as mysticism. Anyway, call it what you like, it is unmistakable, and I hope Mr. Turner's little book will draw the attention of many to the real Beethoven, who, incredible as it may seem, is as yet practically unknown to the great mass of the musical public. For the quality that is so difficult to describe, yet so easily recognisable, is found above all in the best of Beethoven, and especially in the later chamber music. As Mr. Newman says, 'in Beethoven at his most supreme there is a peculiar something that puts his music in a class by itself.' The average musician was probably never more ripe for this 'peculiar something' than he is at present, and we can keep the Beethoven Centenary next year in no better way than by turning aside from the 'Moonlight-Pathétique-Appassionata-Fate-knocking-at-the-door' aspect of the composer, to the chamber music, the last Sonatas, and the Mass in D. It will almost certainly leave us dry-eyed, but we shall be wiser and stronger, and, perhaps for the first time, we shall realise that Carlyle's oft-quoted description of music as a 'kind of inarticulate, unfathomable speech which leads us to the edge of the infinite and lets us for moments gaze into that,' was no mere rhetorical flourish, but a sober truth. The odd thing is that its utterance should have been left to a man whose musical knowledge seems to have been limited to a few Scottish folk-songs.

OPERA AND THE CHORAL SOCIETY

Choralists of a conservative bent may regret the fact, but there can be no question as to the marked change of policy on the part of choral societies during the past few years. Post-war conditions made it inevitable. There was a shortage of singers—or, at all events, of singers with a taste for the staple fare of twenty years ago; and the powerful counter-attractions of the cinema, the dance hall, and the various means of enjoying the best as well as the worst of music at home, through scientific and mechanical agencies, adversely affected the box office. Nevertheless, the attractions of choralism remain, to both singer and audience. No other form of music-making can be enjoyed at so little cost in money and preliminary training; and for the listener there is as yet no substitute for the first-hand hearing of a choir. The gramophone and wireless can give us so near an approach to the real thing in instrumental music and in solo singing as to jeopardise the future of instrumental concerts and vocal recitals, but the effect of a large chorus has hitherto been beyond reproduction and transmission, although great advances have lately been made.

On the whole, then, the choral society is probably at least as secure as any other musical organization. It must, however, buy its security at a price. There must be concessions to singer and audience alike, and it is clear that, for a time at all events, the old solid fare must be lightened. There need be no lament over this. A choir, no less than a solo singer, may easily suffer in style from too long a regimen of serious work. It is a common experience, for example, that an occasional change from oratorio to a season's work at short, unaccompanied pieces, including a good proportion of the quick-moving light type, will improve a choir in every way. But how if a choir wishes for a change to a freer, lighter style, without dropping its tradition of a big work with orchestra and soloists? The number of cantatas of the type desired may almost be counted on one's fingers. Parry's 'John Gilpin,' Bath's 'Wedding of Shon Maclean,' Stanford's 'Phaudrig Crohoore,' occur to the mind at once, but the list is not easily lengthened.

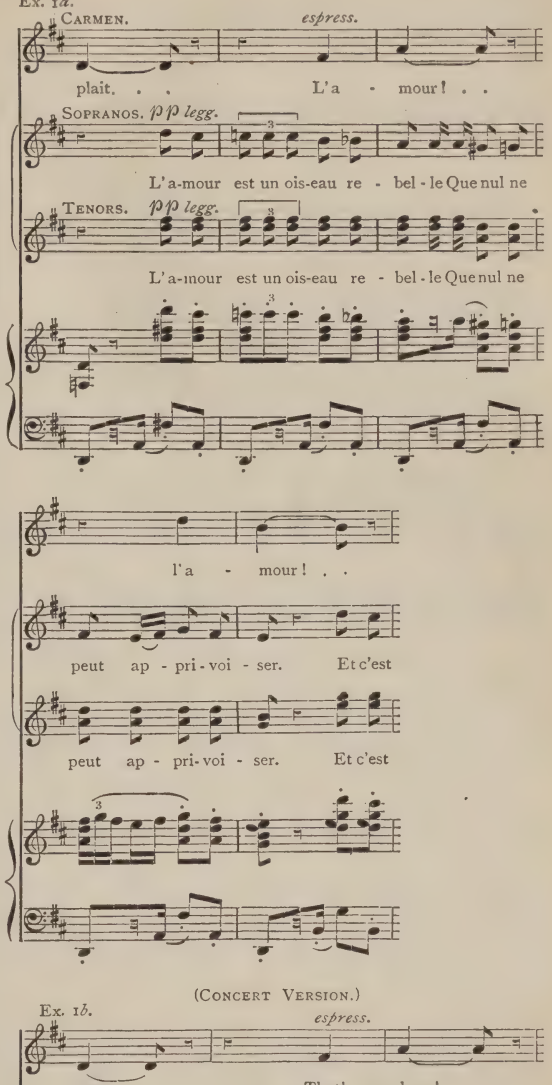
Probably this shortage has led choirs in recent years to essay concert performances of operas. The move is attractive to choirs and supporters, and provided the work be good on its purely musical side (which is perhaps a stiff demand where popular opera is concerned), nothing but benefit can result.

These reflections are prompted by the issue of a concert version of 'Carmen,'* which strikes us as being unusually well-planned and carried out.

A common and well-founded objection to concert versions of opera is that the choral part is slight, and lacking in interest. A capable choir inevitably grows tepid concerning a work in which all the 'fat' is shared between soloists and orchestra. This difficulty has been overcome very successfully by Mr. McNaught in the version under notice. First, the necessary 'cuts' have been confined so far as is possible to the solo numbers, those retained being the more popular, and such as make for the coherence of the story. Second, in some passages where the choral writing in the original is very slender in interest (unison or two-part) the texture has been developed. For example, the chorus of street urchins at the beginning of the opera, which Bizet wrote for sopranos in unison, opens out into a capital affair for S.A.T.B. Again, the original choral part in the Habanera is mainly for sopranos and tenors (the latter divided). For this inconvenient scheme is substituted work for S.A.T.B., by means of a slight rearrangement and development of the S.T.T. score. We quote the opening of this section:

(ORIGINAL VERSION.)

Ex. 1*a*.



CARMEN.
espress.
plait. . . L'a - mour! . .
SOPRANOS. pp legg.
L'a-mour est un ois-eau re - bel - le Que nul ne
TENORS. pp legg.
L'a-mour est un ois-eau re - bel - le Que nul ne
l'a - mour! . .
peut ap - pri - voi - ser. Et c'est peut ap - pri - voi - ser. Et c'est

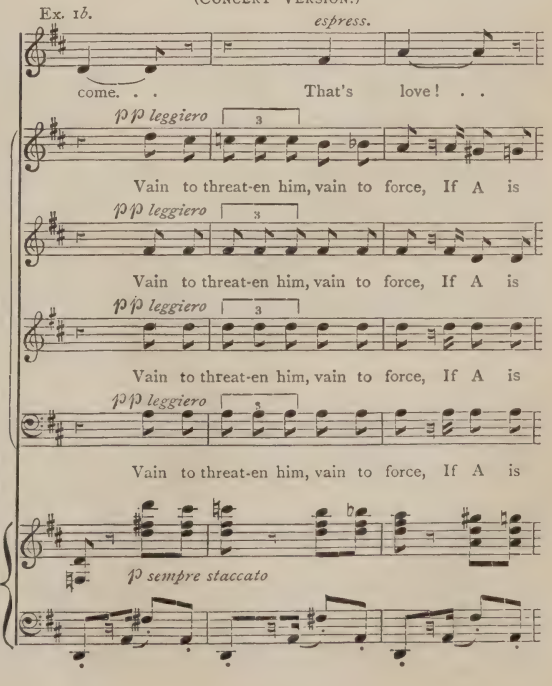
(CONCERT VERSION.)

Ex. 1*b*.



espress.
come. . . That's love! . .
pp leggiero
Vain to threat-en him, vain to force, If A is pp leggiero
Vain to threat-en him, vain to force, If A is pp leggiero
Vain to threat-en him, vain to force, If A is pp leggiero
Vain to threat-en him, vain to force, If A is p sempre staccato

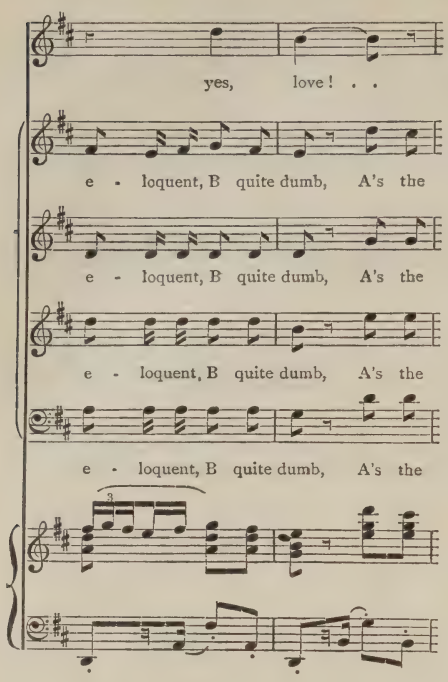
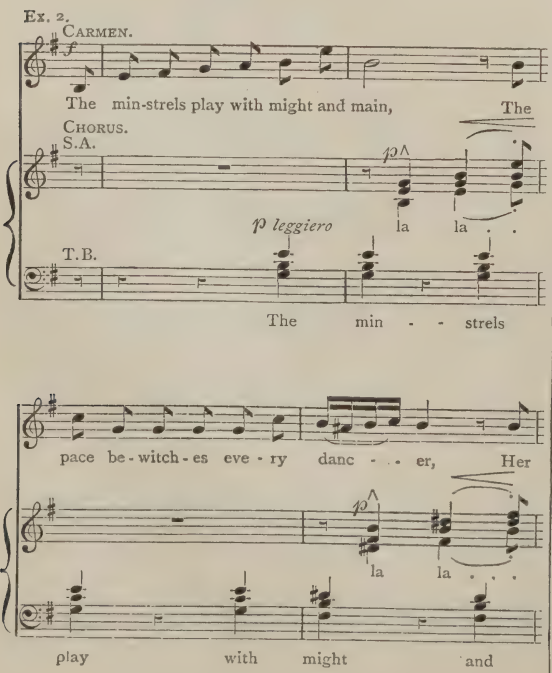
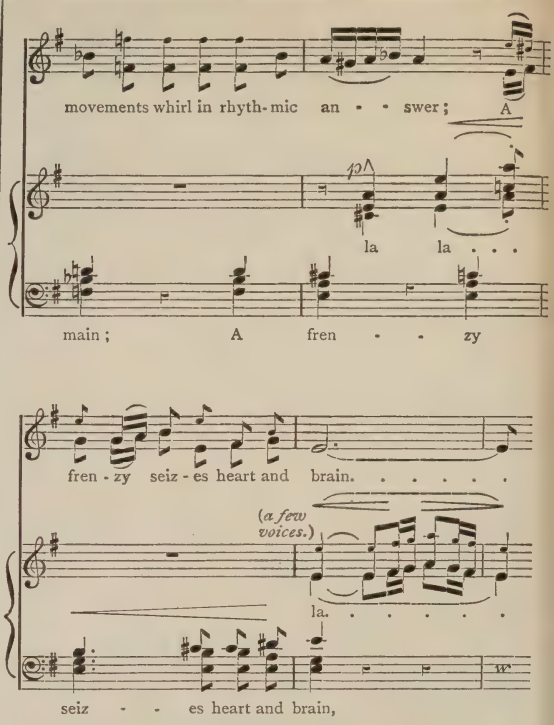
* 'Carmen,' by Georges Bizet, adapted for concert performance by W. McNaught, the libretto from the English version of the complete opera by Lucia Young. Novello.



An even more striking and effective example is the Chanson Bohème, in which the chorus now has twelve pages of work, the parts being frequently divided. Carmen's solo thus has a vocal accompaniment that sometimes develops into six parts. It is difficult to realise that this excellently laid-out chorus work is not in the original, but is evolved from a single-line voice part and the accompaniment. Here, as a sample, is a passage in which the chorus provides a light, quiet background to Carmen's solo. (The accompaniment is omitted):

Ex. 2.





movements whirl in rhyth-mic an - - swer; A la la . . .
main; A fren - - zy fren - zy seiz - es heart and brain. . . . . .
(a few voices.)
la. . . . . .
seiz - - es heart and brain,

In the closing pages of this movement the chorus works up to a brilliant ff climax.

The tenors and basses have a fine opportunity in the chorus 'Beware! beware!' which is an arrangement of the original sextet and chorus. It fills ten pages, and a good deal of it is in six parts. There should be a real thrill here, given an ample force. The women's voices are scarcely less well provided for in the 'Card' duet, which is here arranged for S.A. chorus (with a good deal of divisi) and Carmen. In a word, a nice balance of interest is secured throughout between soloists and chorus, and the objects set forth in the Preface have been achieved: the best of the music has been retained, cast into a sequence that provides the utmost variety and contrast, and (as said above) shared as equally as may be between the principals and the chorus. The soloists inevitably have to sacrifice some of their music, but care has been taken to give them their most popular numbers. The order of the numbers has necessarily been changed—for example, the version was bound to end with the 'Toreador' song and chorus. In its concert form 'Carmen' calls for four soloists; the time of performance is seventy-five minutes. A few optional cuts are indicated.

The English version is singable and lively. The latter quality has been achieved by the adoption of what we believe to be a sound principle, viz., the rendering of the colloquialisms of the original into a similarly free English idiom. Of course, the result is at times startling, but a good case may be made out for Miss Young's employment of such expressions as 'keeping one's eyes skinned,' 'getting away with it,' 'doing a person in,' and so forth. There is something like

Gilbertian deftness at times—for example, in this excerpt from the smugglers' chorus :

But it 's a step
That will suit
The intrepid recruit !
We did well to enlist a young trooper from Seville !
Not a pin
Did we care
What his principles were !
When he 's smuggled a little they'll go to the devil !

A similar neat touch is shown in the 'Card' Scene, and elsewhere.

A word should be added concerning a feature the importance of which is too often overlooked. Everybody who has had experience in accompanying from a vocal score has suffered from uncomfortably laid out and unnecessarily difficult pianoforte reductions. We believe that many an accompanist will silently bless the arranger in this version for writing a part that is pianistic, full of point (and so of help to the choir), and yet by no means difficult to play.

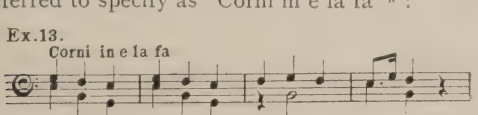
ORCHESTRAL NOTATION

By Tom. S. Wotton

(Concluded from August Number, page 712)

The modern method of notation for the horn, except for the now obsolete one in C, obliges only the player. At the time of Gluck's arrival at Paris, in 1774, this was probably that generally adopted in Germany and Austria, and, perhaps, it was through his influence that it became universal in France. Previously French composers had not been unanimous as regards any particular system. Some employed the German method, others, like Philidor, always wrote the real sounds in the alto clef, but perhaps the majority followed the plan that is explained in Francœur's treatise on 'Instrumentation' (1772). With this, the player had to imagine an invariable treble clef in the signature, while the one actually marked varied with the key of the horn, and thus the reader was obliged. The note on the third space was always C, from the performer's point of view, but to the reader its value altered according to the clef employed, which depended on the crook of the horn. As I shall refer to this system again, we need here but one example. With horns in E or E♭ the bass clef was employed, as in the following from Grétry's 'Zémire et Azor' (1771), for instruments in the latter key, which the genial master preferred to specify as 'Corni in e la fa' * :

Ex.13.
Corni in e la fa



In the above the player has merely to picture the stave headed by the treble clef. The reader has to imagine three flats in the signature, and he then has the actual notes before him in the lower octave.

* Grétry is no more consistent in his notation than in his nomenclature. While, in the above opera, he follows the rules of solmisation for his horns in E and E♭, those in C are simply 'Corni in c,' except on one occasion, when they are called 'Cors en Ut.' His horns in D are either 'Corni in D' or 'Corni in D la ré,' in the latter case the real sounds being marked in the bass clef instead of the alto, to the inconvenience of the player.

Trouble arose only when accidentals were necessary. Were they to be marked from the view-point of the player, or from that of the reader ? In the following couple of bars from Dalayrac's 'La Soirée Orageuse' (1790) the convenience of the latter was consulted, and I am inclined to think that this was the usual practice :

Ex.14. (a)
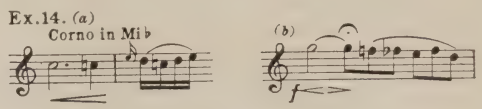
Corno in Mi♭



Here the bass clef is not marked, as in Ex. 13, because by this time the treble clef for horns was generally adopted in France. But the composer undoubtedly took it for granted that the reader would imagine the part in the bass clef, and read the first note as E♭ and the next as E♮. The performer of course would have to play the latter as C♯. So in (b), the accidentals oblige the reader, who takes the notes to be B♭, A♮, A♭, while the cornist would have to blow G, F♯, F♮. Somewhat on a par with this was the custom of specifying horns in E♮ as being in E♯, a practice that persisted at any rate as late as 'La Juive' (1835). We may look upon this as a hint to the reader to imagine sharps in the signature. In Germany, E♯ used to mean E major.

The custom of writing horns in E or E♭ in the bass clef incidentally throws some light on another kind of horn—the cor anglais. The Italian method of noting the latter was to mark the real sounds an octave lower in the bass clef. From analogy with horn notation, it seems more than probable that (in Italy at any rate) the original corno inglese—or, as it was first called, the voce umana, was pitched in E or E♭, probably the latter, since we find the cors anglais of Haydn's 'Stabat Mater' specified in the English edition as 'Fagottini in E♭,' the original instruments being at that time quite unknown in England. After all, there was no particular reason why the first attempts at a cor anglais should have been pitched in F. It is usually considered to be derived from the alto pommer, but between that and the tenor one there was the 'Nicolo,' which may have also served as a basis for experiments. As a matter of fact, the lowest note of the modern instrument is not always the same. In France it is E, but in Germany it is usually a semitone lower.

While, on the rare occasions of its use, the 'pedal' or double-bass clarinet is written an octave higher than the real sounds, the double-bass trombone and the contrabass tuba are marked at their absolute pitch. But, as regards the latter, it has not always been so. In the Finale of his first Symphony (1853), Saint-Saëns has the treble clef for both his 'Saxhorn basse in Si♭' and 'Saxhorn C basse in Mi♭,' the first a ninth and the second a thirteenth above the real notes. But in 'Le Déluge' (1876), the two 'Contrebasses en Mi♭' and the 'Contrebasse en Si♭' are in the bass clef, though still written as transposing instruments, the former a sixth and the latter a ninth above the actual sounds. In Massenet's 'Marche de Szabadi' (1879), while the 'Sax-tuba' is in the bass clef at its proper pitch, the 'Contrebasse sax Si♭' is in the treble, two octaves and a tone above the real sounds. There is the same notation in his 'Hérodiade.' It was adopted from the military band, from which no doubt the instrumentalists were borrowed. I have cited these scores because in them the instrument required is exactly specified. Present-day composers are less careful, and it must be owned that conductors do not as a rule encourage them to cultivate exactitude. How often do we find the same instrument used for the 'Tuba' part of Glazounov's fifth Symphony, with 16-ft. D in the first bar, as for that of the 'Bass Tuba' in 'The Mastersingers' Overture, mounting to E above the bass stave, and a shake on the A below the E in the next bar? It is not a question of compass, but of tone.*

It is astonishing how indifferent composers appear to be as regards the proper specification of their brass, and the more one ponders on the reasons for it the more he wonders. As far as I know, Goldmark was the only composer who took the faintest interest in whether his trombone parts were played on valve or slide instruments, and yet many passages easy on the former are practically impossible on the latter. In his Overture, 'Der gefesselte Prometheus,' he specifies on the first page two tenor and two bass trombones with a part for a 'Bass Tuba' beneath them. But on p. 55 of the score there are rapid chromatic passages for the former, unplayable on slide instruments. Which form of trombone is (or was) customary in Austria, I do not know, but the composer, prepared for emergencies, gives an alternative version of seven bars for the horns and trombones, in which the chromatic passages of the latter are transferred to the former. But, as though ashamed of this solicitude for the proper performance of his work, and to show that he can be as obscure as the best of them, there is a note that 'The part of the fifth trombone remains unaltered.' This is the first mention we have had of the instrument, beyond an occasional '5' marked against the lowest part of the trombones. What did Goldmark want? In any case he required a contrabass instrument for this fifth part instead of the bass one indicated at the head of the score. But was it a trombone or a tuba?

There is no objection to a composer's calling a brass instrument descending to 16-ft. C a 'Bass Tuba' (or a mezzo-soprano one, for a matter of that), if it be clearly understood what he means. But is it so? There may be difficulty in deciding what constitutes a 'baritone' instrument, and what the Italians call a 'viola,' the French name an 'alto,' while we insist that it is a 'tenor.' But there should not be much doubt about a 'double-bass' instrument. When Wagner, in 'Siegfried' (p. 591), marked parts for a 'Contrabasstuba' and '1 ordinary Basstuba (in C),' he knew what he was doing.† Why cannot other composers be equally precise? Yet we find Strauss in the 'Alpine' Symphony merely requesting '4 Posaunen,' without any hint as to the form of instruments he requires. Probably one and two are intended to be ordinary tenor trombones, while three and four are 'tenor-bass' ones, descending by means of the thumb piston and the upper pedal notes to 16-ft. G (the lowest note in the Symphony).‡ This no doubt is perfectly clear to the composer, and to the conductors of most parts of Germany. But some more information might be useful to conductors of other countries.

Orchestration is usually considered as an 'Art.' But if the same haphazard methods were introduced into (say) the art of cooking, we should run grave risks of being poisoned.

Without venturing to trespass on the agenda of Widor's proposed musical congress, the ideas of two musicians on a revised notation for the orchestra may be mentioned. The first, by Constant Pierre, in his excellent book 'Les Instruments à souffle humain' (1890), is at first sight somewhat of a freakish nature. He advocates for all the transposing instruments a return to the horn notation explained by Francœur, with the clef dependent on the key of the instrument. He would, for instance, have the first bar of 'Lohengrin,' Act 3, written for the horns:

Ex.15.

and for the clarinets:

Ex.16.

while an oft-quoted progression for the horns in 'The Rhinegold' (p. 245) would appear as:

Ex.17.

The ordinary bass clef (F on the fourth line) might, of course, be substituted for the uncommon one of G on the first line, but M. Pierre permits us choice in the matter.

There is no necessity to dwell on the system, which is unlikely to be approved save by those whose particular plan of interpreting transposing instruments includes the use of obsolete clefs. The question of what sharp or flat signs to place in the signature, and what to employ as accidentals (the latter of paramount importance in modern music), would always be an objection to the method. It is impossible to satisfy both reader and player! For Ex. 16 I have adopted the method employed by Halévy in 'La Juive,' when writing his cor anglais parts according to the old French notation, i.e., with the C clef on the second line in the signature. For Eléazar's air in Act 4, the instruments have three flats against their stave, which is correct, if the treble clef be imagined, but wrong, with the mezzo-soprano one marked. As the real sounds are thus given, there should be the four flats of F minor, the key of the piece. But M. Pierre apparently would have no key-signature, as 'the executant can easily find it.' How, I am afraid I do not know! What is to tell him whether an E or an E♭ crook is required for the third note of Ex. 17? Is the B, flat or natural?*

M. Pierre's second scheme is to have the parts of all the instruments in real sounds, leaving it to the performers to carry out the necessary transposition. The idea has been attempted in the Giordano edition of scores, cited above, but these are only intended for the convenience of readers. One is safe in believing that no separate orchestral parts have been published

* Bruckner knew what he was about, when, for the first movement of his seventh Symphony, he marked a bass tuba beneath the usual brass, and a contrabass one for the second movement, when four 'Wagner tubas' are added to the score.

† This specification of an ordinary Bass-Tuba in 'Siegfried' seems to prove conclusively the kind of instrument the composer wanted in the Overtures to 'Tannhäuser' and 'The Mastersingers.'

‡ I have gathered this from an inspection of the parts. But that is not always quite conclusive. There are four Posaunen marked in the same composer's 'Festliches Praeludium,' and one might premiss the same four instruments I have suggested above for the Symphony. But the fourth trombone in the 'Praeludium' has a 16-ft. B natural, the only note lacking—unless it has been supplied quite recently—in the chromatic scale of the tenor-bass instrument. Did Strauss make a slip, or did he here mean another form of trombone?

* A villainous series of misprints does not render M. Pierre's argument clearer. At the top of page 217, he has a phrase in A minor followed by how it is written for instruments in A, B♭, F, G, and E♭. In every one of them the key-signature is wrong, and the G♯ of the A minor phrase disregarded!

in that form. As regards the ability of players to transpose at sight, there can be no doubt. It is the daily practice of clarinettists, cornists, and trumpeters. But the idea is better discussed in conjunction with one casually suggested by Mr. Ernest Newman, apropos of Schönberg's gargantuan score 'Gürrelieder.'

The eminent critic advocates condensation as advisable in, at any rate, modern scores. I take it that he would have certain groups of instruments compressed on to a couple of staves (with power to add to the number), the real notes of course being given. This plan seems very reasonable, and, to some small extent, has been already carried out. In the operatic scores of Verdi and others, the 'Banda' on the stage has its part written on two staves, with very occasional hints as to what is required of it. We have a better-known instance in Tchaikovsky's '1812' Overture. The military band is indeed marked ad libitum, but that the composer counted on its co-operation is proved by the fact that its part is fully scored, and can be obtained as an appendix to the orchestral score. Can anyone declare honestly that any of his enjoyment in reading the Russian composer's work has been destroyed because at the end of it there are twenty-eight parts (written on twenty-four staves) compressed on two lines? One may be unable to pick out the part of the E♭ cornet, or, indeed, know whether the instrument be employed. But whatever interest that possesses from the point of view of Instrumentation (v. previous foot-note) it cannot affect one's mental audition of the Overture. In a great many scores the wood-wind and brass could be given on a couple of staves without the omission of a single note. The names of the instruments would be indicated when necessary, as in an ordinary conductor's score, and if at times the progression of the individual parts was not perfectly clear, such obscurity would be negligible. To the keen-eared student of orchestral balance it may be of importance whether a chord is built up thus :

Ex.18

but to non aultres. Possibly, for the sake of clarity, it would be as well to keep the three main departments of the orchestra distinct. But still, if the cor anglais, first horn, and violas had the melody, or the basses, bassoons, and tuba, the bass, there is no reason why one stave should not serve for the three. After all, similar abbreviations were common in the scores round about the dawn of the last century.

With some of the ultra-modern works the 'boiling-down' process might prove more difficult, and I fear I lack the necessary courage for suggesting that certain parts might be omitted altogether beyond a mere mention : 'Inaudible harp arpeggios for the next four pages,' or '2nd Flute, 3rd Oboe, and 5th Horn also play.' Though such a drastic proceeding ought to gratify the reader by enabling him to penetrate more easily to the heart of the music by eliminating from the score some of its ranker undergrowth, he might consider himself defrauded. And the composers, who had devoted hours to making their pages look interesting, would object strongly.

If there be any necessity for reforming orchestral notation—and many would deny it!—the path seems to lie in the direction of condensation wherever possible, correlated with the use of the real sounds. But if we are to have the real sounds, let them be really real, and not written in some other octave. That for convenience some of the extreme parts are noted as though they were marked with a perpetual '8va' or '8va bassa' does not disturb this recommendation. Reformers of both spelling and musical notation seem to take it fondly for granted that their disciples have no desire to peruse anything not published in the special editions of the cult. If the musical reader wishes to study any other works beyond Beethoven's Symphonies—which he ought to know sufficiently well to appreciate even if the parts were noted in neumes—and a few other pieces, he will at once find himself confronted by the alto and tenor clefs. So why not make a virtue of necessity, and learn them? Even with a condensed score it would be often convenient to compress some of the parts on the alto clef.

But before instituting any reforms, it would be as well to try and set in order the orchestral house as we have it at present. To urge composers to unanimity in regard to such things as the notation of the bass clarinet is sheer waste of breath. But there are many points on which they could be more explicit. After all, it mostly means trying to realise that their particular pet orchestra, and its private manners and customs are not accepted as models by the rest of the world.

Music in the Foreign Press

DEBUSSY'S YOUTH

There is a great scarcity of documents on Debussy's biography; so the special (May) issue of the Revue Musicale is particularly welcome. It contains a dozen articles, all by people who knew Debussy, and several interesting portraits. According to Raymond Bonheur

> . . . Debussy, in his early years, was profoundly impressed by Verdi's 'Falstaff' and 'Trovatore.' Later he came under the influence of Schumann, Liszt, and Chopin. From a journey to Russia he brought back the score of an early opera by Korsakov and a few songs by Borodin. It was only later that he became acquainted with Moussorgsky. [This statement is confirmed by Robert Godet—who declares, in fact, that when Debussy was first shown, in 1889, a score of 'Boris Godunov,' he evinced very little interest.] He also fell under the spell of Wagner, against which he was to react so strongly.

Paul Vidal says that > . . . Debussy, in his youth, liked Berlioz and Lalo, but professed a strong dislike for Beethoven—although he was seen listening with enthusiasm to the E flat Pianoforte Concerto and to the second Symphony.

Henri Prunières, commenting upon Debussy's letters from Rome to his friend Vasnier, says :

> He devoted long hours to the study of Bach. At Rome the young composer was very much depressed, and he longed to return to Paris.

Robert Godet's article is particularly rich in impressions and recollections. The following anecdote is amusing:

> Debussy and Jean Moréas were very fond of pulling each other's leg. One day Debussy found out that his friend's latest hobby was the second 'Faust,' and took steps in order to be able, if need arose, to give him a Roland for his Oliver. At a certain party, after Moréas had overwhelmed his guests with many quotations, Debussy calmly said: 'All this is very fine, but there are even finer things in "Faust."' 'Finer things!' said Moréas, indignantly.' 'Finer than the Mothers, than Helen, than . . .' 'Yes, there is the Watchman on the Tower, he who is to salute the rising sun with a trumpet peal, and who, when Helen appears, thinks he sees the sun rising in the south, and is so moved that he drops his trumpet. Here, indeed, is imagery worthy of your ancestors, M. Moréas; and I wonder how you could have failed to notice it.' Moréas remained petrified awhile; but quickly recovering, he shouted in a voice of thunder: 'The humbug! Before coming to see me he provides himself with documents!' Yet the next time Moréas was induced to quote from 'Faust,' he did not fail to wind up with the words: 'But the finest thing is the episode of the Watchman on the Tower.'

Godet's recollection of the first performance of 'Pelléas et Mélisande,' and that of André Messager (who, it will be remembered, conducted it), are worthy of close attention. Messager ends his article with the words:

> The most vicious detractors of 'Pelléas' in 1902 are now its keenest upholders. Such is the way of the world!

Robert Brussel writes on the relations between Debussy and Paul Dukas. Charles Kœchlin examines early, hitherto unpublished songs of Debussy, which appear by way of musical supplement.

SYNAGOGUE MUSIC

In the Zeitschrift für Musikwissenschaft (May), A. Z. Idelsohn examines the old Jewish Missinai chants (also called Skarbore chants), whose tradition is preserved in Central and Eastern Europe, but not in Italy, Portugal, or the East. It is, he tells us, a compound of Eastern Hebraic and purely German elements.

OLD HUNGARIAN MUSIC

The same issue contains the fourth of Benedikt Szabolcsi's studies on old Hungarian music:

> One of the oldest collections of Church music is the 'Organo Missale' of Johann Kajoni (1667), containing thirty-nine Masses and fifty-three Litanies. The composer is very much under Italian influences. More significant is Prince Paul. Esterhazy's 'Harmonia Cœlestis' (1711).

Further, Szabolcsi considers the secular song of the 18th century, and the dance-music of the late 18th century. He ends with suggestions as to the lines to be followed by students of old Hungarian music.

OLD MUSIC MANUSCRIPTS IN SPAIN

In the same issue, J. B. Trend publishes a list of old musical manuscripts preserved in the churches and libraries in Spain.

M.-D. CALVOCORESSI.

LEONARD BORWICK: A MEMORY AND APPRECIATION

By WILLIAM SAUNDERS

Whatever the musical historian and posterity may have to say regarding the art of Leonard Borwick, there is no question whatever that his style and manner of interpretation of the great pianoforte master-works always made for present popularity. Borwick's technique was a thing of rare, scintillating brilliance; under his clever, manipulative fingers, music poured from the instrument in floods of beauty like waterfalls flashing in the sunshine or, to use perhaps an apter metaphor still, like champagne sparkling in the light of electric bulbs, for at times one had an uncomfortable impression that there was a certain amount of flashiness in his brilliance. He belonged to the emotional school of performers, but, unlike that of Paderewski, his interpretative emotionalism was real and, to a considerable extent, ingenuous. In many modern virtuosi, this style of playing is more or less a pose, but it was by no means so in the case of Borwick. It was much too consistent and unconscious to be anything of the kind, and there was, in his playing, always a perfect lucidity of touch and clarity of phrasing. All was clear as crystal; nothing was ever blurred or in any way tended to slovenliness.

Of course Borwick was scrupulously careful to arrange his programmes in such a manner, and to select for performance only such works as should give the best results both from the æsthetic and from the executive point of view, when judged in relation to his particular style. And in this respect it must be conceded that the artist was a perfect master in the art of programme building. Take, for example, the programme submitted at the second Edinburgh Classical Concert of the 1918-19 series, held in Freemasons' Hall, Edinburgh, on January 18, 1919, which was a characteristic and typical example of a Borwick recital, and one that has remained in my memory with peculiar and exceptional vividness. It comprised four different numbers, or groups of pieces. The player led off with Beethoven's ever popular, yet truly great, Sonata Op. 57, the 'Appassionata.' Then came a quartet of unhackneyed Chopin numbers, a group of Debussy pieces, and a selection of pieces from the works of five different composers of romantic and 'programmatic' tendencies. Nothing could have been conceived on better or juster lines for the completely adequate demonstration of Borwick's individual genius.

With the possible exception of the so-called 'Moonlight,' there is not one of Beethoven's Sonatas that has received so widely varied a meed of interpretation as the Op. 57. It has been played in every possible shade of style, from the clear and coldly classical manner of Prof. Tovey, to the rich, passionate utterance of Leonard Borwick. Both these extremes are no doubt wrong, and Beethoven's own intention was probably a mean between the two. On the other hand, it was possibly nothing of the kind. Vincent d'Indy, in his charming little critical monograph on Beethoven, in referring to the master's style of the second period, remarks that its chief manifestations may be summed up in a few words:

> The disturbance caused by the first onset of the passions finds expression through a period almost disorderly, in a musical sense, from 1801 to 1804.

In 1804 the crisis is passed, and equilibrium re-established in three master works—the Sonata Op. 57 (love), Op. 53 (nature), and the third Symphony (heroism).

We have it also on the authority of Schindler, that Beethoven himself said that the poetic idea of the Sonata Op. 31, No. 2, in D minor, and the Sonata Op. 57, with which we are now dealing, is to be sought in Shakespeare's 'The Tempest.' And no less an expert of programme music than the late Prof. Niecks was strongly inclined to accept Schindler's utterance as genuinely in accordance with fact. In spite of all this, however, it is not without interest to speculate upon what executants of the emotional school would have made of Op. 57, had that enterprising publisher never thought of filling his coffers by the mere conception of affixing a label to the work. Earlier in his book, Vincent d'Indy remarks that > . . . after all, while reading the Sonata in C sharp minor, or the 'Appassionata,' we do not think of the brunette countess with blue eyes, or of woman in any guise; how can one see any other person than the artist creator himself, who complains, who revolts, or turns away to seek consolation in the woods or smiling meadows?

I do not agree with Prof. Niecks that Schindler is altogether to be trusted. Perhaps the coldly classical mode of interpreting this noble work is not altogether in accordance with the composer's ideas, but I believe it comes closer to them than did the Sturm und Drang of Leonard Borwick. The passion he put into Op. 57 was considerably worked up, and largely artificial, though interesting enough, of course, as a study in interpretation.

It may be considered that I have dwelt too much upon this aspect of Borwick's reading of Beethoven, but to me the master is sacrosanct. I think the time has now come when all the cobwebs of misrepresentation and superstition that have gathered about Beethoven's work should be entirely swept away, and even if we have to unlearn much, and begin on fundamentals again, the possibility of re-discovering the real Beethoven in the process is surely worth the trouble.

With Chopin, who never affixed a title to, or indicated a programme for, any one of his numerous pianoforte compositions, the case is entirely different from that of Beethoven, who did so occasionally, although very seldom. It was Balzac who said that the Polish composer was less a musician than a soul qui se rend sensible. And from all that we know of him, it can scarcely be doubted that Balzac was right. Schumann wrote of the 'Three Waltzes,' Op. 30:

> Such flooding life moves within these Waltzes that they seem to have been improvised in the ball-room. . . . They must please; they are of another stamp from the usual waltzes, and in the style in which they can only be conceived by Chopin when he looks in a grandly artistic way into the dancing crowd, which he elevates by his playing, thinking of other things than of what is being danced.

It was of the 'other things' that Leonard Borwick told when he played Chopin, as he likewise expressed all the romance and love and poetry in Debussy, Stravinsky, Scriabin, Palmgren, et in hoc genus omne.

In a final estimate of the position of Leonard Borwick as artist and pianist, where then must he be placed? Certainly not in the front rank with his contemporaries Sauer, Rosenthal, and Busoni. He had not the dramatic instincts that are, or were, essentially a part of the artistic equipment of these giants. He was not by any means devoid of the dramatic sense, of course, but it was in him more or less defective—just a little lop-sided. But I should have no hesitation in placing him in the second rank with, say, Paderewski, Pachmann, and perhaps Hambourg. There is no question whatever that Leonard Borwick was a very great artist—all the greater perhaps when we remember that he was sixteen years of age before he resolved seriously to train for virtuoso rank. He was undoubtedly the greatest of our native pianists, and illuminating and full of surprises as his interpretations frequently were, that critic would be rash indeed who should dare to assert that he had, even at the date of his death, reached the zenith of his influence and achievement. Truly great virtuosi are not so numerous that we should fail to mourn even the death of one; but there have been very few since the pianoforte was evolved from earlier and less perfect instruments, whose loss has been more untimely, or whose artistic personality is less easy to replace than were those of our own beloved Leonard Borwick.

DANCE MUSIC OF TO-DAY

By Jack Hylton

To determine the true position of the modern dance band in relation to musical progress it is necessary to go back, in the mind's eye, to the time when musicians were 'all-round' men who provided music both for the ear and for dancing. These conditions obtained about ten or twelve years ago when dancing was an occasional amusement.

As distinct from the 'straight' orchestra, the dance band of to-day is the result of specialisation consequent upon the phenomenally rapid advance of dancing during the last few years. Regarded in this light, it is easier to assess dance bands at their correct worth. This is an age of specialisation; and comparisons between music played by 'straight' orchestras, for the pleasure of the ear alone, and that produced principally for purposes of dancing, are not only strictly illogical, but lead merely to acrimonious assertions of superiority which yield no useful result. The two types of music are complementary, rather than in opposition.

It is unnecessary to consider why dancing became so popular during the war, or to trace the beginning of that type of music, if such it can be called, which was then christened by the name of 'Jazz.' That many excesses were committed in the name of the old 'jazz,' I am ready to admit; but although the name has survived, the music itself and all that it represented was purely transient. One thing only it served to emphasise—the importance of a sustained rhythm in any popular form of music.

Modern syncopated music is not 'jazz,' but it has retained that same rhythmic under-current as an essential constituent. I am not asserting that a strong rhythm is necessary to all music, but it now seems established that, for modern dancing purposes, a noticeable rhythmic background, as found in present-day syncopated music, is essential. The nature of the rhythm depends naturally upon the type of dance, and in this respect fewer changes have been seen.

Nobody can feel doubtful that the happy invention of the fox-trot was one of the principal causes of the recent popularisation of dancing. Although dance innovators have been extremely busy for several seasons, the fox-trot still maintains its supremacy and, according to competent judges, seems likely to do so for many seasons to come. This is due, without question, to its delightful simplicity.

It is hardly surprising, in these circumstances, that popular composers are producing music to satisfy this definite demand for syncopated dance material. It can even be said that to be a success, or 'hit,' a popular song nowadays must necessarily be also a good dance tune. This may be regrettable from some view-points, but it is a hard commercial fact. So widely is dancing now spread and so eager is the cry for suitable new pieces, that the output of popular songs of this character is exceedingly large, and runs, I am told, into hundreds every week.

But their life is short, sometimes only a month or two. Not long ago every popular band in the country was playing 'Valencia,' yet already it is well-nigh forgotten. Again, modern dance songs are shorter than many other compositions; they are seldom more than three to four minutes' long, or about a hundred and sixty measures in music. Thus many more items are required in a programme than formerly.

Now to serve effectively the ever-increasing popularity of dancing, a machine is required of a character considerably different from that of the 'straight' orchestra. The latter is too unwieldy for the purpose and, owing to the large number of orchestras required, too expensive. The usual dance band consists of three saxophones, three brass instruments, and four rhythmic instruments, the latter acting as a background to all other effects. Thanks to the saxophones, the volume created by a small dance band of this type can equal that of a full 'straight' orchestra comprising three or four times the number of players.

The principal distinguishing feature of dance band music is sustained rhythm, and the most important instruments in this respect are the drums. Where one drum only is employed the bass drum with foot-beater is used, but timpani are essential for good work. In nearly every dance orchestra the rhythm is also sustained by a pianoforte. The other chief rhythmic instrument is the banjo, of which there are several types. The tenor banjo is probably the most useful. These instruments in combination provide the under-current of rhythm which is characteristic of modern dance music.

The principal melodic instruments are the saxophones, of which there are eight varieties. This instrument combines certain qualities of the clarinet and French horn. Another important instrument is the trumpet, the tone-colour of which can be varied considerably by means of 'mutes' inserted in the bell. These accessories are also used with the trombone.

The efforts of responsible dance musicians have lately been directed to the retention of vital rhythm —deemed so important by modern dancers—without loss of artistic form in the music. The danger in modern dance music generally, as many of its critics point out, is that some young people may be tempted to consider it as the only form of musical expression, and to disregard completely the vast treasure of music left us by the classical masters, which is designed only for the ear. I recognise that many of these young folk hear nothing but dance music, and that if musical taste is to be maintained, the same degree of refinement, so perceptible in most classical music, should also characterise modern dance music. Many people, in addition to dancers, listen to dance tunes, and although it is not intended to substitute dance music for that of a 'straight' orchestra, it is clearly necessary to maintain a high standard, so that the musical taste of the younger generation, for which we feel responsible, shall not suffer.

The type of modern music known as symphonic syncopation has this end in view. Many of the classics have been paraphrased rhythmically, in order to produce music which will satisfy not only dancers but also listeners, and much of the criticism poured upon such attempts has in some measure been merited. The work requires not only a certain audacity, but also considerable skill, and I admit freely that a few classical works have been disfigured in this way, owing to bad taste. The resulting paraphrases have naturally offended the innate refinement characteristic of a true musician.

But I see no valid reason why rhythmic paraphrases of the classics—if properly done, so that the original ideas of the composer are retained—should not be works of art any less than the originals. It is possible to retain all their beauty and individual character, and I look for extensive development in this respect in the immediate future. We have already some notable successes. A difficulty is that the 'straight' orchestra is much larger than a dance band, a difference which necessitates many substitutes for the original instruments. The parts usually given to the violins, 'cellos, and clarinets, for example, must be taken by the saxophones, whilst the muted trumpet imitates the oboe, French horn, and so on.

It seems likely that the modern dance band will retain its present form for many years to come, for the number of such bands in this country is still increasing. Although mistakes have been made in the development of symphonic syncopation, which even yet is in the experimental stage, I feel certain that a bright future lies before it.

With the present limited facilities available to the working classes for the enjoyment of music, dance musicians carry a heavy responsibility. Provided the music they play is selected, arranged, and adapted rhythmically with a refined taste, their work should have an educational value no less important than that of the prominent schools of music, which are not concerned principally with the working classes, but with those more blessed with life's favours.

HORATIO WILLIAM PARKER

A memorial tablet has been erected to mark the birthplace of Horatio William Parker, at Auburndale, Massachusetts. Prof. Edward Bailey Birge, head of the School Music Department of Indiana University, gave an address, and a choir of two hundred sang Parker's 'I remember.' The memorial is inscribed:

THIS TABLET MARKS THE BIRTHPLACE
OF
HORATIO WILLIAM PARKER,
September 15, 1863
December 18, 1919
SCHOLAR. TEACHER. COMPOSER. FRIEND.
Dedicated by
THE AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF NORMAL METHODS.
July 26, 1896.

The commemoration closed with a performance of Parker's 'Hora Novissima,' conducted by Mr. Emil Mollenhauer.

CARL MARIA VON WEBER: NOTES ON SOME EPISODES IN HIS CAREER

By EDWARD SPEYER

[Carl Maria von Weber was born at Eutin, Oldenburg, on December 18, 1786, and died in London, June 5, 1826.]

In my collection of autographs there is a document, drawn up on a sheet of foolscap paper of somewhat official aspect, written in a firm, clear hand, of which the following is a translation :

Stuttgart, August 9, 1807.

To the Directors of the Royal Opera.

In the course of a musical tour undertaken by myself, I have just arrived in this town, and the desire to be fortunate enough to be able during my stay here to perform before His Majesty The King on the Fortepiano, encourages me to address myself to you with the humble request that you might kindly feel disposed to assist me in realising this project.

I should offer, not only to play on the Fortepiano a concerto by Beethoven or some other great Master, but also, and more especially, to produce a Symphony of my own composition, or an Overture of one of my Operas, and I flatter myself—without, I hope, laying myself open to the charge of presumption—that I shall have the good fortune to earn the applause of His Majesty The King, as well as that of all music lovers.

In the confident hope of obtaining your kind and powerful intervention in my favour.

I have the honour to remain,

Your most obedient servant,

CARL MARIA BARON VON WEBER.

The offer to provide for the King of Würtemberg and his subjects so generous a feast of music as detailed in the foregoing petition, if made by a composer of mature age and experience might be considered to be remarkable enough ; coming from a lad hardly out of his 'teens it seems amazing.

What Weber intended to be a short visit to Stuttgart during a concert tour through Germany, developed into a sojourn of two and a half years. He became secretary to the King's brother, the Duke Ludwig of Würtemberg, a man of loose morals and discreditable conduct of which Weber was made the innocent scapegoat. Weber was consequently banished from the country by royal decree, and was forced thenceforward to seek his fortune in other parts of Germany.

We next meet him at Offenbach, near Frankfort-on-Main, in 1810, on a visit to André, the music publisher, who had commissioned Weber to write six Sonatinas for pianoforte and violin. Anton André (1775-1844), the head of a family well-known in musical history, enjoyed in his time a considerable reputation as a composer, and more particularly as a theoretician. He inherited from his father the music publishing business which is in existence to-day. Whilst on a journey to Vienna in 1799, and on Haydn's advice, André bought the manuscripts of the complete works of Mozart from the composer's widow, for the sum of about £900. These he proceeded to publish gradually, the publication immediately raising the position of his firm to one of the most important in Germany. André wished to hear the six Violin Sonatinas, and invited Weber to dinner, together with my father, Wilhelm Speyer (1790-1878), who was a good violinist and had studied composition with André. After dinner the performance of the pieces by the two young men, who were then aged twenty-three and nineteen respectively, was punctuated by a running fire of caustic criticism uttered in a loud voice by André. At the end Weber quietly rolled up his manuscript, put it in his pocket, and, turning to André, exclaimed : 'Sir, you shall not have these Sonatinas, but I doubt not that you may one day pirate them.' I may perhaps explain that in those times no treaties for the protection of the rights of authors existed amongst the forty-four large and small states which constituted Germany, so that a book or composition published in one state could be pirated with impunity in all the others. André, however, did not lay himself open to Weber's reproach. The Sonatinas were afterwards published by Schott, at Mainz.

The two episodes described above serve to bring out a prominent trait in Weber's character, viz., his strong sense of self-confidence, which, however, was untainted by arrogance, conceit, or vanity. He retained this spirit of self-reliance throughout his life. His courtly manners, the originality of his compositions, the brilliance of his pianoforte playing, and his highly-cultivated mind earned for Weber the admiration of wide social circles and the friendship of many eminent men and women wherever he went during his extensive journeys.

Besides the well-known biography of Weber by his son, Max Maria von Weber, the collection of letters forming the correspondence from 1812 to 1826, between Weber and his most intimate friend, the distinguished naturalist Heinrich Lichtenstein (1770-1857), who was one of the earliest explorers of South Africa and himself an accomplished musical amateur,* affords an admirable opportunity for obtaining a true insight into Weber's character, his opinions on music in general, his artistic career, and his private life.

The first performance of his opera, 'Der Freischütz,' took place at Berlin, on June 18, 1821, and its almost unparalleled success immediately made Weber's name celebrated and popular, not only all over Germany, but also over the greater part of Europe.

In 1816 he settled down at Dresden as conductor of the Royal Opera, a position which he held till his death, and though he was frequently involved in struggles against prejudice and intrigue, Weber had substantial compensations in the esteem and support of his friends, and more especially in an unusually happy married life. But his delicate state of health, which grew steadily worse and finally ended in a virulent form of consumption, cast a shadow over his existence. He began to be deeply concerned about the future of his wife and two young children. At this moment, in August, 1824, Weber received a proposal from Kemble, the manager of Covent Garden, to compose an opera for England, to be based on an English libretto by Planché, called 'Oberon.' The opera was to be produced in London, with Weber as conductor. He was to make a three months' stay in this country, in the spring of 1826, and to receive payment of about £1,000, together with some other benefits. In view of his bad health, his wife and friends strongly urged him to decline the offer. The composer, however, consulted his doctor, whose verdict was as follows : 'If you go to England your fate will be sealed in a few months. If you remain at home and take a year of absolute rest, you may have a few years still to live.' Weber answered : 'I shall go to England. God's will be done !'

* Braunschweig : George Westermann, 1900

Weber threw himself at once into the work of composing the opera, and in order to be able to cope fully with the libretto, began to learn English, although he was thirty-seven years of age.

The following letter to Sir George Smart, the original of which is in my possession, shows the measure of success which attended his efforts :

> My Dear Sir !—I leave Dresden the 16 February. I shall sleep every night,—because I am forbidden to travel by night,—remain one day at Frankfort, and hope to arrive at Paris the 25th February. There I must remain some days, and therefore I can not be in London,—embarking at Calais,—before the 5th or 6th of March. Consequently I can only accept the fair offer of our honored friend Mr. Kemble, than for the four last oratorios, the 8th, 10th, 16th, and 17th, for which I hope Mr. Kemble will accord me the round summe of one hundred Pound sterling.
>
> Beyond all this however I must entirely apply to your goodness, without that I would be a very helpless Being.
>
> But you prove yet already by your kind letter and the very useful advices which you give me in it—for which I can not be enough indebted to you,—that I can hope every aid by your Friendship.
>
> Your letter shall be my direction after which I regulate myself ; and Mrs. Weber is a great deal more tranquil, to see me in such hands in England, and looks upon it with harty thanks. I am not attended by a servant, but Mr. Fürstenau will come along with me and I am very glad to know that he can reside near me.
>
> The engagement of Mr. Braham is a very good news, and gives me great pleasure.
>
> If this letter goes so fast as yours, you can give me —if you think it necessary—some news at Paris, where my direction is by Maurice Schlesinger's.
>
> And now my dear Sir ! I give you a harty shake hands and remain with all regard and esteem.
>
> Yours most faithfully,
>
> M. v. Weber.
>
> Dresden, February the 6th, 1826.

[Concerts with a miscellaneous programme of orchestral and vocal music were then called Oratorios. Braham was the eminent operatic singer.] Weber left Dresden on February 16, 1826, accompanied by his friend Fürstenau, the celebrated flautist, and arrived in London on March 5, where he enjoyed the hospitality of Sir George Smart.

The events and experiences of his stay in London are pungently described in his letters to his wife,* which give a highly interesting, and, at the same time, deeply moving picture of his existence during the last few months which he was destined to live. He at once acquired an extraordinary popularity, not only in society, but even amongst the people in the streets, who cheered him on leaving the rehearsals at Covent Garden. His time was more than fully occupied by rehearsals of the opera, conducting concerts, and an endless succession of social functions, which he attended much against his will. It seems almost miraculous that his enfeebled and emaciated body was able to withstand the strain of all this activity and excitement. He even found time and energy in London to compose that noble Overture to 'Oberon' which, together with its great and brilliant companions, the Overtures to 'Der Freischütz' and 'Euryanthe,' still thrills the audiences of our concert-rooms to-day.

The first performance of 'Oberon' took place on April 12, 1826. About this he writes to his wife :

> By God's mercy and help I have had a greater success to-night than perhaps ever before. It is difficult to describe so complete and moving a triumph as this. To God alone the honour is due ! On my entering the orchestra, the whole audience of the over-crowded house rose and received me with an outbreak of cheers and applause, accompanied by the waving of handkerchiefs and hats. It took an unconscionable time for all this to calm down. The Overture and five numbers had to be repeated, and every other piece was interrupted by explosions of enthusiasm. In the end I was dragged on to the stage amidst tumultuous applause, an honour which, I am told, has never before been conferred on any composer on such an occasion in this country.

Through all the numerous letters addressed to his wife during the three months of his stay there runs like a red thread his feverish, insatiable, and irresistible yearning for home, wife, and children—a feeling which seemed to consume his frail body and hasten the end of his life. Of his terrible sufferings during most of this time we find frequent records in his diary, but not the slightest mention of them is ever made in any of his letters to his wife. It was on May 26, ten days before his death, that Weber gave a farewell concert of his own, for which occasion he composed the song 'From Chindara's warbling fount I come,' to words taken from Thomas Moore's 'Lalla Rookh.' The manuscript of this last composition of Weber's, which was written for the celebrated singer Miss Stephens, who later became Countess of Essex, is in my collection, and has a deeply pathetic interest. Only the voice part is written out, and in an all too visibly trembling hand. Miss Stephens sang the song from this manuscript, whilst Weber at the pianoforte had to improvise the accompaniment. He had evidently already become too feeble to write it down ! It was the last time his hands touched the keys. The song was published after his death, with a pianoforte accompaniment provided by Moscheles.

With a profound sigh of relief, Weber had fixed his departure from London for June 5. On the evening of June 4 his friends Sir George Smart, Fürstenau, Moscheles, and Mr. Göschen, the London banker, father of the late Viscount Goschen, came to see him, and on observing the state of collapse to which he was reduced, they strongly urged him to postpone the journey. But he firmly refused. He was found dead in bed the next morning. A post mortem examination revealed that the disease had had a devastating effect on both his lungs and throat. The funeral was on an imposing scale, the expenses being provided by public subscription, and took place on June 21, at the Roman Catholic Chapel of St. Mary Moorfields, in the City, when Mozart's 'Requiem' was performed. The coffin was deposited in the crypt of the church.

In 1844, mainly on the initiative of Richard Wagner, the body was transferred to Dresden.

Sir George Smart's house, where Weber died, was 91, Great Portland Street. When the street was renumbered the house received the number 103, and a memorial tablet was placed upon it in 1894.

* Reise-Briefe von C. Maria von Weber. Leipsic : Alphons Dürr, 1866.

AN UNPUBLISHED PAGE OF BIZET'S 'CARMEN'

By Paul Landormy

I am indebted to M. Emile Straus for an unpublished communication of Bizet, in which we see the composer of 'Carmen' collaborating with his librettists Meilhac and Halévy—or with one of them—in building up the very text he had to set to music. Or rather, as we shall soon see, we are not here dealing with a text to be set to music, but with music to provide with a text.

The story of the Habañera of 'Carmen' is well known. For the heroine's first entrance on to the stage, Bizet had originally composed couplets which Galli-Marié, the creator of the rôle, considered mediocre in their effect. She refused to sing them. To satisfy her, Bizet apparently made thirteen separate attempts to write the song: all to no purpose. In despair, he finally decided simply to transcribe—with a little arranging—a 'chanson havanaise' entitled 'El arreglito' ('The promise of marriage'), which he found in an album published in 1864 by the firm of Heugel, under the title 'Chansons espagnoles del maëstro Yradier.'*

And so Bizet copied Yradier as Handel or Molière were wont to copy—i.e., by a transfer of the model. But there had to be invented words suited to Yradier's music. Bizet tried to write them himself. Not succeeding, he left his task, and requested Ludovic Halévy to finish it.

The following represents the rough copy of the words of the Habañera written by the composer on a large sheet of white paper with marginal notes evidently intended for Halévy:

L'amour est un rebelle
Et nul ne peut l'apprivoiser.
C'est en vain qu'on l'appelle,
Il lui convient de refuser.

. . . . . .

Eight lines like the first four, the second, fourth, sixth, eighth, tenth and twelfth lines beginning with a vowel ! ! ! !

. . . . . .
. . . . . .
. . . . . .
. . . . . .
. . . . . .
. . . . . .
. . . . . .
. . . . . .

L'amour est enfant de Bohême . . .
Il ne connut jamais de loi,
Si tu ne m'aimes pas, je t'aime ! . . .
Si tu m'aimes . . . tant pis pour toi ! . . .
L'oiseau que tu croyais surprendre
Battit de l'aile et s'envola . . .
L'amour est loin—tu peux l'attendre.
Tu ne l'attends plus—il est là—
Tout autour de toi vite, vite—
Il vient, il s'en va, puis revient ;
Tu crois le tenir—il évite.
Tu crois l'éviter—il te tient,
L'amour est enfant de Bohème, etc.

This Yradier—who died in 1865, 'singing-master to the Empress of the French'—had evidently some success in his day, seeing that he found such interpreters as Malibran, Mesdames Viardot, Patti, Alboni, Carvalho, Trebelli, &c. Alexandre Dumas fils, in 'L'Ami des Femmes' (Act 2, Scene 3), having to persuade Balbine to sing a fashionable romance, is compelled to borrow from the 'Chansons Espagnoles' the air 'Ay Chiquita':

'On dit que l'on te marie
Tu sais que j'en vais mourir.'

This text calls for a few remarks. We see that Bizet's lines have been definitely retained, or almost so. There are a few slight modifications. The first line:

L'amour est un rebelle ;

and the third:

C'est en vain qu'on l'appelle ;

have become:

L'amour est un oiseau rebelle
. . . . . .
Et c'est bien en vain qu'on l'appelle.

The addition of two syllables to each line evaded a repetition in the singing which was doubtless looked upon as a blemish. Indeed, in order to adapt the music to the original lines—which were two syllables short—Bizet had originally thought of twice repeating the initial syllables of the first and third lines.

In the refrain, the last line alone is changed. Instead of:

Si tu m'aimes . . . tant pis pour toi,

we have:

Si je t'aime . . . prends garde à toi !

which is infinitely more significant.

The text of the second couplet has been but slightly altered:

Il vient, s'en va, puis il revient,

instead of:

Il vient, il s'en va, puis revient.

But here we have something interesting. At the corner of the page on which Bizet has written his lines, and which he has had to hand over to his collaborator, we read the following lines in Halévy's handwriting:

Hasard et fantaisie
Ainsi commencent les amours,
Et violà pour la vie
Ou pour six mois ou pour trois jours.
Un matin sur sa route
On trouve l'amour, Il est là. . . .
Il vient sans qu'on s'en doute,
Et sans qu'on s'en doute il s'en va.
Il vous prend, vous enlève,
Il fait de vous tout ce qu'il veut.
C'est un délire, un rêve,
Et ça dure ce que ça peut.

Evidently this is the answer to Bizet's request. These are the 'eight lines like the first four' asked for by the composer on the margin of the page; there are even twelve instead of eight, for Bizet had not explained his meaning clearly. Judging by the arrangement of his text, we may imagine that the couplet was to consist of eight lines in addition to the first four, whereas the first four were in reality included in the eight for which he had asked. These short lines by Halévy are dainty and well-conceived, but how little they suit the situation, the character, the music!

On the back of the same page we read—still in Halévy's handwriting:

Here are the twelve lines required. Do they fit in with the sentiment? I had composed more tender lines, but I think we must not, at first, paint Carmen in too sombre colours, and that a little blague will do no harm. To-morrow I will bring you, at Bougival, the little scraps of the Finale of the third Act, along with the four lines to replace the short dialogue in the last tableau.

Here we catch something of the capricious fancy of the 'bien parisien' librettist, who thinks solely of 'diverting' the public, even at a sacrifice of the real characters and situations. Meilhac and Halévy have actually made singularly insipid the rôles of Carmen and of Don José. It is a far cry from Merimée's Carmen, a regular 'diable' with a 'crocodile' laugh as she disposes of her victims, to the dainty cigar-maker as she appears on the stage of the Opéra-Comique. What would 'Carmen' have become if Bizet had given the librettists a free hand, and had permitted them to introduce here and there a little of that blague which had contributed to the success of their operettas? We even wonder to what extent the composer collaborated in bringing the work to completion; if, indeed, his share did not frequently extend far beyond the purely musical domain. Bizet perhaps supplied his collaborators with many other texts; or at least he may have induced them to modify theirs without this intervention on the part of the composer himself having left a trace. Whatever of Merimée's passionate violence and crudity of colour is still retained in 'Carmen,' we probably owe very largely to Bizet. Such, at all events, are the suppositions which naturally enter the mind when perusing this manuscript.

And besides, there is a more important question to answer. Speaking generally, is it not necessary that the composer, when preparing so complex a work as a musical drama, should be the chief artizan, the one who guides and controls the librettist, when he does not handle the pen himself?

At all events, Bizet here is prominent, as he is in company with Meilhac and Halévy, whose intuition of the subject in hand was far the most clear-sighted and penetrating. The words of which he is the author are among the best of the entire libretto, and give us the most complete understanding of Carmen's true nature.

. . . . . .

Concerning the Habañera of 'Carmen' we are confronted with another question of a different order.

This Habañera is the only morçeau of the score regarding which Bizet thought it necessary to state—in a note printed at the foot of the page—that it was 'imitée d'une chanson espagnole.' This would lead one to suppose that, in the rest of his opera, Bizet borrowed no other theme, either from folk-lore or from any composer of Spanish songs or dances.

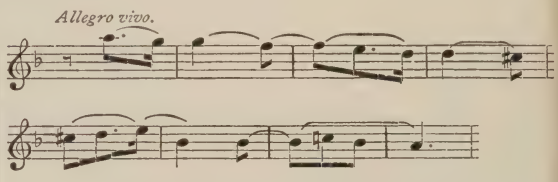
Madame Straus-Bizet asserts that the composer of 'Carmen' never saw any other collection of Spanish songs than that of Yradier. And yet in writing 'Carmen,' Bizet succeeded in giving us such vivid local colouring that we wonder if he may not have been better informed on the music of Spain than he himself acknowledged or than one might imagine.

I am well aware of what may be said. It will be remembered that before composing 'Carmen,' Bizet did not think it necessary to make a tiresome journey into Spain, like many another artist, poet, or musician; he evidently preferred to depict the Spain of his imagination. This by no means signifies that he invented it as a complete production throughout.

On the other hand, at a period when musicological science was in its infancy, we cannot well see where or how, without leaving France, Bizet could have acquired such exact information regarding Spanish popular music: its tonadillas, its aragonnaises, its seguidillas, its jotas, its fandangos, &c. At a later date, such musicians as Debussy and Ravel have the actual documents before them. They imitate melodic turns, rhythmic patterns, harmonic arrangements, whose inmost essence they have made their own through the numerous books placed at their disposal by zealous musicographers, or by listening to the works of an Albeniz or a Granados, themselves directly inspired by Spanish folk-lore.

By following what models did Bizet absorb the dominant traits of Spanish music? Had he opportunities at Paris of attending concerts or exhibitions of Spanish dancing? At all events, he must have had definite information, seeing that Yradier's book did not supply it. Such pieces as the Seguidilla of 'Carmen' or the last entr'acte possess a Spanish quality which is anything but vague!

This last entr'acte especially raises doubts. What exactly did Bizet contribute to the invention of so characteristic a motif as this?



In his work entitled 'Un demi-siècle de musique française,' Julien Tiersot writes:

> The theme of the last entr'acte is so strongly marked with the characteristics of Spanish dances, that one might well hesitate before crediting Bizet with its composition; and yet I have never come across it in any collection of dances.

But here is a disturbing element. In his study of Bizet's 'Carmen,' Charles Gaudier categorically asserts that the very theme of this entr'acte is taken from a musical comedy, 'El Criado Fingido' ('The Pretended Servant'), composed in 1804 by the famous singer, Manuel Garcia, father of Malibran and of Madame Viardot.

The two texts, Garcia's and Bizet's, would have to be compared. Unfortunately, M. Gaudier, who is 'absolutely certain' that he once had this score in his hands, cannot now find it. It is neither in the library of the Conservatoire nor in that of the Opéra. Search in Spain has proved abortive.

Until further information is available the question remains undecided. The good faith of M. Gaudier is in no way concerned. But is his memory as trustworthy as he imagines? Again, supposing that the motif of Bizet's entr'acte is taken from Garcia's opéra-comique, was this a mere transcription or a free imitation? Here is a problem for musicologists to solve.

(Authorised translation by Fred Rothwell.)

NEW LIGHT ON LATE TUDOR COMPOSERS

By W. H. Grattan Flood

XX.—Nathaniel Patrick

Patrick's complete Church Service in G minor is a sufficient proof of his powers as a composer, and justifies his inclusion in the present series. He also wrote various songs, motets, and madrigals. However, his biography is a bit tangled, and this tangle has been unravelled only in recent years thanks to the research of Sir Ivor Atkins, organist of Worcester Cathedral. Former writers attributed the Service in G minor to Patrick's son, Richard Nathaniel, but this attribution has been shown to be incorrect.

Sir Ivor Atkins is inclined to believe that Nathaniel Patrick—whose name is also written 'Pattrick'—was of a Worcestershire family, and related to Dr. Giles Patrick, a physician who was granted an annuity from the Dean and Chapter of Worcester, in 1594. This may be true, but it is not improbable that he was a relative of Thomas Patrick, who received a corrody as a Gentleman of the Chapel Royal in 1485, while he was also connected with Nathaniel Giles, who was organist of Worcester Cathedral from 1581 to 1585. He was apparently born about the year 1560, and was appointed organist of Worcester Cathedral in 1590. Certain it is that his name appears in the Cathedral Treasurer's accounts for Michaelmas, 1590.

It has been suggested by Mr. G. E. P. Arkwright that two of Patrick's songs, namely, 'Send forth thy sighs' and 'Prepare to die,' were intended for a play, for, as is recorded, Patrick was Master of the Choristers of Worcester Cathedral, as well as Organist. The words of the former song are as follows:

> Send forth thy sighs the witnesses of woe,
> Pour down thy plaints the signs of thy unrest;
> Let trickling tears from forth thy fountains flow,
> For these same weeds become thy calling best.
> Let sobs, let sighs, let plaints, let tears and all
> Bear witness just of this thy fatal fall.

In the British Museum, among the Add. MSS. 17,786-89-91, the song of 'Send forth thy sighs' will be found, while two other songs, 'Climb not too high' and 'Prepare to die' are given without words, arranged as a string quintet. Another piece of his, 'Sacred Pan,' will be found in Add. MSS. 18,936-39.

An interesting fact in the composer's short career was his marriage to Alice Hassard, at St. Michael's, Worcester, on September 23, 1593. Not long afterwards he composed a volume of madrigals, entitled:

> Songes of Sundrye Natures, whereof some are divine, some are Madrigalles, and the rest Psalmes and Hymnes in Latin, composed of Five and Six Voyces, and One for Eight Voyces, by Nathanaell Pattrick, sometyme Master of the children of the Cathedrall Churche of Worcester, and organist of the same.

This volume was printed posthumously by Thomas East, and was duly entered at Stationers' Hall, on October 22, 1597. The date of publication was two years after the death of the composer, but no copy has survived.

From the Cathedral Treasurer's accounts, it appears that Patrick received his last payment from the Dean and Chapter, at Michaelmas, 1594, and he retired soon after, owing to ill-health. His will, dated March 12, 1595, is given in Sir Ivor Atkins's learned paper on 'The Early Occupants of the Office of Organist and Master of the Choristers of Worcester Cathedral' (Worcester Historical Society, 1918). He died ten days later, and was buried on March 23, 1595, at St. Michael's, Worcester, 'where,' as Dr. Fellowes writes, 'his son, probably his only child,' Francis, was buried in the previous August. According to Worcester Wills (vol. vii., fol. 83), Patrick's testament was proved in May, 1595, but the young widow was not, apparently, inconsolable for long, as, in 1597, she married her husband's successor as organist of Worcester Cathedral, Thomas Tomkins, whose son was christened Nathaniel.

Arnold was the culprit in attributing Nathaniel Patrick's Service in G minor to Richard Patrick, but in recent years a revised edition of Nathaniel's work, with the correct attribution, has been issued by Novello's.

New Music

SONGS

Armstrong Gibbs generally has a fine insight into the poems he chooses to set, and like de la Mare, to whose work he seems so strongly drawn, he can pack his simple-sounding phrases with gentle and wistful intensity. Curwen's send a selection of his music, which includes some settings from 'Crossings' as well as two apparently more recent songs, and is sufficient to stamp him at his best as a really fine song writer. Among the qualities that make him so are complete absence of affectation and strain after effect, a vivid but quiet perception and portrayal of the poem's implications, and a graceful sense of rhythm—a kind of lilt, which he never allows to become cheap or to persist into facility or dullness. These qualities are shown at their best level in 'Araby,' surely one of the most charming of modern songs, which is included in the present selection. To see how good it is, we have only to imagine the turgid mess of ninths and elaboration which some composers would have produced in an attempt to paint this atmosphere. Moreover, plain-spoken sincerity and a lack of verbiage or padding give these songs not only an air of deep feeling, but also a peculiar restfulness. 'Ann's Cradle Song,' despite some slight unevenness in the middle section, has this restfulness in marked degree; and there is also a lovely tune in it, which returns, at the end of the song, with fascinating effect. 'Beggar's Song' is highly successful in capturing the feeling of quiet yet tingling vitality which is characteristic of a frosty night; and here, as elsewhere, the composer changes his pianoforte figure and gives variety just where a change is felt most apt and effective. 'Candlestick Maker's Song,' while it shows some of the qualities of the other numbers, has not the same individuality, at any rate in such a concentrated way. The material is more ordinary, and some of the accompaniment effects seem almost commonplace. 'The Wanderer' and 'Proud Maisie' bring us back again to the composer's native air and own level. In the first of these songs we get again the peculiarly charming lilt; again, the three-four rhythm is dropped for a couple of bars at a critical moment, and with complete success; and again the change is absolutely simple, the effect surely obtained and finely suitable to the feeling of the words. The adaptation of the same passage to different needs in the second verse is a clever touch. Technically, the song is a model. The superficial look of complete ease is seen on examination to be the perfection of conscious art, but this art never obtrudes; here as almost always in Gibbs's work, technical ability is the servant of real emotional experience. And as with the poet he resembles, his simple, shortly-stated impressions are often strangely deep; wandering fancy is seldom out of touch with the biggest things.

It is a sad drop to Owen Mase's 'Protestation.' The tune is good enough; it is that 18th-century air which was included in 'The Beggar's Opera' under the title, 'Oh! what grief it is to part.' The version is slightly different, but not enough so to justify a new setting, particularly a poor one. The arrangement shows sensitiveness, but much gaucherie, and there are some bad examples of that irritating futility, octaves between tune and bass.

Henry Cowell's 'Manaunung's Birthing' is interesting because the composer has in former works adopted novel devices, and been hailed as a portent by the gullible. It is impossible to judge a work while the idiom is strange, but if a man has said something good in ordinary speech, we are all ready to treat him with at least respect when he uses less familiar modes of expression. With Mr. Cowell it is different: he has shown us the unfamiliar, and perhaps mystified us; now he kindly enlightens us by sending a song without novel harmony or many unusual effects, an utterance which we can all see at once to be without musical distinction or real individuality. The composer has felt the vague, ominous power of the words, and tried to illustrate it by thick chords and gloomy crescendos. A certain effect is obtainable, but nothing of real interest or value. Francesco Ticciati's 'The Moon' shows this composer writing in a modal style: a well-written pianoforte part gives quality to a quite good but not outstanding song. Modal, too, is Joyce McGown Clark's 'I sing of a maiden': the words are 15th century, the music 20th—sham-mediæval, derived viâ Holst, a type of music of which we are all heartily sick. Some quality the song must have, by reason of the beauty of the words—a beauty that is effective despite, and not because of, its quaintness. The music adds little or nothing of its own, and its affectedness, at this stage, gives one a feeling of impatience. That sort of thing, except for the originators of it, is hopelessly vieux jeu. 'Bound for the Rio Grande,' a shanty whose vocal line and rhythmical flow make it a stirring tune for communal singing, is well set by Sir Richard Terry. It is issued with all the above-mentioned songs by Curwen, who also send W. S. Gwynn Williams's 'Penillion in English.' This is a set of three songs written in a traditional Welsh manner, i.e., recited to a kind of counterpoint over a well-known air, which is played on the harp. It is interesting to see how this was done; and sometimes, as in the last example, where there is an amusing cross-rhythm, the effect is attractive. But the counterpoints are not strong: they are apt to degenerate, unless great care is taken, into a sort of patter effect; and at any rate, when the same counterpoint occurs without variation as many as six times, one grows weary of it, especially if it is poor to begin with. Apart from historical interest, the musical effect is small. The composer admits that it is difficult to find suitable English words, and certainly the music is very sadly inadequate to the poem of Shelley, which appears in the first number.

Whatever else is true of Maurice Besly's work, it cannot be denied that when he wants to produce an effect, he does it uncommonly well. Moreover, he studies his singers. Take, for instance, 'The New Umbrella.' With how arch a smile would a clever singer 'put it over'! And it could not fail to 'take' (as they would admiringly say), because it is neat, has point and zest, and lies well for the voice, ending with a beautifully vocal and effective gesture. Effectiveness is the composer's strong point, and if his musical standard is not always high, he is never pretentious or affected. He is generally attractive, because something of the half-serious zest with which the songs must be written communicates itself to the listener, unless he be a particularly stony high-brow. 'Summer rain' is perhaps the best of the remaining songs of this composer. 'Sanctuary' is not up to his best level, and there is more than a touch of facility about 'How the holly got its thorns'—the poem cannot have been kept in quarantine long enough. A word of congratulation is due to Messrs. Winthrop Rogers for the clear print and attractive 'get-up' of these songs.

The Oxford University Press sends two songs by Ernest Walker, which were produced by Miss Dorothy Silk and Mr. Adrian Boult at the Oxford Festival this year. They show how considerably the composer's always sensitive style has been modified by recent musical development; and that he has lost none of that intuition about poetry, both in selecting it and in appreciating it from a composer's point of view, which he showed in earlier songs. Full indications of the orchestration show the pianist how inadequate is his best effort to reproduce the composer's thought, and it is a matter of great difficulty, with the transcribed 'texture,' to get an adequate fullness without unsuitable thickness. This is particularly true of 'Summer rain,' whose delicate flute passages are apt to become over-emphatic on the pianoforte. It is a musician's song, with its restraint and quietly meditative treatment of the words, and particularly beautiful is the last page, where the original theme returns, modified and wonderfully suggestive of the quiet, heavy fragrance. 'Sleep Song' is a clever piece of work based on a swaying, two-note figure, which persists throughout the song. Modern influences are more strongly felt here, but there is still the same charming sense of the poem's possibilities, and again the quiet ending is beautifully managed. 'Clever' is not a happy word where music is concerned, except where, as in this case, workmanship is guided by sensitive and imaginative impulse. Dr. Walker shows that the word may be part of a high praise. The same publishers send Ralph Greaves's 'Yellow Wine,' a setting of some words by Masefield to music strong in rhythm and texture, but dry and metallic in its hardness. There is not much blood to be got out of this stone. Power we always find in Hubert Foss's songs, but in 'Riouperoux,' where the poem calls for it, there is quiet beauty as well. Even here, perhaps, there is more vehemence than the poem really demands; but the cumulative effect of the rhythm is bound to be a strong one. This same Press sends a set of three more songs by Vaughan Williams, to words of Shakespeare. They are small, but all have the characteristically vocal line and, like Armstrong Gibbs's songs, the restfulness that comes of sure handling. Very attractive is the rhythmical treatment of 'When icicles hang by the wall,' but the gem of the set is the last number, 'Orpheus with his lute,' which is nothing more than a quietly flowing melody with a simple accompaniment. Yet what more could it be? The authentic touch is here, for the tune is finely phrased to the needs of the words, and has, moreover, in itself a calm and restful beauty. Shakespeare must have had some such quiet music as this in mind when he wrote the last lines of that poem. A very different sort of beauty is that of van Dieren's setting of 'Dream Pedlary'; but beauty there undoubtedly is, though it is somewhat difficult to grasp. It is the difference between the primrose and the orchid, between fresh simplicity and extreme sophistication. Occasional fussiness in the accompaniment makes the effect even less easy to obtain. The texture looks like that of string quartet writing, and on that combination everything would fall into place easily enough; but when the notes are set out for the pianoforte, they become very difficult to compass without the effect of scramble, which is the last thing that is wanted here. When the gentle flow of the music is established, however, the sensitive treatment of the words is felt, as well as real beauty of sound and line. A good deal of the technical skill which van Dieren's admirers have always claimed for him is to be seen here, and this example of his work is particularly welcome to one who has not been able to find much to admire in other songs of his.

'Oh! yes; just so,' the soprano air from 'Phœbus and Pan,' has been issued singly by Novello, with an English version by J. Michael Diack, and a pianoforte version by John E. West. It is a robust affair, satisfying both to singer and listener. Lastly, and in finishing this review, the writer acknowledges with surprise and gratitude that he has never before received a parcel of songs which contained so little 'tripe,' and so many examples that were pleasant to meet and easy to praise. Best thanks to all concerned.

T. A.

CHORAL MUSIC

UNISON SONGS

Winthrop Rogers (Hawkes) sends two pleasant pieces by Maurice Besly—'Tell me where is fancy bred?' and 'To Daffodils.' The settings are neat and felicitous, with the exception of one or two word-stresses.

Natty use of tongue, lips, and teeth will make Felix White's 'Glad Day' and 'Telegraph Wires' go merrily. These are not quite the composer's happiest thoughts, but he always puts in some touch of rhythmic variety, so we are grateful, in a world that is much too four-square (Elkin).

Charles Wood's tiny Rossetti song, 'All the bells were ringing,' is reprinted from the Year-Book Press's collection entitled 'Kikirikee.' It is a very simple essay. From the same publisher comes Clive Carey's 'Highland Lullaby,' an appropriately monotonous little tune, relieved by some agreeable accompaniment work that requires a well-oiled wrist, if the gently-running thirds are to be smooth.

A Novello reprint of Schubert's 'Serenade' is welcome. This is a lovely little song, affording splendid practice in many graces of singing. 'The bold "Princess Royal"' is a hearty sea-song collected by Vaughan Williams. Boys will spring at this with a will. Bernard Johnson's 'The little old man' and 'The old woman' have the advantage of words by Rose Fyleman, and are quite happily touched off. These are under one cover. This last group contains only Novello songs.

PART-SONGS FOR CHILDREN'S AND FEMALE VOICES

'Sister, awake!' (Besly) breaks up Bateson's sense a little here and there, but has an attractive, if somewhat conventional, tune, and divides the work between the two parts quite nicely (Rogers).

'Bees' (words by Norman Gale) is a modest flight by Percy E. Fletcher. 'Flowing lightly' is the direction. This is quite a good cantabile study. Eric Thiman sets Fletcher's 'Shepherds all and maidens fair' unadventurously, with a pleasant sense of the mood; but all these two-part songs follow in grooves too well trod. We need some fresh air in this department of composition. In three parts (S.S.A.), we have an arrangement of old Hatton's cheery jog-trot, 'He that hath a pleasant face.' It may be sung with or without the pianoforte part. All these are from Novello.

Of Sir George Henschel's two short pieces, 'Salutation' ('God be in my head') and 'Easter Song' (George Herbert), I like the second the better. These (for S.S.A.A.) are both easy. The first requires the merest whisper of tone, and the second a sound fortissimo (Curwen).

MALE-VOICE

Curwen issues some arrangements by Sydney Northcote of Welsh airs, for T.T.B.B.—'David the Bard' ('Dafydd y gareg wen'), 'Dear harp of my country' ('Llwny on'—better known outside Wales as 'The Ash Grove'), and 'All through the night' ('Ar hyd y nos'). The harmony is ordinary enough; its best quality is that it is undisturbing. Both Welsh and English words are given.

Thomas Dunhill has also arranged 'The Ash Grove' for the same combination of voices. He puts in a few more chords than does Mr. Northcote, but the result is not particularly striking. His work on 'The Minstrel Boy' is equally competent (Novello). Not much can be done with familiar tunes, if one is to keep within the bounds of the harmonies associated with them. If one goes outside, there may be accusations of spoiling the tunes. It is a difficult matter. I suggest solving it by giving the tunes a rest! After all, they have been arranged so very often, and plenty of good, original ideas are waiting to be uttered by composers who will do some hard thinking and deep feeling, even if it means burning both the midnight oil and nine-tenths of their output.

One direction in which composers might well turn their attention is that of parody. Dr. Rootham, for instance, takes up one of J. C. Squire's versifications, that gently guys the style of Newbolt, and begins with a well-known Stanford tune, going off astride the bit-free Squire-Pegasus with capital effect. 'Eight bells' is the title of this gay little conceit (Curwen).

Who else will try his hand at something in this line? There are some solo settings of parodies, but very few choral pieces.

MIXED-VOICE

Gerrard Williams's 'Tragic Fragment' is worth looking at, as an attempt to express emotion in song without the use of words. Various syllables are used, such as 'me,' 'vaw,' 'thuh,' and so on, and chords are strewn in the path of one part's melody. But why avoid the use of words? On paper the music is not very convincing, but I should like to hear what a good choir, goaded to the right pitch, could make of its agitations (S.A.T.B., Curwen).

W. R. A.

FRENCH FOLK-SONGS

The issue of a new edition of 'The Beautiful Folk-Songs of France,' collected by Austin de Croze (Novello), in two volumes, is welcome as showing that we in England are not unappreciative of the charms of France's folk-songs. Those who are already familiar with them will share in the hope expressed by Mr. Edwin Evans, in his introduction to the first volume, that their reception will be such as to induce the compiler 'to divulge, from his secret hoard, many more of his treasures.'

The first book contains twelve songs, collected from the three provinces of Alsace, Lorraine, and Champagne, and excellently harmonized by Gustave Ferrari. Each song is prefaced by brief historical notes and suggestions as to performance, by the compiler, and is followed by an English translation. It is interesting to read in the note on Alsatian lullabies—which, curiously enough, can also be sung as slow dancing-songs—that > . . . the Pfiffertags [Minnesingers] have been conspicuous in Alsace since the 11th century. They sprang from the Minstrels or Trouvères of Champagne (9th century), who in turn were the descendants of the Troubadours of Provence (8th century). Consequently they are of earlier origin than the Minnesingers of Nüremberg. The Pfiffertags used to have their annual meeting on September 8, in Colmar Cathedral, until the Franco-Prussian War (1870).

The Alsatian folk-songs are mostly dancing-songs, and as the people are great eaters, the theme is usually food and drink. Many are of a cumulative nature; that is, the song begins slowly, gets quicker and quicker, and ends in a whirlwind. In the notes on the example given in Vol. 2, it is suggested that this is one of the many fragments of a bygone religion — that of the Druids; and an almost similar song, we are told—'The little pig at the market'—is still sung in Wiltshire. Lorraine is famous for its marching-songs, and a fine example is included in the first book. We read that the Lorraine songs, whether they are Christmas carols, legends, or love-songs, all have the rhythm of marching-songs. Thus, the old Provençal carol adopted by Marshal Turenne (17th century) became 'Turenne's March.' Two ancient French dances, the 'ronde' and the 'farandole,' have been preserved by the Lorraine folk, and examples of these are included. It is interesting to note that the latter—which is the oldest and most popular dance in Provence since the foundation of Marseilles by the Phoceans, in 600 B.C.—is also a favourite dance in Lancashire. The vividly-contrasted scenery of Champagne, with its natural effect on the life and customs of the people, is reflected in the great variety of its folk-songs. Many are of a religious type. The finest come from Upper Champagne, but even the gayest, we are told, still have something of the appealing melancholy of the landscape. The beautiful example which concludes the first volume—with its melody 'so characteristic of the tragic and romantic scenery of the banks of the Meuse'—although a marching song, is also 'a song of dreams, of longing, and memories.'

Vol. 2 consists of Twelve Songs and Dances, and surely no more jolly book for young people could be wished for. Full explanations and diagrams are given with each dance. A quaint example from Picardy—a district mainly devoted to market-gardening—characteristically tells how to prepare a salad. Several examples of popular playing-songs are also included. In a 'Last-Word,' Mr. Evans reminds us that it is the object of Count de Croze not merely to preserve these fragrant old songs, but to inculcate such affection for them that they may never fade; and, as he happily puts it,

> . . . there is no better way of doing so than by perpetuating their association with those dear, silly, delightful games, so meaningless, and yet so full of meaning, which are the joy of children in all countries. Surely 'Oranges and Lemons' is more alive to-day than all the folk-tunes in the collectors' specimen cases, and many a French child who plays 'Le Maître et Jacquot' has a clearer vision of the spirit of folk-song than his erudite elders.

In a 'Foreword,' Mr. Harvey Grace, after a reference to the value of folk-song as 'the best of antidotes to the banal and ephemeral types of popular song and dance music,' points out that such a collection as this enlarges very considerably the scope of folk-song:

> Some acquaintance with the literature and art of other countries is an obvious necessity to every person of even moderate education. The foundation of such an acquaintance should be laid in childhood, and there can be no more natural and happy method of laying it than that made easy by this collection. It is, I think, incontestable that the regular use of this book, with its well-harmonized tunes, delightful illustrations, and informative notes, will give an English child a truer idea of the language and spirit of France than can be acquired in the same time by a more conventional (and usually far more arduous) method. The latter inevitably accentuates the differences between the countries, whereas the former just as naturally shows the elements they have in common. For instance, it is delightful to see, as one does in these pages, that for generations youngsters on both sides of the Channel have been enjoying folk-songs and games that have a strong family likeness, and often a common origin.

The 'Foreword' concludes with a suggestion that we, on our side, should make a tangible response to the idea so excellently carried out by Count de Croze; and the hope is expressed that some English enthusiast may be spurred to a like effort, 'so that what is now a one-sided affair may develop into the most delightful of junior ententes.'

It should be noted that each number in Book 1 can also be had separately. G. G.

PIANOFORTE

There seems no reason why composers should not turn their attention again to writing for pianoforte duet. Schubert wrote at least one great work in this medium; in recent times it has been used in a charming way by Debussy and Inglebrecht; and interest attaches to three duets by Harry Farjeon, which are issued singly by the Oxford University Press. One of the difficulties of the medium is that the allotment of a whole performer to the bottom half of the instrument leads to thickness of texture, and in Farjeon's first number this result is undeniably felt. The music has considerable charm, however, in spite of it, and there is an attractive second subject which contrasts admirably with the main theme. The second of the duets, a kind of Barcarolle, is probably the best of the three, and, with its effective changes of time and graceful lines, offers ample scope for musicianly playing. The third number is based on two pert little tunes, over a drone bass, which are afterwards cleverly developed in combined canon with amusing results. Altogether the duets are a welcome addition to a somewhat scanty répertoire. It should be stated that they are not pupil-and-teacher compositions, the difficulties, which are only very moderate, being equally distributed over both parts.

The same Press sends Sonatinas Nos. 2 and 3 by Willem Pijper, two interesting examples of modern pianoforte music. They are clever, with ingenious rhythmical patterns, a good deal of polytonality, and a kind of neat, pattering precision of movement which is attractive for a few minutes. Amusing and stimulating effects are to be seen in both Sonatinas, but the music does not grow on one: in fact, it very soon palls. The influence of Ravel is to be felt in some of the harmony, but there is no trace of Ravel's melodic power. There are, however, one or two brief glimpses of considerable beauty: such moments as the Molto sostenuto and following bars on p. 3 of Sonatina No. 2 are all too short-lived, and it seems as if the composer had suddenly detected himself in a sincere utterance, and put an early stop to it; we are quickly thrown back on the starvation diet of smart rhythms and atonality. One may easily be wrong about all this; the music may be sincere and beautiful; if so, I cannot appreciate it. It seems to me dull and tiring, and hopelessly conventional. All the usual effects are here, they have all been heard often before, and I am sick of them. I think the music insincere and empty, ugly without being strong, and, despite its facility, not really vital.

With Arnold Capleton it is different. He has the sincerity, but not the technical skill. All the same, considerable atmosphere is felt in his Meditation No. 5 (after Hans Andersen's story, 'The Bell'), and there is character in some of the themes, particularly that in B minor on page 2. The composer does not always succeed in giving unity to his work, and securing a steady flow of interest, and there are moments of uncertainty in the present example, which contains too much material for its length. But it is a sincere piece of music, and the best thing that has come, so far, from this writer.

The first number of Osborne Edmondston's 'From my Sketch-book' (Cary) raises hopes which are are not to be fulfilled. 'Study in Double-Notes' has restraint and quiet musicianship, and is not commonplace as are some of the later numbers. 'Canon' begins well, but the maintenance of the device puts too great a strain on the composer's resources, and the writing becomes stilted.

Curwen's send a biggish Toccata in F sharp minor by Francesco Ticciati, finely laid out for the instrument, and having a good deal of thematic interest. A strongly diatonic second subject is largely used in development, and gives character to the work. It is doubtful, however, whether there is enough real impulse behind it to carry through a movement of such length. There are, moreover, undeniable moments of hesitation, and some rather weak reminiscences of Franck. Brilliant performance of a work so well written for the pianoforte, however, could not be without interest, even if the music itself were much less vital than this is. The same publishers send Erik Chisholm's first publication, a set of 'Cameos,' eight short descriptive pieces of ambitious character and very considerable difficulty. The music is clearly the output of a strong imagination, working perhaps not entirely on musical lines. It is difficult to see in the titles of some of the pieces any essential relationship to the musical import. 'A Jewel from the Siderial Casket' might have had a dozen different, but equally apt, titles, and the same is true of 'The Mirror.' The composer obviously thinks in terms of the orchestra rather than the pianoforte, and he freely marks his music with such directions as 'brass tone,' 'quasi corni,' 'quasi vls,' 'quasi tromb.'—expressions which may convey certain suggestions of atmosphere to the player, but in reality can mean very little. There is undoubted power in such a piece as 'The Sweating Infantry,' and rhythmical energy in 'Procession of Crabs.' The composer knows, moreover, how to make a climax. But there is also considerable tendency to over-facility and magniloquence, weaknesses to which this sort of descriptive music, and the composer's obvious exuberance, are particularly liable. T. A.

EASY PIANOFORTE MUSIC

Four albums of pieces suitable for pupils of elementary grade come from Elkin. E. Markham Lee's Six Little Pieces under the title 'The Man in the Moon,' are not only attractive but are also of considerable educational value. Cantabile playing in either hand, staccato, marcato, are all called for. Brian Hope's Suite, 'In the days of Queen Bess,' should also make an easy appeal. It contains five pieces: 'The Assembling of the Courtiers' (good practice for firm chord playing and quick note repetition), 'Dream Minuet,' 'The Court Jester' (rotation and phrasing), 'Round the Maypole,' and 'At the Tournament.' Pieces by Cyril Scott make up two albums, for girls and boys respectively. The six pieces in the album for girls include 'Dreaming' (an excellent study in thirds), 'On the Swing' (rotation), 'Harebells' (delicate 'floating-off' in left hand), and 'The Poor Organ-grinder.' That for boys contains 'The Cossack,' 'By the Fishing-stream,' 'Christmas Morning' (introducing 'Good King Wenceslas'), 'Lazing,' and 'The Hunt.'

Additions to the Oxford Pianoforte Series, edited by A. Forbes Milne (Oxford University Press), are 'Chimes,' by B. Burrows, and 'Ten Little Pieces,' by E. Markham Lee. The latter are for primary grade, and are all within the compass of six notes. They are tuneful, and well adapted for the equal training of both hands. The two little pieces entitled 'Chimes' are more difficult. Though classed as elementary, they call for a wide range of tone (ppp to ff in the first piece—less than thirty bars). As studies in tone gradation, therefore, they should prove valuable, in addition to which pedalling—including half-pedalling—is required. For pupils of about lower division standard 'A Midsummer Phantasy,' by A. Herbert Brewer (Bosworth), may be recommended. These gracefully-written pieces will be found useful for developing lightness and freedom. Wide skips with the little finger of the left hand occur throughout the first number, 'Mutual Attraction.' The other pieces are 'Pandean Pipes,' 'Pixies,' and 'The Love Philtre' (Valse). G. G.

VIOLIN AND PIANOFORTE

In reading Miss Rebecca Clarke's 'Chinese Puzzle' and 'Midsummer Moon' (Oxford University Press), our first impression is one of relief and gratitude; for the new 'woman-composer' is at least free from the cloying sentimentality of the old. She seems quite impervious to the feelings of her predecessors. May nights and moonlight are no longer the source of gushing platitudes. The modern woman looks upon these things with the detachment of a scientist. She notes the phenomena which attracts us in them, and reproduces them—just a hint of the great silence, a hint or two of some fluttering bird, and, above all, atmosphere for which the musical symbols may be found in the works of Debussy and his followers. She has an eye for the picturesque, but it is an eye undimmed by a rising tear. She is too keen, too determined, and too interested to be easily moved; her ecstasy is of the mind rather than of the emotions. This is all so much pure gain. At worst she can only leave us cold; the others, when they really tried, could be loathsome. With the instinct for change and variety, with the flair for fashions which is woman's own gift, she reaches the goal while the more cautious male hesitates and counts the cost. In the end, perhaps, some males may strike deeper, but there is surely a good deal to be said for dashing brilliance and frank unconventionality. The worth of such music must depend to a great extent on one's powers of observation. Has the composer read the phenomena aright, and are they noted in just proportion, and in so individual a manner as to arouse and hold attention?—these are the questions the listener will ask. In Miss Clarke's case the answer, we fancy, will be a satisfactory one—at least, as regards 'Midsummer Moon.' 'Chinese Puzzle' seems rather superficial, and too reminiscent of other and earlier exotic experiments to be anything more than conventional unconventionality. B. V.

CHURCH MUSIC

S. S. Wesley's anthem, 'Let us now praise famous men' (Novello) — suitable for Commemoration, Founders' Day, &c.—has been edited by John E. West, whose suggestions, particularly in regard to the organ part, should help materially in securing an adequate performance. The work, which is straightforward in style, falls into a number of brief, contrasted sections: Chorus (Allegro con spirito); Recit. ad lib. (men's voices); soprano solo (Andante sostenuto); chorus (tenors and basses, unison); chorus (Allegro vivace). Under the same editorship appears the fine setting by Dr. Maurice Green (1696-1755) of 'Lord, how long wilt Thou be angry?' (Novello). This is a full anthem for five voices (S.S.A.T.B.). An impressive opening (Largo) leads into a vigorous Allegro ('Pour out Thine indignation'). This is followed by another slow section ('O remember not our old sins'), and a brief Vivace completes the work. It is of only moderate difficulty. A second set of Twelve Introits or Short Anthems by various composers (Novello) may be cordially recommended. The book contains twelve works—from two to three pages in length—well varied in style, and all quite easy to sing. Some are for unaccompanied singing, and provide good opportunities for choirs unable to cope with more extended and elaborate examples. The composers represented include Jacques Arcadelt, Philip Armes, Hugh Blair, Thomas Ford, Alfred R. Gaul, Alan Gray, F. A. Gore Ouseley, Palestrina, John Stainer, Sullivan, Christopher Tye, and S. S. Wesley. Altogether, this should prove a most useful volume. From the same publishers may also be obtained a simple setting of the Te Deum in free chant form, suitable for parish choirs and congregational singing, by Charles Harris, and a set of Supplementary Chants by Arthur G. Colburn. The chants, twenty-five in number, include well-written examples of the single, double, and quadruple (two) forms.

A new and welcome addition to the Tudor Church Music series (Oxford University Press) is Byrd's Motet, 'Haec Dies' ('This Glad Day'), edited, with an English text, by Dr. E. H. Fellowes. This joyous work is for six voices (S.S.A.T.T.B.). It is not easy, and needs in particular a choir capable of appreciating and interpreting the subtle rhythmic methods of the polyphonic school.

Two motets with Latin text appear under the editorship of H. B. Collins (J. & W. Chester). 'O Sacrum Convivium,' by Byrd, is a setting for four voices of the antiphon to the Magnificat at second Vespers of Corpus Christi. 'O virum mirabilem,' by Peter Philips, is a setting in honour of St. Francis of Assisi of the antiphon to the Magnificat at second Vespers of the Feast of St. Francis. It is for five voices (two trebles), and is not difficult.

Four anthems for unaccompanied singing, from the Oxford Series of Modern Anthems, edited by E. Stanley Roper (Oxford University Press), will repay examination by choirmasters. 'Easter,' by C. Armstrong Gibbs, is a setting of a sonnet ('Most Glorious Lord of Lyfe') by Edward Spenser (1552-99). The writing is interesting and effective and, in the main, quite easy to sing. Three Introits or short anthems, by Edward C. Bairstow—'I sat down under His shadow,' 'Jesu, the very thought of Thee,' and 'I will wash my hands in innocency'—are thoughtful, musicianly little works, which, brief though they are, call for intelligent and finished singing to do them full justice. Also for unaccompanied singing is the short anthem for four voices, 'Drop, drop, slow tears,' by Philip Tomblings (S.P.C.K.). This setting of words by Phineas Fletcher (1582-1650) is well-written, straightforward, diatonic music which should prove acceptable to choirs whose capabilities are only moderate.

From Curwen's comes a little book, 'Hymns of the Spirit,' by William H. Draper, Master of the Temple, derived (in part) from St. Francis of Assisi, and adapted with tunes for use in churches. There are ten hymns, and the choice of music is excellent. The composers represented include T. Campion (1567-1620), Christian G. Neefe (1777), Bach, Orlando Gibbons (arranged by G. Thalben Ball), Armstrong Gibbs, Isaac Smith, and J. B. Dykes.

Nine well-known hymns arranged in two or more parts for treble voices, by Basil Johnson (Year-Book Press), will be found useful for school purposes. There is plenty of interest in the lower part, which also benefits by the transposition of most of the tunes into a higher key—sometimes to the extent of a minor third. The last two are for S.S.A.A., and the arrangement has been skilfully made with the use of only an occasional note below middle C.

A second edition of 'A Book of Descants,' by Alan Gray (Cambridge University Press), is to hand. Dr. Gray has taken the opportunity of making the collection more complete, and has added seventeen descants. The additional tunes include such widely-known examples as 'Adeste fideles,' 'Aurelia,' 'Austria,' 'Croft's 136th,' 'Eventide,' 'O quanta qualia,' &c. Readers are reminded that in addition to the complete edition for the use of organists and choirmasters, the Descant parts are published in a separate volume. G. G.

THE CHILDREN'S MUSIC

By J. H. Elliot

The movement for stimulating the interest of children in great music is of such comparatively recent development that, for the present, it can be no more than experimental. Some years must elapse before the harvest—if harvest there is to be—is reaped and assessed at its true value. In the same way, some apologia is needed for any attempt to criticise existing methods or to suggest the lines upon which such methods should be reconstructed; for apart from deprecating movements which would be obviously deleterious, such criticism can rarely be other than mere theorising, even when it escapes the charge of being sheer subjective dogma. The following remarks, therefore, are offered in the full consciousness that, at best, they can be of no more than suggestive value.

It may surely be said, however, that sympathy for the child-mind should, first and foremost, be a guiding principle to govern the directorship of children's concerts; and perhaps the greatest bar to sympathetic treatment is that of attempting to instil at the outset the finer aspects of appreciation. It is true, of course, that the child is father of the man, but it is equally correct that 'when a child, I thought as a child,' and the more subtle and scientific aspects of musical study, which are a natural source of pleasure to the developed mind, may too easily become a burden to the child, however mild the form in which they may be presented. The little people should be inveigled into adoring music, rather than consciously educated into 'appreciating' it. Any taint of the 'lesson' in a children's concert is likely to be detrimental to the general spread of musical culture and, what is worse, a breach of ordinary human consideration. After all, the question of musical appreciation is one of degree rather than of fundamental characteristics: the more keenly developed the mind, the more acute becomes the selective faculty, and the more far-reaching the influence upon the whole life. Aural pleasure must form the foundation; only a matured sensibility will complete the structure and add the necessary reinforcements of emotionalism and intellectuality. The children, then, must realise at the outset that the introduction of great music to their lives is no part of their general education, as that term is popularly understood.

The question of the choice of music, again, is a vital consideration, and one laden with doubts and difficulties. There can be no hard and fast rule laid down with regard to the type of really good music most likely to appeal to the dawning sensibility. It is, however, essential that a strong appeal be established in the earliest stages. It is not sufficient to say, either directly or in effect, 'Here is a musical work. You may not understand it now, but you will later on.'* Potential pleasure means nothing to the child, and 'next week' is childhood's synonym for the end of eternity.

To return, however, to the question of the choice of fare. There is but small assistance to be obtained from the 'fairy-tale' type of music, a good deal of which is childlike only by association. 'Hänsel and Gretel,' for instance, is no more youthful in general style than 'Tannhäuser'; 'Ma Mère l'Oie' demands an adult taste, with some little bias toward modernism; 'Le Coq d'Or' is childlike only in so far as it is sometimes described as a 'fairy opera'; and grave doubts may be cast upon 'The Children's Corner' itself. In a word, extra-musical associations cannot be taken into consideration.

An investigation of general style, moreover, reveals many pit-falls. Chopin's exquisite fantasy, at first sight a key to the heart of the child, is found upon closer examination to rest partially upon exotic passion and warm sensuality—attributes happily foreign to the fresh, untrammelled mentality of childhood. Nor is simplicity necessarily childlike. The simplicity of Bach in many of his smaller works is not that of the child: it is born of mature breadth of mind, and contains subtleties which are beyond the childish comprehension. The naïveté of Franck, again, is that of contemplative idealism—a far cry from the ingenuous freshness of the baby mind. The miraculous simplicity of Mozart, even, is not always attuned to infantile needs. One has difficulty in imagining the child who could really appreciate, for example, the 'Figaro' Overture—notwithstanding the reference to 'Three Blind Mice.' Subtlety in any form would appear to be a fatal bar to full understanding by the child.

The music of emotion, again, is unlikely to grip the infantile mind. If the head be undeveloped, so also is the heart. The joys and troubles of childhood, assuredly, are relatively as real and as great as those of the adult; but they have no such violence of emotional content, nor are they born of the same breadth of experience. Tchaikovsky is the composer of Romantic adolescence and Beethoven of Romantic maturity; Romantic childhood is non-existent.

It is possibly an arbitrary matter, indeed, to attempt to define the musical sensibility of the child. If the claims of both head and heart be denied, it would appear that we are reduced at once to a foundation of sand. Yet is there not a definition of music which expresses to perfection the view-point of the child? 'Arabesques of Sound' is surely that definition, disregarding as it does the particular claims of intellect, emotion, and theoretical æsthetics. It is of small use to appeal to faculties which, if present, are no more than tiny seedlings. Intellectuality and violent emotionalism are therefore beyond the pale, and sheer sensuality is happily impossible; but the conception of music as an attractive combination of sounds—or, if you will, 'linked sweetness long drawn out'—is essentially that of the child.

To the child, a Mozart Adagio can never make its appeal, as it may to the adult, as a meticulous pattern, an exquisite embodiment of objective beauty, or as an expression of the human tragedy every whit as poignant, in its own way, as the music of Amfortas. Its appeal cannot be other than that of sheer attractiveness, creating in the dawning sensibility an impression approximating to that of coloured glass or delicate trinketry.

* 'But,' it is urged, 'the fifth Symphony and other "grown-up" music has many times been hailed with storms of applause by audiences of children.' But is the evidence conclusive? Doubtless there are many instances of appreciative precocity, particularly among the elder students, but an outburst of apparent enthusiasm may possibly—and, in the opinion of the writer, very probably—be the dutiful outcome of a panegyric delivered prior to performance. The child has a natural desire to please, and it is dangerous to presume too far upon what may well be the outcome of a lovable trait in the childish character.

If, then, it be futile to expect the finer elements of appreciation, it is sheer folly to demand them; and pre-performance lecturettes which stress these aspects—be they of form, emotional content, or æsthetical theory—no matter how attractively presented, are in grave danger of diverting the undeveloped judgment into a cul de sac which, unencumbered, it would ultimately view in proper relation to other aspects of musical thought. The principle of placing the child-mind on its mettle, and presenting it with problems slightly ahead of its grasp, though psychologically sound, may too easily be overdone.

Even unsupported by verbal comment, the presentation of musical subtlety argues the same tendency to ask from the child more than it is able to give. Those who would present the Air on the G string or the French Suite in G as an introduction to Bach, must have forgotten their own childhood. The mighty Johann is nowhere real food for the child. If a reason be demanded, one must risk misunderstanding, and point out that Bach at no time sheds those qualities which endear him particularly to the scientific mind. The adult brain can penetrate those qualities, appreciate them for what they are, and yet see beyond; but they stand as an opaque wall between the child-mind and the intrinsic beauty of the music.

The same principle must also be broadly extended to all the masters from whom maturity gleans delight across vistas of intellectuality or violent emotionalism. Only in rare moments is the best of composers such as Tchaikovsky, Brahms, or Wagner acceptable to the infant mind. Modernism, again, even in the mild and naïve terms of a Franck or a d'Indy, is yet the outcome of historical experience—a thing unknown to the child, and having but the merest parallel in his consciousness. Either it will fail to hold, or, even worse, will grip too strongly, and create an exoticism and precociousness which will ultimately result in a half-view of musical æsthetics.

Nor should the undeveloped mind be confused with the undeveloped art. The art stands complete (relatively), while the mind is yet in the making. To present the old masters—no matter how great their charm for maturity, which, having absorbed the complete, may correctly apprehend the partial—to the child-mind is akin to presuming that the blind may successfully lead the blind.

Yet it is in the historical aspect of music that one may discover a parallel which will conceivably help to lighten the problem. Should we discover the moment of the birth of the perfect art—perfect, that is, as we now understand perfection—when it issued from the womb of the centuries, we have possibly discovered some key to its relation with the new-born mind of the child; and that birth-date, surely, is not far to seek. Whence comes the glorious progeny of the perfected art if not from the loins of him who, collating the idioms of the centuries, applied his supreme craftsmanship and mighty inspiration to the final settlement of their artistic troubles? Not for nothing has Johann Sebastian received the homage due to the founder of a new order.

The very qualities which effected that massive foundation were, however, bars to the spontaneous outflux of sheer naïveté in terms of the new idiom; only when freed from the necessity of invention in the field of basic science could music spring forth, childlike, in the facile prattle of its new state. Joseph Haydn, taking wholesale the discoveries of J. S. and K. P. E., not to mention the pioneers of homophony, becomes the first—and on the whole the most perfect—embodiment of passionless childhood in terms of great music. 'Arabesques of Sound' may perhaps more forcefully be applied to the music of Haydn than to that of any other great master. Mozart, following upon his heels, becomes first a colourful twin, and then, urged by the claims of evolution and consummate genius, and freed from the irk of scientific and even technical invention, stealthily attains a subtlety which leads to an early maturity—even reacting, at length, upon him from whom he had learned.

To pursue the fanciful parallel, the early Beethoven and Schubert approach more nearly to adolescence; the former, perhaps, representing the growing mind and the latter, coming beneath the first pale shadow of Romanticism, the dawning emotions. The masterful genius of the one leapt swiftly to maturity of mind and heart; the other remained to the last the tender embodiment of awakening adolescence.

In Mendelssohn, the childhood of music, now a whit precocious and inclined to the idiom of maturity, was still further prolonged—a trifle longer, possibly, than it could well afford to be. With Schumann, its adolescence was firmly established—yet not so irrevocably as to be unable to recapture the naïve charm of the preceding decade. After that, experience brought in its wake the inevitable self-consciousness of intellect and heart. The awakened passions and the developed mind, long foreshadowed, now broke forth without restraint, submerging all trace of the old sweet simplicity. Maturity—now dynamic, now keen and incisive, now florid and artificial—swept irrevocably forward. The childhood of music was gone for ever.

The late years of the 18th, and the turn of the 19th century—were not these the halcyon days of musical childhood, as attractive to the adult as to the little people whose future pleasure (it is presumed) we have undertaken to ensure?

One final word, however. The child and the adult are not even here on complete equality; the presence or absence of the selective faculty marks a sharp line of distinction between the developed and the undeveloped. But in dealing with the child, it is perhaps more vitally necessary to instil a love of artistry in style rather than attempt to create at once a faculty for the recognition of intrinsic (relative) merit. The seed to be sown must not be confused with the harvest to be reaped. It is possible to sow Rossini and to reap Bach; to sow Bach may lead to a harvest of Transatlantic jazz.

All of which, doubtless, is vague and fanciful theorising—but not, conceivably, without some small suggestive value.

JOSEF RHEINBERGER IN PRIVATE LIFE

By Andrew de Ternant

The private life of Josef Rheinberger was not one of romantic episodes or striking adventures, but rather that of a typical hard-working South German citizen, fond of home surroundings, and who had the misfortune to be troubled with continuous ill-health.

Rheinberger often said that his intellectual horizon had been much broadened since he married the widow Frau von Hoffnass, and he strongly advised all intelligent musicians to select their life-partner from one of the arts or literature. Before his marriage, when he had done with music for the day there was very little to interest him in the world. Later, as a result of conversations with his wife, he not only became a student of literature, but was also deeply interested in the art of painting. Some of his Organ Sonatas were inspired by the sacred pictures of the early Flemish and Italian painters in the Munich churches. His wife, a literary woman of distinction, had been a teacher of German in an English school at Sydenham for nearly five years. It was she who first directed Rheinberger's attention to the 'grandest of all European literatures, which was an unbroken golden period from Chaucer to Tennyson.' Rheinberger always regretted that he had not taken up the study of the English language when he was a boy, but his wife, who had a competent knowledge of it, supplied the deficiency to some extent, by imparting what she had acquired and by selecting for him the best available German translations of English works. After his fortunate marriage, he used to say he had never known what it was to pass a dull day. He had heard and read that England was not a musical nation, but he did not believe a word of it. There was music in every page of Chaucer, Spencer, Shakespeare, and the Elizabethan dramatists, even through the medium of not always correct German translations. The English musicians who had sought his acquaintance were also not lacking in musical enthusiasm, and were in addition cultured gentlemen.

It was Thomas Wingham who first suggested to Rheinberger the idea of arranging his Organ Sonatas as pianoforte duets. One day Wingham was invited to dinner by the Rheinbergers. Wingham was an old friend of Frau Rheinberger, and, in fact, knew her soon after the death of her first husband. He was the music teacher at the school at Sydenham where she taught German language and literature. Rheinberger could make very little of Wingham's attempts at speaking German, and his wife acted as interpreter. After dinner, Frau Rheinberger asked Wingham to play to her husband portions of a Symphony of his she had heard at a Crystal Palace Saturday Concert in 1872, when on a visit to her old English school at Sydenham. Wingham modestly declined, on the plea that he had 'forgotten all about it,' and suggested that Rheinberger and he should play instead a couple of the master's Organ Sonatas as pianoforte duets. Rheinberger said that was impossible, because such arrangements were not in existence. 'I will show you how to bring them into existence,' replied Wingham, and copies of the Sonatas being brought into the room, he requested the composer to take charge of the pedal part, and the pair rattled away with the Sonatas duet-wise. Frau Rheinberger was delighted with the experiment. She said she had discovered 'new beauties' in them in that form, and would never rest until Rheinberger had arranged the complete set as pianoforte duets.

The Rheinbergers, though strict Roman Catholics, had a large number of Protestant and Jewish friends. As they themselves never partook of meat on Friday, they thought it unwise to invite their friends to luncheon or dinner on that day. Monday and Thursday, consequently, became the selected days for invitations. The Rheinbergers' house parties were never very large, excepting at Christmas time. When any friend or new acquaintance was expected at dinner, Rheinberger himself always superintended the culinary arrangements. The master prided himself upon being a good cook, and was proud of the fact that his principal instructor had been Charles Franqueville, formerly a chef in the service of Napoleon III., who was interned at Munich during the Franco-German war. Franqueville was also a good amateur musician, and had a fine baritone voice. Rheinberger said his interpretations of songs from Auber's and Adolphe Adam's operas were incomparable. The fame of Rheinberger's little dinners soon reached the Royal Palace at Munich, and the King of Bavaria was anxious to learn the secret of the feasts. The composer divulged the name of his instructor, and the French chef was soon offered an engagement at the Palace. Franqueville was anxious to return to France, but after some persuasion on the part of the Rheinbergers gave way. Rheinberger often said that at one stroke he retained within reach a dear musical friend and famous instructor in the art of dining, while his king had the greatest chef in the German Empire.

Rheinberger had some ability as an elocutionist and as an amateur actor. He was fond of reciting Byron's 'Manfred,' while playing Schumann's incidental music at the pianoforte. It is also said that, under an assumed name, he appeared more than once in the part of Bottom in the German version of 'A Midsummer Night's Dream,' when performed at the Munich Royal Theatre. He was much in request as a comical old man in the charades written by his gifted wife at Christmas time. The boys and girls likewise considered him to be the best and most generous Father Christmas of their day, and his handsome presents were much valued by the children of Munich.

Rheinberger had no children of his own, but he did not forget the many poorer married folk with families, and did everything in his power to help them. During the winter months poor boys and girls were provided with strong boots and warm clothing; in the summer he entertained three hundred in six parties of fifty to a 'Festival in the woods.' Rheinberger and his wife superintended all the arrangements, and music and dancing were prominent features, but he always gave instructions that 'not a note of Rheinberger should be heard.' It was a treat to the poor children of the Bavarian capital from 'Josef Rheinberger, the private citizen of Munich,' and not from 'Rheinberger the composer and professor at the conservatorium.'

Rheinberger before his marriage had been fond of angling, and occasionally indulged in shooting game, or in fox-hunting, but his wife, who achieved some success as a humanitarian lecturer, soon put a stop to her husband's delight in such sports.

After the death of his wife, Rheinberger became a changed man. He seldom asked anyone to his house, and himself nearly always declined invitations. He generally had his meals at a restaurant close to the Munich Opera House, and afterwards passed an hour or two looking at people whom he thought happier than himself. On returning to his lonely home, before rest he read some volume of poetical works which were the favourites of his wife.

Rheinberger had much experience as a musical examiner in Bavaria and South Germany generally, but as he grew older he became more and more convinced that the timid and nervous, however gifted, had little chance in such contests. At the time of his death he was engaged on a scheme for the reform of the whole system.

The Musician's Bookshelf

Carlo Gesualdo, Prince of Venosa: Musician and Murderer.' By Cecil Gray and Philip Heseltine.

[Kegan Paul and Curwen, 8*s.* 6*d.*]

Gesualdo is here paid the tribute of a comprehensive study, biographical and critical. Of this Neapolitan composer of the late madrigalian period, it is safe to say that hardly anyone in England had heard until Mr. Heseltine took him up, though, of course, the busy German historians had not missed him. Gesualdo's progressions displeased Burney, and 'Grove' actually omits mention of the famous murders.

The murders are Mr. Gray's, the madrigals Mr. Heseltine's concern. Gesualdo was born about 1560, of a noble family. As a youth he was wrapped up in music. He married, in 1586, his cousin, Donna Maria d'Avalos—less from personal inclination, Mr. Gray suggests, than family exigencies. She was twenty-one, and already had been twice married.

On the night of October 16, 1590, Gesualdo and his servants murdered her, together with her paramour, the Duke of Andria, in her bed in the Sansevero Palace at Naples. The affair, occurring as it did in the heart of aristocratic Neapolitan society, caused a great stir. By the standards of the day the husband was considered justified, and there was no legal pursuit. Public opinion, however, favoured the luckless lovers, as is clear from the abundant contemporary documents which Mr. Gray has sought out with diligence. Gesualdo, indeed, for all his artistic gifts and intellectual enlightenment (he was a patron of Tasso), was unsympathetic. Studying his portrait, Mr. Gray reads > . . . in these long, narrow, slanting eyes, with their delicate but strongly-marked eyebrows, in the small, puckered, and sensual mouth, aquiline nose, and slightly receding forehead and chin, a character of the utmost perversity, cruelty, and vindictiveness. At the same time it is a weak rather than a strong face—almost feminine, in fact. Physically he is the very type of the degenerate descendant of a long aristocratic line.

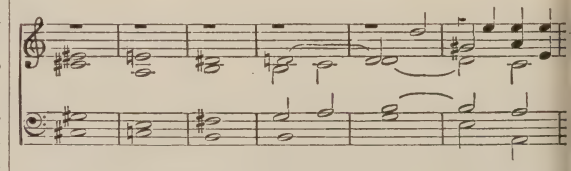
A year after the murder he came into the title Prince of Venosa, and in 1594 he married again, and went to live at the brilliant Court, at Ferrara, of his new wife's kinsman, Alfonso II., Duke of Este. Music, along with all the arts and elegancies, was cultivated with passion on that charming scene. At Ferrara, in 1594, were printed Gesualdo's first two books of madrigals, which were followed there by Book 3, in 1595, and Book 4, without date, but presumably 1596. Later works were printed at Naples, Genoa, and Gesualdo, the Prince's country place, where he seems to have spent his rather unhappy latter years. He died in 1613, and the family became extinct.

Mr. Gray has built his biography on a solid documentary basis. It is, then, all the more regrettable that in an aberration of judgment he should have disfigured his work with a piece of flippancy—an essay, 'Gesualdo as a Murderer,' affecting to discuss the 1590 crime as a work of art. That crime—interesting as a horridly coloured picture of 16th-century Italian life—spoke for itself; and De Quincey's clothes do not fit Mr. Gray.

Mr. Heseltine follows with some sixty pages of musical criticism—and very good criticism it is. If we had, with Mr. Gray, allowed ourselves to become too engrossed in Gesualdo's domestic drama, we are rebuked by Mr. Heseltine on p. 128 thus:

> We must beware of reading autobiography into his works, as Keiner does when he suggests that Gesualdo turned to music as a consolation after the death of his first wife, and that the mood of melancholy which pervades the greater part of his work was the direct outcome of that tragic circumstance. Gesualdo was a pure creative artist, and the prevailing mood of his music was conditioned by his temperament, not by external events.

Gesualdo's hour was the sunset of the old polyphonic music. Among all the restless spirits of the transitional period, he is remarkable for his daring harmonic experiments. He was an accomplished keyboard player, and no doubt the chromaticism of his madrigals was prompted by his instrumental practice. To explain the origins of this chromatic style the author retraces the history of musica ficta—and a very readable summary he makes of it. By 1611, Gesualdo was writing such progressions as:



And Mr. Heseltine sees Wagner and Delius foreshadowed.

Gesualdo was not the man to make the most (or anything, indeed, but a little) of the possibilities in this extension of the language of music. The main stream of music took a different course altogether. But now at last his talent has its look-in, and our author ventures to compare him with Berlioz, Moussorgsky, and Delius, and even with later explorers:

> Gesualdo was reaching out not towards tonality, in the academic sense of the word, but beyond it. At his best he is very much nearer to the modern composer who sets in juxtaposition, at the dictates of his inner ear, chords which are theoretically unrelated.

The book lacks an index, and the musical examples are printed in an excessively small reduction. C.

'Natural Piano-Technic.' Vol. 2. 'School of Weight-Touch.' By Rudolf M. Breithaupt.

[Leipsic: C. F. Kahnt Nachfolger.]

This book—which may be obtained through Edward W. Organ, Acocks Green, Birmingham—is described on the title-page as 'a practical preliminary School of Technic, teaching the natural manner of playing by utilising the weight of the arm.' It is intended as a practical supplement to the author's theoretical work (Vol. 1).

The first half of the book is a very clear exposition of the four most important actions concerned: (1) The longitudinal oscillation of the arm (swinging), (2) extension of the forearm, (3) rolling of forearm, (4) free oscillation of the fingers. In the chapter dealing with the first of these actions, we read:

> Active strength of the fingers, active strength of the wrist, are erroneous, misleading ideas, for which we must substitute those of natural and efficacious energy: energy of the shoulder, of the muscles of the upper-arm, and the weight of the whole arm. Technic is in reality not much more than alternate up-swing and down-swing of the weight. . . All thrusting, pushing, knocking, percussion of any kind—through the intermediary of any single part of the physical playing-apparatus, forearm or hand—must be avoided. . . The so-called wrist-stroke must be abolished.

Similarly, in the chapter on 'Staccato,' we read that staccato is the result of the whole arm oscillating: it is not produced by wrist-action, and neither hand nor finger participates actively:

In rapid movements the staccato closely resembles the tremolando (quick repeat of the key), so closely, indeed, as to have led to the erroneous conclusion that staccato is produced by wrist-action, and is classed and taught as such. But in ordinary staccato, with the natural rebound of the whole arm, as one mass, released, neither hand nor finger participates actively in the movement. With this fact falls the old-style wrist-technic. . . . The hand rebounds, trembles, shakes, because the whole arm is set vibrating. An isolated motion of the hand in the wrist-joint does not take place. . . . The tremolando of the hand in staccatissimo is the result of a free vibration of the arm, not the cause.

The writer admits that finger-staccato is possible, but holds the opinion that it is not indispensable, and that it is not nearly so delicate nor so reliable as arm-staccato.

In the following chapter, 'Free Oscillation of the Fingers,' obstinate and continual drilling of each finger separately is strongly condemned, as is the use of all finger-action without weight:

As long as the fingers participate in the oscillation of the whole arm and hand, they may do anything; but the moment they perform their movements without participation of arm and hand, everything is wrong.

In the section on 'Combined Rotary Motions,' the writer makes it clear that in scale-playing he has no use for the old method of passing under and over of the thumb and fingers: he would join up the successive hand-groups purely by rotation of the forearm. He claims that the exercises and rotary motions discussed in this chapter make all 'nonsensical' special scale-studies superfluous, and furnish the key to the problem of 'velocity.'

On the subject of 'tone-colour' in pianoforte playing, the opinion is expressed that all forms and manner of percussion (touch) differ only in intensity:

The modulatory capacity of the tone is dependent solely upon its power of gradation, so that in speaking of the 'formation of the tone' and 'timbre' on the pianoforte, where the tone is already made, we can only refer to a graduating of the tonal intensity; for we cannot really speak of a diversity of 'tone-colour' and of 'forming a tone' which is already formed.

The book is well produced, and contains numerous photographic illustrations, drawings, and musical examples.

G. G.

'The Borderland of Music and Psychology.' By Frank Howes.

[Kegan Paul and Curwen, 6*s*.]

Do not take alarm at the last word of this book's title. Its pages contain a good deal of interest about music, by a practical and lively musician.

As for psychology, laymen often wonder if there really is such a thing. No doubt for psychologists it has a certain reality—much as astrology had for astrologers before the time of astronomy. We risk the impudence of suggesting that the McDougalls and the Freuds are Chaldeans, doomed to obliteration in the light of the Psychonomy of the wiser future.

Considering that we in the 20th century have about as much of a notion of the working of our minds as Nebuchadnezzar had of that of the solar system, it is not surprising that Mr. Howes starts more hares than he catches. The virtue of the book lies not so much in solutions, as in the fresh presentation of numerous subjects for argument. Any chapter and almost any page would give a good start to an evening of a musical debating club.

In the early part of the book the author ranks high among the factors of our pleasure in music the satisfaction of being one of a crowd. Only a mad Bavarian king would want a 'Ring' performance all to himself. No one but would feel the Trooping of the Colour or a Test Match to be shorn of gaiety if he were the sole spectator. Similarly at a choral festival or a symphony concert, the more the merrier. But is not that largely because of a reasonable sense of economy? Empty seats at a concert look wasteful.

Mr. Howes would suggest that the relatively poor fun to be had out of wireless and gramophoned music comes from the lack of a vibrating, sympathetic crowd round about:

Æsthetic boredom always hovers close over either the desiccated or the condensed forms of music, because the human contacts are remote and precarious.

Of incomparably more account one would have said to be the sheer musical deficiencies of these popular scientific toys. Who, playing in a string quartet, cares whether or no there are listeners? There must be any number of musical persons whose chief joy is the solitary strumming of the '48' and Beethoven's Sonatas—persons who would not on any account play to an audience.

In the chapter 'Emotion in Music,' Mr. Howes tackles some well-known and always engaging æsthetic problems. Honest thought has gone to the writing, which would earn the author a degree in musical criticism if there were such an award to be had. The next chapter is on Rhythm. It contains, on p. 96, a curiosity in the form of a hymn-tune timed note by note, in 100ths of a second, as played by four organists. It interestingly shows what values four nominally equal notes in a bar may have in practice.

There is a good discussion of Applause, though its scientific weight in pure psychology may not be very considerable. Performers must no longer flatter themselves that applause is primarily a recognition of their skill. As much is certain from the fact that there is always some applause for a performance, no matter how bad—for performances which, if applause were a nicely critical expression, would end in dead silence. No; an audience primarily applauds because it has been sitting still for a time, and takes the first opportunity for some physical movement:

These bodily movements must be regarded as vestigial remnants of a lower stage of evolution, when the whole energy of the mind was devoted to practical (i.e., biological) ends.

Observe here, by the way, the assumed superiority in the evolutionary scale of the musical critic: for musical critics, as is well known, never applaud.

The herd instinct is said to encourage applause. If a round is started by claqueurs, it is taken up innocently and imitatively by the general. Purely out of gregarious imitativeness? I should say No; but rather that the average onlooker is often uncertain when his applause is permissible. Some one gives the hint, and he joins in—sometimes from genuine enthusiasm, much more often from a kindly sympathy with the performer, who seems usually to him to be working desperately hard for disproportionately small effect.

Coming to the peculiar violence and unreason of Gilbert and Sullivan audiences (and he might have said, too, the typical Albert Hall audience), the author sighs over it as 'something of a mystery, similar to mob violence committed by respectable citizens, and [it] must find its explanation in the same direction.'

Observing the common man's physical need to applaud, Mr. Howes deprecates the growing custom of performing symphonies and even concertos without a break, not to speak of whole Acts at the opera. The reason for the custom (which has our blessing) lies not in applause itself so much as in the English public's outrageous abuse of it. They mean it kindly, but when applause is permitted it is commonly prolonged in a ridiculous and unmannerly way. What sense is there in calling on a pianist to bow ten times after the first movement of a concerto? It cannot be a primary human need, for you do not see such excesses in other countries. At the opera there are indeed spaces in Verdi and Mozart for applause, but we deprecate their use, for there is no knowing then when the music will be allowed to start again.

Mr. Howes's chapters on Inspiration and Taste likewise contain good things, inviting discussion by the argumentatively inclined. C.

'The Catholic Schools Hymn-Book: Accompaniment.'

[London: Catholic Truth Society, 3*s.* 6*d.*]

Less than two years ago a strong committee, under the chairmanship of the Very Rev. Canon Driscoll, handed over the publication of a 'Catholic Schools Hymn-Book' to the Rev. J. Driscoll, S.J. At the outset it may be well to say that this work was not intended to supersede or compete with any hymn-book at present in use. It was meant as a work for colleges and schools, containing a certain definite number of good pieces of sacred music—plainchant, hymns, &c.—to form a basis for the Religious Syllabus of Catholic Schools, with a view to building up a national tradition of congregational singing. The success of the work (words and melody only) has been phenomenal—such indeed that the Committee wisely entrusted the bringing out of suitable accompaniments to Dr. Ralph Dunstan, whose polyphonic Masses have elicited the highest praise from musical experts and the Vatican authorities.

The present work is in two sections, viz., Plainchant and English hymns. Dr. Dunstan is responsible for the accompaniments to the Plainchant Masses, Responses, Benediction Services, and Latin hymns, while Sir Richard Terry's arrangements in the 'Westminster Hymnal' (transposed to suitable keys) are retained for the second section. Dr. Dunstan is to be heartily congratulated on his admirable settings of the Plainchant, arranged to suit organ, harmonium, or pianoforte. Nothing can be better than the setting of the Missa de Angelis, and the Latin hymns are reverently treated, and withal not difficult. Particularly good is the Te Deum (Tonus Simplex). Some of the ascriptions (e.g., 'O Salutaris,' No. 5, Duguet; Kyrie (de Angelis), 14th-16th centuries), need revision, but this is a very minor point. The book itself is a splendid foundation for sound Catholic music in schools and colleges, and the Plainchant transcriptions conform in all respects to the Vatican edition.

W. H. G.-F.

Teachers of class-singing will find an admirably planned course of work in McDougall's 'Sight-reading and Ear-training Primer,' by D. C. Walker (McDougall's Educational Co.). It is published in two books—Book 1, Sol-fa; Book 2, Staff. A teacher's edition to each book is also issued. G. G.

BOOKS RECEIVED

[Mention in this list neither implies nor precludes review in a future issue.]

'Journal of the Folk-Song Society, No. 30.' Taunton: Barnicott & Pearce.

'Der Orgelbauer Gottfried Silbermann.' By Ernst Flade. Pp. 162. Leipsic: Fr. Kistner & C. F. W. Siegel.

'Annual Report of the National Institute for the Blind, 1925-26.' From the Institute, 224-6-8, Great Portland Street, W.1.

Gramophone Notes

By 'DISCUS'

COLUMBIA

Grieg's incidental music to 'Sigurd Jorsalfar' has never had the success it deserves, owing to the great popularity of the 'Peer Gynt.' Logically, of course, the vogue of the latter ought to have sent people to 'Sigurd Jorsalfar,' but things don't work out that way in the musical world. It is good to find three of its movements recorded—Prelude, Intermezzo, and 'Homage' March. All three are typical Grieg, the last-named being a particularly fine, sonorous March. There is a hint of 'Ase's Death' in the Intermezzo. The recording is of the 'new' kind, and is not quite uniformly successful, as is inevitable at present. There is an occasional hollowness in the bass, and some over-keen tone at the top. The Intermezzo is rather vague. There is great power in the March, and some fine brass effects. The players are the London Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Georg Schnéevoigt (L1748-9).

The reproduction is better as a whole, I think, in the record of a couple of extracts from 'Le Coq d'Or'—Russian Dance and Bridal Procession—though there is still some stridency. Two capital, lively movements these, well played by the B.B.C. Wireless Symphony Orchestra, under Percy Pitt (9101).

Those who enjoy military tattoos are well provided for in a couple of records of the Aldershot Searchlight Tattoo. It is not clear whether these records were made at the actual Tattoo, or at a studio performance—I fancy the latter. Anyhow, they are jolly—even exciting—conglomerations of popular music, some good, some only so-so (9109-10).

Inevitably a special interest attaches to records of the Handel Festival. They have been announced with such a flourish of trumpets, and reviewed so enthusiastically, that I put forward my findings with diffidence. Judging the result in cold blood, then, I feel that the job is too big for recording in its present stage. Perhaps a first-rate reproduction will always be beyond the gramophone, for it cannot

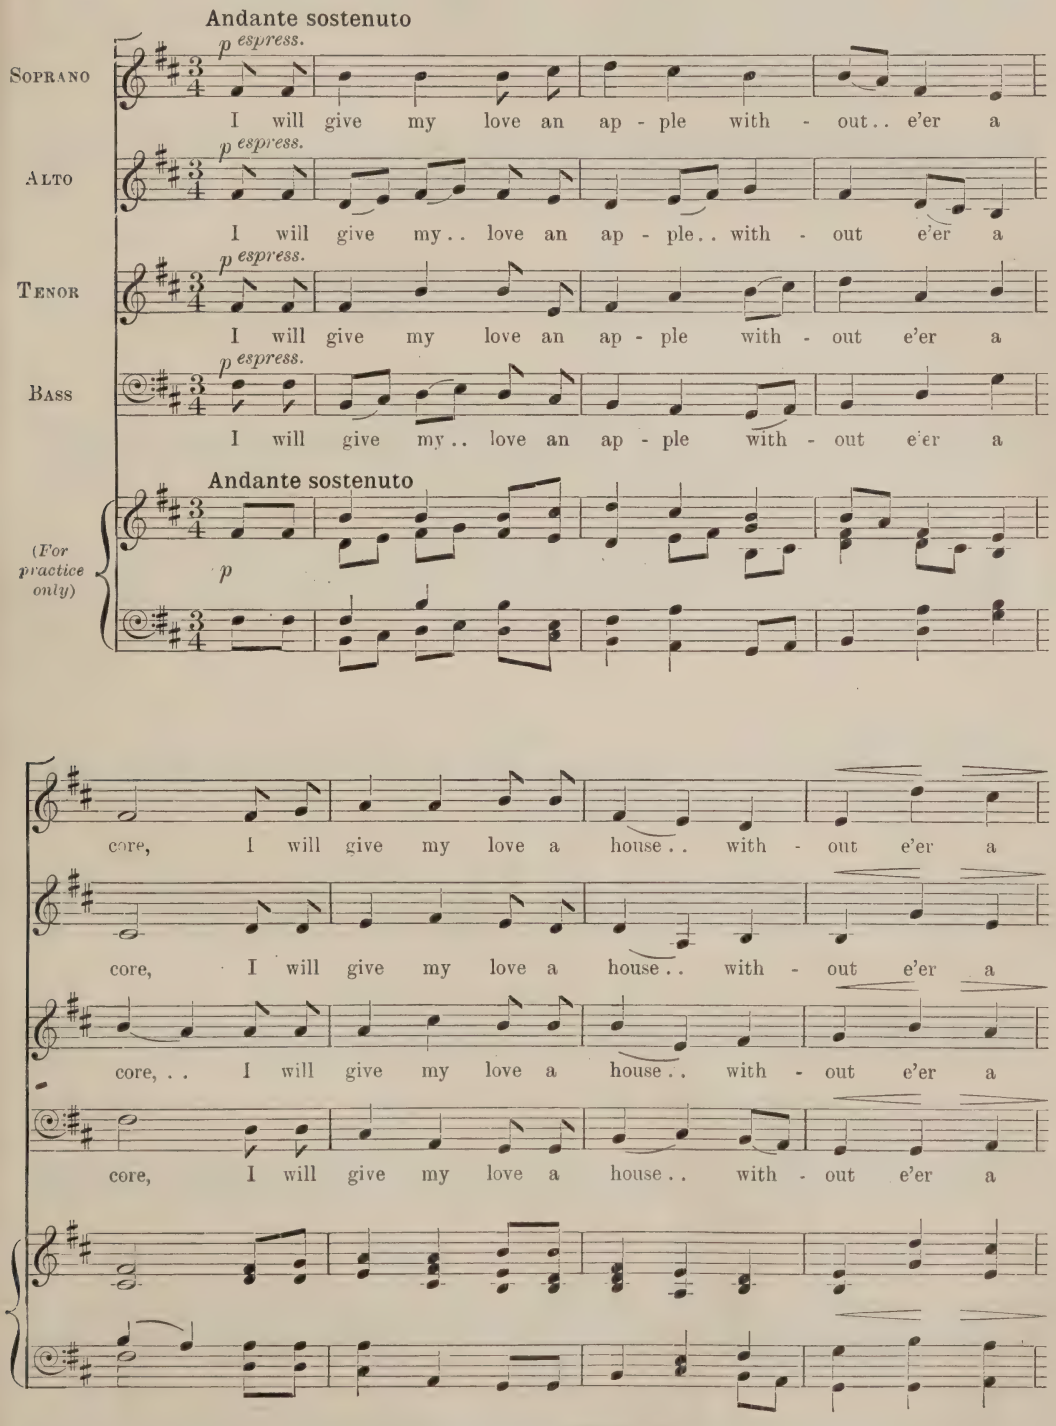
(Continued on page 821.)

I will give my love an Apple

FOLK SONG

Collected by H. E. D. Hammond Arranged for Mixed Voices by Michael Mullinar

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited: New York: THE H. W. GRAY CO., Sole Agents for the U.S.A.



Andante sostenuto
p espress.
Soprano
I will give my love an ap - ple with - out .. e'er a
Alto
I will give my .. love an ap - ple .. with - out e'er a
Tenor
I will give my love an ap - ple with - out e'er a
Bass
I will give my .. love an ap - ple with - out e'er a
Andante sostenuto
(For practice only)
p core, I will give my love a house .. with - out e'er a core, I will give my love a house .. with - out e'er a core, .. I will give my love a house .. with - out e'er a core, I will give my love a house .. with - out e'er a

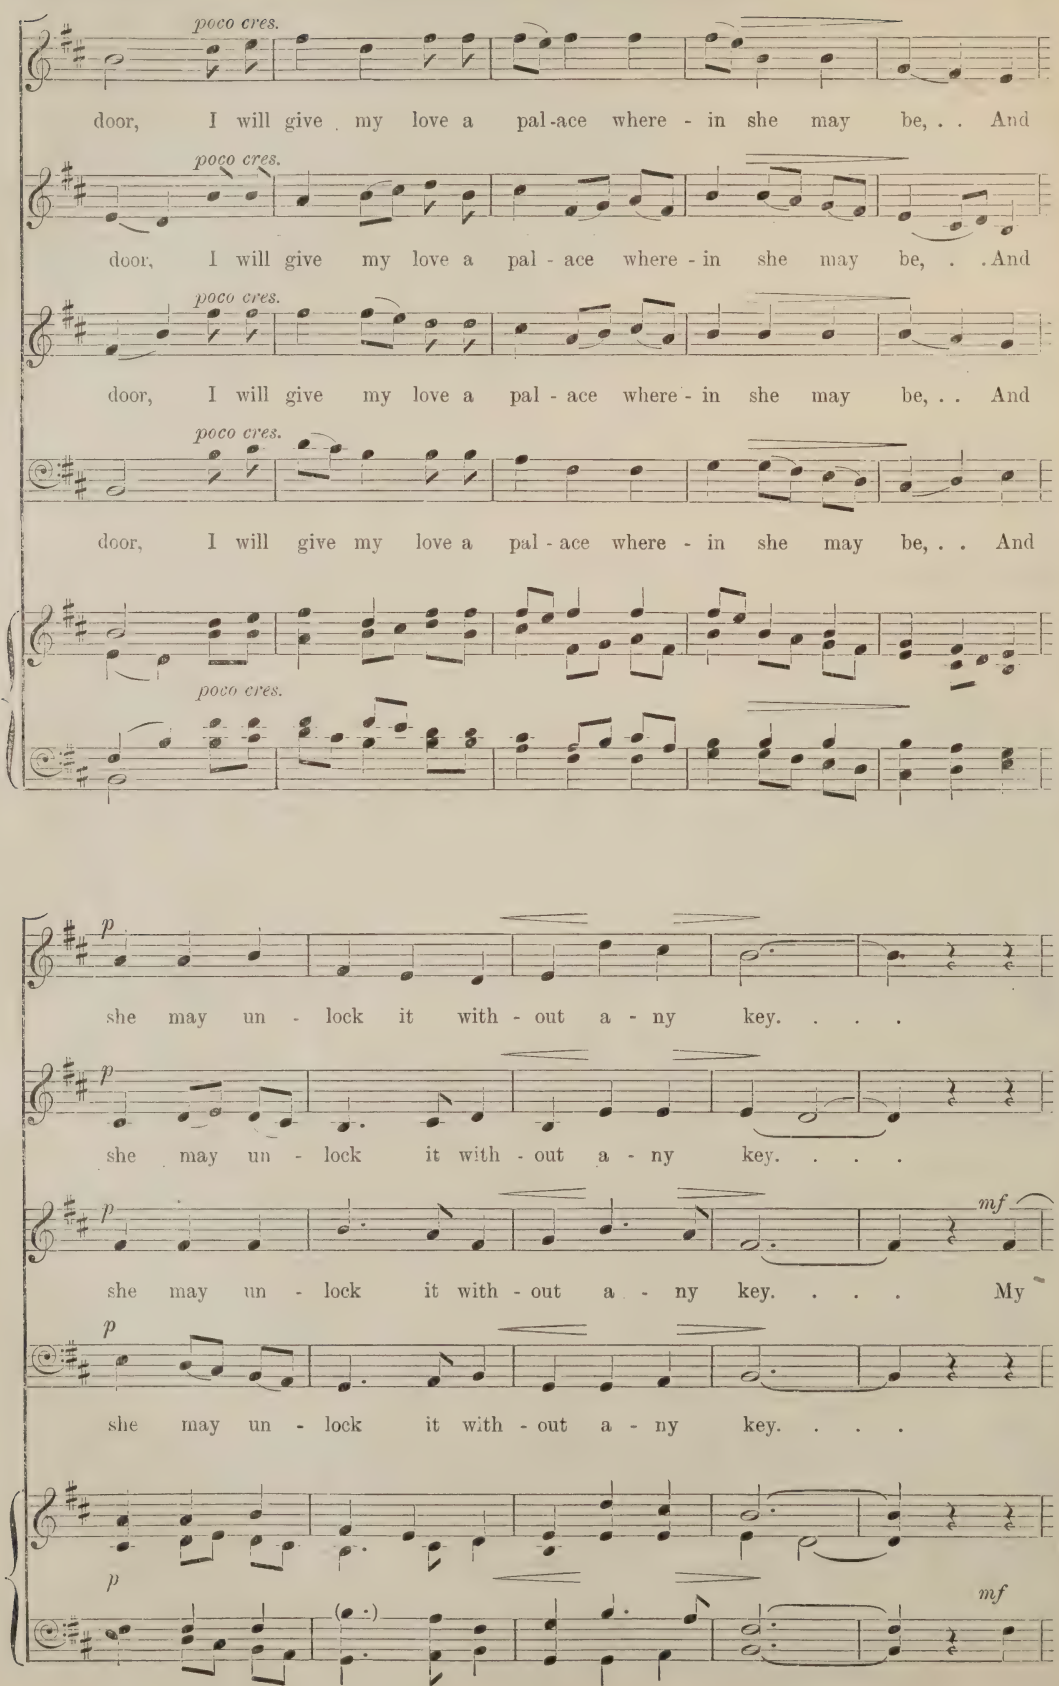
Copyright, 1926, by Novello and Company, Limited



poco cres.
door, I will give my love a pal-ace where-in she may be, . . And poco cres.
door, I will give my love a pal-ace where-in she may be, . . And poco cres.
door, I will give my love a pal-ace where-in she may be, . . And poco cres.
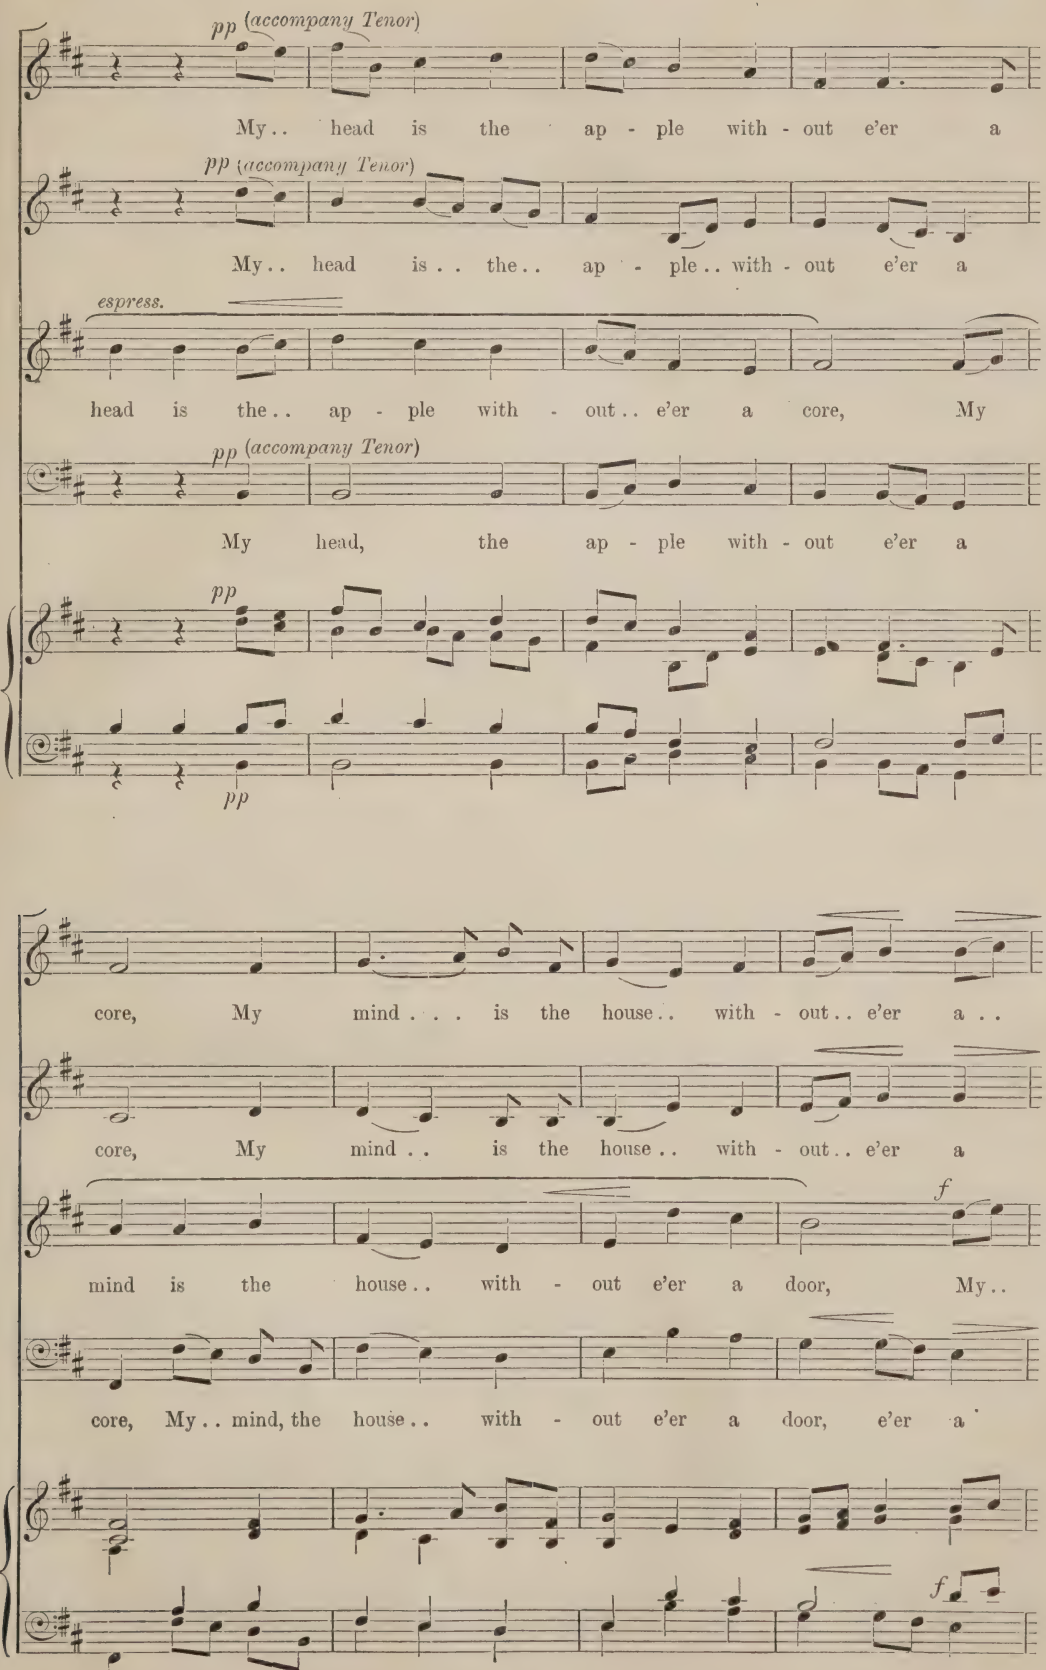
door, I will give my love a pal-ace where-in she may be, . . And
p
she may un-lock it with-out a-ny key. . . .
p
she may un-lock it with-out a-ny key. . . .
p
mf
she may un-lock it with-out a-ny key. . . . My
p
she may un-lock it with-out a-ny key. . . .
p
mf



pp (accompany Tenor)
My.. head is the ap - ple with - out e'er a pp (accompany Tenor)
My.. head is.. the.. ap - ple.. with - out e'er a
espress.
head is the.. ap - ple with - out.. e'er a core, My pp (accompany Tenor)
My head, the ap - ple with - out e'er a pp
pp
core, My mind... is the house.. with - out.. e'er a.. core, My mind.. is the house.. with - out.. e'er a
f
mind is the house.. with - out e'er a door, My.. core, My.. mind, the house.. with - out e'er a door, e'er a
f door, My heart, the pal - ace where - in . . . she may be, . . And door, My heart, the pal - ace where - in she may be, . . . And heart is the pal - ace where - in . . she may be, . . And door, My heart, the pal - ace where - in she may be, . . And she may un - lock it with - out a - ny key. . . . .

she may un - lock it with - out . . . . a - - ny key.
she may un - lock it with - out . . . a - - ny key.
she may un - lock it with - out . . . a - - ny key.
poco rit.
pp

(Continued from page 816.)

overcome the drawbacks that are bound to result when sound has to be collected from a huge and widely-dispersed force. Only those of us who have sung in the Handel Chorus realise the impossibility of the sound reaching any one point with perfect unanimity. As is to be expected, then, these records give a decidedly see-saw effect at times, sections of the choir entering very dispersedly, e.g., in 'Lift up your heads.' The pace seems excessive on the whole. Still, there is no denying the frequent thrill. The choruses recorded are 'And the glory of the Lord,' 'Behold the Lamb of God' (L1768), 'He trusted in God,' 'Let us break their bonds' (L1769), and 'Lift up your heads' (D1550). I wish one at least of these numbers could have given way to a couple of the mighty 'Israel' choruses—say, the 'Hailstone' and 'The horse and his rider.'

A good viola record is that of Lionel Tertis playing an old Irish air arranged by himself, and his own 'Hier au soir.' The folk-song is a bit too luscious for those who like such things as nearly as possible in their original, wild-flower form, so to speak (L1761).

W. H. Squire is recorded effectively in a couple of his own arrangements of old pieces by Panzato and Sammartini (D1540).

A feature of the record of Ulysses Lappas in 'Celeste Aïda' and 'Ciélo e mar' is the fine orchestral part. As usual, there is immense power in the voice, but it is not mere noise, and it goes without saying that the performance is very dramatic. A little strain shows itself in the highest notes, but this is an exceptionally good record—the best of Lappas, I think (L1762).

Dora Labbette sings Montague Phillips's 'Song of a Nightingale' and Landon Ronald's 'At the rainbow's end' with delightfully clear tone and good rhythm—a refreshing change from the average singing of to-day, with its shrill metallic quality and sloppy style (D1548).

A promising gramophone début is that of Heddle Nash in airs from 'L'Elisir d'amore' and 'L'Africana.' He has a very attractive voice and pleasing style, though over-inclined to depend on tremolo when an extra pinch of feeling is needed. His words might be clearer (9104).

H.M.V.

Only one orchestral record has come for review this month, but that one is first-rate—the 'Tristan' Prelude, played by the Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Albert Coates. This tests the new recording severely, because of the large amount of quiet, high, string work. The advance is notable, and there is very little of the over-incisive quality that marred the earlier efforts. This record should make some converts (D1107).

A record of Pachmann shows an improvement in tone, but it still leaves something to be desired. The pieces played are the Polonaise, Op. 26, No. 1, and the A flat Waltz, Op. 64, No. 3. (The latter makes very short measure, by the way, and there is a big 'space to let' which might have been filled with another little Chopin piece—say, one of the Preludes) (DB931).

An excellent record is that of Arthur Pryor's Band in a couple of Marches—Sousa's 'King Cotton' and Hall's 'Officer of the Day.' The Sousa piece is capital; it is safe to prophesy that the pick of 'J. P.'s' Marches will be enjoyed long after the symphonised syncopations are forgotten. I can pay the playing no better compliment than to say that it reminded me of the band of Sousa himself (B2327).

A combination vaguely called 'String Ensemble,' conducted by Josef Pasternack, is recorded in a couple of familiar Schumann numbers—'Träumerei' and 'Evening Song.' In both the playing is laboured and heavy, and the high notes come out shrilly (B2320).

The vocal records contain some examples well above the average. Very enjoyable is Robert Radford's singing of two airs from Bach's 'Coffee and Cupid.' His words are good, and there is the right touch of drollery at times (E431).

Eric Marshall is excellent in Schumann's 'Die Lotosblume,' and not quite so good in the same composer's 'Du bist wie eine Blume.' (The pianoforte tone is a trifle blatant in the latter.) But need he have sung in German, when there are now such good English versions? (E433).

Peter Dawson is his usual self in 'Simon the Cellarer' and Lockhead's 'The Pride of Tipperary,' and no more need be said (B2324).

Those who, like the present writer, are rather tired of 'spirituals' may be recommended to turn on the record of Paul Robeson in 'Sometimes I feel like a motherless child' and 'On ma journey.' Here is a rich and noble voice, and also what one feels instinctively to be the right way of singing these songs. There is a blend of simplicity and earnestness that few singers of 'spirituals' manage to achieve (B2326).

Sydney Coltham is heard at his best in Cowen's 'At the mid-hour of night,' but declines into sentimentality in the companion song, Cadman's feeble 'At dawning' (B2323). Mr. Coltham should confine himself for a time to songs of a robust character, and so cure the tendency to over-facile emotion that is always a snare to light tenors.

I had heard so much praise of Marion Talley that the record of her singing gave me an unpleasant surprise. The voice comes out hard and thin, with touches of twanginess. She sings 'Comin' thro' the rye' and 'Home, sweet Home,' for no apparent reason, except that sooner or later all prima donnas sing them (DA783).

Emilio de Gogorza is a baritone new to me. He has a fine voice, and his phrasing is so good that one can forgive the usual fault of over-strenuousness. His songs (in Spanish) are 'La Paloma,' by Yradier, and 'The Swallow,' a Mexican air (DA782).

A couple of male quartet records show some of the customary faults of this combination. The De Reszke Singers have fine voices, but their words are not clear, and there are far too many broken phrases. They sing poorish music, too—Medcalf's 'Absent' and H. Clough Leighter's 'My Lady Chlo'—the latter with a quite unnecessary accompaniment (E432).

Record No. B2321 is shared by the modestly-styled 'Peerless Quartet' and the Shannon Quartet. The former sings Roeltger-Small's 'Good-night (I'll see you in the morning')—the sheerest piffle; and the latter Bland's 'Carry me back to old Virginny,' in which the solo voices are over-prominent.

A curiously attractive record is that of Frank Crumit, who sings 'Billy Boy' (with guitar accompaniment) and 'Thanks for the buggy ride' (with ukulele and pianoforte). The text of the former is approximately the version that Cecil Sharp took down in the Appalachian Mountains. Mr. Crumit has a style of his own, difficult to describe. His voice is pleasant, his diction very clear. He slithers overmuch, sings with scarcely any variation of power or colour, and his English is that of the Broadway. This mixture of virtues and faults ought to produce no more than a moderately successful result. Yet, thanks to the quaint individuality behind it all, it is so enjoyable that I have encored it again and again, and shall be hearing it long after ordinary good records of infinitely better music better sung have been laid aside (B2325).

Wireless Notes

By 'Ariel'

Judging from correspondence, and other signs, a good deal of interest is taken in the organ transmissions that are now a regular feature. It is to be hoped that the B.B.C. will develop, or at least maintain, the present supply, for various reasons. First, there are many small places that possess neither a decent organ nor a competent organist, and the inhabitants are now able, many of them for the first time in their lives, to hear both viâ the wireless. Second, there are countless young organ players scattered about the country, many of them debarred from regular tuition. To these a weekly recital of well-played standard works is a valuable lesson. Third, it must not be forgotten that among the non-churchgoing section of the public are many musicians who are fond of organ music. As the best of this is rarely heard elsewhere than in church, and as the gramophone is still far from successful in recording organ music, their only chance of indulging their taste is by radio. Moreover, the organ repertory contains a lot of fine things that are necessarily unfamiliar, save to the comparatively few people who happen to go to a church where there is a good player keen enough to make the most of his instrument by means of voluntaries and recitals. In my rather frequent journeyings in the provinces, I receive abundant testimony to the value of broadcast organ music.

Unfortunately the results are distinctly capricious. For example, I switched on for one of the excellent City church recitals recently, and the effect was so vague as to be worthless. Yet in the following week a recital at the same church came through splendidly. And readers who live hundreds of miles from London tell me that the transmission of some of the recitals is so clear that they can pretty well write down the details of the registration. The weak point is generally the bass. The pedals frequently beat the radio, as they beat the gramophone. No doubt the problem will be overcome in due course.

Experience seems to show that the best results in quiet pieces are obtained when the music lies rather high and is slight in texture. The low manual notes of the flue work are usually too weak to be distinct. (This, however, is often the case when the organ is heard at first hand. Cannot something be done to give the quiet flute-toned stops more point in the bottom octave or two?) Music of the Trio-Sonata type generally transmits well. Tremulant is as a rule better dispensed with. The pedal part, in both loud and soft works, can stand a good deal of reinforcing with 8-ft. tone. (Some stops from a spare manual can be coupled if the organ is short of 8-ft. registers—as most English organs are.) Loud pieces give excellent results when big detached chords are a feature; rapid passage-work on the manuals, when loud, is sometimes effective. The details are lost, of course, but there remains a general effect that is impressionistic and exciting—as I believe many such passages were intended to be. No practical organ composer would write them for performance, ff, on a big organ, in a big church, and expect the individual notes to be heard.

One drawback in the present transmission of organ music is that it can be heard only at mid-day and on Sunday evenings. This puts it outside the reach of a very large proportion of listeners. It is to be hoped that some day, when the various difficulties in connection with the transmission of organ tone are overcome, the B.B.C. studio will be provided with its own organ, built to a specification suitable for the purpose. Organ solos will then be able to take their place in the regular programme scheme, and will, I am sure, prove a capital addition. The popularity of the solos at last season's 'Proms.' was an unmistakable sign that there is a large public ready for really good organ works.

The evening pianoforte recitals continue to be a valuable feature. The interest fluctuates, however, and some curious discoveries are made. For example, I looked forward to the Franck week, but was disappointed. The early examples of his work, played on the first evening, were of interest only because they showed scarcely a sign of the greatness that was to come later. The big works proved to be unsuitable for these particular recitals, because of their length—or, rather, owing to the shortness of the time available. Such things as the 'Prelude, Aria, and Finale,' 'Prelude, Choral, and Fugue,' don't bear cutting in halves, with an interval of twenty-four hours between the sections. And in the performance of the Symphonic Variations, with the orchestral part played on a second pianoforte, we missed the orchestra too much for complete enjoyment. On the whole, the best of these recitals have been those in which the works are short, so that a good group could be worked off each evening. It was a happy thought to give us the Bach 'Inventions,' as so many young students would derive benefit from the performance; besides which some of them are delightful music. I hope they will be given again, with a player who will not set a bad example by making a violent accelerando a regular feature, as Mr. Jean Baptiste Toner did.

Apropos of the Franck recitals a ridiculous advertisement appeared in the Radio Times of that week:

> César Franck wrote particularly for the organ, and an interpretation of his work on the pianoforte is a matter demanding both technique and understanding. Lafitte supplies both. His rendering of Franck can be appreciated to the full when reproduced on the '——.'

In the first place Franck did not write 'particularly' for the organ, his works for that instrument numbering about a dozen only. The implication that his pianoforte writing is affected by his connection with the organ is nonsense, as his early training for the career of a pianoforte virtuoso enabled him to exploit the possibilities of the instrument very fully. Even Liszt himself couldn't show him much in this way. Certainly his pianoforte music calls for both 'technique and understanding'; so does advertisement-writing.

Points from Lectures

Lectures have reached high-tide during August. In term lectures are more numerous, but perhaps less arresting. At the vacation courses which are now becoming popular, the lecturers get out of the slack water of their routine teaching and hoist full sail in the presence of fresh and eager voluntary students. For the first time the daily press has felt the breeze and the tang of this new interest; never has there been such a sea of lecture stories.

Least attention has been paid to one of the best of the vacation courses: that which concluded on August 18 in the concert-hall of the Royal College of Music, lent to the Board of Education for its music course. The visit of the present writer coincided with the closing functions, including a charabanc trip to Hayes, where the manufacture of gramophone records was fully demonstrated. Attendance at this music course is esteemed a privilege. The student must be an acting teacher in a secondary school, and at the course represents his or her county, for the aim in selecting the applicants is to spread the benefit over the whole country. It appears that economic 'cuts' are applied even here, the grant for attendance this year having been made only to forty-five teachers. Compulsory essays on the Promenade Concerts were also lopped off, but that was because the course was almost ended when these concerts began. Every year new features are introduced.

The 'better half' were the ladies, or, to be precise, they outnumbered the men by two-thirds. They appeared to be younger than in former years, and to have a modern outlook on the art of teaching. Thus Mr. Alec Robertson had a sympathetic hearing for his plea that they must not let themselves be put off by the jargon which people—especially people with horn-rimmed glasses—talked to them in a highbrow way. He blamed the professional musicians especially. There was nothing in the least technically obscure about modern music; to understand its æsthetic value was, he said, the difficulty. Of the new lecturers during the course, the work of Miss Mabel Chamberlain stood out because of her wide experience and practical helpfulness. Mr. A. M. Henderson had the art of simplifying technical difficulties, and going straight to the point requiring clearing up instead of playing pianoforte pieces in their entirety. Dr. George Dyson was, as always, masterly in his treatment of early musical history. Half-a-dozen other lecturers might be named. Of these, the outstanding personality was Mr. Robert McLeod, who has been director for the past seven years, and is ever fresh with ideas and in the manipulation of a class.

More extensive, though more elementary in its range of subjects and lecturers, is the summer course which has been going on at Cambridge under the direction of Major J. T. Bavin, of the Federation of British Music Industries. Potential conductors and amateur musical workers find inspiration under this large and successful organization. Referring to the training of boys' voices, Dr. Stanley Marchant said he kept certain things in mind, summarising as five E's—enthusiasm, enjoyment, encouragement, economy (time and words), and example. One must cultivate a clean, crisp way of speaking, for all children were born imitators. A lesson should not be started with breathing exercises, considered by boys the dullest subject on earth, but by a flank movement the teacher would get these in carefully. Above all, a music lesson should be exhilarating so that a boy should not leave the practice-room feeling 'Well, that's over.' Dr. Marchant followed with a demonstration lesson in training a church choir. Dr. George Dyson's lecture on Beethoven was a remarkable tribute to the man and his influence. Mr. Sydney Grew, though he regretted that the player-piano had not taken the place which belonged to it by right, showed that it was a musical instrument of artistic character, valuable not only in reproducing classical pieces but in modern compositions as well. In these lectures at Cambridge many things were explained which would be taken for granted in a course for practising teachers, but the great advantage is that something is learned which enables amateur workers to make the plunge as leaders where professional service would never be likely to be called upon. Sir Henry Hadow gave the cue to the type of lecture to be expected by his address at the opening of the course: general hints and sound advice. He uttered a warning to young composers against over-elaboration. He also thought that a number of young composers spent too much time in experimenting. There was no practical purpose served in writing a symphonic poem round a railway engine leaving the station, and facetiously he foreshadowed a modern pastoral symphony being scored for two bees, two hens, two ducks, two sheep, and a couple of pigs.

The City of London Vacation Course in Education is comprehensive in scope, and music is only one aspect. Educationists and public men are invited to speak. It is a tribute to the man and to music that Sir Henry Hadow gave the lecture at the opening session. The hearing of good music, he said, should form an important part of all school and college life. The only way to clear out bad music was to instil good music. The touchstone in choosing good music was to find out whether it had stood the test of time. Music in schools should be made not a part of the ordinary routine, but something anticipated with pleasure. He especially recommended choral singing in the morning. Ten minutes of that, he said, cleared the children's minds, and fitted them for the lessons which were to follow. He was glad to say that at a large number of schools musical dictation was now taking its place as a necessary part of the curriculum.

J. G.

Occasional Notes

The daily papers have lately contained a good deal of plain speaking on futile and pedantic questions in examination papers. The examinations concerned were of the scientific and literary sort, and no doubt many musicians reflected with pride that the tests for musical degrees and diplomas have in recent years shed the pedantry that for a time threatened to destroy their prestige. But there is still work for the dust-pan and brush, if we may judge from a Mus.Bac. Exercise which has just been sent for our inspection. It bristles with 'corrections' of the most footling description. (We are driven to slang, because no ordinary adjective meets the case.) Thus, we see a note in the flute part with a pencil ring round it, and a long, long pencil trail connecting it with another note in (say) the second violin part, similarly encircled. Why? Merely because the two set up a harmless false relation. This kind of thing is pilloried over and over again. The same severe treatment is dealt to some passing-notes that happen to clash a little above the average; a diminished fifth followed by a perfect fifth is also damned; and there is no mercy even for a false relation brought about by an obviously omitted accidental. We happened to be looking up a point in a full score of a Beethoven Overture a day or two after receiving this Exercise, and found plenty of 'mistakes' of the same kind. In fact, if the elementary rules of part-writing are to be applied rigidly to compositions for chorus and orchestra, practically any full score offers unlimited scope for the blue pencil of pedantry.

But this is only one side of the matter. It is possible to put up a defence for such drastic correction; but there is, we think, nothing to be said on behalf of an examining method that confines itself to such correction. The MS. under discussion contained not a single mark or comment to indicate that the examiner had any concern with the form or musicianship of the work. With good ground our correspondent protests against this implication that the first and last thing necessary in the passing of an important examination is the avoidance of such minute infractions of text-book rules as those mentioned above. We think it well to add that the reader who sends us the score is no mere musical 'red,' but himself a 'Mus.Doc.,' a brilliant all-rounder, and an unusually level-headed and practical man. The subject is so important that we shall welcome the views of competent readers.

Much has lately been written to show that operatically London lags behind New York in every way. We are therefore glad to find an American saying a good word for poor old London. Mr. Carl Saerchinger, who represents the Musical Courier on this side of the water, is a writer who is certainly free from bias in England's favour, so praise from him is praise indeed. In the Courier of July 29, after commenting on the great success of the recent season of opera at Covent Garden, he goes on:

> There is one other cheerful fact. The best operas—musically—have been the best draw. 'Don Giovanni,' which in New York has never managed to pay its way, was sold out for every one of the five performances, and many people were turned away. 'Tristan,' 'Meistersinger,' and 'The Ring' were similarly successful. Impossible to get a seat! Of the Italian works, 'Otello' and 'Falstaff' made the greatest popular appeal. 'Tosca' and the 'prima donna operas' weren't even given. 'Thaïs' drew only because of Jeritza. Massenet and Puccini were poor seconds to Wagner and Verdi. Yet we are told, over and over again, by the English themselves as well as their friends abroad, that they are an unmusical nation, and London an anti-musical town, while we in New York are the great music lovers, with that great foreign population and all. But how we do love 'Tosca' and 'Butterfly'! I wonder if publicity has anything to do with it? For whatever one may say about the London critics, they do boost the 'highbrow' stuff. 'Give the people what they want' is a good slogan, if you first tell them what they ought to want.

Mr. Saerchinger adds that Londoners find money not only for opera of the best kind, but also for ballet. As he says, Diaghilev's season at His Majesty's had a box-office success that recalled the brilliant pre-war days of the Russian Ballet. Yet we saw recently in an American journal (we forget which) a lament over the fact that Diaghilev's first visit to New York was so poorly rewarded that it seems likely to be his last. Clearly London is not so black as she is painted.

Mr. Saerchinger touches on one of the chief causes of London's poor reputation when he points out that 'the English themselves' give the lead in this depreciation. It is quite in keeping with the national habit of grousing at our own things, and crying up those of the foreigner where art is concerned. Anything in the shape of failure (e.g., a poorly-attended concert by a prominent visiting choir or orchestra, a disastrous balance-sheet issued by any concert-giving organization) is made the the text of a jeremiad. The successes are taken for granted—sometimes even pooh-poohed. Yet it is undeniable that, owing to London's vast area, and the impossibility of focussing her musical activities, an immense amount of the good work done never receives adequate recognition outside the local press. The fact is, we ought to give up thinking and writing of London as a unit whose activities in any way can be fairly gauged. It is a monstrous collection of large towns, and owing to their contiguity, and to the fact that a great proportion of their inhabitants have little interest in them save as sleeping-places, these towns are practically devoid of anything in the shape of local patriotism. A townsman at Bradford, Bude, or Biggleswade is proud of his town's prowess in any way, be it in music, sport, or business. But whoever heard of a dweller in Denmark Hill or Ball's Pond glowing with pride at the achievements of his suburb? Most of his interests lie elsewhere, and to-morrow he may be flitting to Acton Vale or Hackney Marsh, his place being taken by a denizen of St. John's Wood or Camberwell Green. Yet this vast and largely floating population contrives to do no small amount of music-making through the medium of small choral societies, chamber music parties, and amateur orchestral and operatic companies. And the customary brilliant launching of yet one more season of Promenade concerts is a reminder that at a season of the year when most places are musically dead, London somehow manages to show a good deal of life. When New York has managed to run a series of nightly Promenade concerts for thirty-two years on end (including four years of war-time), she will no doubt let the rest of the world know all about it. Sure thing!

In the Etude for August appears a very interesting talk with Stravinsky. He has much to say on the limitations and possibilities of the pianoforte. Concerning the former, of course, he has nothing new to add to the heavy indictment that from time to time is drawn up against that most useful of contrivances. The fact is, its usefulness is its salvation. As Stravinsky says, the pianoforte, being the most generally used instrument, 'will always retain its position as a kind of door to musical education.' The trouble is that so many never think of it in that way: instead of a means to an end, it becomes an end in itself. To hundreds of thousands the pianoforte and its repertory are the A to Z of music. Yet there is some excuse for this attitude. No other solo instrument has a repertory to compare with it in quality and quantity. The '48' and Suites of Bach, the Sonatas of Beethoven, and the pianoforte

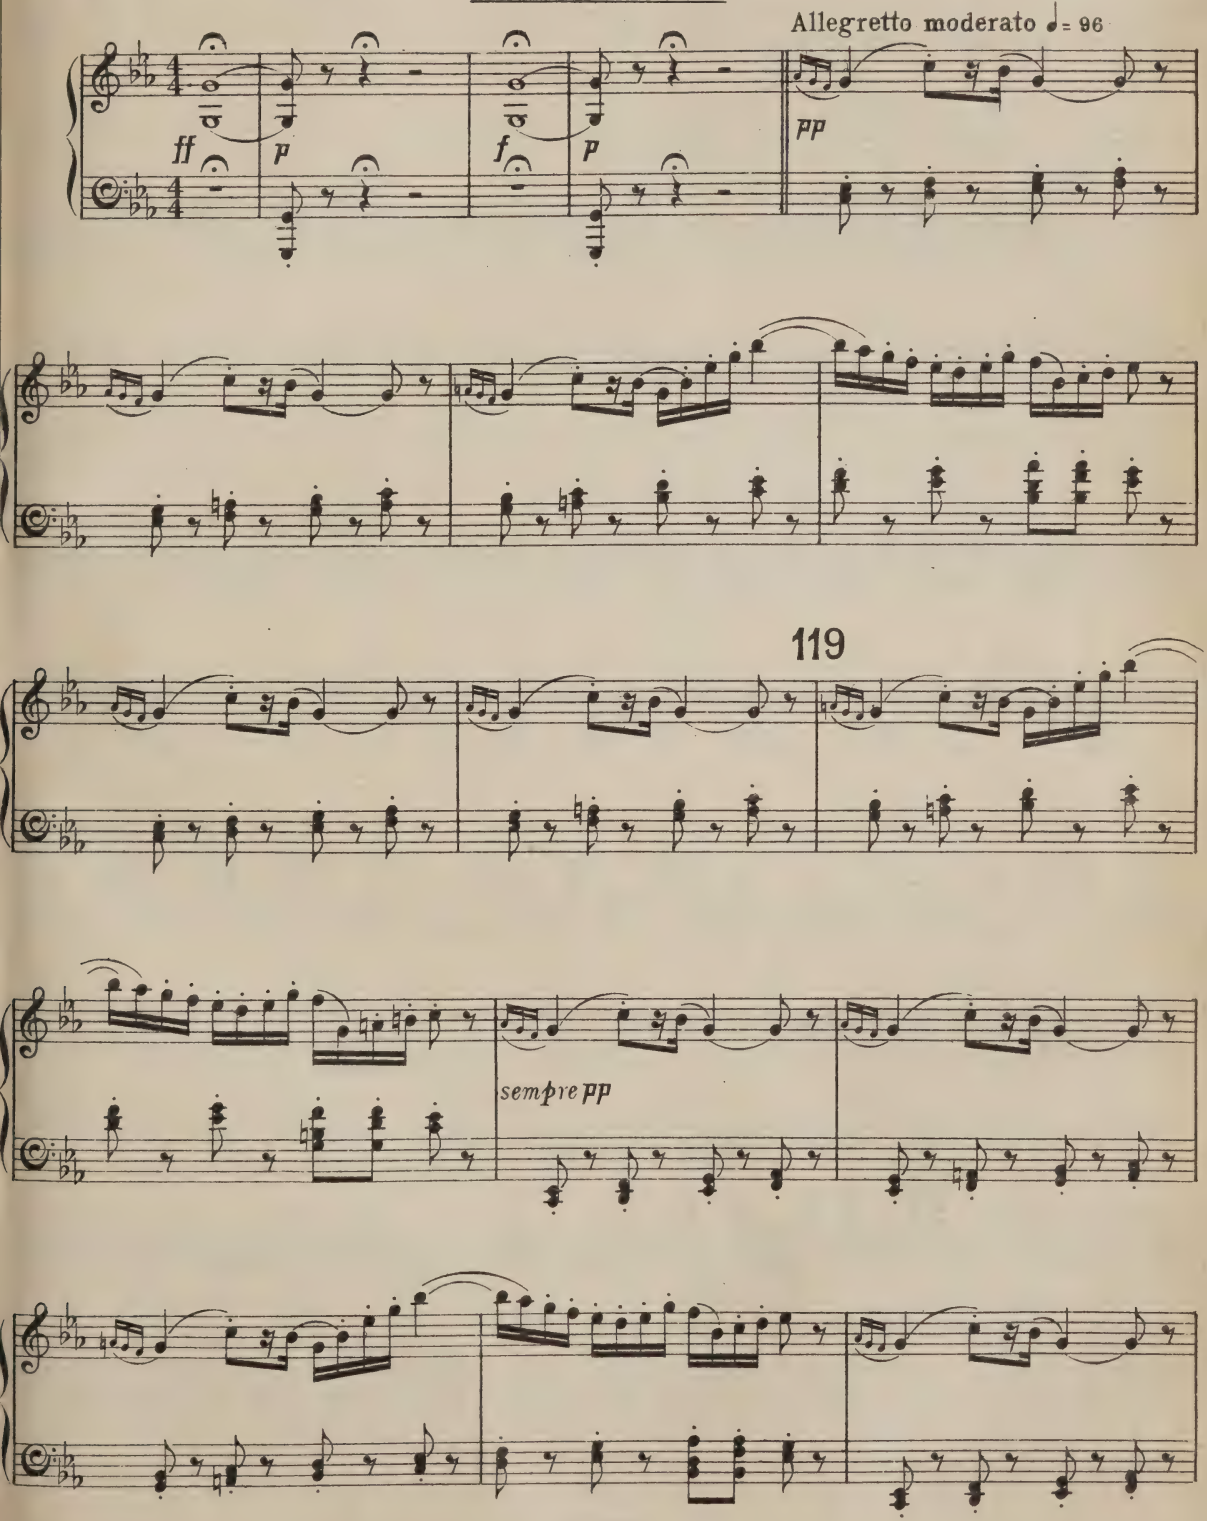
BEWARE! BEWARE!

SMUGGLERS' CHORUS FROM CARMEN

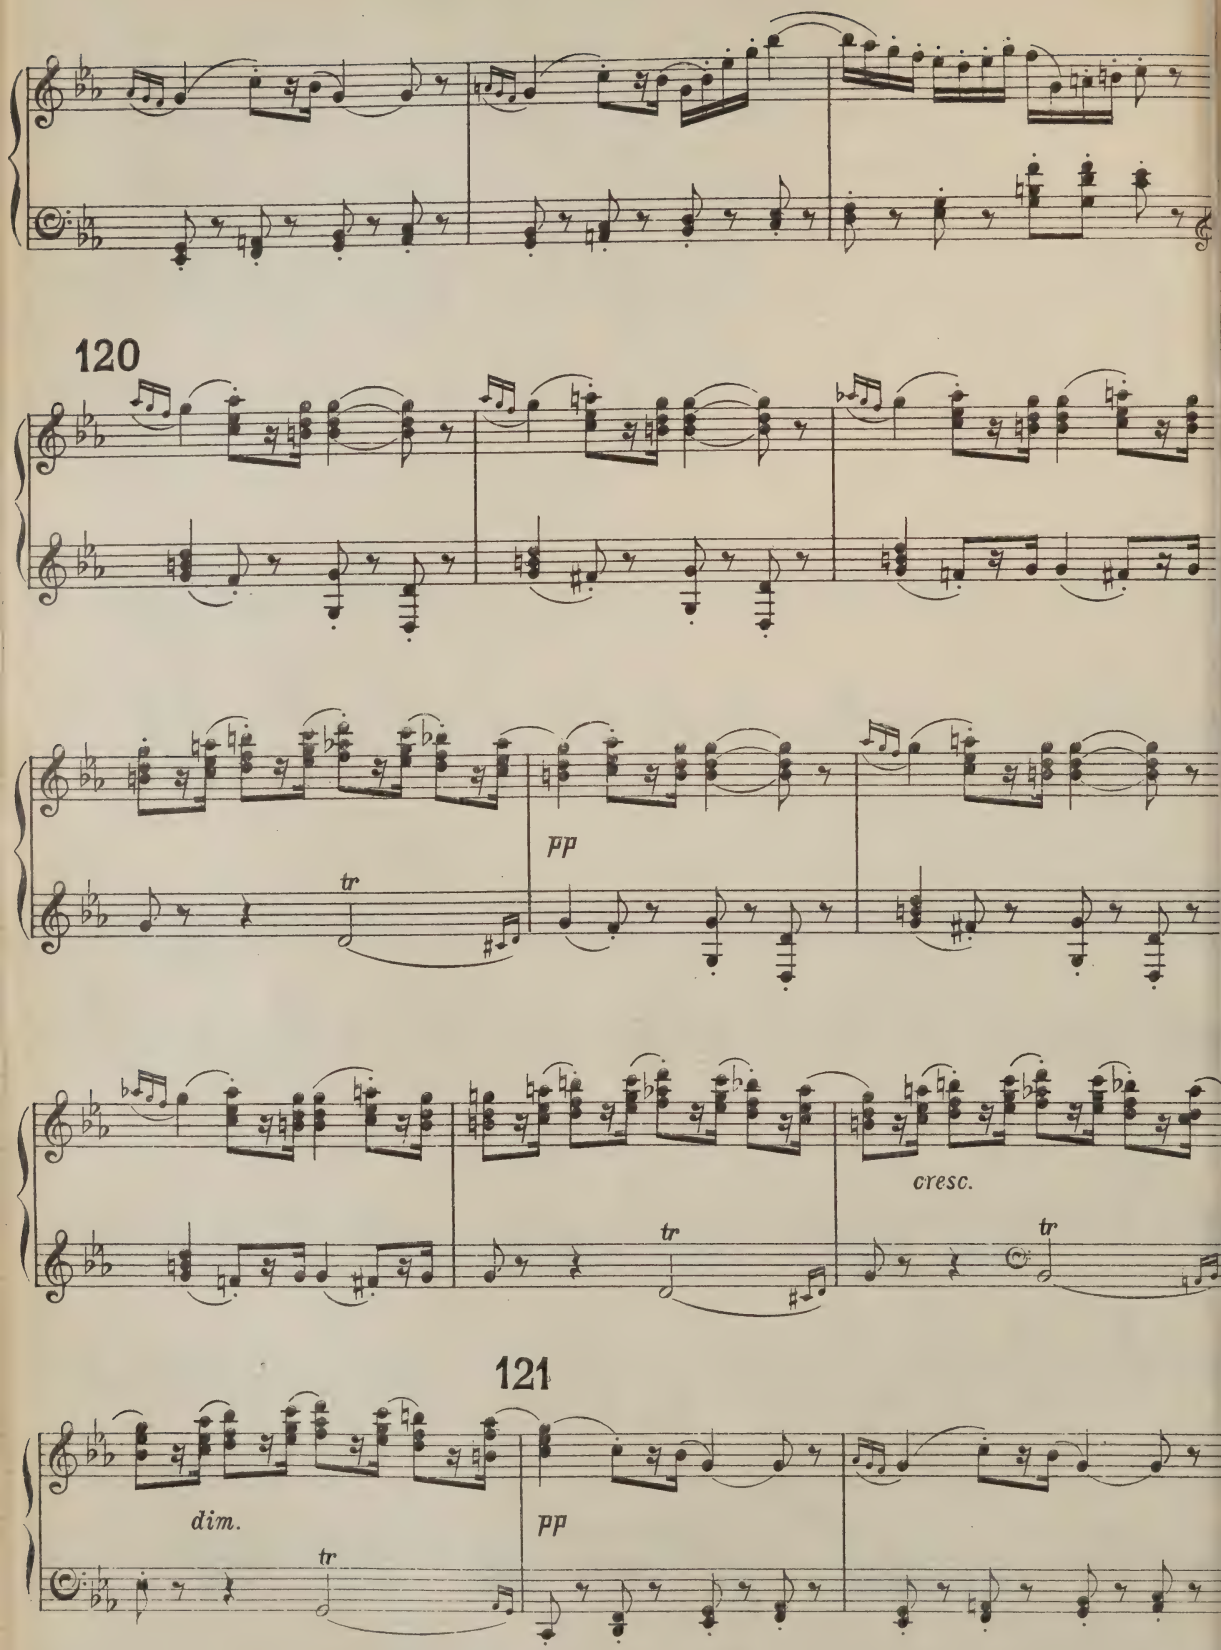
English Version by Lucia Young

Georges Bizet
(Arranged by W. Mc Naught)

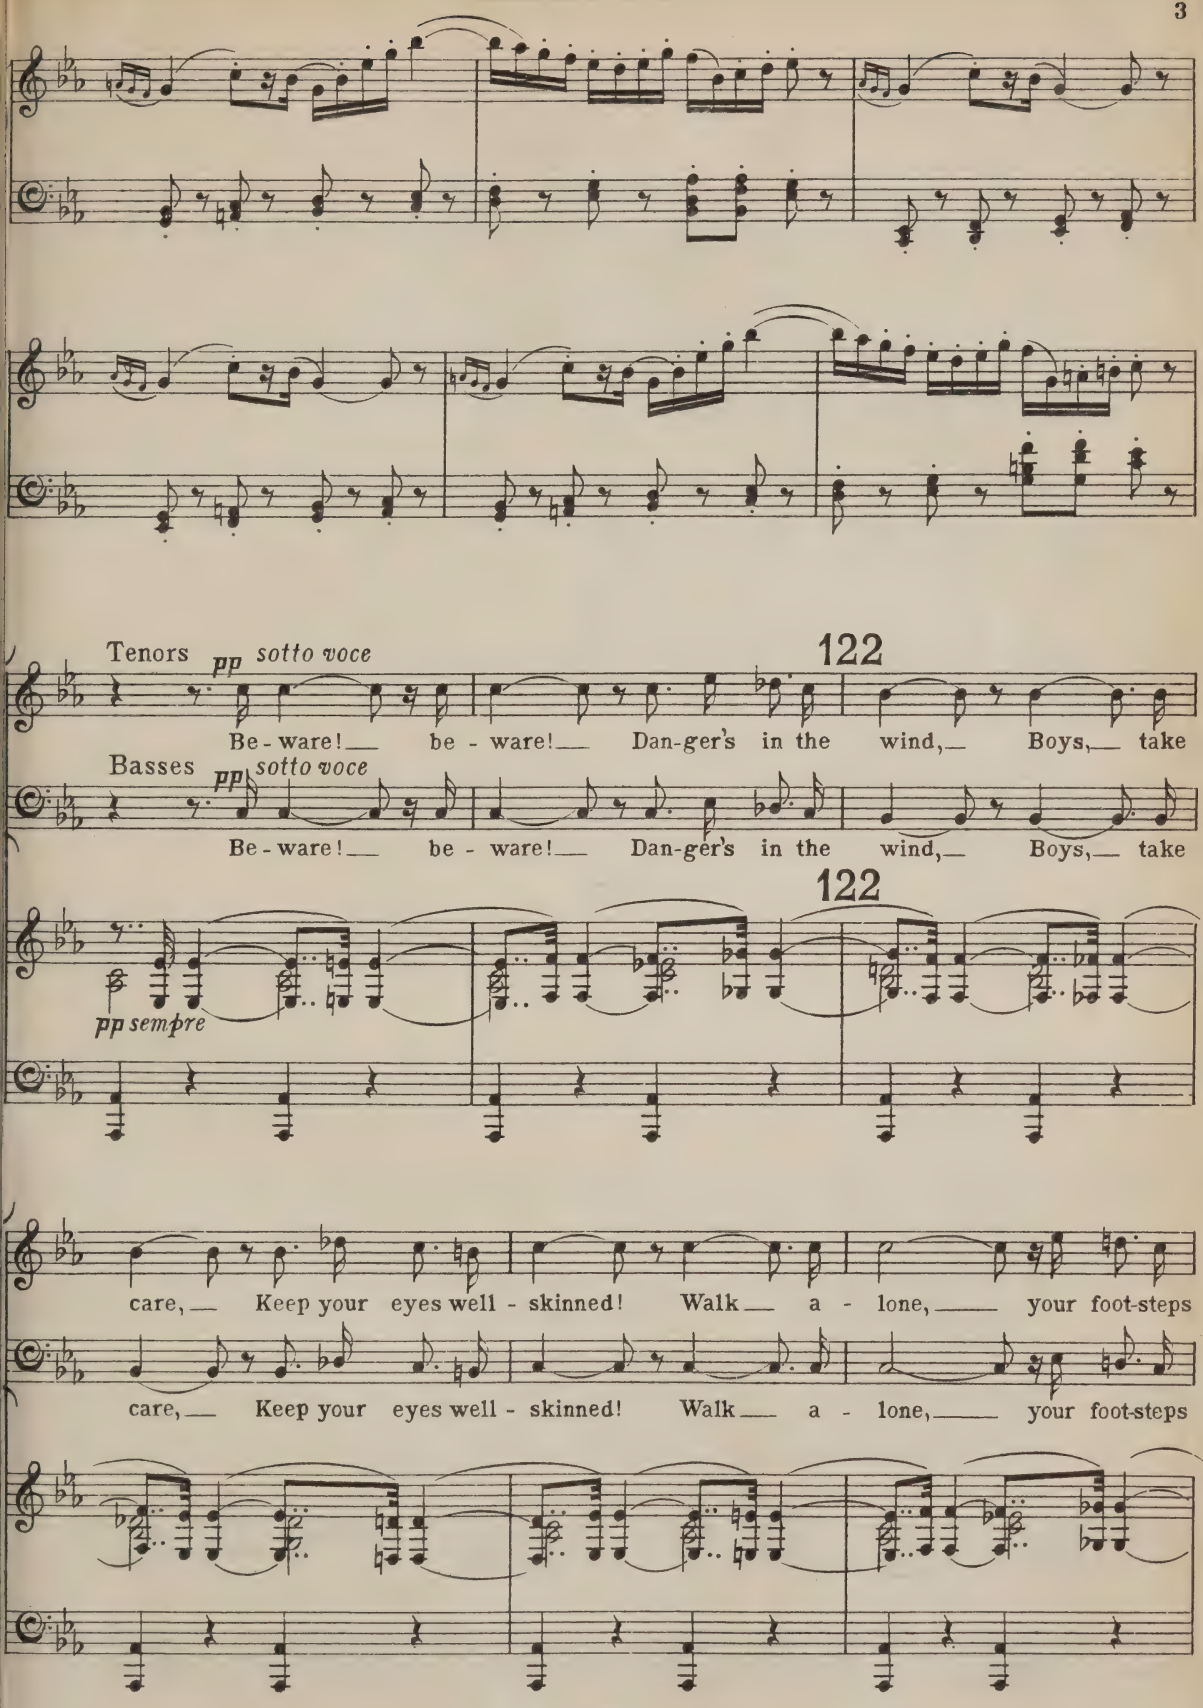
London: NOVELLO & COMPANY Limited; New York: The H. W. GRAY Co, Sole Agents for the U. S. A.



Copyright, 1926, by Novello & Company, Limited. MADE IN ENGLAND.



120
pp
tr
cresc.
tr
tr
121
dim.
tr
pp



Tenors
pp sotto voce
122
Be - ware! be - ware! Dan-ger's in the wind, Boys, take Basses
pp sotto voce
Be - ware! be - ware! Dan-ger's in the wind, Boys, take 122 pp sempre care, Keep your eyes well - skinned! Walk a - lone, your foot-steps care, Keep your eyes well - skinned! Walk a - lone, your foot-steps cresc.

dim.molto
f pick! A roll - ing stone Would do the trick. If far be - low the sen - try cresc.
dim.molto
f pick! A roll - ing stone Would do the trick. If far be - low the sen - try cresc.
f dim.molto 123
pp hears 'Twill bring a wasps' nest round our ears! Be - ware,
pp hears 'Twill bring a wasps' nest round our ears! Be - ware, 123
p dim.molto
p
pp leggiero and watch the ground, There's danger near! One false step now would bring de-feat. Take leggiero
and watch the ground, There's danger near! One false step now would bring de-feat. Take

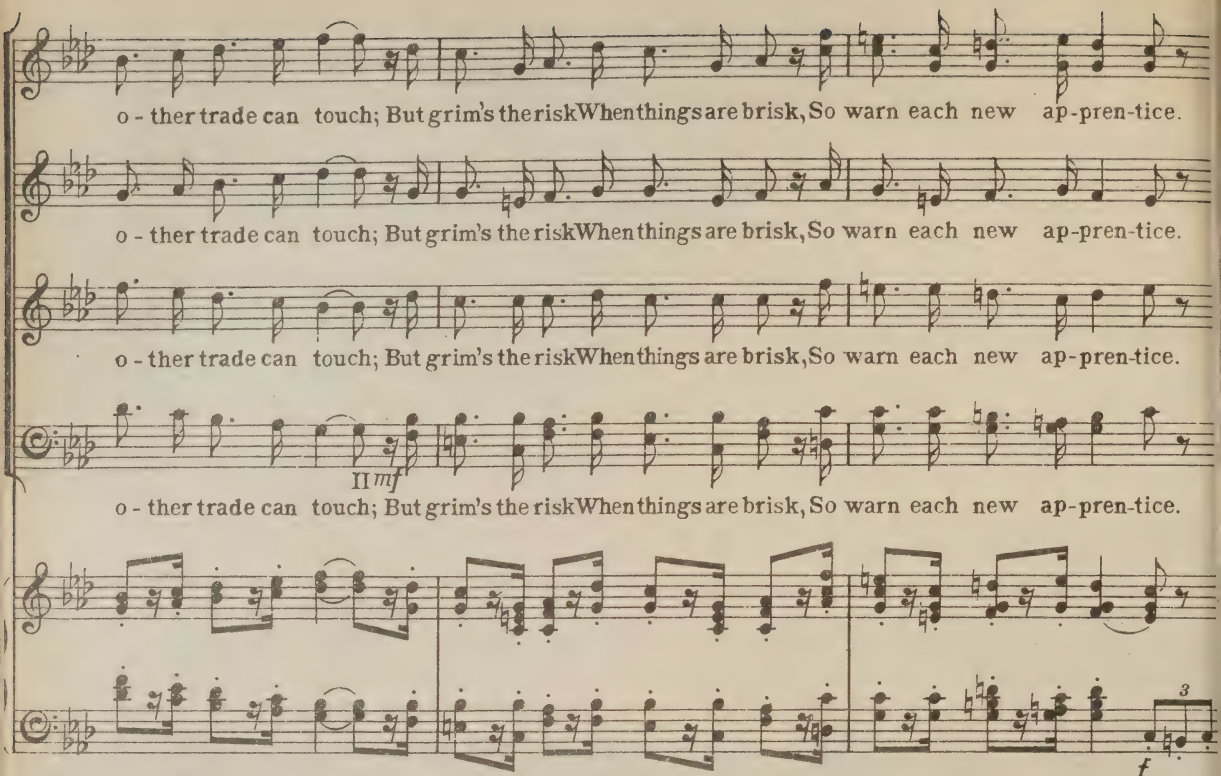
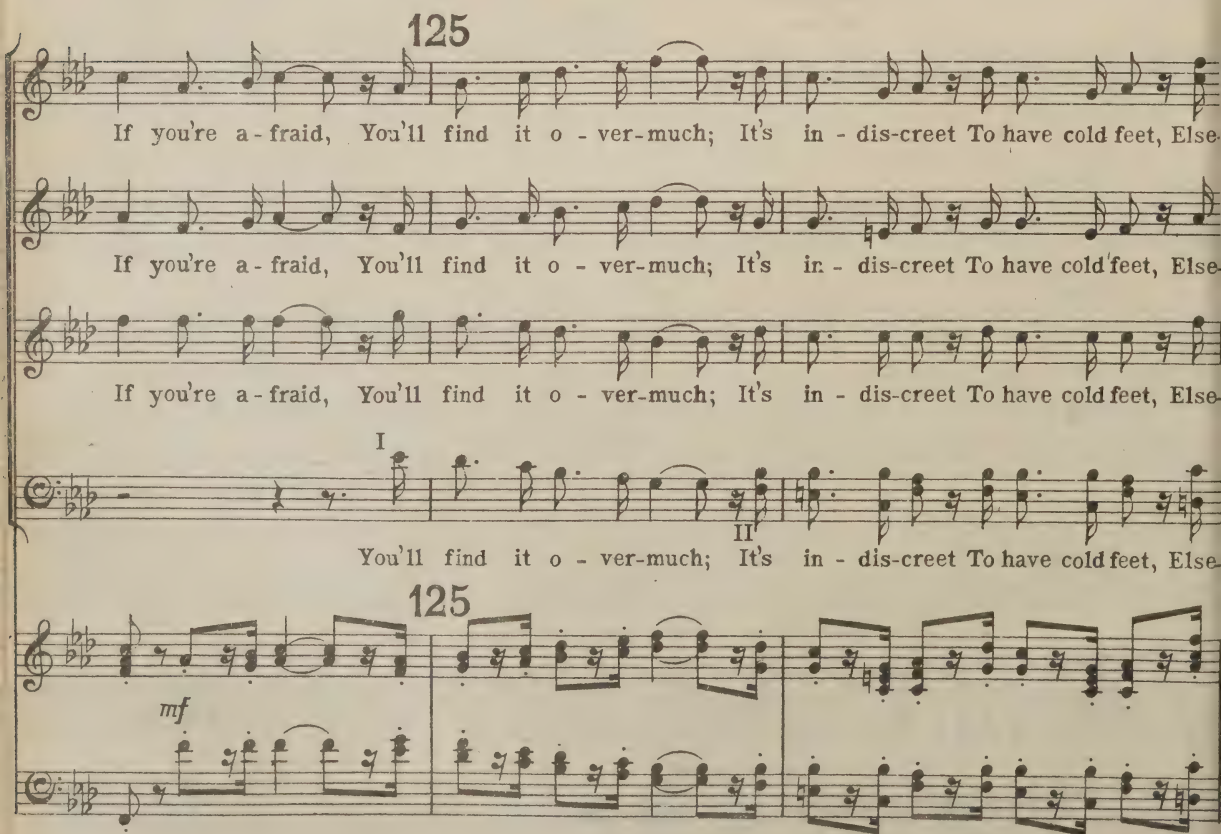
*If the 2nd Basses are not strong, all the Basses can sing the 2nd bass part, and the 2nd Tenors can take the 1st bass part from here to one bar after 126



o - ther trade can touch; But grim's the risk When things are brisk, So warn each new ap-pren-tice.
o - ther trade can touch; But grim's the risk When things are brisk, So warn each new ap-pren-tice.
o - ther trade can touch; But grim's the risk When things are brisk, So warn each new ap-pren-tice.
II mf
o - ther trade can touch; But grim's the risk When things are brisk, So warn each new ap-pren-tice.
3
f



125
If you're a - fraid, You'll find it o - ver-much; It's in - dis-creet To have cold feet, Else
If you're a - fraid, You'll find it o - ver-much; It's in - dis-creet To have cold feet, Else
If you're a - fraid, You'll find it o - ver-much; It's in - dis-creet To have cold feet, Else
I
II
You'll find it o - ver-much; It's in - dis-creet To have cold feet, Else 125
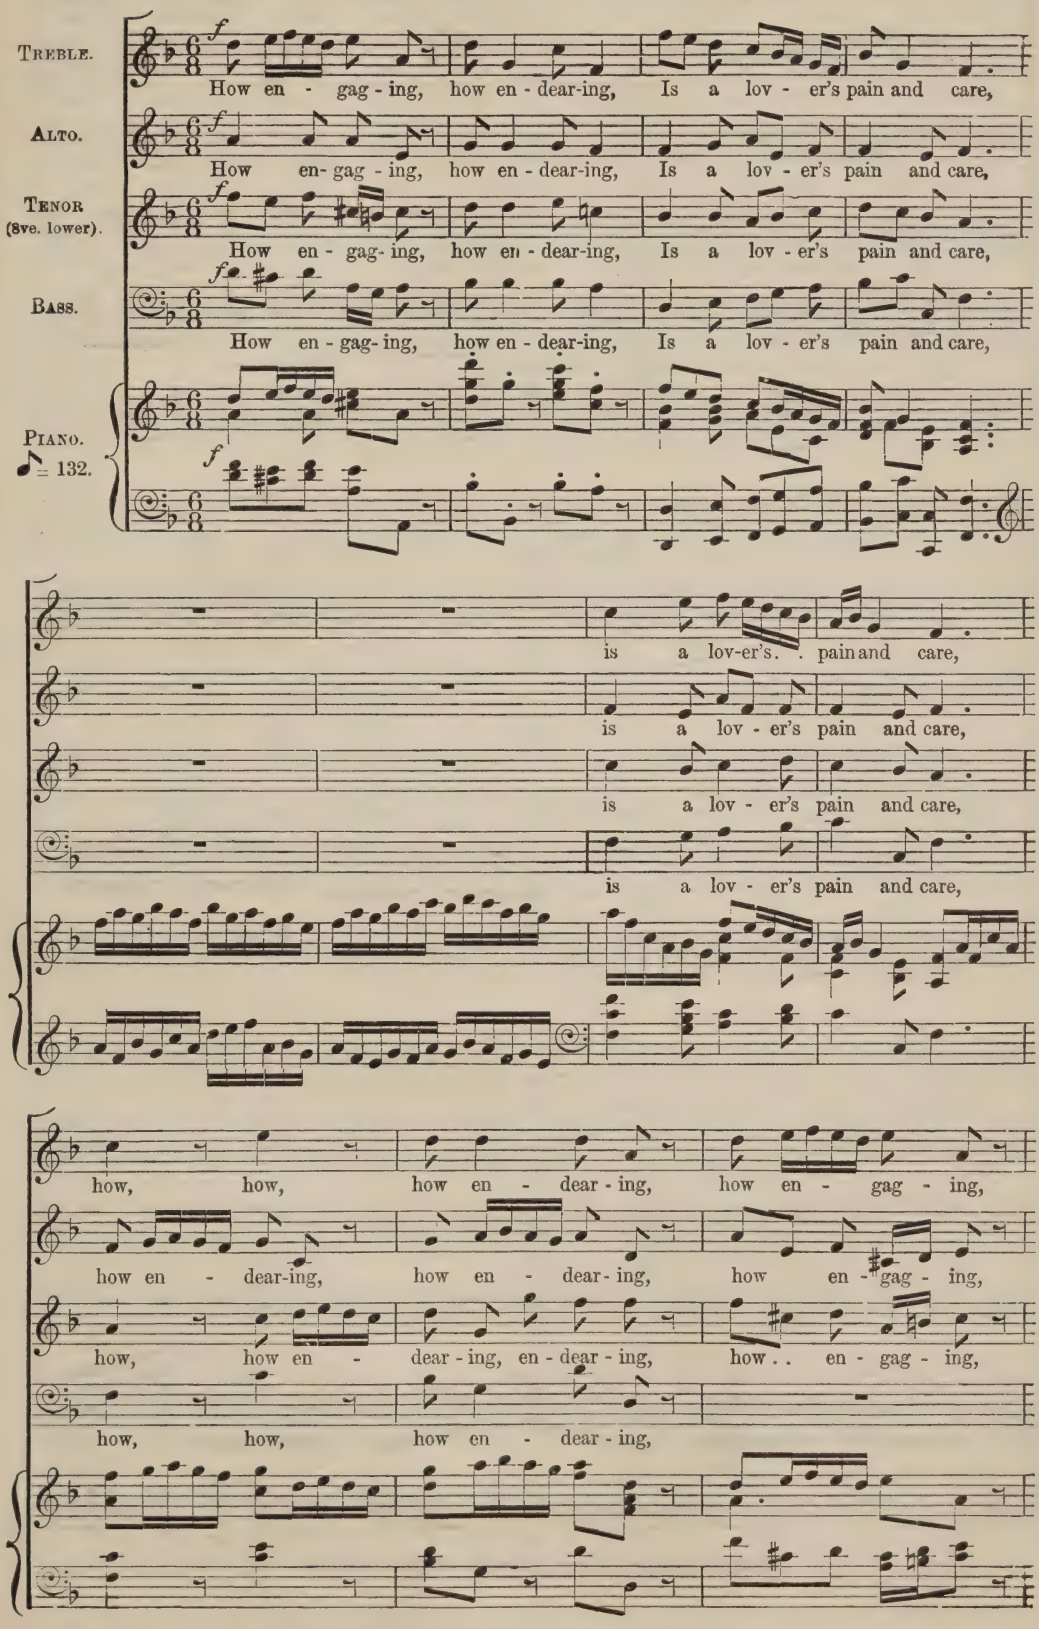
mf

No. 34. CHORUS.—"HOW ENGAGING, HOW ENDEARING."



TREBLE.
How en - gag - ing, how en - dear-ing, Is a lov - er's pain and care,
ALTO.
How en- gag - ing, how en - dear-ing, Is a lov - er's pain and care,
TENOR (8ve. lower).
How en - gag- ing, how en - dear-ing, Is a lov - er's pain and care,
BASS.
How en - gag- ing, how en - dear-ing, Is a lov - er's pain and care,
PIANO.
♩ = 132.
is a lov-er's. . pain and care,
is a lov - er's pain and care,
is a lov - er's pain and care,
how, how, how en - dear - ing, how en - gag - ing, how en - dear-ing, how en - dear - ing, how en - gag - ing, how, how en - dear - ing, en - dear - ing, how . . en - gag - ing, how, how, how en - dear - ing,

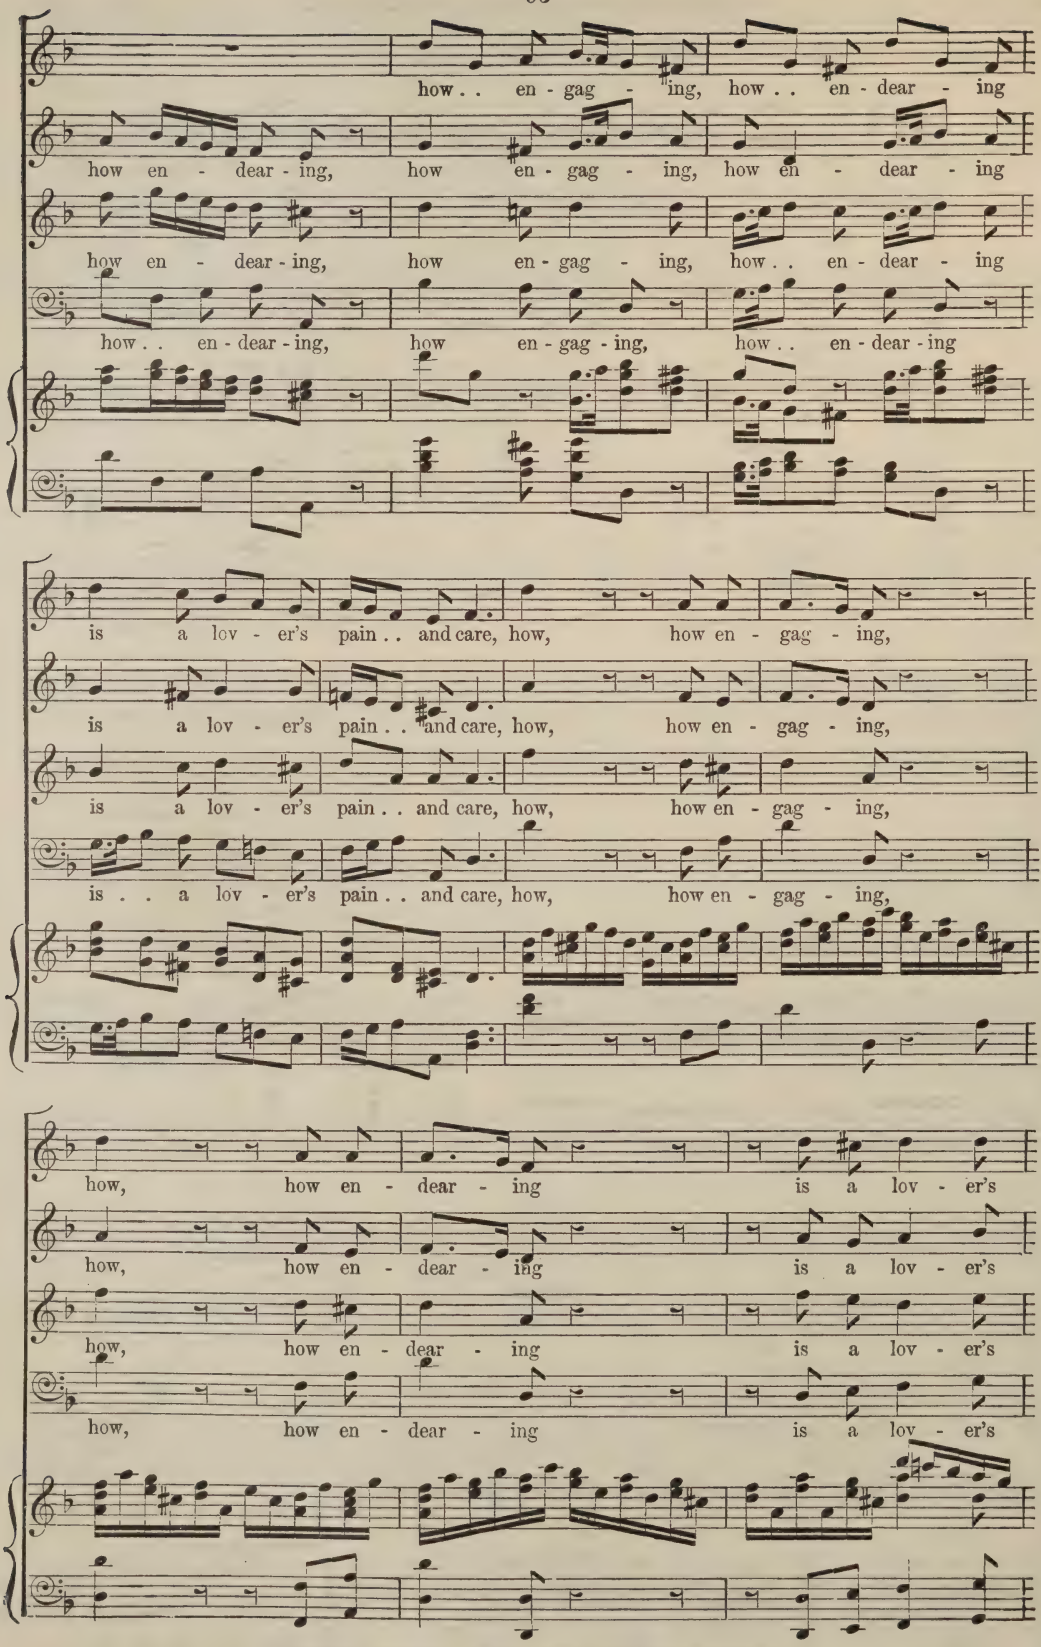
LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

MADE IN ENGLAND.



how . . en - gag - ing, how . . en - dear - ing
how en - dear - ing, how en - gag - ing, how en - dear - ing
how en - dear - ing, how en - gag - ing, how . . en - dear - ing
how . . en - dear - ing, how en - gag - ing, how . . en - dear - ing is a lov - er's pain . . and care, how, how en - gag - ing, is a lov - er's pain . . and care, how, how en - gag - ing,
is a lov - er's pain . . and care, how, how en - gag - ing,
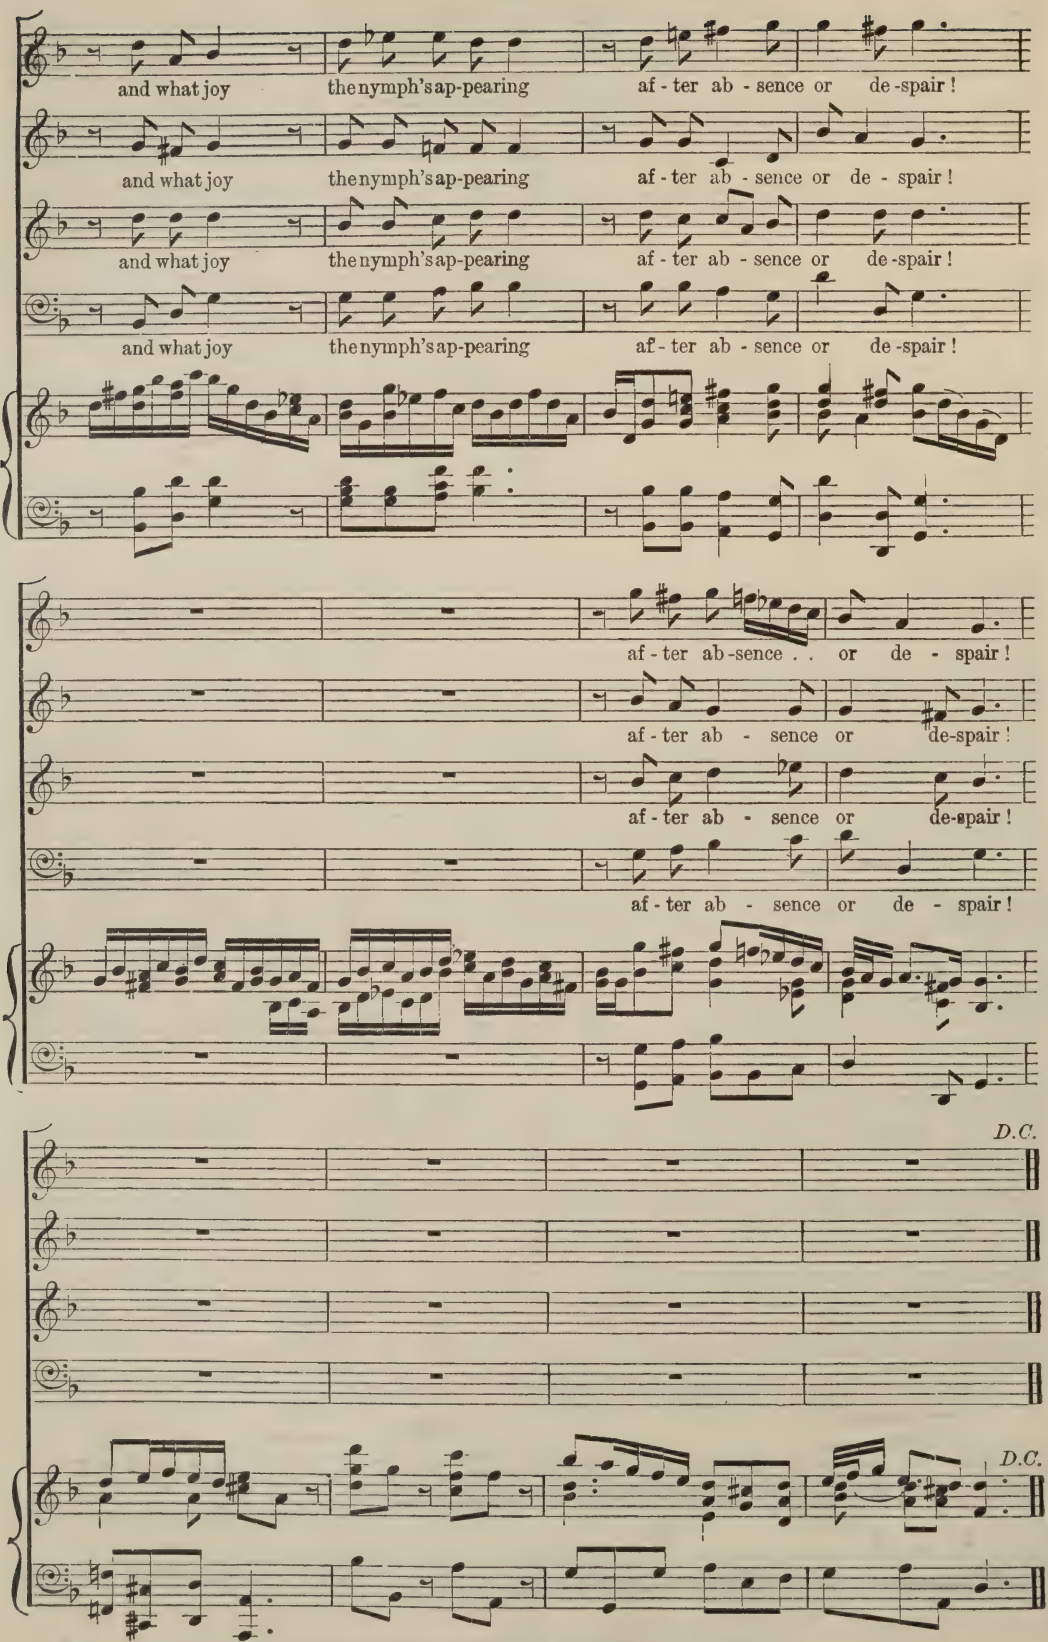
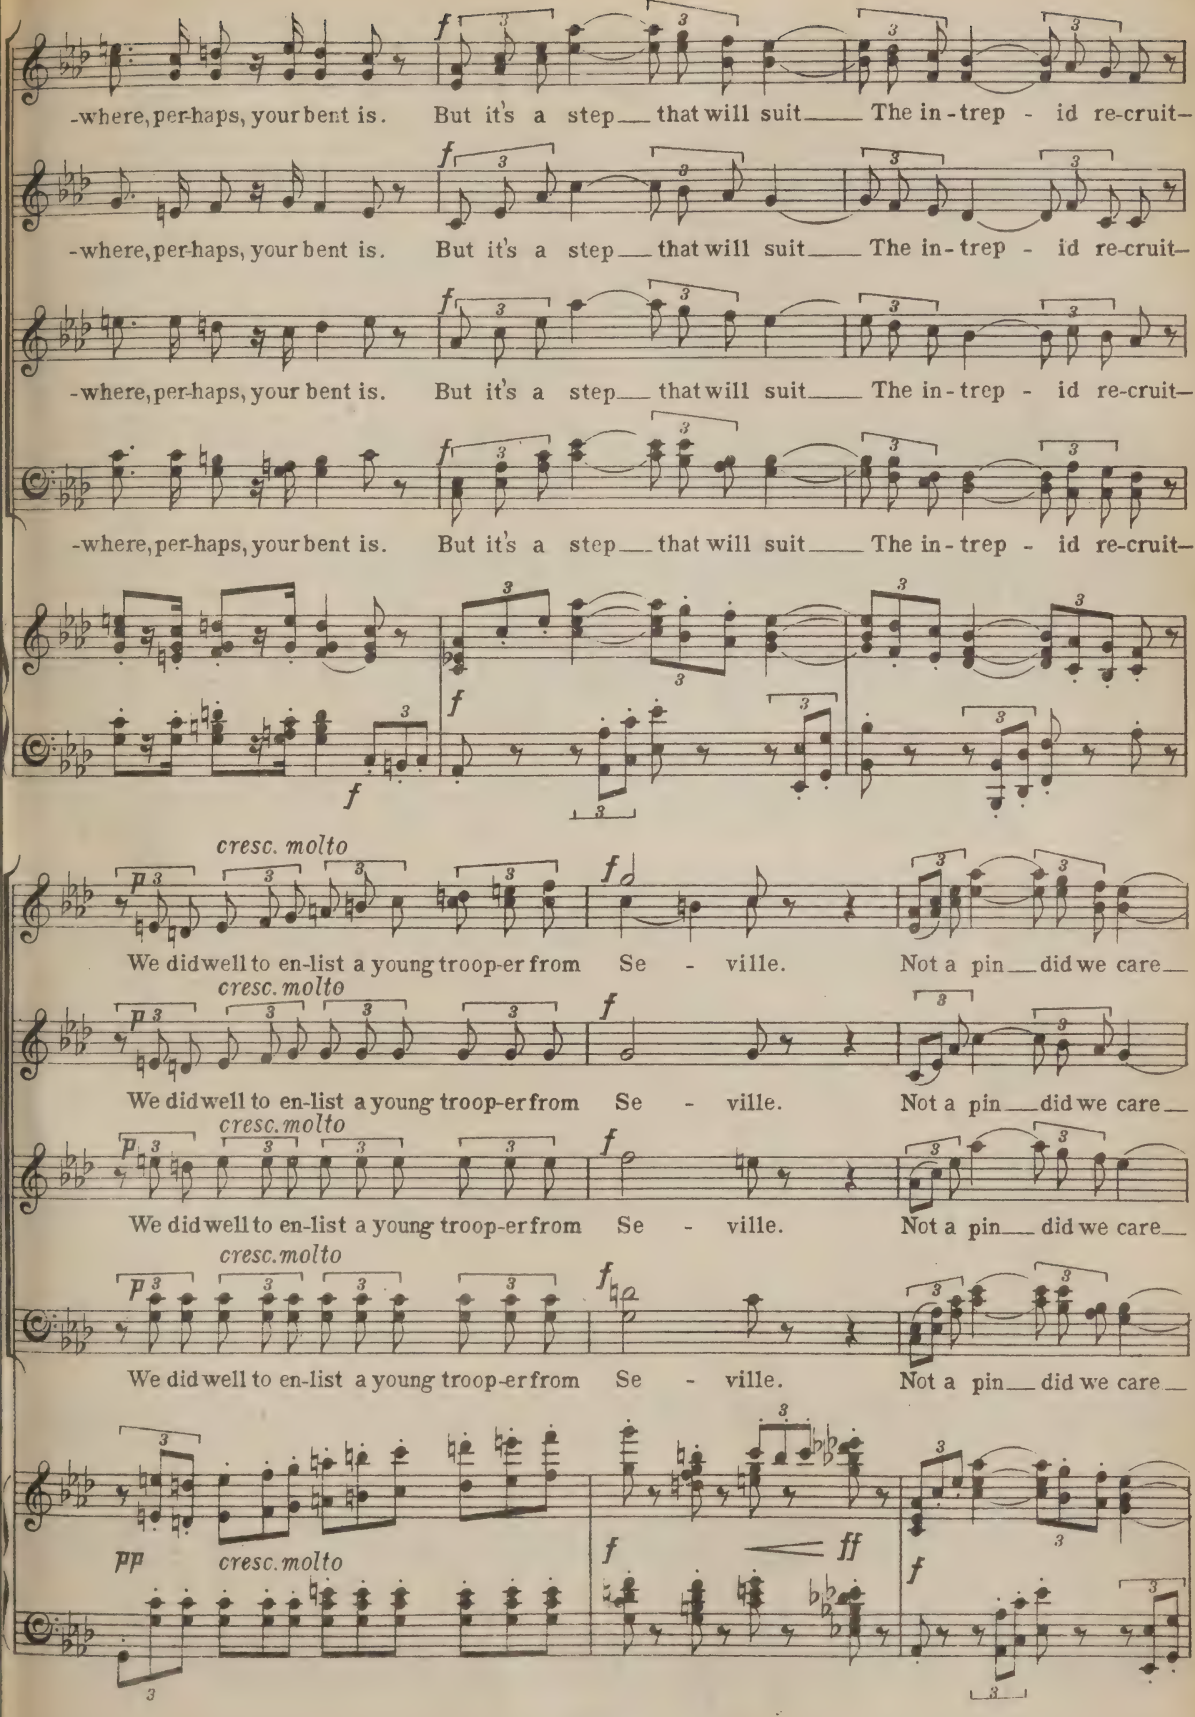
is . . a lov - er's pain . . and care, how, how en - gag - ing,
how, how en - dear - ing is a lov - er's
how, how en - dear - ing is a lov - er's
how, how en - dear - ing is a lov - er's
how, how en - dear - ing is a lov - er's

pain and care, is a lov - er's pain and care!
pain and care, is a lov - er's pain and care!
pain and care, is a lov - er's pain and care!
pain and care, is a lov - er's pain and care!
Fine.
Fine.
And what . . joy the nymph's ap - pear - ing Af - ter ab-sence or de - spair,
And what joy the nymph's ap - pear - ing Af - ter ab-sence or de - spair,
And what joy the nymph's ap - pear - ing Af - ter ab-sence or de - spair,
And what joy the nymph's ap - pear - ing Af - ter ab-sence or de - spair,



and what joy the nymph's ap-pearing af - ter ab - sence or de -spair!
and what joy the nymph's ap-pearing af - ter ab - sence or de - spair!
and what joy the nymph's ap-pearing af - ter ab - sence or de -spair!
and what joy the nymph's ap-pearing af - ter ab - sence or de -spair!
af - ter ab-sence . . or de - spair!
af - ter ab - sence or de-spair!
af - ter ab - sence or de-spair!
af - ter ab - sence or de - spair!
D.C.
D.C.



-where, per-haps, your bent is. But it's a step that will suit The in-trep - id re-cruit-
-where, per-haps, your bent is. But it's a step that will suit The in-trep - id re-cruit-
-where, per-haps, your bent is. But it's a step that will suit The in-trep - id re-cruit-
-where, per-haps, your bent is. But it's a step that will suit The in-trep - id re-cruitcresc. molto
We did well to en-list a young troop-er from Se - ville. Not a pin did we care
cresc. molto
We did well to en-list a young troop-er from Se - ville. Not a pin did we care
cresc. molto
We did well to en-list a young troop-er from Se - ville. Not a pin did we care
cresc. molto
We did well to en-list a young troop-er from Se - ville. Not a pin did we care cresc. molto

cresc. molto
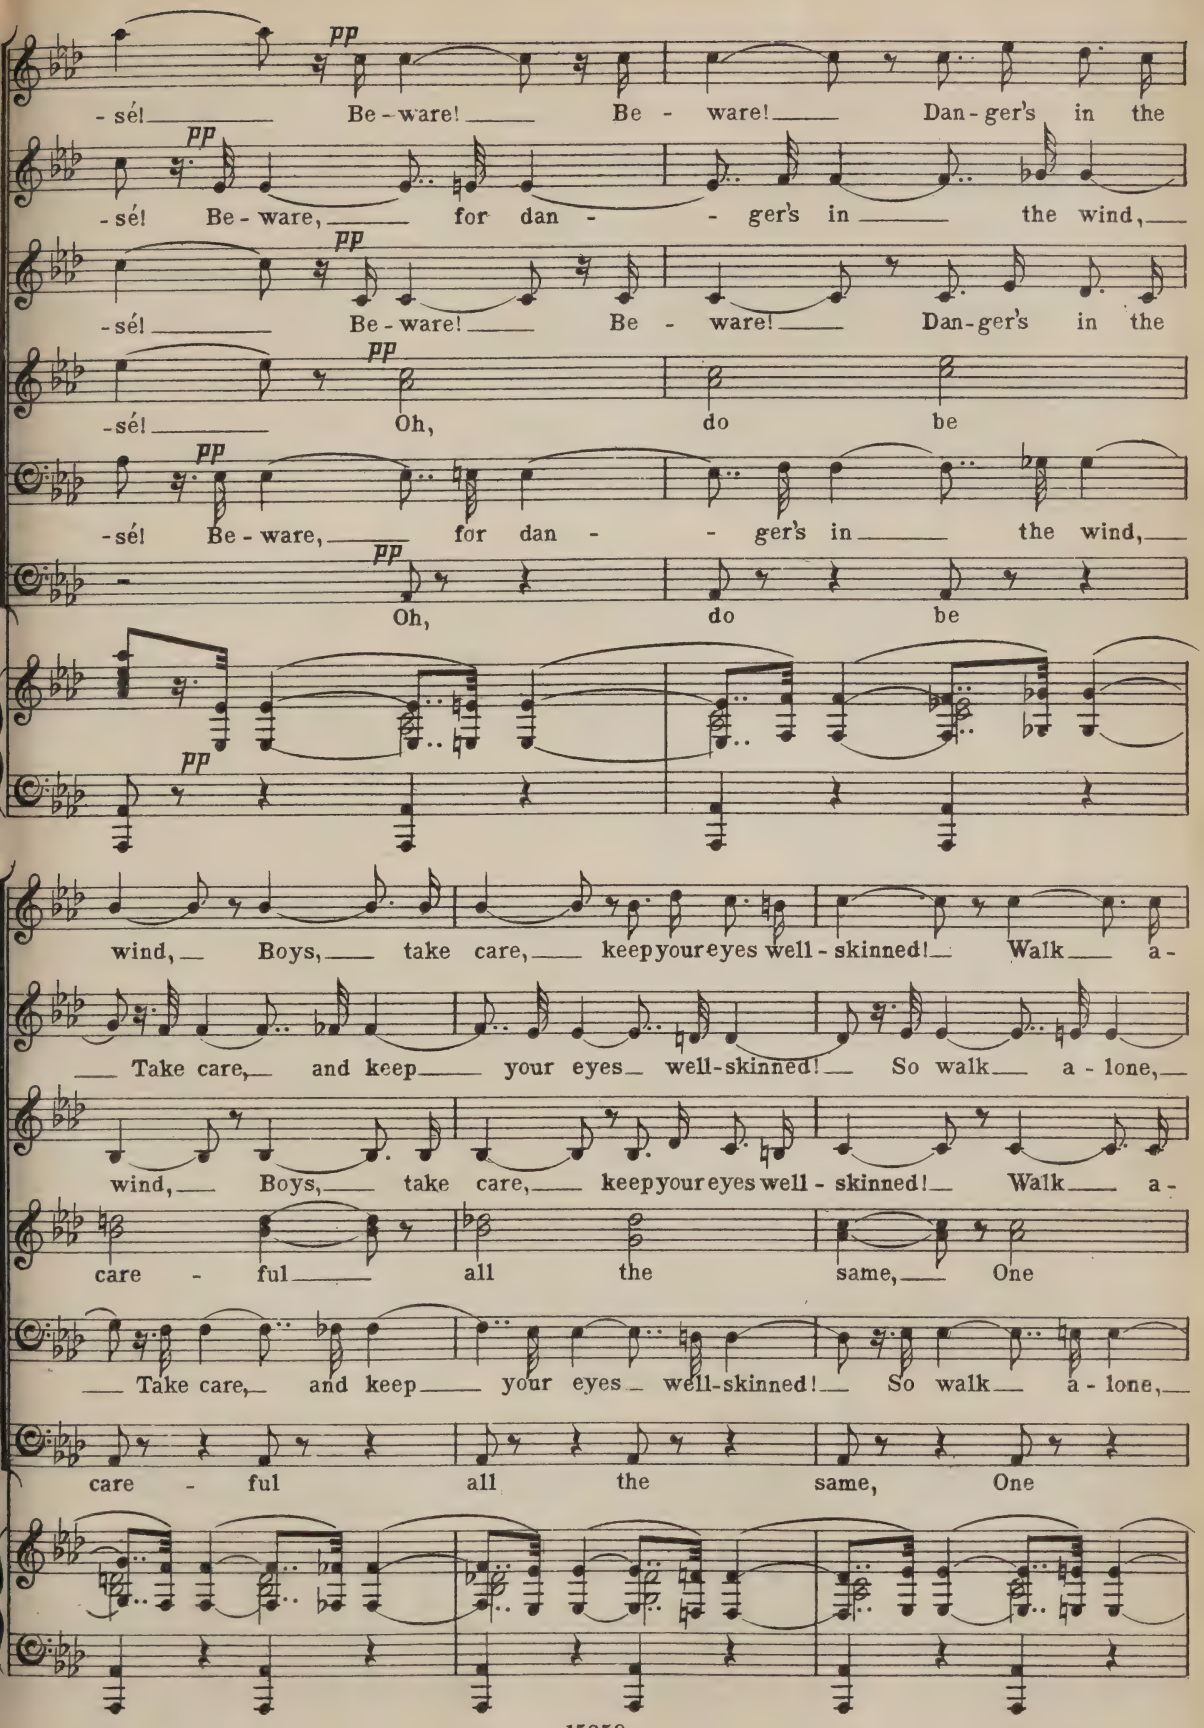
What his prin - ci - ples were,
When he's smug-gled a lit-tle they'll go to the
pp
126
I f dim. p
II f dim. p
de - vil,
ff
Here's a wel - come from all, Don Jo
tr



pp
-sé! Be-ware! Be-ware! Be-ware! Dan-ger's in the
-sé! Be-ware, for dan- -ger's in the wind,
-sé! Be-ware! Be-ware! Be-ware! Dan-ger's in the
-sé! Oh, do be
-sé! Be-ware, for dan- -ger's in the wind,
Oh, do be wind, Boys, take care, keep your eyes well-skinned! Walk a-Take care, and keep your eyes well-skinned! So walk a-lone, wind, Boys, take care, keep your eyes well-skinned! Walk a-care-ful all the same, One
Take care, and keep your eyes well-skinned! So walk a-lone, care-ful all the same, One

cresc.
- lone, your foot-steps pick! A roll - ing stone would do the your foot - steps pick! A roll - ing stone would do, would do the
- lone, your foot-steps pick! A roll - ing stone would do the false step now would end our your foot - steps pick! A roll - ing stone would do, would do the false step now would end our 127
f
dim. molto
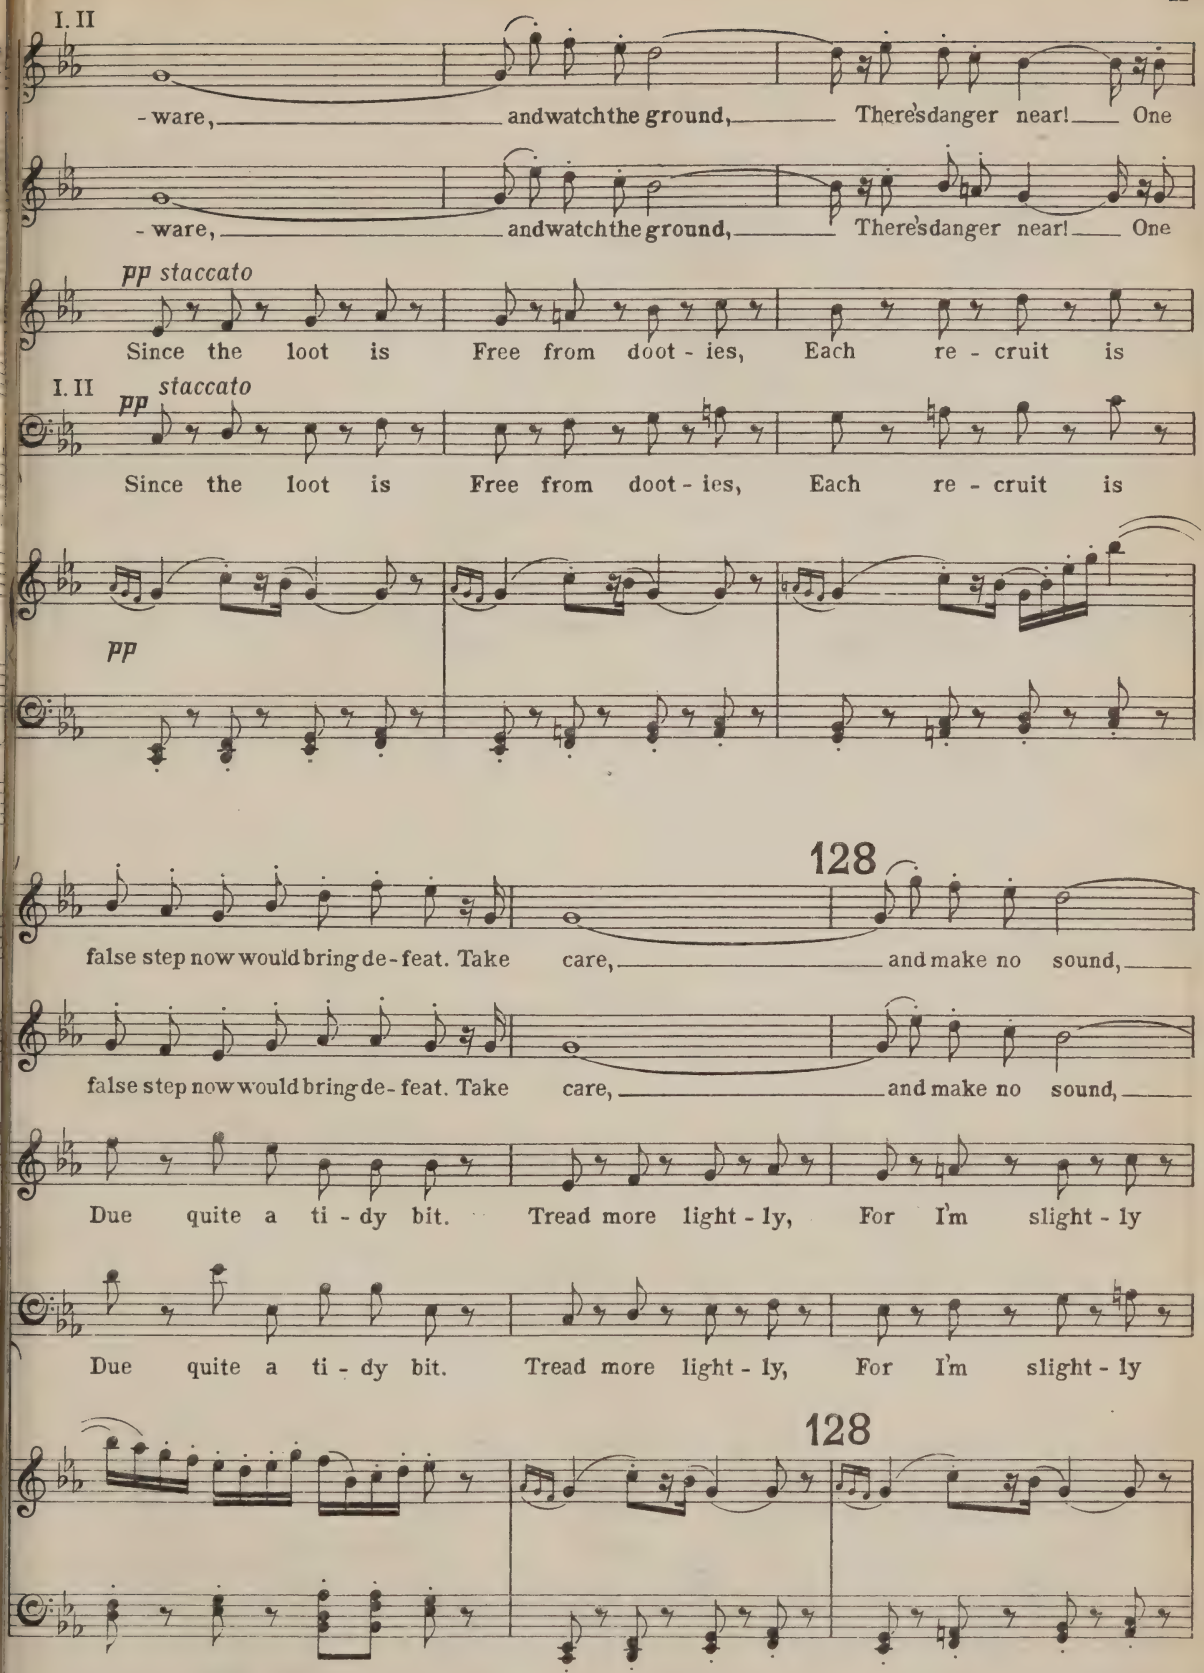
pp trick. If far be - low the sen-try hears 'Twill bring a wasps' nest round our ears! Be - game. If far be - low the sen-try hears 'Twill bring a wasps' nest round our ears!
dim. molto
127



I. II
- ware, and watch the ground, There's danger near! One
- ware, and watch the ground, There's danger near! One pp staccato
Since the loot is Free from doot - ies, Each re - cruit is
I. II
pp staccato
Since the loot is Free from doot - ies, Each re - cruit is pp
128 false step now would bring de - feat. Take care, and make no sound, false step now would bring de - feat. Take care, and make no sound, Due quite a ti - dy bit. Tread more light - ly, For I'm slight - ly
Due quite a ti - dy bit. Tread more light - ly, For I'm slight - ly 128

For this is clear, Our fate de-pends up-on our feet. The haul
For this is clear, Our fate de-pends up-on our feet. The haul
In a fright we Shan't get a-way with it The haul
In a fright we Shan't get a-way with it The haul
We share, So all Take care!
We share, So all Take care!
We share, So all Take care!
We share, So all Take care!
cresc.
dim.molto

works of Chopin, Schumann, and Brahms alone make up a collection of masterpieces so rich and varied that a student might spend a long life working at them to the exclusion of all other music, and yet be far from narrowness or malnutrition. And the instrument has a way of confounding its critics. Thus, when all has been said concerning unsuitability for cantabile, its inability to achieve a real legato and a genuine crescendo, and its obvious fitness for purely percussive effects, it ups and reminds its detractors that (as Stravinsky says) Chopin, who wrote for it melodies better suited to wind and stringed instruments and the human voice, remains pre-eminently the pianoforte composer. What would be thought of a violinist who gave us (say) the melody of the E flat Nocturne with as little real sostenuto as it receives from the instrument for which it was written? Yet can it be denied that the Nocturne is nevertheless better in its original form than in any transcription? To such an extent is the convenience of the pianoforte (helped out by make-believe and concessions on the part of the ear) enabled to balance its glaring defects! And can we conceive a Chopin looking at it purely as an instrument of percussion, as the fashion is to-day among the 'advanced' composers?

> In its orchestral employment [says Stravinsky], the pianoforte appears to me as a wonderful percussion instrument. The pianoforte has its own individuality and its own significance. Like all art, it is subject to a chronological development. In the past the pianoforte has been treated at times as though it were an orchestra, at times as though it were a vocal instrument—that is, it was made to 'sing'; in fact it was cheated out of everything but its own very evident and individual character as a percussion instrument. The pianoforte has its own melodies and its own harmonies. They are totally different from those of the violin, for instance. To try to imitate the violin, the flute, the 'cello, the bassoon, or any other instrument on the pianoforte, is an error in art for which it is high time to atone.

Logically this is incontestable; yet one foretells a longer life for the standard concertos than for any written on the Stravinsky or Prokofiev lines.

> This concept of the pianoforte [he goes on] seemed to be developing in my mind for a long time like a great tree. During the past year it has borne its fruit in my Concerto. I have endeavoured to restore the pianoforte to its rightful place as a percussion instrument.

No doubt the possibilities of the instrument in this direction are capable of development, but the limit will soon be reached because the actual musical interest can never be carried on for long without recourse to the elements of melody and sostenuto; so the perverse, unsatisfactory, and deservedly popular instrument will beat all the reformers, and continue to score through the very failings by which it stands condemned.

Stravinsky had much to say concerning his preferences among composers:

> Chopin is not my musical god. I have higher honour and admiration for the great Liszt, whose immense talent in composition is often underrated. Yet I do not go for my gods to Liszt or to the 19th century, but rather way back to John Sebastian Bach, whose universal mind and enormous grasp upon musical art have never been transcended. One must go to the door of Bach and knock if you would see my musical god.

He anticipates and answers an almost certain objection to his Concerto and other recent works:

> Those who see in my music a caricature of Bach are to my mind greatly in error. My works have always been contrapuntal in character, but now they are even more so, more melodic and less harmonic in type. But this does not mean that I have sought to caricature the polyphonic writers of the 16th and 17th centuries. We must realise that the polyphony of to-day should be differently employed from that of the polyphony of other days.

He therefore claims to catch in his music (and especially in the Concerto) 'the note of our marvellous present, not the remote past.' Tremendous things are going on, he says. There are our crowded streets, sky-scrapers, electric cars, subways, the radio. He feels all this very deeply, and in it sees musical forms which interest him tremendously:

> America, with its gigantic growth, inspires me. . . . The tempo of America is greater than the rest of the world. It moves at a wonderfully swift pace. It all appeals to me.

The question is whether the musical expression of this aspect of modern life is likely to appeal to anybody else. The majority of people turn to music not only as an expression of life, but also as an escape from the more harrassing of its details. All great art of the past has succeeded in this dual capacity. We fancy that in this matter, as in the insistence on the percussive side of the pianoforte, Stravinsky is too much of a whole-hogger to be convincing. After all, is there not in the classical pianoforte repertory an abundance of proof that composers, from Scarlatti to Chopin, realised pretty fully the effectiveness of its percussion effects? But they realised something far more important, namely, that an insistence on this side would limit their art and induce monotony. And was nobody busy or in a hurry until Mr. Babbitt arrived? Was none of the unrest of the past reflected in contemporary art? The Chopin who wrote the 'Berceuse' wrote also the 'Revolutionary Etude.' Are any of the 'tremendous things' that so excite Stravinsky bigger than the driving-power that is behind (say) the Scherzo of the Ninth Symphony? Yet from the same brain came the Arietta of the Op. 111 Sonata. Stravinsky is not likely to express the spirit of his time until he sees all of it, instead of certain of its most obvious and superficial aspects. And if the 'gigantic growth' of America, and the 'tremendous things' that are going on there, inspire nothing of greater moment than his Pianoforte Concerto, he must not be surprised if some of us point to certain masterpieces that somehow managed to get written in petty European states generations ago, without the aid of sky-scrapers, electric cars, radio, &c.

We are glad to hear that the memory of Leonard Borwick is to be kept green by a pianoforte scholarship at the Northampton School of Music. The choice of School is very appropriate, for among Borwick's fellow-pupils under Clara Schumann was the Directress of the School, Miss Mary Beasley, and for many years he had taken a deep interest in the institution. Indeed, one of his last public acts was to examine there, and to issue a report on the work. The scholarship will bear his name, and will entitle the holder to four years' study (to be extended at the discretion of the Advisory Board) in pianoforte, harmony, and ensemble playing. The Board consists of Miss Fanny Davies, Mr. Entwisle Bury, Mr. Harold Samuel, Mr. Frank Thistleton, and Mr. Plunket Greene. The first examination for the scholarship will be held at the Northampton School of Music early in January next. There must be many admirers of Leonard Borwick who will welcome an opportunity of perpetuating his memory, and to such we commend this Scholarship Fund. Though the response has been so satisfactory as to enable the scholarship to be founded, a further sum is needed for the maintenance of the holder. A subscription list has therefore been opened, and donations, however small, will be welcomed by the hon. treasurer, Mrs. H. de Bless, 113B, St. James's Court, S.W.1.

In our obituary note on Dr. Charles Wood, we stated that he was elected to the Cambridge Professorship of Music in 1894. This was an obvious slip. Wood succeeded Stanford in 1924.

The recently issued report of the Advisory Committee on London Concerts for Young People makes interesting reading. A few points call for comment. We agree that the children should have increased opportunities of hearing good music as a part of their regular school work, the out-of-school-time concert being regarded as special and complementary. It is extremely likely, however, that with further developments in the reproduction and transmission of music the time is not far distant when all that is necessary in this way may be done in the school. The only difficulty will be that of the time-table.

The Committee suggests that the best type of concert for the purpose is orchestral and choral, plus a few solos. It feels that chamber music, owing to its more intimate character, should generally be used in schools only. This is a debatable point. There is much chamber music that is immediately attractive rather than intimate, and its use in a concert programme is to be preferred to solo items, which tend to draw the child's attention from the music to the performer.

The Committee says that > . . . the custom of allowing children to participate by humming themes, clapping rhythms, or by standing and singing simple folk-songs, is considered to be sound in principle, and has proved most successful in practice.

There can be no question as to this, we think. Many, however, will feel that the Committee is regrettably timid in its next pronouncement:

> The device of attaching words to themes in classical music is thought to lend itself to serious disadvantages in the hands of the unskilled, and should be used with extreme caution.

A device is either good or bad. The report says nothing in favour of this one, and thus implies its badness. This being so, it is dangerous to suggest its use to all who consider themselves skilled—that is, practically all who run such concerts. Moreover, the adoption of nonsense words can do nothing that is not done as effectively by the means recommended in the preceding paragraph of the report, i.e., 'humming themes and clapping rhythms.' We received a good deal of correspondence on this point some time ago, and among it was not one solid argument in favour of setting classical themes to doggerel.

In regard to the programmes, the committee naturally says that only the 'best' music should be used. At the risk of being misunderstood, we venture to put in a plea for a leaven of the second best. At present the ground between the admitted masterpiece and the bad is too little cultivated. Moreover, the use of the term 'best music' is too often misunderstood as 'music by the best composers,' the result being that excellent music by second-rate composers is squeezed out by poor music of the first-rank men.

A more discriminating choice would develop the children's critical sense, whereas the policy too often pursued at present merely stifles it.

In regard to a suggestion that 'the lives of composers could be taken in the history lesson,' &c., we cannot refrain from expressing a hope that the sources of information will be reliable and free from gush. We have lately seen several books for children's use, in which the great composers were written about as if they were saints rather than human beings. For example, the youthful reader was told that Beethoven never did a mean action!

Copies of the Report may be had from the hon. secretary, Miss Mabel Chamberlain, 88, Woodberry Avenue, N.21.

Acting on the motto, 'Hear all sides,' we include in this issue an article from Mr. Jack Hylton on 'Dance Music of To-day.' Having heard his side, however, we feel bound to say that we are entirely unconvinced by his defence of the use of classical themes for dance music purposes. We said our say on this subject in our issues for January and July, so we need do no more now than point out the futility of pretending (as Mr. Hylton does) that the theft and distortion of classical themes is due to the dance composers' desire 'that the musical taste of the younger generation, for which we feel responsible, shall not suffer.' This anxiety on behalf of the young generation shows itself in a queer way! We suggest to Mr. Hylton that in this kind of petty larceny, no less than in the kind punishable by law, a wise culprit will say as little as possible. Least of all will he try to persuade the jury that the motive behind his misdemeanour was wholly virtuous.

Church and Organ Music

ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS

With reference to the Andante from a pianoforte duet, Mozart—Arrangements by J. Stainer, No. 2 (Novello), selected for Fellowship Examination, January, 1927—Candidates are informed that only the new and revised edition of this Arrangement will be accepted by the Examiners.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Secretary.

MUSIC IN STONES: 15TH-CENTURY CARVINGS IN A VILLAGE CHURCH

By T. FRANCIS FORTH

The sculptors of the Middle Ages often lavished their art upon the corbel-stones and hammer-beams of churches, and the favourite figure used was that of an angel—the outspread wings lending themselves naturally to the idea of support. In some churches of this period angels are represented with musical instruments, and unless the number is very great, each instrument is different from the rest. Figures of this kind throw a light on the musical instruments in use in the various periods of Church architecture, for sculptors naturally carved the things which they knew, and as a rule they were extraordinarily true to detail.

Mural paintings, too, represent angels with musical instruments. One of the best examples of this is the minstrels' gallery of Exeter Cathedral, a painting of the 14th-century, consisting of twelve figures, the instruments being: cittern, bagpipes, clarion, rebec, psaltery, syrinx, sackbut, regal, gittern, shalm, timbrel, and cymbals,* a list which reminds one forcibly of Nebuchadnezzar's band.

For accuracy in detail, painting can never be so reliable as carving, for the simple reason that in the centuries that have passed the colours have often faded, and when a church has been restored these colours have received a touching up—or, in the case of the painting being in a very bad state, sometimes even a more up-to-date instrument painted in. For accuracy in detail we must look chiefly to carvings in wood or stone; the latter are as a rule in a better state of preservation, and it is a curious fact that angel carvings are more often found in the interior of a building than on the exterior, and chiefly high up in the roof, where as a rule it is impossible to see the details. This fact may also have the mystic meaning that the angel-choirs above are joining in one great act of praise with our poor feeble attempts here below.

Church restoration, however, sometimes gives the opportunity of studying these ancient instruments at close quarters, and the restoration of the 13th-century Church of All Saints, Broad Chalke, is a case in point. Though the church was originally built in the 13th century, it appears to have been rebuilt in the 15th, possibly as early as the year 1420 A.D., and it is thought that the beautiful corbel-stones supporting the roof date from that period. Of the ten corbels, eight are angels, all with one exception playing musical instruments. This one represents an angel in the attitude of prayer, and appears to have been carved at a much later date, probably when the church was restored in 1847. One other is perhaps of the same date—an angel playing an instrument of the cither type, but of a form somewhat resembling the modern banjo.

An examination of the rest at close quarters throws an interesting light on the instruments of the 15th century. They are in an excellent state of preservation, and are carved with such attention to detail as to point to the fact that they are in no way fanciful, but accurate representations of those in actual use.

(1.) Starting from the south-west corner, the first is a portative organ, placed on the knee, blown with the left hand, and played with the right. This much could be seen from below; but a forty-rung ladder showed the following details: that the keyboard was carved in such a way that short keys could be seen as well as long (evidently the equivalent of our modern black notes); the hand, however, was spread over the middle ones, so that it was impossible to count them. Portative organs are said to have thirty-three pipes as a rule; at first sight this appeared to have only eighteen (fifteen small and three large), but on running the finger over the top of the pipes, it was found that the fifteen small ones appeared to be duplicated at the back, so that these, with the three large ones, made up the same number, viz., thirty-three.

(2.) The second corbel on the south side has already been described—probably a modern imitation.

(3.) The next is a small harp, placed on the knee, and appears to be the same as that which is sometimes called the Anglo-Saxon harp, sometimes the Irish harp, and often known as 'David's harp,' because that great minstrel is generally represented in mediæval paintings as playing a harp of this description. It is very much like the illustration from a 13th-century MS. given by Carl Engel ('Mus. Insts.,' page 89).

(4.) The next is peculiarly interesting. It was possible to see from below that this was an instrument of the viol class, that it was played on the shoulder with a bow, and was pierced with two sets of sound-holes, five being below the bow and two (something like those of the modern violin) above it. The ladder revealed, however, one more detail, i.e., that it was shaped like half a pear, a fact which practically proves it to be a rebec.

This instrument was in use throughout Europe in the Middle Ages, and from it the whole of the violin class has been evolved. The illustration given in 'Grove,' from a 13th-century MS., shows an instrument very similar, and No. 4 of the Exeter minstrels' gallery is held in much the same position.

The instrument appears to have been well known in England—it is even mentioned by Chaucer, and Shakespeare makes Peter, the servant of Capulet, give names to the three musicians: (1) Simon Catling, (2) Hugh Rebec, and (3) James Soundpost.* Probably all three were rebec-players, for there were four kinds in use, known as Discantus, Altus, Tenor, and Bassus. There are good illustrations of these given in Martin Agricola's 'Musica Instrumentalis,' printed in 1528, a copy of which can be seen at the British Museum.

The tone of the rebec was evidently loud and harsh (sometimes even called 'the squalling rebec'); and was supposed to imitate a woman's voice singing in strident tones. Probably for this reason the peg-box was frequently carved with a female head—often a grotesque.

It is stated in the works of M. Vidal and M. Chouquet that no specimen is known to exist—an extraordinary statement when we consider the number of examples there are carved in stone, in MSS., and in mural paintings, all pointing to the fact, that it must have been in common use. As a fact, no less than six were shown in the Exhibition of Ancient Musical Instruments held at Milan in 1881. Though so few specimens are known, it seems probable that in those villages where the old church-band died a 'die-hard' death, a rebec may still be found, looked upon merely as 'some sort of old fiddle,' which of course it is—for the modern violin is but the great-grandchild of the rebec, the father being the viol, and the grandfather the 'troubadour fiddle.'

* Carl Engel—'Musical Instruments,' p. 113.

* 'Romeo and Juliet,' Act IV., Scene 5.

(5.) The figure in the south-east corner has already been described, and is probably a modern carving of about 1847.

(6.) In the north-west corner the figure has been mutilated to make room for a beam or support—the instrument having been cut away, and part of the left arm. From the position in which this instrument was held it might be something of the bassoon type.

(7.) The next figure is one of intense interest—an angel playing bag-pipes, so beautifully carved that it can be well seen from the floor of the church as possessing two chanters, a bag under the left arm, and a drone over the left shoulder. The ladder, however, revealed the fact that the sound-holes were also carved, and that there were six on each chanter.

The bag-pipe undoubtedly travelled westward from the Oriental nations, and came to England from Brittany, where the Bignou is still in use. The Exeter minstrels' gallery of the 14th century has one depicted, evidently with but one chanter. There is the figure of an angel playing a bag-pipe on the crozier given by William of Wykeham to New College, Oxford, in 1403. Chaucer mentions bag-pipes. He says of the miller:

A bag-pipe well couthe he blowe & sowne.

This instrument appears to have been in use in Ireland in the 10th century, but it was not until the 15th century that it became popular in Scotland.

Does the inclusion of the bag-pipe in the angel orchestra mean that it was actually in use as an accompaniment to the voices in the music of the Church? Such a thing seems to be possible, for the notes of the bag-pipe correspond approximately to the intervals represented by the black notes of the pianoforte, and to be capable of producing music in the Lydian and Phrygian modes.

(8.) The last instrument is difficult to determine. It is something of the clarinet or flageolet type. If the latter, it must be a recorder or direct flute, the predecessor of the transverse flute. There is an illustration given in an instruction book of the 17th century, the title of which is, 'The genteel companion'; being exact directions for the Recorder, &c., London, 1683.'* This instrument is being played by a quaint-looking person, whose legs appear to belong to some one else, seated in a chair which looks as though it is tumbling over. It may be, on the other hand, a shawm, which, according to Chappell, was the predecessor of the clarinet, and is akin to the shepherd's pipe. The shawm was evidently in use about the 15th century, and appears as one of the instruments in the minstrels' gallery at Exeter. There is very little likeness however; for this is more the shape and size of a piccolo played directly instead of transversely. The fingers of the left hand cover holes, whilst the little finger of the right hand appears to cover one near the bottom of the instrument, which (according to Grove) is the method employed by the Tyrolese peasant in playing the schalmey.

It is an interesting fact to note that the old Church-band was still used to accompany the services in Broad Chalke in living memory, and according to the sole surviving member of the choir of those days, it consisted of one clarinet, one cornet, two flutes, one bassoon, one bass viol, and one serpent—the last-named being described as exactly like the illustration given in Grove. The bass viol is described as being 'stroked' with a bow. This band was succeeded by a barrel organ. How are the mighty fallen!—for the Church band did more to keep alive music in a village than anything else, and in a Church where angels are depicted as playing on musical instruments, there must always have been an inspiration to offer that which is best.

* Carl Engel, 'Musical Instruments,' p. 119.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS

ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING

The sixty-second Annual General Meeting was held at the College, Kensington Gore, on Saturday, July 24, the President (Dr. H. W. Richards) being in the chair, supported by the following members of the Council: Dr. W. G. Alcock, M.V.O., Dr. G. J. Bennett, Prof. P. C. Buck, Mr. E. T. Cook, Mr. G. D. Cunningham, Mr. Harvey Grace, Dr. Alan Gray, Dr. A. Eaglefield-Hull, Dr. H. G. Ley, Dr. Charles Macpherson, Dr. C. Charlton Palmer, Mr. E. S. Roper, Dr. F. G. Shinn, Dr. H. Davan Wetton, and Dr. H. A. Harding (hon. secretary).

Amongst the members present were:

Messrs. E. G. W. Barrington, D. M. Bartlett, T. W. Beckett, H. H. Bedwell, F. W. Belchamber, E. E. Birtchnell, L. G. Blake, P. Bornet, Alan Brown, D. H. Brown, S. G. Brown, A. G. Bryant, P. Bulloch, A. W. Bunney, A. V. Butcher, C. W. Butlin, G. Catwell, E. R. Carlos, T. Carpenter, F. Chadwick, A. W. Clarke, E. A. Collins, Mrs. E. T. Cook, Miss F. E. Cross, Messrs. F. V. Curtis, S. C. Curtis, Miss V. F. M. Curtis, Messrs. R. F. J. Darch, F. T. Durrant, G. H. Eldridge, M. A. E. Farmer, L. Forder, N. W. N. Frayling, F. R. Frye, H. D. Gorvett, P. A. Grinyer, F. A. Grove, B. J. Hale, H. Hall, J. S. Hall, H. S. Hamer, J. Harnden, J. O. Harris, Miss E. Z. T. Hawkins, Messrs. D. S. Hayward, H. Hodge, J. F. Holland, D. Hopkins, E. C. Hopkins, W. G. Hopkins, P. Hosken, Miss E. C. Howard, Messrs. F. H. Howlett, J. E. Hunt, T. W. Hurst, Miss F. M. K. Ingham, Messrs. S. W. S. Ives, F. P. James, W. E. Johnson, J. E. Jones, W. P. Jones, M. H. Kirk, J. D. Kirkpatrick, R. S. J. Kimber, Miss F. M. Lamb, Messrs. F. A. Larhe, G. Leahe, A. F. Linfield, R. P. Lockhart, W. J. Madge, W. Mallinson, W. A. J. Manton, H. E. Marriott, W. J. Maybrey, A. W. McHattie, G. J. Metzler, W. H. Milnes, C. E. Monteath, P. O'Neill, A. Orton, H. B. Osmond, L. A. Pattison, O. H. Peasgood, A. C. Rackham, E. J. Rae, D. G. Rogers, E. J. F. Runechles, G. J. S. Ryan, A. R. Saunders, N. A. Sayers, F. C. R. Sealey, Miss E. Smith, Messrs. E. A. Smith, E. E. D. Smith, Miss K. C. Smith, Miss E. R. Southwell, Messrs. J. A. Sowerbutts, G. Spencer, A. M. Stacey, C. J. P. Stalain, W. A. Stevens, E. B. Sutton, Miss E. Thompson, Mr. P. B. Tonblings, Miss K. F. Tower, Messrs. A. E. Tucker, R. F. Tyler, F. W. Uppington, W. T. Upsher, W. Veitch, E. G. Wade, L. E. Ward, H. Wardale, J. G. Wardale, W. G. Webber, H. E. West, B. V. Westbrook, H. Wharton Wells, G. Williams, R. E. Willis, A. L. Wright.

The Minutes of the last Annual Meeting were read and confirmed.

The Hon. Secretary (Dr. H. A. Harding) read the Annual Report, as follows:

Your Council has the honour to report that during the past year the efforts of the College to maintain a high standard of efficiency in all branches of its work have been more than ever successful. There has been a large increase in membership.

Your Council reports that free lectures on Choir-Training were given at the College, on November 3, 1925, by Sir Walford Davies and Mr. Stanley Roper; at Leeds, on March 13, 1926, by Dr. Bairstow; and at Exeter, on March 13, 1926, by Dr. Bullock. The Leeds Parish Church Choir gave valuable assistance by providing illustrations for Dr. Bairstow's lecture, Dr. Tysoe presiding on this occasion.

Your Council wishes again to draw the earnest attention of members of the College to the Choir-Training Examinations, and to emphasise the necessity for special study of the choral side of an organist's profession. Both the Diploma and Certificate Choir-Training examinations will in future be held yearly, in the month of May.

A lecture was given at the College on May 15, 1926, by Mr. Quentin Maclean (organist of the Pavilion Theatre, Shepherd's Bush), on 'The Cinema Organist.' The Council hopes to arrange for further lectures on this important branch of the organist's profession.

The Council profoundly regrets that owing to severe illness and its necessary consequences of retirement from active professional life in London, and of reluctant absence from the Council meetings, the hon. treasurer, Dr. C. W. Pearce, feels it would be more advantageous for the College to elect another hon. treasurer. Dr. Pearce tenders his resignation with grief and regret, but with an abiding remembrance of 'the privilege and joy' which he has experienced in holding this responsible office for the last seventeen years. He expresses his best wishes for the continued prosperity of the 'dear old College.'

The Council wishes to place on record its grateful appreciation of the valued services of the hon. treasurer, Dr. C. W. Pearce, and offers him its sincerest thanks for the conspicuous efficiency and indefatigable thoroughness which have characterised his management of the finances of the College, and for the able and willing way in which he has served the College in various capacities for so many years.

The Council deplores the death of three distinguished vice-presidents: W. H. Leslie, R. Finnie McEwen, and Charles Wood.

The Examiners appointed for 1925-26 were: Dr. W. G. Alcock, Sir Ivor Atkins, Dr. E. C. Bairstow, Dr. G. J. Bennett, Prof. P. C. Buck, Dr. H. E. Darke, Dr. Alan Gray, Dr. A. Eaglefield-Hull, Dr. T. Keighley, Dr. H. G. Ley, Dr. H. W. Richards, Mr. E. S. Roper, and Dr. H. Davan Wetton.

Dr. Harding, whose splendid work has been repeatedly referred to, is happily still with us. He never spares himself or grudges his time as hon. secretary, and your Council wishes again to emphasise its obligation to him for his self-denying labours, which are so invaluable to this College.

A sincere expression of thanks is tendered to the hon. auditors, Mr. G. R. Ceiley and Mr. W. Glanvill Hopkins, and the professional auditors, Messrs. Pannell & Co., for their able services.

The Council wishes to record its deep sense of indebtedness to the esteemed registrar, Mr. Alan Shindler, for the careful, prompt, and efficient way in which he carries out the duties appertaining to his responsible office.

The loyal and ready services of the College staff continue to merit the commendation of the Council.

Mr. A. B. OSMOND proposed, and Mr. F. W. BELCHAMBER seconded the adoption of the Report, which was carried.

The Annual Financial Statement was adopted on the proposal of Mr. G. R. H. CLARK, seconded by Mr. E. E. DOUGLAS-SMITH.

The PRESIDENT: I am sure you will all share my feelings of regret that Dr. C. W. Pearce has found it necessary to resign the position of hon. treasurer of this College, which he has held with such zeal and ability for the last seventeen years. We deeply deplore his illness, and we shall miss him very much. We extend to him our very best wishes, and hope that in his retirement he will have a long life, and will be spared the worry of figures! I should like to propose in his place the name of Dr. F. G. Shinn, who is well known to everybody. It is so desirable that we should have some one as hon. treasurer who is level-headed and good at figures, as Dr. Shinn is. I am sure he will, by his energies and knowledge of business matters generally, give us help that will be for the benefit of this institution. Therefore I have very great pleasure in proposing Dr. F. G. Shinn to succeed Dr. Pearce as hon. treasurer of the R.C.O.

Prof. P. C. BUCK: May I second the election of Dr. Shinn? Anybody on the Council knows he is a very exact man, and that he has a capacity for taking infinite trouble. We should very much like to have him as hon. treasurer.

No other name was proposed, and the election of Dr. Shinn as hon. treasurer was carried with acclamation.

Dr. SHINN: When I proposed the election of Dr. Pearce, a year ago, for the hon. treasurership, I certainly never had the least suspicion that I should find myself in this position to-day. It was a great surprise to me when the Council suggested that I should be his successor, and I very cordially appreciate the honour. I will do my best to carry out the duties of the office. The hon. treasurer is not very much in the limelight, but I think it is due to the care and attention of the earlier hon. treasurers of the Royal College that when we came into this building some twenty years ago, we had sufficient funds to take it over and put it into a condition to suit our purposes. I think this is very much due to the business capacities of those early treasurers. Dr. Pearce has sustained that reputation, and kept the expenditure within bounds. I trust I shall be able to follow in his foot-steps in this respect.

Dr. ALAN GRAY, in proposing the re-election of Dr. H. A. Harding as hon. secretary, said: I am not going to say very much, because Dr. Harding's modesty on these occasions is almost painful to those who praise him, but it is a fact that I really do not know how we should have got on without Dr. Harding during the many years in which he has been secretary. When I was President, I was absolutely dependent for everything I did upon his advice, and I therefore have the very greatest pleasure in proposing this resolution, and forbear from saying more for the reason I have stated.

Dr. W. G. ALCOCK: I have very much pleasure in seconding this proposition.

Dr. Harding's election was carried with loud applause.

The PRESIDENT: One of our hon. auditors, Mr. Ceiley, after serving us faithfully for a good many years, has resigned, because he is going to America, and it is necessary to appoint some one in Mr. Ceiley's place.

Mr. WHARTON WELLS: I shall be very pleased to propose Mr. Glanvill Hopkins and Mr. Yarrow to be elected our hon. auditors for next year.

Mr. LEAKE seconded, and the resolution was carried.

Mr. ALAN BROWN proposed the election of Messrs. Pannell & Co. as professional auditors; this was seconded by Mr. FRYE, and carried.

The PRESIDENT: Now we have to elect members of the Council. There were only two Fellows nominated for the two London vacancies. One was Mr. E. S. Roper and the other Dr. Stanley Marchant. As there are only two nominated for two vacancies, I declare them elected. For the country, we had three names proposed for two vacancies. The scrutineers—Mr. Herbert Hodge and Mr. Wharton Wells—have delivered their report, and the votes recorded are:

Dr. Eaglefield-Hull	382
Dr. Keighley	344
Dr. Ivimey	181

I declare Dr. Eaglefield-Hull and Dr. Keighley elected as country members of the Council.

The Annual General Meeting then terminated.

DIPLOMA DISTRIBUTION *

Immediately after the Annual General Meeting, the President, Dr. H. W. Richards, presented the Diplomas to the recently-elected Fellows and Associates, and to the successful candidates at the CHM. (Choirmaster) examinations.

* The list of successful candidates appeared in the August Musical Times, p. 729.

The Hon. Secretary made the following announcements:

Fellowship Examination ... Lafontaine Prize T. W. Beckett
Turpin Prize C. T. Hart

No. of Candidates examined, 77 Passed, 26

Associateship Examination Lafontaine Prize C. H. Knight
Sawyer Prize W. J. Maybrey

No. of Candidates examined, 166 Passed, 31

Afterwards the following organ pieces, selected from the January Examination, 1927, were played by Mr. G. Thalben-Ball, organist of the Temple Church, the performance being broadcast by the B.B.C.:

FELLOWSHIP

Trio in C minor... ... ... J. S. Bach
(Novello, Book 12, p. 108; Augener, p. 1173; Peters, Vol. 9, No. 7.)

Fantasy Prelude ... ... Charles Macpherson
(No. 21 of Recital Series. Edited by E. H. Lemare. Novello.)

Andante from a Pianoforte Duet ... ... Mozart
(Arrangements for the Organ by J. Stainer, No. 2. Novello.)

ASSOCIATESHIP

Prelude (without Fugue) in A major ... ... J. S. Bach
(Novello, Book 3, p. 64; Augener, p. 187; Peters, Vol. 2, No. 3.)

No. 5, in G, of 'Six Short Preludes and Postludes,' 1st Set, Op. 101 ... ... Charles V. Stanford (Organ Library, Stainer & Bell.)

Very hearty thanks were accorded to Mr. Thalben-Ball for his splendid recital, every item of which was warmly applauded.

The President then addressed the meeting as follows:

THE IMAGINATION

Dr. H. W. RICHARDS said: The human mind is possessed of many and diverse powers. It is so complex that it is impossible to explain its multifarious activities. Undoubtedly one of its greatest powers is the imagination, and as we are all conscious of its mysterious force, I want to say a few words about it, as it affects the composer, the interpreter, and the listener. Like all great gifts it needs to be kept under control, for if carried to excess it may and probably will lead to some form of eccentricity, even to lunacy! When it becomes our master, it warps the intellect, destroys balance of mind, and causes us to indulge in vagaries of all kinds. If not allowed to run riot it is a priceless possession, and it can and should be cultivated, especially by the artist. Certain it is that the Poet, of whom Shakespeare says, 'of imagination all compact,' the Painter, and the Musician would be quite ineffectual without it. Presuming therefore that we aspire to be artistic, it is a vital part of our equipment, for imagination holds a unique place in the Art of Music. A composer, if he is worth anything at all, exercises his imagination in every phrase he commits to paper. Were it otherwise his music would be a mere mechanical compilation of notes. It is the imaginative background which gives life and durability to a composition—good music is never purposeless ingenuity. Beautiful sounds and beautiful progressions may be delightful in themselves, but without imagination underlying them they will convey no special meaning. Behind all beautiful sounds there must be an æsthetic message which will, as we say, strike the imagination of those who have cultivated the art of listening. Sound alone may satisfy some people, but they will ever remain unconscious of a composer's intentions and purpose. In playing or studying a work of art our knowledge of it and our æsthetic enjoyment of it will largely depend on our ability to get beyond the printed page. We have to dig down as it were, and try to share in the imaginative power which prompted the composer to write the various signs and symbols. It may not have occurred to us that they express something beyond that which is seen, and are meant to convey some spiritual message. 'The invisible things are understood through the things that are made.' The more we get to the depths of a great classic, the more it seems to become part of us; as we truly say, it grows upon us. There will spring up an intimate relationship between the composer's mind and our own. We shall enjoy the satisfactory feeling that the work was written entirely for us and for our profit and delectation. If we desire to hear the composer's message and to become the intelligent and sympathetic auditor, our imagination is the real key to musical appreciation. Let us think for a moment of the composer who sets words to music. Before he can make a beginning he must endeavour to reach the poet's mind and arrive at the inner significance of the words. Schubert seems to be pre-eminent in this matter. He sees a promise of music in the poetry, and the poetry seems to melt into his music. No wonder he is called the tone-poet, and acknowledged to be one of the greatest of all song writers. Now turn to a work of which organists are required to have a special knowledge, the 'Passion according to St. Matthew.' If Bach had not possessed an intensely vivid imagination, that dramatic masterpiece could never have been written. His whole being must have vibrated with the great tragedy. His understanding of human nature, his sympathy with suffering, his devotional piety had a powerful influence on his conception. Wonderful as is the score, it is not that, but his imaginative force which moves the human heart. The hearer need not be a Christian to realise the power of such a work, for, as we know, it makes a profound impression even on the unbeliever, by its inherent strength and depth of feeling. The more our imaginative faculty is developed the better shall we be able to visualise the various scenes of that unique story. Our nature will be stirred to the depths and we shall learn, it may be for the first time, why music is called the divine art. It is not only by a great work, like the 'St. Matthew' Passion, that an appeal is made. On the contrary, a miniature such as the smallest prelude by Chopin will speak to us in its own way if we have ears to hear. One is often asked, What is it that constitutes a great work? The answer is, in a word, The intangible imaginative force which created it. It is a commonplace that the works of a great genius are often not comprehended in his day. This means only that the composer's imagination has gone far ahead of his generation, and beyond the horizon of his hearers. The subtleties and suggestions contained in his compositions will be revealed to them only as their minds grow, for Art is an expression conveying thoughts and ideas, and we must have sufficient æsthetic perception to discern these through the medium of sound. As the song writer must get to the inner meaning of the words, so the interpreter, whatever music he is dealing with, must get beyond the notes, although the usual shallow-minded audience will never understand more than mere display. Their enjoyment will, however, be limited to that of technique, and they can never appreciate the thoughts and emotions which should be awakened by a sensitive artist, for we must remember that a really great performer will have weighed every phrase on some thought and feeling before it is ever heard by the public. To bring this matter nearer home, I have often wondered what the point of view is of many of our candidates when preparing for an examination. My experience tells me that some prepare with no thought at all, some practise with the metronome, others assiduously pull a work to pieces and, after dissection, laboriously put the puzzle together again. Do they ever try to realise the poetry of a composition, for the poetic and imaginative go hand in hand! It is a platitude to say that complete control over our muscles is essential so that the mind is left free for interpretation, but let me impress upon you that this is the point where the real study of music begins, and where we mostly fail. Do expression-marks mean anything more to us than just loud and soft? Does our phrasing convey anything to us beyond slurs, and places where our hands should be raised from the keys? Our performance ought, at least, to elicit the criticism that it was an attempt at a thoughtful interpretation. There are endless opportunities in all our work for the exercise of our imaginative quality, and even traces of it will lift the particular candidate far above the rank and file. If we are to be musicians in the real sense we must infuse mind into all we do, and surround our work with an atmosphere of imaginative feeling. I have tried briefly to sketch out an ideal; without it our efforts will make no appeal and of course arouse no response. With the hope that these few words will stimulate us to think of inner significance—in a word, to become more the imaginative artist—I will conclude.

DR. SHINN: My first duty since I was elected hon. treasurer is a particularly pleasant one. It is to propose a very hearty vote of thanks to Dr. Richards for so ably filling the post of President during the past two years. We have a regulation time of two years for the President, and this is the last time that Dr. Richards will appear in public in that capacity. We have had for our Presidents some of the most eminent English musicians, but we have had no one who has realised more fully the duties of his office or performed them more carefully than has Dr. Richards. There are some matters which are in evidence before you so far as the result is concerned, but their origin is in the secrets of the Council chamber. Two of them are due absolutely to the initiative of our President. Just before he was elected, Dr. Richards made a suggestion that we should bring our theoretical papers more in touch with modern ideas. I do not say that he is responsible for everything in those papers, but his was the initiative, and he proposed that we should recast the whole of the paper work, and, as you know, about two years ago it assumed a very different aspect from what it had before. The fact that at our meetings in the last two years we have, after the organ recital, gone upstairs and had a particularly happy meeting together, is entirely due to the suggestion of Dr. Richards. It was his idea that we should have these gatherings. I would like to ask you to give Dr. Richards a very hearty vote of thanks for his hard work, and for those admirable addresses which he has given us on every occasion over which he has presided.

Prof. BUCK seconded this resolution, which was adopted with renewed and lengthy applause.

Dr. RICHARDS: I greatly appreciate all that has fallen from the lips of Dr. Shinn. I assure you that I do not deserve those eulogies he has passed upon me. The Council has always been most considerate and helpful to me while I have been in this honoured position, and it has assisted me in every way. Dr. Harding has, of course, been a perfect rock of strength. Whenever I was inclined to go a little astray, he was always after me, and I had to be very careful! One thing he flatly refused to do: When I asked him kindly to dispense with the vote of thanks to the President, he would not do it; hence my confused delivery at this moment. After all, one can only do his best, and I assure you I have tried to do that. I have belonged to the College for at least forty years, and I have tried to do what I could for this institution. I am sure the College will go on prospering as it has done in the past, and will continue to do its utmost for organists. It will be an immense satisfaction to you to know that our friend and famous organist, Dr. W. G. Alcock, M.V.O., is going to succeed me in this honourable position as President. Again I must express my deep gratitude to you all for your leniency, kindness, and consideration while I have been in the chair. I shall always be glad to look back upon these pleasant associations. We have a few minutes to spare, and we might profitably fill the time by listening to anything that any member has to say. But if you make remarks, do not talk about yourself, and direct them to the best interests of the College.

Miss K. CHOLDITCH SMITH begged leave to say a few words, and she entertained the audience with a vigorous and amusing onslaught on the acoustical tolerance of musical people in general, referring to motor-hooters, excessive church bell-ringing, &c.

The PRESIDENT: We now bring this meeting to a close. Before doing so, however, I should like to say that we have received letters of sincere regret for non-attendance from Sir Hugh Allen, Dr. John B. McEwen, Mr. H. Cart de Lafontaine, and other distinguished vice-presidents, who would have been with us to-day but for important engagements elsewhere.

THE CONVERSAZIONE

was attended by a large company of members and friends. The gathering was indeed a greater social success than ever. If this function grows much more, the Council will find it necessary to engage the Albert Hall for its accommodation!

RIPON CATHEDRAL

The Cathedral organ, which has been dismantled since Easter, is approaching completion under Messrs. Harrison & Harrison. The whole of the daily choral services have been sung without accompaniment, and a series of six unaccompanied Motet recitals has been given by the Cathedral Choir in the South Transept, under Dr. C. H. Moody. Each recital was prefaced with a brief address in which Dr. Moody outlined the principal features of the works to be sung. The programmes consisted of about fifty Motets, and included works by Tallis, Whyte, Byrd, Croft, Amner, Purcell, Gibbons, Wilbye, Batten, Holst, Bantock, Bach, Ouseley, Palestrina, Allegri, Vittoria, Cornelius, Dering, the Wesleys, and other representative composers. The recitals revealed the fact that in this highly-resonant building the South Transept is the ideal place for effective performance of purely choral works. The collections have been devoted to augmenting the stipend of the Cathedral lay-clerks.

ST. BEES PRIORY CHURCH: CENTENARY OF W. T. BEST

The birth centenary of this Cumberland musician was worthily celebrated at St. Bees. On Friday, August 13, Mr. F. J. Livesey, organist and choirmaster of the Priory Church, gave a recital of Best's organ music, with the following programme: Concert Overture (C major); twelve short Preludes on old English Psalm-Tunes; Adagio (A flat major); Fugue (E major); Marcia Eroica and Finale; Pastorale in D; Andante (B flat major); Allegro Festivo. The pieces chosen displayed to full advantage the fine reed work with which the Willis organ is so amply furnished. On Sunday, August 15, the whole of the music at both services was selected from Best's Church compositions. The Benedicite in C, excerpts from the Service in D, written specially for the opening of the Willis organ at Carlisle Cathedral, in 1856, and the anthem, 'The Lord is great,' were included.

ALEXANDRA PALACE ORGAN RESTORATION FUND

In aid of the above fund, 'Elijah' will be performed on October 9. The choir will consist of the Alexandra Palace and City Temple Choral Societies combined, and the co-operation of other choirs is being arranged. There will be an augmented orchestra. Choirs or musical societies wishing to take part are invited to communicate with the hon. secretary of the Fund, 14, Windermere Road, N.19.

The West Riding Cathedral Choirs Association (Wakefield, Sheffield, and Bradford) held its fourth annual Festival at Wakefield Cathedral on July 17, when about a hundred and twenty singers took part. The Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis were sung to Elvey in A, and the anthems were Wesley's 'In exitu Israel' and Charles Wood's 'Hail, gladdening Light.' The organists were Mr. T. W. Hanforth (Sheffield Cathedral), who played Mendelssohn's fourth Sonata before the service, and Mr. H. Coates (Bradford Cathedral), whose concluding voluntary was the first movement of Faulkes's Sonata in D minor. Mr. J. N. Hardy (Wakefield Cathedral) conducted.

We are glad to hear that the fine musical services held on Saturday afternoons at Southwark Cathedral are to be continued during the coming season. There was a risk of their being dropped, owing to the collections having failed to meet the heavy liabilities, and a deficit of £150 had accumulated. About £50 has just been raised by means of a special appeal. But the obvious need is for a more generous collection from the two thousand persons who, on an average, attend these services. A few more pence per head all round would save the situation.

About three hundred singers (including ninety-eight women) joined forces at a Choral Festival at Bury St. Edmunds on July 24, under the auspices of the Suffolk Diocesan Church-Music Society. There was a choral Eucharist at mid-day, sung to Marbecke. The Canticles at the evening service were sung to Wesley's Chant Service in F, and the anthem was Goss's 'O praise the Lord.' The Cathedral choir sang descants to the hymns. The Rev. A. H. Stevens conducted, and Mr. C. J. Harold Shann was at the organ.

On July 22, at Wells Cathedral, took place a Choral Festival, mainly for village choirs. There were nearly eight hundred singers, drawn from over thirty churches. The music was, designedly, simple, and included Macpherson's chant setting of the Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Croft's anthem 'God is gone up,' Somervell's Te Deum, and Walford Davies's setting of 'Mine eyes have seen the glory of the coming of the Lord.' Canon D. Davies, the Cathedral organist, conducted, and his sub-organist, Mr. Trevor, accompanied.

The annual Festival of the Rochester Diocesan Choirs Association took place at Rochester Cathedral on July 21, when over eight hundred singers were present. Mr. C. Hylton Stewart conducted, and secured fine results. The anthem was Goss's 'O praise the Lord,' and the Canticles were sung to Wesley in F. Mr. Percy Whitlock accompanied, and gave a short recital, and Mr. H. G. Pocknall acted as sub-conductor.

It is proposed to erect in Slough Parish Church a carved oak organ-screen as a memorial to the late Alfred T. Blanchet, whose long term of service at that Church ended with his sudden death (practically at the keyboard) in April. Any friends of this gifted musician who wish to contribute are asked to send their donations to the Churchwardens, St. Mary's Parish Church, Slough.

About two hundred and fifty singers took part in a Festival at St. Laurence's Church, Reading, on July 21, organized by the Berkshire Organists' Association. The anthems were Purcell's 'Thou knowest, Lord,' the 'Hallelujah Chorus,' and Parry's 'Jerusalem.' The President of the Association, Dr. A. C. P. Embling, conducted, and various organists took part as accompanists and soloists.

At the sixth and last of the fine series of recitals of unaccompanied Motets at Ripon Cathedral, on July 25, the programme included Whyte's 'O praise God,' Byrd's 'Sing joyfully,' Purcell's 'Let my prayer come up,' Samuel Wesley's 'In exitu Israel,' Bach's 'My soul, O praise the Lord,' &c. Dr. C. H. Moody conducted, and introduced the items with preliminary remarks.

At John Street Wesleyan Church, Chester, on July 17, a new organ (a three-manual, built by Messrs. Binns) was dedicated. The choir sang John E. West's anthem, 'Hark! hark! the organ loudly peals.' Mr. J. T. Hughes, organist of Chester Cathedral, gave a recital, playing Handel's Overture to 'Athaliah,' Bach's G minor Fugue, 'Finlandia,' &c.

On August 4, at Cromer Parish Church, an organ-violin-vocal recital was given by Mr. Alan Burr, the Dowager Lady Cozens-Hardy, and the Hon. Mrs. F. M. Bailey. The programme included organ works by Harwood, Karg-Elert, and F. W. Holloway, violin solos by Bach, Mattheson, Couperin, and Rheinberger, and songs by Dvorák, Burr, and Boughton.

We note with interest that at a recital at Chicago recently, Mr. Lynnwood Farnam, by way of encore, played a Clementi Sonatina 'with charming effect,' says the newspaper report. So much old and simple pianoforte music is highly effective on light organ stops, that we wonder recitalists do not explore its possibilities.

The organ at Rosegrave Wesleyan Church, Burnley, was opened on July 25, after renovation, when a recital was given by Mr. James Armistead. His programme included Handel's Overture to 'Otho,' Bach's Prelude and Fugue in A minor, Boëllmann's Toccata, &c.

At St. Mary Magdalene's, Torquay, on August 8, at Evensong, a selection of Elizabethan music was sung: Weelkes's six-part 'Gloria in Excelsis' and 'Let Thy merciful care,' and Byrd's 'Agnus Dei,' 'Lullaby, my sweet little Baby,' and 'Make ye joy to God.'

The organ at the Church of the Immaculate Conception, Farm Street, W., is to be entirely rebuilt by Messrs. Henry Willis & Sons.

We had something of a shock on seeing this caption in a recent issue of the Diapason:

NO MEAL FOR THE LICE.

But the sub-titles calmed us:

ORGAN IS OF MAHOGANY.

ENEMY IN CUBA OVERCOME.

NEW MATERIAL TO BE USED BY SKINNER COMPANY AT HAVANA TO MAKE IT UNPALATABLE FOR INSECTS WHICH FEAST ON PINE.

RECITALS

Dr. Barrow Dowling, St. George's Cathedral, Cape Town—Suite No. 1, Borowski; Andante (Concerto No. 4), Sterndale Bennett. (The boys of the choir sang 'Let the bright seraphim.')

Dr. Henry Ley, Eton College—Toccata and Fugue in F and Prelude and Fugue in B minor, Bach; Canon in B minor, Schumann; Fantasia on 'St. Anne,' Parry; Prelude, Fugue, and Variation, Franck; Toccata, Widor.

Mr. H. Cyril Robinson, St. John's, Barmouth—Military March, Schubert; Prelude and Fugue in E minor, Bach; Preludes on 'Rockingham' and 'Old 104th,' Parry; 'Finlandia.' (Dr. and Mrs. J. R. Heath, violin and viola, joined the recitalist in Trios by Brahms and Leclair.)

Miss Lilian Coombes, St. Mary-le-Bow—Intermezzo on an Irish Air, Stanford; Scherzo, Gigout; Fugue in E minor, Bach; Moderato Cantabile and Finale (Symphony No. 8), Widor.

Mr. William J. Tubbs, St. Mary-le-Bow, E.C.—Variations on an Original Theme, J. Stuart Archer; Prelude and Fugue in A minor, Bach; Psalm-Prelude No. 1, Howells; Violin Sonata in F, Handel (soloist, Mr. Hugh M. Matheson).

Mr. Harry Wall, St. Andrew's, Whitehall Park, N.—Concerto in B flat, Felton; Voluntary in F, Stanley; Sonata in E flat, Bach; Sonata No. 5, Rheinberger.

Mr. Eric Seymour, St. Dunstan's-in-the-East, E.C.—Prelude and Fugue in D minor, Mendelssohn; Prelude to Act 3, 'The Mastersingers'; Marche Héroïque, Saint-Saëns.

Mr. W. H. Vipond Barry, St. Bartholomew's, Dublin—Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Concerto No. 4, Handel; Adagio and Finale (Symphony No. 6), Widor.

Dr. J. H. Reginald Dixon, St. Michael the Archangel, Whittington-in-Lonsdale—Suite Gothique, Boëllmann; 'St. Francis preaching to the birds' and 'St. Francis walking on the waves,' Liszt; Introduction and Variations on 'Sedbergh,' Dixon; Scherzo in F, Bossi.

Mr. C. Hylton Stewart, Canterbury Cathedral—Passacaglia, Bach; Sonata No. 11, Rheinberger; Preludes on 'St. Bride,' Kitson; 'Martyrdom,' Parry; 'Martyrs,' Grace.

Mr. Charles J. King, St. Matthew's, Northampton—Concerto in A, Handel-Best; Adagio e dolce (Sonata No. 3), Bach; Sonata No. 3, Rheinberger; Air in A, varied, and Fugato, Smart.

Mr. Herbert Hodge, St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, E.C.—Sonata No. 6, Rheinberger; Sonata No. 1, Mendelssohn; Bridal March from the 'Birds,' Parry; Air with Variations in A, Hesse.

Dr. W. H. Hickox, St. Botolph's, Bishopsgate—Prelude and Fugue in E minor and Fantasia and Fugue in A minor, Bach; Agitato (Sonata No. 11), Rheinberger; Two Choral Improvisations, Karg-Elert; Overture to 'Semele'; 'Cloister-Garth,' Herbert Brewer.

Mr. G. W. Harris Sellick, Manchester Cathedral—Overture to 'Athaliah'; Trio-Sonata No. 1, Bach; Psalm-Prelude No. 2, Howells; Scherzo (Symphony No. 2), Vierne.

Mr. Lewis M. Jones, St. Lawrence Jewry—Three Miniatures, Pullein; Canzonet, B. Johnson; Lamento, Barié; Prelude and Fugue in G, Bach; Intermezzo in B, Rheinberger.

Dr. Stanley Marchant, St. Lawrence Jewry—Overture to 'Athaliah'; Larghetto in F sharp minor, Wesley; Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Fugue in C minor, Mendelssohn; Finale (Sonata No. 7), Rheinberger.

Mr. Guy Michell, Parish Church, Church Stretton—Fantasia in F minor, Mozart; Allegretto in B minor, Vierne; 'Great' G minor Fugue, Bach; Prière, Borowski.

Mr. J. E. Gomersall, St. Mark's, Reigate—'Le Carillon,' Wolstenholme; Evening Song, Bairstow; Marcia dei Bardi, Bossi.

Mr. J. Albert Sowerbutts, St. Lawrence Jewry—Voluntary in G, Stanley; Scherzo in F, Bennett; Fantasia and Fugue in E minor, Best; Wedding March, Harwood.

Dr. Harold Darke, St. Lawrence Jewry—Fantasia in F minor, Mozart; Toccata and Fugue in C, Bach; Psalm-Prelude No. 1, Howells; Idylle and Toccata (Sonata No. 14), Rheinberger.

Mr. Ernest F. Mather, St. Dunstan-in-the-East—Prelude and Fugue in B minor, Bach; Adagio and Scherzo (Sonata No. 5), Rheinberger; Prelude on B A C H, Liszt; Prelude in F, Stanford; Pièce Héroïque, Franck.

Dr. Chastey Hector, Brighton Parish Church—Overture in D minor, Handel; Trio in C minor, Bach; First movement (Sonata in G), Elgar.

Dr. H. C. L. Stocks, St. Asaph Cathedral—Chorale Preludes: 'Vater Unser,' Bach; 'Nach einer Prüfung,' Karg-Elert; Sonata No. 4, Mendelssohn; Requiem Æternam, Harwood.

Mr. Ralph T. Langdon, St. John the Evangelist, Edinburgh—Sonata No. 5, Mendelssohn; Lament, Harvey Grace; Choral No. 1, Franck; Carillon, Vierne; Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Ave Maria, Karg-Elert; Visione, Rheinberger.

Miss Emmie Bowman, St. Edmund's, Hunstanton—Concerto in D minor, Handel; Pastorale, Franck; 'Chant de Mai,' Jongen; 'From Hebrid Seas,' Nesbitt.

Mr. Herbert F. Ellingford, St. George's Hall, Liverpool—Prelude and Fugue in A minor, Bach; Introduction, Variations, and Fugue on 'Sedbergh,' J. H. R. Dixon; Fantasie Etude, Best; Noël, Wolstenholme; Fantasia in F minor, Mozart; Overture to 'Semiramide,' Rossini.

Mr. Owen le P. Franklin, St. Clement's, Eastcheap—Prelude and Fugue in G, Bach; Prelude on 'Rhosymedre,' Vaughan Williams; Choral No. 3, Franck; Passacaglia (Sonata No. 8), Rheinberger.

Mr. H. Moreton, Plymouth Guildhall—Prelude and Fugue in D, Bach; Hymne à Victor Hugo, Saint-Saëns; Andante and Finale (Sonata No. 7), Rheinberger; Finale (Sonata Eroica), Stanford.

Dr. Harold Rhodes, St. John's, Torquay—Prelude and Fugue in D minor, Mendelssohn; Allegretto in G minor, Elgar; Pièce Héroïque, Franck; Prelude and Fugue in C minor, Bach; Introduction and Fugue on B A C H, Liszt.

APPOINTMENTS

Miss Alice D. Barklie, organist, St. Michael's, Bognor.

Mr. Allanson Brown, choirmaster and organist, Alnwick Parish Church.

Mr. H. E. Carrington, choirmaster and organist, Christ Church, South Hackney, E.

Mr. Dudley H. Chalk, choirmaster and organist, Woodberry Down Baptist Church, N.

Mr. Archibald Curtis, choirmaster and organist, St. Paul's, Camden Square, N.W.

Mr. Archibald Farmer, choirmaster and organist, St. John's, Southwick Crescent, W.

Mr. George C. Gray, choirmaster and organist, St. Mary-le-Tower, Ipswich.

Miss Marjorie Grew, choirmaster and organist, Ram's Episcopal Church, Homerton.

Mr. Edward R. Pierssené, choirmaster and organist, St. George's Cathedral, Jerusalem.

Mr. S. D. Roberts, choirmaster and organist, St. Matthew's, Sheffield.

Mr. Leonard H. Warner, choirmaster and organist, St. Botolph's, Bishopsgate.

Mr. J. W. Yabsley, choirmaster and organist, St. Benet Fink, Tottenham.

Letters to the Editor

THE IRISH HORSE GUARDS' DRUM: WHO WAS ROBERT HORNE?

SIR,—In regard to the query raised by Mr. E. J. Seccombe in the July issue of the Musical Times, under the above caption (p. 645), as you have passed on the matter to me for investigation, the following note may be of interest.

Let me at once say that the drum described by Mr. Seccombe cannot claim any great antiquity. One thing is certain, it never belonged to any of the Irish regiments of King James II. (1689-90), for the simple reason that the maker did not flourish until the last quarter of the 18th century. Through the courtesy of my friend, Mr. Arthur F. Hill, 140, New Bond Street, London, I am able to give the text of one of the trade cards issued by Robert Horne, of No. 20, Barbican, London, in the years 1780-90:

Robert Horne
Drum Maker,
to his MAJESTY's Office of Ordnance, at the Drum & Colours, No. 20 Barbican,
LONDON.
Makes Drums, either of Wood or Brass, for the Naval or Military Service, in the Compleatest Manner;
ALSO Regimental Colours & Standards for Foot & Horse.
Captains Spontoons, Serjeants Halberts,
Officers and Serjeants Sashes, Silver and Gilt Gorgets, Regimental Fifes and Cases,
With all Sorts of Trophys for Armys and Militias; Merchants Supplyed on the shortest notice,
And Most Reasonable Terms,
Old Drums Bought Sold & Repaired.

In Pigot's 'Directory' for the year 1824 I find, under the heading of Musical Instrument Makers in London, the name of Robert Horne, DRUMS, &c.; but his address at this date was 14, Whitecross Street, Cripplegate. Probably the drum dates from 1790.—Yours, &c.,

Enniscorthy, Dublin. W. H. GRATTAN FLOOD.

A WORD FOR SCRIABIN

SIR,—I have read Mr. Brent-Smith's article on Scriabin with considerable surprise. It seems to me that he is attempting a task in which King Canute signally failed. Mr. Brent-Smith's burlesque hardly does the composer justice. Placed in such a light of ridicule Holy Writ itself could be made to look absurd. Why Mr. Brent-Smith should imagine that Scriabin's harmonic system was less a spontaneous method of self-expression than that of Debussy, I cannot conceive. His statement that the common chords are of natural origin is certainly startling. The very idea of the combination of one human voice with another at different pitch is artificial, and the system at present governing the intervals of sound is, of course, man-made. Mr. Brent-Smith's assertion reminds me of Marie Corelli's views on 'God's Time.' The test (and, I think, the justification) of Scriabin's method lies in the hearing of his works, not in the analysis of the harmony by reading the scores. His work should stand or fall as music, and consideration of it should be unhampered by the philosophic theories which may or may not have actuated him during its composition.

Scriabin has been subjected to every assault, and yet his music gains additional acceptance every day. It has been performed by some of the greatest musicians of our time, including Eugen d'Albert, Backhaus, Gieseking, Fredman, Hofmann, Victor Schiöler, Rachmaninov, Arthur Rubinstein, A. Borowsky, N. Orloff, Frederic Lamond, Fanny Davies, and, among conductors, by Sir Henry Wood, Albert Coates, Safonov, Kussewitzky, Mengelberg, &c.

It is quite possible that Mr. Brent-Smith is temperamentally unable to appreciate such essentially un-English music, but I think it would be a great mistake to dismiss it as totally worthless.—Yours, &c., ERNEST FENNELL.

'CASTLE SOCIETY OF MUSIC'

Sir,—I am desirous of obtaining information concerning the 'Castle Society of Music,' which met, I believe, at a tavern in the vicinity of Paternoster Row. The earliest date-reference to this Society is, I think, 1724, and I imagine Mr. Kidson is the authority for this. I can find no article upon the Society in 'Grove,' but am under the impression that it played an important part in music between the date mentioned and 1750. I should be grateful to any of your readers for particulars of this old musical Society, which gave, I think, a series of regular concerts.—Yours, &c., (Miss) M. Broderick.

'Tangerby,' Portsmouth Road, Surbiton.

RADIO SINGERS' WORDS: WHERE ARE THEY?

Sir,—Now that wireless speakers have been drilled in the niceties of pronunciation, what of the sins of the singers? When a speaker used one of two alternative pronunciations for a word, the listener-in did at least know what he meant. Can the same be said of the impression left by certain singers?

It may appear incredible, but it is a fact that there are wireless singers to-day who actually do not trouble about the words of the song they sing. They think of the voice, of how they can arrange for a particular effect, and the result of all this posturing is disastrous for the unhappy listener-in.

'Nerves' are another frequent cause of failure. I myself do not broadcast, but in my gramophone work I sing into a microphone. I am never nervous there unless I have been away for a time, when I take perhaps an hour before I get into my stride.

Many wireless singers, on the other hand, do get a fit of nerves when they remember the millions who are listening to them, and that makes them go for the song with much too much voice. Now, economy in voice is the greatest asset of a wireless artist. A whisper is heard where a shout would become a blur, and the singer from whom the listener-in hears every word is the one who sings quietly at the microphone mouth.

Surely a little gentle supervision here would be at least as welcome to listeners-in as the selection of the more correct of two correct pronunciations of 'idyll'?—Yours, &c.,

10, Evelyn Grove, Peter Dawson.
Ealing, W.5.

FOURTHS, FIFTHS, AND SIXTHS

Sir,—I am sorry to say I cannot find any explanation of the (sometimes) bad effect of consecutive fifths in Mr. Swinburne's long letter. In that letter there are, moreover, several statements to which, I think, most musicians will demur.

Music is not 'built up entirely of grouplets of two or three chords.' The motive is the unit, and it may comprise more than three chords. Neither is it the case that many pairs of common chords 'will not form doublets.' An example of dominant harmony followed by subdominant occurs in Purcell's well-known single chant in A minor. Neither can I admit that 'chords a third apart . . . do not make good doublets': I cannot imagine a smoother progression than that from any common chord to its relative. I must also deny that 'the notes that settle what a common chord is, are the root and the fifth,' for these do not tell us whether the chord be major or minor.

But if all these things were as Mr. Swinburne says, they would not explain why consecutive fifths are sometimes objectionable—the latter are still in the position of Dr. Fell. However, I did not assume that the 'explanation' was new: I merely stated that it was new to me.—Yours, &c.,

5, Richmond Mansions, Arthur T. Froggatt.
Denton Road, Twickenham.

PROUT'S 'HEDGING'

Sir,—In the matter of stating a case or clearing a difficulty the late Ebenezer Prout probably stands first among our theoretical writers; his literary style was also exceptionally good.

But, like Dr. Froggatt, I discovered him on one occasion inclined to 'hedge' at a difficulty. I refer to his statement that the trumpet is the loudest instrument of the orchestra. During my student days I pointed out to him that Riemann gives the trombone that honour. Prout replied that he still maintained his position, and that the whole thing rested on 'the point of view.' What the varying points of view were I never discovered; but I am inclined to go with Riemann, if the definition of loudness being dependent on the amplitude of the vibrations holds good.—Yours, &c., J. Sutcliffe Smith.

Harrogate.

'THE VIBRATO,' 'COVERED TONE,' AND OTHER VOCAL MATTERS

Sir,—The free discussion of vocal problems may eventually enable us to reconcile conflicting ideas, and arrive at a common understanding from which will arise standardised principles tending to the development of a school of English singing as fine and as distinctive in its way as was that of Italy in its own particular day. The correspondence on 'The Vibrato and other Vocal Matters,' running through several issues of the Musical Times, was of great interest, and I regret that conditions of time and distance prevented me from taking part in it whilst current. But perhaps, on the plea that the search for truth should know no time-limit, I may be permitted, as a far-away and independent observer, to offer a belated comment based upon twenty-five years' study, investigation, and practical experience.

Excepting religion and politics, there is doubtless no subject which has been a more fruitful source of controversy, debate, and flat contradiction, than voice-production, i.e., the development and cultivation of the singing voice. And, like politicians and divines, adherents of different schools and methods deny virtue to each other's beliefs, and refuse to see light that is supplied by any other lamp than their own.

Vocal perfection itself—the object in view—is variously defined and understood; and devotees of 'open tone,' 'closed tone,' 'covered tone,' 'mixed voice,' 'forward production,' 'central production,' 'mask production,' 'sinus production,' &c., rage furiously together. All sorts of specifics for attaining vocal greatness (in a physical sense) are advocated: control of the breath, of the 'false cords,' of the soft palate, of the resonating chambers, of the glottis, of the larynx, of the diaphragm, of the 'vibrating column,' of the hypo-glossus muscle, and goodness knows what else besides! I remember that one of my own teachers made all his pupils look down at the floor 'to place the voice,' whilst the next made them look up at the ceiling, with the same object.

That ancient battle-horse, the 'Old Italian Method,' nowadays parades in as many different guises as there are days in the year, and exponents of the 'Garcia Method,' the 'Marchesi Method,' the 'Lamparti Method,' and the 'de Rezske Method,' are to be found everywhere, although, if these celebrated teachers' opinions could be ascertained by occult means, fully ninety-five per cent. of the teaching that is carried on under the august shadow of their names would in all probability be indignantly disowned.

Finally, we have the advocates of 'naturalness,' who assert that singers are born, not made, and that technical training destroys feeling and develops artificiality. 'Watch the birds, and sing as they do,' was the advice given to students by a cantatrice of great renown who recently visited Australia. It is not surprising, therefore, that many would-be singers feel they are groping in the dark for knowledge which eludes them, for lack of a capable guide.

But in spite of all this, there are strong indications that in the training of the singing voice we are slowly progressing in the direction of soundness, simplicity, and common-sense, and that we may eventually—discarding fanciful theories and alleged 'secrets' or 'exclusive methods'—reach a firm and solid basis on which to erect a sturdy and unshakable edifice of vocal art and skill, equal to all requirements, operatic or otherwise, and comparable to the highest standard attained by any other race.

That such a basis is sadly needed must be apparent to all who, as examiners or adjudicators, are accustomed to hear a varied assortment of voices which have undergone some kind of training—good, bad, or indifferent, as the case may be; or to singers, who like myself in youthful days, have spent several years in an unavailing quest for the essential attributes of vocal ease and endurance, combined with excellence of quality and naturalness of style. In my own case the final outcome was severe throat trouble and complete temporary loss of voice, brought about by a course of Italian training on 'open' production. The 'maestro,' now dead, was an artist of international reputation, but he did not understand the voice—or, at any rate, the English voice. That this was by no means an unusual experience I already knew, and subsequent years have brought very many similar cases under my notice. It is not without ample cause that Mr. Charles Tree, in his valuable little book, 'How to acquire ease of voice-production,' draws attention to the deplorable fact that many fine young voices do not last through the period of training; and Sir Henry Wood once said:

> 'It is as grievous to think of the number of voices ruined and annihilated by bad teaching as of the legion of lost souls.'

Competent authorities in Italy, France, and America have deplored the existence of a like weakness there. Every thoughtful observer is acquainted with the uncertainty which attaches to the process of vocal training in general, and the fact that much of it is futile and ineffective, if not positively injurious. Although bad tuition on the violin or pianoforte may spoil your chances of becoming a first-class player, it cannot spoil the instrument itself, or take away your power of playing, yet bad tuition in singing often has this very effect.

The injurious results of mis-using the voice are not at first perceptible, except to the expert ear, and singers themselves generally fail to realise, until too late, that they have been following the wrong track. But the attempt to obtain 'big tone,' or an immediate increase of compass by using physical force instead of skill, inevitably brings about loss of the finer qualities of the voice, and sometimes damages it beyond repair.

The conservation of the voice for the future should be one of the most important considerations in vocal training, and I agree with Mr. Travers Adams that 'cantabile open tone,' approached and developed by way of 'covered' tone, is not only of superior quality and greater artistic value, but is more dependable in every way than the declamatory 'open' tone relied upon by many teachers from the commencement of study, which results only too often in vocal instability, faulty intonation, forcing of the upper register, and a short-lived career.

A persistent vibrato has negatived many a singer's hopes of success, and it is noteworthy that in America no less than in England it is considered a disqualification. Dr. Holbrook Curtis, for twenty-five years throat specialist at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, in his work on 'Voice-Building and Tone-Placing,' remarks:

> 'The vibrato is popular among the Latin races, while the Anglo-Saxons will not tolerate it. No singer with a vibrato has ever secured recognition in the United States as being of the first rank.'

I have never met Mr. Travers Adams, and know of him only through his contributions to the musical press over a lengthy period and his handbook on 'Physical Development in Relation to Voice-Production'; but these reveal him as one of the leaders of vocal thought; and experience has proved that the principles outlined by him in your November and March issues, if carefully followed out, can be depended upon to produce consistently satisfactory results—the greatest good for the greatest number—unlike the 'hit-or-miss' methods upon which so many rely. After independently arriving at the same conclusions, I have been able to test them extensively on this side of the globe; and I am also acquainted with several leading American teachers whose ideas and ideals are in close agreement with those of Mr. Adams. Amongst them is Edmund J. Myer, author of 'Vocal Reinforcement,' in which he states:

> 'If true conditions prevail, then we shall have the most perfect, the most beautiful, the most useful tone that the human voice is capable of producing. The tone that is susceptible of the greatest variety of shades of power, of colour, and of effect; the tone that has the richest, warmest colour, and the finest carrying quality. This medium tone that is called "covered," is more desirable than the open tone, because it has more variety of colour, more intensity, more soul, and yet the same freedom of action, and even more power. The rich covered voice in solo singing will fill a larger house than the more open tone.'

I have read that the voices of both Jenny Lind and Patti were of the rounded or 'covered' type, and a modern prima-donna, Galli-Curci, is reported as saying:

> 'Covered singing is the only singing which really deserves the name. It is not produced by a closed throat. . . . And this beautiful "covered" voice carries much further than a voice which is shrill. . . . To me it is the ideal tone.' ('The Art of the Prima-Donna,' by F. H. Martens, p. 108.)

Further on we read:

> 'When you find that your tones are inclined to be white, try to mix judiciously with them a little of the oo or o quality, to make the tone darker, more expressive.'

Confirming teacher and singer, the scientist, Dr. Holbrook Curtis, already quoted, affirms that 'the nearer a tone may be sung to simulate a "closed" quality, even when sung with the chest mechanism, the better the result.' In other words, the 'covering' or rounding of the tone, judiciously effected, gives greater richness and mellowness to the voice without impairing its sonority or carrying power. 'Closed' quality, of course, does not imply 'closed throat,' as many mistakenly think. And with regard to the vowel oo, mentioned by several correspondents, one important reservation must be made. If sung as in 'pool,' 'room,' 'brood,' &c., it is apt to give a tone hollow and 'tuby' in effect, from being formed (as with other English vowel sounds) too low down in the throat. Equal roundness of tone with an appreciably higher and more forward placing can be obtained by practice on the ou sound as in 'should,' 'good,' 'wood,' &c., and this can be made as resonant and intense as ee or ai.

High, forward placing, combined with deep resonance (the larynx not fixed, but automatically assuming a moderately low position), develops colour and beauty as well as resonance and carrying power—the kind of tone associated in my mind with such artists as Plançon, Van Rooy, Battistini, Kirkby Lunn, Nordica, Journet, Destinn, and others whose careers were notable for both length and distinction.

Surely there is nothing in modern opera that demands greater declamatory power or more stamina than Wagner, and it is well within living memory that Jean de Reszke, Ternina, Lehmann, Bispham, and other great artists demonstrated the possibility of singing Wagner with real beauty of tone and a true legato style. Why then, depart from the latter—the foundation of vocal art—on the pretext that 'modern modes of expression demand modern methods of voice-production'?

Correct voice-production is simply the carrying out of rational laws founded upon the observation of natural processes drawn from the examples of the finest artist-singers, with the additional support nowadays of knowledge derived from scientific investigation and medical research, whereby we are enabled to trace the relationship between cause and effect, and to show why certain things are beneficial and others destructive.

'It is not enough to sing well,' says Lilli Lehmann, 'one should always know how one does it.' And the imitative methods of a former generation fail to satisfy the desires of an educated and inquiring mind to-day. Therefore the teacher's knowledge must be comprehensive, his mind well stored, and his ideals always in advance of his own or his pupils' attainments. And it should be borne in mind that a keen sense of quality is even more important than a keen sense of pitch.

In connection with the study of vowel sounds and their relationship to quality, Ellis's 'Pronunciation in Song' contains invaluable information. Excellent and inexpensive elementary text-books for teachers and students are Norris Croker's 'Handbook for Singers,' 'Voice Production and Breathing,' by J. Hugh Williams, and 'How to Acquire Ease,' by Charles Tree. Indispensable for general principles, ideals, and interpretation are 'The Art of the Singer' (W. J. Henderson), 'The Singer's Art' (H. Gregory Hast), 'Interpretation in Song' (H. Plunket Greene), 'Musical Education and Vocal Culture' (Albert Bach), 'Lyric Diction' (Dora D. Jones), and 'The Singing of the Future' (D. Ffrangçon Davies). Teachers should also study Dr. W. A. Aikin's 'The Voice,' Lilli Lehmann's 'How to Sing,' Shakespeare's 'Art of Singing,' Dr. F. E. Miller's 'The Voice,' and Dr. Holbrook Curtis's 'Voice-Building and Tone-Placing,' to obtain a comprehensive grasp of fundamental principles.

The essential elements in the proper development and cultivation of the voice are simple enough in themselves. It is upon their skilful application and proper carrying out that the singer's technical efficiency and control depend.

From the very beginning the voice must be regarded as a means of expression, not merely an instrument of sounds, however beautiful in themselves; but it is imperative that the technical groundwork be firmly established before declamatory or dramatic effects are attempted. As the Italian proverb has it, Chi va piano, va sano e va lontano (He who goes slowly, goes safely and far).—Yours, &c.,

ROLAND FOSTER

(Professor of Singing and Vocal Examiner for Australian Examinations Board, State Conservatorium of Music, Sydney, New South Wales).

[We gladly insert Mr. Roland Foster's valuable letter, but we cannot re-open the correspondence on this subject.—EDITOR.]

THE CINEMA ORGANIST

SIR,—I am pleased to see the contributions in your July and August numbers under the heading 'The Cinema Organist.' Such diversity of ideas upon this matter should be welcome to those who, like myself, are not only interested, but subsist by this profession.

To revert to the letters mentioned, it is my opinion that the writers are both right and wrong. Extemporisation, unless it is consistent with form, melody, and rhythm, is impossible; and yet if the organist has to play for between four or five hours daily, year in and out, and never play from music, this is a job for a Colossus. Frankly, I do not think it possible. Apart from this, the fact remains that sometimes we do feel like playing impromptu. The medium course suggests itself at once, and if the exponent can dovetail both to fit the requirements, will prove of more value in the long run.—Yours, &c.,

EDWARD O'HENRY.

Picture House,
Walsall, Staffs.

SIR,—I am sure all organists will be interested in the recent contributions of Mr. Quentin Maclean, the able organist at the Shepherd's Bush Pavilion Cinema, and Dr. George Tootell, of Stoll Picture Theatre fame, on the subject of organ-playing to films. It so happens that these leading authorities are both contributors to the 'Complete Organ Recitalist.' Mr. Maclean does not encourage extemporisation at cinemas, while Dr. Tootell advocates it strongly. Both believe in the organ accompaniment as enhancing 'the emotional effect of the drama depicted.' The difference is in the means and the manner of application. It is possible that in the hands of a trained artist an extemporised accompaniment to a film may be every bit as good and effective as music written for it, especially as some of the composers who write film accompaniments are known for their 'cheap' style.

What I should like to point out is that extemporisation by an artist who has ideas and has trained himself in various forms and styles, has advantages over the usual conglomeration of snippets and fragments from every source which is so commonly heard at the cinema. Personally I find the perpetual 'medley' of snatches from this and that very distressing. There is no coherence, no emotional presentation as a whole. It is just here that extemporisation can make good, by finding the 'common denominator,' so to speak, and by the devices of development and recapitulation it can present that unity of interpretation which is usually so conspicuous by its absence.

The cinema organist has the advantage that he knows beforehand (or should know) the topic on which he is to extemporise. Suppose it is an eastern picture which is due, he can soak his mind in the style shown in pieces supposed to present eastern colouring. No doubt the sources mentioned by Mr. Maclean are helpful in this respect. The H. W. Gray Co., of New York, also publish two volumes of picture music, arranged for the organ.

There is usually a central idea in every film, round which the various episodes or pictures are grouped. Thus there is, or should be, coherence or unity throughout. This unity is not usually conspicuous in the music which is supposed to enhance the story, though there is no reason why it should not be.

The cinema organist has to draw principally on 'characteristic music,' and, doubtless stimulated by this, a special school of 'characteristic' composers for the organ has sprung up in America.

Cinema subscribers to the 'Complete Organ Recitalist' and others will be interested to know that a chapter is devoted to cinema organ music, nearly two hundred items being classified into various styles, such as pathetic, animated, national, romantic, characteristic, &c.

It is easier to extemporise on a mood or emotion at the cinema than to handle an unknown theme skilfully at a recital, but in any case I hope the increased interest in extemporisation may lead to its (much needed) revival.—Yours, &c.,

HERBERT WESTERBY

(Editor, 'Complete Organ Recitalist').

P.S.—May I draw attention to a slight error in my address as given in your August issue? It should be 'Sandon,' 57, Bexley Road, Erith, Kent.

SIR,—I have no doubt that Dr. Tootell's rather inconsistent criticism (see August number, p. 732) of Mr. Maclean's admirable lecture will be answered by abler pens than my own. But as one who, for the past three years, has had perhaps a unique opportunity of studying Mr. Maclean's methods at the Pavilion, Shepherd's Bush, I feel impelled to add my quota to the argument.

In the first place, I can definitely state that Mr. Maclean does not recommend one course in his lectures or written articles and then use other methods in his everyday work. And the results he obtains by the careful fitting of written music to the films are in my opinion so superior to the best improvised settings I have heard that there is little room for controversy as to which is the better idea.

As to Dr. Tootell's remarks regarding 'makeshifts,' it is quite obvious that, for all his experience, a trip to London would open his mind to the fact that even if the organist and organ are in the theatre primarily as a means of saving expense, they nevertheless contrive, by playing written works, to provide thoroughly artistic music at every performance—with such success, indeed, that the organ is not now regarded so much as a 'relief' but rather as an alternative to the orchestra, and is quite as much enjoyed by both musician and average patron.

Dr. Tootell's commendation of extempore playing is of course a counsel of perfection. But for how long at the keyboard, even with the best intentions, can he preserve good style, melodic interest, contrapuntal device, &c., equal to the best written works? And can he do so with the same excellence through every performance for a week? The finest extempore players I have heard seem invariably to show signs of fatigue, and unconsciously lose vitality in their playing after a comparatively short period of continuous effort even when they have not to concentrate on the film in addition to thinking out musical ideas. Consistently to maintain a high standard, and do so to order, are in my experience too exhausting a business to be seriously considered.

Your correspondent's criticism of film 'incidentals' is no doubt true in some cases. But there are plenty of incidentals, so why use the worst?

One is surprised to find a musician of Dr. Tootell's reputation hinting that the last word has been said with regard to film accompaniment on the organ. I, for one, should be sorry to think that such is the case, much as I enjoy hearing the best men of to-day. Mr. Maclean did not imply that the experiments of the last decade had been wasted, but with the modesty of the artist he refused to dogmatise, since he is constantly striving for the improvement of his art, and, whilst delighting others (both management and patrons), is himself never satisfied. The success of his methods is, in my opinion, proved by the brilliant way in which he has acquitted himself for three years in one of the most important posts in the country, and by the ungrudging approval accorded to him by contemporary organists, both English and American.

Finally, Dr. Tootell tells us that there are 'not half-a-dozen men in Great Britain' who can properly improvise a film accompaniment. Some admission, this! In hearing your contributor himself, I have presumably heard one of this select company, and if he will name the other few I will gladly journey to hear them with an open mind if I can be assured beforehand that (1) they will be 'in good form,' (2) that the film will be 'worth playing to,' and (3) that there's nothing wrong with the organ. I mention these essentials as I find that the lack of one or other of them is generally given as an excuse for a mediocre performance, especially that of the go-as-you-please type of film-fitting so much favoured by Dr. Tootell.—Yours, &c.,

J. I. TAYLOR.

1*a*, Rosedale Terrace, Dalling Road, W.6.

ORCHESTRAL NOTATION

SIR,—It is to be regretted that in her letter Miss Scales is not more explicit. She says: 'Harmonics can—but probably never would—be played on the covered strings' of the harp. Why not? No doubt there is some difference in tone-quality (of which a clever composer might avail himself) between harmonics taken on the two kinds of strings. But if, in spite of Widor's dictum, they can be produced on the covered ones, their disuse must depend on the players, who, as Berlioz observes, object to plucking the lowest notes on account of the uncomfortable position entailed. Perhaps Verdi and Puccini agreed with the French master's unkind comment, that 'this reason should have little weight with composers.'—Yours, &c.,

St. Leonards. TOM. S. WOTTON.

FRETS ON VIOLS

SIR,—Mr. Arnold Dolmetsch is perfectly right when he says that there is no evidence of the viols ever having been played without frets; indeed, as long as the Tablature existed the frets could not be dispensed with. On p. 228 of my 'Dictionary of Old English Music and Musical Instruments,' I do not say that the frets formed an insurmountable impediment, but that, with them, the 'difficult divisions of Christopher Simpson could not be played easily.' I agree with Mr. Dolmetsch that the question as to whether viols were ever played without frets touches 'a fundamental point,' and I am sorry that a remark of mine should have been read to imply that they ever were. The passage that Mr. Dolmetsch quotes comes from my description of my own tenor viol, and grew out of my statement respecting the marks of the frets on the neck of that instrument. Certain it is that when the viols were played from Tablature the frets were sine qua non; whether experts played without frets from ordinary notation we do not know. Playford's remark quoted in my lecture and in my 'Dictionary,' and reproduced in Mr. Dolmetsch's letter to you, comes, as that eminent authority most probably knows, from the 'Introduction to the Skill of Musick,' and refers to Playford's account of the treble violin. I do not give it as my opinion that the players on the viols actually removed the frets when playing on the older instruments, and merely contented myself with citing Playford's statement that this was done with the violin. At the same time I should like to thank Mr. Dolmetsch for having drawn my attention to the passage; it certainly can be misinterpreted, and will be altered in the second edition.—Yours, &c.,

JEFFREY PULVER.

SONG 'PLUGS' AND 'BOOSTS'

SIR,—Not long ago, I think it was in your July number, there were some notes on 'boosting' particular musical publications. This practice, as it obtains in America, was exposed in some articles in Henry Ford's Dearborn Independent, and these articles were reprinted in one of the four vols. of 'The International Jew,' sold separately at 2*s*. a volume, and obtainable from The Britons Society (40, Great Ormond Street, Russell Square). These volumes consist solely of articles reprinted from the Dearborn Independent, and are designed to show the extent of Jewish influences in America.

I venture to suggest that the writer of your notes would be interested in consulting the volume referred to, if he is not already acquainted with it.—Yours, &c.

T. FRANCIS HOWELL.

Fairhaven, Woolacombe,
N. Devon.

C NATURAL AND B SHARP

SIR,—I am very pleased to see from Mr. Farjeon's article in your July issue, that at least one of our modern musicians is on the right track for enlightenment concerning the wonders of the musical scale.

The value of Ptolemy's ratios, in questions of this order, is due to the absolute accuracy of their magnitudes; but as a practical fact they are commonly unintelligible because their outward forms convey no sense of magnitude, and therefore no indication of their own accuracy.

But Mr. Farjeon will find it instructive to write out, on square-ruled paper, the exact values of the notes in his musical passages, using fiftieths, instead of cents, for his measurement unit, and marking off his octaves by twelve squared compartments, thus:

C SCALE divided by fifths laterally, thirds vertically.

A	E	B	F♯
F	C	G	D
D♭	A♭	E♭	B♭

Scale-names.

C SCALE MEASURES.

442	193	544	295
249	0	351	102
56	407	158	509

Unit = $\frac{1}{50}$ of E.T. semitone.

'Skismas,' or fiftieths of an E.T. semitone, are better than cents for this work, because they are less cumbersome, and the unit corresponds exactly with the tuner's skisma.

Reading from left to right, the letter-names are in the order of perfect fifths (351), measured upwards. Reading from below upwards, the order is that of major thirds (193), measured upwards.

With the aid of the above diagram we shall be able to solve Mr. Farjeon's problem by adding the needful notation to that of the scale of C. Thus:

COMBINED DIAGRAM OF RATIOS OF C AND G♯.

Key of ♭G♯	228 E♯	579 B♯	330 F+	81 C+
	35 ♭C♯	386 G♯	137 ♭D♯	488 A♯
Key of C	442 A	193 E	544 B	295 F♯	46 397 148 C♯ G♯ D♯ — Key of C
	249 F	0 C	351 G	102 D
	56 D♭	407 A♭	158 E♭	509 B♭

Careful examination of this diagram will reveal the fact that the chord of A $\begin{pmatrix} E \\ C\sharp \\ A \end{pmatrix}$ stands in precisely the same relation to the key of ♭G♯ as that of the chord of D♭ $\begin{pmatrix} A\flat \\ F \\ D\flat \end{pmatrix}$ to the key of C. It is in fact 'the common chord on the minor second of the scale.' How it will sound depends, in every case, upon the whole of the recognisable environment.

Much more could be said about the structure of the musical scale, but the above will perhaps be sufficient for present purposes.—Yours, &c., JOSEPH GOOLD.

Corsham, Wilts.

'MUNICIPAL MUSIC IN NEW ZEALAND'

SIR,—In the report of your interview with Auckland's City Organist (May issue), Mr. Barnett makes one or two statements which I cannot allow to pass unchallenged, and as the Musical Times finds its way into the most important centres of the Dominions, I would ask you to correct a few very misleading paragraphs.

It is asserted that the operations of our choral societies are on old-fashioned lines, and that the performances of important works are necessarily rare, owing to the impossibility of getting together an adequate orchestra.

I am not connected with the Auckland Choral Society in any capacity, but I admire the work it is doing, and appreciate the assistance it has given us in many ways and at various times.

I am personally acquainted with most of the members of its excellent orchestra, its conductor and leader, and I have no hesitation in saying that the Society is quite capable of adequately dealing with the orchestral parts of any choral work Mr. Barnett cares to suggest, with a couple of rehearsals.

Mr. Barnett gives a distressful account of the state of matters orchestral in these latitudes. I quote :

> 'First-rate orchestral players are rather scarce, and the bulk of those available are of course absorbed by cinema work. It is fair to add, however, that judging from the advertised programmes a lot of excellent orchestral music is played at the picture theatres. In fact there is much to be said for the opinion that the public hears more good music by this means than would be the case if it were dependent upon an occasional orchestral concert.'

'Judging from the advertised programmes' suggests that Mr. Barnett never attends the picture theatres, but takes it for granted that if an enterprising management advertises '"Casse-Noisette" to-night and all the week at 7.45,' the goods will be faithfully delivered (blissfully ignorant of the fact that what would probably eventuate would be the murder of the 'Sugar-plum Fairy' by pianoforte, violin, cornet, and xylophone !).

It must also be assumed that as Mr. Barnett lives at Auckland, he is alluding to Auckland advertisements.

I am sending you a programme given by the Bohemian Orchestra, which I trust will be of interest. I am also enclosing a list of some recently performed works, which I think is sufficient answer to Mr. Barnett so far as his remarks concern Auckland.

Our performances of new works are necessarily somewhat restricted by the thirteen thousand odd miles intervening between us and our source of supply. Many of such works are hard to obtain ; many more are in MS., and on hire only, which puts them out of the question.

Fortunately we are kept advised of current happenings in the musical centres of England and Europe by the Musical Times and other periodicals, and this is of great value to the enthusiasts in this out-of-the-way corner of the Empire.—Yours, &c., LESLIE E. LAMBERT

Auckland, N.Z. (Chairman, Bohemian Orchestra).

[The list which Mr. Lambert sends shows the repertory of the Bohemian Orchestra to be large, and its policy enterprising, especially in view of its distance from Europe.—EDITOR.]

Owing to unavoidable delay in securing permanent premises the Editha Knocker School of Violin Playing will be carried on for the present at 7, Lambolle Road, N.W.3. Two scholarships will shortly be competed for, the last day of entry being September 6. For full particulars apply to the Secretary, at the address given above.

The Amateurs' Exchange

Under this heading we insert, free of charge, announcements by amateur musicians who wish to co-operate with others.

Amateur pianist (lady) wishes to join trio or quartet. East Ham district.—D. K. M., c/o Musical Times.

Violinist wishes to meet pianist for weekly study. London district.—V. F., c/o Musical Times.

Violinist wanted to complete trio ('cello and pianoforte). N. London.—A. H. T., c/o Musical Times.

Baritone wishes to join amateur choral society. Experienced. N.W. district.—W. H., c/o Musical Times.

'Cellist (male) wanted for amateur string quartet. N. London. —ENTITY, c/o Musical Times.

Young lady pianist wishes to meet other instrumentalists for mutual practice. S.W. district.—D. H., c/o Musical Times.

'Cellist (gentleman) wanted for amateur trio. Good sight-reader. Semi-modern répertoire (Franck, Smetana, Bossi), as well as classics.—L. D., c/o Musical Times.

Viola player wanted for quartets and other chamber music. London.—FUGUE, c/o Musical Times.

'Cellist (learner) wishes to meet good pianist and violinists for progressive practice — solos, trios, and quartets. Croydon district.—CHARLES P. COCKS, 158, Morland Road, Croydon.

Amateur string players and vocalists living in or near Ealing would be welcomed as members of the Ealing Arts Club. Small string orchestra and madrigal choir. —HAROLD E. WEST, 8, Liverpool Road, Ealing, W.5.

Violinist wishes to meet experienced pianist for mutual practice. Beeston or Nottingham districts.—W. W., c/o Musical Times.

Young lady pianist wishes to meet vocalist, or instrumentalists, for mutual practice.—Miss C. HIBBERD, 'Whittlesey,' Sutton Lane, Hounslow.

Violinist (young gentleman) wishes to join string quartet or pianoforte quintet.—A. D. MILES, 13, Windmill Street, W.1.

Sixty Years Ago

From the Musical Times of September, 1866 :

The gradual advance of the 'ballad concert' has been a noteworthy feature of the past musical season. That these entertainments have been mainly fostered by music-sellers there can scarcely be a doubt ; but we are sorry to see artists of the highest eminence letting themselves out for hire to further the spread of such utter inanities as we have been compelled to listen to at these concerts. That the 'royalty' system is lucrative alike to vocalists and publishers cannot be questioned ; but the degradation to art and artists should have some little weight with those who live by the opinion of the public. Good voices and good singing may galvanize into something like life such puerilities as 'The Sparrow's Chirp,' or 'My Mother's Arm-Chair' ; but the real question is whether vocalists of established reputation would ever have travelled beyond the title-pages of these effusions had they not secured a positive interest in every copy sold.

Mr. Alfred Mellon's Promenade Concerts have been the chief attraction during the past month. Mlle. Maria Krebs has again been delighting everybody by her artistic pianoforte playing, and appears to have established herself as a great favourite at these performances. Mr. Mellon's orchestra is, as usual, excellent ; and he infuses a sufficient quantity of classical music into his selections to attract all classes of listeners. He has given a 'Gounod night,' a 'Mendelssohn night,' a 'Weber night,' &c., all of which have been highly appreciated ; but the meaning of a 'Volunteer night,' which he also announces, is utterly beyond our comprehension.

The 'Hall by the Sea,' at Margate, bears no outward sign that music forms a prominent feature of the entertainment provided therein. . . . Insignificant little bills, however, announce that a concert takes place every evening; and, tempted by this information, we lately strolled in, and found a very elegantly fitted-up room, and a small, but efficient, orchestra conducted by Jullien. During the evening bits of great works, such as the Menuetto and Trio from Mozart's 'Jupiter' Symphony and the Allegro and Storm from Beethoven's 'Pastoral' Symphony, were performed by the band, so as to give a classical flavour to the concert. . . . Miss Rose Hersee, a very agreeable soprano, condescended to employ her vocal powers upon a song called 'Coo, says the gentle dove,' the music of which was as simple as the title; but it brought in the stragglers from the refreshment department, . . . and the applause she received will no doubt encourage her to persevere in this unpretending school of art.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

The annual dinner of the R.A.M. Club, founded, by the way, in 1889, was held at the Trocadero Restaurant on July 22, the President, Mr. T. B. Knott, being in the chair. Among the guests who spoke during the evening were Sir Henry New, the Rt. Hon. Sir Henry Craik, the Rt. Hon. Lord Gorell, Sir Henry Hadow, Dr. J. B. McEwen, Sir Alexander Mackenzie, Mr. Alfred J. Waley, and Mr. Percy Baker. The dinner was a great success, and the more serious side of the entertainment was enlivened by humorous stories, told in his own inimitable manner by Mr. Frederick Chester. On the following day, Friday, July 23, the distribution of prizes took place at Queen's Hall. The President of the Royal Academy, H.R.H. The Duke of Connaught and Strathearn, presented the awards and prizes, and the Principal, Dr. J. B. McEwen, made his report on the year's work and happenings. A short but pleasing programme of music was given, the Ladies' Choir, under the conductorship of Mr. Ernest Read, being notably effective. Elgar's part-song, 'Stars of the summer night,' with accompaniment for violins and pianoforte, was remarkably well done. For the same instrumental combination, 'Three Jacobean Tunes,' by J. B. McEwen, entitled 'Prince Charlie,' went exceedingly well, the conductor in this instance being Mr. H. Wessely. In his speech the Duke of Connaught complimented the students on their performance, and promised to open the new buildings—the theatre and lecture hall in York Gate—early in the coming autumn. The Michaelmas term will commence on Monday, September 20, the entrance examination being held on September 6.

INCORPORATED STAFF-SIGHT-SINGING COLLEGE

The Annual General Meeting was held on July 17 at the Royal College of Music, Sir Hugh Allen being in the chair. An interesting report of the year's work was read by the hon. secretary, Dr. W. H. Hickox (84, Abingdon Road, W.8). The competition shield and cup for excellence in sight-singing from the staff were won by the girls of St. John's Holborn and Vauxhall Central, respectively. The diplomas were presented to the successful candidates, and at the close of the meeting two able lectures were given. The first was by Dr. Phillips, on 'The Development of Musical Notation'; the second by Mr. Albert P. Howe, on 'Some Practical Thoughts upon Sostenuto in Singing,' was illustrated by a charming song recital—Dr. Hickox acting as accompanist.

CAMBRIDGE SUMMER COURSE IN MUSIC TEACHING

The fifth of the Summer Courses in Music Teaching, organized by the Federation of British Music Industries, has recently been held at Cambridge. The students numbered a hundred and twenty, most of them teachers in secondary and elementary schools, who are interested in the subject. Lectures covering a wide range of musical and teaching interest were given by Mr. Adrian Boult, Dr. George Dyson, Mr. Frank Roscoe, Dr. Cyril Rootham, Major J. T. Bavin (Director of the Course), Mr. Geoffrey Shaw, Dr. Stanley Marchant, Mr. Sydney Grew, and others.

The inaugural address was given by Sir Henry Hadow (Vice-Chancellor of Sheffield University), who brilliantly hit off, in a swift epitome of the music tendencies of to-day, the outstanding characteristics of modern music and musicians.

Of modern tendencies, Sir Henry reminded his audience that the revolutionary music of to-day was one of the many signs of times in which things once axiomate have been torn by the roots. The new musical language is more difficult for the elders, as all new languages are, than for the young. The utterance of a new genius is often baffling. But any new musical works show the composers satisfied with commonplace ideas. Compare the saying, 'The French would be the best cooks in the world if only they could get good meat.'

As to jazz, Sir Henry defined it as the slang of music, all very well now and then, but unthinkable as something to live with day in and day out:

> 'Stevenson once spoke of domesticating the Recording Angel. Some people in their devotion to jazz are domesticating Mrs. Gamp.'

But worse than jazz, Sir Henry continued, is the undue claim the new composers make for elaboration and complication of the style and materials of music. They have become afraid of emotion, hence this enormously complicated stuff. After reference to the 'deadly seriousness' of present-day music, Sir Henry urged the value of nationalism in music, and the claims of an English music with English idiom. Folk-music would not necessarily give us that, however, for although a few folk-tunes are beautiful tunes, most of them are not; and to write down folk-tunes or slavishly to follow the folk-song manner is not necessarily to write English music. Sir Henry concluded a no less wise than witty address by insisting that music's present strength and its hope for the future are in the fact that it is a language possessing a great and significant literature.

MUSIC IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS

The following is a summary of musical activity in the Public Schools during the summer term:

BEDFORD SCHOOL musical and dramatic entertainment took place on May 29. The musical portion of the programme included Dunhill's 'Tubal Cain,' for chorus and orchestra; first movement of Symphony in D (Haydn); 'Bavarian Dances' (Elgar); madrigal, 'Now is the month of maying' (Morley); part-songs and unison songs for treble voices; part-songs for broken voices; and sea shanties.

At CATERHAM annual Speech Day, on July 17, music, plays, and speeches were intermingled. The orchestra played the Minuet from the 'Jupiter' Symphony (Mozart); Minuet from 'Berenice' (Handel); 'Folk-Song Suite' (Vaughan Williams); and 'As you like it' Suite (Quilter). Musical interludes, consisting mainly of Elizabethan songs and old country dances, supplemented the action of a pageant play, 'Chaucer Redivivus.'

At CHARTERHOUSE the annual house glee competition took on an experimental form. Each house, instead of singing the same set pieces, was asked to contribute a choral item to a 'community concert' programme. This arrangement presented obvious difficulties to the judge (Mr. C. B. Allen, of Brighton College), who had to award the prize for the performance which gave him the greatest pleasure. Variety was ensured, the programme including unison songs (with and without solo verses and descants), part-songs (S.A.T.B.), treble and bass choruses, negro spirituals, and even rounds. Some instrumental items (non-competitive) were introduced for further variety.

Speech Day at CHRIST'S HOSPITAL was celebrated on June 19. The musical programme included Bach's Concerto in C, for two pianofortes and orchestra (first movement); three numbers of the 'Peer Gynt' Suite for orchestra; Purcell's 'Golden Sonata' (arr. for two violins); Saint-Saëns's Fantaisie for organ solo; Handel's Air and Chorus, 'Hail thee, nymph' (from 'L'Allegro'); part-songs and songs.

CLIFTON COLLEGE house competitions were held on July 23, and were judged by Sir Hugh Allen. The following is a selection of the chief items performed: Individual competition for 'Kadoorie' Cup; pianoforte solos; Brahms's Rhapsody in B minor; Schumann's Novelette in D; Beethoven's Sonata in C, Op. 53 (first movement); Bach's Prelude and Fugue in C sharp; Brahms's Rhapsody in E flat. For violin and pianoforte: Grieg's Sonata in G (first movement). Programme of the winning house: Brahms's Rhapsody in B minor, for pianoforte solo; Purcell's Grave and Allegro from the 'Golden Sonata' (quartet, arr. for two violins, 'cello, and pianoforte); Saint-Saëns's Variations on a Theme of Beethoven, for two pianofortes. Programme of the second house: Bach's Sonata in E flat, for organ (first movement); Grieg's Sonata in G, for violin and pianoforte (first movement); Boyce's Minuet from Sonata in A, for two violins and pianoforte.

At ETON, the College Musical Society gave a concert on May 9. Morley's 'Now is the month of maying' and Gibbons's 'Silver Swan' were sung, the latter from memory. Instrumental items included two movements of Purcell's 'Golden Sonata' (arr. for two flutes); Boyce's Sonata for two violins, 'cello, and pianoforte; Handel's Sonata for two violins and pianoforte; Chopin's Ballade in A flat, for pianoforte solo.——On June 19 the Virtuoso String Quartet performed a programme which (with Dr. Ley at the pianoforte) included the Franck and Dvorák Pianoforte Quintets.

GIGGLESWICK has had three concerts, an organ recital, and the usual end-of-term concert. At the last of these the choir sang Holst's 'King Estmere,' unison songs by Parry and German, and part-songs by Ireland. The most important instrumental item was Grieg's Pianoforte Concerto (arranged for two pianofortes).

On June 26 the OUNDLE midsummer concert took place. The orchestra played two movements from Massenet's 'Scènes Pittoresques,' the choir sang Holst's 'Festival Chime,' and choir and orchestra combined in 'Hail, bright abode' (from 'Tannhäuser'). Other items included Vaughan Williams's 'Folk-Song' Sextet for strings, unison songs, Chopin's Pianoforte Sonata in B flat minor (first movement), Eccles's Sonata in G minor for 'cello, Franck's 'Pièce Héroïque' for organ, and Bishop's 'Lo, here the gentle lark' (arranged for flute and clarinet).——On June 27 a programme in the Great Hall consisted of MacDowell's 'Hexentanz' for pianoforte solo, the first movement of Beethoven's Violin Concerto (orchestral accompaniment on the organ), and Reubke's Introduction and Fugue from the Sonata for organ.

At WELLINGTON COLLEGE the following concerts took place: on May 16 and July 4, organ recitals; on May 29 a recital by the English Singers; on June 6 a lecturette on the history and development of the French horn, followed by performances of the Brahms Horn Trio in E flat and the Mozart Horn Concerto in E flat.——On June 18 a school concert took place, in which the orchestra played Beethoven's Symphony No. 1, Franck's 'Symphonic Variations' for pianoforte and orchestra, and Berlioz's 'Hungarian March.' The choir sang Parry's 'Pied Piper of Hamelin,' and several part-songs.

WESTMINSTER School Madrigal and Orchestral Societies' concert took place on July 23. The chief orchestral items were Bach's Concerto for two violins, Mendelssohn's 'Hebrides' Overture, and Bizet's 'L'Arlésienne' Suite. The choir sang Percy Fletcher's Fantasia on Wagner's 'Meistersinger,' Purcell's 'Soul of the World' (from 'St. Cecilia's Day'), and some sea shanties. R. S. T.

Next year's Festival of the International Society for Contemporary Music will be held at Frankfort in June. The Committee of the British section will shortly make its recommendation of works for the programme. Both orchestral and chamber music will be admissible, the preference being given to works written during the past five years. Compositions should be submitted to the Secretary, British Music Society, 117-123, Great Portland Street, W.1, not later than November 1. Copies should bear the date of composition, and the length of time in performance should also be indicated.

London Concerts

THE PROGRAMMES

In its main lines this year's programme of Promenade concerts follows that of last year. On Mondays there is Wagner. On Tuesdays, Symphonies by Haydn and Mozart, and, until the last two weeks, a Concerto by one or the other. On alternate Wednesdays, Bach rules the roast, attended by Handel, or else things are highly romantic. On Thursdays anything may happen. On Fridays, the Symphonies of Beethoven. Saturdays are like Thursdays.

Novelties are still apt to occur after the interval, to the annoyance of newspaper men. The weekly organ solo has been dropped. More lights have been added to the roof of Queen's Hall. Seating accommodation is more scarce than ever in the refreshment rooms. The descriptive notes are still by Mrs. Newmarch and Mr. Eric Blom.

The name of Mozart occurs about fifty times; that of Bach thirty. But Mozart gains numerically by the vocal arias that creep in on all occasions, while Concertos and Suites preponderate in the works of Bach, so that the latter may be ranked as the composer of the season, after Wagner and Beethoven. The Beethoven Symphonies are to be given in reverse order from No. 8 to No. 1, with an interruption in favour of Schubert's 'Unfinished' on September 17.

The works that are new, or not yet familiar, so far as one can remember (for the programme does not always make a positive assertion), are as follows: 'Ange,' by Feodor Akimenko; 'A Winter Poem,' by J. B. McEwen; 'San Francesco d'Assisi,' by Malipiero; 'The Kentish Downs,' by Susan Spain-Dunk; 'The Ocean,' by Henry Hadley; 'Variations on a Familiar Air,' by Haydn Wood; 'La Queste de Dieu,' by Vincent d'Indy; Introduction and Allegro for full orchestra, by Arthur Bliss; 'Chant de Joie,' by Arthur Honegger; Concerto for orchestra (Op. 38), and Three Dances ('Nusch-Nuschi'), by Paul Hindemith; 'Heroic Overture,' by Montague Phillips; Violin Concerto in one movement, by Gordon Jacob; 'Pan and the Priest,' by Howard Hanson; 'Romantic Concerto,' for pianoforte and orchestra, by Joseph Marx; 'The Three Bears,' by Eric Coates; orchestral suite, 'The Insect Play,' by Frederic Austin; Serenade in A, for violin, horn, and orchestra, by Ethel Smyth.

Other British composers in the list, besides those whose names occur above, are Elgar (Violin Concerto, 'Enigma' Variations, 'Cockaigne' Overture, &c., but no Symphony), Vaughan Williams ('Old King Cole' Ballet and 'Pastoral' Symphony), Delius ('Dance of Life,' 'Brigg Fair,' and smaller works), Holst (five of 'The Planets'), John Ireland ('Mai Dun'), Boughton (Overture to 'The Queen of Cornwall'), Dorothy Howell ('Lamia'), and Bantock ('The Pierrot of the Minute').

THE FIRST CONCERTS

Sir Henry Wood was in luck this year. The second Saturday in August fell as late as it possibly could—on the fourteenth, and consequently Sir Henry had more holiday than the calendar usually allows him. He used the interval in characteristic fashion by conducting eight concerts at Hollywood Bowl, California.

A great audience greeted his return. Hobbs is not more popular at the Oval than Sir Henry at Queen's Hall. He proceeded to run up a nice little programme of odds and ends founded on the Bach-Wood Toccata in F, and strengthened by the music of César Franck—'Les Djinns' and the Symphonic Variations, with Miss Myra Hess as pianist. Honegger's 'Pacific 231' roused but mild interest. The 'Old King Cole' Ballet of Vaughan Williams was more to the taste of the majority. Miss Clara Butterworth and Mr. Malcolm McEachern sang.

On the Monday, a Wagner evening to a full house.

Tuesday, August 17, brought the first novelty, a dull specimen of Franco-Russian nothingness by Akimenko (b. Kharkov, 1876). A top line supposed, in the argument of the piece, to be sung by an angel, was fitter to make angels weep. Glutinous harmony, the orchestration a-filling in—oh, Sir Henry! The evening was the first real test of London's will to provide a nine weeks' audience.

An average number came to hear their Haydn and Mozart, Nicolas Orloff playing the latter.

Wednesday, August 18, promised better for the Bach nights than for the Viennese. The first 'Brandenburg' Concerto, the D minor for pianoforte (Miss Harriet Cohen), and the fifth Suite in G for strings, oboe, and organ—no wonder there was a crowd.

M.

Competition Festival Record

The annual general meeting and conference of the British Federation of Musical Competition Festivals at Chester, on October 1-4, promises to be even more interesting and enjoyable than usual. The topics down for discussion at the conference are very important, and at least one may be expected to lead to lively debate, i.e.: 'Church and Chapel Choirs,' 'The Adjudicator, his function and equipment,' and 'School Choirs.' A meeting that should be fruitful is the unofficial pow-wow between adjudicators and festival secretaries. The social side is well looked after, and includes a civic reception by the Mayor, and sight-seeing expeditions. There will also be special musical events in the Cathedral, one being a Hymn Festival, conducted by Sir Walford Davies. Reduced fares have been promised by the railway companies to passengers using a voucher issued by the Federation. Those who intend being present should apply to the Secretary, 3, Central Buildings, Westminster, S.W.1, for vouchers, and the various tickets (conference, luncheons, dinners, receptions, &c.), not later than September 7.

WELSH NATIONAL EISTEDDFOD

SWANSEA (August 8).—The National Eisteddfod, held here last week for the first time in nineteen years, enjoyed exceptionally fine weather, exceptionally big crowds, notwithstanding the strike (which seemed to affect nothing but the men's choirs' competition, in which six entrants scratched), and also exceptionally good music.

Will Swansea's example mean the real musical advance of the Eisteddfod? It is not certain. The Festival moves about from year to year, and the choice of music is in the hands of the local committee. Swansea boasts an uncommonly good resident musical leader in Dr. Vaughan Thomas, and we may put down to him what there was of musical enlightenment in the programme.

SOME WELSH COMPOSERS

Dr. Vaughan Thomas came out of his crowded week with distinction. He is of course well known as a sound and sympathetic adjudicator. He has proved himself in such weighty things as the Ninth Symphony and 'Israel in Egypt,' a really useful conductor. And a number of his compositions, heard in the competitions and concerts, have established him, if not as a great composer, at least as a cultivated and agreeable one, and decidedly the best man of the Welsh Nationalist school.

A great deal is talked of this school year by year at the Eisteddfod. Undeterred by the example of the Eisteddfod poets, whose works and fame might as well not exist so far as the world outside such places as Bangor and a few mountain glens is concerned, there are theorists who desire the creation of a Welsh music as peculiarly national as the vernacular odes. Of course, this does not bear serious thinking. Music as we know it is a European language, with here and there idiomatic differences, much as there are idiomatic differences in the English of such writers as Burns, Synge, and Mencken. Burns, Synge, and Mencken wrote English because it was their language, and they had no other (or had not enough of another to write in it). Similarly Welsh musicians must write European music or none.

Naturally, so sound a man as Dr. Vaughan Thomas does not side with the extremists. Still, he believes in making the very most of any idiomatic peculiarity that Welsh musical practice may suggest. There is something here in Wales, though of course nothing so vividly characteristic as in the idioms of Spanish, Hungarian, Czech, or Irish music.

The most interesting example was Dr. Thomas's settings of five poems in the Cywydd metre (with an instrumental interlude), sung by Mr. David Ellis at the fourth concert. The composer has sought to do the most precise justice to the quantities of his poet. This has led him to some melodic meagreness. But he is not austere by nature, and tunes will break in. The interlude was for strings, harp, and trumpet, and was suggested by penillion-singing. It sounded well in so far as the fiddles sang the melody, which in actual penillion-singing goes to the unmelodic harp. But the trumpet was not fairly treated in being given, not real trumpet-music, but only the harmonic part, or descant, of the penillion singer, a part which wants words to make any interest. It would be exaggerating to suggest there was much in this music; but there was indeed something—a faint perfume and colour, a graceful bearing. The composer should exploit this vein further. He must know how eagerly his countrymen are awaiting their Grieg or Dvorák, of whom there is little or no sign at all in any other Welsh composer we heard last week.

NEW ORCHESTRAL PIECES

Probably nowhere else in the musical world is a spark of native creative talent so warmly welcomed as in Wales. In a handsome majority of the Eisteddfod competitions there was a Welsh test-piece. Last week this sometimes meant listening to pieces not worth hearing, or at least not strong enough to stand the trial of repetition. The critic must, however, bear in mind that the Eisteddfod is a national institution, at least as dependent on nationalistic sentiment as on sheer love of art. And surely, moreover, it is something that a hospitable door should somewhere in the world be standing open for the heaven-sent composer, when he arrives.

Five young Welsh composers conducted the London Symphony Orchestra in performances of their works. Mr. Hubert Davies's Variations were ineffectual as a whole, the composer oddly enough lacking Celtic glibness and oratorical resource. He is a violinist in the L.S.O., yet his work (which did not pass without affording a glimpse of musicianly feeling and fugitive inventiveness) never made the effect of having been thought for the orchestra. It sounded like the music of some rather cultivated pianist's improvisation.

Mr. Haydn Morris's 'Brythonic' Rhapsody used famous Welsh airs. The links and additions betrayed an unpractised hand.

Mr. Gwynn Williams's 'Three Cymric Cameos' were frankly pianoforte pieces, lightly scored ad hoc. It was a thin trickle of music, but pure so far as it went. Only there is a graceless lack of proportion about setting an orchestra to deal with such very small things. You do not ask that the mountain shepherd shall play you the B minor Mass. Why not better respect the fitness of things than to set a symphony orchestra merely playing the shepherd's pipe?

Mr. Afan Thomas aroused a certain interest by his orchestral piece, 'The Child's Funeral.' It was over-burdened in the programme by a long and indifferent poem (W. C. Bryant), with which the listener uselessly tried to connect the short piece. It was so short and ended so unexpectedly that we missed the musical argument, though we could not help noticing a quotation from 'Tannhäuser.' Still, this music flowed, and the very modesty of the unceremonious ending took one's fancy. Is there a real composer possibly within this unknown musician?

Mr. Leigh Henry's promised 'Doom Dance at Deganwy' was impracticable, and in its place we heard an orchestral prelude. This composer's well-known prose had led us to expect something problematic from his unknown music, but the Prelude turned out to be written in milk and water. It must be presumed a very early work.

THE AUDIENCE AND ITS PLEASURES

One must have seen the Eisteddfod to have a notion of the huge democratic extent of the affair, its ardour and its discomforts, the keenness of the musical contests, and the desperate contest for life waged by the music itself—threatened, as it is, by unrestful multitudes, by long-winded speakers, by disorganized time-tables (the Eisteddfod is nearly always an hour or so behindhand), and mechanical amplifiers.

The main pavilion was built to hold twenty thousand, and was crowded for the principal solemnities. Daily the programmes lasted, practically unbroken, from 9 a.m. till 10.30 p.m. The unpunctuality tries the patience of the visitor used to big functions more rigidly managed. But the critic should reflect that the Eisteddfod is a highly exceptional event in the lives of most of the participants, and that punctuality does not perhaps rank as a prime virtue with so rustic a gathering. Certainly choirs will wait half-a-day for their turn to sing, with no apparent impatience or resentment.

The audience is wonderfully keen, and tolerant of discomfort. It is critical of vocal undertakings, and is moved by exhilarating rhythm and emotional ardour in instrumental music. Naturally it has but little musical taste, and will applaud good and bad equally, granted effective performance. But, however ignorant, it is a responsive, vibrating crowd, capable of both generosity and cruelty.

Though there was a stream of early-goers during Beethoven's ninth Symphony, the duration of which quite exceeded their reckonings, the majority stayed and was moved to enthusiasm. 'Land of our fathers' had to be sung before the hall was cleared. This weak tune—so far from being among the best of Wales—had its weakness all the more shown up by Beethoven's strength. Nevertheless the impulse that prompted the singing seemed to us touching.

Few indeed of the composers whose works we heard last week had ever contemplated such conditions of performance. At the Eisteddfod there are nearly always a rustle and a movement perceptible, nearly every one having been sitting for too long on planks ill-fitting the human frame. The diversions of the speech-makers are then welcomed, especially when of the fluency and ardour of tone dear to the native temperament.

The musical instinct of the Welsh is nowhere else so plain as in their appreciation of oratory, for it is the sound, the pitch, and variations of colour of the orator's voice which, it seems, count for more than what he says. It is the fashion at the Eisteddfod for political speakers to flatter with a trowel—but this must not be done without musical oratory.

Mr. Lloyd George's performances on these occasions are always looked forward to, and he is indeed an artist of Kreislerian charm and more—a twinkle of humour. Mr. Ramsay MacDonald, who made a speech in the middle of the men's choirs' competition, had no humour, but more zeal, and he carried the audience off its feet by sheer force of skilful voice-production. In matter the speech was platitudes, and worse (including an ad captandum antithesis setting off the great big, materialistic, sabre-rattling nations against the little, spiritual, poetic ones), but the audience was listening to the Scotchman's music. It must be fairly said that on this head the emotional and sonorous Mr. MacDonald beat all the Welshmen on their own ground. But Lord Howard de Walden, though he is a generous patron of the arts in Wales, and moreover has acquired some knowledge of the Welsh language, was not borne with—he did not command a lyrical strain.

BRASS BANDS AND BEETHOVEN

What music, apart from nationalistic oratory, truly suits the Eisteddfod? One's first musical thrill was at the brass band competition on Monday, and, looking back over the week, one cannot remember anything more vivid. The bands were competing in an arrangement of the 'Eroica' Symphony, cut down to about thirteen or fourteen minutes. The abridgment was barbarous. If ten minutes or so more had been allowed it would not have been so bad. But in point of scoring it was clever; as music, the bare themes were probably the best music the bandsmen had ever had to play; and in the performances nobly did they rise to the honour. How well noble music sounds on these noble instruments! It is clear enough that one of these days crack brass bands will be playing the Beethoven Symphonies at full length, and we shall be very pleased to hear them if they play as well as Gwaun Cae Gurwen.

WELSH VOICES

On Tuesday the Duke and Duchess of York heard some of the children's competitions. Welsh children are early broken in to the Eisteddfod habit, and they seem not to know, not even the youngest, what stage-fright is. A word of praise is due to the immense choir of local children which sang at the Monday night concert. The tone was bright, the attack lively. A Yorkshire choir carried off the first prize in the children's chief competition.

On Wednesday we heard some of the adult soloists. A novelty at this Eisteddfod was the open operatic classes, one for men, the other for women. The candidates had the choice of three famous arias, and had also to sing a fixed one (Handel for all voices but the soprano, who sang the 'Deh, vieni' of Mozart). It was a good idea in many ways, if not from the purely competitive point of view. In the final of the women's class we had a soprano singing against a contralto, and in the men's final were two baritones and a bass.

The virtue of the classes was that this very vocal people had here a chance of singing on broader lines than the ordinary test-pieces and the vernacular folk-songs afforded. The writer is not disposed to give all the weight to national (as opposed to individual) characteristics which is commonly assumed in Wales; but there is no doubt that the Welsh often have a good natural vocal idea. In great numbers they do produce a flowing tone, and in the chief Eisteddfod competitions one hears many uncommonly promising singers. Both the baritones sang Iago's Credo and Handel's 'Finche lo Strale.' The first-placed was a mature singer of something like professional attainment. The second was a youngster whom one felt inclined to advise to take up singing with all seriousness, so attractive was his free production and obvious natural aptitude. In the women's class a pleasing and cultivated contralto was placed first, and a singularly sweet and certainly gifted young soprano second.

In the class for lyric contraltos the chief test-piece was Granville Bantock's 'Guardian Angel.' Here there was a common fault of 'plumminess,' from which contraltos on the hither side of the Wye also suffer.

THE CHIEF CHORAL

On Wednesday afternoon we heard the chief choral competition. The tests were Bach's Motet, 'Come, Jesu, come,' Vaughan Thomas's 'Bywyd' (Life), and Tanéïèv's 'From land to land.' It was not the first time a Bach Motet had been chosen for the Eisteddfod test. Others had been heard at Abergavenny and Mold. At Mold, 'Jesu, Priceless Treasure' had been wholly prepared, but only an unsatisfying fragment was actually performed. Here all three test-pieces were sung in entirety.

Cwmamman, the victors at the Ammanford Eisteddfod of four years ago, were the first to sing. They attacked the Motet with almost savage vigour, and the immediate effect was electrifying. After much music that had been if not paltry in itself, paltry in result in those spaces, here was something that imposed itself, grand and conquering. The second choir, Mid-Rhondda, was more sensitive. All, whatever their faults, were good to hear.

Their faults were plain enough. The prime was that the Motet was by most shamelessly sung as a test-piece, and the singing was no prayer, but a naive bid for the prize. Mostly we had fine animal vigour, but little intelligence. It was strange that in such a hymn-singing community the religious appeal of the Motet should have gone for so little. Mr. John E. West's edition was used. It is sparing of marks of expression—too sparing for most of these conductors. In some of the performances we heard page after page of solid, unvarying mezzo-forte. It was not stodgy—the tone was too good for that; but it was insensitive. The Allegretto section, 'Thou art the Only Way,' in particular, was marred by this stubborn regard for the letter. It came to be a rare pleasure to hear a hint of thoughtfulness, and Hereford (the only English choir) won a high position on this count, though this choir's voices were not so brilliant as some of the others. Dr. Vaughan Thomas's piece was of a delicate and pleasing harmonic tissue, but slight in matter. The unimportant Tanéïèv piece gave the choir the chance for a show of picturesqueness and energy. The adjudicators were Prof. Bantock, Dr. Protheroe, and Sir Richard Terry. One of the oddities of the competition was that there were as many marks to be scored by each of the small pieces as by the Motet.

THE ORCHESTRAS

The orchestral competition was one of the distinguished successes of the week. The test-pieces were the 'Leonora' No. 3 Overture, and two of Brahms's Hungarian Dances, and it surely speaks well for South Wales that five amateur orchestras turned up to play. It should be said that ten professionals were allowed. The Cardiff orchestra had a real grip of the Overture.

The string bands played Vaughan Williams's 'Charterhouse' Suite, but the audience was restive (awaiting the welcome to the overseas visitors); the time-table had failed, and only three movements of the charming work were heard. The children's string bands played Arthur Bliss's Suite of Purcell pieces.

The Women's Choirs on Thursday gave us some most pleasant singing. As Mr. E. T. Davies said, this competition always makes the effect of a truce amid the rest of the week's battles. The test-pieces (the first two accompanied) were Charles Wood's 'Music, when soft voices die,' Brahms's 'Death of Trenar,' and E. T. Davies's 'The Holly.' Dr. Wood's piece fell gratefully on the ear. It was one of the loveliest short works of the whole Festival—a song whose sweetness will make the memory of the regretted composer live long.

The desirability, even at an Eisteddfod, of occasionally snatching the time to get a meal and wash one's hands, caused the writer to miss the second Choral and the second Men's Choirs competitions.

The Chief Men's Choirs on Saturday afternoon afforded one of the great sporting events of the week. But how difficult it is to make music for, or out of, a choir of men's voices! The interest was enhanced locally by the participation of a choir of American Welshmen from Cleveland, Ohio. The test-pieces were Granville Bantock's 'The twilight tombs of ancient kings,' Elgar's 'The Wanderer,' and Owen Jones's 'Blow, blow, thou winter wind,' all unaccompanied.

On the day of the mixed choirs one had perceived the danger that lies in reticence in the way of expression marks. Saturday's composers had not erred that way—particularly Sir Edward Elgar—and we veered to the opinion that perhaps it would be better to do without expression marks altogether. If Sir Edward had been at Swansea, he would have thought twice and thrice before he ever again indicated staccato for men's choirs. The sense of his piece was very generally missed. The poem—an extraordinary anonymous lyric of the 17th century, a piece of inspired ecstatic verse, and, as someone said, no doubt the best poem of the whole Eisteddfod—apparently conveyed nothing to the singers, and the airy fantasy was lost.

The Bantock piece was difficult, though not the most difficult of the choral man-traps which Prof. Bantock has devised for competitive festivals. Its musical effect was gloomy, but dignified, apart from a few modulations (notably one on the last page) which failed, even after several hearings, to justify themselves. The setting of 'Blow, blow' so far missed the character of the poem that the performance of a choir (Burryport) which sang it in Welsh sounded much the best.

The only English choir was Hadley, which had the misfortune to be on the platform at the moment of the arrival of Mr. Ramsay MacDonald. It was many minutes before the ebullient audience could be induced to resume interest in the competition. The Wattstown choir boasted a fine soloist (the best of the afternoon) for the Bantock piece (which has an important baritone solo). Dowlais, too, had a good soloist. Most of the choirs disappointed one by the misapplication of their means. But perhaps some little reflection must be cast on the composers for choosing such esoteric themes for men's voices. It was as though the singers were in strait-waistcoats—longing to be free in order to throw themselves heartily into some simple song of love, drink, or battle. Instead, they painfully followed the fancy of Elgar's mysterious poet:

I know more than Apollo;
For oft when he lies sleeping
I see the stars at mortal wars
And the rounded welkin weeping.

The morn 's my constant mistress,
The lovely owl 's my morrow;
The flaming drake and the nightcrow make Me music, to my sorrow.

The American choir (which was placed first) sang in a well-disciplined, businesslike way. These singers had a good conductor (Mr. Charles P. Dawe), and were not guilty of such extravagant attempts at point-making as saddened much of the afternoon. Dowlais was a capital choir, and would have done brilliantly in music in which it was at home. Cardiff sang more intelligently than most, but lost its sense of pitch on the last page of the Bantock.

THE CONCERTS

It remains to say a few words about the evening concerts. At the first we heard, in Miss Megan Thomas, a soprano of merit. She sang with freedom and a ringing tone. Mr. Walter Glynne's tenor-singing was on a small scale, but polished. A baritone, Mr. Watcyn Watcyns, sang in an over-dark, but truly beautiful tone. His success would have been greater if he had commanded a broader sweep. His outlook was not bold enough for such an assembly. The whole programme was of Welsh folk-music.

Dr. Ben Davies rejoiced all lovers of good singing at the second concert. It is a pity he insists on still singing high tenor music in which the strain entailed is visible. In a normal range his singing is delightful and his method exemplary. A very pleasing soprano, Miss Mair Jones, sang an extended song, 'The Spirit of the Mountain,' by Vaughan Thomas, which recalled Schubert and early Verdi yet was agreeable to hear, being truly vocal and flowing. Miss Olive Gilbert, contralto, sang with a useful but over-darkened voice. Mr. William Michael's fine, virile baritone disappoints after a little, for this singer devotes himself to a rough, punching method, and ignores a true legato.

Wednesday was the night of the Bach Magnificat and of the Ninth Symphony. Miss Dorothy Silk led the quartet, and her spirit lifted all to a poetic height. The choir sailed gallantly through Beethoven's Finale.

On Thursday we heard Granville Bantock's 'Sea Wanderers,' a little-known choral work some twenty years old. The Wanderers are humanity, and the poem tells how vague is their voyage and how uncertain the chance of meeting the same wayfarers twice in the course of existence. The music comes fluently from this accomplished pen. At the end we are not convinced that anything of intense moment has been uttered, but a certain rich, romantic atmosphere had been created. The choir sang with ardour, and acclaimed the composer.

Mr. David Brazell sang Dr. Vaughan Thomas's sombre, declamatory 'Hall of Cynddalen.' Miss Margaret Balfour's rather heavy contralto singing also impressed the audience.

'Israel in Egypt,' on Friday, was the great chance for the choir. Perhaps because the conductor had been overworked the performance made little of the finer points; but it was uncommonly sturdy. The soloists were Miss Elsie Suddaby, Miss Gwladys Partridge, Miss Barbara Samuel, and Mr. Ivor Walters. The last-named did not do so well on the whole as his fine voice would at moments have led us to expect. Perhaps lack of rehearsal induced his apparent uneasiness. Miss Samuel proved a very promising contralto, and scored a success with her aria.

At the last concert Mr. Joseph Hislop captivated the Eisteddfod audience, which knows good, easeful singing when it hears it. Miss Leila Megane, who sang songs of Osborne Roberts, also had a great success. Hers is surely one of the most beautiful voices of the day. Its purity recalls Melba. Miss Edith Furmedge's majestic contralto suited the big space, but on low notes she overweighted certain vowels. The instrumental solos at this concert were inferior.

THE RESULTS

Chief Choral Competition. — Mid-Rhondda, 272; Ystalyfera, 270; Hereford Harmonic, 269; Port Talbot, 265; Cwmannan, 242; Cwmaron, 236; Neath, 234.

Second Choral.—Fforest Fach, Goodwick.

Men's Choirs, I.—Cleveland, U.S.A., 279; Dowlais, 264; Burryport, 260; Cardiff, 256; Wattstown, 251; Garw, 240; Rhymney, 238; Hadley, 234; Llanelly, 231; Williamstown, 230; Swansea, 221.

Women's choirs, I.—Mr. Turner's choir, Nottingham, 261; Rhondda, 258; Mr. Woodward's choir, Plymouth, and Porth Welsh, 257.

Madrigal choir.—Shotton Welsh.

Congregational choirs.—Plough United.

Anthem competition.—New Tredegar Choral Society, 180; Glantawe, 176.

Girl Guides' choir.—'Fleur de Lys,' Rhoose and Barry.

Children's choirs (folk-song).—Mountain Ash, Pontlliw, Ynysybwl and Pontyberem.

Girls' choirs.—Blaenclybach, Aberaman, Mountain Ash.

Children's choirs (chief).—Knowl Bank, Huddersfield, Kenfig Hill, Mountain Ash.

Children's choirs, II. — 'Snowflakes' (Canton), Llanwrtydiaid.

Orchestras.—Herbert Ware's Cardiff Orchestra, 189; Ystalyfera, 171; Swansea and Afon (equal), 167; Bridgend, 158.

String orchestras.—Swansea, 92; Herbert Ware, Cardiff, 90; Gwilym Thomas string band, 86.

Soprano solo.—Louisa Davies.

Contralto solo.—Gwyneth Morgan.

Tenor solo.—J. Aldwyn Thomas.

Baritone solo.—Idris Daniels.

Bass solo.—Tom Lloyd.

Operatic class (women). — Madame Mattie Davies, Ceinwen Rowlands.

Operatic class (men).—Glanville Davies, Idris Daniels.

Men's duet.—E. J. and D. J. Harris.

Vocal quartet.—Madame Edith Maud Lewis's Quartet.

Boys' solo.—Haydn Elliott, Brynmor Jones.

Girls' solo.—Megan Hopkins, M. M. Morgan.

Violin.—Eiluned Leyshon.

Viola.—Ceinwen Thomas and Gwyn Edwards (equal).

Violoncello.—Gwennie Griffiths and Infonwy Walters (equal).

Violin and Viola duet.—Nesta Jones and Ceinwen Thomas.

Violoncello and Harp.—Prizes divided between Ada Hughes and Griffith Price, and 'Rhiannon' and Meurig James.

Violoncello and Pianoforte.—Gwennie Griffiths and Myra Pugh.

Flute, Viola, and Harp. — Police-constable Diehl, Ceinwen Thomas, and Rhiannon James.

String quartet.—Eiluned Leyshon, W. A. Foxall, Leslie Brown, and David G. Collier.

Pianoforte solo (Gold medal).—Dorothy Dunstan, Eiluned Leyshon.

Pianoforte solo (open).—Marjorie Jones.

Pianoforte quintet.—Nina Llewellyn Jones, Eiluned Leyshon, W. A. Foxall, Leslie Brown, and David G. Collier.

Flute and Pianoforte.—Mansel Davies and Iris Clayton.

Oboe and Pianoforte.—Hopkin Griffiths and friend.

Organ solo.—J. R. Bennett, Eunice Morris.

Wood-wind trio.—Hopkin Griffiths's Trio.

Brass Bands, A.—Gwaun-cae-Gurwen, Penallta, Cory Workmen, Ystalyfera.

Brass Bands, B.—Treherbert, Treharris, Brynamman, Mynydd-y-Garreg.

Cornet solo.—James Maroney.

Trombone solo.—Jack Jenkins.

Euphonium solo.—W. J. Davies.

Violin solo (junior).—Megan Lloyd, Dilwyn Thomas.

Violoncello solo (junior).—Ffrangçon Thomas, Miss Lloyd.

Harp solo (junior).—Madeline Davies, Claudia Jones.

Pianoforte (junior).—Kenneth Davies, Gwyneth Thomas.

Pianoforte trio (junior).—Dilys Edwards, Nesta Jones, and Gwyn Edwards.

Pianoforte duet (junior). — Eileen Davies and Enid Picton Davies.

C.

The eleventh Eisteddfod held under the auspices of the Wesley Guild at Seven Kings and Goodmayes Wesleyan Church will take place on October 23, 30, and November 6 and 13. Entries close on September 30. Full particulars from Miss G. E. Brooks, 28, Felbrigge Road, Seven Kings.

Music in the Provinces

MANCHESTER. — The only additional information available since July concerns the Municipal Concerts sanctioned by the City Council. The Hallé Orchestra and Sir Hamilton Harty are engaged for ten concerts, at a fee of £200 for nine, the tenth being a free concert given next Christmas for school children. At each of the nine concerts 520 seats at 6*d.* are to be available for school children—an arrangement which will saddle each concert with a deficiency, so the Education Committee is to be asked to contribute to the scheme. Choral concerts have proved sure 'draws,' and 'Elijah,' 'The Golden Legend,' and Berlioz's 'Faust' are included, sung by the Hallé Choir. In addition the Manchester Vocal Society and the Beecham Chorus are to co-operate. The series will open with a Wagner programme on October 18, and three miscellaneous orchestral programmes will be provided. Apart from the school children's seats, prices will range from 8*d.* to 2*s.* 4*d.* per seat. The total seating accommodation is 2,547, and if all seats are occupied the deficit must work out at about £150 per concert. C. H.

Music in Ireland

BELFAST.—On July 16 and 17, at Dufferin Hall, Bangor, Mr. Peter Dawson gave a recital, assisted by Madame Hunter, Madame Hampton, Miss M. Browne, Mr. James Briggs, Mr. Ernest Stoveley, and Mr. Ernest Emery, with Mr. Jack McKeown as accompanist.——The committee of the Ballymena Musical Festival has appointed Prof. Granville Bantock, Mr. A. Collingwood (Aberdeen), and Mr. W. Guthrie, as adjudicators for the 1927 musical competitions.——The special prize of five pounds, presented by the Ballymena Musical Festival Association to any school within a seven-mile radius making the greatest progress in music during the year, has been awarded by the Northern Ministry of Education to St. Louis Convent High School and Tullynamullen P. E. School jointly.——During the week, August 2-7, the 'Beggar's Opera' was the attraction at the Empire Theatre.——At Balmoral Show Grounds, on August 12, 13, 14, and 16, there was a military torchlight tattoo with the customary enticements of massed bands, bugles, and pipers.

DUBLIN.—As a good finale to a record attendance at the Horse Show, Mr. Walter McNally's concert at the Theatre Royal, on August 8, was an undoubted attraction to Dublin's great week of gaiety. The No. 1 Army Band, under Col. Fritz Brase, afforded agreeable variety, but of course Mr. McNally himself was the magnet.

COBH (Queenstown).—The carillon recitals by Dr. Staf Gebruers, on August 1, 4, 8, and 11, were much appreciated by large audiences.

Applications were received for the appointment of organist . . . Canon —— suggested that Mr. —— should hear the applicants pray.—Provincial Paper.

I would rather go to a musical comedy than an opera. It is so much fun . . . Symphonies are art. Opera is not the highest form of art.—Amelita Galli-Curci

Musical Notes from Abroad

HOLLAND

Great rejoicings have taken place on the celebration of the fifty years' anniversary of the date when the Band of the regiment of Grenadiers and 'Jagers' first became 'Royal,' by a decree of King William III. The Band was started as long ago as November, 1829, with François Dunkler, who is reputed to have been a trumpeter in the personal service of Napoleon Bonaparte and to have travelled with him to Russia, as its first director. Dunkler's son succeeded him, and brought the Band to a high state of efficiency, but it is generally considered that it was only after the recognition of its premier place by the King that it reached the apex of its musical ability. It has from time to time entered various competitions, and as a kind of preparation for this jubilee celebration recently competed for, and won, high prizes in France, when it had a kind of triumphal progress through that country. The present conductor, Lieut. C. L. Boer, is extremely popular as well as capable, though even in the midst of the congratulations came certain criticisms, the most serious of which averred that the general education of the officers and members had declined in recent years.

Owing to increasing years and ill-health Baron Zuylen van Nyevelt, who for some years has been the director as well as the financial guarantor of the Popular Concerts of the Residentie Orchestra, has found it necessary to retire from the former position, though he will still continue his generous financial support. This support is necessary owing to the small prices charged for admission. The great Gebouw van Kunsten en Wetenschappen, at The Hague, is, however, always crowded for these concerts, the programmes of which are of the best, and are often replicas of the regular subscription concerts of the Orchestra. The musical direction will in future be in the hands of Dr. van Anrooy and Mr. Leo Ruygrok, the present permanent conductor and assistant-conductor.

Without providing anything actually new the Kurhaus concerts at Scheveningen are keeping well off the beaten track. Some of the best music is that provided at the 'dance evenings'; and that of Spanish music, with La Argentino making music on her castagnets, which was not less striking than the pianoforte and vocal music of Josquin Nin and Alicita Felici, was a splendid success. We have also had the former Imperial Russian Ballet, too late, however, for notice here. A Polish concert, arranged and conducted by Ignaz Neumark, who is himself a Pole, with his fellow-countryman, Jan Smeterlin, as solo pianist, was interesting without being exciting. Chopin's Concerto in E minor was played with remarkable sympathy, and, as so played, proved to have more in it than most pianists and conductors are able to show. The other works were chiefly of a derivative character, owing much to the giants of the 19th century, though they were not without points of interest. To me the most appealing was an orchestral Prelude, 'Monna Lisa Gioconda,' by Ludomir Rozycki. The composer, who is well-known in his own country, is a thorough master of the orchestra, and handles it in a distinctive manner. This is most effective when he divides his forces into a number of small groups, or writes solos for one or other of the instruments, with a light accompaniment. The emotional character of the work was only slight, but was sufficient to make one wish to hear some of Rozycki's other compositions. A 'Rapsodie,' by Mieczyslav Karlowicz, was full of piquant rhythm and richly scored, but was too long to maintain its interest. The rest of the programme was made up of an early Concert Overture by Karol Szymanowski, and a Symphonic Poem, 'Le Steppe' (which owed almost everything to Mendelssohn and Liszt), by Zygmunt Noskowski, the famous Warsaw professor. A very popular feature of the programmes is that of performing items in which the leading members of the orchestra have important solo parts. During the last few weeks this scheme has introduced to the Scheveningen public, for the first time, Haydn's Sinfonie Concertante for violin, 'cello, oboe, bassoon, and orchestra, and Mozart's similar work for oboe, clarinet, horn, bassoon, and orchestra. These call for no comment, except to the thoroughly musical insight into them shown by Prof. Schnéevoigt and his players. Other novelties here have been two completely characteristic Strauss excerpts from the opera 'Intermezzo,' and Stravinsky's 'Fireworks.' Mention should also be made of a remarkably good performance of Mahler's 'Lied von der Erde,' with Ilona Durigo and Jacques Urlus as vocalists, and a similar one of the 'Symphonie Fantastique' of Berlioz. The last-named work was played on the evening of the visit of Cortôt, who, in choosing Saint-Saëns's C minor Concerto, rather brought down the piquant character of the programme, which had opened with Chabrier's 'Gwendoline' Overture and Ravel's 'Ma Mère l'Oye' pieces. His playing was, however, magnificent. Two violin soloists of distinction, Josef Wolfsthal and Cecilia Hansen, have also played classical concertos. Friday afternoons are now devoted to recitals by local artists, who are generally content to show the quality of their talents—often quite remarkable—in familiar songs and pianoforte pieces.

HERBERT ANTCLIFFE.

Obituary

We regret to record the following deaths:

EDGAR HADDOCK, at Leeds, on August 9, aged sixty-six. A native of Leeds, Mr. Haddock was one of a long line of prominent Yorkshire musicians. He made his first public appearance as a violinist at the age of six, and when only twelve he was called on to deputise for an absent player in the orchestra at the Leeds Festival. Subsequently he received many engagements in the North, and also played in London for Joachim and Manns. Thirty years ago, with his father and brother, he founded the Leeds College of Music, of which he was principal at the time of his death.

SIR CHARLES BRETT, at Belfast, on July 18, aged eighty-seven. He was a devoted helper of music in a variety of ways, and for over half a century was one of the pillars of the Belfast Philharmonic Society. His profession was the law, but he found time to make himself an excellent violoncellist, and until past his eightieth year he was indefatigable in his attendance at rehearsals. For some years he acted as honorary representative of this journal in Belfast and district. A man of wide culture and many interests, he will long be remembered in Irish musical circles.

JOHN ALBERT CROSS, at Manchester, on July 31, in his eighty-third year. He was founder of the Manchester School of Music (1892), and was a successful pioneer in the direction of musical competitions, sight-reading, choralism, and cheap concerts. 'Cross's Concerts' developed into one of the most popular institutions in the North of England, drawing large audiences weekly.

WALTER HAIGH, in a Liverpool nursing home, on July 27. He was deputy-conductor of the Llandudno Pier Orchestra, which body he joined as a viola player about thirty years ago. He had been also a member of the Hallé and Scottish Orchestras. For many years he conducted the Llandudno Season Extension Concerts.

WILLIAM HESLOP, on August 7, at Darlington. Born at Shildon, Co. Durham, on August 20, 1839, he was for over seventy years a choirmaster, the greater part of this time being in connection with the Primitive Methodist Church at Greenbank, Darlington. He did good work in making known the great oratorios.

Miscellaneous

The London Violoncello School prize of ten guineas for the best performance of a Sonata has been won by Mr. John Shinbaum, of London. Mr. Herbert Withers was the adjudicator.

Sir Henry Coward is celebrating his knighthood in an excellent way by founding a scholarship at the Summer School of the Tonic Sol-fa College.

Programmes of recent concerts given by the Victorian centre of the British Music Society at the Assembly Hall, Melbourne, show marked enterprise. On June 18 a programme of modern British music was given, drawn from the works of Walford Davies, Goossens, Peterkin, Whittaker, Ernest Walker, Dale, and Holst. Five of the numbers were 'first performances' at Melbourne. A few weeks earlier the B.M.S. Quartet gave a chamber concert, playing Beethoven's Op. 18, No. 6, Frank Bridge's Septet, and Bax's Quartet in G. On June 4, a Bach concert was given by the Quartet and a few soloists, when a couple of Cantata Preludes, and the F minor and D minor Pianoforte Concertos were played, and arias sung.

The following scholarships have been awarded at Trinity College of Music, after open competition: violin, Mary Cooper; violoncello, William Worthy Etherington; singing, Doris Irene Score; pianoforte, Irene Elizabeth Arnold, Myra Estella Cohen, and Rosalie Goldstein. Reginald Donald Chivers has been admitted to a University Degree Scholarship entitling him to complete preparation for the Mus.Bac. Degree at London University. The examiners were Prof. J. C. Bridge and Dr. E. F. Horner.

Mr. Herbert Antcliffe, who is now living at The Hague, is shortly issuing by subscription a volume of essays under the comprehensive title, 'Art, Religion, and Clothes.' The subscription price will be 7*s.* 6*d.* in England, two dollars in America, and F4.50 in Holland. Intending subscribers should write to Mr. Antcliffe, at 73 van Merlenstraat, The Hague, not later than November 15.

The City of London Choral Union (conductor, Dr. Harold Darke), intends to perform this season the 'Dream of Gerontius' and Stanford's 'Stabat Mater.' Rehearsals are held on Tuesday evenings from 5.30 to 7.0, in St. Michael's Church, Cornhill. The hon. secretary is Mr. William Reid, 11, Queen Victoria Street, E.C. 3, from whom full particulars as to membership, &c., may be obtained.

A Bach Festival will take place at St. Mary's Baptist Church and Lecture Hall, Duke Street, Norwich, on October 13, 14, and 15, the scheme comprising chamber music, chorale preludes, three concertos, two Church cantatas, and the cantata for bass solo, 'False Love.' Mr. Cyril Pearce is the prime mover and conductor.

The programmes at the West Wales Three Choirs Musical Festival (St. Peter's Church, Carmarthen), on September 16, 17, and 19, will include 'Elijah,' 'The Messiah,' 'The Hymn of Praise,' and Elgar's 'For the Fallen.'

Answers to Correspondents

G. A. W.—(1.) We gave an account of the origin of the custom of standing during the singing of the 'Hallelujah Chorus' in our issue for March, 1926, p. 270. (2.) Most emphatically we think it desirable for a musical festival to hold a class for pianoforte accompaniment. This may be either for solo singer or for instrumental solo. Almost equally valuable is a class for accompaniment at sight. (3.) We think you will find it difficult to obtain any one work giving the history of music in a satisfactory form. The subject is so vast that it is necessarily dealt with in a number of separate volumes. 'Grove' is the obvious choice, but if that is beyond your means, or is too bulky, try the very readable 'History of Music,' by Stanford and Forsyth (Macmillan). If there is any particular department on which you wish to obtain information, ask us again.

H. E. W.—The only incidental music for 'Twelfth Night' (apart, of course, from the various songs, which have been set by Quilter, Stanford, and others) appears to be that of Humperdinck, written for Rheinhardt's production of the play at the Deutscher Theater, Berlin, in 1907. Christopher Wilson, in his 'Shakespeare and Music,' speaks very highly of it. We do not know if it is published. Write to the Director of the Theatre.

U. S. A. (Illinois).—(1.) The method of producing the drum effect in the organ arrangements of 'Finlandia' and Saint-Saëns's 'Marche Héroïque' must vary with the organ and building. We agree with you that in the March a better effect is often obtained by sustaining the B flat and A with 16-ft. and 8-ft. pedal stops alone (no couplers). The marking of the rhythm by a release of the upper note is sometimes an improvement. The point to remember is that in all such questions concerning arrangements, the player must not be tied by the copy. If his organ or the acoustics of the building necessitate his making an arrangement of an arrangement, so to speak, he must be prepared to do so. (2.) Only No. 1 of the 'Pomp and Circumstance' Marches has been arranged for organ. Messrs. Boosey publish the pianoforte score of the set.

F. B.—Last month we promised to give you titles of a few works for two pianofortes (four hands). Here they are: Schubert's Impromptu in E flat, Op. 19, No. 2, arranged by Poldini; Johann Strauss's Valse Caprice (I. Philipp); 'Tourbillon,' Melan-Guéroult; Franck's organ works (Griset and Duparc); Debussy's 'Petite Suite' and 'L'Après-midi d'un Faune.' All these may be had from Novello's. In reply to your inquiry as to arrangements of the 'Meistersinger' Overture, Mr. Arthur Baynon tells us that a two-pianoforte version, by Max Reger, is published in the Peters Edition, No. 3437*a*; and we hear from Mr. W. Silverwood that it is also arranged for two pianofortes by H. Behn, and for three pianofortes (twelve hands) by A. von Livonius (Schott).

G. F. L.—We do not undertake the criticism of manuscript works, but we don't mind telling you that your setting of 'O mistress mine' shows promise and fluency. The almost incessant use of passing-notes in the accompaniment produces a fussy effect, however, and the idiom is not that of the pianoforte, in places. Examine some good models for this important part of song writing.

R. J. D. (South Africa).—The institution about which you inquire is one of those whose advertisements are refused by this and other musical journals. You ask why we depreciate its diplomas. The main reason is that the proportion of passes is too high for the standard of the competitors to be anything but low. Moreover, far too much is made of such accessories as cap and gown.

MARY H.—Write to the Director of the Carl Rosa Opera Company, explaining your ambitions and qualifications. You seem to be rather young for a start, even in the chorus of the opera, but (as you say) being a contralto gives you something of a pull. Meanwhile, work hard in one of the numerous choral societies that abound in your part of the country.

ANXIOUS.—Probably you will obtain the information you want as to vacancies, &c., in cinemas, for pianists and organists, from the Controller, British Screen Music Society, Westville, Babbacombe, Torquay, Devon. This Society publishes a monthly periodical, the Cinema Musician, dealing with cinema music.

W. J. D.—You say you are 'a moderate pianoforte player, and have memorised some pieces, and now want to do some playing by ear.' We don't understand what you would be at. Do you mean extemporising? 'Playing by ear' is the refuge of those who cannot read music. You can, so why do you want to descend to vamping?

GUIDA.—In the last five notes of the passage you quote from Cyril Scott's 'Danse Negre,' the notes are all naturals, because at that point there is a change of harmony from D to C major.

E. L. B.—We can suggest no other plan than the simple one of writing to any concert agent of repute, giving full particulars of your aims and capabilities, and asking for an audition.

R. J. B.—We know of no genuine carols by Tudor composers, though there are of course plenty of motets, &c., suitable for use at Christmas. Several by Byrd are published by Stainer & Bell. Write for a list.

W. B.—The addresses you require of festival secretaries, together with a mass of other information, are in the Year-Book of the British Federation of Musical Competition Festivals, 3, Central Buildings, Westminster, S.W.1, 1s.

R. L. S.—For all the information you require, apply to the secretary, National Gramophonic Society, Frith Street, W.1.

'WALTZ.'—We have referred your inquiries to the 'Music Search Bureau' of the Music Publishers' Association, and hope to send you the information shortly.

J. G. D.—There is a music-lending library at Messrs. Novello's.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE.
The Nature of Harmony.—IV. By Matthew Shirlaw	785
Personalities among Musical Critics.—VIII. W. J. Turner. By Basil Maine	788
Ad Libitum. By 'Feste'	789
Opera and the Choral Society	792
Orchestral Notation. By Tom. S. Wotton (continued)	795
Music in the Foreign Press. By M.-D. Calvocoressi	797
Leonard Borwick: A Memory and Appreciation. By William Saunders	798
Dance Music of To-day. By Jack Hylton	979
Carl Maria von Weber: Notes on some Episodes in his Career. By Edward Speyer	801
An Unpublished Page of Bizet's 'Carmen.' By Paul Landormy	803
New Light on Late Tudor Composers.—XX. Nathaniel Patrick. By W. H. Grattan Flood	804
New Music	805
The Children's Music. By J. H. Elliot	811
Josef Rheinberger in Private Life. By Andrew de Ternant	812
The Musician's Bookshelf	814
Gramophone Notes. By 'Discus'	816
Wireless Notes. By 'Ariel'	822
Points from Lectures	823
Occasional Notes	823
Church and Organ Music	826
Royal College of Organists	826
Music in Stones: 15th-Century Carving in a Village Church. By the Rev T. Francis Forth	826
Royal College of Organists: Annual General Meeting	828
Letters to the Editor	833
The Amateurs' Exchange	838
Sixty Years Ago	838
Royal Academy of Music	839
Incorporated Staff-Sight-Singing College	839
Cambridge Summer School Course in Music Teaching	839
Music in Public Schools	839
London Concerts	840
Competition Festival Record	841
Welsh National Eisteddfod	841
Music in the Provinces	844
Music in Ireland	844
Musical Notes from Abroad	845
Obituary	845
Miscellaneous	845
Answers to Correspondents	846

MUSIC.

'I will give my love an apple.' Folk-Song. Arranged for Mixed Voices. By MICHAEL MULLINAR	817

TWO EXTRA SUPPLEMENTS are given with this number:

1. 'Beware! Beware!' Smugglers' Chorus from 'Carmen.' By Georges Bizet. Arranged by W. McNaught.
2. 'How engaging, how endearing.' Chorus from 'Semele.' By Handel.

DURING THE LAST MONTH.

Published by NOVELLO & CO., LIMITED.

BIZET, G.—"Beware! Beware!" Smugglers' Chorus from "Carmen." (No. 119, Novello's Opera Choruses.) 4d.

MACKENZIE, A. C.—"The Little Minister." Overture. Pianoforte Conductor. 3s.

—— Three Dances from "The Little Minister." Pianoforte Conductor. 4s.

MACKINTOSH, FLORENCE.—"We will merrie be." Song, in C. 2s.

MULLINAR, M.—"I will give my love an apple." Folk-Song. Arranged for Mixed Voices. (No. 1003, The Musical Times.) 2d.

POUNCEY, DENYS D. R.—Te Deum No. 1. 2d.

RATHBONE, G.—"How sweet the moonlight sleeps." Two-part Song. (No. 227, Novello's Two-part Songs.) 4d.

SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW, No. 411, contains the following music in both notations:—"A Country Song." Unison Song by ALEC ROWLEY. 2d.

SCHOOL SONGS.—Published in two forms. A. Voice Parts in Staff and Tonic Sol-fa Notations, with Pianoforte Accompaniment (8vo). B. Voice Parts only, in Tonic Sol-fa Notation.

		A.	B.
No. 1189.	"Take, shepherd, take thy prize." Unison Song. CLEMENT M. SPURLING	2d.	—
1191.	"In Derry Vale" (The Londonderry Air), with Descant. Arr. by GEOFFREY SHAW	2d.	—
1192.	"The Bold 'Princess Royal.'" Norfolk Folk-Song. Arr. by R. VAUGHAN WILLIAMS	2d.	—
1454.	"If with all your hearts." Air from "Elijah," in C. MENDELSSOHN	2d.	—
1458.	"He that hath a pleasant face." Arranged for S.S.A. J. L. HATTON	3d.	—

SEVEN CAROLS.—Set 4. Words by Blind Poets, and Music by Blind Musicians. 6d.

TAYLOR, W.—Benedicite Omnia Opera. In G. 3d.

TONIC SOL-FA SERIES:

No. 2515. To man God's universal law. Chorus from "Samson," HANDEL 2d.

TWELVE INTROITS OR SHORT ANTHEMS.—By various composers. Set 2. 1s. (For Contents see page 864.)

WESLEY, S. S.—"Let us now praise famous men." Anthem for Commemoration, Founders' Day, &c. Edited by JOHN E. WEST. (No. 1145, Novello's 8vo Anthems.) 4d.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

CHARGES FOR ADVERTISEMENTS:—

	£ s. d.
Two Lines	0 3 0
Three Lines	0 3 4
For every additional Line	0 0 10
One inch (displayed)	0 10 0
Half a Column	2 0 0
A Column	4 0 0
A Page	7 10 0

Special Pages (Cover, &c.) by arrangement.

A remittance should be sent with every Advertisement.

TWENTY-SEVENTH YEAR.

HOW TO SING
HOW TO TEACH SINGING

Ten-Lesson Intensive Courses for Professional and Amateur Vocalists, Choirmasters, Teachers of Voice-Production and Singing, and Advanced Students taking up a Teaching Career.

Tuition given personally; also BY CORRESPONDENCE.

Testimonials—"Foremost among leading voice producers"; "Wonderful results"; "Voice improves day by day"; "What I have been struggling for years to know"; "Has paid for itself several times over"; "Fifteen-year-old difficulty removed in few lessons"; "Had I only studied with you years ago"; "I now understand what I teach"; "I have never known more convincing teaching."

Change of Address:

WILLIAM WOLLER,
37, CASTLETOWN ROAD, BARON'S COURT,
LONDON, W.14.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL, ORCHESTRA
(NEW SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, LTD.)

Is available in any strength for Festival, Oratorio, and Concert engagements in Town or Country. All particulars, &c., of the Secretary,

HAROLD KENT,
"Aberfoyle," Khedive Road, Forest Gate, London, E.7.

ORGANIST REQUIRES POST (Excellent testimonials) as Organist, or Organist and Choirmaster (Non-conformist). In any part of London or Suburbs. Will take keen interest; first 12 months services voluntary. Apply, J. H. Chapman (organist) 196, Clapham Park Road, S.W.4.

ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER seeks POST in South of England. Recitalist. Successful with boys' voices; keen and energetic; twenty years' experience. Excellent testimonials. Opportunities for conducting augmented choir or choral society essential; also teaching facilities. Apply, "A.R.C.O.," "Miranshah," Carlton Street, Bridlington, Yorks.

ORGANIST-CHOIRMASTER.—EXPERIENCED, requires re-engagement. Streatham, Croydon, or district. Anglo-Catholic; Recitalist. "A. D.," 134, Abercain Road, Streatham Vale, S.W.16.

ORGANISTS.—Mr. L. Henderson Wigg can DEPUTISE on Sundays in London or Provinces. 42, Clapham Road, S.W.9.

BASS and TENOR SOLOISTS are willing to assist Church Choirs for Oratorios, Special Services, &c., Small fee to cover expenses. "E.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd, 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

SOPRANO WISHES TO JOIN GOOD QUARTET. M. Wilsher, 54, Pinner Road, Northwood.

ORGAN PRACTICE WANTED.—Church preferred (London). Will pay or otherwise make return therefor. Geigen, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour St., W.1.

TO MUSIC SCHOOLS OR COLLEGES.—Engagement (whole or part time) desired by Lady as Secretary-Accompanist. Ten years' secretarial experience, and L.R.A.M. (Performer). "H. M. C.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

FOR SALE.—ROGERS BOUDOIR GRAND PIANOFORTE. As new. Rosewood Case. Seen near London. Stafford, Minsterley, Salop.

BELOW HALF PRESENT PRICE.—THREE-manual reed organ; as new. Twenty-four speaking stops. Church organ console. Seen London. "J.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

STEINWAY BABY GRAND.—7¼ octaves. Excellent order. Low price. "J.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160., Wardour Street, W.1.

MUSIC STUDIO TO LET, near Royal Academy of Music. Grand Piano. 'Phone: Langham 3237; or write "Vocal," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

PIANOS TUNED, Repaired, Renovated, for trade and profession, or privately. Thirty years' experience. Any distance. Notts, Derby district. Own motor-cycle. Grigg, 9, Queen's Road, Beeston, Notts. Tel.: Beeston 37.

ORGAN PEDAL ATTACHMENT for Piano. Pneumatic (Norman & Beard), with Stool. 10 guineas; or complete with first-rate modern Piano, in perfect condition, 35 guineas. 12, Maida Vale, Norwich.

COMPETITION FOR ANNIVERSARY MUSIC CLOSES September 20. Particulars for stamped envelope, to James Broadbent & Son, Ltd., Boston Spa, Yorks.

TWELVE
Short Introductory Voluntaries
FOR THE ORGAN
BY
W. G. ALCOCK.

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

NOVELLO'S SCHOOL SONGS.
BOOK 273.

THIRTY SONGS
BY FRANZ SCHUBERT.
BOTH NOTATIONS.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

HIAWATHA'S WEDDING-FEAST
AND
THE DEATH OF MINNEHAHA
COMPOSED BY
S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR.
ARRANGED FOR PIANOFORTE SOLO
BY JOHN POINTER.

Price Five Shillings and Sixpence each.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

SPECIAL NOTICE.

To insure insertion in their proper positions, Advertisements for the next issue should reach the Office, 160, Wardour Street, London, W.1, not later than TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 21 (FIRST POST).

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE DESCANT HYMN-TUNE BOOK.

A COLLECTION OF WELL-KNOWN TUNES

ARRANGED BY

GEOFFREY SHAW

TUNES, AND APPROPRIATE HYMNS.

TUNE.	METRE.	HYMN.
Austria	8.7.8.7.D.	Glorious things of thee are spoken
		Praise the Lord ! ye heavens, adore Him
Bishopthorpe	C.M.	This is the day the Lord hath made
Darwall's 148th	6.6.6.6.4.4.4.4.	Ye holy Angels bright
Ein' feste Burg	8.7.8.7.6.6.6.7.	A safe stronghold our God is still
		Rejoice to-day with one accord
Eisenach	L.M.	Great God, Who, hid from mortal sight
		O Love, how deep ! how broad ! how high
Hanover	10.10.11.11.	Disposer Supreme, and Judge of the earth
		O worship the King, All-glorious above
Hyfrydol	8.7.8.7.D.	Alleluia ! sing to Jesus
Irish	C.M.	The Son of Man from Jordan rose
Lasst uns erfreuen	L.M. (with Alleluias)	Light's glittering morn bedecks the sky
		Ye watchers and ye holy ones
Leoni	6.6.8.4.D.	The God of Abraham praise
Luther	8.7.8.7.8.8.7.	Great God, what do I see and hear?
Melcombe	L.M.	New every morning is the love
Morning Hymn	L.M.	Awake, my soul, and with the sun
Nun danket	6.7.6.7.6.6.6.6.	Now thank we all our God
Old 100th (1st Version)	L.M.	All people that on earth do dwell
Old 100th (2nd Version)	L.M.	Before Jehovah's awful Throne
Old 104th	10.10.11.11.	Disposer Supreme, and judge of the earth
		O worship the King, All-glorious above
Richmond	C.M.	Praise to the Holiest in the height
Rockingham	L.M.	My God, and is Thy Table spread?
		When I survey the wondrous Cross
St. Anne (1st Version)	C.M.	O God, our help in ages past
St. Anne (2nd Version)	C.M.	The Son of God goes forth to war
St. Theodulph	7.6.7.6.D.	All glory, laud, and honour
St. Thomas	S.M.	The Advent of our God
Surrey	8.8.8.8.8.	The Lord my pasture shall prepare
		We have not known Thee as we ought
Tallis' Canon	L.M.	Glory to Thee, my God, this night
Unser Herrscher	8.7.8.7.8.7.	Come ye faithful, raise the anthem
Victory	8.8.8.4.	The strife is o'er, the battle done
Wareham	L.M.	O Saviour, Lord, to Thee we pray
Warrington	L.M.	Now that the daylight fills the sky
Wiltshire	C.M.	Through all the changing scenes of life
Winchester New	L.M.	On Jordan's bank the Baptist's cry
Winchester Old (1st Version)	C.M.	When God of old came down from Heaven
Winchester Old (2nd Version)	C.M.	While shepherds watched their flocks by night

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.
Voice Parts only, 8*d*.

F LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

HARVEST FESTIVAL MUSIC.

CANTATAS.

A GOLDEN HARVEST

FOR TENOR AND BASS SOLI AND CHORUS
WITH HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY THE CONGREGATION

THE WORDS AND HYMNS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY
H. KNIGHT

THE MUSIC BY
THOMAS ADAMS.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.
Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.; Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

THE RAINBOW OF PEACE

FOR TENOR AND BASS SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORGAN

THE MUSIC BY
THOMAS ADAMS.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

HARVEST-TIDE

FOR TENOR AND BASS SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORGAN OR SMALL ORCHESTRA

THE MUSIC BY HUGH BLAIR.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence; Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling.
Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.
Full Score and Orchestral Parts can be hired.

HARVEST CANTATA

FOR CHORUS, SEMI-CHORUS, AND ORGAN.

THE WORDS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY
J. F. WALLER

THE MUSIC BY
G. M. GARRETT.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.
Tonic Sol-fa, 8d. Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100; or 3d. each with Music to the Hymns. Full Score and Orchestral Parts can be hired.

RUTH

FOR SOPRANO, CONTRALTO, AND BASS SOLI AND CHORUS

THE WORDS BY
E. OXENFORD

THE MUSIC BY
ALFRED R. GAUL.

Price Three Shillings; Paper boards, Four Shillings.
Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. Choruses only, 1s. 6d. Book of Words, 6s. 6d. per 100.
Full Score and Orchestral Parts can be hired.

HARVEST CANTATA

FOR SOPRANO (OR TENOR) AND CONTRALTO (OR BARITONE) SOLI AND CHORUS

THE WORDS BY
R. D. BETJEMANN.

THE MUSIC BY
JULIUS HARRISON.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.
Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.; Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.

SONG OF THANKSGIVING

FOR SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BASS (OR CONTRALTO) SOLI AND CHORUS.
WITH HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY THE CONGREGATION

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND ARRANGED BY
S. WENSLEY

THE MUSIC BY
J. H. MAUNDER.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence:
Paper boards, Three Shillings and Sixpence.
Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.; Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100;
String Parts, price 13s. 6d.; Wind Parts, 21s. 5d.; Full Score, MS.

THE JUBILEE CANTATA

FOR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

THE MUSIC BY
C. M. WEBER.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.
Paper boards, Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.
String Parts, 12s.; Wind Parts, 9s. 8d.; Full Score on hire.

SEED-TIME AND HARVEST

FOR SOPRANO AND TENOR SOLI AND CHORUS

THE MUSIC BY
JOHN E. WEST.

Price Three Shillings. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d.
Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100; or 3d. each with Music to the Hymns.
Orchestral Parts can be hired.

A HARVEST SONG

FOR SOPRANO SOLO AND CHORUS

THE WORDS BY
J. BENNETT.

THE MUSIC BY
C. LEE WILLIAMS.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.
String Parts, 9s. 9d.; Full Score and Wind Parts, MS.

HYMNS AND CAROLS.

BARNBY, J.—Come, ye thankful people, come ... ... 1½d.
Harvest-tide thanksgiving, The. (Tonic Sol-fa, 1½d.) ... 2d.
Words only, per 100 2s.
Let all our brethren join in one ... ... 1½d.
Words only, per 100 3s.
Lord of the harvest, Thee we hail (Two Versions) each 3d.
O Lord of heaven and earth and sea ... ... 1½d.
Praise, O praise, our God and King ... ... 3d.
Sing to the Lord a joyful song ... ... 3d.
Sower went forth sowing, The. (Tonic Sol-fa, 1½d.) ... 2d.
BUNNETT, ED.—Sing to the Lord a joyful song ... ... 1½d.
CRAMENT, J. M.—Sowing and reaping (Carol)
Words only, per 100 2s.
DYKES, J. B.—Holy is the seed-time ... ... 2d.
Words only, per 100 3s.
GILBERT, B.—Come, ye thankful people, come ... ... 1½d.
HARVEY, W. C.—We thank Thee Lord for this fair earth (Children's voices) (Staff and Sol-fa Notations) ... ... 1½d.
HERVEY, F. A. J.—Make melody within your hearts (Carol) 2d.
KETÈLBEY, A. W.—God with plenty fills the hours ... ... 4d.
LEE, T.—King and Ruler of Creation ... ... 4d.
LOWE, A.—Holy is the seed-time (Carol) ... ... 2d.
Words only, per 100 3s.
MAUNDER, J. H.—Harvest Hymn of praise, A. (Tonic Sol-fa, 1½d.) ... ... 3d.
Words only, per 100 3s.
Joy of Harvest, The. (Tonic Sol-fa, 1½d.) ... ... 3d.
Words only, per 100 3s.
STIRLING, E.—Now Autumn strews on every plain ... ... 2d.
TOZER, F.—Lord of the rich and golden grain ... ... 3d.
Words only, per 100 3s.
TWELVE HYMNS selected from The Hymnary ... ... 1½d.

NOVELLO'S HARVEST ANTHEMS

SELECTED LIST.

EVERY GOOD GIFT. By GEORGE RATHBONE.
Price Fourpence.

THOMAS ADAMS

ALL THY WORKS PRAISE THEE
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

IT IS A GOOD THING TO GIVE THANKS
Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

W. G. ALCOCK

GIVE EAR, O YE HEAVENS
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

E. C. BAIRSTOW

I WILL GREATLY REJOICE
Price Fourpence.

J. BARNBY

THE EYES OF ALL WAIT UPON THEE
Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

HUGH BLAIR

OH, BRING TO THE LORD
Price Fourpence.

A. HERBERT BREWER

LET THE PEOPLE PRAISE THEE
Price Twopence.

EDWARD BUNNETT

BLESSED BE THOU, LORD GOD
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

O CLAP YOUR HANDS
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

PERCY C. BUCK

GOD BE MERCIFUL UNTO US
For Boys' Voices.
Price Fourpence.

H. A. CHAMBERS

IF YE WALK IN MY STATUTES
Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

EDWARD ELGAR

FEAR NOT, O LAND
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

PERCY E. FLETCHER

LET THE PEOPLE PRAISE THEE
Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

ALFRED R. GAUL

O BE JOYFUL IN THE LORD
Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

A. M. GOODHART

LET US NOW FEAR THE LORD
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

CUTHBERT HARRIS

AND GOD SAID
Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

SING A SONG OF PRAISE
Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

ALFRED HOLLINS

GOD THE ALL-FATHERLY
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

ALBERT LOWE

THE EARTH IS THE LORD'S
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

ARTHUR W. MARCHANT

I WILL MAGNIFY THEE
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

GEORGE C. MARTIN

THUS SAITH THE LORD GOD
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

E. W. NAYLOR

I WILL CAUSE THE SHOWER
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

J. VARLEY ROBERTS

BLESS THE LORD THY GOD
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

I WILL MAGNIFY THEE
Price Fourpence.

F. W. WADELY

PRAISE, O PRAISE OUR GOD
Price Twopence.

HERBERT W. WAREING

THE LORD GOD PLANTED A GARDEN
Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

HAROLD E. WATTS

THE GOD OF ABRAHAM PRAISE
Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

JOHN E. WEST

PRAISE TO GOD, IMMORTAL PRAISE
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

FATHER OF MERCIES, GOD OF LOVE
Arranged for Boys' or Female Voices.
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

W. WOLSTENHOLME

O THAT MEN WOULD PRAISE THE LORD
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

"Such settings as these cannot do otherwise than tend to popularise the Church Service."—Musical Standard, June 6, 1891.
"Good, effective, easy, and dignified."—Musical Times, April 1, 1891.
"Admirably adapted to meet the requirements of the majority of choirs and congregations." "Deserve extensive recognition and use."—Musical News, September 4 and 25, 1891.
Also recommended by the Guardian, Church Times, &c., &c.

POPULAR CHURCH MUSIC
BY
J. H. MAUNDER

	Staff Notation.	Tonic Sol-fa.
HARVEST ANTHEMS.
Sing to the Lord of Harvest	4d.	3d.
While the earth remaineth	4d.	3d.
Blessed be the Name of the Lord	4d.	3d.
SERVICES
SERVICE IN G	2s.	1s. 4d.
Or, separately:—
Te Deum	4d.	3d.
Benedicite, omnia Opera	3d.	3d.
Benedictus	3d.	3d.
Jubilate	4d.	3d.
Office for the Holy Communion	10d.	8d.
Pater Noster from the above	3d.	3d.
Amen ditto	1½d.	1½d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis	4d.	3d.
SERVICE IN CHANT FORM (No. 1)	1s. 4d.	10d.
Or, separately:—
Te Deum, &c., with Kyrie	4d.	3d.
Office for the Holy Communion	8d.	6d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis	4d.	3d.
Te Deum in B flat...	4d.	3d
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in C (partly Unison)	4d.	2d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in D	4d.	3d.
ORGAN.
Voix Seraphique (for Recitals)...	2s. 6d.	—
CHURCH CANTATA.
Penitence, Pardon, and Peace (for general use) ...	2s.	1s. 4d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

SCHOOL MARCHES
FOR PIANOFORTE SOLO
BOOK III.
Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

CONTENTS.

Arrival of the Visitors... ... ... H. Hofmann
Bright and Buxom Lasses, from "Martha" ... Flotow
Instrumental Band, The ... ... Percy E. Fletcher
Little March, A ... ... J. D. Davis
March from "Egmont" ... ... Beethoven
March from "St. Polycarp"... ... F. A. G. Ouseley
March ... ... Th. Kullak
March from "Tannhäuser" ... ... Wagner
Marching off to Bed ... ... Myles B. Foster
March of Priests, from "The Magic Flute" Mozart
Soldiers' Chorus, from "Il Trovatore" ... ... Verdi
Toy Soldiers' March ... ... Tschaïkowsky

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

Y.B.P. A NEW SERIES

THE YEAR-BOOK PRESS SERIES OF INSTRUMENTAL MUSIC, ANCIENT AND MODERN.

		s.	d.
A. M. 1.	Largo and Fugue for Organ (C), WILLIAM RUSSELL, 1777-1813. Sometime Organist Foundling Hospital	2	0
A. M. 2.	Gigue for Organ (G minor) ... CHARLES WOOD	1	4
A. M. 3.	Two Bourrées for Organ (G minor, G) CHARLES WOOD	1	4
A. M. 4.	The Friar's Tune Book. Twelve Easy Pianoforte Pieces ... ... EMILY DAYMOND	1	6
A. M. 5.	Trio for Violin, 'Cello, and Pianoforte FRANKLIN HARVEY	2	0
A. M. 6.	Two Easy Dances for Pianoforte T. F. DUNHILL	1	6
A. M. 7.	Sonata from Lessons for the Harpsichord. Edited for Pianoforte by H. G. Ley, with additional notes by J. A. Fuller-Maitland. J. NARES, 1715-83. Sometime Organist of the Chapel Royal	1	6
A. M. 8.	Minuet from Organ Concerto (B flat), arranged for Violin and Pianoforte by M. Akerman G. F. HANDEL	1	0
A. M. 9.	Andante and Polacca (G), arranged for Violin and Pianoforte by M. Akerman ...WILLIAM RUSSELL	1	6
A. M. 10.	Musette and Minuet (B flat) from "Alcina." Arranged for Violin and Pianoforte by C. S. Lang ... ... G. F. HANDEL	1	0
A. M. 11.	Tallis' Canon. Arranged as Organ Prelude C. S. LANG	1	0
A. M. 12.	Marche Militaire for Organ ... ... P. C. BUCK	1	9
A. M. 13.	Two Christmas Preludes for Organ ... P. C. BUCK	1	9
A. M. 14.	Andante from Organ Voluntary (E major), arranged for Violin and Pianoforte by M. Akerman WILLIAM RUSSELL	1	0
A. M. 15.	Andante Larghetto, from "Saul" (C), arranged for Violin and Pianoforte by S. H. Nicholson G. F. HANDEL	1	0
A. M. 16.	Four Pianoforte Pieces. Moderately Difficult. H. M. GRIEVESON	1	0
A. M. 17.	Overture to "Otho," arranged for String Orchestra, with or without wind and organ, by H. W. Hunt. G. F. HANDEL, score	3	6 parts	0	6

ADDITIONS TO THE YEAR-BOOK PRESS SERIES OF
(1) UNISON AND PART-SONGS;
(2) ANTHEMS AND CHURCH MUSIC.

262.	Highland Lullaby. Unison. F. C. S. CAREY	3d.
263.	Let all the world in every corner sing. Four-Part. E. T. CHAPMAN	4d.
264.	Eight Songs of Innocence. Unison or Two-part. D. W. STEWART	1s.
265.	Trees. Unison. CHARLES WOOD	3d.
266.	Wake, Little Bees! Two-part. C. S. LANG	4d.
267.	Under the Greenwood Tree. Two-part. E. T. CHAPMAN	3d
268.	The hill pines were sighing. Two-part. ALAN PALMER	4d.
269.	The Blossom. Three-part. CHARLES WOOD	3d.
270.	A Song of the Sea. Unison. CHARLES WOOD	3d.
271.	I often sit and wish. Unison. E. T. CHAPMAN	3d.
272.	The Jocund Dance. Unison. H. M. GRIEVESON	3d.
273.	A Lullaby. Unison. J. M. TATTON	3d.
274.	Running on. Unison. BASIL HARWOOD	4d.
A39.	Lead, kindly Light (S.A.T.B.). "Sandon," with varied treatment by J. A. Fuller-Maitland. C. H. PURDAY ...	2d.
A40.	Hymns for Beginning and End of Term (S.A.T.B.). C. H. LLOYD and C. V. STANFORD	2d.
A41.	When I survey the Wondrous Cross (S.A.T.B.). 18th-Century tune, re-harmonized by C. H. H. PARRY ...	2d.
A42.	My Father for another night. (S.A.T.B.). Introit. P. C. BUCK	2d.
A43.	O Bone Jesu. Motet in Nineteen Parts. Edited by J. A. Fuller-Maitland. Composed circa 1546, by ROBERT CARVER	2/6

Copies on approval, Post Free, and full Catalogues.

H. F. W. DEANE & SONS THE YEAR-BOOK PRESS LTD.,
31, MUSEUM STREET, LONDON, W.C.1.

NOVELLO'S EDITIONS.
ORATORIOS, CANTATAS, ETC.

(S.A.T.B. EDITIONS ONLY.)

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE EACH.

ADAMS, T.—†Cross of Christ, The.
——†Golden Harvest, A.
——†Holy Child, The.
——†Nativity, The.
—— Rainbow of Peace, The.
ALCOCK, W. G.—And I heard a great voice.
ANDERTON, T.—Norman Baron, The.
——†Wreck of the Hesperus, The.
ASPA, E.—Gipsies, The.
ASTORGA.—Stabat Mater.
AUSTIN, F.—†Songs in a Farmhouse.
BACH.—†Bide with us.
——† Ditto. (Welsh Words).
—— Christ lay in death's dark prison.
—— Christians, grave ye this glad day.
——†Christmas Oratorio. Parts 1—2.
Ditto Ditto. Parts 3—4.
Ditto Ditto. Parts 5—6.
——†Come, Jesu, come (Motet).
—— Come, Redeemer of our race.
—— From depths of woe I call on Thee.
—— Give the hungry man thy bread.
—— God goeth up with shouting.
——†God so loved the world.
——†God's time is the best.
——† Ditto (Welsh Words).
——†How brightly shines yon star of morn.
—— If thou but sufferest God to guide thee.
——†Jesu, Priceless Treasure (Motet).
——† Ditto (Welsh Words).
—— Jesus, now will we praise Thee.
—— Jesus sleeps, what hope remaineth.
—— Let songs of rejoicing be raised.
—— Lord is a sun and shield, The.
——†Lord is my Shepherd, The.
—— Lord, rebuke me not.
——*†Magnificat in D.
——†My spirit was in heaviness.
—— O Christ, my all in living.
—— O Jesu Christ, Thou Prince of Peace.
——†O Light Everlasting.
—— O praise the Lord for all His mercies.
—— O teach me, Lord, my days to number.
—— Praise our God Who reigns in Heaven.
—— Praise thou the Lord, Jerusalem.
—— Ready be, my soul, alway.
—— Rise, O Soul.
—— Sages of Sheba, The.
——†Sleepers, wake.
——†Spirit also helpeth us, The (Motet).
——†Stronghold Sure, A.
—— There is nought of soundness in all my body.
—— Thou Guide of Israel.
—— Wailing, crying, mourning, sighing.
—— Watch ye, pray ye.
—— When will God recall my spirit.
—— Whoso doth offer thanks.
BARNBY, J.—†Rebekah.
BARTON, M.—Mass in A.
BEETHOVEN.—†Choral Fantasia.
—— Engedi.
——†Mass in C (Latin).
——*Mass in C.
—— Mount of Olives.
BENNETT, G. J.—Easter Hymn (On the morn of Easter Day).
BENNETT, W. S.—Exhibition Ode.
——†May Queen, The.
——†Woman of Samaria, The.
BETJEMANN.—Song of the Western Men.
BLAIR, H.—†Harvest-tide.
BRAHMS, J.—Song of Destiny, A.
—— Songs of Love (Vocal Part only).
BREE, J. B. VAN.—†St. Cecilia's Day.
BREWER, A. H.—O praise the Lord.
—— Song of Eden, A.
BRIDGE, J. F.—Hymn to the Creator.
——†Inchcape Rock, The.
——†Lord's Prayer, The.
——*†Rock of Ages.
CARISSIMI.—*Jephthah.
CHERUBINI.—*Mass, Requiem, in C minor (No. 1).
—— Mass (Coronation) in A (No. 3).
—— Mass, in C (No. 4).
COBB, G. F.—My soul truly waiteth.
COSTA, M.—Dream, The.
COWEN, F. H.—†He giveth His beloved sleep.
DALE, B. J.—†Before the paling of the stars.
DAVIES, H. W.—†Hervé Riel.
—— Ode on Time.
DUNHILL, T. F.—†Tubal Cain.
ELGAR, E.—†For the Fallen.
——†Fourth of August, The.
—— Te Deum and Benedictus, in F.
ELLICOTT, R. F.—Elysium.
FRANZ, R.—Praise ye the Lord.
GADE, N. W.—†Christmas Eve.
——†Erl-King's Daughter, The.
—— Zion.
GARRETT, G. M.—†Harvest Cantata.
GAUL, A. R.—†Ruth (Choruses only).
GOETZ, H.—†By the Waters of Babylon.
——†Nœnia.
GOODHART, A. M.—Earl Haldan's Daughter.
GOUNOD, CH.—Daughters of Jerusalem.
—— De Profundis (Latin).
—— Ditto (English).
——*†Gallia.
—— Messe Solennelle, Ste. Cécile (Latin).
—— Out of Darkness.
—— Passion, The.
——†Redemption (Part 2).
—— Ditto (Part 3).
GRAUN.—Passion, The (Choruses only).
GRAY, A.—Legend of the Rock Buoy Bell.
GRIMM, J. O.—Soul's Aspiration, The.
HANDEL.—†Acis and Galatea.
—— Chandos Te Deum.
—— Dettingen Te Deum.
—— Dixit Dominus.
——*Except the Lord build the house.
——†Israel in Egypt (Pocket Edition).
——†Judas Maccabæus (Ditto.)
——†Messiah (Ditto).
——*Nisi Dominus.
—— O come, let us sing unto the Lord.
——†O praise the Lord.
—— Ode on St. Cecilia's Day.
—— Passion of Christ, The (Abridged).
—— Utrecht Jubilate.
—— Ways of Zion, The.
HARRISON, J.—Christmas Cantata.
——†Harvest Cantata.
HARRISS, C. A. E.—Sands of Dee, The.
HARWOOD, BASIL.—Love Incarnate.
HAYDN.—†Creation, The (Pocket Edition).
——*Mass, in B flat (No. 1).
—— Mass, in B flat (No. 1) (Latin).
—— Mass, in C (No. 2) (Latin).
—— Mass, in D (No. 3) (Latin).
——*Mass, in D (No. 3).
——*Te Deum Laudamus, in C.
—— Seasons, The, From:
†Spring, Autumn.
Summer, Winter.
—— Seasons, The (Choruses only).
HECHT, E.—O may I join the choir invisible.
HIGGS, H. M.—Erl-King, The.
HILLER, F.—†Song of Victory, A.
HOLST, G.—Ode to Death.
—— Ode on a Grecian Urn.
HUMMEL.—Mass, in B flat (No. 1).
—— Mass, in E flat (No. 2).
—— Mass, in D (No. 3).
JENSEN, A.—†Feast of Adonis, The.
JORDAN, W.—Blow ye the trumpet in Zion.
LEMARE, E. H.—'Tis the spring of souls to-day.
LEO, L.—Dixit Dominus.
LLOYD, C. H.—O give thanks unto the Lord.
—— Song of Balder, The.
MACCUNN, H.—†Lord Ullin's Daughter.
——†Wreck of the Hesperus, The.
MACFARREN, G. A.—†May Day.
—— Outward Bound.
MACKENZIE, A. C.—†Bride, The.
MENDELSSOHN.—†As the hart pants.
——†Athalie.
——*Ave Maria (Saviour of Sinners).
——†Christus.
——†Come, let us sing.
——†Elijah (Pocket Edition).
—— Ditto (Choruses only).
——†Festgesang (Hymns of Praise).
MENDELSSOHN.—continued.
——†Hear my Prayer.
——†Hymn of Praise (Lobgesang).
——*†Lauda Sion.
——†Lord, how long.
——†Loreley.
—— Man is Mortal.
——*Not unto us.
——*St. Paul (Pocket Edition).
—— Ditto (Choruses only).
——†Walpurgis Night, The First.
——†When Israel out of Egypt came.
MEYERBEER.—91st Psalm (Latin).
—— 91st Psalm (English).
MOZART.—King Thamos.
——*Mass in C (No. 1).
—— Mass in B flat (No. 7) (Latin).
—— Mass in G (No. 12) (Latin).
—— Mass in G (No. 12) (English).
——*†Mass in G (No. 12).
—— Mass, Requiem, in D minor (No. 15) (Latin).
——*†Mass, Requiem, in D minor (No. 15).
NORTH, S.—†In the Morning.
PALESTRINA.—Surge Illuminare.
PARKER, H. W.—Kobolds, The.
PARRY, C. H. H.—†Blest Pair of Sirens.
——†Chivalry of the Sea, The (Naval Ode).
—— Glories of our Blood and State, The.
—— Te Deum Laudamus (Coronation).
PINSUTI, C.—Phantoms.
PROUT, E.—Freedom.
——†Hundredth Psalm, The.
PURCELL.—Te Deum and Jubilate, in D.
——†Te Deum, in D.
—— Te Deum, in D (Latin).
ROMBERG.—Harmony of the Spheres, The.
——†Lay of the Bell, The.
—— Te Deum Laudamus, in D.
——†Transient and the Eternal, The.
ROSSINI.—*†Stabat Mater.
SACHS, ED.—King Cups.
—— Water-Lilies.
SCHUBERT.—Mass, in A flat.
—— Mass, in B flat.
—— Mass, in C.
——†Mass, in F.
—— Mass, in G.
——†Song of Miriam.
SCHUMANN.—Advent Hymn, "In Lowly Guise."
—— King's Son, The.
—— Manfred.
—— Mignon's Requiem.
——†New Year's Song.
—— Pilgrimage of the Rose.
SCHUTZ, H.—Passion of our Lord, The.
SELBY, B. L.—Dying Swan, The.
SILAS, E.—Mass, in C.
SMITH, A. B.—In Glorious Freedom.
SMITH, A. M.—Ode to the North-East Wind.
SPOHR.—Christian's Prayer, The.
——†God, Thou art Great.
—— Hymn to St. Cecilia.
——†Last Judgment, The.
STEPHEN, D.—†Laird o' Cockpen, The.
STOCKER, S.—Song of the Fates.
STOJOWSKI, S.—Springtime.
SULLIVAN, A.—Exhibition Ode.
—— †Te Deum (Thanksgiving).
THOMAS, A. G.—†Sun Worshippers, The.
THORNE, E. H.—Be merciful unto me.
TOURS, B.—Festival Ode, A.
WAGNER.—Flying Dutchman (A Selection from Act II.).
WALKER, E.—Hymn to Dionysus, A.
—— Ode to a Nightingale.
WEBER, C. M.—Jubilee Cantata.
—— *Mass in E flat.
—— *Mass in G.
—— Preciosa.
—— Three Seasons.
WESLEY, S.—Dixit Dominus.
WESLEY, S. S.—O Lord, Thou art my God.
WEST, J. E.—Lord, I have loved the habitation of Thy House.
—— Song of Zion, A.
WOOD, C.—Ode to the West Wind.
WOODMAN, R. T.—Falmouth.

*The Works marked thus * have Latin and English words. Those marked thus † may be had in Tonic Sol-fa Notation*
Cantatas, &c., for Female and Male Voices (see Novello's Catalogues).

LONDON: NOVELLO & COMPANY, LIMITED.

Recent Organ and Church Music

BY

BASIL HARWOOD.

	s.	d.
FANTASIA, "CHRISTMASTIDE"	3	6
RHAPSODY	3	0
IN AN OLD ABBEY	2	0
WEDDING MARCH	2	0
THREE PRELUDES ON ANGLICAN CHANTS	2	0
VOLUNTARY IN D FLAT	2	0
A SHORT AND EASY COMMUNION SERVICE IN E FLAT ... (Voice part only, for Congregational use, 6*d.*)	1	0

ANTHEMS.

GREAT GOD, WHO, HID FROM MORTAL SIGHT (General use)	0	6
O HOW PLENTIFUL IS THY GOODNESS (Harvest) ...	0	6

HYMNS.

LEAD, KINDLY LIGHT (Tune, "Bradfield College") ...	0	2
AUTHOR OF LIFE DIVINE	0	2

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

COMPOSITIONS FOR THE ORGAN

BY

SIGFRID KARG-ELERT.

	s.	d.
TROIS IMPRESSIONS, Op. 72.
1. Harmonies du Soir	1	6
2. Clair de Lune	1	6
3. La Nuit	1	6
CHACONNE AND FUGUE TRILOGY WITH CHORAL (2 Trumpets, 2 Trombones, 2 Tubas, Timpani, Tam-tam, and Piatti ad lib.), Op. 73.
Organ Score	7	0
Wind Parts, &c.	3	0
FIRST SONATINA in A minor, Op. 74	5	0
FUNERALE, Op. 75, No. 1	3	0
CHORAL IMPROVISATION on "In dulci jubilo," Op. 75, No. 2	2	3
HOMAGE TO HANDEL. 54 Studies in Variation Form	3	6
CHORAL IMPROVISATION on "Der Hölle Pforten sind zerstört"	2	0
CHORAL IMPROVISATION on "Gelobt sei Gott im höchsten Thron"	2	0
SEVEN PASTELS from "The Lake of Constance"	5	6

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

HOLY COMMUNION IN C, including AGNUS, BENEDICTUS, ETC.

BY HERBERT ROLFE, F.R.C.O.

Third thousand, 9*d.*

"... One of the most pleasing and devotional compositions of its class with which we have met for some time."—Church Review.

"... thoroughly devotional in tone."—Musical News.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

T. MEE PATTISON'S POPULAR CANTATA

THE ANCIENT MARINER

33rd 1,000.

Vocal Score, 2*s.* 6*d.* Choruses only, 1*s.* 3*d.*

Band Parts may be hired.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

JESUS, THE VERY THOUGHT OF THEE.

SACRED SONG.

THE WORDS BY

BERNARD OF CLAIRVAUX,

tr. E. CASWALL.

THE MUSIC BY

ERIC H. THIMAN.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE GOD OF LOVE MY SHEPHERD IS.

SACRED SONG.

THE WORDS BY

GEORGE HERBERT.

THE MUSIC BY

ERIC H. THIMAN.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NO. 101.—NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS.

EAR-TRAINING

INCLUDING

MUSICAL APPRECIATION AND

RHYTHMIC MOVEMENTS

BY

MABEL CHAMBERLAIN.

COMPLETE, SIX SHILLINGS,

Paper Boards, 7*s.*

Or,

In Two Books: Letterpress and Illustrations, 4*s.*

Music only, 3*s.*

The Ear-Training Course outlined in this book is intended primarily for Class use, but if a judicious selection be made from the exercises, the course can be used with equal benefit by private teachers for individual pupils. Senior pupils and students who desire to Study music, and who have received little or no previous tuition, cannot do better than work rapidly through these progressive exercises and tests. A Prospectus will be sent on application.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

TWENTY SHORT AND EASY PIECES
FOR THE ORGAN

SET VI.

No.
1.	ADAGIO FROM SEXTETT (Op. 81)	BEETHOVEN
2.	ALLEGRO GRANDIOSO	HUGH BLAIR
3.	LARGO IN E FLAT	E. BUNNETT
4.	MODERATO	GEORGE CALKIN
5.	BERCEUSE	CÉSAR CUI
6.	ADAGIO IN D	OTTO DIENEL
7.	POSTLUDE	EDMONDSTOUNE DUNCAN
8.	IMPROMPTU IN A	A. M. GOODHART
9.	WEDDING MARCH	A. GUILMANT
10.	MARCH FROM "ODE ON ST. CECILIA'S DAY"	HANDEL
11.	LIEDER OHNE WORTE, No. 9	F. MENDELSSOHN-BARTHOLDY
12.	ALLEGRO IN C	GUSTAV MERKEL
13.	ANDANTE	REISSIGER
14.	POSTLUDE IN F	J. VARLEY ROBERTS
15.	PRELUDE	B. LUARD-SELBY
16.	PRELUDE IN A	J. HENRY SMART
17.	ANDANTE CON MOTO	CHARLES STEGGALL
18.	ALLEGRETTO GRAZIOSO	BERTHOLD TOURS
19.	COMMUNION IN B FLAT	FERRIS TOZER
20.	CON MOTO	JOHN E. WEST

PRICE FOUR SHILLINGS.
Cloth, Six Shillings.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

JUST PUBLISHED.

No. 102.—NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS.

THE INSTRUMENTS OF THE ORCHESTRA

BY

JOHN E. BORLAND

WITH ILLUSTRATIONS.

THIS is not a treatise on Instrumentation, but is a booklet intended to help listeners to the Orchestra to become familiar with the appearance and the sound of the chief instruments. It deals a little also with the technique of the instruments; that is to say, with the means of producing and controlling their sounds, but is in no sense a text-book for orchestral players.

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NOVELLO'S MUSIC FOR SMALL

	Full Orchestra.	Small Orchestra.	Full Score.	Piano Conductor.	Violin Conductor.	Piano Solo.	Violin and Piano.	Violin 1mo.	Violin 2do.	Viola.	'Cello and Basso.	'Cello.	Basso.	Piccolo.
AUSTIN, E., Sweet Night	...	2/-	...	...	...	...	2/3	4d.	...	...	8d.	...	...	..
BENDALL, Pas Seul	...	7/4	...	...	...	1/6	...	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	8d.	8d.	..
BENNETT, Eventide Melody	...	4/4	4/-	...	...	2/3	...	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	8d.	4d.	..
BLAIR, Serenata	...	5/4	...	...	8d.	2/3	...	8d.	4d.	4d.	...	4d.	4d.	..
BREWER, Auf Wiedersehen	...	4/4	...	...	8d.	3/-	3/-	8d.	...	4d.	...	4d.	4d.	..
CAMPBELL, Nocturne	...	7/4	...	1/6	...	...	2/-	8d.	8d.	4d.	...	8d.	4d.	..
CARSE, Barbara Allen Variations ...	...	6/-	...	2/3	...	...	...	1/6	1/6	1/6	1/6	...	...	..
,, Gavotte in G	...	5/4	...	...	...	2/3	2/3	8d.	4d.	4d.	8d.	...	...	..
COLERIDGE-TAYLOR, Waltzes, Four ...	...	19/5	...	...	...	4/-	4/6	2/3	2/3	2/3	2/3	...	...	..
,, Hiawatha (Selection from Wedding-Feast)... ...	...	23/9	...	2/3	...	...	...	2/3	1/6	1/6	...	1/6	1/6	..
,, § Nero Music. Prelude, 2nd Entr'acte ...	17/-	...	...	3/-	...	3/-	3/-	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	8d.	8d.	..
,, § Nero Music. Intermezzo	7/4	...	...	8d.	...	2/3	3/-	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	8d.	4d.	..
,, § Nero Music. Finale, 1st Entr'acte ...	18/2	...	...	2/3	...	3/-	3/-	1/6	8d.	8d.	...	8d.	8d.	1/6
,, § Nero Music. Eastern Dance	11/8	...	...	1/6	...	3/-	3/-	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	8d.	8d.	..
,, Novelletten, Nos. 1, 2, & 3 ea. ...	3/8	4/-	...	...	...	...	3/-	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	8d.	8d.	..
,, ,, No. 4	6/2	4/-	...	...	...	...	3/-	1/6	1/6	1/6	...	8d.	8d.	..
COWEN, English Dances, Four	22/2	...	...	...	...	4/-	4/6	2/3	2/3	2/3	2/3	...	...	..
,, February (Months, No. 2)... ...	6/4	...	...	...	...	3/-	...	8d.	8d.	4d.	...	8d.	4d.	..
,, May (,, ,, 5)...	4/-	...	...	...	...	3/-	...	4d.	4d.	4d.	...	8d.	4d.	..
,, June (,, ,, 6)...	4/8	...	...	...	...	3/-	...	4d.	4d.	4d.	...	4d.	...	4d
,, September (,, ,, 9)...	10/-	...	...	...	...	3/-	...	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	8d.	8d.	..
,, November (,, ,, 11)...	11/10	...	...	...	...	3/-	...	1/6	8d.	8d.	...	8d.	8d.	..
,, December (,, ,, 12)...	7/8	...	...	...	...	3/-	...	4d.	4d.	4d.	...	4d.	4d.	..
,, Menuet d'Amour	5/8	...	5/6	...	...	2/3	3/-	8d.	4d.	4d.	8d.	...	...	..
DAVIES, Solemn Melody (str. & org.)...	...	2/4	3/-	...	...	2/3	2/3	4d.	4d.	4d.	...	4d.	4d.	..
DUNHILL, Chiddingfold Suite	...	9/9	7/6	...	...	...	...	2/3	2/3	2/3	...	1/6	1/6	..
ELGAR, Chanson de Matin	...	4/-	4/-	8d.	...	2/3	3/-	4d.	4d.	8d.	...	4d.	4d.	..
,, Chanson de Nuit	...	3/8	4/-	8d.	...	2/3	2/3	4d.	4d.	4d.	...	4d.	4d.	..
,, Pleading	...	3/4	...	...	...	...	...	4d.	4d.	4d.	4d.	...	...	..
,, Serenade (Wand of Youth) ...	...	2/4	...	1/6A	...	2/3	3/-	4d.	4d.	4d.	8d.	...	...	..
,, Canto Popolare	...	6/4	4/6	...	...	3/-	3/-	4d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	..
FLETCHER, Bagatelles (strings only) ...	...	3/6	...	...	...	3/-	...	8d.	8d.	8d.	1/6	...	...	..
,, The Toy Soldiers' March...	...	8/-	...	...	8d.	2/3	...	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	8d.
,, Valse Lyrique	...	9/6	...	...	...	2/3	...	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	..
GOUNOD, There is a green hill ...	4/8	...	...	8d.	...	...	...	4d.	4d.	4d.	4d.	...	...	..
HANDEL, Dance of Sailors	7/8	...	...	...	...	1/6	...	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	..
HAYNES, Westwood Gavotte	...	6/4	...	...	...	3/-	3/-	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	..
HOLBROOKE, Souvenir de Printemps ...	...	4/4	...	...	...	3/-	3/-	4d.	4d.	4d.	8d.	...	...	..
IRELAND, Bagatelle	...	7/8	...	...	...	...	3/-	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	..
JOHNSON, Elves (Faerie Suite, No. 1)...	...	8/-	...	1/6	...	3/-	...	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	8d.	8d.	..
,, Pavane in A	...	6/8	...	8d.	...	2/3	...	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	..
KREUZ, Conversation Amoureuse ...	...	6/10	...	1/6	...	3/-	3/-	8d.	8d.	8d.	1/6	...	...	..
LEMARE, Adantino	...	5/8	...	1/6	...	...	3/-	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	..
,, Chant sans Paroles	...	5/-	...	...	8d.	2/3	3/-	4d.	8d.	8d.	...	4d.	4d.	..
,, Menuet Nuptiale	...	4/4	...	8d.	...	...	...	4d.	4d.	4d.	8d.	...	...	..
MACKENZIE, Benedictus	4/8	...	7/6	...	...	...	3/-	8d.A	A	8d.	8d.	...	...	..
PURCELL, Gordian Knot Untied, 1st and 2nd Suites ... each	...	2/8	4/-	...	...	...	...	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	..
,, Suite	...	2/8	1/6	...	...	...	...	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	..
,, The Virtuous Wife (Incidental Music)	...	...	4/-	...	...	...	...	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	..
RAMEAU, Gavotte	6/-	...	...	...	...	2/3	...	4d.	4d.	4d.	8d.	...	...	..
RAWLINSON, Serenade	...	3/8	...	...	8d.	2/3	...	8d.	4d.	4d.	8d.	...	...	..
,, Aubade	...	6/-	...	...	8d.	2/3	...	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	..
REED, Serenade (Suite Venitienne) ...	...	4/8	...	8d.	...	...	...	4d.	4d.	4d.	8d	...	...	..
ROËCKEL, Graceful Dance	6/8	...	...	...	...	3/-	3/-	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	..
ROWLEY, Andante Religioso in 4/4 time ...	...	2/8	...	...	...	...	...	4d.	4d.	4d.	...	4d.	4d.	..
WADDINGTON, Intermezzo	...	7/4	...	1/6	...	...	...	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	8d.	8d.	..
WAREING, Summergold Gavotte ...	7/4	...	...	...	...	3/-	...	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	..
WENDT, Air de Ballet	7/4	...	...	1/6	...	3/-	3/-	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	8d.	8d.	..
WEST, Intermezzo	...	5/-	...	8d.	...	...	2/3	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	..
,, Marjorie Gavotte	5/8	...	...	...	...	3/-	...	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	..
,, Maypole Dance...	14/-	...	...	2/3	...	3/-	3/-	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	8d.	8d.	..
WOLSTENHOLME, Allegretto in E♭ ...	6/-	...	...	...	...	2/3	2/3	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	..

N.B.—Parts marked A, B, C, D, E, or F, are printed together.

ORCHESTRAS. SUITABLE FOR CINEMAS, &c.

Flauti.	Oboi.	Clarinetti.	Fagotti.	Corni 1 & 2.	Corni 3 & 4.	Trombe.	Cornetti.	Tromboni 1 and 2.	Trombone 3.	Euphonium.	Tuba.	Timpani.	Cassa.	Piatti.	Side Drum.	Triangle.	Tambourine.	Harp.	Solo-Cornet or Euphonium.	Organ or Harmonium.	Harp or Piano.	Bells.
4d.	...	4d.	...	...	...	...	4d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	4d.	...	...	...	...	4d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	8d.	...	8d.	...	...
8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
4d.	4d.	8d.	4d.	8d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	4d.	...	...	...	...	...	...
4d.	4d.	8d.	4d.	8d.	...	...	4d.	...	4d.	...	...	4d.	...	...	...	...	...	8d.	...	8d.	...	...
...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
4d.	4d.	8d.	4d.	8d.	...	...	4d.	...	4d.	...	...	4d.A	...	...	...	A	...	...	...	...	...	...
1/6	1/6	2/3	1/6	1/6	...	1/6	...	...	...	...	...	8d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
2/3	1/6	2/3	2/3	2/3	...	1/6	...	...	8d.	...	...	8d.	8d.	...	...	...	...	1/6	...	...	...	...
1/6	1/6	1/6	1/6	1/6	1/6	8d.	...	8d.	8d.	...	8d.	8d.	8d.A	A	A	A	...	8d.	...	...	...	...
8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	4d.	...	8d.	...	...	...	...
A	1/6	1/6	1/6	1/6	1/6	8d.	...	8d.	8d.	...	8d.	8d.	8d.B	B	4d.	B	...	8d.	...	...	...	...
8d.	†8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	8d.	4d.	...	4d.	8d.A	8d.B	B	A	4d.C	...	8d.	...	...	...	C
...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	4d.A	A	...	...	...	...	...
...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	4d.A	A	...	...	...	...	...
3/-	1/6	3/-	1/6	1/6	...	...	8d.	...	8d.	...	...	8d.	...	8d.A	...	A	...	...	...	...	...	...
4d.	8d.	8d.	4d.	8d.	4d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	8d.	...	...	...	...
4d.	4d.	4d.	4d.	4d.	4d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
8d.	8d.	8d.	4d.	4d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	4d.
8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	8d.	4d.	...	4d.	4d.	...	...	4d.A	A	...	...	...	...	...	...
8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	8d.	8d.	...	8d.	8d.	...	4d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
4d.	4d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	4d.	...	4d.	4d.	...	4d.	4d.	...	...	...	...	...	4d.	...	4d.	...	4d.
8d.	4d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	8d.	...
...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	8d.	...	...
...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
4d.	4d.	4d.	4d.	4d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	4d.	...
4d.	4d.	4d.	4d.	4d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	4d.	...
4d.	...	4d.	4d.	4d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	8d.	...
4d.	...	4d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	A	...	...	...	...
8d.	4d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	4d.	...	...	...	...	...	8d.	...	...	...	...
...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
A	8d.	8d.	8d.B	8d.	...	...	8d.	8d.	...	B	...	...	...	...	8d.C	C	...	...	...	...	...	...
8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	8d.	8d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	8d.	...	...	...	...	1/6	...
4d.D	D	4d.	4d.	4d.	4d.E	...	E	4d.F	F	...	...	F	...	...	...	...	...	...	8d.	...	8d.	...
8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	...	...	...	4d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
8d.	8d.	8d.	4d.	8d.	...	...	4d.	...	...	...	...	4d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
4d.	4d.	8d.	4d.	8d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	4d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	8d.	4d.	...	...	...	8d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
8d.	4d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	8d.	4d.	...	...	...	4d.	...	...	...	4dA.	A	...	...	...	...	...
8d.	4d.	8d.	4d.	8d.	...	...	8d.	...	4d.	...	...	4d.A	...	...	...	A	...	...	...	...	...	...
8d.	...	8d.	...	...	...	...	8d.	...	8d.	...	...	8d.A	...	...	...	A	...	...	...	...	...	...
8d.	4d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
4d.	4d.	8d.	4d.	8d.	...	...	4d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
4d.	4d.	4d.	4d.	8d.	...	...	...	4d.	...	...	...	4d.A	...	...	...	A	...	...	...	...	...	...
8d.	...	8d.	8d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
...	...	...	...	8d.	...	...	4d.	...	...	4d.	...	4d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
4d.	4d.	4d.	4d.	4d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
8d.	8d.	8d.	4d.	4d.	4d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
8d.	...	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	8d.	...	...	...	...	8d.A	...	...	...	A	...	...	...	...	...	...
...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	4d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	8d.	...	...
8d.	...	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	8d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	8d.	...	...	...	...	...	...
8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	8d.	4d.	...	...	...	4d.A	...	...	...	A	...	...	...	...	...	...
8d.	8d.	8d.	4d.	8d.	...	...	8d.	...	...	...	...	4d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
4d.	4d.	4d.	4d.	4d.	...	...	4d.	...	...	...	...	4d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
4d.	4d.	8d.	4d.	8d.	...	...	4d.	...	...	...	...	4d.A	...	...	...	A	...	...	...	...	...	...
1/6	1/6	1/6	1/6	8d.	...	...	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	8d.	8d.A	...	...	...	A	8d	...	...	...	...	...
8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...

† Oboe has the Melody. X Flute has the Melody. § May be had as a complete Suite.

JUST PUBLISHED.

TWELVE COUNTRY DANCE TUNES

COLLECTED BY

CECIL J. SHARP

ARRANGED FOR

BRASS OR MILITARY BAND

By GORDON JACOB.

IN THREE SETS.

PRICE ... ... 4*s.* 6*d.* EACH.

Separate Parts, 3*d.* each.

SET 1.	SET 2.
THE BUTTERFLY	GATHERING PEASCODS.
GALOPEDE.	RUFTY, TUFTY.
HASTE TO THE WEDDING.	HEY BOYS.
NANCY'S FANCY.	THE BLACK NAG.

SET 3.

IF ALL THE WORLD WERE PAPER.	SELLENGER'S ROUND.
THE OLD MOLE.	THE MARY AND DOROTHY.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NATIONAL SONGS

WITH DESCANTS

ARRANGED BY

GEOFFREY SHAW.

NOVELLO'S SCHOOL SONGS. BOOK 271.

SET I.

THE BAY OF BISCAY (English)	EARLY ONE MORNING (English)
A HUNTING WE WILL GO (English)	OH, DEAR! WHAT CAN THE MATTER BE? (English)
JOHN PEEL (English)	THE BRITISH GRENADIERS (English)
ALL THROUGH THE NIGHT (Welsh)	THE ASH GROVE (Welsh)
SCOTS, WHA HAE (Scottish)	GOOD KING WENCESLAS (Traditional)
THE OAK AND THE ASH (Scottish)	THE FIRST NOWELL (Traditional)

JUST PUBLISHED

NOVELLO'S SCHOOL SONGS. BOOK 275.

SET II.

COME LASSES AND LADS (English)	THE YOUNG MAY MOON (Irish)
WI' A HUNDRED PIPERS (Scottish)	THE GOLDEN VANITY (English)
DAVID OF THE WHITE ROCK (Welsh)	THE FLIGHT OF THE EARLS (Irish)

JUST PUBLISHED.

NOVELLO'S SCHOOL SONGS. BOOK 276.

SET III.

MEETING OF THE WATERS (Irish)	LET ERIN REMEMBER (Irish)
THERE 'S NAE LUCK (Scottish)	THE BAILIFF'S DAUGHTER OF ISLINGTON (English)
DRINK TO ME ONLY WITH THINE EYES (English)	THE BELLS OF ABERDOVEY (Welsh)

PRICE EIGHTPENCE EACH SET.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

JUST PUBLISHED.

READY BE, MY SOUL, ALWAY

(MACHE DICH, MEIN GEIST, BEREIT)

CANTATA

(For the Twenty-Second Sunday after Trinity)

FOR FOUR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA.

BY

J. S. BACH.

(Cantata No. 115).

Edited by IVOR ATKINS.

English Text by CHARLES SANFORD TERRY.

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

NOVELLO'S EDITIONS

OF THE

FAVOURITE OPERAS

ADAPTED FOR

CONCERT USE.

BALFE.
*THE BOHEMIAN GIRL.
Price 3s.

DONIZETTI.
*THE DAUGHTER OF THE REGIMENT.
Price 3s.

FLOTOW.
*MARTHA.
Price 3s.

GOUNOD.
*FAUST.
Price 2s. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d.

VERDI.
*IL TROVATORE.
Price 3s. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d.

WAGNER.
TANNHÄUSER.
Price 3s.

WALLACE.
MARITANA.
Price 3s.

* Orchestral Parts for Reduced Orchestra may be obtained from the Publishers.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST REPRINTED.

LIFE OF CHOPIN

BY

FREDERICK NIECKS.

Chopin as a Man and Musician, with a Portrait etched by H. R. ROBERTSON, and Facsimiles of the Composer's MS.

Two Vols. Cloth, Gilt. 25s. net.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

LONDON TOWN

SONG.

THE WORDS BY

JOHN MASEFIELD.

THE MUSIC BY

EDWARD GERMAN.

IN TWO KEYS.

Price Two Shillings each.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

ON A NANKIN PLATE

SONG.

WORDS BY

AUSTIN DOBSON

MUSIC BY

HARVEY GRACE.

TWO KEYS.

Price Two Shillings each.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

FOUR TENNYSON LYRICS

SET TO MUSIC BY

PERCY E. FLETCHER.

1. A LULLABY.
2. THE CITY CHILD.
3. THE REIGN OF THE ROSES.
4. THE THROSTLE.

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

No. 100.—NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS.

PRONUNCIATION

FOR

VOICE-PRODUCTION

FROM

EURHYTHM: THOUGHT IN ACTION

BY

H. H. HULBERT.

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NOW READY.

THE ENGLISH PSALTER

CONTAINING

THE PSALMS OF DAVID

TOGETHER WITH

THE CANTICLES

AND

PROPER PSALMS FOR CERTAIN DAYS

EDITED AND POINTED FOR CHANTING

UPON THE PRINCIPLES OF NATURAL SPEECH-RHYTHM

BY

CHARLES MACPHERSON, Mus. Doc.
(ORGANIST OF ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL).

EDWARD C. BAIRSTOW, Mus. Doc.
(ORGANIST OF YORK MINSTER).

PERCY C. BUCK, M.A., Mus. Doc.
(DIRECTOR OF MUSIC IN HARROW SCHOOL).

PRICES:

Demy 8vo size ... Four Shillings net.
Imperial 32mo ... One Shilling and Sixpence net.

THE CANTICLES ONLY

Demy 8vo size ... ... Sixpence net.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

INSTRUCTION BOOKS FOR THE VOICE.

GUSTAV GARCIA
A GUIDE TO SOLO SINGING
Price 3s.; Paper Boards, 4s.

H. H. HULBERT.
BREATHING FOR VOICE-PRODUCTION
Price 3s.; Paper Boards, 4s.

AGNES J. LARKCOM
THE SINGER'S ART
Price 1s. 6d.

RICHARD MANN
A MANUAL OF SINGING
Price 1s. 6d.

MARGARET NICHOLLS
SCHOOL CHOIR TRAINING
Price 3s.

ALBERTO RANDEGGER
SINGING
Price 6s.; Paper Boards, 7s.

J. STOCKHAUSEN
METHOD OF SINGING
Price 6s.; Paper Boards, 7s.

D. C. TAYLOR
SELF-HELP FOR SINGERS
Price 2s. 6d.; Paper Boards, 3s. 6d.

VOCAL EXERCISES FOR ALL VOICES
WITH MARKS OF EXPRESSION AND PHRASING
BY
ALBERTO RANDEGGER.

MARCO BORDOGNI
TWENTY-FOUR VOCAL EXERCISES
FOR MEZZO-SOPRANO
Price 2s. 6d.

CONCONE
50 Lessons for the Medium Part of the Voice.
25 Lessons. A Sequel to the Fifty Lessons for the Medium Part of the Voice.
15 Vocalises. A Sequel to the Twenty-five Lessons for the Medium Part of the Voice.
Ditto. For Mezzo-Soprano or Contralto.
40 Lessons for Contralto.
40 Lessons for Bass or Baritone.
Price 2s. 6d. each.

AUGUSTE PANSERON
FORTY MELODIC AND PROGRESSIVE VOCAL EXERCISES
FOR SOPRANO AND TENOR
IN TWO PARTS.
Part I. Containing Nos. 1 to 26. Part II. Containing Nos. 27 to 40.
Price 3s. each Part.

FORTY-TWO MELODIC AND PROGRESSIVE VOCAL EXERCISES
FOR CONTRALTO, BARITONE, OR BASS
IN TWO PARTS.
Part I. Containing Nos. 1 to 29. Part II. Containing Nos. 30 to 42.
Price 3s. each Part.

FIFTY VOCALISES FOR TWO VOICES
SOPRANO AND MEZZO-SOPRANO, OR TENOR AND SOPRANO, OR TENOR AND BARITONE.
IN TWO PARTS.
Part I. Containing Nos. 1 to 30. Part II. Containing Nos. 31 to 50.
Price 3s. each Part.

PROGRESSIVE STUDIES FOR THE VOICE WITH PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT
BY
GEORG HENSCHEL.

PART I.
STUDIES IN SUSTAINED SINGING.

PART II.
STUDIES IN FLORAL SINGING.

Each Part published for High, Medium, or Low Voice.
Price 4s. each.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

A NEW SERIES
OF SACRED SONGS
EDITED, WITH MARKS OF EXPRESSION AND PHRASING, BY ALBERTO RANDEGGER.

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS EACH BOOK.

The two sets of Songs for each voice are also published in four volumes.

CLOTH, NINE SHILLINGS EACH.

FIRST SET.

SOPRANO.

1. My heart ever faithful ... ... J. S. Bach
2. I will sing of Thy great mercies ("St. Paul") F. Mendelssohn-Bartholdy
3. Jerusalem ("Gallia") ... ... Ch. Gounod
4. With verdure clad ("Creation") ... ... J. Haydn
5. I will extol Thee, O Lord ("Eli") ... M. Costa
6. I mourn as a dove ("St. Peter")... ... J. Benedict

TENOR.

1. O God, have mercy (Pietà, Signore) ... A. Stradella
2. In native worth ("Creation") ... ... J. Haydn
3. Be thou faithful unto death ("St. Paul") F. Mendelssohn-Bartholdy
4. Cujus animam ("Stabat Mater")... ... G. Rossini
5. The Lord is very pitiful ("St. Peter") ... J. Benedict
6. The soft southern breeze ("Rebekah") ... J. Barnby

CONTRALTO.

1. Slumber Song ("Christmas Oratorio") ... J. S. Bach
2. But the Lord is mindful ("St. Paul") F. Mendelssohn-Bartholdy
3. What tho' I trace ("Solomon") ... ... Handel
4. Evening Prayer ("Eli") ... ... M. Costa
5. There is a green hill ... ... Ch. Gounod
6. O Thou afflicted ("St. Peter") ... ... J. Benedict

BASS.

1. Dost thou despise ... ... J. S. Bach
2. O God, have mercy ("St. Paul") F. Mendelssohn-Bartholdy
3. Now heaven in fullest glory shone ("Creation") J. Haydn
4. Pro peccatis ("Stabat Mater") ... ... G. Rossini
5. How great, O Lord ("St. Peter") ... J. Benedict
6. If Thou should'st mark iniquities ("Eli") M. Costa

SECOND SET.

SOPRANO.

1. Thou, O Lord, art my Protector (Psalm xix.) C. Saint-Saëns
2. Lo! the heaven-descended Prophet ("The Passion") ... ... C. H. Graun
3. Jerusalem ("St. Paul"). ... F. Mendelssohn-Bartholdy
4. Great is Jehovah ... ... F. Schubert
5. Turn Thee unto me ("Eli") ... ... M. Costa
6. Let the bright Seraphim ("Samson") ... Handel

TENOR.

1. Only be still, wait thou His leisure ("If thou but sufferest") ... ... J. S. Bach
2. Daughters of Jerusalem ("St. Peter") ... J. Benedict
3. Thus was the sun ("Samson") ... ... Handel
4. O come, let us worship (Psalm xcv.) F. Mendelssohn-Bartholdy
5. Twilight is gently falling (Ave Maria) ... J. Raff
6. Song of Penitence (Busslied) ... ... Beethoven

CONTRALTO.

1. To living waters ("The Lord is my Shepherd") J. S. Bach
2. O God, have mercy (Pietà, Signore) ... A. Stradella
3. All my heart inflamed and burning ("Stabat Mater") ... ... A. Dvorák
4. The glory of God in Nature (Creation's Hymn) Beethoven
5. Fac ut portem ("Stabat Mater")... ... G. Rossini
6. Morning Prayer ("Eli") ... ... M. Costa

BASS.

1. Mighty Lord and King all glorious ("Christmas Oratorio") ... ... J. S. Bach
2. Rolling in foaming billows ("Creation") J. Haydn
3. Litany for All Souls' Day ... ... F. Schubert
4. The glory of God in Nature (Creation's Hymn) Beethoven
5. Consume them all ("St. Paul") F. Mendelssohn-Bartholdy
6. Nazareth ... ... Ch. Gounod

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE BEAUTIFUL FOLK-SONGS OF FRANCE

BOOK I.

(Novello's School Song Book, No. 277)

COLLECTED BY

AUSTIN DE CROZE

AND HARMONIZED BY

GUSTAVE FERRARI

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS COMPLETE

Or, Separate Numbers:

No.		PRICE
1440	NOËL DE STRASBOURG	2*d.*
1441	BERCEUSE	2*d.*
1442	LE MOULIN	2*d.*
1443	HOPSA! LISELLA	2*d.*
1444	LE MIRACLE DE SAINT NICOLAS	4*d.*
1445	LA RONDE DU ROSIER	2*d.*
1446	CHANSON À BALLER	2*d.*
1447	LE BEAU GALANT	2*d.*
1448	LÉGENDE DES PÉLERINS	2*d.*
1449	LE PREMIER JOUR DE MAI	2*d.*
1450	LES TROIS JUPONS BLANCS	2*d.*
1451	CELUI QUE J'AIME	2*d.*

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

INCLUDED ON THE LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL REQUISITION LIST.

THE BEAUTIFUL SONGS OF FRANCE

BOOK II. (1925).

TWELVE SONGS AND DANCES

OF

FLANDERS, ARTOIS, PICARDY, NORMANDY, CHAMPAGNE, LORRAINE, and ALSACE

COLLECTED AND EDITED BY

AUSTIN DE CROZE

WITH PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENTS

BY

LEOPOLD ASHTON, GUSTAVE FERRARI, AND OTHERS.

With Illustrations, English translations, and descriptions and diagrams of the dances.

PREFACE BY DR. W. H. D. ROUSE, Perse School, Cambridge.

FOREWORD BY HARVEY GRACE and LASTWORD BY EDWIN EVANS.

CONTENTS.

FLANDERS-ARTOIS -	Ah! le joli Bois, Mesdames; Sur les Clanquarts.
PICARDY - - - -	Les trois Canards; Semons la Salade.
NORMANDY - - -	Les trois Pommes blanches; Compère et Commère.
CHAMPAGNE - - -	Le petit Bonnet rond; Eh! qui marierons-nous?
LORRAINE - - - -	Vous n'êtes pas mon Berger; Je vais entrer dans la Danse.
ALSACE - - - - -	La Chanson des Beignets; Le Maître et Jacquot.

Messrs. NOVELLO & CO. beg leave to announce that they have acquired the Sole Agency for all British Territory and the United States of America for the sale of the Work above described, and that copies are now on sale.

PRICE FOUR SHILLINGS EACH.

NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED, 160, WARDOUR STREET, LONDON, W.1.

JUST PUBLISHED.

TWELVE INTROITS OR SHORT ANTHEMS

SET 2.

No.
1.	GIVE EAR UNTO MY PRAYER	JACQUES ARCADELT
2.	WE WAIT FOR THY LOVING-KINDNESS	PHILIP ARMES
3.	THE SACRIFICES OF GOD	HUGH BLAIR
4.	ALMIGHTY GOD, WHO HAST ME BROUGHT	THOMAS FORD
5.	SET YOUR AFFECTIONS	...ALFRED R. GAUL
6.	O GOD, WHOSE NATURE AND PROPERTY	ALAN GRAY
7.	REND YOUR HEART	F. A. GORE OUSELEY
8.	COME, LET US WORSHIP	PALESTRINA
9.	BEHOLD, GOD IS MY HELPER	JOHN STAINER
10.	I WILL LAY ME DOWN IN PEACE	ARTHUR S. SULLIVAN
11.	O GOD OF BETHEL	CHRISTOPHER TYE
12.	BLESSED ARE THEY	S. S. WESLEY

PRICE ONE SHILLING.
Each Introit may be had separately.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

We have pleasure in announcing that the new edition (strictly in accordance with the original version) of the Vocal Score of

MOUSSORGSKY'S BORIS GODOUNOV

will be published definitely on the first of October next, at the price of THIRTY SHILLINGS net.

All orders received before that date will be executed at the subscription rate of TWENTY FIVE SHILLINGS. Under no circumstances will this price apply after publication.

A limited Edition de Luxe, printed on hand-made paper, will be published at FIVE GUINEAS net per copy.

J. & W. CHESTER, LTD.,
11. Great Marlborough Street, London, W.1.

London:—Printed by NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited, at Novello Works, Soho, and published at 160, Wardour Street, Soho, W.1. Wednesday, September 1, 1926.

No. 1004

THE MUSICAL TIMES

Price 6d.

FOUNDED 1844

OCTOBER 1, 1926

THE WORLD FAMOUS

Bösendorfer

PIANOS

(Established 1828.)

REC. OCT 15 1926 B. P. L.

BUSONI "The Piano was ideal & helped me to give expression to my highest conceptions".....

PADEREWSKY "The Piano was quite wonderful".....

HAROLD BAUER "These instruments are sympathetic to me in the highest degree".

MORITZ ROSENTHAL "The Piano sounded ravishing"..

SOLE AGENTS

The WIGMORE HALL & PIANO GALLERIES Ltd.

32-40, WIGMORE STREET, W.1

ROGERS

PIANOS

are the outstanding Pianos of the present day for their superb musical qualities, and ahead of all in value.

Call or write for Catalogue

GEORGE ROGERS & SONS

60 Berners Street

London W.1.

Only "His Master's Voice" is good enough for your Home

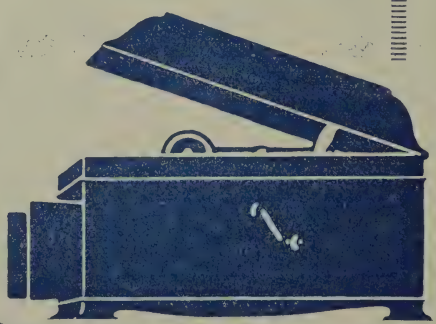
OTHER gramophones may cost less—that is because they are not so good. The quality of "His Master's Voice" remains supreme and unapproached. If you want the only instrument that will reproduce music and speech with perfect fidelity; if you want the only gramophone that will give equal prominence to every note from highest treble to lowest bass, then you can only choose "His Master's Voice." It has 50% more volume, with an increased range of 2½ octaves, and it gives for the first time so realistic a reproduction as to create the illusion that you are present at an actual performance.

Ask your dealer to demonstrate.

The NEW "His Master's Voice"

—the Gramophone that Eliminates Surface Noise.

Models range in price from £7. Ask your local dealer for particulars of Easy Payments.



THE GRAMOPHONE COMPANY, LIMITED
OXFORD STREET, W.1

The Mark

of Quality

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

FOUNDED IN 1844

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST OF EVERY MONTH

No. 1,004—Vol. 67.
Registered at the General Post Office for Canadian Postage.

OCTOBER 1 1926

Price 6*d.*; Postage, 2*d.*
Annual Subscription, post-free, 7*s.* 6*d.*

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

FIFTY-SIXTH SEASON, 1926-1927.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 23, 1926, at 2.30 p.m.

ELIJAH - - - - MENDELSSOHN

Conductor: MR. ALBERT COATES.

MISS FLORENCE AUSTRAL. | MISS EDNA THORNTON.
MISS THERESA WALTERS. | MISS GLADYS RIPLEY.
MR. FRANK WEBSTER. | MR. EDWARD HALLAND.
MR. ERNEST HARGREAVES. | MR. PERCY HEMING.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 20, 1926, at 2.30 p.m.

REQUIEM - - - - - - VERDI

Conductor: DR. MALCOLM SARGENT.

MISS STILES-ALLEN. | MISS OLGA HALEY.
MR. TUDOR DAVIES. | MR. NORMAN ALLIN.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 18, 1926, at 2.30 p.m.

CAROLS.

Conductor: MR. H. L. BALFOUR.
MISS DOROTHY SILK.
MR. WALTER GLYNNE. | MR. JOHN GOSS.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 1, 1927, at 2.30 p.m.

MESSIAH - - - - - HANDEL

Conductor: MR. H. L. BALFOUR.

MISS RUTH VINCENT. | MISS CONSTANCE WILLIS.
MR. FRANK MULLINGS. | MR. HORACE STEVENS.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 29, 1927, at 2.30 p.m.

MASS IN B MINOR - - - - BACH

Conductor: DR. E. C. BAIRSTOW.

MISS ELSIE SUDDABY. | MISS MURIEL BRUNSKILL.
MR. SYDNEY COLTHAM. | MR. ARTHUR CRANMER.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 26, 1927, at 2.30 p.m.

THE DREAM OF GERONTIUS

(ELGAR).

Conductor: SIR EDWARD ELGAR, O.M.
MISS MARGARET BALFOUR.
MR. STEUART WILSON. | MR. HERBERT HEYNER.

SATURDAY, MARCH 26, 1927, at 2.30 p.m.

THE CREATION - - HAYDN

MISS NOEL EADIE.
MR. WALTER HYDE. | MR. JOSEPH FARRINGTON.

GOOD FRIDAY, APRIL 15, 1927, at 2.30 p.m.

MESSIAH - - - - HANDEL

Conductor: SIR HAMILTON HARTY.

MISS FLORA WOODMAN. | MADAME KIRKBY LUNN.
MR. BEN DAVIES. | MR. ROBERT RADFORD.

THIS IS NOT A SUBSCRIPTION CONCERT.

DOUBLE CHORUS OF 850 VOICES.

THE ROYAL ALBERT HALL ORCHESTRA

At the Organ - MR. R. ARNOLD GREIR.

Of the EIGHT CONCERTS to be given, Seven, including the Carol Concert on December 18, will be comprised in the Subscription Series. Prices of Subscription for these Seven Concerts: Stalls, £2 14s. 6d.; Arena, £1 19s.; Balcony (Reserved), £1 7s. 6d.

Prices of Tickets for each Concert: Stalls, 10s. 6d.; Arena, 7s. 6d.; Balcony (Reserved), 5s.; Unreserved, 3s. 6d.; Gallery (Promenade), 2s.

Subscribers' names will be received and tickets issued at the Booking Office, Royal Albert Hall, and the usual Agents

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W.1.

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.
President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, K.G.
Principal:
JOHN B. MCEWEN, M.A., Mus. D. Oxon., F.R.A.M., F.R.C.M.

OFFICIAL OPENING

OF

EXTENSION TO THE R.A.M. BUILDINGS

BY

H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT AND STRATHEARN, K.G.

TUESDAY, 19TH OCTOBER, AT THREE O'CLOCK.

MICHAELMAS HALF-TERM

begins Monday, 1st November. Entrance Examination, 27th October.

L.R.A.M. EXAMINATION.

Last day of Entry for the Christmas Period, 31st October.

CHAMBER CONCERT,

Duke's Hall, Marylebone Road, N.W.1.
Monday, 1st November, at 3 p.m.

A. ALGER BELL,
Acting Secretary.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

PRINCE CONSORT ROAD, SOUTH KENSINGTON, S.W.7.

Patrons: { HIS MAJESTY THE KING
{ HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.
Director: SIR HUGH P. ALLEN, C.V.O., M.A., MUS. DOC., D.LITT.
Honorary Secretary: GEORGE A. MACMILLAN, ESQ., D.LITT.
Registrar: CLAUDE AVELING, ESQ., M.A.
Bursar: E. J. N. POLKINHORNE, Hon. R.C.M.

The College offers a Complete Course of Musical Education to pupils of both sexes, both professional and amateur. Upwards of seventy Scholarships and Exhibitions are founded which provide free musical education.

Classes for Score Reading, Conducting, Training of Teachers, Musical Criticism, and Ballet, are held at the College.

The OPERA CLASS has the use of the fully-equipped College OPERA THEATRE, with SUNKEN ORCHESTRA.

EXAMINATIONS for Associateship of the College (A.R.C.M.), in all subjects, held three times a year, in April, September, and December. Syllabus and all particulars may be obtained from the Registrar of the College.

BIRMINGHAM & MIDLAND INSTITUTE

SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Visitor ... Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M., Mus. Doc., LL.D.
Director ... GRANVILLE BANTOCK, M.A., D. Mus. (Ed.).

SESSION 1925-1926.

The Season consists of AUTUMN TERM (September 22 to December 20); WINTER TERM (January 14 to April 11); SUMMER TERM (April 20 to July 4).

Instruction in all branches of Music, Students' Orchestra, Chamber Music, Students' Rehearsals, and Concerts.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from—

H. M. FRANCIS, Secretary.

Paradise Street, Birmingham.

Guildhall School of Music.

(Founded in 1880 by the Corporation of London, and managed by the Music Committee.)

VICTORIA EMBANKMENT, E.C.4.

PRINCIPAL: SIR LANDON RONALD, F.R.A.M., F.R.C.M., &c.

PRIVATE Lessons in any single Musical Subject, and STAGE TRAINING in Elocution, Gesture, Dancing, Opera; Classes in Conducting.

Complete Musical Education at inclusive fees, £9 9s. and £12 12s. Opera Class, Saturdays. Special Training Course for Teachers (approved by Teachers' Registration Council). Autumn Term began September 20.

Prospectus and Syllabus of Local Centres and Schools Examinations (open to general public) free.

H. SAXE WYNDHAM, Secretary.

Telephone: Cent. 4459; and City 5566.

The Royal College of Organists.

The SOLO-PLAYING TESTS for the next F.R.C.O. EXAMINATION are:

Trio in C minor, J. S. Bach. (Novello, Book 12, page 108; Augener, page 1173; Peters, Old Edition, Vol. 9, No. 7; New Edition, Vol. 9, No. 9).

Fantasy Prelude, Charles Macpherson. No. 21 of Recital Series. Edited by E. H. Lemare. (Novello.)

Andante from a Pianoforte Duet, Mozart. Arrangements for the Organ by J. Stainer, No. 2. (Novello.) (New and Revised Edition only.)

The 10 selected pieces and the book set for the Essay for the January, 1927, A.R.C.O. Examination, are the same as those set for July, 1926.

All Candidates for the next Examinations must send in their names for Fellowship by December 9th, for Associateship by December 16th. In the case of NEW MEMBERS, proposal forms, duly filled up, must be sent in before December 2nd. No names will be entered after the above dates.

Regulations, List of College Publications, Lectures, &c., may be had on application.

Examples indicating the character and approximate difficulty of the NEW TESTS, set for the first time at the July, 1924, Examinations, may be obtained at the College. Associateship or Fellowship, 6*d*. each (post free).

The College is open daily from 10 to 4: Saturdays, 10 to 1.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Secretary.

Kensington Gore, S.W.7

96 & 95, WIMPOLE STREET, W.1.

TOBIAS MATTHAY PIANOFORTE SCHOOL

Instruction under his teachers, and under his own supervision.

Open to Professionals and Amateurs, and also to Children.

The Staff consists of thirty-nine senior Professors of thorough experience and platform reputation, all trained by the founder.

Special Short Courses for Teachers during term and vacation.

LECTURE-LESSON CLASS by Mr. MATTHAY on the practical teaching of Technique and Interpretation, diagnosis and correction of faults, musical analysis and synthesis, &c., alternate Wednesday evenings.

COMPLETE TRAINING COURSE FOR TEACHERS.
(Approved by the Teachers' Registration Council.)

This ONE-YEAR Course may be joined at the beginning of ANY TERM.

For further particulars please apply, MRS. MARION COLE, Secretary.

LONDON SOCIETY OF ORGANISTS.

FOUNDED 1913.

PRESIDENT FOR 1926: HARVEY GRACE, F.R.C.O.

Organists, Assistant-Organists, and Choirmasters of all denominations are eligible. Register of vacant appointments.

Particulars and application to the Hon. Sec., DR. J. WARRINER, De Crespigny House, Denmark Hill, S.E.5.

MR. HERBERT HODGE will give an Organ Recital (1,921st) at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, E.C., on October 5th, and every Tuesday at 1 p.m.

ROYAL MANCHESTER COLLEGE OF MUSIC

Founded 1893. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1923.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF YORK, K.G.
Principal: DR. ADOLPH BRODSKY.
Registrar: STANLEY WITHERS, M.A.

Students are required to enter upon a complete course of Musical instruction, and are not admitted for a shorter period than one year.

Fee for the year, £36. Special fee for Organ Course, £30, and for Wind Instrument Course, £18.

Systematic Course for the training of Teachers, approved by Teachers' Registration Council.

The Prospectus, with Scholarship information, Diploma Regulations, and Entry Forms, on application.

New Pianoforte Professor, Mr. CLAUD BIGGS.

New Professor of Singing, Miss MARGUERITE SWALE.

MANCHESTER SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

16, ALBERT SQUARE.

Founder (1892): J. A. CROSS
Late Principal (1897-1925): ALBERT J. CROSS, A.R.A.M.
Director: LEOPOLD H. CROSS, M.A.

The oldest Institution in Manchester devoted solely to the interests of music.

All branches of Music taught. Day and evening Private Lessons. Opera Class. Full Orchestral Class. Intermediate and Elementary String Orchestras, Classes for Ensemble Playing, Elocution, Choral Singing, Harmony, Aural Training, &c. Single Subjects taught.

New Pianoforte Professor:

MR. ROBERT GREGORY.

Mr. Gregory was Professor of the Pianoforte in Vienna for many years, having studied there under the eminent Leschetitzky, teacher of PADEREWSKI.

Prospectus from the Secretary, 16, Albert Square.

LONDON SCHOOL OF SINGING.

20a, Henrietta Street, Cavendish Square, W.1.

President: A. NETTLEFOLD.

Principal: DAVID GODELL.

Complete training in all subjects for the Vocalist, Professional and Amateur. Evening Lessons. Particulars from Secretary. Mayfair 3819.

PAPER WORK BY MUS. B., F.R.C.O.

OVER 1,100 SPECIMEN WORKINGS.

"Your lessons and ideas splendid."
"Your excellent models make my attempts look cold."

RECENT SUCCESSES,
including the only pupil sent up, January, 1925.

2*s*. 6*d*. per lesson and postage.

"E. B.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

GLASGOW ATHENÆUM SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

SESSION 1926-27.

The Session consists of Three Terms: September 13 to December 4, December 6 to March 12, and March 14 to June 11.

Complete Musical Curriculum. Day and Evening Classes. Single Subjects taught.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from:

STUART S. FORSYTH, Secretary,
ATHENÆUM BUILDINGS, GLASGOW.

THE LONDON COLLEGE FOR CHORISTERS.

6 and 7, BLOMFIELD CRESCENT, PADDINGTON, W.2.
Founder: Mr. JAMES BATES.

Solo Boys and Chorus Boys supplied at short notice for Church Services, &c. Telephone: Paddington 5990. Sec., ARTHUR G. BATES.

WIGMORE HALL STUDIOS.—These splendidly appointed Studios are the recognised centre of the best musical activities in London. Forty-five rooms. Grand Piano in every room. Lift, telephone, and every comfort and convenience. Low inclusive rates. One morning or afternoon per week the minimum time arranged for. Apply, 38, Wigmore Street, W.1.

MODERN CORR. COLLEGE

Principal: ARTHUR McALISTER, B.A. (Cantab.).

MATRIC. - -	SUCCESSES - - - - - -			135
			Passes	M.C.C.
1st M.B. - -	September, 1922		6 ...	... 2
	„ 1923		9 ...	... 4
	March, 1925		4 ...	.. 2
	September, 1925		Two	Both at 1st Attempt.
MUS. BAC. - -	For ONE FEE, which can be paid by easy Instalments, Tuition is given until you GAIN THE DEGREE.
A.R.C.O. - -	A student FAILS 4 TIMES (under other tuition). Joins the M.C.C. and PASSES. RECENT SUCCESSES 27
F.R.C.O. - -	A student FAILS 6 TIMES (under other tuition). Joins the M.C.C. and PASSES, January, 1926. RECENT SUCCESSES 10
A. MUS. T.C.L. -	Marks gained by M.C.C. Students: Art of Teaching ... ... 88% Counterpoint... ... ... 93%
L. MUS. T.C.L. -	July, 1925: Two Candidates PASSED. Both were Students of the M.C.C. Marks gained: Orchestration... ... ... 95% Harmony ... ... 84% Rudiments 100%
L.R.A.M. - -	(Pianoforte Teaching). A Candidate gains 66% (under other tuition). Joins the M.C.C. and gains 81%. Form and Teaching.
A.R.C.M. - -	(Pianoforte Teaching). A successful Student gains 112 marks for Paper Work.

September 13, 1926.

AN UNSOLICITED TESTIMONIAL.

"I have pleasure in enclosing cheque for Guarantee Course, Mus. Bac., for my son.

"I also wish to thank you for the very valuable assistance given by you by way of Excellent Instruction.

"This is, as you know, his Second Success.

A.R.C.O. ... 1924 ... at age 16.
F.R.C.O. ... 1926 ... at age 18."

The student referred to was prepared for both Examinations by the M.C.C.

SUCCESS IN 1927.

JOIN THE MODERN CORRESPONDENCE COLLEGE.

FREE - GUIDE TO DEGREES AND DIPLOMAS IN MUSIC.

PLEASE STATE EXAM. OR SUBJECT.

20, SHERWIN ROAD, NOTTINGHAM.

TO ALL PIANISTS

F.R.C.O. EXAM. PASSED.

Mr. H———— had failed in four previous attempts. He worked at my System four months, taking four lessons only.

Then he writes:

20th July, 1926.

"You will be interested to hear that I was successful in obtaining the F.R.C.O. Diploma at the Examination just held. I should like to pay my tribute to your System, for I feel it is chiefly through your lessons that I was enabled to overcome the considerable technical difficulties of the set pieces. I wish to thank you for all your valuable help."

(Name and address on application)

MANY eminent musicians, including the late Sir Frederick Bridge, have used and highly recommended my System — the ORIGINAL POSTAL SYSTEM. No apparatus or special music necessary—just an easily acquired method with much better and quicker results.

20,000 Successful Pupils.

MY illustrated book, "Light on Pianoforte Playing," will be gladly sent to any Pianist. It fully explains the principles and advantages of the methods used in the System. When applying, please do not omit to state whether an Average or Advanced Pianist. The book will be sent free of charge and post free.

M. MACDONALD SMITH, 19, BLOOMSBURY SQUARE, LONDON, W.C.1.

Can't you play something from Memory?

HOW often one hears this question, and how few there are who are able to comply.

Yet this seemingly impossible achievement is easily within your reach if you will only spend just 15 minutes a day. Think of it! 15 to 30 minutes a day will enable you to play from memory with ease and perfect confidence. This is no idle boast. Thousands such as yourself have done so already, have developed undreamt of abilities and risen far beyond their wildest hopes.

Acquire this delightful accomplishment now and you will continue to reap the benefit for the rest of your life.

It is extremely gratifying to feel that time spent on memorising a piece by

The Master-Method of Memory-Playing can never be wasted; once you have memorised it there it is, permanently in your memory to be reproduced at will after months or even years have elapsed.

Every day you delay means more regrets. Do not waste another minute, write to-day for my free book on this all-absorbing subject, or better still fill in the coupon below.

No Knowledge of Harmony Required.

POST COUPON FOR FREE BOOK. Unsealed envelope ½d. stamp only.

Mr. REGINALD C. FOORT, F.R.C.O.,
19, Beacon House, Hemstal Road, London, N.W.6.

Please send me free and post free, a copy of your book, "The Master-Method of Memory-Playing." I play the Violin, 'Cello, Pianoforte, Organ, and am a Beginner, Intermediate, Advanced Player. (Cross out which do not apply to you.)

Name (Mr., Mrs., or Miss).....

Address.....

.....(3)

CORRESPONDENCE COACHING
FOR EXAMINATIONS.

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING
Mus. Doc. (Lond.).

THIS MONTH'S SPECIAL COURSES.

1.—A.R.C.M. and L.R.A.M. Full Preparation now commencing for Christmas, 1926, and Easter, 1927.

2.—Mus. Bac. & Mus. Doc., Lond., December, 1926.

3.—1st Mus. Bac., Durham, March, 1927.

4.—A. & F.R.C.O., January, 1927.

NUMEROUS SUCCESSES AT FIRST ATTEMPT
IN
Final Mus. Doc.; Mus. Doc. "Exercise"; Final Mus. Bac.; Mus. Bac. "Exercise"; Inter. Mus. Bac.; A. & L. Mus. T.C.L.; A. & L.T.C.L.; A. & F.R.C.O.; L.R.A.M. & A.R.C.M.

Candidates who are entering for the first time, and also those who have previously failed to pass any examination, should communicate with

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING,
46, CLARENDON ROAD,
REDLAND, BRISTOL.

Telephone: Bristol 3033.

"MASTERY OF THE KEYBOARD."
C. Palmer.
SIGHT-READING LESSONS.
Complete Course of Six Postal Lessons.
PRESS EXTRACTS.

The Times: "Deals with the subject systematically from the first stage."
Musical Times: "The idea is so simple and practical that we wonder it has not been dealt with systematically long ago."
Music: "Mr. Denham goes fully and thoroughly into his subject from every possible standpoint. Cannot fail to be of service.
Aberdeen Press and Journal: "The scarcity of good sight-readers, and even among capable pianists, is proof of the need for a more systematised form of training than obtains at present, and Mr. Denham's system has the double advantage of being both simple and practical."

Personal Lessons if desired.
GEORGE DENHAM, L.R.A.M., Etc.,
41, Avondale Road, S. Croydon; and 32, Wigmore Street, W.1.

THE
CHARLES A. GILLETT
PIANOFORTE SCHOOL.
"The Real Use of Relaxation" in Pianoforte Playing
PERSONAL LESSONS DAY AND EVENING.
also
CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS IN "APPLIED WEIGHT TOUCH."

Write or call—
THE CHARLES A. GILLETT
PIANOFORTE SCHOOL,
11, South Molton Street, London, W.1.

THE CITY TEMPLE CHORAL SOCIETY.

Patron: RALPH DUNSTAN, Mus. D., Cantab.
Organist: G. D. CUNNINGHAM, F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M.
Conductor: ALLAN BROWN, F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M.

SESSION 1926-27.

Works to be rehearsed (Wednesdays, 8.15 p.m.): "Elijah," "Messiah," "Christmas Oratorio," Israel in Egypt," "Dream of Gerontius."

There are vacancies for all voices, especially Tenors.

Address: MR. GEORGE TIDY, Hon. Secretary, The City Temple, E.C.4.

NORTH LONDON
MUSICAL FESTIVAL
FOR N. & N.W. LONDON AND OPEN COMPETITIONS.
Entries due October 18.

Open Choral (Mixed, Men, and Ladies' Classes), heard by SIR HERBERT BREWER, November 13. Full Orchestras (Open), heard by MR. W. H. REED, November 17. Ten other judges.

Open Solo Classes for Solo Singing, Pianoforte, Violin, and Elocution. Over 100 local Classes. Reduced rail fares. Public Halls at Kentish Town.

Syllabus free from JOHN GRAHAM, Hon. Secretary, 74, Park Hall Road, London, N.2.

St. John's Wood Presbyterian Church,
MARLBOROUGH PLACE, ABBEY ROAD, N.W.8.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 16th, at 5.30 p.m.
THE FIRST OF A SERIES OF
FIVE ORGAN RECITALS
By MR. W. IRWIN-HUNT,
Organist and Master of the Music of the Church.

PROGRAMME.

I.

Introduction and Fugue, "Ad nos"	Liszt
Prelude, Fugue, and Variation	César Franck
Serenade	Widor

II.

Overture, "Athalie"	Mendelssohn
An Impulse in A minor	Irwin-Hunt
The Ride of the Valkyries	Wagner

ESSEX CHURCH, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate.

ORGAN RECITAL
ON TUESDAY, 12TH OCTOBER, AT 8 P.M.
By MR. ALFRED R. STOCK, F.R.C.O.
Baritone: MR. GEORGE PARKER.

PROGRAMME:—"Hosannah," Dubois; Evensong, Easthope Martin; "O God, have mercy" ("St. Paul"), Mendelssohn; "Villanella." John Ireland; Toccata and Fugue, D minor, Bach; Organ Sonata No. 2, Borowski; two "Biblical Songs," Dvorák; Movement from String Quartet, Tschaikowsky; Caprice, Hughes.

ALL SEATS FREE.

CLAPTON PARK CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.
LOWER CLAPTON ROAD.

AN ORGAN RECITAL will be given by DR. HAROLD E. DARKE,
On TUESDAY, 19th OCTOBER, at 8 p.m.

ST. JAMES' CHURCH, MUSWELL HILL, N.

ORGAN RECITALS
Will be given by MR. H. A. BATE, every SATURDAY, at 5.45 p.m., commencing 16th OCTOBER.
Harrison Organ.

Programme for the series may be obtained on application to the Verger, at the Church.

THE Mackinnon
Musical Memory Course
ENSURES
PERFECT MEMORY FOR PIANISTS.
IN SIX POSTAL LESSONS.

The Course is recommended by Myra Hess, Irene Scharrer, Serge Koussevitzky, and other famous musicians.

Improvement guaranteed after first lesson, or fees refunded.

TECHNIQUE IS IMPROVED.
NERVOUSNESS IS BANISHED.

A Pupil writes:
"My memory is now perfect, and I can play to anyone without fear of breaking down." —— DURHAM.

This is only one of the hundreds of unsolicited testimonials received.

Write for free booklet with particulars, testimonials and guarantee, to

MISS LILIAS MACKINNON,
1, PAULTON'S SQUARE,
CHELSEA, LONDON, S.W.3.

MUSICAL EDUCATION is admittedly incomplete without such a knowledge of Harmony as will furnish the means for understanding music in respect of Chords, Ornaments, Keys, Modulations, and Phrases.

Text-Book Harmony is only concerned with Figured Basses, and the accompaniment of simple melodies. The more generally needed use of Harmony for purposes of analysis and interpretation will be found set forth in simple and easily understood language in the 112 pages of

HARMONY FOR PIANISTS,
or Harmony in Pianoforte Idiom without written exercises.
By DR. PERCY RIDEOUT, D. Mus. Lond.
A Course of Ten Correspondence Lessons, and Examination Papers.

For further particulars call or write:
THE CHARLES A. GILLETT Pianoforte School,
11, South Molton Street, Bond Street, London, W.1.

PIANO PEDALS, with Octave Coupler

This wonderful invention supersedes all Piano Pedals, and is a Master Patent

St. George's Hall, Liverpool,
9th April, 1921.

"The simplicity of the attachment, and the clever sixteen-feet, eight-feet, or both combined, 'OPTIONAL OCTAVE' contrivance astonished me.

"I was delighted with the Pedal touch and with the variety in that touch, which your Attachment makes possible. It is very responsive to the movements of the feet, and is reliable."

HERBERT F. ELLINGFORD, Mus. Bac., Oxon., F.R.C.O.

Owing to increased output, we have reduced the price of our Popular Model to 14 guineas cash. Deferred payments if desired.

Write for Lists, Prices, and Clients' Opinions, and References to

THE MALKIN PATENT PEDAL CO., LTD.,
NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME.
London address: 11, Ashlake Road, Streatham, S.W.16.

LIVERPOOL CATHEDRAL.

DEDICATION OF THE ORGAN

October 18th–23rd, 1926.

OCTOBER 18. Following the Dedication Service at 3 p.m., a Recital will be given at 7.30 p.m., by H. GOSS-CUSTARD, Mus.Bac., Oxon.
The Cathedral Organist.

OCTOBER 19. The Recital at 7.30 p.m., will be given by CHARLES MACPHERSON, Mus. Doc.
Organist of St. Paul's Cathedral.

OCTOBER 20. At 3 p.m., by H. GOSS-CUSTARD, Mus. Bac.

OCTOBER 21. At 8 p.m., by W. G. ALCOCK, M.V.O., Mus. Doc.
Organist of Salisbury Cathedral.

OCTOBER 22. At 8 p.m., by G. D. CUNNINGHAM, F.R.A.M., F.R.C.O.
Organist of Birmingham Town Hall.

OCTOBER 23. At 3 p.m., by H. GOSS-CUSTARD, Mus. Bac.*
(SATURDAY.)

* A Special Train (leaving Euston at 10 a.m.) will run to Liverpool in time for this recital, returning the same day. The RETURN fare will be 16s. Tickets obtainable from Henry Willis & Sons, Ltd., 234, Ferndale Road, S.W.9. (A 1½d. stamp should be enclosed with applications.)

HELEN HOGAN

Concert Organist

Organist and Director of Music, Central Congregational Church, Providence, R.I., U.S.A.

European Season—available Great Britain, 20th Sept. to 20th Oct., 1926.

LE FIGARO, PARIS: "Miss Helen Hogan, organist of the premier order, played a programme of ancient and modern music, showing an extraordinary virtuosity and mastery of the organ."

NEW YORK HERALD (Paris Edition): "She played with classic purity of style, which is so seldom achieved. Clarity, precision, and breadth of conception marked her interpretation of the Bach group."

LINCOLN LEADER ADVERTISER: "This is the first time in the history of the Cathedral that a recital has been given by a woman organist. This recital by Miss Helen Hogan was a great artistic success. She is undoubtedly a great organist."

LONDON MUSICAL OPINION: "The opening phrases at once proclaimed a quite exceptional mastery of the instrument."

Management: HELEN HOGAN,
232, FERNDALE ROAD,
Tel.: BRIXTON 2793. LONDON, S.W.9.

TO COMPOSERS.

MR. NICHOLAS GATTY

is prepared to undertake the revision and arrangement of MSS., and to advise on any matter concerning composition and orchestration.

For terms, &c., apply, 12, Upper George Street, W.1.

A.R.C.O. EXAMINATION AIDS.

A series of practical papers outlining courses of study and giving helpful hints with expert advice on the following Tests:

SOLO-PLAYING. SCORE-READING.
TRANSPOSITION. ACCOMPANIMENT
ESSAY. (with list of 75 Solos).

3s. each. 10s. 6d. the set.

At the request of many who have derived valuable help from the above, the writer has now prepared a similar AID to the

A.R.C.O. PAPER-WORK TESTS.

Price 5s.

"A.R.C.O. EXAMN. AIDS," 166, COUNTY ROAD, WALTON, LIVERPOOL.

MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS REVISED.

LYRICS SET TO MUSIC, MELODIES HARMONIZED, MUSIC TRANSPOSED AND COPIED, BAND PARTS WRITTEN, MSS. PREPARED FOR PUBLICATION BY A MASTER HAND, ACCOMPANIMENTS OF DISTINCTION WRITTEN TO SONGS.

For terms, write, A. CARRINGTON BRIGGS, Glennholme, The Common, Hessle, E. Yorks.

THE TECHNIQUER

Invented and Patented by R. J. PITCHER, Mus.Bac.

FOR FLEXING, STRENGTHENING, STRETCHING, and DEVELOPING THE HANDS.

Send for testimony of LAMOND, POUISHNOFF, FRYER, REDDIE, WALENN, and many other eminent musicians.

"The excellent 'Techniquer' of Mr. Pitcher has been used by the writer with advantage. It does a good many things."—The Music Teacher, April, 1926.

Treatise on "Hand Development," with Photos, 1s. 6d.

Full particulars from the Secretary—
MISS F. J. FITCH, F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M.,
21, Boundary Road, N.W.8. 'Phone: Maida Vale 1715.

THE "SIMPLEXA" FINGER TRAINER.

(Registered No. 692810.)

FOR ALL INSTRUMENTALISTS.

A SIMPLE AND VERY EFFECTIVE APPLIANCE FOR GIVING STRENGTH AND FLEXIBILITY TO THE FINGERS.

Extract from "Musical Times."—"We have given a trial to the 'Simplexa Pocket Finger Trainer,' and have no hesitation in recommending it to our readers as a means of stretching the fingers and keeping them generally in good playing condition. Instrumentalists who are travelling, or unable to obtain regular practice, will find the appliance a boon. It is well-named, being simplicity itself, and so portable that it can be carried in the waistcoat pocket."

IMPROVED MODEL, 2s. 6d., POST FREE.

1, LONGFORD TERRACE, FOLKESTONE.

TWENTY-SEVENTH YEAR.

HOW TO SING
HOW TO TEACH SINGING

Ten-Lesson Intensive Courses for Professional and Amateur Vocalists, Choirmasters, Teachers of Voice-Production and Singing, and Students taking up a Teaching Career.

Tuition given personally; also BY CORRESPONDENCE.

Testimonials—"Foremost among leading voice producers"; "Wonderful results"; "Voice improves day by day"; "What I have been struggling for years to know"; "Has paid for itself several times over"; "Fifteen-year-old difficulty removed in few lessons"; "Had I only studied with you years ago"; "I now understand what I teach"; "I have never known more convincing teaching."

A more recent testimonial: "Your lessons throw light on every difficulty and leave an open path for the teacher."

WILLIAM WOLLER,
37, CASTLETOWN ROAD, BARON'S COURT,
LONDON, W.14.

PROFESSIONAL NOTICES.

MISS WINIFRED DENHAM (A.R.C.M.).
SOPRANO.
"A clear, well-produced voice—exceedingly well sung."—Musical Standard.
41, Avondale Road, South Croydon.

JOSEPH CONGDON (TENOR)
AVAILABLE FOR ORATORIOS, CHORAL SOCIETIES, ETC.
48, Abercairn Road, S.W.16. Streatham 4888.

MISS WINIFRED HELLIS
SOPRANO.
"A Royal Opera Soprano, possessed of a beautiful voice, remarkable alike for its quality and range."—Southern Daily Echo.
20, Portman Avenue, London, S.W.14. 'Phone: Richmond 3192.

MISS LYDIA JOHN
(A.R.A.M., L.R.A.M.), CONTRALTO.
Concerts, Oratorios, Organ Recitals, &c.
Recital-Lectures of Folk-Songs, Elizabethan Songs, &c.
Pupils received for Voice-Production and Singing.
Prepared for L.R.A.M., Associated Board, &c.
28, ALBION ROAD, LONDON, N.W.6.
Tel.: Primrose Hill, 3869.
Lessons given at West-End Studio or above address.

EVELYNE KING (L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.)
CONTRALTO.
All Modern and Standard Works.
BACH a speciality.
Works prepared at very short notice.
Also Dinners, Concerts, At Homes, &c.
Vacancies for Pupils in Voice-Production and Singing.
Studios at Berners Street, W.1.
Apply, 117, HAMPSTEAD WAY, N.W.11.
'Phone: Speedwell 2209.

PERCY BILSBURY
(TENOR). Parepa-Rosa Gold Medalist, R.A.M.
Concerts, Oratorios, Recitals.
Engagements include "Faust" (Berlioz);
"Everyman" (Walford Davies).
Terms, Vacant dates, Press Notices,
94, St. Helens Road, Leigh, Lancs.

EDMUND LANG
TENOR
ORATORIO, CONCERTS, ETC.
47, Leigh Road, Highbury, N.5.

WILLIAM LOMAS
PROFESSIONAL TENOR VOCALIST.
Extensive Répertoire.
ORATORIOS, CONCERTS, RECITALS, ETC.
Press Reports forwarded.
Holly Bank, Audenshaw Road, Audenshaw, nr. Manchester.

MILLARD THOMPSON TENOR. (L.T.C.L. Performer)
Ex Cathedral Chorister. Available for Oratorio, &c.
"Wayside," 85, Hide Road, Harrow.

VERNON HARRISS,
L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., Gold Medalist. BASS.
Oratorio, Concerts. Vocal Coach and Adjudicator.
Senior Music Master, Downside School, near Bath.

MR. JACKSON POTTER
BASS-BARITONE.
Of the principal London and Provincial Concerts.
Now available for engagements, Season 1926-27.
Répertoire includes all the new and standard works.
For vacant dates, terms, &c., apply,
21, RICHMOND ROAD, TWICKENHAM, S.W.; or Usual Agents.

FRANK POULTON (L.R.A.M.).
BASSO-CANTANTE.
Available for Oratorio, Choral Societies, &c.
33, Hounslow Avenue, Hounslow. 'Phone: Hounslow 1536.

VOICE-PRODUCTION AND SINGING.

ALBERT GARCIA

CARRIES ON THE TRADITIONS OF HIS GRANDFATHER, THE LATE MANUEL GARCIA.

STUDIO : 59, QUEEN'S ROAD, N.W.8.

VICTOR UTTING (L.R.A.M.).

BARITONE, ROCHESTER CATHEDRAL.

56, Boundary Road, Chatham, Kent.

MAUD GRUNDY (HARPIST).

Can accept single engagements for Choral Societies, &c., in the North, prior to and after Scottish Orchestra season.

17, Narcissus Road, London, N.W.6.

ELIZABETH LEVY

L.R.A.M., GOLD MEDALLIST.

TOBIAS MATTHAY'S PIANOFORTE METHOD taught by her at pupils' houses or her studio. SPECIAL COACHING for Scholarships, Medals, and all Examinations. 52, Fairhazel Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.6.

H. FORSTER RICHARDSON

R.C.M. (Leipzig), A.R.C.M., L.R.A.M.

(Pupil of Tobias Matthay, Plunket Greene, Gregory Hast), gives lessons in Pianoforte Playing, Voice-Production and Singing. Tuition on the most modern technical principles. Coaching for Concert Work and Examinations. Wigmore Hall Studios, Wigmore Street, W.1, and 2, Connaught Avenue East Sheen, S.W 14,

MISS MARY WILSON, F.R.A.M.

Professor of Singing at the Royal Academy of Music, London, Gives SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS to Candidates entering for the L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Singing Teachers' Diplomas. Particulars on application.

Address : 10, Harley Street, London, W.1.

MISS MARGARET WITHY

(A.R.C.M., L.T.C.L.).

Postal Tuition for L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., and T.C.L. paper-work. Practical work (Pianoforte). Personal lessons in Bath or Salisbury.

Full particulars from 29, Church Field, Salisbury.

MR. J. C. BRYDSON

MUS. BAC. (DUNELM.), L. MUS. T.C.L.

CORRESPONDENCE COACH FOR DEGREES AND DIPLOMAS. (ORDINARY AND GUARANTEE COURSES.)

FEES from Half-a-Guinea, according to Course.

Send for particulars of Scholarships and offer to new students.

Students write:

"Your model solutions are very good indeed."

"I very much appreciate your helpful criticisms."

Address : "BALCARY," KEGWORTH, NR. DERBY.

CORRESPONDENCE COACHING.

University Degrees, R.A.M., R.C.M., R.C.O., and T.C.L. Diplomas.

DR. REGINALD HUNT

D.Mus. Lond. (1925), F.R.C.O.,

is in touch with all modern examination requirements.

Organ Lessons (3-man. Harrison, 1922), St. Mary's, Bryanston Square, W.1.

Address : 7, Woodgrange Avenue, N. Finchley, N.12.

DR. ALLISON instructed by Post Candidates who OBTAINED DEGREES OF MUS.B. and Mus.D. at Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, London, and Durham Universities, Diplomas of L.L.C.M. (April & Dec.), L.R.A.M., F.R.C.O., L. Mus. L.C.M., A.R.C.M., Gold Medals, Silver Medals, Scholarships, Prizes, Certificates, and valuable professional appointments. Dr. Allison is willing to teach those who neither require nor desire to pass examinations. Harmony, Counterpoint, Orchestration, and Analysis of Compositions by Post, to correspondents anywhere. Personal instruction in Theory, Singing, and Piano. 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

REVISION OF MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS. Dr. Horton Allison, 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

CAPTAIN PERCY BAKER, M.C., F.R.C.O., L. Mus. T.C.L. (Author of "Compend of Musical Knowledge," "Studies in History and Form," &c.). Specialist in Tuition by post for T.C.L. and R.C.O. Essay Models, Sight-Reading Courses, Study Aids, 9*d*. Studies in Modulation, 3*s*.

Send for interesting Pamphlets on Methods.

HAZELDENE, TEWKESBURY.

MR. J. PERCY BAKER, Mus. B. Dunelm., F.R.A.M., gives Postal Tuition and prepares for Examinations. Personal Lessons (Pianoforte and Theory), at 14, Hanover Square, W.1. Address, 12, Longley Road, Tooting Graveney, S.W.17.

FREDERICK GREEN, L.R.A.M., ETC. Voice Specialist, Vocal Coach, and Adjudicator. Preparation for L.R.A.M. c/o Rushworth & Dreaper, 11, Islington, Liverpool.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES :—

(1.) L.R.A.M. Paper Work.

(2.) A.R.C.M. Paper Work.

(3.) Interesting Courses of Study in Rudiments, Harmony, Form, &c.

L.R.A.M. Exams. 1910-26 ... 301 Correspondence Pupils successful.

A.R.C.M. Exams. 1914-26 ... 81 " " "

MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., Waterloo Buildings, Piccadilly, Manchester.

In response to many requests, MR. BIBBY begs to announce that he has prepared the following additional CORRESPONDENCE COURSES :

(1.) The "Mus. Bac." Degree.

(2.) A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O. Paper Work.

(3.) A.T.C.L. and L.T.C.L. Paper Work.

(4.) The Associated Board Examinations in Rudiments, Harmony, and Counterpoint.

(Address as above.)

MR. BIBBY also gives PERSONAL Lessons in Manchester. Complete Preparation (Practical and Paper Work) for L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., A.T.C.L., &c. Address as above.

MR. ALLAN BROWN, F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Organist and Musical Director, The City Temple). 298, Balham High Road, S.W.17. Telephone : Battersea 0916.

Special preparation for F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O. Also L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. ORGAN EXAMINATIONS.

SINGLE LESSONS and PRACTICE on facsimile R.C.O. instrument. Pieces registered.

RECENT SUCCESSES IN ORGAN WORK :

1 L.R.A.M., Dec., 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.
1 A.R.C.M., April, 1920.	1 A.R.C.O., July, 1921.
1 L.R.A.M., April, 1924.	3 A.R.C.O., July, 1922.
1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1922.	1 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1923.
1 F.R.C.O., July, 1922.	4 A.R.C.O., July, 1923.
3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1923.	1 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1924.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1923.	3 A.R.C.O., July, 1924.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1925.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1925.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1925.	5 A.R.C.O., July, 1925.
1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1926.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1926.
4 F.R.C.O., July, 1926.	4 A.R.C.O., July, 1926.

"Hints for R.C.O. Candidates" to be obtained from the Publishers, Reid Bros., 26, Eastcastle Street, Oxford Circus, W.1.

SELF-PREPARATION.

(THEORETICAL AND PRACTICAL.)

Many Music Students are at times perplexed, where but a little guidance will help them towards their goal. Single Lesson, or Course by arrangement.

A. GRAVES, F.R.C.O., 30, Salop Road, Oswestry.

MR. J. D. HANDS, Mus. Bac. (Dublin), L.R.A.M., gives lessons in Harmony by post. Music composed to Lyrics. Pianoforte Accompaniments written to Airs. Moderate terms. 114, Wellesley Road, Clacton-on-Sea.

DR. CUTHBERT HARRIS, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O., SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE TUITION. 410 Successes in Mus. D., Mus. B., F.R.C.O., and A.R.C.O., &c. 58, Avondale Road, Gorleston-on-Sea.

DR. HARRIS REVISES and PREPARES MSS. FOR PUBLICATION. Accompaniments to Songs written.

MISS H. HEALE COACHES for all EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC (at private residence or at West-End Studio), in Pianoforte, Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, Form, Orchestration, "Teaching," Modulation, Transposition, &c. For Terms, &c., apply, Dunraven House, 41, Albert Bridge Road, S.W.11.

DR. CHASTEY HECTOR, D. Mus. Oxon., 1922, L.R.A.M., instructs Candidates, personally or by post, for Degrees and Diplomas in Music. "The Downs," Old Shoreham Road, Hove, Sussex.

DR. A. G. IGGULDEN, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O.
SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE COACHING.
Latest Successes: Durham, Sept. 1926. Mus. Doc. and 5 Final Mus. Bac. passes. Other recent successes, Mus. Doc. and Mus. Bac. Exms. after prelim. course in composition, and 1st Mus. Bac. passes. Over 180 successes at Durham alone, besides R.C.O. Diplomas. The Durdans, Reigate.

DR. F. J. KARN (Mus. Bac. Cantab.; Mus. Doc. Toronto) continues to give lessons in Harmony and other Theoretical subjects, and prepares for all Musical Examinations. Compositions revised and Analyses written. Candidates prepared by Dr. Karn have gained the Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc. degrees at the Universities and diplomas from the Musical Colleges.
Address: 106, Haverstock Hill, London, N.W.3.

DR. KNOWLES (Manchester 1919, Durham 1920) specialises in preparing candidates by post for the Paper-work of all examinations in music. Solutions, with methods of working. Address, "Cramond," Oakhurst Avenue, East Barnet, London, N.

HERBERT HODGE, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M., Organist and Choirmaster, St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, Queen Victoria Street, London, has, since 1908, made a speciality of coaching Candidates for the Organ Playing Examinations of the Royal College of Organists, and can arrange a private course of instruction (or single lessons) to organists visiting London, at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey. Many recent F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O. successes.
5, Streatham Place, S.W.2. Telephone: Streatham 2195.

A. EAGLEFIELD HULL, Mus. Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O. For Lectures, address E. L. Robinson Direction, 199, Piccadilly, London, W.1; for personal and correspondence lessons, address Dr. Eaglefield Hull, 19, Berners Street, W.1. For Organ Recitals, address Secretary, 48, New North Rd., Huddersfield.

DECEMBER EXAMS., L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M., Vocal and Pianoforte. Special preparation courses under Mr. Frederick C. Haggis, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M., L.T.C.L., at Wigmore Hall Studios, W., and at Streatham, S.W. Address communications to The Wood End, Wallington, Surrey. Telephone: Wallington 1293, or Streatham 1177.

MR. C. E. de M. LEATHES, M.A., Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O. Tuition in Piano, Harmony, Composition, &c. Pupils successfully prepared for all examinations. Cramer's Studios, 139, Bond Street, W.1, and 128, Kensington High St., W.8.

PREPARATION L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., and all Associated Board Exams. 1925 Successes include 5 L.R.A.M. (Pianoforte). Courses of study, or single lessons, arranged at home or West End. Alan May, 31, Bonham Road, S.W.2.

DR. ORLANDO A. MANSFIELD, Mus. Doc., University of Toronto; F.R.C.O., F.A.G.O., &c., Sirsa House, Cheltenham. Correspondence Lessons. Revision of MSS. Scoring, editing, and arranging. Examination pieces analysed and annotated.

MISS F. HELENA MARKS, Author of "The Sonata: Its Form and Meaning," prepares for L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., and all other examinations, Pianoforte, Harmony, "Form and Teaching," &c. Personal or Correspondence Lessons in all Paper-Work subjects, including those for L.R.A.M., "Aural Training and Sight-Singing," and A.R.C.M. in "The Teaching of Musical Appreciation," &c. Pupils received and visited for the Pianoforte. Many recent successes L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c.
10, Matheson Road, London, W.14.

DR. H. H. L. MIDDLETON, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Twenty-five years' experience in Private Tuition and Coaching for Degrees. More than 800 of Dr. Middleton's Pupils have obtained Degrees at the Universities, R.A.M., R.C.M., and R.C.O. Address, 60, Berners Street, W.1.

CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS.

Graded Lessons especially prepared to suit individual needs—every student assured of personal care and attention. Rudiments, Harmony, Counterpoint, Orchestration, &c. Preparation for Diplomas and other examinations. Interesting courses also for those not wishing to enter examinations.
ALFRED MORRIS, L.Mus. T.C.L., 9, West Lorne Street, Chester.

MR. R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M. (Double Dip. Singing and Piano), L.R.A.M., Class A, Performer and Teacher.
Prof. Singing, G.S.M., 1905-1915. Special Lect. on Musical Appreciation to L.C.C.
"Recit. and its Rendering." 1s. 6d. "Vade Mecum for Singers." 6d.
Preparation for all Exams. by Post and Personal Lessons.
Special Courses of Papers: Singing, Piano, Touch, Musical Appreciation, &c.
Nearly 1,000 Successes for Degrees and Diplomas.
Send for Prospectus,
21, Boundary Road, N.W.8. 'Phone: Maida Vale 1715.

PIANO TEACHING EXAMS., A.R.C.M., L.R.A.M., Etc.
(a) Outline of Course of Instruction, 5s.
(b) Studies for Special Purposes (first bars given), 5s.
(c) Four Special Test-Papers for A.R.C.M., £1 (including corrections).
"J. H.," Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M., &c., c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

W. J. FREDERICK PUGH, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., prepares for L.R.A.M. (Aural Culture and Voice Culture Diplomas), A.R.C.M. (Appreciation Diploma). Recent Successes. 34, Wilmington Avenue, Chiswick, W.4. Chiswick 3267.

DR. TAYLOR'S POSTAL PUPILS HAVE passed Mus. Bac. 1st and final. A.R.C.O.; L.R.A.M.; A.T.C.L. Pupil gained the Stillie Bursary at Glasgow for Counterpoint. Latest success, A.R.C.O. for 1924. Portland Place, Lancaster.

MISS RENEE. Voice Specialist, Tone-Culture. Italian Method. Write, 18, Ulster Place, Marylebone Road.

W. G. WEBBER, F.R.C.O. Recitalist, &c. Preparation for Exams. Organ lessons given on new four-manual Willis. Address, Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road, London, S.E.1.

DR. PERCY WOOD, Mus. Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O.
SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:
(1) Elementary Harmony and Counterpoint.
(2) F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O.
(3) A.R.C.M. (Theory of Music).
(4) A. Mus. T.C.L. and L. Mus. T.C.L.
Several recent successes in all these examinations.
R.C.O. EXAMINER says: "Your system is undoubtedly an excellent one."

SUCCESS GUARANTEED—given any pupils with the requisite musical ability for the examination in view.

285 A.R.C.O. Successes since 1909.
180 F.R.C.O. " " "

RECENT SUCCESSES IN PAPER WORK:

2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1916.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1916.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1916.	5 A.R.C.O., July, 1916.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1917.	2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1917.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1917.	4 A.R.C.O., July, 1917.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.	2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.
4 F.R.C.O., July, 1918.	2 A.R.C.O., July, 1918.
1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., July, 1919.
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.	10 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1920.	6 A.R.C.O., July, 1920.
3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.	7 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1921
6 F.R.C.O., July, 1921.	8 A.R.C.O., July, 1921.
5 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1922.	5 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1922.
4 F.R.C.O., July, 1922.	5 A.R.C.O., July, 1922.
8 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1923.	6 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1923.
7 F.R.C.O., July, 1923.	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1923.
7 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1924.	9 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1924.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1924.	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1924.
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1925.	8 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1925.
7 F.R.C.O., July, 1925.	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1925.
5 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1926.	6 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1926.
6 F.R.C.O., July, 1926.	6 A.R.C.O., July, 1926.

"Tralee," Warwick Road, Cliftonville, Margate.

SIGHT-READING SPECIALIST.
PIANOFORTE, SINGING.
MISS PENROSE, Diplômée Leipzig Conservatorium.
Special course of 25 lessons for Adults with no previous knowledge of Music. Definite results in stated number of lessons guaranteed. Infallible method of simplifying time and rhythm difficulties.
Studio, 157, Kensington High Street, W.8.
'Phone: 0778 Western.

WELL-KNOWN PROFESSOR of SINGING has a VACANCY for keen Student (Lady). Thorough preparation for L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Moderate Fees. Opportunity for teaching when proficient. Please state experience to "L.R.A.M.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

CORRESPONDENCE TUITION. Any Exam., R.C.O., T.C.L., &c. Complete Training. One guinea ten lessons. Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, History, Form, Hints on Aural Tests, &c. "W. P. W., F.R.C.O.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

LICHFIELD CATHEDRAL CHOIR.

There will be a TRIAL OF VOICES on Saturday, 16th October, to fill a VACANCY for a LEADING BOY. Candidates must have very good voices, and be good readers of music, and should be between nine and twelve years old. Board, lodging, education, and medical attendance free. Apply, Rev. M. Hardey, Subchanter, 9, The Close, Lichfield, Staffs.

ALL HALLOWS', GOSPEL OAK, Hampstead.
WANTED.—SOLO BOY, ALTO, and TENOR. (Probably the largest Parish Church in London.) Apply, A. Richard Trevithick, 19, Savernake Road, N.W.3.

TENOR WANTED.—St. Andrew's, Holborn.
Fridays, 6.30; Sundays, 11 and 6.30. £15. Apply, Organist.

RIPON CATHEDRAL CHOIR.—There is a VACANCY for a TENOR SINGER. Must be a Communicant and good sight-reader. Salary, £100 per annum. Applications, with three testimonials, one of which should be as to personal character, to be sent to The Precentor before October 10.

SOPRANO, formerly Soloist West-End London Church Choir, desires similar position in Essex Church, between Ilford and Southend. Small salary. "Essex," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ST. MICHAEL'S BACH SOCIETY,
CROYDON.
Conductor: Dr. GEORGE OLDROYD.

TENORS WANTED for above Society. Bach's "St. Matthew" Passion now in rehearsal. A limited number of Vacancies for Other Voices also open. Subscription, 10s. 6d. Music provided. Apply, B. J. Rogers, Hon. Secretary, 35, Morland Avenue, Croydon.

TENOR WANTED, for St. Peter's, Belsize Park, N.W.3. £16 per annum. Write, "Organist," 42, Heath Street, Hampstead, N.W.3.

TENOR and BASS (Chorus) WANTED at once. £16 each. Write, L. H. Warner, St. Botolph's Church, Bishopsgate, E.C.2.

ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL.

The appointment of a Bass singer (not Baritone) will shortly be made to the vacant office of Assistant Vicar-Choral. Intending competitors should apply to the Rev. Succentor, St. Paul's Cathedral, E.C.4., who will forward the necessary particulars. Only a selected number of candidates will be called up for trial. No application will be considered after October 30. In no case will the Dean and Chapter defray travelling or other expenses incurred by candidates in connection with the appointment.

BASS (£10) WANTED for St. Mary's Church, Bermondsey. Easy Services. Reader essential. Write, S. H. Parry, 83, Army Street, Clapham.

TENORS WANTED.—Voluntary Church Choir. Excellent opportunity for obtaining experience. Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise," Brahms's "Requiem," Bach's "St. John" Passion and Christmas Oratorio. Write, "Choirmaster," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

BASS.—Able to take Solos, &c., for Parish Church. Usual Sunday Services. State salary required, to "Organist," c/o Murray & Co., 164, Brompton Road, S.W.3.

BASSES (3 or 4) REQUIRED in the Choir of a large Church in S.W.4 district. Excellent music. Organ, pianoforte, or singing lessons offered in return for Services. Apply, "Organic," c/o Messrs. Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour St., W.1.

A CHORAL SOCIETY centreing in Finchley-Whetstone-Southgate Area is in need of the services of a Musical Director. A liberal Honorarium is offered. Musicians interested are invited to communicate with the Hon. Secretary of the Society, Mr. C. A. Ash, 80, Horsham Avenue, North Finchley, N.12.

HOLBORN UNION, LONDON.

The Guardians of the Holborn Union require a Bandmaster (part-time appointment) as an Instructor for the boys at their Schools. The person appointed will also be required to conduct at various public engagements accepted for the Band. Salary, £125 per annum, plus a fee of 15s. for each public engagement at which he conducts. Application form, together with particulars of hours of duty, &c., of the appointment, may be obtained from Mr. C. E. Morrell, Superintendent, Holborn Schools, London Road, Mitcham, Surrey.

WANTED.—AMATEUR CHOIR TRAINER as Assistant Conductor. Male-Voice Choir, established over thirty years. Rehearsals, Central London. Apply by letter, stating experience, and enclosing testimonials. Hon. Sec., 48, Stockwell Road, S.W.9.

£250 SINGING, Pianoforte, and Elocution Free Scholarships, Cup, Medals, and Cash Prizes. The Clifton Cooke Open Competitions: Elocution, 23rd October; Singing, 30th October; Pianoforte, 6th November. Adjudicators: Mr. Booth Hitchen, the famous baritone, Royal Opera House, Covent Garden; Mr. Claude Landi, late Conductor, Royal Carl Rosa Opera Co.; and Mr. A. Kirkham Hamilton. Results at Lecture Recital, "Practical Singing," King George's Hall, Wednesday, November 10th, at 7.30 p.m. Prospectus from Secretary, 26M, Guilford Street, W.C.1.

WANTED.—ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER for Muswell Hill Presbyterian Church, London, N. Apply by letter, with copies of testimonials, to Thos. Rose, 103, Rosebery Road, N.10.

WANTED.—ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER for Upper Holloway Baptist Church, London, N. Good congregations; well-trained choir, 30 to 40 voices. Modern 3-manual organ, by Norman & Beard (Hill). Salary, £50. Write, stating qualifications, G. Pryke, 34, Whitehall Park, N.19.

WANTED.—ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER for Union Congregational Church, Putney. Two-manual organ. Salary, £30 per annum. Apply by letter, with testimonials stating previous experience, to Mr. W. Seymour, 57, Erpingham Road, Putney, S.W.

ORGANISTS.—Mr. L. Henderson Wigg can DEPUTISE on Sundays in London or Provinces. Experienced. 42, Clapham Road, S.W.9.

ORGANIST.—APPOINTMENT WANTED, or as deputy. S.E. district preferred; or near. "D.," 28, St. Asaph Road, Brockley, S.E.4.

MR. HERBERT HODGE will give an Organ Recital at St. Stephen's Walbrook, on Thursday, October 14th, at 1.10 p.m.

YOUNG LADY.—Smart (22), possessing musical qualifications, desires Position in Music Publishers, or Pianoforte business. "E. S.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

PART-TIME TEACHING in Mus. College or School REQUIRED by Gentleman (25). Coaching, Organ, Pianoforte, Theory, also CONDUCTORSHIP of Choral Society. "M.," 34, Grosvenor Park, S.E.5.

A.R.C.M.—Piano-teaching Exams. Coaching by post for Viva-voce, special purposes, course of studies, &c.—High marks. Madame Mabel J. Moss, A.R.C.M., 38, Stapleton Hall Road, London, N.4. Phone: Mountview 4819.

WELL-KNOWN LONDON ORGANIST has a VACANCY for ARTICLED PUPIL. Exceptional opportunities. Preparation for R.C.O. Examinations. State experience to "F.R.C.O.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ORGANS (New and Second-hand) for SALE.—Electric and pneumatic action up-to-date. Built or reconstructed. Bedwell & Son, The Cambridge Organ Works, Cambridge.

CHURCH ORGANS STANDARDISED.—Two Manuals, Pneumatic Pedals, various sizes: specially built. Five to fifteen stops. Introduced to meet the requirements of the times at minimum cost. W. E. Richardson & Sons, Central Organ Works, Manchester, S.W.

FOR SALE.—MASON & HAMLIN MANUAL ORGAN, with side blower and foot pedal; 13 Stops, 2 couplers and stool. Price, 50 guineas. David Hoadley, Handcross, Sussex.

BELL TWO-MANUAL ORGAN, almost new. Pedals. 17 stops. Sacrifice, £90. In perfect condition. Can be seen any time by appointment, 1, Oxford Street, White Cross, Hereford.

PIPE ORGANS Restored, Enlarged, Repaired, and Tuned. Attractive Terms. Henry Morgan & Son, Church Organ Builders, 19, Cowdrey Road, Wimbledon, London. Established 1896.

ORGAN STOOL, adjustable, new or second-hand, WANTED. Leonard O'Connor, West Brow, Sedlescumbe Road, St. Leonards-on-Sea.

ORGAN PRACTICE.—1s. 4d. an hour (pupils, 9d.). Hydraulic-blown, two manuals and pedals (R.C.O. scale). ORGAN LESSONS at St. Stephen's Walbrook, E.C.4. Large three-manual Organ. Moderate fees. Special courses of combined lessons and practice at reduced fees. Write for prospectus. G. J. Metzler, F.R.C.O., Principal, Fulham School of Music, 2, Edgarley Terrace, Fulham Palace Road, S.W.6. Tel.: Putney 4208.

VIRGIL CLAVIER FOR SALE.—Good Condition. £15, or nearest offer. G. Rowe, 55, Hillmarton Road, Holloway, London, N.7.

PIANO FOR SALE.—German Overstrung upright. Full rich tone. Sacrifice at 50 guineas, lowest price. Write, Vogan, 27, Tresco Road, Peckham Rye.

BLÜTHNER (Boudoir Grand) FOR SALE privately; a very good instrument, with sweet tone. In perfect condition. £150. Write to "M. L.," 62, Hornsey Lane, N.6.

IBACH GRAND, 7¼ octaves. Excellent condition. £110, or nearest offer. Seen 13, Lyndhurst Gardens, Hampstead.

VIRGIL CLAVIER for SALE. In excellent condition. Full Compass. Best offer secures. Write, T. G. Dawes, A.R.C.O., 54, Springfield Road, Brighton

VIOLIN (Benjamin Banks) FOR SALE.—£50. Genuine (Messrs. Hill's certificate). Fine, powerful tone. Write, K. Walton, 49, Haward Court, London, N.W.6.

WANTED TO PURCHASE by Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O., a teaching connection in London, or neighbourhood. Good price given for a bona fide one. "C. M. L.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

MUSIC STUDIO TO LET, near R.A.M. ACCOMPANIST if desired. 'Phone: Langham 3237. Write, "X. L.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

DR. E. T. SWEETING: (Address) Rydal, Lemsford Road, St. Albans.

A TREATISE ON CONDUCTING.
12,000 WORDS. ILLUSTRATED METHOD. 2s. Post free. (800 Copies sold.)
Invaluable to Leaders and Members of any Orchestra, Band, or Choir. M. T. Cooper, M.D., 23, Beech Avenue, Blackpool.

DUO-ART REPRODUCING ROLLS, and ordinary 88-note Pianola Rolls WANTED. Send particulars and lowest prices to H. S. Lewin, 22, Caterham Rd., London, S.E.13.

BASSES AND BARITONES should buy Songs by HAROLD OAKLEY (recently published): "THE GONDOLIER" (Compass C to C). "BEAUTY'S DAUGHTER" (Compass B♭ to E♭). "THE ERL KING" (Compass C to E♭ or F). "UP SAIL" (Compass B♭ to E♭). Price 2s. each. Weekes & Co., 14, Hanover Street, W.1. All Music Sellers.

AURAL TESTS.—L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c. Special Paper showing how to obtain proficiency. Very Successful. Enclose 4s. 6d. to "Aural Tests," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, London, W.1.

ESSAY, A.R.C.O., JANUARY, 1927. New Series of Six Model Essays on the book, "William Byrd," with valuable Hints on "How to Write the Essay." Send P.O. 4s. 6d. to "Essays," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

Can You IMPROVISE at the Keyboard?

Improvisation or Composing at the Keyboard—also playing music which you have heard, by ear and without the aid of any written music—can be learnt by ANYONE of average intelligence. By means of a short postal course, I guarantee to teach YOU to do this, to improve your technique, play at sight, and memorise music without any drudgery.

My booklet, "The Piano and its Possibilities," is sent FREE on receipt of a Post Card.

MR. H. CRAWFORD, KINGSLEY GREEN, HASLEMERE.

MUSIC COMPOSERS and LYRIC WRITERS.—Songs, Lyrics, and Musical Compositions Wanted for Publication. We compose Music to Lyrics if desired. Advice free to new authors and composers. Send MSS. (words or music) to the Carlton Music Agency, 8, Lloyd Square, London, W.C.1.

COMMUNION SERVICE in F, complete, with 9-fold Kyrie. Specimen 1s., from R. R. Glendinning, 13, Langton Terrace, Falmouth.

MORE DON'TS.
By JOHN NEWTON. READY SEPT. 1ST.
Second edition, "Don'ts for Choirmasters." Fresh matter, New Exercises. 1s., postage 2d., of Heffer, Cambridge; and Warren, Winchester.

"WE WILL MERRIE BE." Charming Song, by Florence Mackintosh. Old English style. In two keys. 2s. each net. Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour St., London, W.1.

MUSICAL BOOKS.
48-Page List (Cat. B.) post free—Æsthetics—Biography—Criticism—Essays—History—Orchestra—Organ—Pianoforte—Technical—Theoretical and Elementary—Violin—Vocal—Wagner—Tutors—&c.
REEVES'S, 83, Charing Cross Road, London, W.C.2.

MUSIC COPIED, neat work, Transposition and Duplicating. E. W. Cartwright, 28, York Rd., Bournemouth.

MUSIC COPYING, Transpositions, &c., by experienced musician. "A.R.C.O.," 154, Ramsden Road, Balham, S.W.12.

FOR GOOD PRINTING SERVICE
. . Posters, Programmes, Announcements . .
Books of Words, Tickets, Press Opinions, &c.
BAINES & SCARSBROOK,
75, FAIRFAX ROAD, SWISS COTTAGE, N.W.6.
'Phone: Hampstead 0246 and 0247.

OFFERS WANTED.—Grove's Dictionary; Vocal Scores. "Meistersinger," "Siegfried," "Tristan"; orchestral music; Band parts and score, "Messiah." "Creation." G. P. Fletcher, 6, Brown Street, Manchester.

TEXT-BOOKS
BY
ALBERT HAM, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O.

OUTLINES OF MUSICAL FORM
WITH ANALYSES FROM
WELL-KNOWN CLASSICAL WORKS.
Price ... Five Shillings.

"In all respects this is an admirable little work, with no waste, no hiatus of a serious nature, handy in size, and with a practical scheme well carried through."—Musical Times.

DR. C. W. PEARCE, in alluding to the above work, says:
"Quite the best I have ever seen, and I shall lose no opportunity for recommending it."

THE RUDIMENTS OF MUSIC AND ELEMENTARY HARMONY.
THIRD EDITION.
Price ... Five Shillings.

"Dr. Ham's admirable little work may be cordially recommended. —Musical Times.

	s.	d.
MINUET AND TRIO FOR ORGAN	2	0
PEDAL AND MANUAL SCALES AND ARPEGGIOS ...	2	6
ANTHEMS: The desert shall rejoice. S. or T. Solo and Chorus (S.A.T.B.)	0	3
I heard the Voice of Jesus say. Bar. Solo and Chorus (T.T.B.B.)	0	4
PART-SONG: Music, when soft voices die (S.A.T.B.)	0	3

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

Save Half the Cost of your Music Library

by buying from Foyles. Call and inspect the exceptionally wide range of second-hand copies (in good condition) of Standard Text-Books, at about Half Published Prices. Including, amongst others, the Works of

MACPHERSON, Stewart.		PEARCE.
MATTHAY.	OAKEY.	PETERSON.
MRS. CURWEN.	PARRY.	PROUT.

NOVELLO'S PRIMERS AND TEXT-BOOKS.
GROVE'S DICTIONARY of MUSIC and MUSICIANS.
THE MUSICAL EDUCATOR, 5 Vols. 25s.
CURWEN'S PUBLICATIONS.

If unable to call, write, mentioning requirements or interests. Catalogue of Dept. 15 (Music) sent free of charge.

ORCHESTRAL, STRING, VOCAL, ORATORIO, AND PIANOFORTE MUSIC.
Foyles hold a wide range at greatly reduced Prices.

NEW MUSIC AND TEXT-BOOKS.
Foyles supply on the best terms and guarantee quick delivery.

MUSIC AND BOOKS PURCHASED; BEST PRICES PAID.

FOYLE'S MUSIC DEPT.,
121-5, CHARING CROSS ROAD,
LONDON, W.C.2.

THE SUPERB

BECHSTEIN PIANOS

You can examine a magnificent selection of Bechstein Pianos—new and second-hand—at

126, NEW BOND ST., W.1.

Can be purchased by instalments, no deposit required.

Old Pianos taken in exchange, highest value allowed.

Call or write for Catalogue.

The Autoplayer Co., Ltd.,
BECHSTEIN PIANO SPECIALISTS.
Mayfair 2653.

STEINWAY STUDIOS

COMFORTABLY FURNISHED
ELECTRIC LIGHT
CENTRAL HEATING
TELEPHONE LIFT
NEW STEINWAY PIANOS

Full particulars from

STEINWAY & SONS
THE NEW STEINWAY HALL,
1 & 2, GEORGE ST., CONDUIT ST., LONDON, W.1.
'Phone: Mayfair 6641-5.

PIANOS

BY

BECHSTEIN, BORD, SCHIEDMAYER, ROGERS

and other celebrated makers. All on view in our Showrooms.

. . NEW AND SECOND-HAND . .
CASH, HIRE, OR HIRE PURCHASE
Pianos taken in exchange.

Apply for lists:

CHAS. STILES & CO.
74-76, SOUTHAMPTON ROW
LONDON, W.C.1.
'Phone: Museum 0439.

CRAMER STUDIOS

from

3 Gns.

per term

RECENTLY RENOVATED

NEW CRAMER PIANOS

139 NEW BOND STREET
LONDON W1

RELIEVES COLDS — PREVENTS "FLU"

VAPEX
(REG. TRADE MARK)
INHALANT

SINGER'S THROAT

AN irritated throat is an ideal breeding place for the germs of colds and 'flu. Protect yourself with "Vapex." Put a drop on your handkerchief each morning, and inhale the vapour occasionally. The complicated throat and nasal passages are thus bathed in an atmosphere in which germs cannot grow.

All Chemists, 2s. and 3s.

Sole Makers:
THOMAS KERFOOT & CO., Ltd.,
BARDSLEY VALE, LANCS.

EXPERIENCE AND REPUTATION

BY APPOINTMENT.

Over thirty years' experience in the manufacture of Organ Blowing Machinery is behind the fine reputation held by the "Discus" Organ Blower. During this period, installations have been made with complete success to a very large number of Cathedrals, Churches, and Public Buildings both at home and abroad. We can supply blowers to suit any size or type of organ, and the motive power may be either electricity, gas, or oil. Our wide and varied experience is at your disposal. Write now for a free copy of our illustrated booklet, "Organ Blowing," and let us supply free estimate and suggestions from your particulars.

THE "DISCUS" REGD. TRADE MARK. ORGAN BLOWER.

SOLE MAKERS

WATKINS & WATSON, WHITE LION STREET, LONDON, N.1.

Telephone: North 2039.

Just Published.

FINAL BOOK OF THE BREARE VOCAL SERIES No. 5,

"VOCAL ANALYSES:

SENSITISING BREATH—EMOTIONAL EVOLUTION."

Price 5*s.*, by Post, 5*s.* 4½*d.*

Previous Books of the Series—No. 1, "Vocalism: Its Structure and Culture, from an English Standpoint." No. 2, "Elocution: Its First Principles." No. 3, "Vocal Faults and their Remedies." No. 4, "Vocal Technique: How it Feels to Sing."

Books No. 1 to No. 4, price 3*s.* 6*d.* each, till pre-war editions exhausted.

By W. H. BREARE, J.P., M.I.J., Vocal Adviser.

Address: HERALD BUILDINGS, HARROGATE, ENGLAND

Publishers—

London: Simpkin, Marshall, Hamilton, Kent & Co.

Harrogate: R. Ackrill, Ltd.

JAMES LYON, Mus. Doc.

ELEMENTS OF HARMONY

3*s.* 6*d.*

Answers to Questions and Exercises on the Elements of Harmony.

2*s.* 6*d.*

BANKS & SON, Music Publishers, YORK.

The Delicate Tuning of GUT Strings,

Without taking the Violin from the shoulder.

Excellent and clever, a real discovery, invaluable to violinists.—MARIE HALL.

I can say, without hesitation, a splendid tuning device.—ALBERT SAMMONS.

My most hearty commendation. A great boon.—(SIR) DAN GODFREY.

Should soon equal in popularity the device used for the E string. Trusting it will meet with the success it undoubtedly deserves.—DE GROOT.

Sure to be of great interest to Violinists. I hope to see it soon in general use.—H. WESSELY, R.A.M.

A great advance on tuning with pegs.—ROWSBY WOOF, R.A.M.

Patented. On or off in Two Seconds No Fixing.

Post free, 2*s.*

Dr. H. V. PEARCE. 4, Porchester Road, Bournemouth.

DARLINGTON'S HANDBOOKS.

"Nothing better could be wished for."—British Weekly.

FRENCH AND ITALIAN RIVIERA. 60 Illustrations, Maps and Plans, 6/-.

WEST SWITZERLAND. 100 Illustrations, Maps and Plans, 4/-.

2/- Paris, Lyons, and Rhone Valley.
2/- Chamonix and Environs.
2/- Lake Geneva, Rhone Valley, and Zermatt.
2/- The French Riviera.
2/- The Italian Riviera.
2/- Bernese Oberland and Lucerne.

NORTH WALES. 60 Illustrations, Maps and Plans, 7/6.

DEVON & CORNWALL. 100 Illustrations, Maps and Plans, 7/6.

NORTH DEVON AND NORTH CORNWALL. 50 Illustrations, 6 Maps, 4/-

SOUTH DEVON AND SOUTH CORNWALL. 50 Illustrations, 6 Maps, 4/-.

THE HOTELS OF THE WORLD. A Handbook to the Leading Hotels throughout the World, 2/6.

List of DARLINGTON'S HANDBOOKS post free.

Llangollen: Darlington & Co. London: Simpkins. Railway Bookstalls and all Booksellers.

Paris and New York: Brentano's.

PIANOS

MEMBERS

OF THE PROFESSION

desiring instruments for Pupils, &c., are invited to inspect the varied stock of over 500 new and second-hand Pianos from 25 to 1,000 guineas

MAPLE & Co. Ltd.

TOTTENHAM COURT ROAD W1

TWELVE

Short Introductory Voluntaries

FOR THE ORGAN

BY

W. G. ALCOCK.

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

HIAWATHA'S WEDDING-FEAST

AND

THE DEATH OF MINNEHAHA

COMPOSED BY

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR.

ARRANGED FOR PIANOFORTE SOLO

BY

JOHN POINTER.

Price Five Shillings and Sixpence each.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

MANUEL GARCIA'S

"ART OF SINGING."

Edited and revised by ALBERT GARCIA.

LEONARD & CO., 47, POLAND STREET, W.1. (6s.)

REEVES' LIST.

(PUBLISHED AT NET PRICES.)

MUSIC BOOKS.

THE GIPSY IN MUSIC. By Franz Liszt. Englished for the first time by Edwin Evans, Senr., with Essay on Liszt and his Work added.

Gipsy and Jew, Two Wandering Races.
Gipsy Life in Relation to Art.
Gipsy Music and Musicians.

The result of the Author's long Experiences and Investigations of the Gipsies and their Music. With portraits of the Author, &c. Two vols., 8vo, cloth, 15s.

REEVES' DICTIONARY OF MUSICAL BIOGRAPHY of some 2,500 Noteworthy Men and Women of the Past and the Present. Edited by Edmondstoune Duncan and Others. 253 pp., Crown 8vo, cloth, 4s. 6d.; paper covers, 3s. 6d.

THE ARABIC MUSICAL MANUSCRIPTS IN THE BODLEIAN LIBRARY. By H. G. Farmer, M.A., with plate of two Ancient Specimens of Instruments. 8vo, sewed, 3s.

THE CENTRAL POINT IN BEAUTIFUL VOICE-PRODUCTION. By H. Travers Adams. 8vo, 1s.

OBSERVATIONS ON THE ITALIAN SCHOOL OF FLORID SONG. By P. F. Tosi. Translated by Mr. Galliard. Musical examples. 182 pp., Crown 8vo, boards, 6s. 6d. Recommended to all students of singing by the late Charles Lunn.

"....this remarkable work."—Etude.
"....highly useful"—Grove.

THE CREATION. ORATORIO (Haydn). Macfarren's Performing Edition, just re-issued. Paper, 3s.; boards, 4s.

VIOLINIST'S ENCYCLOPÆDIC DICTIONARY, containing the Explanation of about 4,000 Words, Phrases, Signs, References, &c., Foreign, as well as English, used in the Study of the Violin, and also by String Players generally, by F. B. Emery, M.A. New and enlarged edition, doubled in size. 246 pp., Crown 8vo. Cloth, 6s.; paper covers, 4s. 6d.; or on India paper and bound in red pegamoid, rounded edges, 6s. 6d.

CONCISE METHOD OF INSTRUMENTATION. How to Write for the Orchestra and Arrange an Orchestral or Band Score. Illustrated with Musical Examples and various large folding charts, with Index. By Edwin Evans, Senr., author of "Beethoven's Nine Symphonies Fully Described and Analysed," &c. 8vo, cloth, Vol. 1, 7s. 6d. (ready). Vol. 1. How to Write for Strings, Arrangement of Scoring and Preparation of Parts. With charts. Vol. 2. How to Write for Wood, Brass, and Drums, and Arrange a Band Score. With charts. Nearly ready.

THE ORGAN AS VIEWED FROM WITHIN. A Practical Handbook on the Mechanism of the Organ. By John Broadhouse. With over fifty Illustrations. Second Impression. Crown 8vo, cloth, 4s. 6d.; paper covers, 3s.

WITH THE GREAT COMPOSERS. A Series of Pen Pictures exhibiting in the form of Interviews the Personal Characteristics as Artists of the World's great Tone Poets. Portraits to each. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

THE SONATA: Its Form and Meaning, as Exemplified in the Piano Sonatas by Mozart. A Descriptive Analysis, with Musical Examples. By F. H. Marks. Sq. 8vo, well printed on fine paper, just ready, in two parts, 4s. 6d. each, paper (or in one volume, cloth, 10s. 6d., paper, 8s. 6d.)

BEETHOVEN'S NINE SYMPHONIES Fully Described and Analysed. A complete Account of Thematic Material and auxiliary Motives: an Analytical Chart of each Movement; full Technical Descriptions of Developments; Particulars of Formal and Rhythmic Features; Epitomical Tables, &c., with 637 Musical Examples. By Edwin Evans, Senr. Cloth, Vol. 1 (Nos. 1 to 5), 10s. 6d.; Vol. 2 (Nos. 6 to 9), 10s. 6d.

LONDON: 83, CHARING CROSS ROAD, W.C.2.
(Ask for full list "B.")

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, London, W.1.

President:
THE RT. HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.P., G.C.V.O., C.B.E.

Chairman of Board and Director of Studies:
Professor J. C. BRIDGE, M.A., Mus.D., F.S.A.

Director of Examinations: E. F. HORNER, Mus.D.

Wednesdays, October 6th, 13th, and 27th, at 3 p.m. Students' Concerts.

Wednesday, October 20th, at 3 p.m. First of a Course of Lectures on English Literature, by Mrs. K. W. CAMPBELL, B. LITT. OXON., some time Lecturer in English Literature in the University of Aberdeen, and King's College, University of London.

November 1st. Last day for sending in Essays for the "Bonavia Hunt Prize" for Musical History. Subject: "British Instrumental Music of the 16th century." Open only to past and present Students of the College.

The College provides INSTRUCTION and TRAINING in all Musical Subjects (Instrumental, Vocal, and Theoretical) and Dramatic and Operatic Elocution. The Lessons are arranged to meet the convenience of both day and evening students. Entry may be made for any number of Subjects—from one to the Full Course. The College is open to beginners as well as to the more proficient student; pupils under 16 years of age are received for the Junior School at reduced fees.

The ORCHESTRAL, CHORAL, the OPERATIC, and CHAMBER MUSIC CLASSES are open to sufficiently competent persons who are not College Students for other subjects.

Tuition in the Rudiments of the Theory of Music, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Instrumentation, Composition, and the Art of Teaching is also given by Correspondence.

There are between Forty and Fifty Scholarships tenable at the College and open to all British subjects up to certain age limits, and the Bambridge Pianoforte Scholarship, value £100 per annum; also Eighteen Scholarships which provide complete preparation for the Degree of Bachelor of Music.

Particulars of the Teaching Department, with list of Professors, Fees, Scholarships regulations, &c., and the Syllabuses of the Diploma and Local Examinations, free on application to the undersigned. C. N. H. RODWELL, Secretary.

SCHOOL SONGS

IN

ELKIN & CO.'S

CHORAL SERIES.

ELKIN & Co.'s Choral Series contains many Unison Songs and Part-Songs suitable for use in Schools.

Will teachers please write for specimen copies on approval, mentioning for what voices they are required?

ELKIN & CO., LTD.,

20, KINGLY STREET, REGENT STREET,

LONDON, W.1.

BROADWOOD PIANOS

BOSWORTH & CO., LTD.

THE LYRIC ORGANIST

A COLLECTION OF EASY MELODIOUS PIECES FOR THE ORGAN.

EDITED AND ARRANGED BY

E. STANLEY ROPER.

Three Books. Price each, 2*s.* 6*d.* net.

Vol. 1. Edition No. 796.	Vol. 2. Edition No. 797.
Berceuse. M. Victor	Rêverie. G. Marchetti
Slumber Song. W. H. Squire	Chant sans Paroles. P. Tschaikowsky
Plainte d'Amour. A. Tellier	Hymn. E. Meyer-Helmund
Bridal Song. A. Jensen	Nocturne. L. Ree
Plains of Peace. D. Barnard	Album Leaf. P. Zilcher
Rêverie. J. Hubay	Evensong. L. Schotte
Angelus. A. Borodine	Souvenir. N. von Wilm
Chanson Triste. P. Tschaikowsky	Norwegian Folk-Song. Ole Bull
Andante Religioso. A. Forster	Longing. E. Paul
Romance in F. T. J. Crawford	Evening Hymn. O. Rippl
Album Leaf. P. Tschaikowsky	Vision. F. G. Byford
Song Without Words. F. Zureich	Pensée. H. Dubois
A Folk-Song. F. Zureich	Cradle Song. M. Hauser
Romanesca. R. Leoncavallo	Flemish Folk-Song.
Chorale. L. Ree	Morning Greeting. A. Tellier
	Toccata. T. J. Crawford

Vol. 3.
Edition No. 975.

Berceuse. N. Johnson	Berceuse. E. Watson
Adagio. Laszky	Serenata Pastorale. G. P. Moore
Romance sans Paroles. W. H. Squire	Scene Romantique. E. Meyer-Helmund
Song Without Words. Rahn	Menuett. E. Meyer-Helmund
The Request. O. Rippl	Norwegian Berceuse. Kohler
Le Coucou. C. Daquin	Allegro Molto. N. von Wilm
Andante. N. von Wilm

Vols. 1 and 2 are also published for the American Organ. Price 2*s.* 6*d.* each.

BOSWORTH & CO., LTD.,
8, HEDDON STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.1.

JUST PUBLISHED.

FIRST CHORAL SYMPHONY

THE WORDS SELECTED FROM THE POEMS OF

JOHN KEATS

AND SET TO MUSIC FOR

SOPRANO SOLO, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

BY

GUSTAV HOLST.

(OP. 41.)

FULL SCORE.

Price ... £3 3*s.*

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

The Musical Times

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

OCTOBER 1 1926

(For List of Contents see Page 945.)

HUGO WOLF

By C. W. Orr

It is almost a quarter of a century since the death of Hugo Wolf, and his position among the world's great song-writers is already assured. His reputation is firmly established in Germany and Austria, and though it has been of slower growth in England there are not wanting signs that his claim to be of the royal line of Schubert, Schumann, and Brahms, has come to be recognised. So far as my knowledge goes, Mr. Newman's brilliant study of Wolf is the only work of its kind in English, and no better introduction to the study of Wolf's songs could be imagined, since it affords the most illuminating commentary on the composer's output as a whole, and emphasises those points in which Wolf's achievement differs from that of his predecessors. The public at large has not great opportunities of estimating the real significance of Wolf, as the majority of singers seem content to confine themselves to a mere handful of his songs, ignoring for the most part such superb things as the 'Harfen-spieler' songs, and the Mignon ballads from the Goethe Lieder, the deeply-felt religious songs from the 'Spanisches Liederbuch,' and the exquisitely wrought Italienische Lieder—where a whole world of emotion is compacted into songs often not exceeding twenty bars in length—besides other masterpieces, such as the 'Prometheus,' 'Ganymede,' 'Geh' Geliebter,' and 'Der Feuerritter,' which are rarely heard on the concert-platform.

Wolf is a perfect example of the poet-musician; that is to say, one whose musical ideas are entirely subordinated to the task of achieving the complete expression of the poem he is setting, so that the music, while remaining satisfactory in itself, becomes an exact reflection of the verse to which it has been so happily mated This is not to say that Wolf's predecessors had not left many examples of a perfect marriage of sense and sound, but no one before Wolf had so consistently succeeded in uniting poetry and music so ideally, nor had they exhibited an equal variety of mood. Readers of 'Jean Christophe' will remember how Romain Rolland makes his hero poke fun at what might be called the Rosen-Mädchen-Nachtigall complex that fills so many of the German lieder, and it is not the least of Wolf's merits that he has avoided this particular pitfall. The 'junger Liebling' and his 'schönes Mädchen' have vanished, and in place of these conventional figures of German Romanticism we have a world of men and women overflowing with life and vitality, and drawn so completely in the round that each figure is distinct from its fellow, with a physiognomy and characteristics of its own. Wolf recalls Browning in his absorbing interest in humanity as a whole, and scattered throughout his songs are figures of every type—lovers of high and low degree, lovable scamps and ne'er-do-weels, kings, minstrels, poets, philosophers, anguished penitents, soldiers, gypsies—the list might be extended indefinitely. Nor is there one character that does not bear the impress of having been lived in Wolf's imagination, and then re-embodied in the glowing inspiration of his music.

His sense of atmosphere is no less remarkable. The Spanish and Italian song-books are pervaded throughout by the warm, languorous air of the South, and move in an entirely different world from that of the Goethe lyrics, just as these are distinct from the Mörike group, so that a song taken from any one volume and inserted into another would wear a curiously alien aspect among its companions. The 'Wer sich der Einsamkeit ergibt' is as unmistakably the accent of German 'Welt-Schmerz' as the warmth of 'Liebe mir im busen' is born of Southern passion, while the 'Seufzer' and the 'Herr, was trägt die Boden hier' seem like projections into music of the Protestant and Catholic type of mind. In a word, Wolf has so absorbed the poems that the music becomes the reflection of Goethe, Mörike, or Heyse, changing its character with each metamorphosis.

Wolf's freedom from the tyranny of the four-bar phrase enabled him to overcome every difficulty that confronts the composer who has to set poems containing irregular rhythms, inverted stresses, and, in particular, the problem of dealing with lines where the sense runs over, so to speak, from the end of one line to the beginning of the next—a difficulty that is rarely negotiated without an awkward break in the music. An example of this type occurs in the poem of one of Schubert's loveliest songs, 'Die Forelle.' In the third verse the poet writes:

> Doch endlich ward dem Diebe
> Die Zeit zulang. Er macht
> Das Bächlein tückisch trübe
> Und eh' ich es gedacht, &c.

Schubert has indeed avoided a break between the second and third lines, so that the poet's meaning is not distorted, but one cannot help feeling that it is at the cost of a loss of musical interest, which is not recovered until the composer can resume both his original melody and the triplet figure accompaniment, the absence of which has momentarily destroyed the unity and general balance of the song as a whole. In Wolf we are never conscious of awkward moments such as these. His gifts were such that he was invariably able to find a melodic phrase that should follow the poet's lines with scrupulous fidelity, throwing into relief every important word without ever impeding the musical flow. A study of his treatment of the lines beginning 'Welch ein Grab ist hier,' from 'Anakreon's Grab,' or the opening of the second of the Peregrina songs, and the wonderful 'Prometheus,' will prove his success in this matter; the difficulties mentioned above seem to be overcome with such effortless ease as to delude the listener into imagining that these problems did not exist for Wolf.

To the eye, many of his accompaniments seem austere, almost academic in their severity; a figure of one or two bars in length will be repeated with modifications throughout the entire song with what seems a too scrupulous slavishness to form. To the ear, however, nothing could be more satisfactory or inevitable. The voice part floats on, soars above, or sinks below the accompaniment with a freedom surpassing anything in Schubert or Brahms, while the pianoforte part becomes a magical support for the vocal line, never hampering its uncontrolled motion, yet changing in sympathy with every mood, and emphasising each nuance with a fidelity that is almost uncanny in its certainty, giving to the song a unity and completeness that satisfy the musical and poetic ear simultaneously. Striking uses of this device may be found in such things as the 'Die ihr Schwebet,' 'Alle gingen Herz, zur ruh,' and the 'Mühvoll komm ich und beladen,' the last named being a superb example of what may be achieved by the manipulation of one figure; the music here recalls Beethoven in its dynamic energy and force.

Wolf came as the culmination of a great tradition, and also as the herald of a new epoch in the history of the song. He stands as the ideal after which every song-writer should strive—a creator of melodies that are themselves the musical projection of great poems, a craftsman with a sure and precise touch, and a musician endowed with the keenest sense of poetic values. He raised the art of song-writing to a height that has not been surpassed, and we shall probably wait long before the advent of another composer of his stature who shall unite in himself such supreme musical gifts with an equally developed poetic sensitiveness—gifts which existed in Wolf in such harmonious perfection as to make his Lieder a storehouse of delight.

THE NATURE OF HARMONY

By Matthew Shirlaw.

IV.

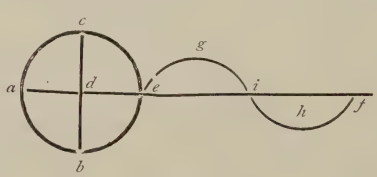
(Concluded from August Number, page 788.)

We have been dealing with simple tones. What of compound sounds consisting of various partial tones? Each of these partial tones, however, is itself a simple tone. A compound sound, as is known, is analysed by the ear as the sum of various partial tones that are themselves simple, corresponding to simple pendular vibrations. In simple musical sounds the condensation is equal to the rarefaction. The sensation of musical sound is brought about in the ear by a regular succession of atmospherical condensations and rarefactions acting on the auditory nerves or fibres. Is the ear affected by the condensation only, and not by the rarefaction? We can hardly imagine such to be the case, for if the rarefaction be destroyed, the condensation disappears along with it. The ear must be sensible of the rarefaction as well as of the condensation. If the latter propels the fibres of the ear in one direction, the former will pull them back in the opposite direction. So that as the period of one is equal to that of the other, as the one is the inversion of the other, the simple sound may be said to educate the ear to the appreciation of the Octave. When it hears the Octave it hears this other, this echo or replica of the fundamental sound. But, it may be objected, the Octave sound cannot actually arise thus in the ear. It is unnecessary here to prove that it does. But the truth is that the Octave not only may, but does exist subjectively in the ear, even although it has no objective existence in the outer air.* The whole process is not merely simple: it is beautiful. It might be in such a way that the poet and musician

> . . . give to airy nothing
> A local habitation and a name.
>
> . . . . . .
>
> The soul that rises with us, our life's star,
> Hath had elsewhere its setting,
> And cometh from afar.

Consisting as it does of two equal and opposite, although complementary parts, the simple sound-wave resembles not so much the straight line as the circle. In fact, the laws of pendular vibration generally receive easy geometrical illustration, as follows: Suppose a point, moving at a uniform rate of speed, to describe a circle, with centre a, any one standing at some distance along the path of the line e-f who observes only the edge of the circle will merely see the point move up and down in a straight line, as if from b to c. This movement from b to c and back again exactly describes the law of pendular vibration. Such motion may be represented by means of a curve, as e, g, h, f,—

Ex. 6.



Thus Unity, represented by the most perfect symbol conceivable, viz., the circle, may be observed reaching out into diversity, and thus the sound-wave, as it appears in Nature, exhibits both unity and diversity. One's thoughts almost involuntarily turn to the familiar words that we associate with the morning of Creation—the Garden of Eden, its perfection; the serpentine figure; the drawing of Eve from the side of Adam. We are certainly dealing with primeval things, and it is possible to understand the fine frenzy of Blake, as he contemplates in imagination that primeval celestial harmony of the spheres, and sees in one direction angelic forms, and in the opposite direction ominous figures speeding forth on their labours for the redemption of men.

* See Helmholtz's 'Sensations of Tone,' Chap. vii.

In the above diagram may be observed the graphic representation of the Octave—for while e-f represents the fundamental sound, produced by the whole string, each of the halves, e-i and i-f produces the sound of the Octave. The relationship between rhythm and the consonance of the Octave has surely been sufficiently manifested. Does the measure of two beats, as a bar of 2/4 or 2/2 time, confirm in any degree the conclusions we have arrived at with regard to the Octave? It does, and in an astonishing manner. Let us glance again at Ex. 5. There the motion from b to d and back again constitutes a complete vibration. We may represent this vibration by an up and down movement of hand and arm, and as we repeat those movements let each return to the point d be represented by means of a light blow on our desk or table. Each blow of the hand on the table will correspond to one complete vibration of the hand. It should be observed that in thus making one complete vibration the hand performs not one movement but two: a downward movement, and another movement of a similar kind but in the opposite direction. Such movements are exactly those performed in beating a bar of duple time. If we mark the upward as well as the downward movement of the hand by means of a sound, we shall of course, as formerly, obtain two sounds in the place and time of one. The question, What kind of measure corresponds to the consonance of the Unison? receives here its answer—for such a sound is the result, not of a single, but of a dual vibratory movement, and such a movement exactly corresponds to the movements of hand and arm in performing a series of complete vibrations. In such complete vibrations the blow on the table was the result of the downward beat only. The upward movement of the hand was necessary in order to accomplish the downward movement, but it was unnecessary to take account of it. It was there, however, and in the measure of two beats we do take account of it. It is the upward unaccented beat, corresponding to the Octave. The downward accented beat corresponds to the fundamental sound. The analogy between the consonance of the Octave and the rhythm of two beats is complete. It is so close that it can scarcely be closer.

We now come to the consonances of the Twelfth and Fifth. The Twelfth arises in the harmonic series immediately after the Octave:  It is determined by the proportion 1 : 3—i.e., while the lower sound makes one, the upper sound makes three vibrations. Or, while the lower sound is that of the entire string, the upper sound is the result of the string dividing itself into three parts. Evidently the vibrational proportion is of some consequence for the ear. The ear cannot, it is true, count the number of vibrations performed in a given time, nor, in the case of musical sounds of appreciable pitch, can it distinguish them separately. Nevertheless, there is no finer instrument than the ear in existence for the detection of any disparity of proportion. In this respect the ear is greatly superior to the eye. The difference between sixty and sixty-four natural objects, let us say, might easily be unrecognised by the eye. As sonorous vibrations, however, as musical sound, it would be impossible to deceive the ear. One vibration less, or one vibration more, and instead of the Twelfth, we would have the Octave, or the double-Octave. And here I may deal, and very briefly, with some of the objections that have been urged against any attempt to compare rhythm with consonance. One objection has already been touched on, viz., If rhythm is related to consonance, why do they differ so greatly in effect? Is it really necessary to enter into a long discussion as to why rhythmic motion affects us in so many different ways: how it evokes various bodily movements, as in the dance: produces in us the sensation of light, the utterly different sensation of sound, or of heat, which differs from all these? Further, it is objected that if consonance is due to rhythmic motion of the atmosphere, why then is the ear not aware of the fact? Why should it be? The function of the ear is not to reason why, but to register the rhythmic fact, and this it does in its own marvellous way. And to urge, as is frequently done, that the knowledge that consonance arises from certain proportions increases in no way the pleasure we derive from it, is surely the grossest ineptitude. Exactly the same may be said of musical sound itself. But, it is objected, rhythm affects us in quite a different way: e.g., in listening to a piece of music in 3/4 time we are aware that there are three crotchets in the bar; we can count them, and it is just our delight in this orderly arrangement that explains the pleasure we derive from rhythm. Here we seem to be nearer the root of the trouble. The pleasure we derive from rhythm may and does depend on the fact that there are two, three, or four beats in the bar, but it does not depend on any purely intellectual knowledge of that fact. Out of a hundred people who succumb to the seductive strains of the latest popular dance, and who sway their bodies in conformity with its rhythm, how many could tell the correct time-signature? Probably less than half—very considerably less. Even if this be not true of dance rhythm, it is at least true of many popular tunes. Our rhythmic sense is to a certain extent inborn: it is a natural faculty, and not an intellectual preconception. Our feeling for rhythm expresses itself in rhythmic motion and, conversely, rhythmic movement evokes in us a corresponding pleasurable emotion. All of which affects not in the slightest degree the truth that between rhythm and consonance there exists a well-defined relationship. Because my ear, or perhaps my nose, is not aware of such a relationship, must we regard this as proof that no such relationship exists? But it is time to return to our consonances.

We meet at once with an apparent difficulty, for while the ternary measure and the consonance of the Twelfth both arise from the proportion 1 : 3, the Fifth has the proportion 2 : 3. The Fifth appears to be as good a consonance as the Twelfth, being merely the simple form of this interval. Such is not the opinion of Helmholtz, who considers the Twelfth to be a better consonance than the Fifth. Let us, however, examine the matter for ourselves. The expression, 'identity of Octave sounds,' is convenient, but inaccurate. Although Octave sounds have a similar tonal significance, they are not identical. If we assert, in spite of this, that the transposition of the lower sound of an interval an octave higher makes no difference to the consonance or tonal nature of the interval, we surely forget a familiar fact such as the following:

Ex. 7.

Here the lower sound of the interval (a) is transposed an Octave higher (b), and the result is plain to all. Here is another illustration:

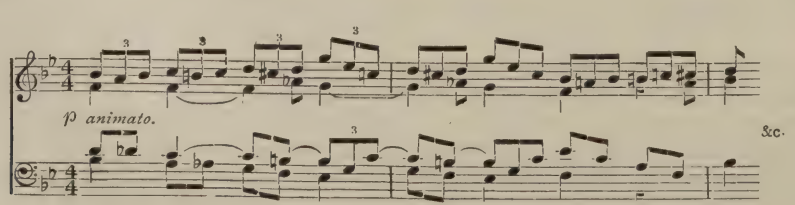
Ex. 8.

At (c) is the opening figure of a familiar double fugue, and at (d) the same figure, with the sounds f and c♯ placed an octave higher. If octave sounds are identical, (c) and (d) ought to sound exactly alike. These facts are familiar, as Helmholtz remarks, to all who know a little of orchestration or of the art of writing for voices. In many instances, the substitution of a Fifth for a Twelfth, a Third for a Tenth, a Second for a Ninth, and so on, would mean disaster, the ruin of the tonal colour or sonorous effect desired. Similarly, a composer may prefer a Fifth to a Twelfth, but not because it is a better consonance.

The Fifth, however, is a simple and good consonance. Its proportion is 2 : 3. In 2 : 3, i.e., 2 and 3 in the time of 1, or 2/4, 3/4, we have no corresponding signature, for does not represent one time-signature, but two; it exhibits a rhythmical clash and opposition. To seek for the explanation of the consonance of the Fifth in such a rhythmic contradiction would be an amateurish procedure. On the contrary, we ought to discover here a very good reason for considering the consonance of the Fifth to be derived from that of the Twelfth. The Fifth cannot arise in the harmonic series except through the Octave. Besides, our fundamental sound—above which the Octave, and now the Twelfth, make their appearance—is becoming more and more strongly established as a tonal centre—a Tonic. Why consider the Twelfth to be what it obviously is not, and abandon our primary tonal centre for a new and secondary one? Further, is it possible to imagine that in the combined rhythm resulting from the clash of the measures 2/4 and 3/4, we actually find convincing evidence that the Fifth directly relates itself to the fundamental sound? And yet such is really the case. Such a combined rhythm evidently exhibits the proportions 1, ½, ½, 1. We may write this as a syncopated rhythm:  But if we have no particular reason for preferring the more complicated version, the more obvious and direct grouping is: This, at least, is the only version that appeals to the syren; that somewhat stupid instrument refuses to take any account of the syncopation. It is also evident that the measures 2/4 and 3/4 mean nothing, if not that both 2 and 3 have to be considered as rhythmical wholes, and are determined as such by the unity of the complete bar. Now, if the rhythm:  &c., be performed on the syren at a proper rate of speed, there is heard the consonance, not of the Fifth, but of the Twelfth.

Let it be admitted, however, that in the rhythm of 2 against 3 there is frequently to be found a quite peculiar rhythmical charm, as in the familiar variation of Brahms, beginning thus:

Ex. 8.

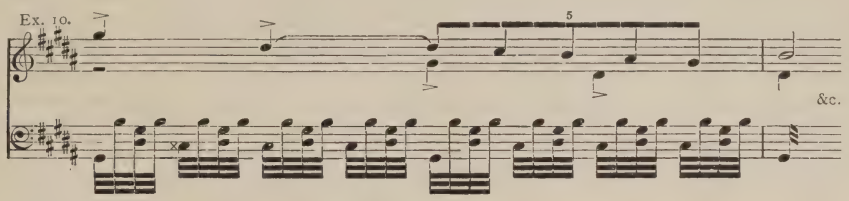


The same may be said of the rhythm of 3 against 4—the proportion of the Fourth, although this interval does not find its consonance in such a proportion—as in the following, from the Adagio of Beethoven's 'Emperor' Concerto:

Ex. 9.

Even the rhythm of 4 against 5—the proportion of the major Third—does not appear to have been considered too hopelessly bizarre or eccentric by some composers, as the following, from Schumann's 'Etudes Symphoniques' bears witness:

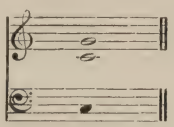
Ex. 10.



And all these are simple compared with other rhythmical combinations that will readily be recalled.

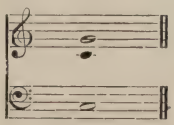
In the December issue we endeavoured to show how the ternary measure acquires rhythmical unity by means of the proportion of the Octave—i.e., 1 : 2 or 2 : 1. Also that between such a measure and the consonance that arises from the same proportion—i.e., 1 : 3—there must exist a well-defined relationship. Such a relationship is already manifest, for the Twelfth or Fifth, like the ternary measure, arises from the proportion of the Octave. In addition to what has been said above, certain acoustical facts confirm this in unmistakable fashion. Thus, if the two sounds that form the Fifth be heard together, a third sound, the fundamental itself, makes its appearance:

Ex. 11.



and, as if to remind us of the part played by the Octave proportion in the determination of the Twelfth, we cannot sound this interval without the Octave intruding itself:

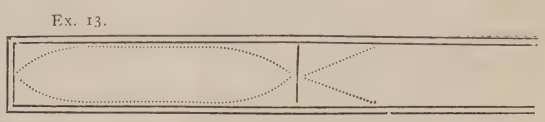
Ex. 12.



The summation tones discovered by Helmholtz prove the same thing. The summation tone resulting from the Octave is the Twelfth.

At this stage some reader may exclaim: 'How awful that such a beautiful theory should be utterly annihilated by the simple fact that in certain instruments, such as the clarinet, and stopped organ pipe, where the first harmonic sound is the Twelfth, the Octave is not present at all.' We are not dealing with theory, however, but merely trying to discover certain important truths; and one of these truths is that the Octave will appear as a combination tone, as indicated above, when the Twelfth or Fifth is sounded, whether the instruments used are clarinets or not. Still more remarkable, in order to demonstrate the determination of the Fifth through the proportion of the Octave, it would be impossible to devise a more convincing graphic illustration than that presented by Nature herself in the resonance of the Twelfth produced by a stopped organ pipe, or in any instrument generating only the odd upper partial tones:

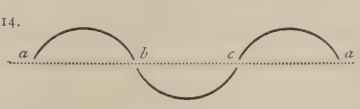
Ex. 13.



Here the sound-waves exhibit the proportion $1 : \frac{1}{2} = 2 : 1$.

The same proportion, however, may be observed in a vibrating string that divides itself into three parts:

Ex. 14.



If, as Sedley Taylor remarks, the time of vibration of that part of the string represented by the dotted line from a to c is that which a pulse occupies in transversing the two ventral segments a-b and b-c, then the complete sound-wave a-b-c will be to the ventral segment c-d, as $1 : \frac{1}{2} = 2 : 1$, the proportion of the Octave. Thus the Twelfth is received into the unity of the Octave, and all three sounds are bound together in a larger unity. The analogy between the Twelfth, or Fifth, and the measure of three beats, is complete. The reader will have no difficulty in discovering as complete an analogy between quadruple time and the consonance of the double Octave, one so natural, that it almost fails to awaken in us any surprise. If the double Octave is the Octave duplicated, quadruple time is the duplication of the measure of two beats, the compounding of two bars of duple time. Nor should he have much difficulty, in view of what has been said above, in finding the answer to the time-worn objection—one that the amateur is constantly re-discovering—that all sounds of the harmonic series must be regarded as consonant with the fundamental, seeing that each vibration of this fundamental coincides with the first vibration of all the upper partial tones. This is the kind of supposition that one sets up for the express pleasure of knocking it down again.*

CANADIAN FOLK-SONG

By Mrs. Frank Liebich

Very little seems to be known in England of the folk-music of Canada. Yet together with Canadian folk-tales it would yield a mine of wealth to explorers. Close on four thousand melodies have been collected, and that is considered a small amount compared with what awaits to be recovered. Until recently the old-world songs formed part of the upbringing of every Canadian peasant. They had been handed down orally ever since the French émigrés had followed the intrepid Jacques Cartier, when he sailed, in 1535, from the little Breton port of St. Malo to the newly-discovered Continent of America. The story of his entering the Gulf of St. Lawrence and making his way up the river as far as where Montreal now stands, of the incredible hardships he endured from the severity of the climate, of his returning with some of the natives to France and obtaining assistance from the King for further explorations, and of how he finally took possession of the land in the name of Francis I. of France, is all as romantic as any story of high courage, endurance, and adventure extant. In course of time many thousands of people hailing chiefly from Normandy and Brittany followed in the wake of the first emigrants. They formed a mixed crowd, representative of all sorts and conditions—farmers, peasants, craftsmen, gentry. They set to work establishing towns and villages, cultivating the land, and setting up trade with the Indians. Later, the whole country passed from French to British rule. Under British administration the Gallic settler continued to live undisturbed on his own bit of land. He managed to retain the old traditional home atmosphere, and to exist entirely in a neutral world of his own making, in which he stored, as in a treasure-house, old traditions, craft, folk-lore, folk-music. It is not surprising, therefore, that the old bucolic ditties are still in vogue to-day, together with an endless variety of love songs and all kinds of chants celebrating a wide diversity of episodes in everyday life. Fairy-tales also abound, lending the glamour of imagination to the drab monotony of modern existence. The old French Canadian peasants vary their recital of Christian stories of Saints and angels with tales of werewolves and changelings, dwarfs, dragons, and all manner of water-elves and sprites. Many of the recorded traditional themes and melodies can be dated back to the time of the Troubadours and Jongleurs of France. This lends to the somewhat unromantic Dominion of Canada a glamour which has not been habitually associated with it, especially if it is realised that these Troubadour songs and lyrics were contemporaneous with the epochs that celebrated in Gallic verse the fatal love of Tristan and Iseult, the Song of Roland, the romances of Lancelot, of the Gallic Parsifal, and the songs composed by Chrétien de Troyes for Marie de Champagne. It was towards the end of the 12th century that those immortal stories of love and adventure first appeared to gladden the world, spreading orally over Europe from the North of France. Thus even in the hard-working, money-making, apparently prosaic Canadian world a substratum of poetry must always have been latent—for truly has it been recorded that from Gaspé to Montreal, from St. Jean d'Iberville to Ungava, all the immemorial French traditions, faith, belief, legend, and song were jealously fostered and preserved.

E. Gagnon's 'Chansons Populaires du Canade' (1865) is one of the best collections of these wild-flowers of song. A smaller compilation, with accompaniments by Margaret Gascoyne (1925), comprises a selection of twenty songs from the bigger volume. This includes several of the more typical and commonly known canoe or paddling songs, e.g., 'A la Claire Fontaine,' 'Le fils du roi s'en va chassant,' 'Le Plongeur' ('Isabeau s'y promène'), and others; also a cradle song, 'Sainte Marguérite,' and a round dance, 'Marian danse.'

La Rochefoucault, visiting Upper Canada early in the 19th century, speaks of his canoe journeys on the big Canadian rivers, accompanied by folk-songs which began when the paddle was picked up, ending only when it was dropped. One thinks of our once ideal boating river, now desecrated from London to Oxford with every species of modern so-called musical instrument and song-drivel, dispersing their hideous echoes down the lovely Hurley and other back-waters.

In the foot-note to Thomas Moore's poem, 'The Canadian Boat Song,' written on the St. Lawrence, the Irish poet mentions the well-known folk-song, 'Dans mon chemin j'ai rencontré Deux cavaliers très bien montés,' with its refrain, 'A l'ombre d'un bois je m'en vais jouer.' This he took down, harmonized, and published; and ever after its melody called up for him the memory of the great river and the flight of his boat over the rapids.

* I have to thank Dr. A. T. Froggatt for his timely—and kindly—reference to two slight errors in my previous article. The F sharp of Ex. 12 was an oversight, unlikely, however, to mislead any who were aware of the difference between a major and a minor triad. As for the resultant tone of the major sixth, this interval has more than one such tone. The fundamental that 'generates' the interval 3 : 5, is one of them.

I am not aware that Canada has produced any epoch-making composer. Nor am I of those who see any connection between a knowledge of his country's indigenous tunes and a man's achievement of a musical work that will place him in line with the greatest of past and present musicians. But just as we love and treasure a remembrance of our children's nursery days, so those artless tunes of a past, untutored period, recall the naïveté of a country's infancy, and refresh the mind in a manner similar to sensing the delicate fragrance of a spring flower after a prolonged exhalation of a strong-scented hot-house bouquet. And as the flowers in their yearly procession develop in grandeur and ornateness with the successive intensity of the sun's rays through spring and summer, so has music progressed from the simple folk-tunes of the world's infancy to the varied intricacy and beauty of consecutive periods in the progressive history of the art.

In a preface to the smaller volume of Canadian folk-song, C. Marius Barbeau remarks that in the desert of American uniformity the ancient rural districts of Quebec form a quaint oasis where industrialism and cupidity have not yet withered all local colour and individual bias and charm. Leisure and gaiety have not altogether vanished. Singing and story-telling in the old style are still casually indulged in.

It is indeed well that among the peasants these delightful amenities are still in vogue. But that the word 'casually' has to be used is to be regretted. Still, even so, it is to be hoped that the old songs will continue to be preserved in Canada, and that they will escape being shouldered out by inane negro ditties and the rest of the vocal and instrumental atrocities that are now so bountifully dispersed over the British Isles from across the Atlantic by certain members of Canada's energetic neighbouring nation.

We are easily surfeited, even with good things; and folk-tunes at one time, not very long ago, were becoming almost an irritant from protracted booming. They have to be ranked, however, in the world's history of music. And many charming little Canadian ditties are worthy to take their place in any collection of primitive song.

POPULARITY AND THE CLASSICS

By Alexander Brent-Smith

Much has been written lately upon what some people, with a delight in awkward mouthfuls, call the popularization of the classics. This means that the deranger, having selected some well-known tune, removes from it all its original touches of genius, reduces it to the commonplace, disfigures it with a few rhythmic catch-phrases, and serves it hot with saxophone and drum. Actually this petty larceny has been rife for many years, as an inquiry into the popular songs of the past twenty years will prove.

Some time ago I read in a magazine article a few hints for writing popular songs. One was that the new tune should be something like a well-known tune so that it should be easily picked up, that is, that composers should imitate deliberately, though discreetly, the work of their predecessors, on the assumption that imitation is the safest road to success. These imitators did not always go to the classics for their models. Sometimes they pilfered from their brethren, as the dear children of Fagin used to practise picking the pockets of each other. In the year 1916 the world went mad over the tunes from the 'Bing Boys.' One of these tunes ran, I think, as follows:

Ex. 1.

This tune certainly fulfils the law that the new tune should suggest a well-known favourite, and, though the original may not immediately leap to the reader's mind, the musical Sherlock Holmes will quickly unmask the impostor, and, by doubling the time of the first six bars, and halving the time of the last two bars, he will expose to the slower-witted Lestrade the 'Man who broke the bank at Monte Carlo.' Through lack of knowledge, I cannot estimate the exact debt of the popular song to its predecessors, but I in no way regret my ignorance. The debt of popularity to the classics, however, is considerable, and worthy a little attention. The frequent theft of Schubertian treasures is well-known, and probably every one is aware that the notorious Prelude of Rachmaninov, having broken the heart-strings of countless pianofortes, is now down and out, fox-trotting with some sentimental verse in the shady walks of life.

I will now examine other instances of pilfering which may be unknown to many, and which may be, for all I know, not pilferings at all, but merely the other half of a dual inspiration. When I was a child I heard a song (I know not whence it came, nor did I ever see a copy) which contained, so far as my recollection from childhood can be trusted, the following phrase:

Ex. 2.

The words were, I believe, something to the effect that 'Granny is a queer old bird.' I have written it in the key of B flat, in order that its similarity to the following may be more clearly seen:

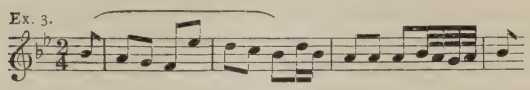
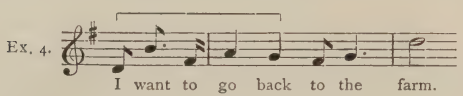
Ex. 3.



which tune, as every one will remember, comes in the Allegretto scherzando of Beethoven's eighth Symphony.

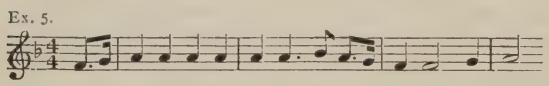
With the advent of the so-called Rag-time, the American debt to Europe became noticeably larger. Most of these rag-times had for their poetical foundation the story of some young full-grown noodle who was either lovesick for a dusky beauty in the backwoods, or else homesick for his broken-down, poverty-stricken birthplace, where lived his enfeebled (mentally and physically) and sorrow-laden mammy. In one such song, in which the young man explains in an undeniably jolly manner that he wants to go back to the farm, far away from harm, with the milk-pail on his arm, the composer, one who puts together, has used the May-morning motive from Wagner's 'Mastersingers' with the happiest result:

Ex. 4.



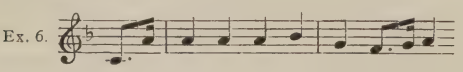
Another composer, also smitten with a home-sickness for the land of his dreams, expressed his longings thus:

Ex. 5.



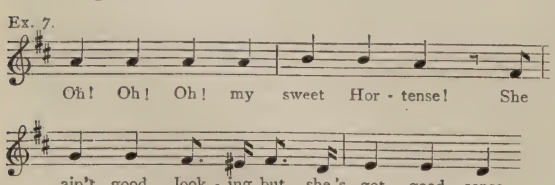
a sentiment previously expressed by Schumann in his 'Nachtstücke':

Ex. 6.



Recently there appeared a popular song which expatiated candidly, and not too kindly, upon the characteristics of a damsel whose name was Hortense. It apparently took two men to write the words, which begin, 'Oh, oh, oh, my sweet Hortense!' and if the proverb 'two heads are better than one,' is true, I would like very much to see the sort of line produced by one of these gentlemen, single-headed. The composer of the tune is not so honest, and claims for himself the following bars:

Ex. 7.



Why, I wonder, if the two poets are shameless enough to claim the honour of the verse, should the name of the real and only begetter of this tune be omitted? Or, if the name of the composer was not known for certain, why should not the familiar title be mentioned? No one can fail to recognise this tune:

Ex. 8.

on which Mozart wrote a delicious set of variations, and which is universally known as, 'Baa, baa, black sheep.'

Fortunately, neither Mozart, Wagner, Schumann, nor Beethoven suffered loss by reason of these thefts, but alas, others living to-day have suffered, and still suffer from these depredations. At least, these fox-trotters might acknowledge the sources of their inspiration, giving honour where honour is due. On second thoughts, perhaps it is as well they do not acknowledge the originators of the tunes; otherwise they might refer to the honoured men of old as Dicky Wagner, Bob Schumann, and Jacky Bach, and the last stage of their conduct would be worse than the first.

MANUSCRIPTS IN A MUSEUM

By Thomas Armstrong

It is easy enough, when you know a man well, to see in his handwriting indications of characteristics which you have found him to possess; and the whole study of character in writing, despite the large claims of its amateurs, is very widely open to the attacks of the sceptical. We all find our writing vary from day to day—our health, hurry or anxiety, and the quality of the paper and pen, each leaves its mark. Yet over and above all these influences there remains a certain constant quality that may probably be relied on as a rough indicator. And although you would not expect, as you wandered about among the manuscripts of famous or infamous men, to deduce anything much, or that little with any certainty, still it is interesting to find your ideas of the writers shaken or confirmed. A striking example is seen in the case of the three Tudor kings—Henry VII., Henry VIII., and Edward VI. The main indications stand out clearly: the first is a small, careful, and thrifty, but strong and capable style; the second is fuller, more slapdash, less wary, and certainly less controlled; the third completely changes into a clear and beautiful scholar's hand, that speaks plainly of a quieter temperament, not mean, but at home in the study rather than at the exchequer or in fields of arms. Too definite to be coincidental, again, is the contrast between the backboneless, sprawling hand of Villiers Duke of Buckingham, and the firm determination of Cromwell, whose signature and letter lie close to those of Charles's favourite.

It is no surprise, either, to find a beautifully-written and neatly-arranged letter of Jane Austen. One would have had it so, just as Carlyle's script must have been small, not with Jane Austen's uneventful quietness, but with his own jerky irritability; his words stuck on to the paper with the jab of an impatient man. Keats's gives less than was to be hoped; there is weakness in it, and a round softness, which may be accounted for by the lack of energy that came of ill-health. And there is no quality of greatness, so far as the casual reader can see; certainly, beyond the faint, rather feminine sensitiveness, no indication that the same hand wrote out 'La belle dame sans merci' and the letter telling his sister of an invitation to spend the summer with 'Mr. Shelley, a gentleman residing at Pisa.' Byron too is weak, but not merely weak; there is dash in the writing, and a look of authority, as well as something of the bravura quality of the letter itself. He is in dire need of money, as usual, and writes to his lawyer, from Athens:

> Yours arrived on the 1st inst.: it tells me I am ruined:—It is in the power of God, the Devil, and Man, to make me poor and miserable, but neither the second nor third shall make me sell Newstead, and by the aid of the first I will persevere in this resolution—My 'father's house shall not be made a den of thieves'—Newstead shall not be sold. . . . I am some thousand miles from home, with few resources and the prospect of their daily becoming less, I have neither friend nor counsellor, my only English servant departs with this letter, my situation is forlorn enough for a man of my birth and former expectations:—do not mistake this for complaint, however, I state the simple fact, and will never degrade myself by lamentations. You have my answer, &c.

There it is, once and for all, including a very sketchy rendering of a New Testament quotation, and never to be mistaken for lamentations. How far it is sincere no one can say; yet, sincere or not, it is all very effectively done, and, in its way, magnificent, as Byron clearly felt it to be.

In an adjoining case, where the musicians are kept, there are one or two surprises. Wagner's sweep and power, as these are felt in the winding-up of 'Götterdämmerung,' or the 'Meistersinger' quintet, seem to indicate a dashing and impulsive way of writing. It is disappointing to find the People's Chorus from 'Rienzi' sketched out in such a small, neat manuscript, with very few corrections or erasures, and no signs at all of impatience or hurry. Schumann is a surprise, too; at any rate one cannot believe that the composer of the stolid, four-square Quintet, put on paper these vague and spidery-looking marks. It was the weaker Schumann, the over-sensitive, unbalanced man, who wrote these pages—the composer of 'Blumenstücke' and 'Papillons,' whose mind sometimes seems unable to pursue any thought with a moment's constancy, and to flit almost aimlessly from one idea to another.

Mendelssohn, on the other hand, is just what one would have expected. There is an anthem here, neatly and beautifully written out, with title-page and dedication to C. B. Broadley, Esq., complete with scrolls and flourishes, that is a joy to behold. Mendelssohn would have been as much ashamed, one feels sure, of a blot on the page, as he would have been of a technical blunder in the music itself.

> Why, O Lord, delay for ever > Smiles of comfort to impart?

is the title of the work, but the whole thing, with elegant slurs and graceful, upright notes, is so obviously debonair, that one cannot believe there had really been any serious delay in the supply of smiles of comfort. Mozart is neat, too, and small, but not in the same way; there is more weight about his writing, which gives a strong impression of virility and determination, and is strikingly modern in style, curiously, in fact, like Vaughan Williams's script at its best. The quavers, unlike Mendelssohn's, which are often made with great care, are done quickly in one stroke, with a pressure and then a swift curl of the pen; but the sense of speed never becomes one of hurry. For this you must turn to Handel. His Motet, 'As pants the hart,' with all its massiveness, gives an impression of simple rush, as if the composer were already thinking of another work, and could not wait a moment to jot down the present one. It is in marked contrast with his ordinary hand-writing; for a letter to the Keeper of the Ordnance Office, referring to the loan of kettle-drums for performance of some of his oratorios, is in a strong and slow script, giving the impression that Handel expressed his thoughts far more fluently in music than in the written word. It is noticeable, too, that twice out of three times he writes 'As paints the hart.'

Beethoven's sketch for 'Adelaide,' which is in the same case, is frankly a kind of musical short-hand. The notes are tiny, and at first seem to have been set down with slow pains, as if no thought would come. Later on there is obvious hurry, and a feather in the pen is carelessly disregarded, with the result that one passage becomes a long, attenuated blot along the page, while the bar-lines tend more and more towards the horizontal. Work must often have been terribly galling to Beethoven, with notes and rests such an inadequate outlet for all the turmoil of his mind.

There is no thought of turmoil in the manuscript of Bach. The A flat Fugue is here, No. 17 in Book 2, with the splendid subject set down by a hand that worked as strongly and unhesitatingly as the brain behind it. You could not mistake it, even if the MS. were without name or title. The notes themselves are firm and indubitable statements of fact, and there is fine confidence in the curved sweep with which the groups of semiquavers are harnessed together. It is clearly a work of maturity. It was, in fact, probably written when Bach was about fifty, though there is no getting at the exact date; and it is unlikely that earlier compositions, written before technique and character had finally moulded themselves, would be penned in this unalterable way. Yet no doubt the makings of it all were there, just as in the small boy who found his own way into Johann Christoph's music cupboard, there were the makings of the determined, slightly short-tempered organist who was so ready to quarrel with the subdeacon of St. Nicholas's about the choosing of hymns. It is good for us to be able to see the old man's writing, and even the lines on the MS. paper drawn out by hand—perhaps his own hand, perhaps the hand of a well-managed wife, or of one of the children. Perhaps, even, a hundred lines was a form of punishment in that establishment, too: it has certainly been heard of elsewhere.

One thing I do regret here, that there is no manuscript of Ravel's. It is perhaps too early yet, but it would be interesting to see whether the writing is as neat and perfect as the music—with elaborate delicacy that comes not of ease but of patient, laborious work. Nothing of his could be without some unexpected and charming mark of individuality; and at the moment, after an hour spent in these profitless imaginings, I feel very friendly towards the man who chose

> Le plaisir délicieux et toujours nouveau d'une occupation inutile, as a motto for one of his works. I think it was Henri de Regnier who wrote it. In any case, you can see for yourself on the first page of 'Valses Nobles et Sentimentales.'

'DER DOPPELGÄNGER' PROBLEM

By John Coates

Mr. Richard Capell's excellent solution of 'one of the classic problems of the song-translator' and the very difficulties which he points out, have set me trying to see whether it may be possible to get at Heine's idea without interfering at all with Schubert's note-values, and I submit the following attempt:

'The Shadow-Double'

Still is the night, the streets are deserted,
'Twas in this house here once did dwell my dear;
'Tis long ago since she departed,
The house as of yore still is standing here.

And yonder is one who stares up in yearning,
His hands he's wringing in heart-rent despair;
I shudder—his features as discerning,
The moon breaks through—'tis myself standing there!

Thou shadow-double, familiar so pallid!
Why apest thou the lover's woe,
That tortured me as here I dallied
On many a night of long ago?

Ad Libitum

By 'Feste'

The matter of tearful response to music, discussed last month, seems to have roused a good deal of interest, if I may judge from correspondence received. Only one reader, however (Mr. Felix White), is so courageous as to write a letter for publication. The rest are shy.

My first feeling on reading the correspondence is one of agreeable surprise. I thought we were all getting blasé and anti-romantic, but it appears that, after all, I was mistaken.

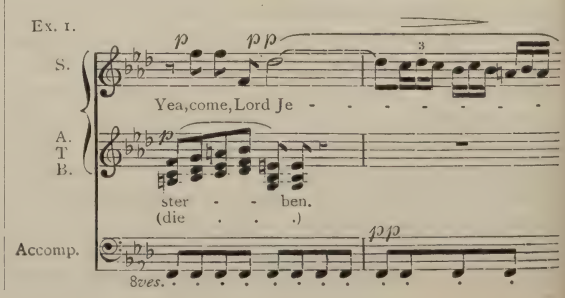
Mr. White's letter (see p. 933) covers a wide range. Some of the passages he mentions affect me very little. On the other hand, he reminds me of several that have touched the spot repeatedly. My little list last month made no pretence to being exhaustive; it merely included a few examples that occurred to me at once. Thus, Mr. White mentions the Bach cantata, 'God's time is the best,' but he does not say what movement or passage he has in mind. I wonder if he succumbs at the point where I am always bowled over—at the close of the chorus, 'It is the old decree,' where the three lower voices cease on a discord, and the soprano, after a brief suspension on the D flat, proceeds to spin out a delicate semiquaver passage over a throbbing bass note.

Wondering if Parry had noted this passage, I have just turned up his 'John Sebastian Bach,' and find that he, too, had been captured. For the benefit of readers who have neither the book nor the cantata, I quote:

> The sentiment, 'It is the ancient law, man, thou must die!' is given to the three lower voices of the chorus in a fugal manner, expressing something of the sternness of fatality, but it is answered by the sopranos offering the suggestion of consolation in the words, 'Yea, come, Lord Jesu.' The close of the chorus is one of the most wonderful examples of the vividness of Bach's musical perception of things external to music. The lower voices continue to reiterate the gloomy words, 'Man, thou must die!' while the trebles refer to the other aspect of death, as the door through which the personal communing with the Saviour, the Beloved of the Soul, is to be attained. The pathetic utterance of the word 'sterben' by the lower voices breaks off abruptly: while the trebles, as it were floating in a higher region, keep the mind occupied with the idea of the coming of 'the Lord Jesus,' by the use of a strangely beautiful passage, which seems hardly to end at all, but merely to dissolve into space. There can hardly be any more suggestive use of the melismatic device in all music!

This extract from Parry reminds me that I ought to have mentioned the effect, throughout the chorus, of the contrast between the alto, tenor, and bass fugue (the voices all written low, the bass having several low E's, and even an optional low C), and the entry at intervals of the soprano. Well sung, with pure, steady, treble tone (not the astringent wobble that is the vogue among soloists to-day), the chorus is an astonishing example of what may be done by so simple and obvious a contrast in vocal tone-colour. Here is the actual close of the chorus:

Ex. 1.



As Mr. White says, Bach is a rich fount, but I must resist the temptation to pause on him. I could tell of the knock-out blow once given me by a single chord in one of the chorale preludes. . . .

Only one other point in Mr. White's interesting letter can be touched upon. He mentions 'Till Eulenspiegel' as being 'strange in this connection.' But is it? I have heard this work many times, in the concert-hall and on the gramophone, and the passage where Till, brought before the justices, tries to brazen it out with one last quip, always makes me choke. 'Till' is by far the most human work Strauss has written, and for that reason will probably be held, in the long run, to be his best. For me, it is worth a stack of 'Zarathustras' and 'Heldenlebens.'

Here is a long confession from a writer in the City—seven large, closely-written pages. He leads off by admitting that he is 'an extraordinarily lachrymose individual where music is concerned.' As a choirboy he often had to open his mouth and wave his lips (so to speak), making a show of singing when heart and throat were too full. The exciting climaxes 'did for him,' he says. The close of 'The heavens are telling,' 'where the bass scales roll up towards the stationary treble,' the 'Hallelujah Chorus,' 'Worthy is the Lamb,' a roll of drums when an orchestra joined in the service—these things laid him out regularly. He must have had a damp youth, and his manhood is no less humid. He hates to produce a handkerchief and dam the flowing tide in public (who doesn't ?), so he has to clutch his face with his hands, while the unmanly drops trickle through his fingers, 'much to the disgust of whoever happens to be my companion—my unfortunate fiancée in these days!' (I hope the lady won't see this—or at all events that she won't identify my correspondent . . .!)

He says the afflicting passages are too numerous to specify, and then specifies a whole string of them—'the gorgeous polyphony of the opening chorus of the "St. Matthew" Passion' (I'm with him there, but the actual moment of my surrender is at the entry of the ripieno chorus of trebles with the chorale. With two choruses and two orchestras already weaving their spells it seems that nothing can be left—the last word has been spoken; and then John Sebastian lays still one more card on the table, and sweeps the board); 'the climax of the development in the first movement of the ninth Symphony; the introduction to the Siegfried-Brunnhilde duet; many bits in the 'Mastersingers.' And he speaks, not without relish, of 'a terrible rainstorm during Brahms's "Requiem," at "But the righteous souls,"' &c.

Perhaps the most interesting point in the letter is this: the writer is a capable semi-professional, an F.R.C.O., who generally does his own music-making. He is unable to attend many concerts, and he thinks that part of the overwhelming effect some music has on him is due to the fact that what he hears at concerts is, technically and interpretatively, so far superior to what he hears at other times. (The reader will remember, as an example of this, the experience I related last month of the mere opening chords of the 'Mastersingers' Overture bringing tears to my eyes by their sheer perfection in tone and ensemble, coming, as they did, hard on some wretched singing I had just heard elsewhere.) But I don't think that a technically perfect performance needs to be contrasted with an indifferent one in order to affect us emotionally. The longer we live the more susceptible we become to the appeal of the technical side of composition—beauty of form, the easy mastery of some problem in construction, and so forth. And the same probably holds good in performance to a greater extent than we imagine. It is humbug to pretend (as many people do) that a technically flawless performance is necessarily cold. Some even seem to think that a goodish proportion of wrong notes is indicative of a poetic and musical temperament. But as there are plenty of bungling players and singers with the temperament of a codfish, it is clear that mere inaccuracy is an unreliable thermometer. Yet the attractiveness of a difficulty overcome with ease is such that if one of these codfish acquires technical mastery, his performance will be far from negligible. If he can play the notes fluently and correctly, with the modest amount of nuance and flexibility that may be expected from one so completely withdrawn from his native element, he will enable the composer to deliver his message sufficiently to move us, if there be any moving quality in it.

A well-known composer and conductor, who says the subject interests him intensely, writes agreeing with me as to the passage in 'The Death of Minnehaha,' and goes on:

> Two performances I always remember moved me so that I wept like a silly kid—the first performance of the 'Rose Cavalier,' at Covent Garden (the particular passage being the Trio of the three women in the last Act), and Tchaikovsky's 'Romeo and Juliet' at a Philharmonic concert conducted by Mengelberg, the passage here being the second subject. I have often heard the work, before and since, but this is the only occasion on which it had that effect. We are peculiar creatures.

If Mr. Frank Howes, or some other musical psychologist, could get my correspondent in a corner, and catechise him as to his doings just previous to that Philharmonic concert, he might be able to say why the second subject affected him on that evening and never at any other time.

The reference to 'Minnehaha' reminds me of the odd fact that the passage I referred to last month is based on a series of chords that I detest—as indeed do most musicians, so threadbare has it long since become. I should have thought any passage based on this formula:

Ex. 2.

would have made me scoff, no matter how they were dished up, or to what text they were set. I almost blush when I think how easily I fell before it, and am saved only by the reflection that a host of others fell with me.

Yet one more letter must be quoted. A Bristol reader says she has only once been moved to tears by instrumental music, and that was during a performance of Quilter's 'Children's Overture,' under Wood. When the little tune 'I saw three ships' entered, she wept. She had no association with the air, and thinks the setting must be responsible. That Gervase Elwes's singing of the 'Wenlock Edge' cycle should profoundly affect this correspondent is not strange. (But a mere reading of the poem leaves her untouched.) On the other hand, when she hears Harold Samuel play Bach, and an old French piece called 'Les Tourbillons,' she has much ado to keep from laughing aloud.

This reference to the pianoforte recalls the significant fact that nobody seems to be deeply affected by that instrument. One writer says that although he loves pianoforte music, it leaves him unmoved. All the evidence, direct and implied, seems to point to its fatal defect—lack of sostenuto. The violin can search our very heart-strings, the human voice can do so even more easily (thanks to the aid of words), the organ at times, a chorus very often: all these can give us sustained melody. The pianoforte can stimulate us, and is perhaps capable of a greater variety of amusing effects than any other instrument; but its inability to draw a long melodic line is fatal to its doing more. There is irony in this, seeing that its repertory is rich in music bearing highly emotional labels

---

The conclusions that seem to emerge from this inquiry are: (1.) The emotional appeal is greater in concerted than in solo music, the combination of chorus and orchestra being specially potent. (Here there are two extra-musical factors: (a) the text, and (b) the effect or a large number of people doing something in common. Hence the fact noted by Berlioz—that a single soldier grounding his musket was insignificant, whereas a regiment doing it was overwhelming, both to eye and ear.) (2.) The actual quality of the music is often a negligible point, especially in large-scale performances. (3.) A passage may move us profoundly one day, and fail to touch us on another. (4.) The comparative failure of the most popular instrument of all—the pianoforte—to achieve a really poignant effect. (Query: Is this failure the result, not only of its being a percussive instrument, but also of over-familiarity? It is so much of a 'standing dish' that it must lose something of its appeal.) And (5) the significant absence from the letters of the names of any of the so-called 'advanced' composers. (Many of these are avowedly opposed to emotional appeal—probably on the 'sour grapes' principle: if you can't write music of that sort pretend you don't want to. Among living composers Elgar seems to be the only one able to unseal the fount. So far as I am concerned he has done it regularly with 'Gerontius' and the Violoncello Concerto. I dare say, however, that I am not alone in having piped my eye at one point in 'Petrouchka': the later Stravinsky is as dry as the remainder biscuit.)

On (5) one of my correspondents says:

> This seems to me to be a weakness of modern music, despite its excellences in other ways (refinement, workmanship, &c.). To my mind, emotional power is the secret of great music (though, of course, it need not affect everybody to tears), and our next great composer will be the one who shall reveal an emotional content in all the vast technical resources we now have at our command, through the necessary and praiseworthy pioneer efforts of our modern writers (all praise to them, though they may fail to achieve the universal appeal, which after all is the gift of only one or two men during a century).

This is true, I believe. Composers as a whole are too busy exploring new effects; and the very richness of instrumental media is at present a handicap. The elaboration of sonorities and colours tempts the composer into bypaths, and distracts the hearer, interesting though he may find the result. In fact, that epithet, 'interesting,' so often applied to contemporary music, is a sure sign of a fatal defect. Whoever thinks of the finest of Bach, Beethoven, or Wagner in this way? To call the ninth Symphony 'interesting' is only a degree more fatuous than to call it 'pretty.'

I hope this rather lengthy discussion of the emotional appeal of music has not been useless. Some future writer on musico-psychology may be able to glean from it one or two points; and if it helps the average listener to distinguish between the appeal that is superficial, or due to extra-musical causes (including the state of his liver), it will help to develop his critical faculties. In fact, a lecturer could base a valuable 'musical appreciation' lesson on a frank examination of the emotional reactions of his audience.

Finally, I wish to add a few lines on a point only touched upon above—the importance of a performer letting a composer deliver his message.

Listening to pianoforte recitalists, I have often been staggered by the manner in which eminent performers play havoc with the clearly-expressed intentions of the composer. Usually the tempo and rhythm are the departments concerned. In Mr. Frank Howes's book, 'The Borderland of Music and Psychology,' he pillories (rightly) the playing of four organists in the matter of tempo, giving in notation the actual distortions, registered by some scientific means. But organists are old (almost licensed) offenders in this way, and they have at least some excuse in the unrhythmical nature of their instrument, and perhaps even more in the circumstances of much of their work—accompanying a widely-dispersed and unconducted crowd, &c. But there is no excuse for pianistic stars, and it is high time some powerful critic in the daily press took up the matter. I could fill pages with examples, but I give two only. In Brahms's G minor Rhapsody a good deal is made of a couple of themes in triplets. Here is the first:

Ex 3.  &c.

I have heard this played in such a way that a hearer unfamiliar with the passage, could not have identified it. I have attempted to express it in notation, but have been compelled to give it up as a bad job. Is such distortion justifiable? Doesn't it pass beyond elasticity (which we desire) into bad time (which we don't)?

The other example is, in some ways, even worse. Brahms carries on this figure:

Ex. 4.  &c.

for long stretches, mezza-voce, and its significance in the mood of the piece is familiar to all who know the Rhapsody. Clearly Brahms wants a quiet undulation—a kind of throb, and perfect equality seems an essential. This is what one well-known player usually made of it:

Ex. 5.  &c.

Here the 'interpretative freedom' has changed the undulation into something nearer a galloping horse. The gallop may be over turf, or with muffled hooves, but a gallop it is, none the less; and away goes the mood of the piece. If Brahms had wanted the rhythm , wouldn't he have written it? Had this Rhapsody been for orchestra, or a chamber ensemble, both passages would have been played as written, with no cause for complaint on the score of lack of feeling. Why should not the same method serve for pianists? Can nothing be done to show them the difference between free time and bad time? Or must we (and composers) continue to suffer from distortions cloaking themselves under that blessed word Rubato?

NEW LIGHT ON LATE TUDOR COMPOSERS

By W. H. Grattan Flood

XXI.—Robert White

Although some confusion exists between the present distinguished composer and organist and two other Whites of the first decade of the 17th century, yet the memoir of Robert White by Mr. G. E. P. Arkwright, in the second edition of Grove's 'Dictionary of Music,' is the fullest and most accurate that we have, while the recent publication of his works in the splendid Carnegie Trust edition ('Tudor Church Music,' vol. 5), is a feast for students of Tudor music. However, a few facts have escaped previous delvers, and therefore it may be well to include this remarkable Elizabethan composer in the present series.

Robert White (also written Whyte and Whytt) was born about the year 1533, and was almost certainly the son of Robert White, organ-builder, of London, whose brother John was one of the servers of the Chamber in 1537. One of the earliest references to White is in an entry from the Churchwardens' Books of St. Andrew's, Holborn, under date of 1553, recording payment of £5 to 'young Whyte for ye great orgaynis which his father gave to ye church.' Mr. Arkwright adds that this organ was pulled down in 1572 by 'young Whyte without the leave of the parish.' On referring to the original records it is evident, however, that it was not young White, but a certain Langston, a churchwarden of St. Andrew's, who is stated to have 'sold away the great organes (given by Mr. Whyte) to Westminster Abbey for £10 10*s*.' (Musical Times, March, 1905.)

Evidently young White became a chorister at Westminster Abbey, and he must have studied music under Dr. Tye to some advantage, for on December 13, 1560, he graduated Mus. B. at Cambridge. Early in 1561 he was appointed Organist and Master of the Choristers of Ely Cathedral, vice Dr. Tye (who had retired after twenty years' service), and in 1563 he married Tye's daughter, Ellen.

White remained at Ely from 1561 to 1566, and in the latter year went to Chester Cathedral as Organist and Master of the Choristers, being succeeded at Ely by John Farrant. In an annotated copy of Morley's 'Introduction' (1597), belonging to my friend, Dr. A. H. Mann, of King's College, Cambridge, the fact of his being organist at Chester is noted by Thomas Tomkins. From Dr. J. C. Bridge's 'Organists of Chester Cathedral' (1913), it appears that White received four shillings for his services at the Chester Whitsuntide Mystery Plays in 1567 and 1568.

In $15\frac{6}{7}\frac{9}{0}$, White left Chester for Westminster Abbey, where he succeeded John Taylor. His daughter, Margery, who had been baptized at Ely on December 23, 1565, and his wife, Ellen, with an infant daughter, Anne, accompanied him to Westminster, and the family lived with his father Robert. One of the few details regarding the composer's tenure of office as Organist and Master of the Choristers at Westminster is a bond dated December 29, 1572, concerning the sale of the organ of St. Andrew's, Holborn, to the Abbey for ten guineas. His daughters, Margaret and Elizabeth, were baptized at Westminster on June 7, 1570, and February 24, $157\frac{1}{2}$ respectively, and a fifth daughter, Prudence, was baptized on August 23, 1573.

Like his friend, Sebastian Westcote, of St. Paul's, White (who was also a Roman Catholic) supplied music for the plays presented at Court by the Children of Westminster between the years 1570 and 1574. However, the plague of November, 1574, carried off the composer, his wife, and two children. White made his will on November 7, 1574, and died a day or two later, being buried on November 11 at St. Margaret's, Westminster. He bequeathed £3 to his father, Robert White, 'and all such his household stuff and goods which he did bring unto me at or before his coming to me.' He also left four pence to each of his choristers. His widow, who survived him only ten days, made her will on November 21, and left a bequest to her father-in-law, Robert White.

White's works are well-known, and are now accessible to students in 'Tudor Church Music' (vol. 5); also an excellent list of them has been published by Mr. Arkwright. As a Roman Catholic his Masses and most of his Motets are set to Latin words, but he wrote half a dozen English anthems in his official capacity. As early as 1581 a writer, 'G. T.,' in the MS. Part-Books in Christ Church Library, Oxford (984-988), has the following Latin couplet in praise of him at the end of White's 'Lamentations':

> Non ita moesta sonant plangentis verba prophetae
> Quam sonat authoris musica moesta mei, which has been thus translated:

> Sad as the mourning Prophet's words fall on the ear,
> More sad to me the music's tones appear.

Again, in the same MS., at the end of the 'Precamur sancte Domine,' is written:

> Maxima musarum nostrarum gloria White,
> Tu peris, aeternum sed tua musa manet, of which the following is a good translation:

> Thou diest, White, chief splendour of our art,
> But what thy art hath wrought shall nevermore depart.

Ten years later, in 1591, John Baldwin, 'singing man of Windsor,' in his account of the leading musicians of this period, thus writes:

> I will begin with White, Shephard, Tye, and Tallis, > Parsons, Gyles, Mundy th'ould, one of the Queen's palace.

Morley, in his 'Introduction' (1597), includes White as not inferior to the best of the foreign composers, and quotes him, with Orlando di Lasso, as a musical authority. Burney printed his 'Lord, who shall dwell,' for five voices, and Barnard his 'The Lord bless us,' which, adapted to new words ('O Lord, rebuke me not'), was printed by William Husbands towards the close of the 17th century. White's 'Lamentations' for five voices, as well as his set of same for six voices, are, as Mr. H. B. Collins writes, 'among the most remarkable works bequeathed to us by an English composer of the 16th century.' Very beautiful, too, are his settings of the Magnificat, dated 1570, 'Deus misereatur nostri,' in six parts, 'Tota Pulchra,' also for six voices, and a four-part, 'Libera me.'

Dr. Ernest Walker in his 'History or Music in England,' says:

> Whyte's music is definitely of the newer school; the old angularity of phrase is much less frequent than in the earlier work of Tye, and the material is thoroughly mastered. A sort of delicate, grave charm hangs round his compositions, e.g., his 'Peccatum peccavit,' or the anthems 'The Lord bless us' or 'O how glorious art Thou' or 'O praise God in His holiness,' the last of which shows more vigour and movement than his quietly dignified genius ordinarily attained. Though in essential grandeur of phrase his style is not inferior to those of Tye and Tallis at their best, it is as a rule, so to speak, more feminine than theirs; it is easy to see its close connection with Tye's in technique, but, speaking generally, there is less directness and more subtlety. The individuality of utterance is very remarkable; in a very few years English music had travelled miles beyond the older purely impersonal attitude of the mere handmaid of the Church. Tye, Whyte, and Tallis are the three men to whom this advance is primarily due, and Whyte, though far the least known of the three, is fairly to be reckoned—even remembering that Palestrina and Lassus were contemporaries—as among the very greatest European composers of his time.

Music in the Foreign Press

JANACEK

In the August Revue Musicale, Erwin Felber writes on Janacek, praising not only his operas (of which one only, 'Jenufa,' is popular so far), his songs, and his instrumental music, but his theoretical works—a Treatise on Harmony and a book on 'The Structure and Connection of Chords.'

ANIMALS AND MUSIC

In Die Musik (September), R. Hennig refers to new experiments carried out in France on the effects of music upon animals:

> A definite instrumental combination (e.g., pianoforte, flute, and violin) is distinctly pleasant to certain dogs, and as distinctly unpleasant to others. One dog was found to whom Beethoven's music proved repellent, but Handel's attractive. No single dog seemed to like Wagner's music. Horses dislike the sound of bow instruments. A hare was attracted by part-songs sung by male voices. He would appear, and listen spell-bound, but vanish as soon as the singing stopped.

A BELGIAN MUSICAL MONTHLY

Since the disappearance of the Guide Musical, Belgium has had no musical periodical of her own. Let it be hoped that the newly-founded Revue Musicale Belge (whose editor is the composer, Paul Gilson) will find adequate support. The June issue (the only one to have reached us so far) contains articles on the musical competition festivals at Hainaut, on the late Belgian composer, Erasme Raway, and on Nicolas Daneau, the present director of the Mons Conservatoire. Daneau, born in 1866, is the author of many cantatas, a couple of operas, and various instrumental works. He is described as one of the foremost Belgian composers of to-day.

HUGO WOLF'S 'MÖRIKE LIEDER'

In the same issue, J. de Bruycker writes:

> In the 'Mörike Lieder' sadness reigns unallayed. These continuous wails and plaints beget exasperation. They are entirely characteristic of Wolf's disposition, of his incurable sadness and weariness. He seems so crushed by fate that one wonders where he found the strength to put pen on paper in order to express his woe. But when for a while a ray of hope appears, the change is absolute, and his music expresses the imaginary, disproportionate optimism in which those who suffer now and then seek refuge. Wolf is very Wagnerian—too Wagnerian. He seems to have lacked the courage to create his own idiom, and striven to use the language of the superman Wagner to translate the tears of weaklings.

MODERN ITALIAN COMPOSERS

The July issue of Il Pianoforte contains an article by A. Bonnacorsi on Ettore Desderi:

Desderi's works are unpublished; the principal are his incidental music to 'Antigone,' a Violin Sonata, a 'Cello Sonata, a Pianoforte Sonatina, and songs.

The August-September issue contains a long and thoughtful article on Ildebrando Pizzetti's dramatic works, by G. M. Gatti.

WAGNER ON THE BÜLOW DIVORCE

An unpublished note from Wagner's pen, dated September 7, 1869, is communicated by Seb. Röckel in the Zeitschrift für Musik (May).

After explaining that in the middle 'sixties, an increasing outpour of slander had made a separation between Bülow and his wife unavoidable if Bülow's honour was to be protected, Wagner goes on:

What delayed this solution was our common faith in King Louis of Bavaria, under whose protection we hoped to work united towards great artistic achievements. But when this hope proved futile, the ultimate bond was torn which might and would have held the three of us together at the cost of heavy inner sacrifices.

M.-D. Calvocoressi.

Points from Lectures

The vacation lecture period has drawn to a close. Three of the Courses were referred to last month; some others, equally interesting, were necessarily held over for notice now. First, attention may be paid to the Scottish Summer School in Music and Music Teaching, held at Edinburgh. In one of her lectures on 'The Art of Speaking,' Mrs. Tobias Matthay made a general remark on the purpose of education which should always be borne in mind: education was drawing out, not dumping in. It must be remembered that children were so diverse. The teacher would find that attention was better than anxiety, that intelligence was better than cleverness, that vitality was better than energy, and that wisdom was better than information. To speak verse properly, she said, one had got to be æsthetically alive, and to be willing to make imaginative effort. While she had no quarrel with the word 'elocution,' a little voice-production, a little articulation, a little memory training, too often passed for elocution. The possession of a voice was no guarantee of interpretative ability, and expression could be a veritable snare in the path of the unwary. It was the fault of teachers if they allowed themselves to become mere practitioners of elocution instead of interpreters of the poet. A sense of balance could be acquired, and there were four essentials—foundation, preparation, quality, and unity.

Miss Mabel Chamberlain in her talk, at the same Course, on 'Ear-Training for Juniors,' said that, great as was the educational value of the gramophone, she thought that some people expected it was going to do everything in the schools. She did not think that anything could make up for the little patterns which the teachers gave with their voices or at the pianoforte. The gramophone fell short when it came to vocal work, for, while great improvements had been made, there was still a tendency towards nasal tone, the very tone they wanted to avoid.

Mr. Ivor James, 'cello professor at the R.C.M., spoke of the original use of the 'cello for strengthening the bass parts of vocal music, particularly the music of the church. Apparently only men played the 'cello in those days. There was no record of women players until comparatively recent times. It was with the invention of the end pin that the instrument became really available for women to play, and in a quarter of a century the proportion of women to men players had changed so much that from there being double the number of men to women, there was now only a seventh the number of men to women. The system of fingering of Duport, Mr. James thought, was the only one which tended to beautify the 'cello as a solo instrument.

A general survey of school music carried Mr. Herbert Wiseman at the Edinburgh Course into many by-paths. He indicated some advances: the leaving-certificate in music instituted in Scottish schools; the recognition of music as a subject for the University preliminary in England; the number of school courses issued by publishers; the time given by young composers to the problem of school music; the revolutionising of teaching by the gramophone; and the development of the player-piano. But mechanical aids, he added, could never take the place of the teacher. The musical salvation of the country would come through the music class rather than through the individual pupil. The continuation class scheme and the development of choirs in factories and other organizations had a great future. As a general rule, for school songs the aim should be quantity rather than finish, but beauty of performance must also be cultivated. On that side the standard had gone up almost beyond recognition, through the festival movement. The ideal form of concert for children, to be of educational value, was the orchestral concert. As to appreciation, if a child was to grasp some composition, he must first of all read the tune. Without a systematic scheme of sight-reading, school music was never going to improve. To get the joy out of a concert or the gramophone, get the annotations over first. Isolated concerts were not of much use. The difficulty was to get teachers with sufficient love of music to teach it lovingly.

Mr. Calvocoressi gave the Edinburgh vacation students much to think about during his talk on 'The First Approach to Modern Music.' Set habits were the worst enemies of that elasticity which was needed in order to judge modern music. If this music was to survive, it must express something more general and more important than the things which happened to be the things of their age. It must interpret the spirit of all ages. It was important that modern music should be included in the education of all, because sometimes it was a modern and very much discussed work which had proved the turning point in changing people who were indifferent to music into confirmed music-lovers. Children responded to such a course very readily.

A few final points at the Edinburgh Course came in Mr. Willan Swainson's talk on choir-training. Singing he regarded as the most barbarously taught of all musical subjects. Yet nothing was so inspiring as taking a choir in the rough, and converting it into a responsive, soul-stirring instrument. Success did not depend upon profound training. Enthusiasm and sympathy were demanded, and also musicianship, but that grew with opportunity and experience. Lack of sound method and applied commonsense were responsible for the great majority of choir-training failures. Concentrate upon sound and sense, not on physiological jargon. A singer wanted to know how to start a note, sustain it, end it; how to sing loud and soft; how to secure quality and colour; how to extend and equalise the compass; and, withal, how to make music. All these things he could do after a fashion already, just as he could already play football—after a fashion; but with sound guidance he would be able to do them far more efficiently; he would be able to improve his technique, if not actually to perfect it. Simple, direct, and practical teaching would yield results if the teaching had nothing vague or perplexing about it. Mr. Swainson explained further some of the marks of faulty teaching, particularly in articulation. In word-making, he said, 'the price of liberty is eternal vigilance.'

Responsiveness in a choir called for fuller treatment from Mr. Swainson. Directions should be simple and positive. Notes should not be sung casually, but positively. Rests should be timed. Living rhythm resulted from order and proportion of pulse. The mere repetition of 'strong, weak,' was just 'sawing wood.' A voice with one unalterable quality would ruin the blend of a whole choir. Fine control of blend came through control of breath-pressure and resonance. Full tone was desirable, but it should be transparent. The secret of blend and balance was not gradation of power, but of texture. Interpretation was a blend of many properties, and, above all, it was faithfulness. An interpreter had the presentation of a composer's case in his own hands. The least he could do was to be truthful.

Wiltshire Musical Festival planned a new Summer School, intended at first to meet the needs of local conductors and teachers. Throwing it open, however, the promoters were gratified by having about a hundred music-lovers enrolled. The meetings were held morning and evening for a week at King's House, The Close, Salisbury, under the direction of Mr. Herbert Wiseman, of Edinburgh. The subjects included school singing, choral work, preparation for school concerts, musical festivals, sight-reading from tonic sol-fa and staff notation. After the introductory lecture, Mr. Wiseman showed how to start a sing-song, and soon had the students themselves illustrating. A children's choir attended in the evenings, the students taking turn in conducting and getting advice in the art of choir-training. Baton technique and the interpretative value of the left hand formed the subject of another lecture. Graded schemes of work for sight-reading and ear-training were discussed. Musical evenings were valued, and at the first of these Miss Christine McClure sang typical groups of songs in model style and diction. Mr. Cuthbert Osmond joined Mr. Wiseman in two-pianoforte illustrations of Bach, Schumann, and Brahms. Similarly Miss Thomson shared the duet playing, and Mrs. Rockett gave a pianoforte recital.

The Dioceses of Worcester and Coventry, and the Sunday School Associations, joined in holding a Summer School at Malvern. It concluded with a lecture on 'The Place of Music in Sunday School Worship.' Miss Florence M. Hunt pleaded for a raising of the standard. At the beginning of school, children should have quiet, reverent music, devotional and suggestive; it was not the time for a march. There was a certain hymn-lore in which we wanted our children brought up. The teaching of hymns should not be confused with actual singing as an act of worship and praise; the two things should be distinct. A great point of the lecture was the playing of hymn-tunes from different books as illustrations.

Rotary Club luncheons are constantly taking place. Speaking at one of these at Yarmouth, Rotarian W. R. Hunn asked why should not Rotarians start the ball rolling by singing folk-songs and sea shanties. The almost invariable question which parried any suggestion of attending a concert was, 'What is it in aid of?' Should we question the aims of other professions? He thought with regret of the societies for madrigal-singing, orchestral-playing, and chamber-music once flourishing, but now defunct, at Yarmouth.

J. G.

THROUGH THE 'IMMORTAL NINE' ON THE GRAMOPHONE

By D. Batigan Verne

The inner musical circle must not be surprised that at times the busybody layman should harbour a little anxiety as to whether there is any such thing as stability of musical criticism. In the midst of shifting and failing standards, he asks again whether there is no common yard-wand for the measurement of Bax and Schumann; and on being answered an emphatic 'No!' by the cognoscenti in this line, he will promptly disbelieve them, and amuse himself by catching at whatever ledges philosophy or art seems to suggest as new and absolute footholds.

Thus to-day he will charge modern musical criticism with positive indecision regarding Ludwig van Beethoven and the lesser 19th-century luminaries who shone with borrowed light. As a catholic-minded music-lover he will complain that, what with Armageddon's musical consequences on one side and Bach (together with the polyphonists) on the other, it is coming to be assumed that scarcely any composition is of abiding worth unless each stave is in a different key, or unbudging fugue and double-counterpoint for ever rule the roast.

Sir Walford Davies and Mr. Havelock Ellis, to take two names quite at random, have evidently preserved virgin the Beethoven enthusiasm of their youth, and this it is good to hear. But oh, those revelations at meetings where 'serious' music is discussed! Oh that a big London daily only this year should have been the cockpit for hostilities that ought to have died long ago! Perhaps Miss Macaulay is right, and the question for modern musical criticism is something like this: When are organists going to stand up in a serried phalanx for Beethoven, and opera votaries for Rheinberger?

Those of us who pride ourselves on sobriety and understanding and central commonsense were probably nurtured on Grove and his pontificalities. To-day we have had to admit that on occasions Beethoven has let us down badly, and that works by that hand ought to have been quietly despatched after a first hearing. To-day it is mortifying to reflect that cosmopolitans like Wagner and Berlioz might have known better than to discount the possibility of Beethoven's modulations, enharmonic changes, &c., becoming worn out, as their now passé judgments seem to show they did. It is mortifying to witness the discovery by old men and maidens that he who was once rex quondam rexque futurus was an indifferent contrapuntist, and not half so intriguing, for all his shocks and frissons, as a provincial German organist with a steady plod and decent domestic life.

In view of this impasse, can it be that the solemnities of a General Musical Council are needed? Not to end controversy, for that would be dull and quite inconclusive; but in order to co-ordinate divers elements of catholic criticism—of criticism, that is, already established in Beethoven's humanity and everlastingness. Let unblushing modernists reflect once more that here was a specialist in Art who could earn the idolatry of outsiders like Coleridge, Goethe, Victor Hugo, or John Stuart Mill! Was 'Shakespeare incomprehensible till Beethoven came?' A few musical souls need saving if this is anything like true: even if it is not, this personality surely had too big a thrust to go down before the 17th or 20th century.

As regards the Council itself, however, let opinionising within this given circle be as free as air—on the music, that is qua music; in fact, as soon as it could be established that, say, half-a-dozen movements out of the 'Immortal Nine,' together with certain early works like 'Mount of Olives,' were quite perishable goods, the greater the service done to Beethoven's ultimate standing. The more the 'pure word' of the music could be tried in the fire for its absolute value, the more il suo proprio protosto effetto could be left to look after itself, and the less need to attribute to it moods which Beethoven probably did not feel, and legends of times and places which never were. (It is an organist speaking.) It would not be required that every member should embrace the E flat Pianoforte Concerto as an article of faith, though it is hoped that the G major (No. 4) would hold out some merit for him. As an adventure the Council might well ransack again the immense Nottebohm catalogue, and should its labours unearth another Mass in D, it would have earned its money. For the situation has less of mere academic interest than is apparent on the face of it, at least for those who have a care about the future of music and the future of the multitude. If the prophets read the signs of the times aright (at least four Beethoven books have been published within a year or so), and a revival is imminent, hundreds of hungry sheep are beginning to look up to be fed: and grazing off the recognised Beethoven pastures is sometimes enough to upset any digestion. Secondly, there is the argument of 'accumulations' so exquisitely outlined in one of Mr. Aldous Huxley's books of essays. If a grand bonfire of useless literature, why not of useless music? The musical world is not yet threatened by mere paper bulk, but the accumulations of responsibilities grow with every new symphony published and every bad symphony not destroyed. Even in the matter of destruction literature has the pull of music. The bad symphony or 'Rhapsody in Blue' can both be seen and heard. Their bodies are easily killed, but their souls may live for ever.

Suppose the Symphonies to come before the judgment-table, as well they might (for although the nine bottles do not contain the best of the Beethoven vintage, the opus numbers are fairly well distributed and cover what the high-and-drys mean by the 'three periods of his creative activity'), there is going to be a quiet but firm delivery of opinion from a Mr. Britling, gramophonist, but otherwise unknown. How Hazlitt would have relished the notion of this man's ballot! To be sure, it might even be a case of the gramophonist's revenge. Then heigh-ho for the fun! A ruthless machine has raised him from the abyss of musical ignorance and taken him so many wearisome journeys over 'those masterpieces which everyone ought to know,' until he has a mechanical familiarity with all the salient ditches and fences en route. Very well: a ruthless machine shall now enable him to put Education (with a capital E) in its place, and tell it where it has led him astray. Or we may put matters in a rough and ready fashion. If threescore stout Councilmen can hear out two sides of a disc and then five da capos without an uneasy dryness catching at the throat, the chances are that such music is worth putting aside for future hearing. The gramophone's very narrowness of dynamic range will actually help them in their judgment. So the Council machine should not be of the most expensive brand. Thus, for instance, the banging of tonic and dominant at the end of the C minor (as noted by 'Feste' in the April Musical Times), or of the tonic alone, as at the end of the Eighth or even of the 'Eroica,' may be reckoned to have its way with a 'Prom.' audience, but it is a brutal axiom that the needle can be trusted to prick all 'inspirational' bubbles of this sort.

How much Beethoven stands to lose outside the concert-hall in the average man's appreciation, the following little anecdote will show. A friend of mine with a most sensitive ear for tone and pitch but without any banking account of musical experience, made his first acquaintance with the familiar 'Leonora' Overture No. 3 on my gramophone. When the sound-box came to the mounting bridge which leads to the Allegro (ff), he dashed over to the machine, and if I had not prevented him would have pushed the tone-arm out of the groove in which it seemed to have stuck. I tried to explain that we were here on the back of a mighty crescendo, and that this was a rare moment of dramatic and impassioned eloquence. Well, after he had heard the passage face to face some time later, he still maintained that Beethoven could have made this particular point six times instead of sixteen with no loss but even with gain in musical excellence. An impenetrable Philistine, that fellow, and yet. . .

All told, an average musical staying power will see the 'Nine' through with far greater ease on the gramophone than would be the case with an actual orchestra in the foreground. For my own part I found the experiment rather physically refreshing than otherwise, and Milton, I believe, said big music ought rightly to work upon its servitors in this way. But it is also a real test for listener as well as composer. Indeed, there were moments, especially during the slow movements, when time hung all too heavily and the sponge was nearly in the ring. How flabbergasting it is to have one's wakefulness challenged, when Grove so unequivocally indicates the road of right thinking: 'Perhaps the finest instance [of the theme and variation] is in the Adagio of the "Ninth," in which the melody is varied first in common time, then in 12-8, with a grace, beauty, and strength which are quite unparalleled.' Doubtless this protracted movement will continue to hold the attention of its admirers, but it always reminds me of the needless Alexandrine which 'like a wounded snake drags its slow length along,' and my two records of it are thick-moted with dust. (Let the brick-bats fly!) Mr. Britling would fain speak on another much-lauded slow movement. He says he would cheerfully hand over that of the 'Sixth' to some Botanical Gardens in exchange for anything up to the level of the 'Seventh.' Yes, this noble Allegretto comes through splendidly, and, especially for that section containing the fugue, whose excitement dies out all too soon, is eminently repeatable.

Otherwise, let any champion doughty enough to couch his lance for the usual run of Beethoven's orchestral slow movements, compare them with almost any one of Bach's—organ, pianoforte, orchestral—and he will feel the difference in a moment. The Sarabande from the B minor Suite, the Largo from the D minor double-Violin or Pianoforte Concertos, the Adagios from the first or sixth 'Brandenburg' Suites (which Mr. Harvey Grace has so happily adapted for the organ), are a few which Beethoven in the maturity of his wisdom would have jumped for joy to be able to call his own property. They are like a serene river with flowered banks and overhanging willows, and a hundred little creeks to rest in. Every turn of the river opens up fresh pleasures—a perfect peace fills our souls. Admittedly the art of holding the interest in a slow movement is the reverse of easy. But Lekeu has made a significant gesture with the modern orchestra, and Frank Bridge with the organ. Let us have more Adagios of the right sort, I say.

And now a fell swoop: Has the first of the Symphonies any right to live? Detach the fiery little Menuetto as a keepsake if you will, but those who will trouble to consult him will find that the Djinn of the gramophone takes no pleasure in barking out those everlasting C-G's, G-C's, and would be excused. Verb. sap. In his Gresham lectures this year Sir Walford Davies did not seem to lay undue emphasis on a point in this connection which must have struck several of his listeners, or at least those who knew their Shakespeare as well as their Beethoven. I mean, we have 'dejargonised' (the honour goes to Mr. St. John Ervine) 'Hamlet' for public performance precisely in order that the humanity and drama of the play may stand clear of the rich and intricate Elizabethan verbiage investing it. Has anyone ever proposed dejargonising Beethoven Symphonies for the sake of the humanity in them? On the contrary, all offers of this sort have been in the other direction: and we Beethovenites have at times been hard put to account for the master's not infrequent lapses into banal and boring language, for those childish paddlings in the golden syrup of tonic and dominant, for those patchy fugues where, to use Wilde's epigram on Edgar Saltus, 'passion and grammar struggle for mastery in every line.' When it was time to write the 'Ninth,' Beethoven had plainly learnt his lessons, and nowadays we peevish pigmies can only change the needle and give the handle another turn—in mute wonder. Again criticism has nothing to say in face of those ordinary horn triads in the Scherzo of the 'Eroica.' There is nothing in them, yet there is everything. But anyhow let there be an end to this unchanging superstition about all those earlier simplicities of chordal relationships and what not.

It is true that criticism may easily over-reach itself where diatonicism is concerned, and if the B flat Symphony is not Mr. Britling's shaving music, it will in all likelihood be Mr. Lewisham's or Mr. Prohack's. 'Marvellous and matchless' it was to Berlioz, and indeed from the first bouncing Allegro to the cunning bit of augmentation in the Finale, there is small loss of delight in recapturing on the gramophone the first fine careless rapture. Here surely is the way to the heart of the Great Unimpressionable rather than the cuckoo, quail, and nightingale route usually followed. For it's a bit confusing to be told from 2LO that the sixth Symphony is one 'of which the hearer is to be allowed to find out the situation for himself,' and then to read in Beethoven's own words that the work is 'mehr Ausdruck der Empfindung als Malerei.' Somewhere in between, presumably, comes the music (Τὸ ὄν) to which the gramophonist may find time to listen while he is not engaged in making daisy-chains or looking for shelter from the pelting rain. How profound is the suggestion of peace and thankfulness after the storm in the Allegretto, but somehow on the gramophone, at least, the thankfulness is all at the end of the movement (when the cuckoo gives a last brazen yap), and is by no means confined to the bucolic party. When we know better and have our 'Après-midi' record going—even at the loss of much exquisite tracery inevitable with the gramophone—the fearless of us resolve to fare next time to the 'Pastoral' chiefly for the peasants' dance and the storm (which at least are easily understanded of the people) and not for the soporific remainder.

The Eighth apparently was not well received at its first public performance, at Vienna, January, 1814. A few gramophone tests are enough to show that it is a distinct step back on the A major, and that too in spite of its featly tiptoeing Allegretto scherzando and the purple patches of the Finale. I can buy no needles that will infuse much interest into the working-out and conclusion of the first movement or (still less) into the Minuetto. Something must be wrong with my sound-box, I suppose.

D. H. Lawrence once gave the title 'Love and Marriage' to one of his little semi-metaphysical fantasies, and of course a smile hovered on the lips of those who knew what to expect from such a title. But alas! there is no subtle twist about this investigation of old familiar stuff, and I am only too conscious that there ought to be some excuse for such flat-footedness. Yet it remains flatly true that we are none of us without a sneaking fondness for an Avenue de Clichy café, paper and pencil, and a bait in the shape of a cheque offered to us on the understanding that we avoid quarrelling with other people's lists of the 'Twelve Greatest . . . .' It may be admirals or it may be symphonies. A healthy instinct in youth, but a nuisance when you are grown up! As touching music it is hardly too much to say that the gramophonist is the only man who can be rid of this gad-fly early in life. It takes him but an afternoon to decide that the Allegro con brio of the Second Symphony is, for the most part, drivel; whereas a casual concert-goer, by some chance fresh to the work, might imagine himself off colour if he started yawning before the Scherzo, so that it would take a second hearing to confirm his first suspicions, and second hearings become expensive in time. He is probably the only man who is not troubled in spirit about what to like and what not to like in music. He pays no heed to the patres conscripti when they come to weigh up the Beethoven Symphonies merely because some of them have long, grey beards. He is unconcerned that Mr. Holst and his human planets find the No. 7 the most perfectly proportioned, and vote accordingly. He is not misled as to the merits of the Fifth because of Fate's ominous knocking, or of the 'Eroica' because Bellaigue says what he does about it, or because it narrowly escaped destruction when Beethoven tore off the title-page. He may even consider the Finale of the Fifth vulgar, and the first movement of the 'Eroica' admirably suited to the cinema. What he really knows is that the tremendous first movement of the Ninth—Brahmsian, and, at first, forbidding—grows on him every time he plays it; then the Scherzo infects him with a powerful excitement, and, finally, he feels that something of transcendent stature has grown from the mustard-seed air (with bassoon obbligato), even though in the end the gramophone chokes itself, and defective recording brings all earth about one's eyes. If this is his masterpiece, it is not so of necessity because he is an accomplished musical critic, but because he is an accomplished gramophonist. He recognises here the old unfettered Beethoven outlook—yes, and something more—extra durability of stuff secured by a more conscious return to organic modes of workmanship as foreshadowed to some degree in the Finale of the 'Eroica,' as with the last great String Quartets, and as with Brahms and Reger.

Of course, there is no question but that polyphony and orchestration per se stand to lose a good deal in the sound-box; and also it must be remembered that the gramophonist is always at the mercy of special versions by special orchestras. Let him console himself, however, with the thought that no version is likely to be so bad as wholly to obscure the composer's germinal meaning, and no recording so blurred as to leave the listener ignorant of Beethoven's rhythmic and psychological reaches into tracts not fully charted even yet. Let him console himself that in his possession is a key, if not a golden one, wherewith to unlock another door opening on music's treasure-house.

The assembled Councillors will talk and vote, vote and talk. They will draw upon vast experience and resources of musicianship. They will winnow the moderns as well as the classics, but the only tactical error they are in the least likely to make is to forget to send a card of invitation to Mr. Britling.

HOW TO ESTABLISH A LOCAL ORCHESTRA

By S. Midgley

As there is much talk about orchestral music in London, Wales, and elsewhere, it may be opportune to consider how an orchestra was founded, and how it has functioned for over a generation in one of our large Yorkshire cities. It is well to remember that Bradford, the city referred to, is only nine miles from Leeds, and that Leeds, too, has a flourishing orchestra. Naturally, many players are members of both bodies. What Leeds and Bradford have done might be possible for, say, Hampstead and Hammersmith, Streatham and Hackney, and other suburbs of London, in which case at least half-a-dozen local orchestras might flourish within the confines of the London area. Leeds and Bradford have different methods of management, but if the Bradford method, which has a much longer history than that of Leeds, is outlined, it may be of service to districts in various parts of the country which desire to work up a local orchestra.

It is now thirty-four years since two orchestral players—one an amateur, the other a professional—had a casual talk about forming a full orchestra for the purpose of giving orchestral concerts at Bradford. The idea had often engrossed the attention of local music-lovers, and Bradford had already in operation one or more local orchestral societies. This talk led to big results: the two friends called a hurried meeting of local music-lovers, and within twenty-four hours it was decided to give a series of concerts the following winter, 1892-93. A strong committee was elected and immediately got to work. From that day the Society has gone on its way, not without many ups and downs, yet upon the whole successfully, and it is now apparently well established as one of the regular features of Bradford life. At its start the committee secured an imposing list of vice-presidents; yet, notwithstanding the efforts of committee, vice-presidents, and officials, the first season closed with a loss of £50—although the players received no pay. The orchestra was called into consultation, and it was decided to continue on the same lines for another season. Fortunately the second season was much more successful: the debt was cleared off, the players received half salaries, and £15 was carried forward. For ten seasons the concerts were continued with varying success and failure, but the committee, in its ambition, had been too venturesome, and in 1902 a collapse came, and there was a debt (caused largely through the big fees paid to expensive artists) of over £500. The committee then made a call on the guarantors, and so cleared the Society from all financial troubles. But the committee had had enough of it, and decided to give up the concerts. Some of the orchestral members objected to this procedure, and decided to continue on more modest lines, preferring to play once more without salary rather than that the concerts should come to an end. It must be remembered that the project originated with the orchestra, and that the committee consequently did not have the last word. The eleventh season was another failure so far as the players were concerned, and the twelfth was no better. Fortunately at this critical juncture it occurred to one of the new members of the committee to ask what the vice-presidents did for the orchestra. The answer, 'They are subscribers,' did not satisfy the inquirer, who wanted to know why, if that were the qualification, all subscribers were not made vice-presidents. This query, after many discussions, led to the passing of a resolution to the effect that a vice-president should take tickets to at least the value of £5 for the season's concerts. It was with great difficulty that the committee could be persuaded to agree to this drastic proposal, but it was carried, and two new members—one a professional, the other a Bradford merchant—determined to make it a paying proposition. Together they trudged the streets of the centre of the city and visited innumerable offices in their quest for new vice-presidents, and splendid was their reward. When the thirteenth season opened there was a list of forty vice-presidents, representing a sum of £200, practically all new money. Last season, the thirty-fourth, there were nearly sixty 'five-pounders,' so that for the twenty-one seasons since this £5 rule was instituted the total amount subscribed by vice-presidents must have been at least £5,000, every penny of which amount has gone into the pockets of the members of the orchestra. These concerts, be it noted, have always been given on Saturday evenings—an evening when ordinary orchestral engagements are few and far between. While on the subject it may be mentioned that following the success of the Vice-Presidents' Resolution, the same inquiring member noted that the big west gallery of St. George's Hall, in which the concerts were given, was very sparsely occupied. Instead of having the eight hundred seats filled with eager listeners, barely a tenth of that number were to be seen; he therefore proposed that the price of season tickets for the west gallery should be reduced from 5*s.* to 2*s.* 6*d.*, pointing out to opponents that a hundred half-crowns were better than fifty crowns, since each subscriber was an advertiser of the concerts. Strange as it may seem, this reduction was carried only after much discussion, but the result was beyond all expectation. Before the first concert every one of the eight hundred seats was subscribed for, with the further indirect result that the players were inspired by the size and enthusiasm of the audience, and played better than in any previous season.

With the outbreak of war many difficulties arose, and for a time the orchestra played at greatly reduced fees. A resolution which had been carried some years before helped materially, and may be referred to at this point. After paying the players half their usual fees, there was a balance of over £150 left on one season's concerts. From many standpoints this amount might have been divided pro rata among the members of the orchestra, but it was suggested that the executive should retain each season at least £100 for eventualities, and divide what remained among the orchestral players pro rata. This was agreed to, and the arrangement proved of inestimable service, not only during the war, but afterwards, when a crisis came. The management of such an undertaking must never be slack, never discouraged; it must be prepared for any emergency, always looking to the future, and every ready to profit by past mistakes. There is one thing above all others that should be avoided as if it were the plague, and that is sensationalism. Sensational artists, sensational advertisements, sensational programmes; whatever smacks of sensationalism is of the Evil One, so far as music is concerned.

Of course, there are numberless difficulties to be faced and overcome, but without such, life would not be worth living. The first thing to be considered is the orchestra itself, and through its whole history the Bradford Permanent Orchestra has behaved nobly. It has faced every emergency, some apparently hopeless, and yet come up victorious and smiling. It has never been exclusive, never avaricious, never disdained the help of really competent amateurs in its ranks; it has enlisted in its management and councils men and women of all classes. The only quality required is that all shall give of their best: the one thing it has not tolerated has been self-seeking. Among its members of committee have been many men who were not specially musical, business men who looked upon the Society as one of the necessary amenities of the city, and such men have done yeoman service in various ways—in securing vice-presidents and other subscribers, helping in certain social efforts which promote friendly feeling, and giving wise counsel regarding the business aspect of management. It goes without saying that the big districts in London are different in many respects from provincial cities, yet the possibilities are the same. There are real music-lovers in all districts, and also men of light and leading ready to help any good cause; and, as like attracts like, if two or three enthusiasts can be got to take their coats off anything can be done—enthusiasm and tact will always work wonders.

It must never be forgotten that the majority of well-to-do men and women will always respond to a wise, sensible appeal, and music lags behind none of the arts and sciences in its power to awaken the sympathies of right-minded people. Even men like Lord Birkenhead, who do not know one tune from another, are willing to help forward schemes intended for the public good, so long as one does not demand their personal attendance. If, like Lord Birkenhead, they would rather pay £50 than sit through a classical concert, they may, for that sum, be absolved from attendance, and the tickets subscribed for distributed between church and chapel choirs, or given to members of social, religious, or political organizations, many of whom, no doubt, will gladly deputise for the non-musical donor. Some of our vice-presidents of ten or even twenty years' standing have never been to a single concert, but so long as they see that good use is made of their tickets, they are doing service to the orchestra, to music itself, and to the community.

One of the incidental benefits of a local orchestra is the opportunity it affords of initiating children into the mysteries and delights of orchestral music, which should result in a large development of orchestral concerts in future years. With all these fine possibilities in view there ought to be a wonderful opportunity for orchestras in the greatest city in the world, and in all populous centres.

WILLIAM GARDINER, OF LEICESTER

By Orlando A. Mansfield

From amongst a number of English cities, possibly better known for the activities of their present than for the antiquities of their past, the ancient borough of Leicester stands out with remarkable prominence. Indeed, owing to the great measure of notoriety which Leicester has acquired both materially and musically during the last century, there is a serious danger of the 'glories' of its former 'blood and state' coming to be regarded as 'shadows' rather than as 'substantial things.' Hence it is just possible that many of the rising generation are in danger of forgetting the name of that illustrious Leicester citizen, some small portion of whose life and works forms the subject of this article, thus allowing—as Dr. Samuel Johnson would have expressed it—the blaze of his reputation, which cannot be blown out, to die in its socket!

About a century after the invention of the stocking frame and the establishment of hosiery manufactures in the city of Leicester—on March 15, 1770, to be exact—there was born to a hosier of that place, Gardiner by name, a son, William. Inheriting all his father's business abilities, young Gardiner first served in, and afterwards succeeded to and successfully continued, the stocking manufacture. But, as Sir Henry Hadow remarks: 'The taste for music never forsook him!' 'Music,' says Mrs. T. Fielding Johnson, in her 'Glimpses of Ancient Leicester,' 'was his passion; and this he promoted to his utmost during a long life which lasted to the middle of the 19th century.' In his youthful days he published several vocal numbers under the pen name of W. G. Leicester. Later on he made the acquaintance of all the principal artists of British birth or residence; and, as the increase of his business demanded occasional visits to the Continent, he became familiar with the leading Continental musicians and their works, so that, quoting Sir Henry once more, 'for a long period he knew more about their productions, especially those of Beethoven, than the majority of English professors.'

In fact, there are good grounds for believing that Gardiner was the first to cause the music of Beethoven to be heard in this country. Through the kindness of a friend, Mr. T. Henry Spiers, the well-known and highly-esteemed Leicester musician, the present writer has been able to collect some interesting information on this point—information derived from Mrs. Fielding Johnson's book, already mentioned, as well as from other sources. From these it appears that amongst Gardiner's acquaintances was the Hon. Mrs. Bowater, daughter of Lord Faversham, a Roman Catholic lady of means, who resided at Little Dalby Hall, Leicestershire. This lady had lived at Bonn, but on the French invasion of the Low Countries returned to England, being accompanied as far as Hamburg by the Abbé Dobler, a chaplain to the Elector of Cologne. While there Dobler was declared an emigrant, and Mrs. Bowater offered him a retreat in England, a proposal which was gratefully accepted. The Abbé was a fine violinist, and sometimes played in or conducted the Elector's orchestra, of which Beethoven was in his youthful days a member. Thus it came to pass that Dobler acquired a copy of the young musician's earliest important composition, the String Trio now known as Op. 9, No. 1, in E flat, which MS. the Abbé packed in his trunk with other music, and so brought it to England. At Little Dalby Hall he met Gardiner, to whom he showed the Trio score. This the Leicester amateur at once caused to be copied, invited three friends to interpret it, and it was played with unrestrained delight to a select audience in Gardiner's native city, in 1794, some years before Beethoven's works were introduced into London or heard in English musical circles.

A further connection with Beethoven occurred in 1821, when Gardiner wrote offering him a hundred guineas for an Overture to his (Gardiner's) Oratorio, 'Judith,' a compilation of English words set to music adapted and selected from the compositions of Haydn, Mozart, and Beethoven. To this letter the great master never replied, Gardiner giving out as the reason the statement that it had never been delivered—a very probable solution of one of the minor mysteries of musical history. But a much more important association of the names of Gardiner and Beethoven came about in 1848, twenty years after the composer's death, when Gardiner went to Bonn in order to be present at the unveiling of the Beethoven statue. According to Mrs. Fielding Johnson, a parchment to be signed by some of the many notable musicians, monarchs, and dignitaries present, and to be deposited beneath the statue after the unveiling, had already received the signatures of Queen Victoria and Prince Albert, when a University professor announced that the Englishman who had been the first to perform Beethoven's works in Great Britain was present, and made the suggestion that Gardiner be requested to sign the document also. 'Accordingly,' says Mrs. Johnson, 'Gardiner was called to the platform, and directed to write his name under those of Victoria and Albert, an order which he obeyed with alacrity, and recorded the event as 'the greatest and most unexpected honour' of his life.

With Haydn, Gardiner's relations were equally pleasant, and much more familiar. Indeed, he actually presented the 'father' of the symphony and the string quartet with a set of silk stockings into which, as a kind of pattern, were woven some of Haydn's most popular melodies. Concerning this incident Mr. J. T. Lightwood, the well-known author of 'Hymn Tunes and their Story,' remarks, 'Fancy going about the streets with a couple of your own tunes creeping round your legs!'—especially, he might have added, in days in which gentlemen's hosiery was much more in evidence than in these more gallant or, perhaps, more 'giddy-pacèd' times in which such displays are left, for the most part, to the ladies.

Gardiner lived to be eighty-four years of age, the date of his passing being November 16, 1853. He had accumulated a very large number of valuable books, all of which were sold by auction some forty years after his death. One of Mr. Lightwood's correspondents, who knew Gardiner personally, described him as 'a funny little figure,' possessing a 'funny way of going—half-shambling and half-trotting—and seeming in a crab-like fashion to be always following his nose'—that member being finished out of the straight. But in his love for music, 'he was a prophet calling out of the darkness of the 'forties,' and there must be living some amateur musicians who owe their first acquaintance with the works of the great masters to 'Billy Gardiner'—as he was known amongst his more intimate fellow-citizens and associates.

Modulating, as musicians would say—or would have said, before these atonic times—from biography to bibliography, we note that Gardiner, who was born in the same year as Beethoven, produced his first really important work in the year 1812. It was entitled 'Sacred Melodies from Haydn, Mozart, and Beethoven, adapted to the best English poets and appropriated to the use of the British Church.' Of this work six volumes appeared at various intervals; and although considerable violence was done to the music in order to fit it to the chosen words, and the collection never realised the hope of its compiler that it would supersede the inelegant paraphrases of Sternhold and Hopkins and the more artificial rhymes of Tate and Brady, there is no doubt that the series introduced, to a larger number of amateurs and Church musicians generally, many interesting melodies and extracts concerning the existence of which almost total ignorance might have obtained. Further, as Mr. Lightwood states, this collection 'proved a happy hunting-ground for tune book editors for more than half a century.' It also formed the basis of the Handel and Haydn Society's Collection of Church Music, published at Boston, Mass., in 1822, selling well, as Thayer relates, and enabling the Society 'to tide over the period of its youth,' while 'initiating a purer and healthier taste for music in New England.' Although the majority of the melodies in Gardiner's collection have been traced to their source, the origin of some of them has never been discovered. This makes it a matter for considerable regret that Gardiner never published the 'essay' which he stated was to have contained a list of the sources whence the various tunes had been derived. The third volume of Sacred Melodies contained cathedral anthems by such post-Restoration composers as Croft, Greene, Boyce, &c.

Other publications of Gardiner's comprise 'Music and Friends; or Pleasant Recollections of a Dilettante,' two volumes of which were issued in 1838, and another in 1853. In these our hero gives us many interesting records and reminiscences, 'much impaired,' says Sir Henry Hadow, by 'frequent inaccuracy.' In 1840 appeared an adaptation, to music by Haydn, Mozart, and Beethoven, of Pope's 'Universal Prayer'; and in 1847 a book entitled 'Sights in Italy, with some Account of the present State of Music and the Sister Arts in that Country.' These works, in addition to a few pieces of Church music, the Oratorio 'Judith' (already mentioned), and the remarkable volume next to be discussed, practically complete the list of Gardiner's literary and musical publications.

All the foregoing, important and interesting as they may be, are more or less dwarfed when brought into comparison with Gardiner's magnum opus, 'The Music of Nature,' which he produced in 1832, when he had passed the sixtieth year of his age. In England copies of this work are procurable only at second-hand; and an abbreviated American edition, issued some half a century or more ago, has long been out of print. It is likely, however, that this work will be remembered when all Gardiner's other productions, musical and literary, are entirely forgotten and unobtainable. And this because 'The Music of Nature' was the first systematic attempt on the part of an Englishman to represent in approximate, if not in actual musical notation, the sounds produced by the speech and emotions of mankind, and the various calls, cries, and canticles of birds and beasts, a task primarily but much more partially performed or attempted by Athanasius Kircher (1601-80), the Jesuit author of 'Musurgia Universalis' (1650). Here is the full title of Gardiner's work, set down with all the circumlocution characteristic of its age:

> The | Music of Nature | or, An Attempt to prove that what is passionate and | pleasing in the art of singing, speaking, and | performing upon musical instruments, | is derived from the sounds | of The Animated World. | With curious and interesting illustrations, | by | William Gardiner.

Perhaps the most striking thing about this title is that it excites anticipations of a definite musical discovery, the demonstration of which is almost entirely wanting throughout the work. In fact, beyond the occasional assertion that certain selected progressions or combinations to be found in some particular classical composition are directly inspired by, or are the exact reproduction of, 'the music of Nature,' there is practically no 'attempt to prove' that all 'passionate and pleasing' musical passages are 'derived from the sounds of the animated world.' So I venture to think that it will be as a careful and intelligent transcriber of 'curious and interesting illustrations' of the sounds of the animal kingdom that Gardiner will be remembered rather than as an exponent of the statement in his Preface to the effect that 'music had its origin' in the 'simple and immutable expressions' of the 'voice of Nature'—a theory, by the way, as old as Lucretius, and one which has been repeated by philosophers and non-technical writers more or less frequently ever since.

Then, again, although in his Preface Gardiner claims to have 'taken a philosophical view of the science' (of music), and to have 'endeavoured to explain the true principles of musical taste and expression,' these claims cannot be substantiated. Yet, on the other hand, his recorded examples of 'the cries of animals and the song of birds' are, to quote again from his own words, nothing less than 'a faithful transcript of the voice of Nature,' of which, as he says, 'had his pursuits led him more into rural life, a more ample collection might have been made.' From these numerous and invaluable examples I regret that quotation is impossible for want of space.

Equally correct is the author's statement that in venturing 'to tread upon other matters in which sound is concerned,' many of these are 'for the first time considered'; and were, therefore, at the time of writing, liable to be 'called in question' and to 'excite much controversy.' Another statement—to the effect that, while his book 'does not elucidate every point' upon which it touches, it will at the same time 'suggest to the reader many facts, curious, entertaining, and instructive'—is, I consider, a very modest claim for a man who wrote on the voice, speaking, oratory, and kindred topics, nearly half a century before such works as A. J. Ellis's 'English Pronunciation and Speech in Song' had seen the light, and who had discussed all the classical orchestral instruments a whole decade before the publication of Berlioz's 'Treatise on Instrumentation.' Although as a logician, classifier, and arranger Gardiner may have had only a partial success, as a devoted lover of music of the highest class, as a faithful, skilful, and enthusiastic transcriber into musical notation of 'the sounds of the animated world,' he has proved himself equal to almost any of his professional contemporaries, and superior to all his amateur associates in the breadth of his knowledge, the depth of his reading, the length and value of his researches, and the height of his enthusiasm. Indeed, considering the inauspicious times and the unfavourable conditions under which his researches were conducted and recorded, one cannot but regard the great Leicestershire amateur as little less than a genius, because of his infinite capacity for taking pains in the particular province which his work claims to describe. His distractions and difficulties were far greater than those of any business man to-day, as every one should know who has read and endeavoured to realise something of the conditions of Europe during the decades immediately following the Napoleonic wars. In fact, the whole life of William Gardiner was a realisation of the saying of his distinguished contemporary, Sydney Smith, viz., that every man should be occupied, and 'occupied in the highest employment of which his nature is capable, and die with the consciousness that he has done his best.'

THE ENGLISH ABROAD

By Jeffrey Pulver

It can do us nothing but good to stand still now and then in these forward-looking days and reflect that there have been times when England had much to teach in music. It is a splendid antidote to depression to remember that this country has produced men of whom foreign writers spoke in enthusiastic terms; men to whom pupils came from across the seas; men whose work has caused foreign historians to point out what is a national disgrace—the neglect of so much of our older music that is worthy of revival. In this connection the state of affairs is not nearly in so hopeless a condition as was the case a few years ago. Publishers certainly are issuing the music of our Tudor and Stuart composers—often without great hopes of amassing wealth from the venture. But there is room for a good deal more of our ancient ecclesiastical music, and, above all, there is a great void which calls earnestly to be filled with examples of our old instrumental music. Dr. E. H. Fellowes deserves well of his countrymen for what he has done in the domain of the unaccompanied part-song ; would there were many like him.

The indifference with which the pre-Purcellian music of England has been regarded, was in the nature of things most probably due to the circumstance that the English were long ignorant of the fact that the music of Europe owed the great debt it does to England. The chances are that our countrymen—modest in this respect even to a crime—would have thought a good deal more of William Blitheman and of his distinguished pupil John Bull had it been more generally known how deeply indebted were the German writers for the keyboard instruments—culminating with Johann Sebastian Bach—to the pioneer work of the English virginalists. But Nagel and Ambros and Riemann knew it, and Van den Borren wrote about it.

Perhaps it would improve our morale if we were to consider a few native musicians who went abroad at various periods and left their impression upon the art of the Continent. A dozen outstanding cases will suffice for our object-lesson. The story opens early in the 13th century with the theoretician John Garland (Johannes de Garlandia). He was born in England late in the 12th century, for he was studying at Paris before 1202, when his teacher, Alain de Lille (L'Isle), died. But before he went to Paris he had worked under John of London at Oxford. He was a cultured young man, learned in grammar, alchemy, and theology, and there should be no reason for doubting that his early English training influenced him at least as much as did his later study in France. He played an important part in the academic life of the latter country, and was among those responsible for the founding of the University of Toulouse. The date of his death is unknown, but it was in the second half of the century, for he composed a work in 1252. His musical theory was very advanced for his period, inasmuch as he objects to consecutive fifths and permits thirds and sixths ('Optima Introductio in Contrapunctum pro rudibus'; MSS. at Pisa and Einsiedeln, printed by Coussemaker in Scriptorum, iii. 12). Other treatises which should be attributed to Garland are 'De Musica Mensurabili Positio' (MS. in the Vatican Library, printed by Coussemaker, Script. i.), 'Tractatus de Cantu Plano, Introductio Musicae Planae et etiam Musicae Mensurabilis' (Coussemaker, i. 157), besides a couple of short tracts on acoustics printed by Gerbert. This Englishman, then, was no inconsiderable personage in these early days of European music.

Our second worthy bears a still more famous name, and John Dunstable was the first English musician to leave specimens of his musical work that are worthy of consideration in this connection. He was undoubtedly the greatest English musician of his era, and there certainly is no doubt that he served as a model to several of the great composers of France and the Low Countries. It would be absurd again to make the claim that Dunstable was the 'inventor' of composition ; but we may surely be allowed to look upon this Englishman as the first to carry the development of the art and science of composition to a point at which it became tolerable even to modern ears, and to transplant it on the Continent. He was far-seeing enough to break away from some of the restrictions of his age, and not a few of his devices are still employed. He was one of the earliest of writers to be guided more by the ear than by the eye, and his music, by its greater freedom, paved the way to real progress. The remarkable feature of his influence, however, is that he exercised it more on foreign musicians than on his own countrymen, with the result that while during his lifetime the Continental composers were learning from the Englishman, the English were again being taught by the foreigners scarcely a generation later. According to Martin le Franc's poem, 'Le Champion des Dames,' the French composers were following Dunstable before 1440, while the far more celebrated Joannes de Tinctoris said :

> Quo fit ut hac tempestate facultas nostrae musices tam mirabile susceperit incrementum quod ars nova esse videatur, cuius, ut ita dicam, novae artis fons et origo, apud Anglicos quorum caput Dunstaple exstitit, fuisse perhibetur, et huic contemporanei fuerunt in Gallia Dufay et Binchois quibus immediate successerunt moderni Okeghem, Busnois, Regis et Caron, omnium quos audiverim in compositione praestantissimi.

('Proportionale,' printed by Coussemaker, iv. 154.)

The internal evidence provided by the work of Dufay, to name only one of these musicians, is sufficiently strong to prove the powerful influence exerted by the Englishman upon his foreign contemporaries. Dunstable probably spent the last years of his life in his native country, and according to Stowe ('Survey') an epitaph to his memory was engraved upon two 'plated stones' in the chancel of St. Stephen's Walbrook, where the composer was interred. The date in the epitaph places his death on December 24, 1453 (v. also another epitaph by Whetehamstede in Weever's 'Funeral Monuments,' 1631, from a Cotton MS.). Specimens of his work may be seen in the choir-books of Trent Cathedral (now belonging to the Ministry of Education at Vienna), in the library 'Estense' (Codex vi., H. 15, containing thirty-one of his compositions, and scored by Mr. W. Barclay Squire, Add. MS. 36,490 in the British Museum), and in the Liceo Musicale of Bologna (Codex 37 ; four compositions by Dunstable, given by H. E. Wooldridge in his 'Early English Harmony,' 1897). Examples of his music can also be seen in the Liceo Communale and the University Library at Bologna, and the Old Hall MS. (college of St. Edmund's, near Ware). The British Museum possesses work of his in the MSS. Lans, 462, Add. 31,922, and Add. 10,336. A thematic catalogue of Dunstable's known works was printed in the 'Sammelbände' of the Internationale Musikgesellschaft (ii. 1).

Another famous theoretician to take English manners and customs in music across the seas was John Hothby (or Ottobi, Otteby, Octobi). Before the middle of the 15th century he was resident at Florence, and later went to France, Spain, and Germany. But the most important period of his life was passed at Lucca (from 1467 onwards), and at the monastery of St. Martin there he taught music besides mathematics and grammar, the three subjects generally going together in the Middle Ages. He returned to England in 1486, and died towards the end of the following year. The news of his death reached Lucca on November 16, 1487, to the great regret of his former colleagues and pupils. His works include 'Calliopea Legale' (Florence, Bibl. Nat. ; Venice, St. Mark's Library ; cf. also British Museum, Add. MS. 36,986), a treatise written in Italian and printed by Coussemaker in his 'Histoire de l'harmonie au Moyen-age' (1852). Another tract, 'Proportiones secundum Joannem Otteby, Magistrum in Musica,' beginning 'Quid est Proportio,' is to be seen in the British Museum in Add. MS. 10,336, and another copy of it is at Lambeth Palace. Coussemaker also printed his 'Regulae super Proportionem' (iii. 328), 'Regulae super Contrapunctum,' and 'De Cantu Figurato' (iii. 330). Several other theoretical works by Hothby are to be examined in Italian and English collections of manuscripts (v. also 'Caecilia' for 1874, No. 5—three short tracts).

Forest, a contemporary of Dunstable's, most probably also influenced the Continental writers; for, judging by the fact that most of his work is contained in foreign manuscripts, the major portion of his active career was passed abroad. He is represented in the Trent and Modena collections, and a couple of his compositions are in the Old Hall MS. (v. also Add. MS. 36,490 in the British Museum).

We now have to consider a few practical musicians. John Heywood, an excellent virginalist, left England for religious reasons on the accession of Queen Elizabeth. Before leaving England for Mechlin he had earned a reputation as a performer on his instrument and as a writer of interludes for the Court of Henry VIII. Egerton MS. 2,604 and Arundel 97, in the British Museum, mention him; the former as a virginal player to Henry VIII., and the latter as the recipient of the salary of fifty shillings per quarter. Stowe MS. 571 (fol. 27*b*) gives him as a 'plaier on the Virginalles' to Mary Tudor in 1552. A song of his with lute accompaniment, 'What heart can think or tongue express,' is contained in Add. MS. 4,900 (British Museum).

Far more interesting and important musically was Richard Deering. This famous organist and composer of sacred music was the illegitimate son of Henry Deering, of Liss, near Petworth, and the Lady Elizabeth Grey (v. Hasted, 'Kentish Pedigrees'). The manuscript says:

> Henry Deering died single, but had issue by Elizabeth, sister of Henry Earl of Kent; Richard Deering, organist to Queen Mary, he dyed 1630.

He probably studied in Italy in time to supplicate for the degree of Bachelor of Music in 1610. He received many invitations from foreign establishments, but his faith most likely decided for him the question of domicile. He was but one of many Romanist musicians who took their art abroad in that and the preceding generation. In 1617 we discover him at Brussels, for on the title-page of a book he published in that year his work is described as being by 'Venerabilium Monalium Anglicarum Bruxellæ, in Monasterio B.V.M. degentium Organista.' There can exist no doubt that his methods influenced the Netherlandish organists and composers to a very great extent. Most, if not all, of his works were published from the press of Phalèse: 'Cantiones Sacrae quinque vocum cum Basso Continuo ad Organum' (1617), 'Cantica Sacra ad Melodiam Madrigalium elaborata senis vocibus cum B.c.' (1618), 'Cantiones Sacrae quinque vocum cum B.c.' (1619), 'Canzonette a Quattro voci, con il Basso Continuo,' and 'Di Richardo Diringo Inglese, Canzonette a Tre Voci con il Basso Continuo, In Anversa appresso Petro Phalesio al Re Dauid' (both in 1620). Later reprints followed in England, and a large number of his compositions can be seen in the libraries at the British Museum, the Royal College of Music, Christ Church (Oxford), the Music School (Bodleian, Id.), and Peterhouse (Cambridge). When Charles I. married Henrietta Maria, sympathy with Roman Catholicism grew in England, and Richard Deering returned home in 1625. He became organist in the chapel of the Queen, and one of the 'musicians for the lute and voices' to the King. His will was proved in 1630 (Ref. 34, Scroope, Somerset House).

(To be continued.)

Occasional Notes

We had intended to leave the jazz controversy alone for awhile, but we must return to it briefly, in order to express satisfaction at Mr. Ernest Newman's entry into the fray, with a raking fire of ridicule and logic that leaves the Hyltons and Whitemans without a leg to stand on. Mr. Newman, of course, has no difficulty in showing the absurdity of the claims that the so-called 'symphonised syncopation' has anything novel or free in rhythm. When the jazzites make such claims, says Mr. Newman:

> . . . they merely show their ignorance of music and the history of music. If they had any idea what rhythm meant, they would know that in comparison with the rhythms of any of the great composers, from the 16th century onwards, their own rhythms are merely as the sing-song of a nursery rhyme to the changing subtleties of a page of Shakespeare. Your typical jazz composer or jazz enthusiast is merely a musical illiterate who is absurdly pleased with little things because he does not know how little they are.

On the practice of stealing and spoiling themes from the classics, Mr. Paul Whiteman puts up much the same defence as that of Mr. Jack Hylton, recently discussed in this journal. Mr. Whiteman adds a new one, however—that the classics themselves have taken each other's themes, and founded on them new works of their own. To this Mr. Newman replies:

> When Brahms writes variations on a theme by Handel, or Schumann introduces the theme of the 'Marseillaise' into 'The Two Grenadiers,' or Wagner quotes Rossini in the 'Meistersinger,' that is a sort of conversation between gentlemen and equals. The jazz perversions of the great works are merely the unwelcome intrusion of cocky small-town boors and vulgarians into the company of their superiors.

As to Mr. Whiteman's absurd contention that the maltreatment of classical themes is a means of spreading a knowledge of good music (a claim also made by Mr. Hylton in his article in last month's Musical Times), Mr. Newman shows its feebleness by applying it to other arts. Would vulgar perversions of famous pictures send people to the originals?

> What should we say of the man who would undertake to make Shakespeare acceptable to the masses by re-writing him in the language of the New York East-sider, 'To be or not to be, that is the question,' let us say, becoming 'Yer for it or yer ain't—j'get me, kid?'

Apropos of Mr. Whiteman's remark that Sullivan's tune to 'Onward, Christian soldiers' could be easily 'jazzed,' but won't be, because 'it is a sturdy, majestic tune, with a religious connection,' we should like him to explain how it happened that the 'Hallelujah Chorus' has been drawn on by the composer of 'Yes, we have no bananas,' as was proudly announced recently by Mr. Hylton. If immunity is granted to sturdy, majestic tunes with religious associations, we should have thought the 'Hallelujah Chorus' was at least as safe as 'St. Gertrude.'

When is this country to have its first view and hearing of the Vitaphone? This remarkable instrument made its début at New York a few weeks ago, and appears to have brought the day of perfect synchronisation of picture and music very near. It showed various soloists—Mischa Elman, Marion Talley, Bauer, Zimbalist, Martinelli—a full orchestra, a speaker, an actor, &c., and the illusion in some instances seems to have been so complete as to rouse to enthusiasm a critical and distinguished audience that included Sir Henry and Lady Wood, Heifetz, Zimbalist, Bauer, Anna Case, and many other musical lights. The New York Philharmonic Orchestra was shown playing the 'Tannhäuser' Overture, conducted by Henry Hadley:

> This was something decidedly impressive [says the Musical Courier], the reproduction of the music being far the best yet produced, the only possible criticism being that the bass end of the tonal spectrum does not quite achieve its proper value in quantity. The reproduction of tone-colours, however, is perfect. With closed eyes, one could easily believe that the actual orchestra was playing, and the co-ordination of the picture of the playing orchestra and the music is startlingly impressive.

As our contemporary says, this opens up great possibilities. Imagine the revelation such a picture-performance would be to the folk living in remote centres who had never seen or heard a full orchestra. Pictures were also shown of various sections of the orchestra at work. Here again it is easy to see possibilities in the educational line. 'Close-up' slow-motion pictures of various solo instrumental performances will now be possible, with the actual sounds produced. They should be at least of great interest. The only solo performances we do not want to see reproduced in this way are those of singers. The normal spectacle is sufficiently unattractive at times: magnified and prolonged by the Vitaphone it would be a harrowing experience. A tight-throated tenor in the last stages of the 'Prize Song,' for example . . .

In one respect the Vitaphone seems likely to make history very quickly. The problems of cinema music have been debated for some years past, but a whole batch seems to be solved at once by this instrument. At the New York demonstration, a good part of the time was devoted to a film for which the musical accompaniment had been played by the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, under Hadley. Says the Musical Courier:

> It was music by an orchestra much larger and better than the average 'movie' house can support. There is no break-up after the first ten minutes of the picture, to see all the rest accompanied by an organ, which, even in the hands of an expert player, is an unsatisfactory substitute; and there are no orchestral players and conductors to disturb the line of vision by their movements and their going and coming.

As the synchronisation of picture and music was far better than is possible by the customary means, the Vitaphone discloses a bleak prospect for cinema musicians. Before long, every picture-producing company will employ its own orchestra; the musical accompaniment to a picture will be arranged on the spot, and the show will be sent out complete. The spread of good music will be helped enormously if the companies are alive to their opportunity and responsibility. But what of the army of orchestral players that will be superseded? And the organ building industry will also be hard hit. It looks very much as if the controversy that is now taking place in this journal on the subject of cinema organ-playing will be settled in a way the disputants little expected.

Did Washington Irving compose a song entitled 'A Rill from the Town Pump'? We have received an inquiry from—of all people!—a well-known firm of brewers. As we were unable to give a reply, we pass the question on to our readers.

A long and honourable chapter in West of England choralism is closed by Mr. George Riseley's resignation from the conductorship of the Bristol Choral Society. Mr. Riseley has held the appointment for nearly forty years, and his retirement is due to ill-health. The Society, in a statement issued a few weeks ago, says:

> It is impossible to give any adequate expression of our gratitude and appreciation of the wonderful services Mr. Riseley has rendered to this Society during the thirty-eight years of its existence. Faced with this serious position at a comparatively late hour, the committee, after careful consideration, decided to cancel all the arrangements in connection with the programme already announced for the coming season, and to approach the Bristol Philharmonic Society with a view to co-operation. The result has been the formation of the Bristol Choral and Philharmonic Society, under the honorary conductorship of Mr. Arnold Barter.

It may be recalled that, in 1920, Bristolians showed their gratitude to Mr. Riseley by a public testimonial, the occasion being the completion of fifty years of musical work in the city. The presentation took the form of a cheque for a thousand guineas.

Mr. Arnold Barter has conducted the Bristol Philharmonic Society since its inception twenty-five years ago, and his enterprising policy has given Bristol opportunities of hearing many modern works of a type not often performed in the provinces—or even in London.

We commend to the notice of readers the letter on page 933 from Mr. Edward Watson, Secretary of the Music Department of the National Institute for the Blind. There ought to be no lack of musicians ready—even eager—to render to their blind confrères the small but valuable service for which the appeal is made.

Our Czecho-Slovakian friend returns to the charge on the question of modernising Shakespeare. His main point now seems to be that 'a German reading Shakespeare in German can understand Shakespeare better than an Englishman in English.' Of course he can, for the obvious reason that he is reading modern German, whereas the Englishman is reading 17th-century English. Our correspondent goes on to say that 'the Germans are supposed to have re-discovered Shakespeare, just as they have discovered Shaw's genius.' 'Supposed' by whom? Probably Germans. Re-discovery implies loss. Can it be said that Shakespeare was ever lost in his own country? Inevitably some generations have been less alive than others to his genius, because of fluctuations in taste and manners. It is easy to understand, for example, why the 18th century was only partly aware of his greatness; similarly, Bach was crabbed and uncouth in the ears of musicians until recent years. But Shakespeare was never ignored in the sense that Bach was in his own country. As for Shaw: we fancy that particulars of his income from the sale of his works and performing fees on his plays in England would show appreciation of the most solid type. Indeed, had this Irishman settled in Germany instead of England, and written about that country as he wrote about England during the war, she would have handed him treatment very different from the half-amused tolerance he received here. Shaw is a great man, though a good bit less towering than he appears to some of his more fervid admirers, including Mr. Shaw. He has had the advantage of a publicity expert second to none—himself; but even without this aid the discovery of his genius would not have been left to any foreign country. England may not always spot a great composer at first sight, but she has her eyes open in the matter of literature.

The advertisements of singing teachers continue to show enterprise and inventive powers. 'Voice-building' and 'placement' are now fairly common; 'Ennobling the voice' is a step forward; and further progress is shown in an announcement of an 'Advanced Method of Voice-Production and Breath-locking.'

New Music

CHORAL WORKS

An abridged concert edition of Purcell's 'King Arthur' has just been issued by Novello. The editor has omitted a good deal of the music that had little raison d'être beyond stage requirements. The final chorus of the original, 'Our natives not alone appear,' is dropped in favour of the song and chorus, 'Your hay it is mowed,' which certainly makes a better finish. The superseded chorus is given in an appendix, so it may be used by those who prefer it. The musical text has been revised, chiefly on the authority of a MS. in the library of the Royal Academy of Music. By means of 'cueing in,' the orchestral score is now such that it can be played by strings alone, or by strings and pianoforte, with or without any of the wind in the original score—flutes, oboes, and trumpets. The principal solo parts are for S.T.B. The time of performance is about an hour. 'King Arthur' contains some of Purcell's best and best-known music—'Come, if you dare,' 'Fairest Isle,' 'How blest are shepherds,' 'Come, follow, follow,' 'Shepherd, shepherd, leave decoying,' the fine Passacaglia in F (here called 'The Grand Dance'), &c., and its issue in this excellent edition is a worthy continuation of the enterprising policy shown by the house of Novello in its recent publication of concert versions of 'Semele' and 'Carmen.'

From Novello's comes also Bach's cantata, 'Ready be, my soul, alway,' for four solo voices, chorus, and orchestra, edited by Sir Ivor Atkins, with English text by Prof. Sanford Terry. This work was performed at the recent Three Choirs Festival. It opens with a fine chorus based on the chorale tune, 'Straf mich nicht,' well-known in this country through its association with the Easter hymn, 'Christ the Lord is risen again.' But the outstanding number is the aria for soprano, which Parry describes as > . . . one of the most exquisite solos in all the cantatas. It is accompanied by a flute, violoncello, piccolo, and continuo, intertwining divinely tender phrases, which plead against one another as if from the innermost depths of the soul; and into their company the solo voice seems to drop from the infinite with slow phrases expressing with the deepest urgency the words 'Bete, bete!' ('Pray').

Another Worcester Festival work received for review is Edgar Bainton's 'A Hymn to God the Father,' a setting of a poem by John Donne (Oxford University Press). Mr. Bainton has successfully caught the unusual spirit of the poem—a kind of abstruse intensity; both words and music say much in a small space. (Readers who have an 'English Hymnal' at hand will find Donne's poem therein, No. 515, with a slightly altered first line.)

The Oxford University Press sends Mozart's 'Requiem,' in the new edition of Edward J. Dent, with Latin text, and also in a tonic sol-fa version.

Arthur Somervell's 'Christmas' is a short work that should meet the needs of church choirs and choral societies that wish for a change from 'The Messiah' selection and other over-familiar Christmas music. It is in six parts—Advent, The Annunciation, The Birth of Jesus, The Shepherds and the Magi, At the Manger, Departure of the Magi—and may thus be spread over several weeks if desired, like the 'Christmas Oratorio.' The music is melodious without being obvious, and effective use is made of certain familiar ecclesiastical themes, such as 'Veni, Emmanuel,' the fourth Gregorian tone, and 'Adeste, Fideles.' There are some attractive numbers in carol style. Four soloists are required, and the accompaniment is easily playable on pianoforte or organ. The well-chosen libretto is from the Psalms, the Gospel narrative, and one or two hymns. The first performance of this capital little work will be given by the League of Arts Choir at the Victoria and Albert Museum, in November, conducted by Geoffrey Shaw (Boosey).

W. G. Whittaker's setting of Psalm cxxxix. for unaccompanied mixed choir and semi-chorus is a work that cannot be judged without a hearing. Some of the dissonances seem to be unbearable, but Holst has recently shown that such progressions, hopeless to the eye, or when played, may become beautiful when sung. Dr. Whittaker sets the choir a stiff task, but the writing of so practical a choral trainer and conductor usually looks harder than it is. Half the terrors of a tough progression may be mitigated by the way it is approached and laid out. In this Psalm, Dr. Whittaker explores very thoroughly the possibilities of the shifting harmony of one body of voices against the stationary chord of another. Holst (in the 'Hymn of Jesus') seems to have given the first hint of the powerful effect of dissonance obtainable in this way, though the actual device itself may of course be found in several double-choir works of Bach. There is deep feeling in this Psalm, but not of the conventionally 'expressive' type; strength, too, of a stark, dour kind. The more one looks at the score the more one wants to hear a performance. The only adverse comment that may perhaps be safely made on a mere paper acquaintance is that there is rather too much treatment of the voice-parts in blocks. A little more polyphony of the conventional type (conventional in the best sense, of course) would have increased the interest. But here again actual performance may well justify the composer. The vocal score contains both Tonic and Staff notations and a reduction for pianoforte—in uncomfortably small type, by the way (Oxford University Press). H. G.

CHORAL MUSIC :

UNISON SONGS

The Year-Book Press batch always contains some sound stuff. The jolliest things are Charles Wood's 'A Song of the Sea' and Basil Harwood's 'Running on.' The latter has some neat little tripping runs to negotiate. Wood's 'Trees' is a happy cantabile study. Girls especially would like it. Amiable fare is Hilda Grieveson's 'Jocund Dance' (the jocosity a bit mild-drawn), E. T. Chapman's 'I often sit and wish' (words by himself, and accompaniment inspired by the organ, I fancy), and J. M. Tatton's 'Lullaby' (Scott's 'O hush thee, my babie').

Novello's issue C. M. Spurling's 'Take, shepherd, take thy prize' (in easy, short phrases), Rowley's 'Country Song,' that has an 18th-century Old English bouquet, and the Schumann 'Ladybird,' from Op. 79—a delicious trifle.

From Elkin we have Felix White's 'Telegraph Wires' and 'Glad Day,' the second the better of the two—good, swinging rhythms, and some variety of them ; Norman Demuth's 'Dream Pedlary,' flowing sweetly, and demanding perfect finish in the quite easy manipulation of the notes ; Sydney Northcote's 'My Pilgrimage' (4-4 and 6-4 time)—a bold essay with a rather bare descant, that does not quite achieve the effect of stark strength apparently aimed at ; and Gerrard Williams's 'The Elves' Tryst Night,' dancing lightly away, eight semiquavers to the bar, at a brisk pace. If your kiddies can get tone on every note, they have the root of the matter in them.

PART-SONGS FOR CHILDREN'S AND FEMALE VOICES

Some of D. W. Stewart's settings of Blake's 'Songs of Innocence' are unison, and some two-part. There is a serious endeavour to get away from stiff rhythms, but Blake's simplicity is a little too much for the composer, I feel. However, here is goodwill and some achievement. The eight songs appear to be sold only in one book, at a shilling. Single two-part songs from the same firm (Year-Book Press) are Alan Palmer's 'The hill pines were sighing' (some words by Dr. Bridges)—a song that very nearly comes off, and is worth looking at, since you may think it quite successful—and C. S. Lang's 'Wake, little bees,' a brisk song for full-toned singing.

The lower part in most two-part songs would be more interesting and free if it crossed the upper part more frequently. There is still too much tendency to treat the voices as semi-altos, or, at the best, as apologetic sopranos 'seconding the motion.' That fault is not prominent this month, but it is always present, in three songs out of five. And again I plead for a little more counterpoint. Swing the parts about, gentlemen !

'In Derry Vale' (with descant) is Geoffrey Shaw's treatment of the 'Londonderry Air' (Novello). Naturally, he seizes the nice opportunity of using imitation, and, equally naturally, he uses it neatly. I like that striking E natural (in the key of E flat) in the last bar but one. I wonder if you can guess just how it is brought in? If you can, and happen to want to write songs, try thinking out, not half-a-dozen similar dodges, but how it is that they occur to the musician at all. It is the hardest thing to look freshly at a familiar thing. One way is to get away from it ; another is to live with it ; a third is to see how it strikes other people ; and a fourth is to wait until it strikes you—and, meanwhile, to refrain from the use of ruled paper.

In George Rathbone's 'How sweet the moonlight sleeps upon this bank' the lower part descends to the low A, and the harmony is in four parts, at the ends of the verses. This is a thoughtful setting (Novello).

Light and bird-like are the hops in Charles Wood's 'The Blossom' (S.S.A.). This melodious fragment of Blake must be sung with very great delicacy, with a smile and a caress. Eric Fogg's 'Meg Merrilies' has some imaginative touches, but it is unequal. It is a sporting effort, rather broken up after the older male-voice-song type. It would give quite good practice to S.S.A.A. choirs. Both these pieces are Year-Book Press issues.

MALE-VOICE

Two of Elkin's prints provide easy-going material for T.T.B.B. A. Brent-Smith's 'In September' gives a chance for clean tonal contrasts, including a hearty ff wind up ; and C. F. Water's setting of Burns's 'Oh, my luve's like a red, red rose' is neatly if sedately written. Few of the setters of Burns get his fervour and nip. Dare one suggest a nip of another kind, to get them into the right spirit ?

Kenneth Finlay has arranged 'Quick ! we have but a second,' for T.T.B.B. The men are not asked to emulate Plunket Greene by singing the whole thing in one breath, but they must manipulate tongue and lips and teeth with all their art if the words are to be crisp and the tune charged with tone all the way (Curwen).

MIXED-VOICE

Weekes publish Kenneth Finlay's very simple arrangement for S.A.T.B. (or S.S.B.B.), unaccompanied, of 'Oh, why left I my hame?' ; and Paxton's issue another of this composer's settings, this time of the air to Lady Nairne's verses that have the burden of 'Wha'll be king but Charlie?' Both these are pleasant material for the practice of the fundamental choral virtues. W. R. A.

ORGAN MUSIC

No. 6 of Novello's Albums of 'Twenty Short and Easy Pieces' contains, like its predecessors, something to suit practically all tastes and degrees of technique. The composers represented include Handel, Beethoven, Guilmant, Mendelssohn, Merkel, Cui, Dienel, Steggall, Luard-Selby, Blair, West, &c. As a collection of pieces for teaching purposes the volume should be no less useful than for the supply of voluntaries. The latest of Novello's 'Original Compositions' series is Herbert Brewer's 'Cloister-Garth,' a tuneful piece, alla sarabanda, with an engaging alternation of triple and duple time. It should serve well as quiet relief in a recital. It is easy both to play and register.

Basil Harwood's Voluntary in D flat may of course be played in the ordinary way, but it is primarily a study for left-hand and pedals. (It is dedicated to Douglas Fox, that brilliant young player who lost his right arm in the war, but still does amazing things with his left hand and feet.) Dr. Harwood's study has far more than mere technical value, being a lengthy, well-developed, and expressive movement that will give even the two-handed player plenty to do (Novello).

Among the most promising of young composers cut off by the war was Ernest Bristow Farrar. Though an organist, he had not written much for his instrument, but his modest output was of excellent quality. A few posthumous pieces have appeared during the past few years, and the number is increased by two just issued by the Oxford University Press—'A Wedding Piece' and an 'Elegy.' Both are slight, but show the imaginative touch that was rarely absent from his work. The 'Wedding Piece' is delightful, and will no doubt be a popular recital item. The 'Elegy' perhaps suffers from a little over-use of its opening motive, but is an original conception in many ways. It would make a good (a) item to the 'Wedding Piece' as (b). Incidentally it is good to see that some of the enterprise of the Oxford University Press is to be diverted into the organ music department. With the large public interest in the organ, the great activity in recitals, and the decided improvement in the standard of taste, there is ample room for new English organ music. Wherever organists are gathered together one hears complaints as to our small output compared with that of America, France, and Germany.

Paxton's send a new technical work—T. Haigh's 'Pedal Playing: A Complete School of Pedal Technique for Organists.' Dr. Haigh deals with the pedals only, because (he says in his Preface), his experience as a teacher 'has been chiefly with students who had acquired considerable ability as pianists before commencing the study of the organ.' Such students probably outnumber very largely those who approach the organ with little or no manual technique. In fact, this is the better way of approach. The organ is notoriously a formidable instrument, but much of the difficulty of the early stages of its study disappears in the case of a pupil whose manual technique is good enough to enable him to concern himself almost entirely with the pedal board. Even the greatest difficulty of all—independence of hands and feet—will not worry a player who is well grounded at both ends, so to speak. Dr. Haigh begins with the simplest of alternate toe exercises, and works gradually up to ninety-five difficult passages extracted from the repertory—excluding Bach, on the ground that there are plenty of editions with complete footing marks. Perhaps the exclusive use of alternate toes in the early studies is a mistake. There is much to be said for impressing on the student, from the first, the necessity for a liberal use of the heel, and for thinking of a pedal passage in two lines, heel and toe. Dr. Haigh shows the importance of this later, so it is to be hoped that students working for themselves from his book will read the whole of it first. An underlined injunction to 'calculate mentally' the spaces between the notes seems to imply an objection to 'feeling' the short keys as a guide. It is difficult to see why this old-fashioned and common-sense plan should not be used as a supplementary aid. 'Safety first' is a good motto here as in other kinds of pedestrianism! It is worth while remembering, too, that many pianists use their fingers in this way—in fact, a little book dealing solely with this subject was recently published. Pedal text-books seem to fight shy of discussing the use of the side of the foot. Yet many long-key passages of consecutive notes, though marked to be played by the toe of the same foot, are better managed with the side—roughly, that part of the foot under the big-toe joint. The glissando is often better done thus than with the actual point of the foot. This is the kind of compromise that experienced players take for granted, but it seems to be shirked by text-books. By the way, a trying-over of some of the ninety-five passages is a revelation of the widely different views players hold in regard to pedalling. The divergence is far greater than in fingering, because so many factors enter into the question—players' length of leg and size of feet, the great difference in degrees of stiffness in the touch; even the 'lie' and position of the accompanying manual parts affect the footing. Dr. Haigh's primer is very thorough and practical, and may be recommended with confidence.

Among organ composers at present out of fashion is Adolf Hesse. Yet he wrote some admirable music; his contrapuntal and fugal writing are first-rate; he could turn out genuine tunes, and in attractive power he is streets ahead of the great army of lesser Germans such as Rink, Töpfer, Eberling, &c. I am glad to see that Augener's have just issued two books of his pieces, No. 1 containing twenty-nine short Preludes and Postludes, and No. 2 giving us eleven pieces, among them such larger works as the Variations in A and A flat, the Toccata in A flat, and a couple of the Preludes and Fugues. It may be dreadfully old-fashioned taste, but I have thoroughly enjoyed renewing acquaintance with the best of these works. The edition appears to be a reprint of the old one-volume issue. I wish the publishers had taken the opportunity of adding a few fingering and footing marks, and of correcting one or two slips in the text. Still, the volumes are so handy and cheap, and contain so much sterling music, that the deficiencies are easily pardoned. From the same house come also reprints of Mailly's Toccata and Meditation.

C. W. Pearce's 'A Processional Paternoster' is based on a tune the composer wrote for the East London Church Fund Festival at St. Paul's Cathedral, the text being a metrical version of Pater Noster. It makes a tuneful and effective march of no great difficulty (Weekes). The same publishers send a Tutor for American Organ, by Augustus Holmes and Frederick J. Karn; and 'In the Cloisters,' by Wilson Manhire, a set of fourteen easy pieces for harmonium, which are rather better than such a title would lead us to expect.

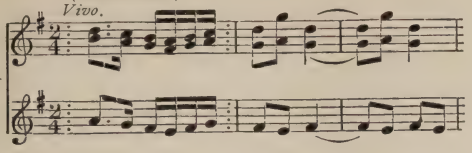
H. G.

The Oxford University Press has issued a pianoforte arrangement, by the composer, of Constant Lambert's ballet, 'Romeo and Juliet.' Ballet music must be strong to stand on its own feet, thus, without the glamour of orchestra and stage setting. 'Romeo and Juliet' comes but poorly out of the test The composer is a student at the Royal College of Music, but it is plain that he has really gone to school elsewhere, if this ballet be truly representative of his aims and technique. It is little but thinly-diluted Stravinsky, and, looked at as mere music, soon grows wearisome by its insistence on effects that are already beginning to date, and that rarely 'come off' on the pianoforte. One must be either very young or unsophisticated to see anything original or daring in such devices as this—one taken at random from dozens of similar things:

(Three times.)

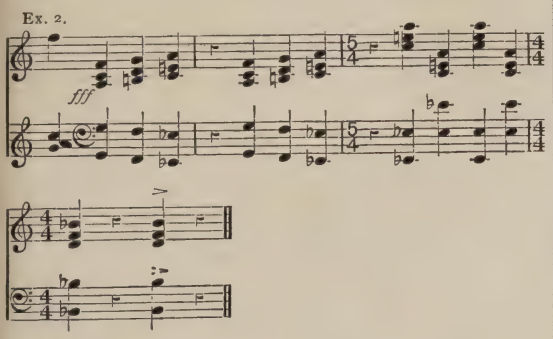
Vivo.

Ex. 1.



And, as a piece of infantile puerility, here is a cadence:

Ex. 2.



Such tricks are as easy as lying, and would soon become as commonplace but for the ease with which they are seen through. If this is what the ballet does for young composers, it is to be hoped that they will steer clear of it, lest it 'do for' them indeed.

H. G.

MINIATURE SCORES

We have received from Edward W. Organ, Acocks Green, Birmingham, a very interesting batch of pocket scores—String Quartets by Franz Schmidt, in A; Leo Weiner, in F sharp minor (a work that won the Coolidge Prize a few years ago); Turiña's 'La Oracion de torero'; Bartók's Op. 7; Breton's Quartet in D; and Rheinberger's Theme and Variations in G minor. There are also Hans Stieber's Quintet in A, for clarinet, two violins, viola, and violoncello; Rheinberger's Quintet, for two violins, two violas, and violoncello, in A minor; and Liapounov's Pianoforte Sextet. For full orchestra there is Dohnányi's 'Ruralia Hungarica,' a Suite of five pieces not yet performed in this country, we believe. They ought to be heard soon.

Among the most successful items in 'Riverside Nights' at the Hammersmith Lyric are 'The Policeman's Serenade' ('a grand little opera'), written by A. P. Herbert, and composed by Alfred Reynolds; and a song, 'It may be life,' in which some delightful verses by Mr. Herbert are set by Dennis Arundell. These numbers have just been published by Messrs. Elkin, and their neatness, wit, and fancy make us wonder why so many revue producers (and audiences) are content with noisy drivel, usually imported.

H. G.

EASY PIANOFORTE MUSIC

Young people emerging from the primary stage will find useful and pleasant practice in an album entitled 'On the Way to Fairyland' (International Music Co.). The music, which is very clearly printed, is by various composers, and includes Thomas F. Dunhill's 'French Dance' (Rigaudon) and 'Old English Dance,' a Gavotte by Handel, and a Minuet by Mozart, Schumann's 'Soldiers' Chorus,' Couperin's 'The French Dancer,' and tuneful pieces—mostly in dance form—by Adela Verne, Colin Taylor, Henri Lamarqué, Georges Lamothe, and Alice Verne-Bredt. Another album from the same publishers—'The Young Music-Maker'—is suitable for pupils of Elementary to Lower Division standard. The contents are admirable: 'a Caprice by Felix Swinstead, Handel's Allegro from seventh Suite, Thomas F. Dunhill's 'Carillon of Yuletide' (an excellent study in thirds and sixths), 'Lament' by H. Pachulski, a Schumann 'Album Leaf,' and two tuneful numbers by A. J. Silver. The picture on the front is, however, a mistake. It appears to have strayed from a book intended for the nursery. People who have reached the standard required for these pieces are apt to resent anything suggestive of the kindergarten stage. Apart from the unfortunate cover the book would admirably suit adult learners, whose needs are sometimes difficult to meet.

For less advanced pupils Colin Hood's suite 'Robinson Crusoe' (Forsyth) may be confidently recommended. These little pieces are treated with skill and imagination, and should appeal strongly to youngsters. The fifteen numbers—some quite short—include two duets, one of which, 'The Cannibals Routed,' is quite an exciting affair. Karel Mengelberg's 'Seven Pieces for Children' (Oxford University Press) are examples of modern writing which will, presumably, be played and even liked by some. To the present writer, two or three of them are extremely ugly, and the others, in the main, merely dull. They are not for beginners.

Under the title 'What shall I play?' (Enoch) E. Edroff has arranged simply and effectively a number of well-known songs and dances. Included are—amongst others—'John Peel,' 'Men of Harlech,' 'Sir Roger de Coverley,' 'For he's a jolly good fellow,' 'The Keel Row,' 'Auld Lang Syne,' and 'God save the King.' The book is for elementary players. For the same stage 'Ten Little Pieces without Titles,' by Clement M. Spurling (International Music Co.) will be found useful. They are tuneful and well written, and contain examples in dance form as well as those requiring expressive treatment. The pieces are graded; the last two, however, which are both of a lively character, require a much higher standard of playing than the others.

A 'Second Adult Album' (Enoch) provides an excellent collection of moderately easy and moderately difficult pieces, collected, phrased, and edited, by Gertrude Azulay. In a 'Foreword' the Editor gives some useful advice on practising. Each piece, also, is preceded by analytical notes and exercises designed to meet special technical difficulties. The composers represented are: Chopin (Preludes in E minor and B minor), Rameau (Tambourin), Schumann, Heller, Glinka (Tarantelle), Chaminade, and Duchatel. Teachers of adults will welcome this second album. Not all of them will agree everywhere with the suggested pedalling: e.g., the Chopin numbers (particularly the first) and the opening phrase of the first Schumann piece.

Pupils of about Lower Division standard will enjoy James Ching's six open-air pieces under the title 'Over the Hills' (Forsyth). The first and last—'March Winds' and 'Happy-go-lucky'—are vigorous and straightforward in style; light, nimble finger-work is called for in 'Sheep Bells.' 'Caravans,' 'Half-way House,' and 'The Roadside Pool' are expressively treated, and make attractive studies in cantabile playing and pedalling. More difficult are 'Five Sketches for Pianoforte' by F. Percival Driver (International Music Co.). A skilful player will find plenty of scope in these clever pieces. Their titles are: 'The Song of the Brook' (Allegretto grazioso), 'Columbine' (an expressive melody in right hand), 'Elves' Frolic' (Allegro leggiero), 'Celtic Lullaby' (a tender little essay in two-part writing, much as if written for 'cello and violin), 'Will o' the Wisp' (Allegro, leggiero e scherzando). No fingering is indicated, and pedalling—which is asked for in each piece—is left to the discretion of the player.

Teachers will be glad to know that the set of selected studies recently issued in four graded books, under the editorship of Desirée MacEwan, Cuthbert Whitemore, Nancy Gilford, and Felix Swinstead respectively, has now been made more complete by the addition of 'Preliminary Selected Studies,' edited by Cuthbert and Freda Whitemore (Paterson's Publications). A brief Foreword indicates the proper attitude of mind in which to approach the practice of studies. Brief prefatory notes also accompany each number. As most easy studies are in the key of C major, the editors have wisely transposed some of them into other keys, and written a few new ones in order to obtain variety. G. G.

The Musician's Bookshelf

'The Music of Spanish History to 1600.' By J. B. Trend. Hispanic Notes and Monographs issued by the Hispanic Society of America.

[Oxford University Press, 12*s.* 6*d.*]

In his short introduction the author transports the reader into modern Spain, placing before his mental vision an enchanting picture of the Alhambra and its surroundings by starlight, and of the sheen and shimmer of the gaily dressed audience which had assembled in the Plaza, at Granada, in front of the old Palace to witness a singing competition, held as a kind of Festival, organized by Manuel de Falla, and staged by Ignacio Zuloaga. The description of the traditional form of song in Andalucia, the Cante andaluz or Cante londo, modernised and 'gipsified' as Cante flamenco, and of the preludes and interludes for guitar with the invariable suggestion in both voice and accompaniment of the Phrygian mode, make up an excellent preamble of modernity tinged with Orientalism to the author's account of the varied races and influences that modified and developed the art of music in Spain from the invasion of the Moors in 711 to the death of Victoria in 1611. Two chapters are devoted to the Moors, and at the outset Mr. Trend stresses the point that the customary habit of speaking of the Muslim invaders of Spain as Arabs is contrary to fact. The armies of the Berber Tárig were of a mixed race. Though they were led at first by Arabs, each invasion brought a larger proportion of Berbers, a people altogether different from the Arabs in race, tradition, language, and music. Moorish Spain became for a time the most civilised country in Europe, students flocking from all parts of the world to Córdoba.

The account of the mixed races in various parts of Spain has the effect of accentuating the unique characteristics of the Basque people, for the Muslims were very little in Asturias, where the inhabitants held out against them in the mountains; also they were only a short time in Galicia and the Basque provinces, and this fact has preserved the pure native quality of the music of those provinces. The wavering melodic Muslim music is shown to be characterised by its rhythm, producing a pleasurable sensation from 'the expected succession of strong and weak beats and the regular return of the same period, which impresses on the mind the feeling of a balanced construction, 'a rational conquest of time as it passes.' Interesting details are given of the celebrated Persian singer, Ziryab, who founded a school of technique in which many innovations were introduced regarding rhythm, melody, and ornamentation. Mention is made of the collection of Moorish melodies due to the researches of E. N. Yahil and L. Seror, and published under the direction of M. Rouanet, of Algiers.

The singularly perfect system of intonation and comprehensive set of scales of the Muslims owed much to Persia and Greece; but in the last hundred years the system has been changed and the octave, which had been divided into seventeen notes ($\frac{1}{3}$-tones), now consists of twenty-three quarter-tones grouped in seven diatonic intervals, thus giving a larger range of choice, but with intervals no longer so true as they were in the older scale. The influence of the partly Byzantine and partly Visigothic melodies and the Mozarabic liturgical chant on Spanish ecclesiastical music occupies a chapter in which the wide researches of the late Pierre Aubry, one of the most erudite of French writers on music, are requisitioned. Three interesting chapters follow: one on Alfonso the Wise, King of Castile, who collected the Cantigas of Santa Maria, four hundred poems with musical notation in two exquisitely illuminated MSS., now in the library of the Escurial; another on Early Galician Music and the songs sung by the Pilgrims in the famous shrine of St. James of Compostela has an item of interest for modern musicians owing to the fact that among the forms of music of that period the 'Alborado' was numbered; it is known in these days, and has become familiar through Ravel's 'Alborado del Gracioso.' The chapter on the 'Romancero' is one of the most absorbing on account of its vivid description of the travelling 'jugglers,' who were continually moving from place to place, and thus becoming acquainted with poetry and music from many countries. They were the inventors of vernacular poetry, as also of the 'Romances Viejos.' It is of special interest to learn that some of the old Romances were formed from the remains of lengthy 'Chansons de Geste,' thus linking up these wandering minstrels with the Troubadours and Jongleurs who had sung the immortal stories of Roland's sword, Durendal, of Charlemagne and King Arthur. One of the tales was a setting of the story of Don Gayferos and Melisendra, which forms the subject of Manuel de Falla's delightful opera, 'Master Peter's Puppet Show,' from 'Don Quixote.' The book ends with short, concise accounts of the work of Juan del Encina, Morales, and that great figure in Spanish musical history, Victoria, the complete edition of whose works was the monumental achievement of one of the most renowned of modern Spanish musicians, Felipe Pedrell. The last two pages make somewhat depressing reading, showing the real need of arousing enthusiasm in Spain both for the music of its great past as well as for its promising present 'Music, unfortunately,' laments Mr. Trend, 'has remained the Cinderella of the arts, even in Spain.' This author, anyway, can rest assured that English readers must feel they owe him a debt of gratitude for initiating them, in this and in several other attractive volumes, into something of the magic and spell of a fascinating country, and for sharing with them his wide knowledge of its history and its music.

Sixty-six musical examples are given in the Appendix, numbering a Mozarabic chant after Pierre Aubry, and many others from this learned scholar's collection; several Pilgrim songs from Montserrat, Romances, Villancicos, Pange Linguas, &c. The ample 'Notes' provide also much that is of special interest. L. L.

'Commonsense in Pianoforte Playing.' By Cuthbert Whitemore.

[Augener, 2*s*.]

It is odd that so few pupils (and not many teachers, apparently) realise that commonsense is as vital a factor in art as in the everyday affairs of life. When clouds of high-flown language have been spent in vain on some æsthetic problem, a pinch of practical mother-wit will often cut the knot. Mr. Whitemore is therefore happy in the title of his little book, and even happier in that the contents live up to the label. The work is based on a series of articles that appeared in the Music Teacher, and the easy, colloquial style of their original form has been wisely retained. The question of rotary adjustment (often made a kind of mystery) is treated so simply and clearly that it must be indeed a dense pupil who fails to grasp it. Other chapters are on 'Staccato and Legato,' 'Pianoforte Touches,' 'The Essentials of Interpretation,' 'Time Inflection,' 'The Use of the Pedal,' 'Tone-Colour,' and 'Attention.' Mr. Whitemore is admirable on rubato, and many a seasoned player would profit from this chapter. In regard to tone-colour, the author works his favourite theory as to the player thinking of Beethoven's Sonatas in terms of the orchestra rather than of the pianoforte. The theory may be carried too far, but there is good ground for it in the orchestral and unpianistic conception of much in the Sonatas. And almost any plan that will induce the young player to realise the importance of variety in tone and touch justifies itself. Teachers, hardly less than pupils, will benefit from this excellent booklet. H. G.

'Dictionary of Modern English Usage.' By H. W. Fowler.

[Clarendon Press, 7*s*. 6*d*.]

Mr. Fowler makes certain points of interest to musicians, and his opinion is important, for the learning and fascination of his book will give it authority wherever there is a care for good English. Oh for a millionaire to speed its message into the darkest corners of the land! There would then soon be an end of the Irish misuse of 'will' for 'shall' and a hundred other slovenlinesses.

It is a corrective not only for all slovens, but also for all pedants. Mr. Fowler's principle is this: that good written English should (except for special purposes, poetical and other) be based on good spoken English. Generally, he holds it pedantry to fight against well-established colloquial usage. Not, for all that, that we are to submit feebly to any neologism that chooses to knock at the door.

To come to the author's decisions on musical terminology, we must pick our little quarrel with him, dangerous though it be. No; he should not try to impose 'clarionet' on the nation. After all the years of efforts in which the better form has been fought for! He says:

> The two forms denote the same instrument, but the -onet form is in more general use (and therefore preferable in literature), while musicians and musical connoisseurs affect the other.

We detect a sneer in that 'affect,' and a cruel one. 'Clarionet' is an absurdity indefensible, and this blot should be erased in the next edition of the 'Dictionary.' Other recommendations do not agree with the usage of the Musical Times. Mr. Fowler is for 'piano,' presumably because 'pianoforte' has been utterly dropped from English speech. And the word is to be boldly pronounced English-wise with a short 'a,' 'piano' with a long 'a' being reserved for the musical direction.

Mr. Fowler pleads for 'barytone,' as he does for 'gypsy.' His principle is to retain the form that preserves the etymology of the word if no inconvenience is entailed. 'Barytone' and 'gypsy,' true, are hard pressed by inferior forms, but while they have not quite succumbed the nice writer will prefer them. 'Violoncello' is a crux. The 'Oxford English Dictionary' recommends a frankly anglicised pronunciation. Mr. Fowler hedges, suggesting the 'i' be pronounced as in 'violin,' and the 'c' remain Italian. It will not do. As a fact, the word is less and less used in speech. But ''cello' is absurd—no word at all. If we were as courageous as our Elizabethan forefathers, we should make no bones about writing 'chello,' or 'chellow.'

With Mr. Fowler by his side, no one now need blush to give 'soprano' and 'contralto' a plural in 's.' We wish he had not overlooked the cor anglais. Misbegotten and ill-fated name! On the principle that things musical had better be called by a foreign, and, if possible, unpronounceable word, we nearly all of us fight shy of 'English horn.' What strange perversions the words 'cor anglais' fall into in the course of a season of symphony concerts who shall say? Sir Henry Wood pronounces them one way, Herr Furtwängler another, and M. Ansermet altogether differently.

Mr. Fowler allows us to stress the penultimate in 'fantasia' without incurring his blame for pedantry. (Pedantry is 'the saying of things in language so learned or so demonstratively accurate as to imply a slur upon the generality, who are not capable or not desirous of such displays.') In fact, the pronunciation 'fantay-sia' or 'fantah-sia' 'is perhaps due to ignorance rather than to choice.' But to the mischievous dread of appearing ignorant on such matters is due the unhappy, unacclimatised form of half our musical terminology. C.

'Haydn.' By Michel Brenet. Translated by G. Leonard Leese, with a Commentary by Sir W. H. Hadow.

[Oxford University Press, 6*s*.]

Sir Henry Hadow begins his prefatorial commentary by saying that, so far as he is aware, this is the best available biography of Haydn, and a perusal leaves the reviewer with little more to do than to express agreement. In fact, there could be no better review of the book than is found in Sir Henry's eight pages. He discusses fully one or two points in which the author seems to have gone astray; praises the undeniable skill with which he has introduced to us 'not only a great genius but a most agreeable companion'; and lays a laurel at the feet of a composer who after years of neglect is at last coming into his own. Increasing knowledge of Haydn's music will, it is hoped, make an end of the conception of him as a kind of inferior Mozart. 'Anyone who looks at me [said Haydn] can see that I am a good sort of fellow.' The public always knew that, but only a small proportion at present knows what a 'good sort' of music he wrote—music that not only reflected his character, but which in freshness, deftness of workmanship, and originality places him only a very little, if at all, below the giants. This readable volume should help along the revival that will do him justice, and at the same time exert the best of influences on current music. As Sir Henry Hadow says:

> It is a matter of great satisfaction that this cheerful, pleasant music is once more coming to its own—'bringing a breeze of health from wholesome places,' and setting us at our ease by its own frank confidence of a welcome.

H. G.

'The Gipsy in Music.' By Franz Liszt. Englished for the first time by Edwin Evans, Sen. Preceded by an essay on Liszt and his work. In two volumes. 15*s*.

[William Reeves, 15*s*.]

These two volumes contain, we are told, 'the result of the author's life-long experiences and investigations of the gipsies and their music.' The pity is that Liszt failed to realise that the fruit of all this labour was not necessarily of interest to the general musical public. His translator, unfortunately, made the same mistake. Boiled down to a third or fourth of its present bulk—a process that could have been done by simply shedding the interminable disquisitions on many non-musical matters—the work would have been far more valuable than it is. Liszt undertook his researches in order to help the public to an understanding of his Rhapsodies—a quite unnecessary task, one would have thought. But he got bitten with his subject, and went on and on till what was intended to be a kind of annotation of a group of musical works became a comprehensive study of a people. Here it is, for those who are bursting to know about the Gipsy, his origin, his religion, social habits, and so forth. For the musician there are musical references that may be dug out as time and patience permit.

H. G.

'My Ladye Nevells Booke' (William Byrd). Edited, with an Introduction and Notes, by Hilda Andrews. With a Preface by Sir Richard Terry.

[Curwen, £3 3*s*.]

Here is a handsome contribution to the revival of early English music, in the department that just now needs it most—that of the keyboard. 'My Ladye Nevells Booke' is a worthy successor to the Fitzwilliam Virginal Book, issued in 1899, and refutes, once and for all, the long-held view of historians that English keyboard music anterior to Purcell was negligible in quantity and quality. Thanks mainly to Charles van den Borren, the pioneer work of the English virginalists in the development of keyboard technique is now generally recognised. One drawback that perhaps inevitably resulted from this discovery was a tendency to regard their music as possessing little or no interest other than the purely evolutionary and technical.

A mere glance at such a collection as this—forty-two pieces, many of considerable length—shows the falsity of this view. Crudities there are, of course, and moments when we see Byrd in two minds as to idiom; but one must be obtuse indeed to miss the beauty not merely of occasional passages, but of page after page. Perhaps the most surprising feature is the variety of mood and style—a variety which we are apt to miss through our superficial concern with key. So accustomed are we to harmonic richness, that a number of pieces moving in a restricted tonal circle impress us at first with their sameness. When we rid ourselves of this harmonic obsession sufficiently to give a fair chance to such constituents as rhythm, form, and mood, we become aware of the wide differences between the dances (pavanes and galliards), voluntaries, and variations. Even the variations are by no means cast in the same mould. These are the 'grounds' (not a ground-bass in the strict sense of the term, but variations on a short theme), the variations on the hexachord, and the long and elaborate treatments of folk-song ('Have with yow to Walsingame,' 'The Carman's Whistle,' 'Will you walke the woods soe wylde,' &c.). There is a different Byrd for each; and two are combined in the hexachord variations when suddenly the severities are lightened by the introduction and imitative use of a phrase of folk-song—a wayward and happy touch that was frequent with these old writers. (An analogous instance of to-day is that of Holst in his Fugal Concerto, the Finale of which makes play with the folk-tune 'If all the world were paper.') Byrd thus touches form at many points.

Even the composers—or, rather, the compilers—of 'The Battle of Prague' and 'The Siege of Delhi' may touch their hats to him, for a full-blown ancestor of those terrible inanities is here, in a battle-piece that fills twenty-seven pages, and that covers the ground from the preliminary drums and tramplings to the celebration of victory. The various sections call for citation: The Marche before the Battell—The Battell (The souldiers sommons—The marche of footmen — The marche of horsmen — The trumpetts—The Irishe march—The bagpipe and the drone—The flute and the droome—The marche to the fighte—The retreat—The buriing of the dead—The Morris—Ye souldiers dance)—and The Galliarde for the Victorie. Even the point-to-point method of some later efforts in this genre is anticipated, a fanfare-like bar being marked 'tantara tantara,' and a few bars later some repercussions of the chord of C bear the words 'The battels be joyned.' As the retreat follows fourteen bars later, the fight seems on the small side, seeing the length of the preliminaries. This Battell is true to type in that it is of little musical value. Byrd, no less than Beethoven, has to come down a good many pegs in order to make the muse play tricks of this sort. But the work is of interest as an early example of programme music; and on behalf of such attempts it has to be said that most of them contributed something of value to the expressive material of music. See in these Byrd movements, for example, the representation of the fife and drum (the hands wide apart, the left repeating with insistent rhythm a chord of C minus the third); the curious monotony of the burial music (a primitive essay in a direction that was to yield impressive things from later composers); and so forth.

Having been drawn aside to discuss the least valuable work (musically) in the collection, this

(Continued on page 917.)

The Virginian Voyage

UNISON SONG

Poem by Michael Drayton, (1563—1631) Music by Edgar L. Bainton

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited; New York: THE H. W. GRAY CO., Sole Agents for the U.S.A.

Copyright, 1926, by Novello and Company, Limited

f
mf
cres.
Brit-ons, you stay too long: Quick - ly a - board be - stow you,
And with a mer-ry gale, Swell your stretched sail . . With vows as strong As the rit.
accel.
Tempo 1mo.
winds that blow you.
ff Tempo 1mo.
dim.
Your course secure - ly steer, West and by south forth keep!
mp
p
Rocks, lee-shores, nor shoals When E - o - lus scowls you need not fear; So ab - so-lute the

mf deep. . . . . And cheer-fully at sea Suc -
dim.
p
mf
- cess you still en-tice To get the pearl and gold, . . And ours to hold Vir -
p
cres.
p
mf
- gin - i - a, Earth's on - ly Par-a - dise.
rit.
rit.
cres.
mf
f
Tempo 1mo.
f
To . . whom the Gold - en Age Still nature's laws doth give, No
Tempo 1mo.
f
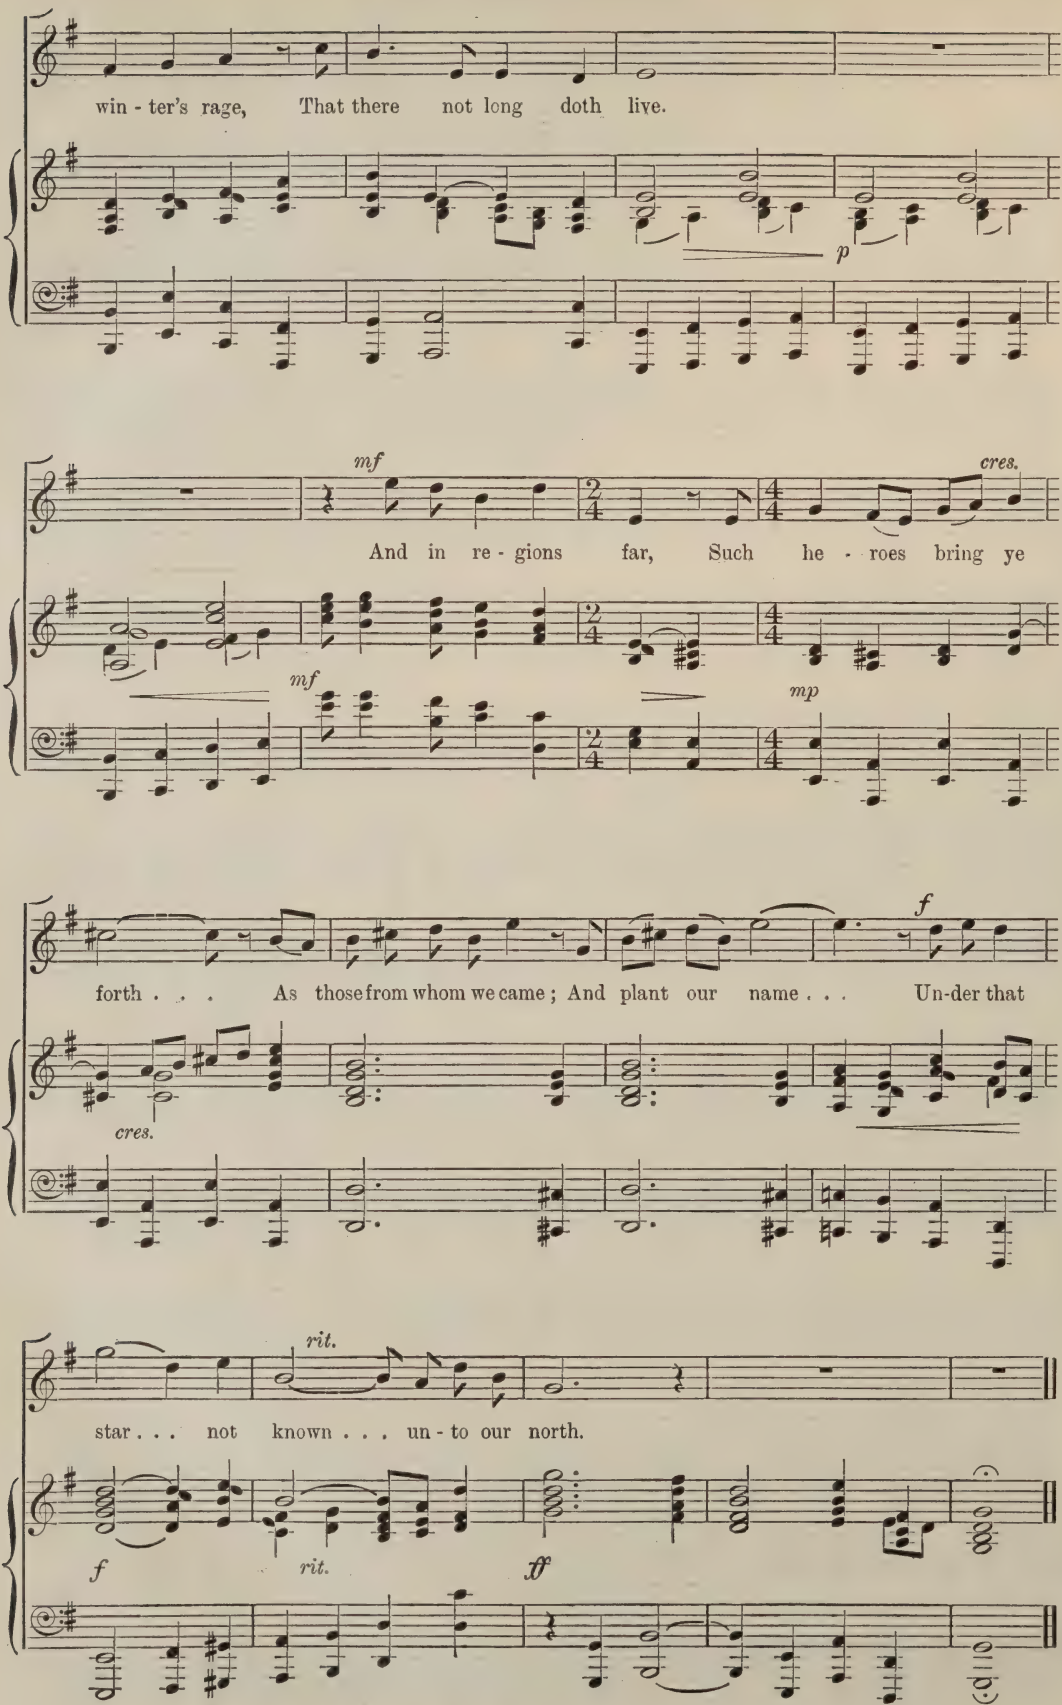
f oth - er cares at - tend, But them to de - fend . . From
f



win - ter's rage, That there not long doth live.
p
mf
cres.
And in re - gions far, Such he - roes bring ye
mf
mp
f forth . . . As those from whom we came; And plant our name . . . Un-der that cres.
rit.
star . . . not known . . . un - to our north.
f
rit.
ff

(Continued from page 912.)

reviewer finds space running out before some interesting points could be dealt with. However, no single short review could touch on all the aspects and byeways opened by such a reprint as this, so the omission is not serious. Enough has been said, it is hoped, to show the reader the value of the book, especially (but by no means solely) from the historical point of view. Miss Andrews's Preface is scholarly without dryness; there are analytical notes that are models in their way; some fine photographic reproductions of the original cover and script; and in regard to paper, print, and binding, the volume is an achievement of which the house of Curwen may well be proud.

H. G.

'Music of the Gramophone, and some Masterpiece Recordings.' Compiled by H. L. Wilson.

[The Gramophone Publications and George Allen & Unwin, 7*s.* 6*d.*]

The 'jacket' of this book bears the announcement that it is 'the first attempt that has been made to provide a commentary for the complete works of classical music which are now available on the gramophone.' This is to overlook the two excellent little books of Mr. Scholes.

As the title shows, the work is one of compilation rather than of composition, and it has all the drawbacks that belong to the method. The reader is switched from author to author, and the quoted passages vary widely in quality. The most serious defect is that often we are told too little about the music, the space being filled with a great deal of more or less irrelevant matter. In some cases the reader is better served, a capital analysis being quoted from a reputable source. It will thus be seen that there is no consistency; turning up a work, one may meet with a really valuable piece of critical writing, or he may be fobbed off with some gushing 'programme,' or by mere chit-chat about the composer. The reader, however, with a taste for the discursive will no doubt enjoy the book, which is rich in anecdotal and other trimmings drawn from a great variety of sources.

H. G.

'Œuvres Inédites de Beethoven.' Tome 2. Publiées avec une Introduction par Georges de Saint-Foix.

[Publications de la Société Française de Musicologie. Harold Reeves, 30*s.*]

This volume consists of early works of Beethoven, hitherto unpublished, most of which have been wrongly attributed to Mozart. The contents are two Trios for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello, a Rondo for pianoforte, and an Allegro and Gavotte for pianoforte duet. On the last page is a fragment of a 'Marzia Lugubre' for pianoforte duet in C minor, which bears a strong suggestion of the 'Eroica' Funeral March. The ascription of these pieces to Mozart seems to have been the result of hasty examination, for although there is a good deal of the Mozart turn of speech, there is also a vigour that is unmistakably Beethovenian, despite the elementary simplicity of the material. As will be gathered, the musical value of the pieces is slight, but they are of interest as showing the composer in a stage of development concerning which little actual finished work is available. No doubt lecturers on Beethoven will be glad of them as an illustration of his early work. The edition is limited to five hundred copies.

'Tonkünstler-Lexikon.' Von Paul Frank.

[Leipsic: Carl Merseburger, 10 marks.]

This is the twelfth and enlarged edition, by Prof. Wilhelm Altmann, of a biographical dictionary that has long been a standard work in Germany. The references are brief, the aim being to make the scheme comprehensive—a good plan in a work of this kind. No space is wasted, and the style and binding are excellent. There are about five hundred pages. The book appears to have no superior—perhaps no equal—in the profusion and concision of its information.

BOOKS RECEIVED

[Mention in this list neither implies nor precludes review in a future issue.]

'Music of the Past.' By Wanda Landowski. Translated from the French by W. A. Bradley. Pp. 185. Geoffrey Bles, 7*s.* 6*d.*

Additional Exercises to 'Elementary Harmony.' By C. H. Kitson. Pp. 47. Oxford University Press, 3*s.* 6*d.*

'Terpander; or, Music and the Future.' By Edward J. Dent. Pp. 95. Kegan Paul, 2*s.* 6*d.*

'Music and Musicians.' By Albert Lavignac. Translated by William Marchant. Revised and edited by H. E. Krehbiel. Pp. 518. Putnams, 12*s.* 6*d.*

'Die Stimmkrise.' By George Armin. Pp. 55. Leipsic: Fr. Kistner and C. F. W. Siegel.

'Science Tonale Exacte.' By Henry Reymond. Pp. 224. Paris: Les Presses Universitaires de France.

Gramophone Notes

BY 'DISCUS'

COLUMBIA

Presumably the record of the '1812' Overture is the first complete one. Many years ago I heard a very brief reproduction that was confined mainly to the final section. (It was, in fact, my first experience of gramophonic possibilities, and I still have vivid recollections of my astonished delight in the magical way the bell-tone filled the room.) The work, however, called for the greater sonority that is now possible, and the 'new' recording is shown to advantage in this latest reproduction. True, we don't get those gun-like bangs that make us all envy the drummer his job, but everything else is here, and the bells again triumph. In fact, they dominate the ensemble, but the effect is good. The '1812' is a work that is usually sniffed at by musicians, but privately, I believe, most of the sniffers enjoy it. I have always enjoyed it (without sniffing), and, despite its obvious poverty in patches, it makes good hearing still. (Incidentally it brings back as few other works do the days when, thirty years ago, with no shillings to spare, I spent most of them on standing-room at the 'Proms.') This reproduction fills five sides, the remaining space being given to Tchaikovsky's 'Chant sans paroles'—a pianoforte piece which is rather overweighted in its orchestral transcription (L1764-6).

The 'Tannhäuser' Overture, conducted by Mengelberg, is admirably recorded in the matter of tone-colour and clearness. It is, however, a bit on the staid side. There is an odd change to a quicker pace at the start of the second side, which may be due to some freak in recording (L1770-1).

A good small-orchestra record is that of the Jean Lensen Orchestra in Hahn's 'L'heure exquise' and 'Paysage' (4011).

The Léner String Quartet gives a very sensitive performance of the slow movement from Smetana's 'Aus Meinem Leben' Quartet, the string tone being unusually well reproduced (L1767).

The latest W. H. Squire record is also, I think, the best—Fauré's 'Sicilienne' and his own 'Slumber Song.' The former is particularly good (partly because it is so much the better music), and the pianoforte accompaniment is far above the average (L1759).

Evlyn Howard-Jones's performance of Beethoven's C sharp minor Sonata is a welcome change from the exaggerated and rhythmless pianoforte playing that is so frequent to-day. He makes the Finale fiery without loss of clearness. A more sostenuto melody and a better-defined bass would have improved the opening Adagio; as it is, the triplets become rather too prominent. (This is a defect in recording rather than playing, no doubt.) It is to be hoped that students will note that in the Finale Mr. Howard-Jones sets them a good example, following Beethoven's directions by playing the constantly recurring rising arpeggio passage without crescendo. In ninety-nine times out of a hundred such a passage would carry a crescendo; this is the hundredth, but not many players observe the fact (9094-5).

Only two vocal records have been received: Muriel Brunskill in Dvorák's 'I will sing you songs of gladness' and Somervell's 'Cradle Song' (3987); and William Heseltine in 'The Song of Creation' and 'The Curing Song' from 'The Immortal Hour' (3976). Both are good, but the latter suffers from a pronounced wobble.

A record of Bransby Williams declaiming Henry V.'s Speech before Harfleur and 'The Charge of the Light Brigade' is as stirring as it ought to be, with a welcome freedom from the irritating mannerisms (especially halts) that make elocution so often an infliction instead of a delight. The Shakespeare is the better of the two—naturally. Mr. Williams has the right bold and gripping voice and incisive speech (4013).

H.M.V.

In the 'Cockaigne' Overture the great advance in orchestral recording is at least well maintained. Elgar, more than most composers, needs the extra touch of vividness that the new recording gives, and gramophonists who are not enthusiastic about this set must indeed be hard to please. The composer conducts a performance that seems to be lacking only a little in clearness at the start (D1110-1).

An operatic record off the beaten track is that of the Prologue from Boïto's 'Mefistofele,' made during the recent performance at Covent Garden. The choral singing is swamped at times by the orchestra. Chaliapin appears in the new rôle of siffleur, delivering a piercing whistle in order to drown the celestial harmony—which is a good deal less celestial than it might be. The problems of recording an actual stage performance have not been fully overcome here. The music is not of first-rate interest, and again, one wonders at the fuss made over Boïto in some quarters (D1109).

Another choral and orchestral recording made during public performance is that of the Royal Choral Society in four movements from the B minor Mass, conducted by Dr. Bairstow—'Crucifixus,' 'Qui tollis,' 'Pater Omnipotentem,' and 'Hosanna.' Here again one feels that better results might have been achieved by a smaller force in an area less vast. The orchestral parts are mostly excellent, but there is a lack of clearness in the choral parts at times, and once or twice the high notes are not quite reached. On behalf of public recordings of this type, however, it has to be said that they impress in a way of their own (D1113-4).

In Walter's 'Prize Song' and the Finale from the 'Mastersingers,' the soloists are Tudor Davies and Robert Radford. The former makes too hard work of it, and seems even more than usually constricted. Not thus, surely, are Evas won! Mr. Radford has the right dignity. The strong point is the orchestral reproduction—indeed, one's attention constantly wanders from the voice. In the Finale we seem to see Wagner writing an orchestral movement, and fitting in a part for the singer afterwards, giving him something worth singing if it happened to fit, otherwise . . . (D1021).

Two types of modern Spanish music are well contrasted in the record of Marcelle Meyer playing Albeniz's 'Sous le Palmier' and the 'Danse du Meunier,' from de Falla's 'Three-Cornered Hat'—the one languid and somewhat conventional in rhythm and harmony, the other full of 'kick.' The playing is first-rate, and the tone unusually good (E434).

I have heard Heifetz more seductive in tone than in his latest record, but that may be due to the new process, which has, from the first, been less than kind to violin tone. He plays an arrangement of Debussy's 'La Plus que Lente' (which rather loses in transcription), a couple of Minuets from Bach's sixth Sonata for solo violin (making light of the technical difficulties, of course), and Couperin's 'The Little Windmills,' another transcription, in which the close becomes merely a scurry (DB945).

Chaliapin's singing-cum-acting of 'The Two Grenadiers' and Glinka's 'Midnight Review,' are so familiar that the record enables us mentally to see him as well as hear him. In the Schumann song, as usual, we are reminded that a famous singer may steal a horse while you or I look over the hedge at our peril. 'The Midnight Review' is very effectively recorded, with its tolling bell and other ominous features. The singing is better, too, with an arresting final diminuendo (DB933).

I have not heard Elisabeth Schumann at first hand, so I am not able to say whether the gramophone does her full justice. I expected rather more flexibility and purity of tone than is shown in 'Batti, batti' and 'Voi che sapete.' True, there is not much cause for complaint, but when a singer achieves so brilliant a success as did Fräulein Schumann at Covent Garden recently, one expects something more out of the way than one gets in this instance. The orchestral recording is delightful—in fact, I doubt if enough notice is taken of the recent marked improvement in orchestral accompaniment of vocal solos. We now have excellent balance between voice and orchestra, plus clear texture and faithful colour (DB946).

It goes without saying that Peter Dawson makes the most of his chances in 'O Star of Eve' and 'Even bravest hearts may swell' (C1267).

Organ records are at present in the state of being good in parts. 'The Hallelujah Chorus' makes resounding effects, but inevitably such purely vocal passages as the repeated note phrase for 'King of kings' seems pointless when merely played. Mendelssohn's 'Wedding March' is effective on the whole, but Mr. Herbert Dawson's time and rhythm are very erratic (and none too good in the Handel). The gramophone picks out an E in the solo reed passages with strident effect; pedal reed shows an improvement (C1271).

Other records are of Sir Harry Lauder ('The waggle o' the kilt' and 'The Wedding of Sandy McNab') (D1112); the Gresham Singers ('Indian Dawn' and 'Lindy Lady'—vocal fox-trots) (B2332); Mavis Bennett (weak songs by Lehmann and Sanderson, not very well sung, and poor in diction) (B2190); John Turner (too good a voice for such things as 'Maire, my girl' and Geehl's 'For you alone') (2331); the Salon Trio (arrangements of 'A Perfect Day' and 'Mother Machree') (B2329); and the Coldstreams Band (Michaelis's 'Turkish Patrol' and Sousa's 'Stars and Stripes,' both excellently played and recorded. A good Sousa march is worth stacks of symphonised syncopation) (B2330).

VOCALION

No orchestral or chamber music records are in this month's parcel.

Sapellnikoff's records are usually so good that perhaps I have come to expect too much. Anyhow, his latest, of the 'Flying Dutchman' Spinning Song, as arranged by Liszt, and that composer's 'Valse Impromptu' (both abridged) seem rather tinkling and ineffective. His playing is brilliant enough, so perhaps it is a matter of recording (A0266).

Of the two performances of Adila Fachiri that of the Mozart Adagio (from a Divertimento) is the better. The Bach Gavotte in E (unaccompanied) sails along capitally till about midway, when there is a bad patch rhythmically. Is it a slip of memory, or an unusually free bit of interpretation? (K05247).

It is a pity Phyllis Archibald turns on the tremolo stop at the beginning, and leaves it on throughout her two songs—'O mio Fernando,' from 'La Favorita,' and 'Les tringles des sistres tintaient,' from 'Carmen.' At times she leaves us guessing as to the melodic line, and a habit that does that surely cannot be defended. The orchestral part in both songs is unusually good, especially in the 'Carmen' number (K05245).

Selma d'Arco also has a tendency to unsteadiness at times; but her tone is beautiful and expressive, and easily produced over a wide range. She sings the Bird Song from 'Pagliacci,' and 'Depuis le jour' from 'Louise,' being especially good in the latter (A0265).

With less power Horace Stevens's latest record would be an outstanding success. He sings 'Sulla Poppa' from Ricci's 'La Prigione di Edinburgo,' and Henschel's 'Young Dietrich,' both with orchestra. The most is made of the drama in Henschel's ballad, and the Ricci piece is tremendously exciting, the orchestral part being brilliant. We get the words only in patches; the occasional stridency kills them. When Mr. Stevens realises the difference between a large concert hall and the recording room he will be a big gramophone success (K05246).

A capital baritone is Howett Worster, who is recorded in a couple of songs from 'The Gondoliers'—'No possible doubt whatever' and the Gavotte Song, both with chorus. But his diction is on the casual side at times (X9836).

NATIONAL GRAMOPHONIC SOCIETY

The latest issues are of Mozart's Clarinet Quintet in A, with the Adagio from his Duet in G for violin and viola filling the odd side in four records; Purcell's Fantasia in C minor for string quartet, and Fantasia in three parts (violin, viola, and violoncello); and McEwen's 'Peat Reek.' The players in the Mozart are the Spencer Dyke Quartet and Charles Draper; in the remainder, the Music Society String Quartet. It must be confessed by all save the out-and-out Mozart enthusiast that the chief beauty and interest in the Quintet are in the playing and recording, which are of the first order. The music has its moments, but on the whole it is too consistently slight and amiable for many of us. There are many passages suggestive of a kind of composing machine rather than of a heaven-sent genius. The Purcell Fantasias are far stronger, and startingly modern in places. The searching yet delicate beauty of some of the music is such that I had to hear some passages over and over again. The Society puts us all in debt by making such fine stuff available. The little McEwen piece—imaginative and wistful—is a worthy companion. The playing of all these string pieces is beautifully finished, with the right restraint, yet always alive.

ANGLO-FRENCH MUSIC COMPANY

Commendable enterprise is shown by Trinity College in the issue of a couple of records of pianoforte pieces from the syllabus, played by Alec Rowley. On one record (2077) is Chopin's F minor Nocturne, Op. 55, and the Rondo from Beethoven's early Sonata in E; on the other (2076), No. 1 of MacDowell's Six Poems, Quilter's 'Pipe and Tabor,' Holbrooke's Study in F, and Cramer's Study in D. Mr. Rowley plays excellently, and the only fault in the records is the rather noisy surface.

THE NEW COLUMBIA GRAMOPHONE

The demonstration of the Viva-Tonal gave us too little of this new instrument. Speeches there had to be, of course, but they were unnecessarily long, and as a result the actual demonstration was limited to three records—the last side of the '1812' Overture, a desperately poor song, and a pianoforte solo. The improvement in the first seemed to lie mainly in the balance, the orchestra standing up better against the din of the bells; the song was more sonorous generally; most marked of all was the result in the pianoforte solo—some Chopin played by Irene Scharrer. That was easily the best bit of pianoforte recording I have ever heard. Of course we then wanted to hear examples of chamber music, &c., and perhaps most of all a solo violin. But time did not permit. True, the instrument was being shown off in an adjacent room, so that we could give it a further hearing on our way out. But as I found nothing but fox-trots being played, I left with my curiosity unsatisfied. There could be no doubt as to the Viva-Tonal being an advance on the Grafonola, but the extent of the improvement, and how far it applies to records of a type other than the three we heard, can only be settled by another hearing under more normal conditions than those of a large hall. I hope to test it further, and report.

Wireless Notes

By 'Ariel'

With a small, but very vocal, section of the musical public the B.B.C. can do nothing right. A year or two ago it was blamed for half emptying the concert-halls. Then the Company began to give public concerts and refill the halls, and was roundly abused for competing with existing concert-giving organizations. The projected series of concerts at the Albert Hall has revived this objection. One would have thought that any enterprise likely to induce a large section of the public to resume concert-going would be welcomed by agents, players, and all others concerned. If this particular series enables a few thousand people to enjoy at first-hand, and a million or two by radio, performances on an unusual scale, of works rarely heard, so much the better for the musical life of the country, and for concert professionals, from conductor to programme-seller.

In engaging a few prominent foreign conductors and soloists, the B.B.C. is merely adopting the policy pursued for years past by the L.S.O., and (as regards soloists) by the Queen's Hall Orchestra—with, however, the sound excuse (if excuse be needed) that the audience will not consist of a thousand people in Langham Place, or even of a million throughout the country, but will include a host on the Continent. Let the B.B.C. go ahead with as many projects of the kind as possible. Anything which stimulates interest in music is, in the long run, good for the professional musician. The worst it can do is to shift the sphere of his activities, and modify some of its conditions.

The scheme of international chamber concerts is of first-rate importance, and will give listeners a unique opportunity of getting on terms with contemporary music. In an even greater degree than the Albert Hall series, these chamber concerts are of a type that could not be undertaken by any ordinary musical organization. Both schemes show that the B.B.C. fully realises its responsibilities and potentialities in regard to music, and there is no room for criticism except in regard to details on which there is bound to be divergence of opinion.

It is highly satisfactory that the short daily pianoforte recitals have proved so popular as to warrant their continuance, and an extension of the idea into other departments of solo music. The programmes for the next few months make good reading, but there is one very bad blemish that surely might have been avoided. Although many sonatas contain movements that may be detached without loss, there can be no doubt that, as a rule, such works should be heard complete. Some time ago I ventured to complain of the breaking up of the Mozart Sonatas in such a way that evening after evening the recital opened with the Finale of a work whose first two movements had been played the day before. One would have thought that the unsatisfactory nature of this method was so obvious that it would be avoided in future. It is an irritating surprise to see that the Beethoven Sonatas are to be maltreated in the same way—with far worse results than was the case with Mozart, because so many of the Beethoven Sonatas were designed as wholes rather than as a group of movements. One of the worst instances is that of the 'Adieu' Sonata. On October 15 the recital opens with the Finale of the 'Appassionata' (which, of course, makes a hash of Beethoven's scheme, as the middle movement should lead into the Finale without break), and ends with the first movement of the 'Adieu' (presumably what the programme calls the first movement includes also the short 'Absence' section). On the following evening the player begins with the Finale of the 'Adieu,' and fills up the remaining time with an unimportant 'Album Leaf.' Now, the 'Adieu' Finale is the weak half of the Sonata, and we can only overlook its comparative poverty when it is played under its label, 'The Return,' as a sequel to the 'Adieu' and the 'Absence' sections. It then justifies itself by its high spirits, and as a contrast to the preceding movements. The 'Album Leaf' should have followed the 'Appassionata,' and the 'Adieu' Sonata could then have been played complete. A glance through the Beethoven fortnight shows that with a little adjustment all the breaks were avoidable. True, a few extra minutes might have been necessary, but they might surely have been provided at the cost of some of the less interesting talks and other events. In fact, seeing how popular these recitals have become, it is surprising that the original fifteen minutes should not have been stretched to twenty, or even twenty-five in the case of sonatas. The absurdity of the present method reaches its climax on Saturday, October 9, when the recital gives us the Finale of one Sonata, and the first movement of another, the conclusion of the latter being held over till the Monday!

The much-talked-of 'Wheel of Time,' by the Sitwell family, was a fiasco not worth the sitting up till midnight. The idea itself had possibilities, but these were not developed. The chief weakness, however, lay in the attempt to compare things which had nothing in common. The group of old music-hall songs should have been balanced by groups of present-day examples, and by specimens of a type that might conceivably be that of the near future. But do the Sitwells really suppose that the music-hall audience (or, indeed, any other audience) will ever be listening to obscure Sitwellian rhymes, recited not too clearly in a sing-song style, against a background of music by W. T. Walton? The best part of the 'To-morrow' section, however, was this musical background. Mr. Walton is clearly an adept at the concoction of amusing instrumental sounds. His 'Portsmouth Point' has been so well spoken of, that it is a pity he should waste his time and gifts on such futilities as 'The Wheel of Time' and 'Façade,' the grotesque show given recently by the Sitwells. It is not a hopeful sign that another young composer, Mr. Constant Lambert, should also show leanings towards this bleak preciosity. True, his part was merely to deliver the Sitwell poems (which he did in such a way as to add indistinctness to their obscurity), but the association is ominous.

No. 1430. BY MARYKIRK, A SWEET BIRD SANG.—William Jackson Price (3d.).

NOVELLO'S PART-SONG BOOK.

A COLLECTION OF PART-SONGS, GLEES, AND MADRIGALS.

For S.A.T.B. unless otherwise stated. Those marked thus * may be had in Tonic Sol-fa Notation.

No.
614	Absence	H. Goetz	3d.
217	* Do. (A.T.T.B.)	J. L. Hatton	3d.
181	* Do.	,,	2d.
67	Adieu love, adieu	G. A. Macfarren	4d.
312	Adieu, my native shore	Pearsall	3d.
943	Adieu, sweet Amaryllis	J. W. G. Hathaway	3d.
1227	Do. ...	C. Macpherson	4d.
390	Adieu to the woods	Egerton	4d.
658	Advice to lovers ...	P. W. Pilcher	3d.
1398	*After many a dusty mile	E. Elgar	4d.
913	After the battle arr.	T. R. G. Jozé	3d.
674	Ah, my dear Son (Carol, 3 V.) ...		4d.
1375	Ah! what is love ...	W. McNaught	4d.
515	Ah! woe is me (6 V.)	H. Lahee	6d.
648	Airley Beacon	C. V. Stanford	3d.
568	Airs of Summer ...	J. L. Roeckel	3d.
17	All among the barley	E. Stirling	3d.
971	*All for my true love	H. D. Wetton	4d.
81	All is not gold that shineth bright in snow (5 V.)	W. J. Westbrook	4d.
394	*All is still ...	G. A. Macfarren	2d.
802	All Souls' Day	J. Rheinberger	4d.
59	All ye woods and trees and bow'rs	J. L. Hatton	2d.
83	* Do. (5 V.)	H. Lahee	2d.
940	Do. ...	H. W. Wareing	4d.
1037	*Allan Water arr.	H. E. Button	3d.
478	*Allen-a-Dale ...	C. H. Lloyd	6d.
1020	* Do. ...	... J. B. McEwen	4d.
334	Already snow has fallen	R. Franz	2d.
113	Alton Locke's Song	G. A. Macfarren	2d.
1011	*Amaryllis I did woo	J. E. West	3d.
1322	*American National Songs (Three)		2d.
972	Amintor's well-a-day	J. E. West	4d.
1364	An address to the nightingale	W. W. Pearson	4d.
175	An Autumn song ...	C. Pinsuti	4d.
20	An emigrant's song	W. Macfarren	3d.
1074	*An Empire song	A. C. Mackenzie	4d.
1053	An end will I bring	Schubert	4d.
1387	*An old Song resung	H. B. Gardiner	6d.
485	And then no more ...	R. Raff	3d.
1103	*Angelic hunter, The	arr. J. Brahms	4d.
1091	Angel's call, The	I. I. Viotta	2d.
960	*Angel's greeting, The	J. Brahms	4d.
1167	*Angelus (Tuscany)	E. Elgar	6d.
1340	*Anglers, The	W. W. Pearson	3d.
30	Angler's Trysting-tree, The	C. W. Corfe	4d.
1039	*Annie Laurie arr.	H. E. Button	3d.
108	Annie Lee	J. Barnby	2d.
182	April showers ...	J. L. Hatton	2d.
218	Do. (A.T.T.B.)	,,	2d.
1318	*Arethusa, The ...	W. Shield	4d.
137	Arise, sweet love ...	H. Leslie	2d.
97	Arise, the sunbeams hail	F. Berger	4d.
520	Around the maypole tripping	J. L. Hatton	2d.
859	*Arranmore Boat Song arr.	T. R. G. Jozé	6d.
457	*Arrow and the song, The	W. Hay	4d.
973	As Amoret with Phillis sat	John E. West	3d.
1054	As dewdrops at morn	Schubert	4d.
525	As I saw fair Clora	F. Corder	4d.
146	As it fell upon a day ...	S. Reay	4d.
619	As the ripples flow	E. A. Sydenham	3d.
1052	As the watcher longs	Schubert	4d.
900	As through the land	J. Pullein	3d.
796	*As torrents in summer	E. Elgar	3d.
1180	As when the sun renews his strength (Madrigal)	C. E. Miller	4d.
1257	*Ash Grove, The arr.	Dunhill	4d.
1105	At Andernach in Rhineland	Abt	4d.
393	At first the mountain rill	G. A. Macfarren	2d.
981	At her fair hands ...	J. Elliott	3d.
788	Do. ...	C. H. H. Parry	4d.
335	At parting	R. Franz	2d.
358	*At the coming of the Spring	J. L. Hatton	4d.
195	Auburn	,,	4d.
582	*Auld Lang Syne arr.	E. Land	2d.
71	Autolycus' Song	C. A. Macirone	2d.
1066	* Do. ...	C. Lee Williams	4d.
158	Autumn	W. Macfarren	4d.
274	Do. (T.T.B.B.)	,,	4d.
353	Do. ...	A. C. Mackenzie	2d.
1162	Autumn fields, The	N. W. Gade	4d.
464	Autumn is come again (5 V.)	F. Corder	4d.
403	Autumn song	S. Reay	4d.
683	Do. ...	...J. Rheinberger	3d.
484	Ave Maria	J. Raff	4d.
241	* Do.	H. Smart	2d.
968	*Awake, awake ...	G. Bantock	4d.
76	*Awake, awake, the flow'rs unfold	H. Leslie	2d.
25	Awake the starry midnight hour	Mendelssohn	3d.
923	*Away to the woodlands	H. W. Warner	4d.
978	*Baby's feet, like sea shells pink, A	C. H. Lloyd	4d.
225	Bacchanalian Song (A.T.T.B.)	J. L. Hatton	4d.
193	Bait, The (Come live with me)	J. L. Hatton	2d.
996	*Ballad, A (8 V.) ...	T. Wendt	4d.
1016	Ballade of Midsummer	,,	4d.
1017	Ballade of Spring	,,	6d.
1044	*Battle of the Baltic, The	C. H. Lloyd	6d.
861	*Battle song, A arr.	T. R. G. Jozé	4d.
578	Do. ...	E. A. Sydenham	4d.
1334	*Beacon, The ...	A. Carse	4d.
689	Beauty, arise ...	K. J. Pye	4d.
841	Before me careless lying (5 V.)	C. H. Lloyd	6d.
1238	*Beleaguered, The	A. S. Sullivan	3d.
56	*Belfry Tower, The	J. L. Hatton	2d.
1311	*Belgian National song	F. Campenhout	2d.
572	Bells across the snow	Ch. Gounod	4d.
432	*Bells of St. Michael's Tower, The	W. Knyvett (5 V.), arr. R. P. Stewart	6d.
1271	*Ben Bowlegs (humorous)	W. W. Pearson	4d.
984	Bendemeer's Stream	J. Pointer	4d.
1216	Beside the river ...	A. Jensen	3d.
793	Better music ne'er was known	C. H. H. Parry	4d.
184	*Beware	J. L. Hatton	2d.
220	Do. (A.T.T.B.)	,,	2d.
111	*Bird of the Wilderness	J. Barnby	4d.
196	Do.	J. L. Hatton	4d.
1157	Birds are singing, The	Hans Sitt	3d.
798	Birthday serenade, A	G. J. Elvey	4d.
1308	Birthright, The ...	...E. Elgar	4d.
300	*Bishop of Mentz, The	Pearsall	2d.
1107	*Black Monk, The (Welsh folk-song) arr.	R. Boughton	4d.
55	*Blow, blow thou winter wind	G. A. Macfarren	2d.
1254	Blow, breeze, from the North	G. Elvey	4d.
1369	Blow, western wind	Pearson	4d.
661	*Blue-bottle's fate, The (humorous)	A. H. Ashworth	4d.
544	Blue-eyed lassie, The	F. Brandeis	3d.
933	*Blwyddyn Bywyd	D. Protheroe	4d.
187	Blythe is the Bird	J. L. Hatton	3d.
399	*Boat Song ...	H. Leslie	2d.
357	* Do.	E. Prout	6d.
1088	Do.	F. Schubert	3d.
385	Boat, The	R. Schumann	4d.
3	Boating Song ...	E. G. Monk	3d.
521	*Boatman's Good-night, The	F. Schira	2d.
545	*Bonnie Bell	A. C. Mackenzie	3d.
1310	*Boy, The (humorous)	Brewer	4d.
63	*Break, break on thy cold grey stones, O sea	G. A. Macfarren	2d.
99	Breathe soft, ye winds	J. B. Calkin	2d.
1307	* Do.	W. Paxton	2d.
878	Bridal Song ...	H. Leslie	6d.
639	Bright be thy dreams	Oliver King	3d.
402	*Bright-hair'd morn, The	S. Reay	4d.
584	Bright Moon ...	John E. West	3d.
1222	*Bring me a golden pen	F. H. Cowen	4d.
601	Broken Flower, The	Oliver King	3d.
447	Brook, The	C. G. Reissiger	4d.
1015	*Brownies, The	Moellendorff	4d.
1416	Bushes and Briars ...	(arr.)	3d.
223	Busy, curious, thirsty fly (A.T.T.B.)	J. L. Hatton	3d.
743	*Butterfly, The	J. Blumenthal	6d.
1095	*By a gentle river laid	John E. West	4d.
1002	*By the waters of Babylon	P. Cornelius	3d.
1141	By woodland and wayside	E. Franz	3d.
1272	Call John (humorous)	arr. W. W. Pearson	4d.
1122	Calm is the lake	F. Abt	4d.
359	Calm night	J. L. Hatton	4d.
380	Calm of the sea, The	H. Hiles	6d.
911	*Capture of Cremona, The	arr. T. R. G. Jozé	4d.
314	Caput apri defero...	...Pearsall	4d.
178	*Caravan, The ...	C. Pinsuti	2d.
1251	*Cargoes ...	H. B. Gardiner	4d.
1273	Carrion Crow, The (humorous)	W. W. Pearson	4d.
607	Cavalier, The ...	C. Goodall	4d.
529	Cavalry song	C. A. Macirone	4d.
635	Cephalus and Procris	A. W. Batson	4d.
482	Chafer's Wedding, A (humorous)	Lewandowski	8d.
1087	Chapel, The ...	C. Kreutzer	4d.
427	*Charge of the Light Brigade, The	E. Hecht	6d.
85	*Charm me asleep (6 V.)	H. Leslie	4d.
906	Do. ...	J. B. McEwen	4d.
847	*Chase, The ...	E. German	4d.
757	Cherry ripe ...	A. H. Brewer	3d.
583	Do.	arr. E. Land	2d.
1255	* Do.	W. G. Ross	3d.
731	Do. (6 V.)	S. P. Waddington	4d.
1212	Cheshire cheese, The	arr. J. C. Bridge	4d.
734	Chi la Gagliarda ...	B. Donato	4d.
375	Chieftain to the Highland bound, A	Pearsall	3d.
466	* Do.	O. Prescott	6d.
94	Childhood's melody	F. Berger	2d.
101	Chivalry of Labour, The (5 V.)	J. B. Calkin	6d.
1145	Chloe, that dear bewitching prude	H. Willan	3d.
1147	*Chorus of Empire	C. A. E. Harriss	4d.
66	*Christmas...	G. A. Macfarren	2d.
1109	*Christmas greeting, A	E. Elgar	8d.
314	Christmas song, A ...	Pearsall	4d.
967	Do.	M. Praetorius	3d.
845	Close to my heart...	W. Davies	4d.
677	*Clouds, The	J. Rheinberger	4d.
823	*Come again, sweet days	J. Dowland	3d.
726	*Come away ...	E. German	4d.
873	* Do.	H. Parker	6d.
1169	Come away, come away, death	arr. Arne	3d.
36	Do. (5 V.)	G. A. Macfarren	4d.
51	* Do. (5 V.)	,,	4d.
58	Come celebrate the May	Hatton	2d.
668	Come, fairies, trip it ...	F. Iliffe	4d.
102	Come fill, my boys (A.T.T.B.)	J. B. Calkin	4d.
118	*Come follow me A.	Zimmermann	2d.
1143	Come forth, the summer's murmur hear ...	E. Franz	3d.
14	Come, heavy sleep	J. Dowland	3d.
745	Come if you dare... ...	Purcell	6d.
1210	Come, lasses and lads	arr. J. C. Bridge	4d.
899	Come let me take thee	J. Pullein	3d.
317	Come let us be merry	Pearsall	2d.
507	*Come live with me	W. S. Bennett	2d.
360	Do. ...	J. L. Hatton	4d.
193	Do. (The Bait) ...	,,	2d.
497	Come, May, with all thy flowers	J. L. Gregory	3d.
1052	Come, O come, dearest, come	Schubert	4d.
671	Come o'er the burn, Bessie (3 V.)		3d.
1214	Come out across the heather	A. Jensen	4d.
791	*Come, pretty wag, and sing	C. H. H. Parry	3d.
38	Come sleep... ...	J. Benedict	4d.
1060	Do. ...	J. W. G. Hathaway	3d.
1110	* Do. ...	R. H. Walthew	2d.
945	Do. ...	A. G. Wathall	4d.
1007	*Come to me, gentle sleep	Cowen	4d.
701	Do. ...	H. W. Schartau	4d.
713	Come, tuneful friends (humorous)	C. H. Lloyd	4d.
1032	Come with me, fairest	J. Brahms	4d.
615	Comfort	H. Goetz	3d.
999	*Comfort in tears...	P. Cornelius	6d.
1422	Coming through the Craigs o' Kyle	A. Rowley	4d.
1182	*Comrades' song of hope, The	arr. A. Adam	3d.
383	Confidence (8 V.) ...	R. Schumann	4d.

NOVELLO'S PART-SONG BOOK.

A COLLECTION OF PART-SONGS, GLEES, AND MADRIGALS.

For S.A.T.B. unless otherwise stated. Those marked thus * may be had in Tonic Sol-fa Notation.

No.
1062	*On Himalay ...	G. Bantock	4d.
1402	*On May morning	E. Boyce	4d.
450	On the water ...	R. De Cuvry	4d.
752	Onaway	G. Pringle	4d.
480	*Once a maiden ...	F. Champneys	4d.
133	One morning sweet in May	Leslie	4d.
171	Only thou	H. Smart	2d.
1393	*Orpheus with his lute (4-pt.)	E. German	4d.
1394	Do. (8-pt.)	,,	6d.
12	Do. (S.S.T.B.)	G. A. Macfarren	6d.
49	* Do.	,,	2d.
1225	*Our island home	E. Faning	4d.
1	Our native land ...	G. Reichardt	3d.
1226	*Our sailor king ...	C. H. Lloyd	4d.
1234	Out of a silence (8 V.)	G. Rathbone	8d.
1129	Out of the darkness (8 V.)	G. Bantock	8d.
1190	*Out upon it	C. H. H. Parry	3d.
1414	Over hill, over dale	Ed. Bunnett	4d.
209	Do.	J. L. Hatton	4d.
1368	Over the mountain side	Pearson	4d.
1059	*Owls, The ...	...E. Elgar	6d.
1354	Oyster dredgers, The	Pearson	3d.
481	Pack, clouds, away	C. H. Lloyd	4d.
1266	Do. ...	W. W. Starmer	4d.
123	Do. ...	A. Zimmermann	4d.
202	Parting and meeting	J. L. Hatton	3d.
154	Parting gleams	A. S. Sullivan	2d.
675	Pastime with good company (A.T.B.) ...	King Henry VIII.	4d.
1379	Peace ...	C. Lee Williams	3d.
1315	Peace (A fable) (humorous)	J. F. Bridge	6d.
546	Peace be around thee	R. F. Ellicott	4d.
659	Peace, come away	C. V. Stanford	3d.
808	Peace of God, The	Rheinberger	3d.
61	Pearl divers, The	J. L. Hatton	6d.
22	Pedlar's song ...	J. Douland	3d.
1285	Perfection (6 V.)	A. C. Mackenzie	8d.
612	*Persevere... ...	H. Goetz	3d.
1201	*Phillida flouts me	Williams	4d.
588	Phillis	...W. Hay	4d.
655	*Phœbe	...C. V. Stanford	4d.
104	Phœbus	J. Barnby	2d.
1114	Phyllis is my only joy ...	West	4d.
275	Pibroch of Donuil Dhu (T.T.B.B.)	W. Macfarren	4d.
1339	Do. ...	W. W. Pearson	4d.
1420	Pilgrim Fathers, The	P. E. Fletcher	4d.
74	*Pilgrims, The ...	H. Leslie	2d.
927	*Poet's complaint, The ...	West	4d.
329	Praise of good wine, The (T.T.B.B.)	Pearsall	3d.
706	*Praised be Diana	C. V. Stanford	3d.
964	*Prayer to Mary, A	J. Brahms	3d.
536	Present, The, or The bag of the bee ...	...C. C. Moseley	4d.
1115	Pride of youth, The	John E. West	4d.
136	Primrose, The ...	H. Leslie	2d.
1010	* Do. ...	...John E. West	3d.
1133	Prithee, why?	C. H. H. Parry	3d.
997	Do. (6 V.) ...	J. Stainer	4d.
1073	Promise	... J. Lyon	4d.
1344	Promised land, The	M. B. Foster	4d.
1115	Proud Maisie is in the wood	John E. West	4d.
170	Psalm of life, A ...	H. Smart	2d.
1229	*Puck is King ...	... F. Idle	4d.
313	*Purple glow the forest mountains	Pearsall	3d.
446	Queen and huntress	J. Booth	6d.
244	Do.	H. Smart	2d.
1264	Do. ...	W. W. Starmer	3d.
473	Do.	B. Tours	4d.
700	Queen of fresh flowers	King Hall	4d.
1022	Queen of May, The (6 V.)	J. Stainer	4d.
1199	*Qui vive ...	A. C. Mackenzie	4d.
542	Radiant sister of the day	Ellicott	6d.
882	Rainbow, The ...	H. Leslie	4d.
150	*Rainy day, The	A. S. Sullivan	2d.
561	Rattlin', roaring, Willie	Schumann	3d.
559	Recruit, The ...	,,	3d.
403	Red o'er the forest	S. Reay	4d.
183	*Red, red rose ...	J. L. Hatton	2d.
219	Do. (A.T.T.B.)	,,	4d.
738	Do.	J. V. Roberts	3d
512	Do.	Schumann	3d.
1175	*Red sun is sinking, The	Leslie	6d.
308	Red wine flows, The (T.T.B.B.)	Pearsall	3d.
1260	Remembrance ...	A. Robins	4d.
371	Reproach, The ...	J. L. Hatton	2d.
696	Resignation ...	L. Spohr	4d.
1172	Rest (12 V.)	J. W. G. Hathaway	6d.
589	Do.	R. Mähllig	3d.
1124	Rest, dearest, rest	F. Kücken	4d.
445	Rest hath come	F. A. Marshall	3d.
774	*Rest thee, my little one	T. Facer	4d.
598	*Resting	F. H. Cowen	4d.
879	Resurgam	H. Leslie	6d.
806	Rhapsody ...	J. Rheinberger	4d.
807	Rhineland ...	,,	4d.
460	*Rhine-raft song, The	C. Pinsuti	4d.
618	Ring the joybells	E. A. Sydenham	4d.
518	Rise, fair goddess of the dawn	H. Smart	2d.
95	Rise, rise, for the day is passing	F. Berger	4d.
205	Rivals, The ...	J. L. Hatton	4d.
1042	*River floweth strong, my love, The	R. Rogers	6d.
291	River spirit's song, The (A.T.T.B.)	Pearsall	4d.
1370	River, The ...	W. W. Pearson	4d.
62	Robin Goodfellow	G. A. Macfarren	4d.
1327	*Rolling down to Rio	E. German	6d.
389	Rose and the soul, The	S. Egerton	2d.
555	Rose in October, The	W. Robinson	3d.
876	Rose of the garden, A	H. Leslie	6d.
860	Roses, ah! how fair ye be (6 V.)	H. Keeton	6d.
204	*Roses, The ...	J. L. Hatton	4d.
540	*Rosy dawn, The (8 V.)...	Lloyd	6d.
1406	Rough wind that moanest loud	John Pointer	3d.
552	Rover's joy, The ...	... F. Abt	3d.
599	*Rowing homewards	F. H. Cowen	4d.
833	Rule, Britannia	arr. V. Novello	4d.
1332	* Do. (in G) ...	arr. Arne	3d.
480	*Rustic coquettes	F. Champneys	4d.
1270	Ryghte merrie geste, A (humorous)	W. W. Pearson	6d.
1090	Sabbath call, The	C. Kreutzer	2d.
657	Sad hearts	A. H. Brewer	4d.
185	*Sailor's song, The	J. L. Hatton	2d.
222	* Do. (A.T.T.B.)...	,,	4d.
804	St. Mary's chapel	J. Rheinberger	3d.
1071	Saint Raphael ...	arr. J. Brahms	4d.
993	*Sands o' Dee, The	Oliver King	6d.
112	* Do. ...	G. A. Macfarren	2d.
830	Saw ye not the pallid angels	Mendelssohn	4d.
1296	*Say, what shall we dance	F. H. Cowen	6d.
1076	*Sea drift (8 V.)	Coleridge-Taylor	8d.
503	*Sea hath its pearls, The	C. Pinsuti	2d.
775	*Sea hath many a thousand sands, The	C. H. H. Parry	3d.
48	*Sea King, The ...	H. Smart	2d.
272	Sea song, A (T.T.B.B.)	W. Macfarren	4d.
448	Secret, The	C. G. Reissiger	4d.
302	See how smoothly glides our bark	Pearsall	3d
212	See the rooks are homeward flying	J. L. Hatton	4d.
411	*See where with rapid bound (6 V.)	L. Marenzio	4d.
522	Serenade (6 V.) ...	J. Brahms	3d.
1063	* Do. (8 V.) ...	H. Brian	8d.
1301	* Do.	...E. Elgar	6d.
595	* Do. (humorous) ...	Haydn	4d.
629	Do. ...	C. A. Macirone	3d.
25	Do.	Mendelssohn	3d
1368	Do. ...	W. W. Pearson	4d.
502	* Do.	C. Pinsuti	2d.
740	Shadows of the evening hours, The	J. Blumenthal	4d.
593	Shall I compare thee	J. H. Parry	4d.
712	Shall I tell you whom I love	A. Thomson	4d.
421	Do.	S. S. Wesley	4d.
751	Shall I wasting in despair	Elvey	3d.
235	Do. (A.T.T.B.)	J. L. Hatton	4d.
1261	*She is not fair to outward view	F. Idle	4d.
1094	Sheep shearing, The	arr. C. J. Sharp	4d.
709	*Shepherd Doron's Jig, The	C. V. Stanford	3d.
280	*Shepherds all and maidens fair	W. Macfarren	2d.
844	* Do.	... P. Pitt	3d.
712	Shepherd's choice, The	A. Thomson	4d.
720	Shepherd's elegy, The	,,	4d.
239	*Shepherd's farewell, The	Smart	2d.
409	Shepherd's pipes, The (5 V.)	L. Marenzio	4d
21	Shepherd's song, The	T. Brewer	4d.
1014	Do. ...	H. W. Wareing	4d.
730	*Shepherd's waking, The	Faning	4d.
990	She 's up and gone	J. Holbrooke	4d.
414	Shoot, false love, I care not (5 V.)	T. Morley	4d.
309	* Do.	... Pearsall	2d.
276	Shortest and longest (T.T.B.B.)	W. Macfarren	4d.
1297	*Shower, The ...	...E. Elgar	6d
124	*Sigh no more, ladies	G. A. Macfarren	4d.
1380	Do. ...	J. A. Sowerbutts	4d.
489	Silent happiness ...	... J. Raff	3d.
746	*Silent land, The...	E. Faning	8d.
1355	* Do.	A. R. Gaul	4d.
669	* Do.	John E. West	4d.
818	Do.	H. R. White	4d.
797	*Silent, O Moyle	arr. J. Seymour	3d
461	*Silent tide, The ...	C. Pinsuti	2d,
573	Simple flowers	F. Abt	3d.
765	*Since thou, O fondest	Parry	3d.
1285	Sinfonia domestica choralis (Perfection) (8 V.) (humorous)	A. C. Mackenzie	8d.
854	Sing a song of sixpence	Horsley	6d
117	Sing heigh ho	G. A. Macfarren	2d.
647	* Do. ...	C. V. Stanford	3d.
306	Sing we and chaunt it (8 V.)	Pearsall	3d
307	* Do. (4 V.)	,,	3d.
870	*Singers, The	A. C. Mackenzie	6d.
1321	*Sir Eglamore (Old English)	arr. H. B. Gardiner	4d.
950	*Sir Harold the hunter ...	West	6d.
68	*Sir Knight, Sir Knight, oh whither away	C. A. Macirone	2d.
929	*Sir Patrick Spens (8 V.)	Pearsall	6d.
333	* Do. (10 V.)... ...	,,	6d.
1160	Sir Spring doth ride	N. W. Gade	4d.
1372	Skaters, The	W. W. Pearson	4d.
111	*Skylark, The ...	J. Barnby	2d.
1060	Sleep ...	J. W. G. Hathaway	3d.
1110	* Do. ...	R. H. Walthew	2d.
539	Sleep, darling baby	R. Mähllig	4d.
1215	*Sleep, my little one	J. Brahms	2d.
395	*Sleep, the bird is in its nest (5 V.)	J. Barnby	4d.
267	* Do.	W. Macfarren	4d.
1240	*Sleeping	E. German	4d.
467	*Slow, slow, fresh fount (5 V.)	T. A. Walmisley	4d.
477	Slumber on, baby dear	Oliver King	4d.
1411	Sly thief ...	...M. Cavendish	2d.
939	Smith, The...	... R. Schumann	3d.
1149	*Snow, The ...	...E. Elgar	8d.
490	Snowdrops, The ...	... J. Raff	3d.
1275	Snow-white doe, The (humorous)	W. W. Pearson	6d.
897	*So saith my fair (6 V.)	Marenzio	4d.
702	So sweet a kiss ...	G. Sampson	4d,
735	Soft, soft wind ...	J. R. Dear	3d.
646	* Do. ...	C. V. Stanford	3d.
194	*Softly fall the shades of evening	J. L. Hatton	4d.
837	Softly, softly blow, ye breezes	G. Elvey	4d.
419	Do.	...E. Silas	3d.
1338	Soldier, rest	W. W. Pearson	1½d.
1294	* Do.	D. Stephen	4d.
1078	Solemnly, mournfully	J. W. Elliott	4d.
470	Do.	Oliver King	3d.
262	* Do. ...	W. Macfarren	4d.
142	* Do.	H. Smart	2d.
623	Song and summer	A. H. Brewer	4d.
248	*Song for the seasons, A	H. Smart	4d.
1200	*Song of love's coming, A	A. C. Mackenzie	4d.
725	Song of night ...	Mendelssohn	3d.
1230	*Song of Proserpine	S. Coleridge-Taylor	3d.
925	Song of summer	A. Moellendorff	4d.
433	*Song of the Battle-eve ...	Stewart	4d.
877	*Song of the flax-spinners	H. Leslie	2d.
297	Song of the Frank companies, The	Pearsall	4d.
1405	*Song of the gale ...	M. B. Foster	4d.
207	Song of the gipsy maiden, The	J. L. Hatton	2d.
1314	*Song of the grey seas ...	Fletcher	8d.
1006	*Song of the pedlar	C. Lee Williams	4d.

No. 1430 NOVELLO'S PART-SONG BOOK (SECOND SERIES) Price (3*d.*)

BY MARYKIRK, A SWEET BIRD SANG

FOUR-PART SONG

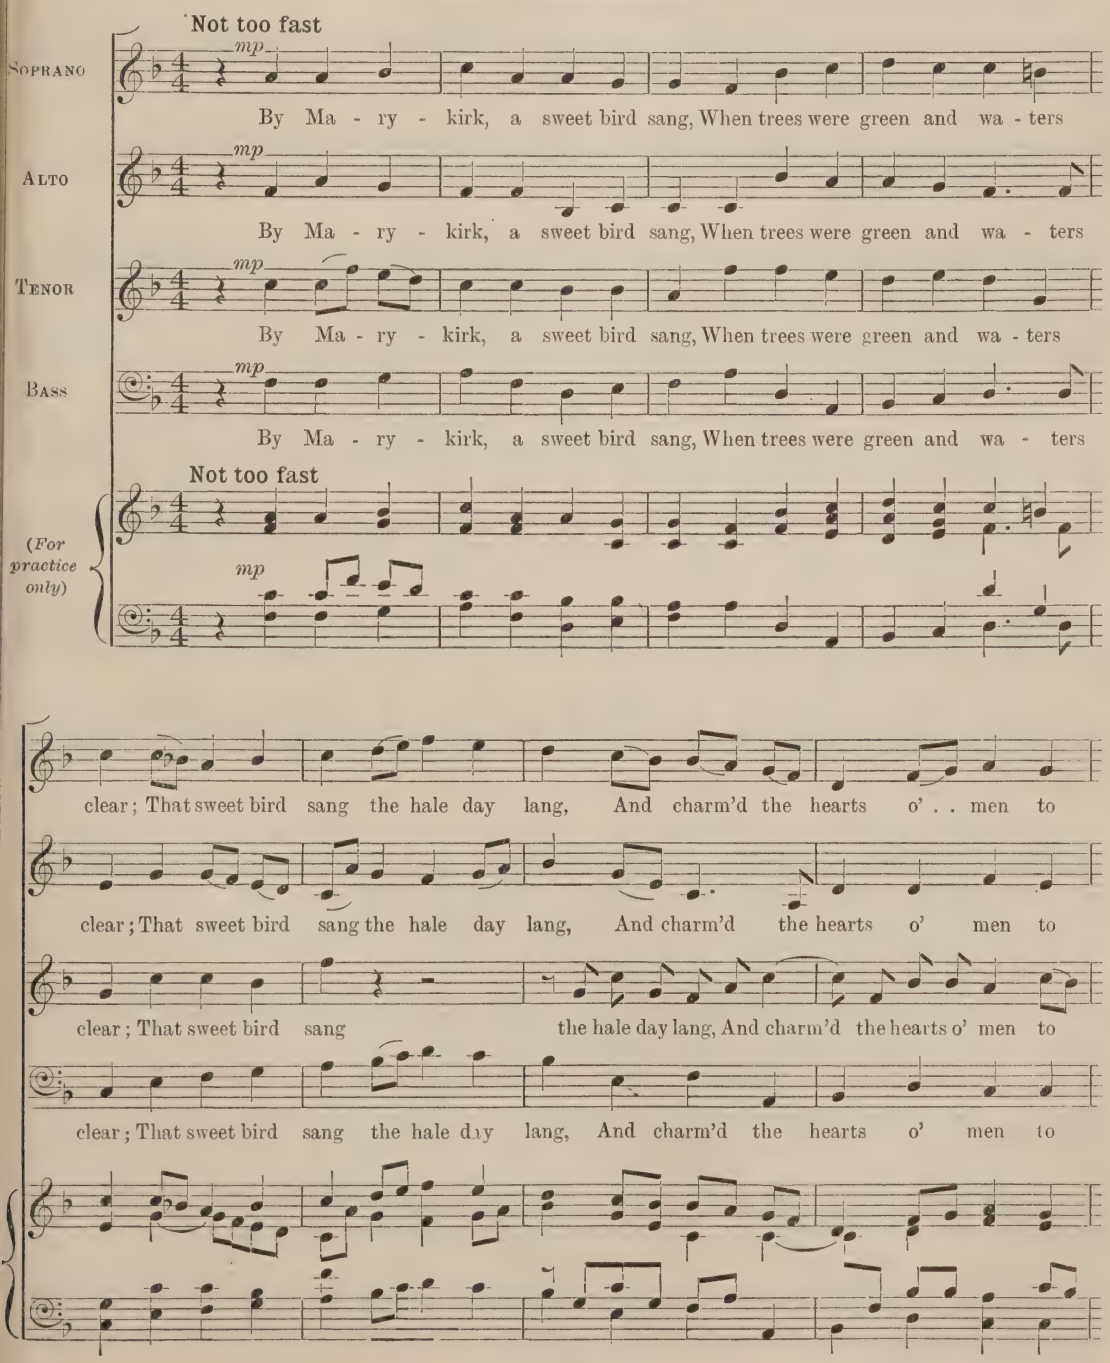
WORDS BY THOMAS WATSON

MUSIC BY

WILLIAM JACKSON

MASHAM

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.



Not too fast
SOPRANO
mp
By Ma - ry - kirk, a sweet bird sang, When trees were green and wa - ters
ALTO
mp
By Ma - ry - kirk, a sweet bird sang, When trees were green and wa - ters
TENOR
mp
By Ma - ry - kirk, a sweet bird sang, When trees were green and wa - ters
BASS
mp
By Ma - ry - kirk, a sweet bird sang, When trees were green and wa - ters
Not too fast
(For practice only)
mp clear; That sweet bird sang the hale day lang, And charm'd the hearts o' . . men to clear; That sweet bird sang the hale day lang, And charm'd the hearts o' men to clear; That sweet bird sang the hale day lang, And charm'd the hearts o' men to clear; That sweet bird sang the hale day lang, And charm'd the hearts o' men to p

cres.
hear. But down up - on a flow - 'ry bank, The wi - ly fowl - er laid his rall. e dim.
snare; And in a wea - ry pris - on cage, The sweet bird pin'd and sang nae mair.
a tempo
mp
By Ma - ry - kirk, there bloom'd a flow'r, Be - side the wind - ing Esk it grew; And, oh, it charm'd the sun - ny light, And il - ka wan - ton wind that grew; And, oh, it charm'd the sun - ny light, And il - ka wan - ton wind that grew; And, oh, it charm'd the sunny light, And il . ka wanton wind that grew; And, oh, it charm'd the sun - ny light, And il - ka wan - ton wind that p

cres.
blew. But rude hands pu'd that flower sae sweet, And fause lips kiss'd its leaves sae blew. But rude hands pu'd that flower sae sweet, And fause lips kiss'd its leaves sae blew. But rude hands pu'd that flower sae sweet, And fause lips kiss'd its leaves sae blew. But rude hands pu'd that flower sae sweet, And fause lips kiss'd its leaves sae rall. e dim.
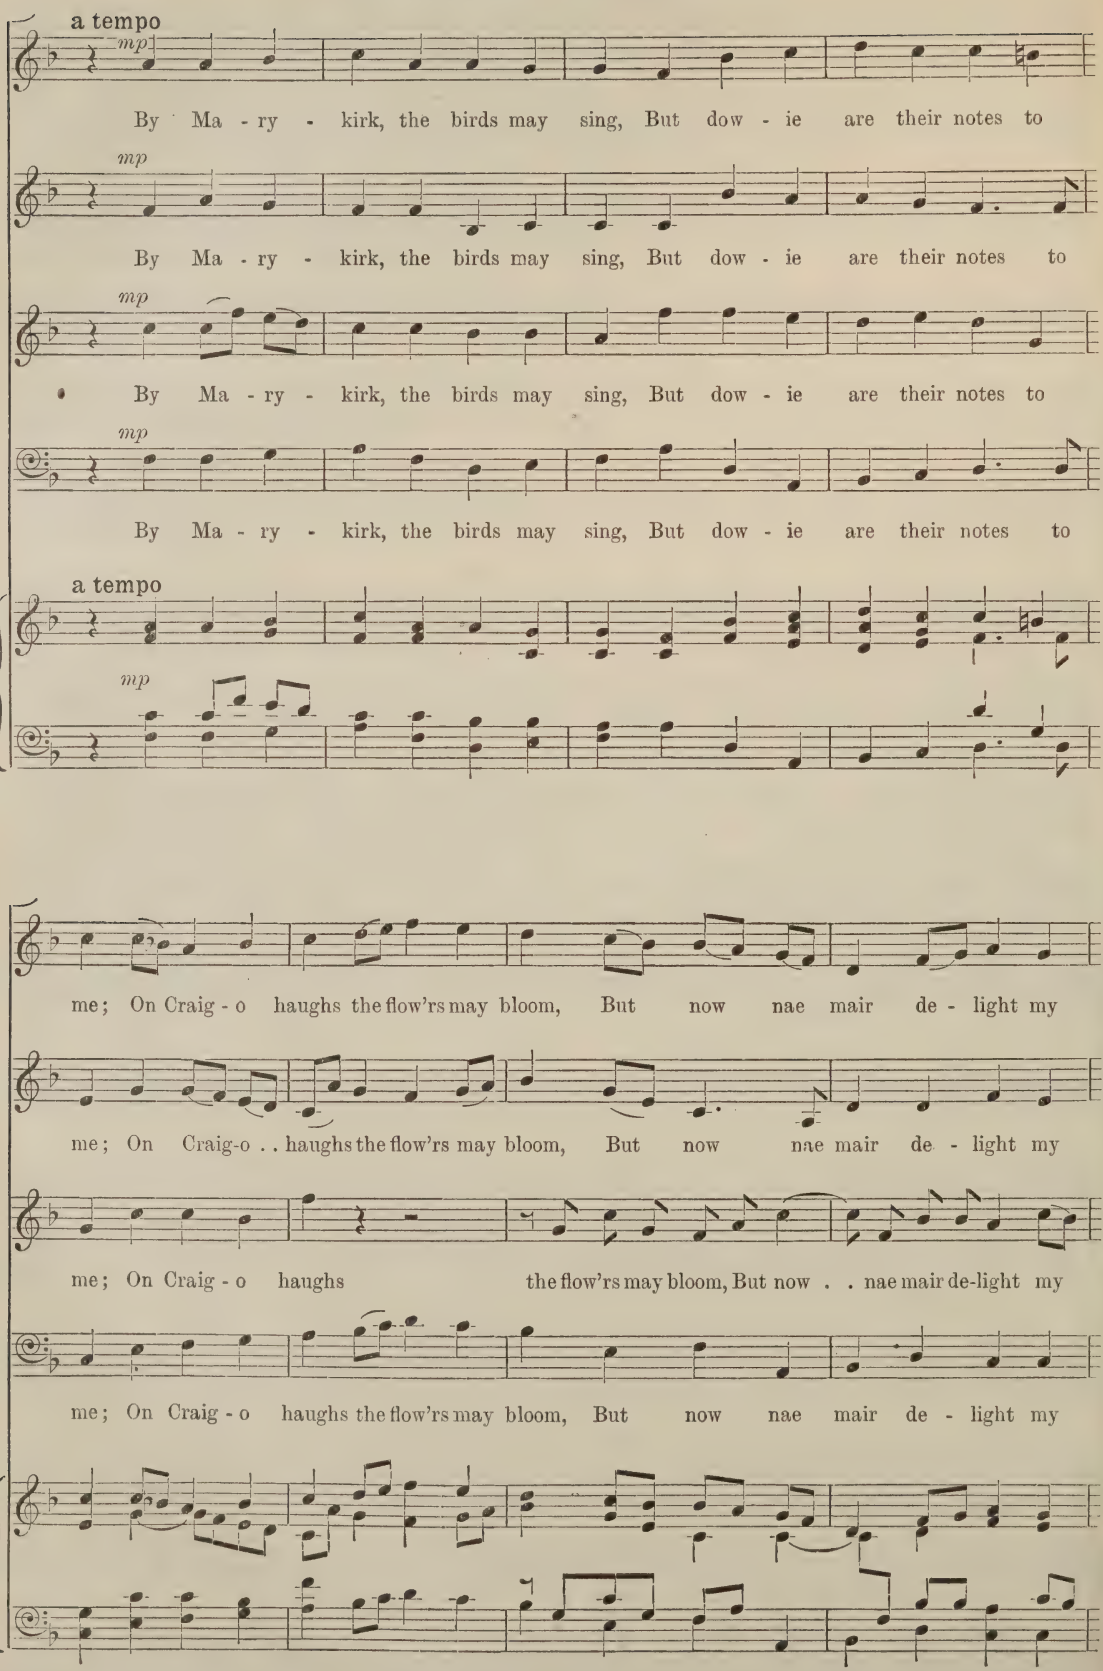
fair; It fa - ded in a cheer - less bow'r, And charm'd the sight o' . men nae mair.
fair; It . fa-ded in a . . cheer-less bow'r, And charm'd the sight o' men nae mair.
fair; It fa - ded in a cheer - less bow'r, And charm'd . the sight o' men nae mair.
fair; It fa - ded in a cheer - less bow'r, And charm'd the sight o' men nae mair.



a tempo
mp
By Ma - ry - kirk, the birds may sing, But dow - ie are their notes to
By Ma - ry - kirk, the birds may sing, But dow - ie are their notes to
By Ma - ry - kirk, the birds may sing, But dow - ie are their notes to
By Ma - ry - kirk, the birds may sing, But dow - ie are their notes to a tempo
mp
me; On Craig - o haughs the flow'rs may bloom, But now nae mair de - light my me; On Craig-o . . haughs the flow'rs may bloom, But now nae mair de - light my me; On Craig - o haughs the flow'rs may bloom, But now . . nae mair de-light my me; On Craig - o haughs the flow'rs may bloom, But now nae mair de - light my

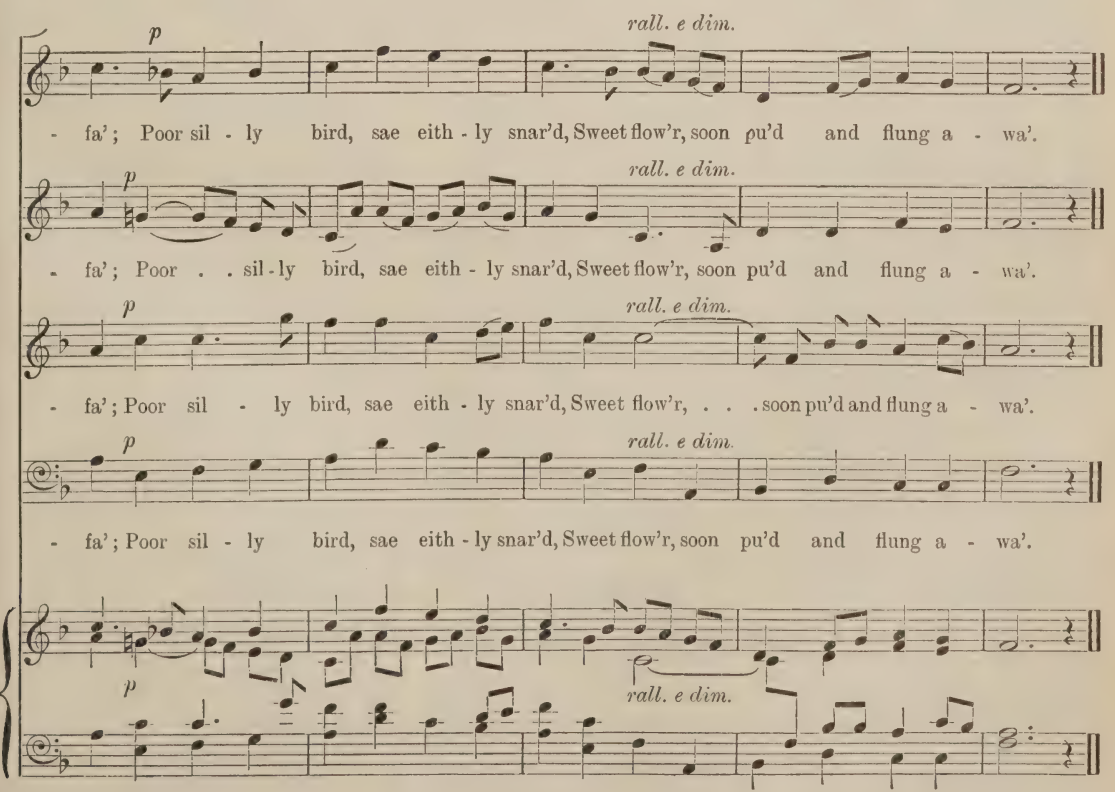
p
cres.
e'e. O Ma - ry! though ye did me wrang, I'm wae to think o' your down -
p
cres.
e'e. O Ma - ry! though ye did me wrang, I'm wae to think o' your down -
p
cres.
e'e. O Ma - ry! though ye did me wrang, I'm wae to think o' your down -
p
cres.
e'e. O Ma - ry! though ye did me wrang, I'm wae to think o' your down -
p
cres.



p
rall. e dim.
- fa'; Poor sil - ly bird, sae eith - ly snar'd, Sweet flow'r, soon pu'd and flung a - wa'.
p
rall. e dim.
- fa'; Poor . . sil - ly bird, sae eith - ly snar'd, Sweet flow'r, soon pu'd and flung a - wa'.
p
rall. e dim.
- fa'; Poor sil - ly bird, sae eith - ly snar'd, Sweet flow'r, . . . soon pu'd and flung a - wa'.
p
rall. e dim.
- fa'; Poor sil - ly bird, sae eith - ly snar'd, Sweet flow'r, soon pu'd and flung a - wa'.
p
rall. e dim.

NOVELLO'S PART-SONG BOOK.

A COLLECTION OF PART-SONGS, GLEES, AND MADRIGALS.

For S.A.T.B. unless otherwise stated. Those marked thus * may be had in Tonic Sol-fa Notation

No.
799	Union Jack, The ...	A. R. Gaul	6d.
347	Unknown land, The	F. Hensel	4d.
526	Up, up ye dames ...	W. Bendall	4d.
79	Do.	H. Leslie	2d.
260	* Do.	W. Macfarren	2d.
934	Up-hill	C. H. Lloyd	4d.
580	Upon a bank with roses (5 V.)	J. Ward	4d.
747	*Upon my lap my soveraigne sits	M. Peerson	3d.
1104	Upwards	L. Spohr	4d.
938	*Vagabonds ...	E. Faning	8d.
436	*Vesper hymn, The	Beethoven	3d.
794	Victoria (5 V.) ...	P. Armes	6d.
192	*Village Blacksmith, The	Hatton	2d.
233	Do. (A.T.T.B.)	,,	4d.
1385	* Do.	W. H. Weiss	4d.
924	Village choir, The	E. Cutler	4d.
206	Village dance, The	J. L. Hatton	4d.
1089	Vineta	F. Abt	4d.
523	Do. (6 V.) ...	J. Brahms	4d.
464	Vintage song, A (5 V.)	F. Corder	4d.
132	Violet, The... ...	H. Leslie	4d.
1293	Virtue	D. Stephen	3d.
733	Viva Sempre ...	B. Donato	3d.
1319	Vox ultima crucis (8 V.)	Rathbone	4d.
660	Waiting for father	Bartholomew	4d.
820	*Waiting for the swallows	C. Pinsuti	6d.
168	Wake to the hunting	H. Smart	2d.
758	Waken, lords and ladies gay	A. H. Brewer	4d.
622	Do.	E. Duncan	4d.
976	Do.	E. O. Gilbert	4d.
471	Do.	E. Louis	6d.
145	Do.	... S. Reay	4d.
45	* Do.	H. Smart	2d.
1265	* Do. ...	W. W. Starmer	4d.
1374	Do. ...	G. J. Williams	4d.
441	Walk at dawn, A ...	N. W. Gade	4d.
987	Wanderer's night song ...	Wood	3d.
513	Wanderer's song...	Schumann	4d.
1408	Wanton, comehither	M. Cavendish	2d.
326	War song of the Norman Baron Taillefer ...	...Pearsall	3d.
263	Warrior, The	... W. Macfarren	4d.
216	*Warrior's song (A.T.T.B.)	J. L. Hatton	4d.
624	Wassail ...	A. M. Goodhart	4d.
717	Watchman, The ...	R. H. Legge	3d.
330	*Watchman's song (T.T.B.B.)	Pearsall	3d.
330	* Do. (4 V.)	,,	3d.
597	*Water lilies, The	F. H. Cowen	4d.
451	*Water lily, The ...	N. W. Gade	3d.
1292	Water party, A (6 V.)	C. H. Lloyd	4d.
208	Waterfall, The ...	J. L. Hatton	4d.
331	Waters of Elle, The (5 V.)	Pearsall	3d.
240	Wave's reproof, The	H. Smart	4d.
236	*Way to build a boat, The (A.T.T.B.)	J. L. Hatton	6d.
921	*We love our island story	Faning	4d.
1029	We must not part as others do	H. Willan	3d.
880	We roam and rule the seas	H. Leslie	6d.
901	*Weary wind of the west	E. Elgar	4d.
1242	*Weasel, The	F. de La Tombelle	4d.
1259	Wedding is great Juno's crown	B. Tours	3d.
856	*Weep you no more, sad fountains	A. R. Cripps	3d.
1240	* Do.	E. German	4d.
1027	* Do.	B. Johnson	3d.
1401	Do.	G. Rathbone	4d.
1269	* Do. (5 V.) ...	A. Somervell	4d.
426	Welcome dawn of summer day	E. M. Hill	4d.
1288	*Welcome, heroes of renown (Cornelius March)	Mendelssohn	4d.
931	*Welcome Spring	H. Leslie	2d.
1051	Welcome Spring Nos. 1-2	F. Schubert	4d.
1052	Do. Nos. 3, 4, 5	,,	4d.
1053	Do. Nos. 6, 7	,,	4d.
1054	Do. Nos. 8, 9, 10	,,	4d.
1055	Do. No. 11	,,	4d.
988	*Welcome to Spring	Moellendorff	6d.
1051	Welcome, thrice welcome	F. Schubert	4d.
1295	*Welcome, young Spring	W. W. Pearson	3d.
1324	Welcome Yule (carol) ...	Parry	3d.
406	*We'll gaily sing and play	C. Pinsuti	8d.
575	We'll go gleaning... ...	F. Abt	3d.
760	*West winds, ho ! The	W. McKendrick	4d.
703	Wet sheet and a flowing sea, A	F. E. Gladstone	8d.
826	What ho, are all on board asleep	H. Leslie	4d.
376	What is got by sighing	J. L. Hatton	4d.
824	What saith my dainty darling (5 V.)	T. Morley	4d.
1296	*What shall we dance	F.H.Cowen	6d.
821	*What shall we sing to thee	C. Pinsuti	3d.
1412	What thing more cruel can you do	M. Cavendish	2d.
437	What tho' sorrow oft befalls us	Naumann	3d.
626	What though I have skill to complain	W. Jackson and F. Corder	4d.
768	What voice of gladness ...	Parry	4d.
289	*When Allen-a-Dale	Pearsall	2d.
498	When at Corinna's eyes (5 V.)	C. H. Lloyd	4d.
875	When Cloris heard	J. Wilbye	3d.
761	When daffodils	H. W. Wareing	4d.
52	When daisies pied	G.A.Macfarren	4d.
957	Do.	J. Müller	4d.
698	*When evening casts her shadows round	C. Bayley	4d.
180	*When evening's twilight	Hatton	2d.
215	* Do. ...(A.T.T.B.)	,,	2d.
817	When first I came to Court (5 V.)	C. H. Lloyd	6d.
685	When Flora decks	N. Johnson	3d.
928	*When flow'ry meadows	Palestrina	2d.
1053	When gallant lovers	Schubert	4d.
570	When golden Autumn's smiling	Marschner	4d.
603	When golden day...	A. C. Fisher	3d.
819	*When hands meet	C. Pinsuti	8d.
884	When he who adores thee	arr. C. S. Craddock	3d.
621	When icicles hang by the wall	E. Duncan	4d.
50	* Do. ...	G. A. Macfarren	2d.
18	Do. (S.S.T.B.)	,,	3d.
301	When last I strayed	... Pearsall	3d.
1381	When Laura smiles	J. G. Williams	4d.
1219	When lilies are blowing	A. Jensen	4d.
784	*When love and beauty (5 V.)	A. Sullivan	8d.
1384	When May is in his prime	J. Ireland	4d.
354	When Spring begems the dewy scene ...	A. C. Mackenzie	6d.
843	*When Spring comes laughing	E. Faning	8d.
1156	*When Sunday's bells did chime	H. Sitt	3d.
574	When the day is dying	F. Abt	3d.
565	When the hunter's horn	J.Benedict	4d.
1217	When the tendrils deck the vine	A. Jensen	3d.
1144	When the world is gay	E. Franz	4d.
889	*When through life	arr. T. R. G. Jozé	3d.
496	When twilight dews	J. L. Gregory	3d.
86	Do.	H. Hiles	2d.
1203	Do. (8 V.)	C. Lee Williams	4d.
1163	When woods are dight in golden sheen ...	...N. W. Gade	4d.
351	When woods are glowing	Hensel	4d.
908	Where are you going to, my pretty maid	F. Romer	4d.
1179	Where Claribel low lieth	D. Price	3d.
1304	Where shall the lover rest (8 V.)	E. C. Bairstow	6d.
377	Do.	J. L. Hatton	2d.
1112	Where the bee sucks (arr. by G. Shaw) ...	... Arne	2d.
405	Where wavelets rippled gaily	C. Pinsuti	8d.
1397	*Whether I find thee	E. Elgar	2d.
203	Whether kiss'd by sunbeams	J. L. Hatton	4d.
769	Whether men do laugh or weep	C. H. H. Parry	4d.
829	Which is the properest day to sing	Arne	3d.
985	Whispering waves, The	C. Wood	3d.
1069	White Dove, The	arr. J. Brahms	4d.
729	*Who is Sylvia ...	E. German	4d.
53	* Do. ...	G. A. Macfarren	2d.
1049	*Who rides for the king	R. Somerville	4d.
287	*Who shall win my lady fair	Pearsall	2d.
1407	*Who would true valour see	G. Shaw	4d.
327	*Why do the roses	...Pearsall	3d
322	Why should the Cuckoo's tuneful note (5 V.) ...	Pearsall	4d.
1001	*Why should Thy face be hidden	P. Cornelius	3d.
1133	Why so pale and wan ...	Parry	3d.
997	Do. (6 V.) ...	J. Stainer	4d.
323	*Why weeps, alas, my lady love (5 V.)	Pearsall	4d.
288	*Why with toil thy life consuming	Pearsall	2d.
1383	*Wi' a hundred pipers (Scottish air) ...	arr. John E. West	4d
748	Widow bird, The ...	C. Wood	3d.
106	*Wife's song, A ...	J. Barnby	2d.
387	Wild rose, The	S. J. G. Egerton	4d.
1184	*Wind of the waters	Schumann	4d
608	Wind that softly bloweth	E. A. Sydenham	3d.
110	Wind, The	J. Barnby	4d.
254	*Wind thy horn ...	H. Smart	4d.
277	*Windlass song (T.T.B.B.)	W. Macfarren	4d.
1306	*Winds gently whisper	Whittaker	3d.
418	Winds of Autumn	C. Oberthür	3d.
530	Winds that waft, The	Wallace	3d.
434	*Wine cup is circling, The (5 V.)	R. P. Stewart	4d.
995	Wink from Hesper falling, A	T. Wendt	3d
621	Winter	E. Duncan	4d.
159	Do. ...	...W. Macfarren	4d.
442	*Winter days	...A. J. Caldicott	6d.
1207	*Winter it is past, The	arr. E. L. Bainton	3d.
456	Winter song, The...	H. Dorn	4d.
299	Do.	...Pearsall	3d.
70	Woman's smile	C. A. Macirone	4d.
350	Woodland valley, The	F. Hensel	2d.
721	Woodmen, shepherds, come away	A. Thomson	4d.
917	* Do.	John E. West	4d.
1358	Woods in winter	W. W. Pearson	1½d
1290	*World is too much with us, The (6 V.)	G. Bantock	4d.
116	World's age, The	G. A. Macfarren	2d.
459	*Would you ask my heart	Pinsuti	4d.
69	Wounded Cupid, The	C. A. Macirone	2d.
1191	Wounded youth, The	R.Schumann	3d.
7	*Wreath, The ...	J. Benedict	3d.
785	*Wreaths for our graves (6 V.)	A. Sullivan	8d.
381	*Wreck of the Hesperus, The	H. Hiles	8d.
373	Wrecked Hope, The	J. L. Hatton	4d.
1135	*Wrong not, sweet empress	C. H. H. Parry	3d.
1418	*Wrth fynd i'm gwely bach fy hun	R. Edwards	3d.
1043	*Y Dymestl ...	R. Rogers	6d.
1419	*Y Lanaf Oriana ...	J. Wilbye	4d.
664	*Ye banks and braes	arr. W. G. McNaught	1½d.
504	Ye gallant men of England	Hecht	4d.
269	Ye little birds that sit and sing	W. Macfarren	4d.
256	Do.	H. Smart	3d.
1116	Ye mariners of England	H. Leslie	6d.
435	* Do.	H. H. Pierson	2d.
869	Do. ...	C. Lee Williams	4d.
416	Ye singers all ...	H. Waelrent	4d.
792	*Ye thrilled me once ...	Parry	3d.
1396	*Yea, cast me from heights of the mountains ...	E. Elgar	3d.
932	*Year of life, The	D. Protheroe	4d.
933	* Do. (Welsh words)	,,	4d.
1421	*Yn, iach fwyn Amarilis	J. Wilbye	3d.
1005	You gave me your heart (5 V.)	S. Webbe	3d
790	You gentle nymphs	C. H. H. Parry	3d.
125	*You spotted snakes (S.S.A.A.)	G. A. Macfarren	4d.
160	*You stole my love	W. Macfarren	2d.
1064	*Young Herchard	R. Boughton	8d.
1171	*Young May moon, The	arr. C. H. Lloyd	3d.
1305	Youthful, charming Chloe	W. McNaught	4d.

Against a time-wasting futility of this sort, some good things during the past month have to be set. Nothing, however, could have been better than the programme of chamber music by the Philharmonic Trio—Fransella, Leon Goossens, and Ticciati. The oboe playing especially was a sheer delight; the instrument seems to have been made for wireless purposes, so clear and characteristic is the transmission.

The symphony concert conducted by Harty was another first-rate event. Incidentally, it provided me with yet one more proof of the advantage of hearing music thus at home, free from the distractions and conventions of the concert-hall. The eighth Symphony of Beethoven has so far failed to attract me, yet on this occasion I enjoyed it thoroughly. As I had a similar experience recently with the 'Emperor' Concerto (though the conversion was less emphatic), it looks as if all the talk about the advantages of seeing the performers, of hearing the music in a crowd, and other effects of mass-psychology, go for very little. And the occasional defects in transmission are more than balanced by the gain. Mr. Ernest Newman is at present a heretic concerning wireless music, but I believe the time is not far off when he will become as enthusiastic a convert as he has recently become in regard to the gramophone.

Player-Piano Notes

ÆOLIAN

Duo-Art.—Joseph Hoffmann's technique is heard to great advantage in his playing of Chopin's Concerto in E minor, arranged by himself. Inevitably one misses the variety in tone provided by the orchestra, but even so these two rolls should be welcomed with enthusiasm by lovers of Chopin and fine, clean pianoforte playing (6915; 6916).

Brahms's G minor Rhapsody seems to be having a vogue just now, both by radio and roll. Mitja Nikisch's performance of it is dignified at the cost of the rhapsody the composer asks for. Otherwise this is a good roll (0241).

The striking feature in Robert Armbruster's playing of Délibes's March and Procession of Bacchus from the 'Sylvia' Ballet (7013) is the clearness of the rapid repeated notes. A little more of the bacchanalian spirit would have been welcome. The same player is heard in Denza's popular 'Funiculi-Funicula' (0739).

There is also a roll of Nevin's 'Mighty lak' a Rose,' played by Edwin Hughes (6423).

Hand-played.—This month's rolls are few but choice. We taste the real Spanish flavour in de Falla's picturesque 'Andaluza,' which is given a most satisfying performance by Maria Carreras (A925d).

Another admirable performance is that of Irene Scharrer, who is heard in Medtner's Arabesque, Op. 7, No. 1 (A923e).

There is a very good roll of Harold Bauer playing Paderewski's Polonaise, Op. 9, No. 6 (A915e). These three rolls are among the best in this class issued for some time.

Metrostyle.—The pick of these is the fourth movement of Schumann's second Symphony (T30267c). As orchestration was notoriously not one of Schumann's strong points, the Symphony loses little by transcription, and the result is a roll that will delight the majority of players. Too much pedal is indicated in the roll of Bach's Prelude and Fugue in A flat from the '48,' Book 1. It leads to blurring. For an inexperienced player it would be far better to ignore all the pedal markings. The Metrostyle line too, is a little over-temperamental (T24685b). A pleasant and attractive roll is Toselli's second Serenata (T30268a).

Except for 'Buckingham Palace' (26669), another of the delightful 'When we were very young' series, the song rolls are much as usual.

BLÜTHNER

Animatic.—Four of the best of this month's rolls show us composers giving excellent performances of their own works—Gabriel Fauré, in a longish 'Valse Caprice,' Op. 30, No. 1 (55915), and a charming 'Romance sans Paroles,' Op. 17, No. 3 (53083); Herbert Fryer plays his Prelude in A flat (55929); and Raoul Pugno is heard in his 'Konzertstück—a piece which opens with overmuch preliminary pawing the ground, so to speak.

Two of Henselt's Etudes, 'Vie Orageuse' (58967) and 'Jeunesse d'Amour' (58968), are played by Paul Gzliker. The pace is perhaps on the slow side, and in 'Vie Orageuse' more fire and impetus seem to be called for.

In the Polovezkischer Tanz from Borodin's 'Prince Igor' the pianoforte proves to be a poor substitute for chorus and orchestra. Julius Priuver does his best with it, but it is not satisfactory, and hangs here and there (59,021).

A good roll is Moszkowski's 'Pantomime,' Op. 77, No. 8, played by Alfred Grunfeldth (55,187), though the performance seems staid and unimaginative.

Debussy's 'Nuit d'Etoiles' (pianoforte arrangement), played by Klinger, is so unlike Debussy, that the label on the roll underwent a second scrutiny. The heavy handling it receives from the pianist does not tend to relieve the congestion of the arrangement (59,650).

Walter Petzet labours slowly through the Brahms G minor Rhapsody, Op. 79 (59,002). The composer's direction is Non troppo Allegro, but Mr. Petzet is at times nearer Adagio.

This artist plays also a Bach Prelude in F minor, for organ (labelled simply 'Organ Prelude'), arranged by Joseph Sautier. Like most big organ music, it loses by transcription. The pace of the performance is too slow, and the rhythm sticks badly at times. Seventy-five per cent. of average church organists would give a better idea of the piece than we get from this performance (39,000). D. G.

Mr. John A. Davison and Mr. Francis J. Hill have just given a series of four recitals for organ and violoncello, the scheme being entitled 'Some Developments in Church Instrumental Music.' The churches visited were Andover Parish Church, Romsey Abbey, St. Mary's, Southampton, and Holy Trinity, Weymouth. The programme consisted of Bach's Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, Mendelssohn's first sonata, Darke's Prelude on 'St. Peter,' violoncello sonatas by Marcello and Boccherini, Boëllmann's Symphonic Variations, and Elgar's Violoncello Concerto. A brief introductory lecture, and notes on the items, were read by one of the clergy. As an outcome of the visit to Romsey a festival has been projected for next spring, by the combined choirs from Marlborough College, Dauntsey School, and Romsey Abbey, when it is hoped to perform the 'St. John' Passion, 'The Messiah,' Beethoven's Violin Concerto, and Motets by Palestrina, Morley, Wood, &c. The next tour, lasting a fortnight, will take place during the 1927 Easter holidays. Incumbents who would like their churches to be included should write to Mr. Francis J. Hill, The Music School, Marlborough College, Wilts.

Church and Organ Music

ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS

With reference to the Andante from a pianoforte duet, Mozart—Arrangements by J. Stainer, No. 2 (Novello), selected for Fellowship Examination, January, 1927—Candidates are informed that only the new and revised edition of this Arrangement will be accepted by the Examiners.

H. A. Harding, Hon. Secretary.

A SEQUEL TO 'LEAD, KINDLY LIGHT'

Despite the hard things said to-day about J. B. Dykes as a composer, he retains so much of his former popularity that we believe most readers will be interested in the following, the more so because of its association also with Cardinal Newman and his best-known hymn.

Alderman John Brown, of York, who died in 1889, was the head of an important business in that city, and also a versatile writer. He produced two volumes, mainly of local interest, concerned as they were with rambles and folk-lore of the York district; he also contributed much to the press, both local and London. In 1873, he wrote, as an addendum to the hymn 'Lead, kindly light,' three verses in the same metre, entitled 'The night is gone.' He sent copies thereof to Cardinal Newman and Dr. Dykes. From the former came the following note:

The Oratory, July 26, 1873.

Dear Sir,—I thank you very much for the copy you have sent me of your beautiful hymn; and I feel the compliment and honour done me in your selecting one of mine as a suggestion for the subject and the metre.—Very truly yours, John H. Newman.

Dykes replied:

You ask me about the association of your hymn with the tune, 'Lux benigna.' I think that as that tune was written specially for Dr. Newman's hymn, it would be better to reserve that tune for that particular hymn, and for it alone. I have therefore had pleasure in trying my hand at another tune—something in the same style—for your hymn. I trust you may find it suit the words.

It is rather a bold enterprise to write a new version of so beautiful a hymn as 'Lead, kindly light.' I certainly think that your attempt may be considered both a creditable and a successful one. . . .—I remain, My dear Sir, faithfully yours,

May 9, 1873. John B. Dykes.

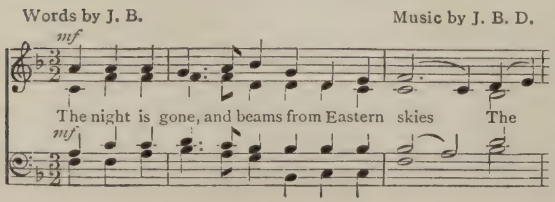
Barnby also wrote to Alderman Brown in terms of high appreciation.

Neither words nor music seem to have been published, though they were printed. On June 11, 1874, Dykes returned a proof-sheet, with the remark, 'It seems all right.' Beyond this proof, no other copy appears to exist.

Here is the hymn complete:

'THE NIGHT IS GONE'

Words by J. B. Music by J. B. D.



cres.
o - - rient morn; And with the gold-en sunlight pray'r shall
cres.
rise . . To lead . . . me . . on.
Through the bright scenes of . . earth, un - -
f
- til . . at . . last . . The pear - ly
f gates . . of Par - a - dise are pass'd. A - men.

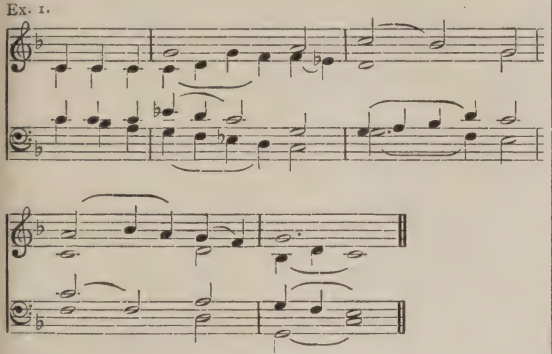
In days gone by, I wander'd far from Thee,
To walk alone
O'er dazzling heights, where pride's supremacy
Would lead me on,
When in the tangled paths of life I fell,
No friend to help save Thou who lov'st so well.

Then burst the bonds of sin, and on my eyes
That Glory shone
That lights with love the world, and through the skies
Will lead me on,
Where angel voices through th' irradiate gloom
Shall welcome sons of earth to heav'n and home.
Amen.

Like 'Lux benigna,' the tune suffers from its rhythmic scheme, which tends to become slack in the series of minims. (Hence, no doubt, the tendency of folk to drag when singing 'Lead, kindly light.') There are too many dominant sevenths—a weakness for which the fashion of 1875 must be blamed. To the period also must be ascribed the diminished seventh in bar 2 of the last line, and the far worse progression at 'scenes of earth.' The tune, like all Dykes's, is very singable, and, with a little strengthening of the harmony here and there—e.g., the cadences—would be well enough. It is a pity that the one approach to a climax—the middle of line 3—is largely negatived by the weakest harmony and a stagnation in the rhythm.

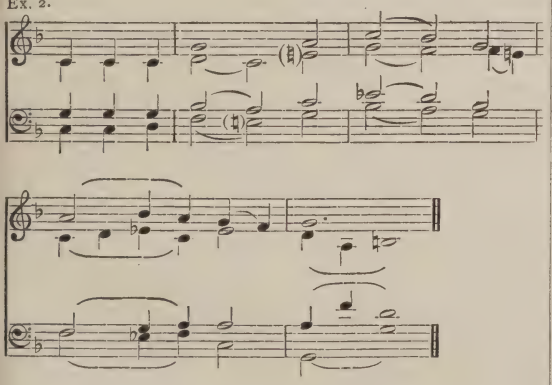
Fashion in harmony changes so much that it is interesting to speculate on how Dykes would have treated this tune had he written it a few years ago instead of fifty. Certainly he would have used fewer chords, and they would have been simpler. For example, the cadence of line 3 would probably have been diatonic; in fact the whole line might have appeared thus:

Ex. 1.



This is not put forward as an attempt to show Dykes—still less with a desire to 'show him up'—but merely as an example of the way in which taste changes during a generation. Perhaps fifty years hence something far more rugged may be the vogue, judging from the tendencies in recent hymnals. For example:

Ex. 2.



Want of space prevents us from pursuing speculations into the realm of pure Hucbaldism. Readers may enjoy doing this for themselves.

We are indebted to Mr. Arthur Hopkins, organist of All Saints' Pavement, York, for copies of Brown's hymn and Dykes's tune; and to Mr. Charles M. Brown for kind permission to print them.

NATIONAL UNION OF ORGANISTS' ASSOCIATIONS CONGRESS

By W. A. Roberts

The annual Congress was held at Manchester, on August 30, 31, and September 1, 2. For business purposes it was especially fitting for the Congress to be held in the great business metropolis of the North. Certainly Manchester is not one of the most beautiful cities in the world, and often, if not indeed every day, it rains there, yet no one can dwell in it, even for only a few days, without feeling that its tide of life runs strong and deep. If not romantic it is a very vital place. Despite its long and gloomy streets and grim stacks of offices and warehouses, its record shows that in music, drama, and letters its citizens have frequently led the way. Cotton has made it rich in 'brass,' and the 'Manchester man' is a definite and distinct genus—no unworthy descendant of the ancient Romans who founded the city of Mancunium on the site now obliterated by the huge buildings towering skywards over this seething community.

On Monday evening, August 30, there was a preliminary gathering and informal reception convened by the local Association in the School of Technology, when some charming music was contributed by Mr. Joseph Percival (solo pianoforte) and Miss Beatrice Coleman, Miss Gwladys Roberts, and Mr. J. Challenor Heaton (vocalists), with Mr. Dawber and Mr. R. H. Wilson as accompanists.

On Tuesday the annual meeting of delegates and members was held in the Lord Mayor's Parlour, at the Town Hall. Mr. Sydney H. Nicholson presided, and the hon. treasurer, Mr. John Hodgkinson, to whom subsequently a hearty vote of thanks was passed, read his annual statement, which showed a credit balance of £64. There are now thirty-two local Associations, with a membership of 2,500. The hon. secretary, Mr. Councillor John Brook, of Southport, then read his report, announcing the appointment by the executive committee of Mr. J. Percy Baker as Editor of the quarterly Record. He also explained some slight alterations in the Rules, which were passed as amended. Some discussion arose as to the appointment of Mr. Baker, who, unlike Mr. Brook, will receive a fee for his services. The action of the executive committee in this regard was adversely criticised for financial reasons by certain members, who wished the matter further gone into at the moment. The Chairman, who handled the crisis very temperately, pointed out that at an open meeting, not confined to members of the Association, it would be out of order to discuss particulars of the appointment. Thereupon non-members temporarily left the room, and the malcontents, whose spokesman was Mr. Sheard (Glasgow), voiced their views. The Chairman then explained that, if the work was to be efficiently performed, it was desirable to pay some one an honorarium, and that it was necessary to support the executive committee after that body had made this deliberate recommendation. Upon a show of hands the amendment that the matter be referred back was lost, and Mr. Baker's appointment was duly confirmed. Then the non-members returned to the room, and Mr. Nicholson made his farewell speech after holding the position of President for the past three years.

He strongly urged members to keep in view the ideal of the organist's profession being equal in status to any other profession. Any inclination to look down upon their profession must be killed. But this could not be done by merely discussing rules, and holding meetings and congresses. Organists must make themselves men of all-round attainments, capable of mixing in all classes of society. They were not to be merely specialists interested in the position of the Swell-pedal. Each Association, and each member, must ask themselves, What am I, myself, doing? What interest and knowledge have I, for instance, in the great world of music and literature outside my profession, which is after all only one corner of a big art? Mr. J. Percy Baker voiced the hearty vote of thanks given to Mr. Nicholson for his distinguished services; it was seconded by Dr. Hutchinson (Newcastle), and carried with acclamation.

Mr. Nicholson's 'Thank you very much' closed his term of office in characteristic English fashion, and upon his proposition Sir Hamilton Harty was elected to succeed him as president. The vice-presidents, Mr. G. H. Hirst, Dr. W. Prendergast, and Dr. Warriner, were re-elected, as were the hon. general-treasurer, Mr. Hodgkinson, and the hon. general-secretary, Mr. Councillor Brook. As regards the last-named officials, it is common knowledge how much the Association owes to their invaluable services. Dr. Reginald Dixon (Lancaster), Mr. T. A. Wood (Sheffield), and Dr. Rhodes (Torquay), were appointed to fill vacancies on the executive committee. Upon the proposition of Mr. Sheard (Glasgow), seconded by Mr. Lumsden (Edinburgh), it was resolved that a collection on behalf of the Organists' Benevolent Fund be made at future Congress meetings. Scotland is thus honourably to the fore in this direction. The auditors (Mr. R. Mason (Liverpool), and Mr. H. Paulden (Southport), were thanked and re-elected.

Upon taking the presidential chair, Sir Hamilton Harty received the warmest of welcomes, for the Association has good reason to congratulate itself upon securing the services of this fine musician and renowned conductor, who is, moreover, an organ player, and comes of organ-playing stock.

Sir Hamilton took as his subject 'A Musical Renaissance,' dealing, as he said, with practical problems rather than with abstruse musical questions. Referring to the falling-off in church attendance, and the lack of interest in church-music, he gave a scathing denunciation of the 'vile influence of jazz.' The taste of the public was formed by the music it most constantly heard, and it must be admitted, he said, that the general taste was low.

It was difficult for the average person to get out of earshot of jazz. He had listened to it to judge if it had any musical qualities whatever, and had come to the conclusion that it was only 'sensual, noisy, and incredibly stupid.' The rhythm of jazz was far from subtle, and its grotesqueness resulted from a treatment of the instruments which ought to earn for the performer a sentence of three months' hard labour. Musicians ought to protest against such a travesty, and find means of combating its vile influence. There must be, said Sir Hamilton, thousands of people, who, like himself, were 'often exasperated to the stage of considering murder as a profession.' He went on to outline his scheme for educating public taste in small towns and rural districts not provided with concert-halls. In such places, he said, there was a hall which was empty a good part of the week, and for which no fee was asked—the church. All serious, good music was sacred and holy, and a Symphony of Mozart, or Beethoven, could preach as eloquent a sermon as any ever delivered in words. He advocated a fuller use of orchestral instruments to supplement the organ in churches, and especially would he have a string quartet or quintet, and if possible a pair of timpani. The underlying principle of the scheme was to get the greatest possible number of people to place their talent at the service of the local church, in efforts to represent not only the religious but the artistic life of the community. He thought there would be a great increase of general interest in sympathy with the Church and its work, and, secondly, an effective counterstroke to the flood of disgusting music with which we were deluged at present. Some day music would be censored.

There can be no question as to the courageous, outspoken, and suggestive value of the President's speech, which aroused widespread attention and discussion.

In the afternoon it was difficult to tear oneself away from the Rylands Library, where the eminent librarian, Dr. Henry Guppy, displayed a selection of his treasures, which are a magnet to scholars and students the world over. One book which thus came under notice was the priceless only-copy-in-the-world of the third printed book, the Mainz Psalter, printed by Fust and Schoefer, the successors to Gutenberg. This splendid volume has at present a conjectural market value of £30,000. There is not space to describe other priceless illuminated missals and psalters which were exhibited, or to describe the feelings aroused by a set of clay tablets excavated in Mesopotamia, dating from 2400 B.C.—i.e., before the time of Abraham. On these tablets are inscribed domestic details of the barley crop of the year.

Evensong at the Cathedral was soul-refreshing, one of the chief memories of the Congress being the singing of Parry's Motet, 'At the round earth's imagined corners,' a noble setting of Donne's noble words, nobly sung, unaccompanied, by the fine choir of twenty boys and nine men. The boys were specially excellent. The Service was Stanford in G, which in the Magnificat commences with the accents of a solo treble voice above a harp-like organ accompaniment. It is a setting of lyrical beauty, with suggestions of modern feeling in its unconventional church style. After the service, a recital was given on the splendid Hill five-manual organ, rebuilt in 1911, by Dr. A. W. Wilson, the Cathedral organist, who played some well-contrasted items with fine executive skill—Parry's Choral Preludes on 'St. Thomas' and 'Melcombe,' and Fugue in G, Bach's Chorale Preludes, 'Valet will ich' (No. 1.), 'Herr Jesu Christ,' and 'Christ unser Herr zum Jordan kam,' in which some novel registering had a piquant effect, concluding with the first movement from Vierne's second Symphony. It is a matter of regret to many that someone was not at hand to explain the various features of the fine old church, and the Father Smith organ, which several visitors never even saw. In the evening the Lord Mayor accorded civic recognition to the Congress by attending the concert in the Town Hall, given by Sir Hamilton Harty's Chamber Orchestra, conducted by Sir Hamilton in a choice programme admirably played. It comprised Bach's Concerto for two violins and strings, Mozart's Divertimento No. 17, for strings and horns; Elgar's Adagio from the Serenade for strings, and Tchaikovsky's Serenade for strings. In the Bach Concerto peculiar pleasure was felt by many in again seeing and hearing the veteran Dr. Adolf Brodsky in the first solo part. His pupil, Mr. Frank Barker, was his able associate.

On Wednesday morning there was a keenly interested audience to hear the lecture on 'The Training of a Voluntary Choir,' given by Dr. Walter Carroll, musical adviser to the Manchester Education Authority. Such practical knowledge and unbounded enthusiasm as were displayed by the lecturer, are all too rare in combination. Presuming that salary is not the basis of service, Dr. Carroll described what is possible to be done by a choirmaster who is an artist absorbed in his work, and finding pleasure in his hobby. To him all things are possible, including the clergy. Dr. Carroll said that, compared with an average concert, the music of the Church service was too often a conspicuous failure, and from this point of view not too many organists were really underpaid. Improved salaries would result from improved service. In a voluntary choir, the boy trebles should be the first care. Boys whose voices were breaking or broken should never be used as altos. This part should be sung by lady contraltos, as in the Hallé Choir, where there were now no male alto singers. The speaker would absolutely banish these from every choir. The contraltos should be robed in cap and gown, and should march in with the male singers. Choirmasters should agree not to place them in any other position in the church than in the choir. He advocated more singing from memory, and covered the whole ground possible, and also what might be thought impossible, in describing the methods he adopted to keep his own choir together. And if the ordinary choirmaster too seldom possessed the guile of a diplomatist, in addition to the patience of a saint, many present would no doubt take courage and try again on the definite lines which Dr. Carroll had himself followed with such success. For upwards of two hours he kept his hearers interested, and often amused by his humour, in an address which Mr. J. Percy Baker, as chairman, rightly described as 'stimulating and provocative.' The singing exercises he induced his audience to indulge in, even after they were due elsewhere to lunch, were sufficient testimony to the interest aroused, even among those who may be trying to reach the same goal by other roads.

On Wednesday afternoon, in Whitworth Street Schools, Miss Madge Atkinson and her pupils gave a graceful demonstration of 'Natural Movement allied to Music'; and later, in the Town Hall, there was a full audience to hear the organ recital given by Dr. J. Kendrick Pyne, organist to the City and University. His programme comprised:

Prelude and Fugue in C	Buxtehude
'Lied des Chrysanthèmes'	...Bonnet
Fantasia and Fugue on 'Ad Nos' ...	... Liszt
Impromptu elegiac	... Pyne
Allegro (second Organ Symphony) ...	... Widor

Liszt's tremendous piece, which takes forty minutes to play, is seldom heard, and that for sufficient reasons: it requires an executant of Dr. Pyne's powers, and an organ of the calibre of the five-manual Cavaillé-Coll-Lewis instrument which adorns the large hall, if anything is to be made of this very difficult, grandiose, and rhapsodical number, which Saint-Saëns was wont to use as one of his stock startlers. Regarding Dr. Pyne's performance, it may truly be said that he had never more fully developed the powers of his favourite instrument, or exhibited his own technical skill, more finely than on this special occasion. It was an historic performance, a memory of which is the delightful little extempore Prelude in the true organ-style of his master, S. S. Wesley, which he played before the Buxtehude piece. Dr. Pyne did well to bring Buxtehude to the notice of the assembled organists, who generally know too little of the works of one of Bach's chief models. Manchester may well be proud of its City organist, the G.O.M. of English organ recitalists, who so bravely challenges the burden of advancing years. At the close Dr. Pyne received an ovation, and a vote of thanks was voiced by Dr. Reynolds (Birkenhead) and supported by his former pupil, Dr. Read (Warrington).

In the evening there was a concert given by the Manchester Vocal Society, conducted by Mr. Harold Dawber. The principal choral item was the Mass in G minor, by Vaughan Williams, of which the unaccompanied singing was remarkably good in all requirements of attack, expression, and sustained pitch. It is a fine, well-balanced, and tuneful choir, quite responsive to the interpretative gift of its able conductor, an accomplished musician who also showed his powers as a pianist in conjunction with Mr. Albert Hardie in a delightful performance of Bach's Concerto in C minor for two pianofortes, and Brahms's Variations on a Theme by Haydn. The concert was a long—perhaps a little too long—provision of choice choral and instrumental items.

Thursday morning was chiefly devoted to a general discussion on 'The Future Policy and Work of the National Union of Organists' Associations.' Dr. J. E. Hutchinson (Newcastle) said that what they stood for was the uplifting of their art in general, and their profession in particular, educationally, socially, and financially. Their future policy must be one of greater enterprise; they must risk a bit to gain a lot. The quarterly Record was to play an important part, and in this direction he commended the appointment of Mr. J. Percy Baker as Editor, while eulogising the voluntary labours in the past of Mr. Brook. Dr. Hutchinson said that the Association must be made such a power in the land that no organist would dare to remain outside its membership. Organists must be made to take a personal interest in the things which affected them vitally, and not leave these to done by the 'other man'—who did not exist.

Mr. J. H. Reginald Dixon (Lancaster) viewed the matter from two points, local and national, and suggested several useful items of detail. The amateur as well as the professional had each his part to play; the first being more especially concerned with the business, or social, side. He emphasised the necessity for establishing a Benevolent Fund, and the appointment of a paid organizing secretary. In the discussion, Mr. Kinch (Torquay) outlined his plan for establishing such a fund on a definite basis, which he had some time ago communicated to the committee of the Organists' Benevolent League. In continuation, Mr. Dawber (Manchester) 'got down to it,' as they say in Lancashire, by bluntly declaring that before discussing this or that plan the matter was chiefly one of finance. Financially the Association was in a poor way, and this had firstly to be remedied. Dr. Carroll suggested that the annual subscription should be at least a guinea. Mr. Sheard (Glasgow) was less constructive in his criticism of paid appointments by deprecating increased subscriptions as a means of raising money before spending it. Mr. George Dodds (Newcastle) emphasised the need for waking up the local Associations, for it was to them that the National Association must look, and whatever money was needed must come from them. Mr. J. Percy Baker hoped that the enthusiasm shown would continue; and eventually, on the motion of Dr. Carroll, it was resolved to request the executive committee to go into the matter without delay, and to formulate a plan of reorganization. If the enthusiasm shown at the meeting be maintained, and the outcome provide a definite and workable plan, the Manchester Congress would not have been held in vain. The psychological moment seemed to have arrived, and the Association waited only for its strong man, or men, to guide and endue it with some reasonable measure of assured stability as well as artistic reputation. But for this money was needed, and how to raise it was the problem. The first requirement was an increased number of members. And surely the present would be an appropriate time for the National Association of Organists to offer Mr. Brook some token of its appreciation of his labours on its behalf?

The Rev. T. Nicklin, Warden of Hulme Hall, chose an interesting subject for his address—'The Choirmaster and the Study of English Speech.' In dealing with the eccentricities and dialectal perversions of our English tongue, he recommended a closer study of it as a singing language. For instance, there was no reason in poetry to pronounce the word 'wind' as 'wynd'; and it would be more correct in Shakespeare's lines 'Blow, blow, thou winter wind' to pronounce the word 'unkind' in the following line as 'unkynned.' He instanced also the word 'respite,' which with other words should not follow their spelling as regarded correct pronunciation. And our own country's name was certainly not *Eng*land. A little care and knowledge on the part of a choirmaster would prevent such a mispronunciation as 'chayos' for 'kaos,' which he once heard sung. It was a helpful and suggestive address from one who was so evidently master of his subject.

The closing Congress dinner at the Midland Hotel was a brilliant affair, and the President was supported by the Lord Mayor of Manchester, the Mayor of Salford, the R. C. Bishop of Salford, the Archdeacon of Manchester, and the Rector of Wigan. In reply to the toast of his health, ably and eulogistically proposed by Mr. George Dodds, Sir Hamilton Harty said that during his year of office he intended to make a special effort to further the benevolent activities of the Union. The effort he had in mind would call for team work. Other toasts included the National Union of Organists' Associations, proposed by Canon Thicknesse (Rector of Wigan), and responded to by Mr. Councillor John Brook (hon. general-secretary); the Lord Mayor and City of Manchester, proposed by the Archdeacon of Manchester (Canon Aspinall), and responded to by the Lord Mayor; the Manchester Organists' Association, proposed by Mr. W. E. Ranby, of Capetown, and responded to by Dr. Carroll; the Guests, proposed by Dr. A. W. Wilson, and responded to by Bishop Henshaw; and the Press, proposed by Mr. J. Percy Baker, and responded to by Mr. S. Langford, of the Manchester Guardian. Due recognition must be made, and that very cordially, of the arduous work which the local Association, headed by Mr. W. H. Ellis, undertook and carried out so successfully. The visitors were greatly impressed, not only with the extent and importance of Manchester's musical activities, of which they had been made partakers in good measure, pressed down and running over, but also by the great engineering achievement of the Ship Canal—the waterway which brings ocean steamers to the docks and wharves in the midst of the City. Next year's Congress is to be held at Reading.

A GERMAN ORGAN CONGRESS

A meeting arranged by the Institute for Musical Science of the University of Freiburg i/B., was held at that town on July 27, 28, and 29 last, and brought together a large number of eminent professors of music and organists from all parts of Germany. Papers were read about matters connected with organ-building by Dr. O. Walcker and H. Jung (Ludwigsburg) and Hans H. Jahnn (Hamburg); Prof. Dr. W. Gurlitt (Freiburg), 'Changes in the Tone-ideal of the Organ in the Light of Musical History'; E. Flade (Plauen i/V.), 'Gottfried Silbermann as Organ-builder'; Prof. Dr. W. Fischer (Vienna), 'The Concert Organ in the 18th-century Orchestra'; Dr. G. Frotscher (Danzig), 'The Art of Registering in the 18th century'; Prof. Dr. A. Schering (Halle University), 'The Question of Organ Accompaniment to Vocal Works of the 15th century'; Sub-prior P. F. Böser, O.S.B. (Beuron), 'Organ and Liturgy'; Dr. J. M. Müller-Blattau, 'Education and Training of the Organist'; F. Lehmann (Göttingen), 'The New Organ as Instrument of Popular Education'; Councillor H. Mund (Magdeburg), 'History and Significance of the Organ-case,' with lantern-slides; Prof. Dr. K. Hasse (Tübingen), 'Max Reger and German Organ Playing' (Orgelkunst); Prof. Dr. H. Keller (Stuttgart), 'German Organ Music after Reger'; Dr. H. Erpf (Münster i/W.), 'The Organ and Contemporary Music'; Dr. H. Luedtke (Berlin) showed and explained a modern experimental organ, with film illustrations, and music by Hugo Hermann-Reutlingen. There were four concerts. On July 27 K. Matthaei (Winterthur), after an introductory lecture by Prof. Dr. W. Gurlitt, played pieces by Prætorius, Scheidt, Froberger, Pachelbel, and F. Tunder, on the Prætorius organ: on July 28, Prof. A. Sittard (Hamburg-Berlin), played on the same organ pieces by Weckmann, Scheidemann, Böhm, Lübeck, Buxtehude, and J. S. Bach; on July 29, at an afternoon choral concert, the programme comprised: Dufay, two motets and chanson; Machaut, two ballades; Binchois, two rondeaus; Ockeghem, Kyrie from Mass 'Mi-Mi'; Josquin des Près, motet on the death of Ockeghem, and Agnus Dei from Mass 'Pange lingua.' Organ music was represented at an evening concert by Dr. E. Gatscher (Munich), in St. Martin's Church, when he played items by Hasse, Kaminski, Baumann, Weyrauch, Philipp, Spitta, Ermatinger, and Geirhaas, on the new Schwarz organ.

E. V. D. S.

'NEVERTHELESS, I AM STILL GRATEFUL . . .'

Here is an example of calm cheek brought to our notice by a correspondent. He was recently asked by a visiting organist for permission to use his organ for practising. He readily assented, and was surprised to receive two days afterwards the following letter:

August 12, 1926.

DEAR SIR,—Since you were good enough to permit me to practise on the organ at —— Church, I think it only fair that I should acquaint you with the fact that I find it impossible, in both an artistic and physical sense, to continue with any further grappling with this terrible instrument! It is no exaggeration to say that I could find more pleasure in playing, and get more out of, that long-suffering instrument, the harmonium, than out of the contrivance in —— Church, which we call by courtesy an 'organ.' The reeds are thin and whining, and resemble nothing so much as Punch singing through a comb; the compound stops result in a screaming fortissimo when this is to be least expected or desired; the closing of the Swell shutters makes a concussion sufficient to startle the most hardened organist; the pedals are so loose that crossing the feet is impossible without 'smearing'; the Tremulant is aggressive and ungainly; the Mutation stops—what few there are—are amazingly out of tune; the heavy touch of the manuals belongs to a century ago; the noise made by the bellows is truly distressing; the diapasons would drive an organ-grinder to drink; and the blower is not punctual.

These are a few of the defects which, in my opinion, exist in that instrument. It may be that I am prejudiced by being accustomed to a cathedral organ with modern contrivances; however that may be, the fact remains that the apparatus is old-fashioned, and the present age has no use for old-fashioned things.

To render such pieces as the 'Liebestöd' from 'Tristan and Isolde,' the 'Fire Music' from the 'Valkyries,' the 'Tannhäuser' Overture, or even the hackneyed 'Finlandia' on this organ, with the manual and pedal gymnastics they require, such as rapid changes from manual to manual, octave pedal passages, chromatic cadenzas, juggling with stops, and passages graduating from the softest pianissimo to a sobbing fortissimo, would be sheer impossibility from a musical point of view. Physically, of course, it could be done; but then it could also be managed by an expert on the mouth-organ or the jew's-harp.

Finally, if I may presume to advise, may I say—do not waste money on renovating what is past repair, but get a new one. One cannot renovate a human centenarian except by the thyroid gland; and in the organ world there is no thyroid treatment.

Nevertheless, I am still grateful for your kindness in according me such ready permission to practise in the church, and regret that it is not possible any longer to avail myself of the said permission.—I am, Faithfully yours, ——

(Mus. Doc., U.S.A., Hon. R.A.M.)

The instrument that so vexed this U.S.A. Mus.Doc. is an old, largish three-manual, with good flue work and fine diapasons. Our correspondent, who is a mere F.R.C.O. and L.R.A.M., tells us that he has managed to play on it (not without effect) Bach and a good deal of other real organ music. He admits, however, that it is lacking in the mechanical contrivances that would enable a player to graduate with the right soulfulness from the softest pianissimo to a sobbing fortissimo—a kind of climax that we have so far escaped, happily. As for banging swell-shutters, we have heard these on new as well as old organs, and have generally found the cause to lie in the player; and an aggressive tremulant need bother nobody, as it is the least indispensable feature of the organ. The tone of the letter suggests that the writer is a vain and pompous ass who not only looks a gift horse in the mouth, but tries to be funny about it.

ADVENTURES OF AN ANDANTINO

As many readers know, Lemare's Andantino in D flat has recently been turned into a song, 'Moonlight and Roses.' The current Diapason tells us that 'its sale has multiplied prodigiously in its rebuilt form.' But one result of this rebuilding—a result that might have been foreseen—is to make the piece 'useless for the church organist, whom it served long as a convenient prelude, especially in the hot summer months.' Our contemporary goes on to relate one of several incidents that have occurred as a result of members of a congregation hearing the Andantino for the first time, and jumping to the conclusion that the organist was playing 'Moonlight and Roses':

> 'Mrs. T. J. Healey played the Andantino at St. Patrick's Church as part of the musical programme for the eleven o'clock Mass, quite to the consternation of some of the worshippers, according to the news dispatch. The Waterbury cognoscenti, however, did not seem to know the history of the evolution of the famed Andantino, and we read:
>
> "'Only a timely recognition of the original by certain of the congregation's more discriminating music-lovers, and an explanation by Mrs. Healey, avoided an organized protest. . . . Parishioners, horrified at what they believed to be a gross imposition on the church, voiced their disapproval by declaring it [the Prelude] to be 'sacrilegious.' Miss McDonnell [music instructor in the public schools] said she did not recall the name of the original text, but explained to several of the parishioners who approached her, that she did not think it was 'Moonlight and Roses,' but a classical selection which closely resembled it."'

We doubt if anybody will be more amused than Mr. Lemare at finding his early indiscretion described by a public-school music instructor as 'a classical selection closely resembling "Moonlight and Roses."'

A NEW HYMNAL

'The Church and School Hymnal' (S.P.C.K.) is yet one more endeavour to cater for the needs of young folk. It is the production of a joint Committee appointed by the S.P.C.K. and the C. of E. Sunday School Institute, working in co-operation with the Proprietors of 'The Children's Hymn-Book.' The musical Editor is Mr. C. Hylton Stewart—a name that is a guarantee of good quality so far as a hymnal editor may achieve it. For every book of the kind is a compromise, and rightly so. It must play for safety, and if it manages to improve on its predecessors by increasing the proportion of good tunes it does more than a collection that by its attempt to reform in one big hit, so to speak, alienates the folk most in need of it. We may be sure that certain of the tunes in this book made Mr. Hylton Stewart wince; nor do we suppose he was blind to the clumsy harmonizations that every post-'English Hymnal' collection adopts from that pioneer work. Some of the best of the many excellent new tunes come from the Editor himself. So good are they that we wish he had not limited himself to seven. Kenneth Findlay is also a hymn-tune writer with the root of the matter in him. Martin Shaw is well represented, but where is Geoffrey, with only one tune? On the other hand there are too many traditional airs, most of which would not have got through without the aid of the 'folk' label. Is Dykes likely to be longest-lived of his type? Apparently, if we may judge from his representation in new hymn-books. Here he appears ten times, to Stainer's three and Barnby's none. This Hymnal is reasonably large, the number of hymns being three hundred and thirty-eight. It is admirably produced and indexed. All who have to do with services and classes for young people should examine it.

THE COMPLETE RHEINBERGER ENTHUSIAST

At Queen Street Central Hall, Scarborough, Mr. Victor Brooke has just played the whole of the twenty organ Sonatas of Rheinberger, in a series of weekly half-hour recitals. Mr. Brooke began his task at Whitsuntide. We shall be surprised if the scheme has not created a good many fresh admirers for these admirable works.

We hear with interest of a capital performance of 'The Hymn of Praise,' in the English Church at Foochow, China, on August 21, by the Kuliang Choral Union, a body about sixty strong. (The list of chorus-members includes four doctors and thirteen clergy, by the way.) The occasion marked a big step forward, for hitherto the choir had confined its efforts to the annual performance of a short and easy work of the cantata type. Only pianoforte accompaniment was available (played by Miss Dahl). Mr. Temple Bevan conducted, and the soloists were Mrs. Roderick Scott, Mrs. Day, and the Rev. N. V. Halward. It is pleasant to hear of choral work pursued successfully in so unexpected a quarter.

The Burnley branch of the Manchester Diocesan Church Music Society held its annual Festival Service at the Parish Church on August 29, the choirs of Holy Trinity, St. Peter's, St. John's (Gannow), and St. Luke's (Brierfield) taking part. The Canticles were sung to Martin in A, and the anthems were Balfour Gardiner's 'Evening Hymn,' Cornelius's 'Jerusalem,' and Bach's 'Jesu, Who didst ever guide me.' Mr. W. A. C. Cruickshank conducted, and the service was highly successful save that the congregation was small.

The Oxford University Press has just issued 'A Subject Index of Hymns in the English Hymnal and Songs of Praise,' compiled by Percy Dearmer. It should be of value to preachers and choirmasters, and all who wish to make their choice of hymns something more than a mere ringing of the changes on a few favourites—a method of selection in which the tune is usually considered more than the words. Dr. Dearmer's headings are so inclusive that nobody is likely to consult the Index in vain; and he has added to its value by numerous cross-references.

The organ at Bolton Abbey was re-opened on August 14, when Dr. C. H. Moody gave a recital, his programme consisting of Mendelssohn's second Sonata, Bossi's Pastorale, Lemare's Minuet Nuptiale, Karg-Elert's 'Harmonies du Soir,' Guilmant's Funeral March and Hymn of Seraphs, Bach's Prelude in G and Fugue in C, Blair's 'Slumber Song,' Boëllmann's Toccata, &c.

In connection with the opening of the organ at Liverpool Cathedral (October 23, at 3), Messrs. Henry Willis have arranged for a special train to be run from London, leaving Euston at about 10 a.m., and returning the same day. The fare will be 16*s.* return, and tickets at this reduced price are to be had only from Messrs. Willis (Ferndale Road, S.W.9). Early application is requested.

At Sandbach Parish Church, on September 18, the seventh Choral Festival for the district was held, about two hundred and fifty singers from ten parishes taking part. The service was sung to Stanford in B flat, and the anthems were Martin's 'Magnify His Name' and Atkins's 'Abide with me.' Mr. C. H. Wright conducted. Mr. C. Plumb was organist, and the Sandbach British Legion Orchestra lent assistance.

We hear that Mr. Wilhelm Middelschulte, the well-known American recitalist, has made an organ arrangement of the 'Goldberg' Variations complete, and that the work will shortly be published by Kahnt, of Leipsic. The recitalist who plays the whole thirty movements will need little else for his programme.

An organ and pianoforte recital was given at Doncaster Parish Church on September 2, by Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Bennett, the programme including Bach's D minor Concerto, Mozart's F minor Fantasia, Debussy's 'En Bateau' and Menuet, and the Reubke Fugue.

Messrs. Heffer, Cambridge, have just issued a revised and enlarged edition (1*s.*) of John Newton's 'Don'ts for Choirmasters.' There are now seventy-three 'Don'ts,' and unfortunately they all seem necessary.

At Upper Chapel, Heckmondwike, on August 15, the centenary of W. T. Best was marked by the use of his music during the services, and Mr. J. W. Burnley played the Concert Fantasia on old English airs.

Messrs. Rushworth & Dreaper have installed a new organ in the Parish Church of Dollar, Clackmannanshire—a two-manual of sixteen stops and twelve pistons.

Dr. Harold Darke will give a recital at Clapton Park Congregational Church on October 19, at 8 o'clock, in connection with the Clapton Park Literary Society.

The weekly organ recitals at St. Clement's, Eastcheap, have just been resumed (Fridays, at 1.15).

RECITALS

Mr. Philip Miles, All Saints', Eastbourne—Voluntary, Lock; Chaconne, Purcell; Two Pieces, John Bull.

Mr. Henry Riding, St. Mary Abchurch, E.C.—Scherzo, Wolstenholme; Allegro con spirito, Gladstone; March, Silas; Moderato (Sonata), Ivimey; Andante Grazioso, Alan Gray; Solemn March, Tombelle; Voluntary in A, Battishall.

Mr. Archibald Farmer, St. Lawrence Jewry—Allegro (Sonata No. 5), Bach; Elegiac Poem, Karg-Elert; First movement (Pièce Symphonique), Franck; Toccata, Barié.

Mr. A. W. Standidge, St. Philip's Central School, Eastbourne—Fugue in D, Bach; Agitato (Sonata No. 11), Rheinberger; Rêverie on 'University,' Harvey Grace; Prelude on the 'Old 104th,' Parry.

Dr. Albert Tysoe, Leeds Parish Church—Prelude and Fugue in C, Bach; Fantasia in F, Mozart; Alla Sarabanda (from String Quintet), Vaughan Williams; Intermezzo, Brahms; Fantasy on Campion's 'Babylon's Streams,' Harris; Suite, Maleingreau; Fugue, Canzona, and Epilogue, Karg-Elert.

Dr. Caradog Roberts, Peniel C.M. Church, Trefriw—Overture in E, Morandi; Minuet in G, Beethoven; Toccata in B minor, Gigout; Improvisation on 'The Morning Star,' Karg-Elert; Fugue in G minor, Bach.

Mr. J. A. Shaw, St. Matthew's, Ardwick, Manchester—Sonata No. 5, Guilmant; Prelude on 'Martyrdom,' Parry; Pastorale in E, Lemare; Adagio and Finale (Symphony No. 4), Widor.

Dr. M. P. Conway, Chichester Cathedral—Toccata in B minor, Gigout; Fantaisie Pastorale, de Sévérac; Sonata No. 3, Rheinberger; Toccata and Fugue ('The Wanderer'), Parry; Poetic Variations, Eaglefield-Hull; Scherzo and Finale (Symphony in E), Jacob; Fantasia on 'Come, Holy Ghost,' Bach; Pastorale, Franck.

Mr. F. B. Porkess, Minehead Parish Church—Prelude in E flat, Bach; Romanza, Wolstenholme; Prelude on 'Newtoun,' Charles Wood; Fantasia in F minor, Mozart.

Mr. Clifford Roberts, St. Paul's, Weston-super-Mare—Fantasia in E minor, Silas; Andante espressivo (from Sonata) and Pastoral Scene and Storm, Claussmann; Fantasia in C, Byrd; Triumphal March, Karg-Elert; Sonata No. 1, Mendelssohn; Chorale Preludes—'All men must die' and 'The day so full of joy,' Bach.

Master J. L. Godfrey Hewitt, Cudworth Parish Church—Fantasia and Fugue in C minor, Bach; Fantasy-Prelude, Macpherson; Evening Song, Bairstow; Scherzetto, Vierne; Finale (Sonata No. 5), Rheinberger.

Mr. Paul Rochard, Crosthwaite Parish Church, Keswick—Prelude and Fugue in B minor, Bach; 'The East Wind' and 'The North Wind,' Rowley; 'The Thrush,' Lemare; 'Morceau de Concert,' Hollins.

Mr. George F. Brockless, Parish Church, St. Mary Church—'Consolation,' Reger; Pastel No. 3, Karg-Elert; Prelude, Cantilene, and Scherzetto, Pierné; Final, Franck.

Mr. Norman Askew, Mint Wesleyan Church, Exeter—Prelude and Fugue in E minor, Bach; Funeral March and Hymn of Seraphs, Guilmant; Scherzo and Passacaglia, Rheinberger; 'Suite Gothique,' Boëllmann.

Dr. Charles F. Waters, St. Lawrence Jewry—First movement (Sonata in F minor), Speer; Fantasy on 'Babylon's Streams,' Harris; Finale from Sonata, Waters; Introduction and Passacaglia, Reger; Fugue, Reubke; Allegro and Cantabile (Symphony No. 6), Widor.

APPOINTMENTS

Mr. Dudley E. Bayford, choirmaster and organist, Stockwell Baptist Church, S.W.

Mr. Albert Foster, choirmaster and organist, St. Michael's (City), Bristol.

Mr. E. D. Gaylor Mason, organist, United Methodist Church, Seven Kings.

Mr. G. J. Metzler, choirmaster and organist, St. Stephen's, Walbrook, E.C.

Mr. Arthur R. Saunders, choirmaster and organist, St. Mark's, Hamilton Terrace, N.W.

Mr. Francis W. Sutton, choirmaster and organist, Christ Church, Woburn Square, W.C.

Mr. Leslie Taylor, choirmaster and organist, St. John the Evangelist, Brixton.

Mr. C. H. Wright, choirmaster and organist, St. Paul's Church, Port Arthur, Canada; also conductor of Port Arthur Ladies' Choir.

THE THREE CHOIRS FESTIVAL

Worcester, September 5-10

It is a compliment to the Three Choirs Festivals to say that one is very much like another, for their model is a good one. 'Elijah' at one end and 'The Messiah' at the other are the main supports, and between them comes a generous choice of works by Elgar. These are the three necessities and, when they are met, half the festival programme is already provided. Other classics—the three B's, for instance—account for a good deal of the remainder. Privilege has to be accorded to composers whose personal connection, rather than their rank, demands it. What with lack of time, the prohibitions of a cathedral, and the shortcomings of local concert-halls there is hardly any scope for the larger experiments which differentiate one secular festival from another, and, however doubtful, at least become a peg for discussion and memories.

In spite of these limitations upon it, the Worcester Festival had features of its own. Beethoven's Mass in D is a rarity at the Three Choirs. The Te Deum of Berlioz had not been performed at a Three Choirs Festival since 1906. It added, not cordially perhaps, but decisively, to our knowledge of a composer who threatens us with a revival. The new Church cantata, 'High Heaven's King,' by Sir Walford Davies, proved to be a work of singular attraction.

The sameness of these Festivals is largely due to the presence of the same artists year after year. Of the thirteen principal singers at Worcester, ten had sung a year before at Gloucester. One asks for no change—speaking generally—in this cast. They are, so to say, the holders of the championships and their rivals are, at present, hard to seek. Dorothy Silk, Steuart Wilson, and Norman Allin, to mention three of the most unquestionable, are still young in their careers, and may be expected to maintain their headship for many years to come. Each has a set of gifts that do more than a normal share in meeting the concentrated demands of a festival.

Miss Silk's utilities scarcely need a reminder. Her brilliant singing in Verdi's Requiem at Gloucester, her spirituality in Keats and Holst at Leeds, her essential Bach-singing wherever there is Bach to be sung, her Savitri—such variety is rare, and on each side of her Miss Silk is an artist of full stature. Small wonder that festival committees send her an annual summons. This year Miss Silk won no triumph in her own right. Team work was the measure of her value. 'Hear ye, Israel' became one of the things that annually reconcile us to 'Elijah.' Beethoven's Mass in D was heard without anxiety about the top line of the solo music. In the new Bach, 'Ready be, my soul, alway,' the soprano was on her own ground. Sir Walford Davies has cause to remember Miss Silk's part in his new cantata with gratitude.

The most important of all the soprano solos, those of the Virgin Mary and the Angel in 'The Apostles' and 'The Kingdom,' were given, not to Miss Silk, but with everybody's good wishes to Madame Agnes Nicholls. There was a time when Madame Nicholls was supreme in this music. Now that her voice comes with less ease, and its tone is less crystalline, can anyone say that she has yielded her place? Her sheer musical style, and the undefinable rightness of her expression, are independent of changes that the ear alone can register. The soliloquy of the Virgin Mary in 'The Kingdom,' a chapter that might stand alone for the inmost genius of Elgar, might equally stand as a testimony of the singer who first sang it.

The third soprano was Miss Elsie Suddaby, a useful maid-of-all-work, who always does a job brightly and cleanly. Her principal task was to sing in 'The Messiah.' Nobody could sing 'Rejoice greatly' with a more nimble persuading. She provokes us to think, without reproach, that Gilbert and Sullivan suffered a loss when Miss Suddaby decided for higher things.

The contraltos were a less interesting trio. Miss Astra Desmond's large and luscious portentousness loomed in 'Elijah.' Miss Olga Haley stood beside Madame Nicholls in the Elgar oratorios. Her voice was streaked with silver on its lustrous surface, her stresses and her emotional colouring were freely applied, and she sang with a punch; altogether, she was likeable. So ebullient a singer did well to keep on level terms with the Mary Magdalene music. Miss Muriel Brunskill arrived for the Mass in D, and helped towards a fine performance. In music that uses so little of the human side of singing, one may say that she pulled her weight. Miss Brunskill would be something more than a useful contralto if her voice were brought under better management. As it is, one never knows, and one does not believe that Miss Brunskill knows herself, how loud the next note is going to be.

The principal tenor was John Coates. He sang in 'The Apostles,' 'The Kingdom,' Parry's 'Peace,' Beethoven's Mass, Bach's 'Ready be, my soul, alway,' and 'The Messiah.' That is to say, more was asked of him than of any other singer. Needless to say he gave it with every breath.

It was a good thing to have this prime example of the grand style so frequently before us. We were able to draw comparisons from day to day between Mr. Coates and Mr. Steuart Wilson, his partner and opposite. Mr. Wilson was the most interesting singer at the Festival. His voice is improving, though not at the expense of its ascetic quality (ascetic is the nearest word). It would be a pity if this quality were trained out of his voice, for it mates well with his earnest, young, and gentlemanly way of expressing himself. One can hear the undergraduate—Oxford or Cambridge, either will do—in Mr. Wilson's voice and address; a presentable, eager youth with an open-hearted fondness for poetry. This was a new style of singer for 'If with all your hearts ye truly love Me.' He gave it with a simple, telling persuasiveness that sounded more like a man urging you to believe what he did and not like a man asking you to hear him sing. To hear a tenor in 'Elijah' who did not seem conscious of being a performer was a novel experience. Mr. Wilson sang again in the Te Deum of Berlioz. He did his work well, but it had no such effect as this new emotional dressing — one might almost call it cleansing—of old and familiar strains.

The baritones and basses were a strong team. Mr. Norman Allin won the most respectful attention. He owes much to his voice—a magnificent organ—and perhaps a little less to the meaning he puts into it; but when he gripped us in the soliloquy of Judas outside the Temple, it was difficult to portion the credit between the physical and the mental in his singing. One cannot weigh him up as yet. We esteem his resources, and wonder now and then that he passes them by. Mr. Robert Radford is a more settled personality, whom we know of old. He sings everything like a good fellow, and, without any obvious process of cerebration, brings off some fine truths. Mr. Herbert Heyner, who was St. Peter in 'The Kingdom,' would rank among the elect were it not for his mannerism. He is much too free with his swell shutters—though probably unconscious of it—and he is apt to weep over a simple statement. His is a big and tearful style; the way of a mock turtle. Mr. Horace Stevens was there, of course, in his favourite part of Elijah with an urge. His voice will retire into his throat, if he is not careful, during the next few years; but he will still be the one most fitted to wear the mantle. The newcomer to the team was Mr. Howard Fry, a young baritone who has graduated by merit. He is in dead earnest, and never sings a part as if he had merely learned it. When the next big baritone part in serious English music is created, Mr. Fry's claim should be considered. He did his duty well by Sir Walford Davies.

'HIGH HEAVEN'S KING'

This, the new Church cantata by Sir Walford Davies, was the only considerable novelty of the Festival. In its brief passing—which took about half an hour during the third afternoon—it left an impression of noble words allied with mature art to simple-speaking music. The words are nine verses from Spenser's 'Hymn of Heavenly Love,' each a vision and a reflection on some chapter in the Gospel story. Such poetry should have attracted the eye of musicians long before this, and no doubt it has; but wisdom to seek out a good text does not always go with wisdom in the setting of it. Sir Walford Davies is, one imagines, the first musician to approach Spenser's contemplative verse with a right sense of its quiet rapture. His music goes about its task with a gentle and cherishing hand, spinning out the threads of thought. It neither flourishes the text, asking us to be impressed by it, nor uses these words of import as a support for its own displays. The material of the music is not connected into a whole design by symphonic means or leading motives. Each episode is a design in itself, almost sketchily drawn in some cases and never progressing on familiar lines of cantata choruses or arias. The temper of the work is too speculative for such decided forms. The musical texture is simple on one page, intricate on the next, but always with an economy of notes. Tonality changes freely; but the ruling key of a movement is not long out of sight. The expected does not happen; but the music does not avoid it so much as wander past it. These idle impressions are offered as a vague hint of the mental and musical quality of the work; they may also serve to explain why, during the performance, one was not conscious of listening to distinctively good music. It was only after some intervening works had been heard and the afternoon's affairs were over that the remembrance came of something positively enjoyed, and, with it, the desire to enjoy it again.

There was one part of the Cantata that did not, on this hearing, contribute to our pleasure in it. Sir Walford Davies has put in, before his final section, a kind of vignette from Holy Writ. The heading runs, 'The words of the Lord are heard in which He tells His followers what they are to do,' and the inset consists of the narrative of the washing of feet, from St. John. It is to be sung by a small chorus of men and boys and three bass soloists 'chosen for their power to blend' who need 'to utter the words with studied unanimity and quietude.' The special conditions here outlined may be said to ask for specially practised singers, of a technique refined beyond ordinary standards. With all respect to the three gentlemen of Worcester who were given this task, the effectiveness of the performance—never in doubt while Miss Dorothy Silk, Mr. Howard Fry, or the chorus was singing—was dubious in this episode, and the fragile music was interrupted by the attention being drawn aside to the personal problems of its interpreters. In any case one may still ask whether this interpolation justifies itself. No answer can be given except by those who are better able than most men to judge of its spiritual significance.

The intervening music to which allusion has been made included the 'Pastoral' Symphony of Dr. Vaughan Williams. If there were any others present who, like the writer, have felt impatience with the motionless melancholy of the Symphony, they must have been accused by this performance. The setting was ideal—a Cathedral, the beautifying echoes of its vastness, the listener's sense of loneliness in a crowd (one does not feel this so much in a concert-hall), the perfection of orchestral playing, the composer to direct it. It is no reproach to a musical work to say that it asks for special conditions to make it understood when it asks for such conditions as these. The Prelude to 'Parsifal,' a few hours later, reacted in a similar way. It suddenly became unhackneyed.

BERLIOZ'S TE DEUM

The first ten bars of the Te Deum of Berlioz remain the most vivid memory of the Festival. Probably Berlioz, in writing them down, had a conceit that this would be the case wherever they were performed. A loud chord on the orchestra to the west of the audience is followed, after nothing but a silent pause, by a loud chord on the organ to the east, and the cross-fire is kept up until it is time for some music. Such an irregular proceeding is apt to make a congregation jump, and anything that does this is remembered. Everybody began to look forward to some more fun from this gamesome Te Deum, and when it failed to arrive they thought that Berlioz had let them down. The promise of stentorian antiphonal praise is soon forgotten, and the organ thereafter joins in nothing adventurous and little that takes effect as music. The first chorus is about the best section of the work. It moves forcibly, with vigorous gestures and a rolling eye, so to speak. But even here we begin to be worried by harmonic non sequiturs and queer contrapuntal grammar which do not carry the excuse that something vital is being said with them that could not be said without them. These faults of expression show up more clearly in the sections that have no compensating interest of strong movement. Some of the subdued parts of the Te Deum have not even the virtue of saying things wrongly. A queer sort of nullity creeps over the pages. It is familiar to people who do not like Berlioz. Those who like him see it as a different quality. In the last chorus of the work Berlioz seems to have been wildly attracted by the words Judex crederis esse venturus. He gives them a phrase in 9/8 time that is as unjustifiable as the Latin itself, and plugs away at it with an insistence that you may call Holstian—or negroid, as you will. The listener simply does not want it, whatever his angle of view towards songs of praise in a church or works for large choral societies in French Albert Halls. There is a lot to be said for this strange, tall fellow, Berlioz. But he does resemble Hamlet, with an impediment in his speech.

The other works that first saw the light of performance were unexceptionable in intentions. They were music of good fabric but not quite right in the making. Mr. Edgar Bainton, like Sir Walford Davies, had gone to the treasure-house of English literature and had brought forth a gem of John Donne's, entitled 'Hymn to God the Father,' for choral and orchestral setting. To the reader's loss it cannot be quoted here, for lack of space to quote the whole of it. Mr. Bainton's music mates the words in seriousness but not in action. The words deliver stroke after stroke; the music, a wrapping of many parallel strands, envelops and hinders them. From Mr. Alexander Brent-Smith we had an orchestral suite, 'In the Cotswolds.' It is written in three movements, 'The village green,' 'The Lady's dolour,' and 'The hunting fugue,' each of them packed tight with good musical goings-on. They bespeak a mind itself packed tight with musicianship, speculative, creative, critical, and one that, during the creative process, is too intent on making trees to arrange a proper wood. Mr. Brent-Smith might take some tips from those easy-going, competent people Gounod and Saint-Saëns, who could lay out a sylvan landscape with scarcely a decent tree in it. The composer of these Cotswold pieces (and of the Symphony played at Bournemouth this year) is not yet so beguiling a companion as the writer of those jolly articles in the Musical Times. Mr. W. H. Reed, on whom the Three Choirs sun shines gladly, brought two 'Somerset Idylls,' worked to the old tunes, 'Crystal Spring' and 'May Morning'; worked and overworked, for his symphonic metamorphoses were an unkind treatment, though meant for the best. What Mr. Reed did was done well; but the tunes objected—this quite apart from the mere fact that they were folk-tunes.

All the other music of the Festival must go into a catalogue: Dame Ethel Smyth's choral 'Canticle of Spring,' which she composed many years ago, and conducted in the Cathedral on September 9; Weelkes's 'Gloria in excelsis,' the Locarno music (without disrespect) from Parry's 'War and Peace'; Holst's short festival Te Deum; Palestrina's 'O bone Jesu'; Charles Wood's 'Dirge for Two Veterans'; Elgar's 'For the Fallen'; Brahms's first Symphony and Mozart's 'Jupiter'; 'The Bo'sun's Mate' and 'Wasps' Overtures; the 'Enigma' Variations; a 'Brandenburg' Concerto; and much else.

THE CHOIR

The choir's orders were: to have in artistic preparation, by the evening of September 6, four Oratorios, a Mass, a long Te Deum, a short one, three and a half Cantatas, four choral songs, and three Motets; all this on top of a good deal of service music. It was of course more than any choir could do. There is always this compromise to be made, at the Three Choirs or any similar festival, between what is possible and what is ideal. The most we can insist upon is a good working acquaintance with all the works; the residuum of artistic acquaintance varies from year to year according to the stock of human forces that chance brings to the Festival. This year the stock was below the average. It ran to an excellent working acquaintance with the music, enough to cover the difficulties of Beethoven's Mass in D, the shifting ground of Sir Walford Davies's cantata, the technical exigencies of Elgar's oratorios. But it did not run to fine-drawn interpretation even of the degree that experience has shown to be obtainable by the Three Choirs. Many pianissimos were mezzo-forte, to mention one measurable aspect. The tone of the voices was not such as to send us away glorying. One missed the peculiarly pleasurable surface that we have come to look for on the mass of western voices—a kind of verdance that differs from the Yorkshire brightness. The sheen was lacking. But the choral singing was a disappointment only to those who had learnt, in other years, to be fastidious beyond reason when they go to Worcester, Hereford, and Gloucester.

The Festival added honour to the name of Sir Ivor Atkins. These merchant princes of music in the western cities work miracles in their festival labour. Yet we never hear of a nervous breakdown. Probably they believe in their work too much to let it prey upon them. One of the reasons why we find virtue in the generalship of Sir Ivor Atkins, or of Sir Herbert Brewer, or of Dr. Percy Hull, is that they make no parade of its trials. W. McNaught.

The Westminster Choral Society and the British Women's Symphony Orchestra have amalgamated, and will give three concerts this season, conducted by Mr. Vincent Thomas. On October 27 the chief works will be Stanford's Te Deum and Bach's Magnificat; on January 19 the programme is labelled 'popular,' and will consist of 'The Golden Legend,' 'Blest Pair of Sirens,' and Smetana's 'Vltava'; on March 16, Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater' and Mendelssohn's 'Italian' Symphony are the principal items. A prospectus, giving particulars of voice trials, rehearsals, &c., may be had from Mr. Philip Ashbrooke, 20, Old Cavendish Street, W.1. It is hoped that by thus joining forces both Societies may be able to overcome the economic difficulties that such organizations can hardly face singly to-day.

Letters to the Editor

THE CINEMA ORGANIST

Sir,—It is encouraging to find from the letters on this subject in your September issue that Mr. Maclean's lecture has been the prime cause of widespread interest. My letter in the August number has evidently provoked some slight misapprehension on two points: (1) I wish to state, in the plainest possible terms, that it was not in any way intended as a personal attack upon Mr. Maclean, for whom, as a cinema organist, I have great admiration, and whose progress in the cinema I have watched with the keenest pleasure and interest. I esteem him both as an artist and friend. (2) My remarks upon extemporisation referred to the accompaniment to 'feature' or 'star' films—the photo-play or film-drama. In my anxiety to be as concise as possible I omitted to mention that fact, and possibly other minor details also. To present the subject completely and in detail is beyond the scope of a correspondence column.

Mr. O'Henry's suggestion of combining extemporisation with items from printed music is quite in accordance with my own views; there are innumerable cases in film accompaniment where a certain piece is demanded either by the action or by a sub-title. My letter was confined to the question of extemporisation as a basis of film accompaniment.

Mr. Westerby's letter holds the balance very fairly; the question of unity and coherence in an extemporised accompaniment has already been considered by me, and reduced to a practical system. But I doubt the accuracy of his concluding paragraph.

Mr. Taylor refers to my 'inconsistent criticism'; I fail to perceive the inconsistency. I have not recommended one course in my articles and practised another in the cinema. If my views upon extempore accompaniment are a 'counsel of perfection' how can they be 'go-as-you-please methods'? And why should we not strive for perfection in cinema organ-playing? The idea so prevalent among the majority of cinema organists, and one I have frequently attacked, is that the work of the cinema organist is an easy proposition and that 'anything will do.' The 'go-as-you-please' methods are those which I have attacked and exposed repeatedly and consistently for the last six years [while musical editor of The Cinema]; my whole object being to assist in placing the cinema organist's work on a sound and artistic basis—in other words, to see it perfected as a definite form of the organist's art.

Mr. Taylor's remarks as to maintaining a standard of excellence, &c., 'through every performance for a week' show that he (as, doubtless, many others) has not evolved a system or is not aware of one. In answer to his question, I merely state that I have done it for every night of the week, including Sunday, for a period of sixteen months without a break of even one performance, during which period I accompanied two hundred and twenty different feature films. Had my performances not been satisfactory both to 'management and patrons' my services would hardly have been retained either for that period or for the three succeeding years. Such a performance would not only be wonderful, but quite impossible, if I had not a definite, logical system and method.

I stated in my former letter:

> '. . . the extemporised film accompaniment by a competent organist, on the right type of organ, is the only method of securing an artistic and perfect synchronisation of film and music.'

In addition to this, I hold the opinion that the value of any theory is proved only in practice. Have my views upon the extemporised accompaniment been justified in practice, or am I the only one to hold such views? Let some one, other than myself, answer:

> 'I hasten to congratulate the gifted organist of the Stoll Picture Theatre, Kingsway [Dr. Tootell], upon the most excellent organ accompaniment I have yet heard to any picture. His setting to "Nothing else Matters" was masterly. . . . He played to the feature film for exactly ninety minutes, during which time every scene on the screen was perfectly fitted.'

And:

> 'The superb setting played by Dr. G. Tootell to the Gaumont picture, "The Judgment of the Deep" . . . every scene was perfectly fitted . . . the whole setting and execution were a veritable triumph. . . . Incidentally, this same setting proved very effectively the value of the organ for screen accompaniment.'

These opinions were not 'inspired' by me, nor were they written by a paid press-agent; they were written by Mr. Gilbert Stevens in the Kinematograph Weekly in October and December, 1921, and Mr. Stevens is the most expert critic of film music in London. Furthermore, when writing the first of these criticisms, Mr. Stevens was, I believe, unaware that I had extemporised the accompaniment to the film. I have purposely selected these two cases, as neither of these films could have been adequately accompanied by an orchestra.

After hearing my extemporised accompaniment to Mary Pickford's film, 'Suds,' one of the most expert of film musicians in London, Mr. S. Mey, said to me (in the presence of the manager), 'You have beaten me on that film, but you can do on the organ what I cannot do with an orchestra.' And that remark appears to me to support my views upon solo organists and makeshifts.

Mr. Taylor invites me to make a trip to London in order to learn a few things. Strangely enough, I have just read the following (by an eminent music critic): 'There is a tendency among Londoners to think that there is only one city on earth where everything is done right.' As a fact, I visit London at comparatively frequent intervals. In March of this year, during one such visit, I followed my usual practice and visited several London cinemas. Five of these are within a radius of one mile from Trafalgar Square, and I confine my remarks to the organ playing in these, exaggerating nothing, and stating simple facts. I will, for obvious reasons, refer to them by number. They are five of the chief cinemas in London.

(1.) Here the organist commenced by accompanying the 'news' film, playing what was, presumably, a quick march. In no case were four consecutive bars played in the same tempo, and it was even difficult to ascertain for a time whether he played in duple or triple time. The organ (a fine instrument) sounded like a huge hurdy-gurdy, the full organ being used throughout with appalling effect.

(2.) A 'selection' on the organ during an intermission between the films. The piece was 'Finlandia,' which was obviously beyond the player's powers. No rhythm, not even good tempo, the time varying considerably in consecutive bars; and the beautiful little melody (so like a folk-song) played as a piccolo solo. Here, again, was a very fine organ.

(3.) A 'selection' again. Here we had nothing but 'jazz' on one of the finest cinema organs in London. 'Jazz' can be either effective or extremely vulgar when played on an organ; in this case it was the most vulgar exhibition I have ever heard in my life. Can anything more frightful be imagined than 'Yes, sir! That's my baby' and 'Valencia' played on a huge organ, with all the power of the instrument?

(4.) The organist accompanied a film—a 'Western' drama. No attempt was made at fitting the film or following the action. Among the items played were Smart's 'Evening Prayer'; Lemmens's Final in D; 'Prière' and 'Minuet' from 'Suite Gothique'; Guilmant's 'Cradle Song' and 'Grand Chœur' in D.

(5.) The organist accompanied a feature film. Not a bad setting, with a good deal of clean and accurate playing of the various pieces. The performance was spoilt by injudicious stop-combinations, and was altogether lacking in emotion and imagination. The various pieces were, generally, suitable to the scenes, but the effect was not secured in performance. The organ is a very fine one.

If these (or, at least, the first four) are examples of what I am invited to hear in London, I can only answer that the sooner the organ is taken out of the cinema, the better it will be for music and organ playing in particular. The cleverest thing about these players is the way they hold their jobs; but, no doubt, when I heard them, they were 'not in good form,' or there was 'something wrong with the organ,' which I did not perceive. By way of consolation, I heard an excellent organ accompaniment (partly improvised) to the film 'Time, the Comedian,' at the New Gallery, Regent Street, which I enjoyed. It was very well done.

We have reason to be thankful that there are such artists as Mr. Maclean who maintain a consistently high standard, who realise that cinema organ-playing is an art and not merely a humdrum and easy means of earning a livelihood, and who strive to maintain that art on a high level. Mr. Maclean's views may differ from mine, but that fact does not alter my high estimation of him as an artist.

A film may be artistically accompanied by utilising printed music. I do not condemn that procedure—as a procedure—and have done it myself. But such procedure does not prove the cinema organist to be a unique artist; neither is it possible to secure perfect synchronisation throughout. The extemporised accompaniment proves the one and secures the other.

In my book, 'How to Play the Cinema Organ,' which is at present in the press, and will shortly be issued by Messrs. Paxton, a chapter is devoted to the extemporised film accompaniment, in which the subject is treated exhaustively and in detail, with copious illustrations. From that anyone sufficiently interested in the subject will be able to see clearly that the extemporised accompaniment is a practical proposition, and not such a bugbear as it appears to be to some.

The cinema has no use for theories which cannot be turned to practical use as a box-office attraction, and I should only be preparing myself for ridicule if I advanced any theory which could not be proved to be of practical use.—Yours, &c.,

Douglas, Isle of Man. GEORGE TOOTELL
(Formerly Solo Organist, Stoll Picture Theatre, Kingsway, London).

SIR,—Dr. Tootell's criticism and answer to Mr. Quentin Maclean's lecture at the R.C.O. scarcely needs any augmentation. I consider the majority of solo organists in the leading cinemas of this country will absolutely concur with his views. Like Dr. Tootell, I have had a 'fair experience' of cinema playing and the fitting of pictures. The art of extemporisation is one which needs a solid foundation and calls for strict academic training. The last is indispensable. Ornamentation without foundation is totally inadequate. The 'picture' profession is being inundated at the moment with so-called incidental music, the style of the majority of the pieces being quite ordinary. Herein lies the path where a versatile musician can show his creative powers. Episode following episode must synchronise atmospherically and be relevant throughout with the film. But how many organists are there capable of fitting these various situations? There are many players who are completely lost when compelled to resort to the art of extemporisation. The mere possession of a good memory, calling forth fox-trots, waltzes, ballads, &c., is all right in its place, but the fitting of the 'feature' is the strong point of a super cinema organist. Comedy films, Felix films, cartoon films, &c., need showmanship, ornamentation, and not only the playing of fox-trots or one-steps one after the other. Extemporisation here is in a lighter and humorous strain: it consists of 'trickery' and stunt-playing, and often gives the performer the 'estimable' title of a 'wonder organist.' But that is only one branch of solo-playing. Nowadays the organist must be gifted to such an extent to 'show off' his prowess as an 'all-rounder.' Such men are few, therefore great scope is offered, and many opportunities will present themselves for first-class players. The art of synchronisation and extemporisation is a difficult one, and needs thorough and careful practice and concentration.—Yours, &c.,

'The Havelock,' Sunderland.' FRANK MATTHEW (Wurlitzer Organist).

SIR,—May I be permitted to say a few words on the use of the cinema organ? (I believe I was the first in this country to show, in 1914, on an organ of suitable design and size, in a theatre which was then one of the largest, and certainly as beautifully equipped as any to-day, that the moving picture could be more adequately intensified by this means than by any other known.)

Dr. George Tootell re-echoes the gist of every word I wrote in various periodicals some eleven years ago.

Mr. Quentin Maclean probably condemns (as must every one) more or less aimless, if well-meant, meandering, when he speaks of 'extemporisation.' But really good extemporisation must perforce form the basis of really adequate accompaniment to moving films — especially dramas.

Accompanying a film calls for perfect mental and physical well-being. Few pictures can be studied beforehand. Comparatively few are really inspiring. Hence I have found that it helps matters all round not always to depend on one's self for original themes, but most frequently to introduce well-known melodies—from symphonies to songs—and to develop such extemporaneously. In practice, the accompaniment of films is a matter of hours, day after day; inspiration is a matter of seconds, and not of frequent occurrence. Therefore quotations from composers of worth are more acceptable, and the whole accompaniment is made more artistic. No rubbish need be introduced, nor need one lapse into unconsciously intensifying a film—which may be boring—by expressing boredom.

The 'fitting' of musical extracts—necessary for an orchestra—is a deplorable makeshift. Music specially written for a drama may or may not 'come off'—it usually does not.

Dr. Tootell is perfectly right in saying that we are long past the experimental stage. Indeed, there has hardly ever been such, for it was obvious from the first that the adequate accompaniment of films was a one-man job. There is certainly room for improvement in the matter of presenting films—in more educated care as to detail. And much more might be made of certain scenes and climaxes if operators slowed down the pace of the feed more often. Operating a film perhaps hardly conduces to poetical perception, but it might be possible for the operator and the musician to arrive at some understanding.

I am afraid Dr. Tootell is also accurate in the latter half of his closing paragraph. Special technique, very wide knowledge of, and practical experience in, music of all styles, a keen sense of the dramatic, and especial ability and temperament are requisite for this highly special work.

Since I left England matters may not possibly have progressed very far. But we need most certainly not go out of England for the necessary type of organ. We can build as well as, if not better than, any other nation. And the direction of all the music should be under the organist, the most highly-educated musician.

At Chicago there are some two hundred theatres, and an organ in every one of them.—Yours, &c.,

San Remo. KENNETH G. BURNS
(Formerly organist and director of music to the Palladium, Southport).

SIR,—The admirable letters on the above subject in your September issue so ably deal with the matter that apparently little more can usefully be added. As one who was present, however, at the lecture given by Mr. Maclean at the R.C.O., and being more than well acquainted with his splendid work at Shepherd's Bush (to listen to which is invariably a real pleasure), I would like to express my appreciation of the sound common-sense of his general remarks, as well as of the modesty with which they were expressed.

Dr. G. Tootell disagrees with Mr. Maclean on (amongst other things) the subject of extemporised accompaniment. If an organist could be found revealing the combined genius of a Wagner and a Strauss and the executive ability of a Marcel Dupré and a Lemare, one might admit it to be 'only a makeshift method' for such a unique wonder to adapt existing music to a film. Since, however, such a marvel is not to be found every day, one can only endorse Mr. Maclean's condemnation of extemporisation as a general basis of film accompaniment.

To extemporise artistically, consistently, and regularly every day, week in week out, retaining freshness and originality, simply could not be done. Little mannerisms and idiosyncrasies of the player (e.g., certain favoured keys, a particular little 'figure,' &c.) would unconsciously become stereotyped and consequently monotonous.

By all means let us use extemporisation sometimes, to accompany perhaps some episode demanding special treatment, or when an existing piece cannot be found with just the right atmosphere, but do not let us make a general practice of extemporising an accompaniment to the whole picture, because it would be quite impossible always to do it well, much less perfectly.—Yours, &c.,

G. T. Pattman.

1, Bassett Road, Notting Hill.

NATIONAL INSTITUTE FOR THE BLIND: APPEAL FOR VOLUNTARY WORKERS

Sir,—The Council of the above-mentioned Institute would be grateful if you would permit them to draw attention in your columns to a recent extension of the Institute's well-known musical activities on behalf of the sightless, this time more especially for the benefit of advanced students and for those who have taken up music as a vocation.

You have already so often referred to the musical work of the National Institute that your readers are doubtless aware of its extensive catalogue of musical works published in Braille and sold to the blind at a quarter the cost of production.

While this provision meets the needs of most blind musicians, yet there are many occasions when a specially prepared single copy of a work is urgently required—perhaps for an examination, a Church festival, a recital, or some other important musical event.

To meet such situations the Council has decided to set apart for this particular kind of transcription work the services of two members of its staff of blind Braille-music writers, provided a sufficient number of voluntary sighted readers can be found to offer to dictate the selected works to them and so occupy their available time.

It is a grievous mortification for a gifted and eager blind musician to be unable to rise to a special occasion simply because he cannot get a Braille copy of an essential work, and so be made to suffer the humiliation and consequences of an undeserved defeat. Indeed, it would be difficult to conceive of a more poignantly-felt need in the world of music, or one in which ready personal service could be more aptly compared to the timely offering of the 'cup of cold water' to one about to perish.

Already a number of musical people—with the necessary leisure—have responded, and arranged to devote a definite number of hours per week to this 'Dictation' at the Institute.

If, therefore, any of your readers resident within reach of the Institute feel that they too would like to help to complete our chain of part-time readers, we should be most grateful if they would write to, or call at, the Institute (Music Department), 224, Great Portland Street, W.1—one minute's walk from the Great Portland Street Station of the Metropolitan Railway.

Thanking you on behalf of the Council for your generous espousal at all times of our great and onerous work on behalf of the blind.—Your, &c.,

Edward Watson
(Secretary, Music Department, National Institute for the Blind).

WANTED: A PELHAM HUMPHREY TEXT

Sir,—I should be grateful if any of your readers could tell me where there is an early text of Pelham Humphrey's anthem, 'Rejoice in the Lord, O ye righteous,' other than the one in Blow's handwriting in the Fitzwilliam Museum at Cambridge.—Yours, &c.,

7, Minor Canon Row, Rochester. C. Hylton Stewart.

'CASTLE SOCIETY OF MUSIC'

Sir,—The query of Miss Broderick in your September issue (p. 834), regarding the 'Castle Society of Music,' may be answered as follows, premising that a careful hunt through the London newspapers of the period 1724-53 would furnish material for an interesting volume on the subject.

Although 'Grove' does not specifically treat of the Castle Society, or the Castle concerts, yet, under the article 'Young' (vol. v., p. 579) will be found an account of the founding of these concerts—by Talbot Young, son of John Young—contributed by Mr. F. Kidson, who quotes the amusing catch made by Dr. Cæsar on father and son, which was printed in Henry Playford's second book of the 'Pleasant Musical Companion,' in 1701:

'You scrapers that want a good fiddle well strung,
You should go to the man that is old while he's Young.
But if this same fiddle you fain wou'd play bold,
You must go to his son, who'll be Young when he's old.
There's old Young and young Young, both men of renown,
Old sells, and young plays, the best fiddle in town.
Young and old live together, and may they live long—
Young to play an old fiddle, Old to sell a new song.'

The Castle Concerts were held at the Castle Tavern in Paternoster Row, and were founded by Talbot Young, in 1724. In October of that year Talbot Young led the band, and he continued to do so for about twenty years. Previously he had, in conjunction with Dr. Greene, held weekly 'music meetings' at his father's house, the Dolphin and Crown, where they were joined by many gentlemen performers; and so successful did their meetings prove that about the year 1719 the Youngs removed to the Queen's Head Tavern, Paternoster Row. At the same date Talbot Young was given a post in the Chapel Royal. One of the amateurs at the last-named tavern was Woolaston, whose portrait of Talbot Young was formerly in the Castle concert-room.

In 1744 the subscription was raised from two guineas to five guineas, so as to enable the members to give oratorios. On the retirement of Talbot Young, about this date, Prospero Castrucci took over the leadership of the Castle Society of Music. Concerts continued to be given at the Castle Tavern till 1753, and Talbot Young died in 1754—an octogenarian.—Yours, &c.,

W. H. Grattan Flood.

MUSIC AND TEARS

Sir,—Though it may lay one open to a charge of making a parade of his emotions—a thing the average Englishman is notoriously not addicted to—it may not be entirely devoid of note if, 'in the interests of scientific inquiry,' another music-lover searches his recollection for passages, or complete works, which he has found it impossible to listen to dry-eyed. First and foremost comes Wagner, the emotional composer par excellence, with many a page in 'Die Meistersinger' (one supreme instance being the outburst into C major in Act 3, at Hans Sachs's words, 'Nun aber kam Johannistag!'); the joyous entry of Siegfried—so like the opening of the 'Hammerklavier' Sonata—in B flat (3-4), in Act 1 of 'Siegfried'; the Brunnhilde theme on the bass clarinet in Act 1 of 'Götterdämmerung'; and Tannhäuser's outcry in Act 1, 'Allmächtiger, dir sei Preis.' Of Beethoven, almost equally rich in this respect, one might specify the Arietta of the Sonata, Op. 3, the Allegretto of the seventh Symphony, many parts of the ninth Symphony, the slow movements of the first 'Rasoumovsky' Quartet, the Andante con moto of the Quartet, Op. 130, and the radiant second subject of the Finale of the C sharp minor Quartet, among many others. In Schubert there are many places in the C major Symphony, and the first movement of the D minor String Quartet. Outstanding examples from Brahms are the slow movement of the G minor Pianoforte Quartet, and the tremendously exultant Finale of the first Symphony. In Bach (a rich fount again), one might particularise the cantata, 'Gottes Zeit,' and the long-breathed melody in B minor, from one of the cantatas, on which Reger has based his magnificent set of Pianoforte Variations, Op. 81.

To come down (or is it up?) to modern music, there is the deep, human pathos of Strauss's 'Don Quixote,' and, strange though it may seem in this connection, 'Till Eulenspiegel'; the slow movement and the superb transfiguration of the motto theme in the Finale of Elgar's first Symphony; the closing chorus, over the dead body of 'Dylan,' in Act 1 of Holbrooke's opera; the Overture to 'Hansel and Gretel'; Schönberg's Sextet, and certain parts of the 'Gurrelieder'; Bax's moving Pianoforte Quintet, and some of the pianoforte pieces, notably 'Dream in Exile.'

One is well aware that this enumeration (which, lengthy though perhaps it seems, might well have been made longer) represents but an outline of one person's reactions to many types of great music. Yet, such as it is, I beg to submit it as the personal expression of—Yours, &c.,

28, Hilldrop Crescent, N.7. FELIX WHITE.

EXAMINATION PAPERS

SIR,—Your paragraph in 'Occasional Notes,' on certain criticisms by examiners upon a Mus. Bac. Exercise, will meet with many sympathisers, especially as you invite the views of readers.

May I say a word for the other side? The Exercise in question was probably a rejected one, and if so, a certain amount of annoyance is quite natural in the disappointed candidate. In any case, the examiners were perfectly justified in pointing out 'false relations,' harsh clashings, and even omitted accidentals.

These things are simply 'not done' in the pure, scholarly style demanded by our Universities. Whether they ought to be allowed is another question, which I will not argue in this letter. Let us take an illustration: if a candidate for Matriculation persisted in using split infinitives and other forms of bad grammar, his English essay would very properly fail. The fact that such things are done by celebrated novelists does not justify their use, any more than the fact that such faults as you have named occur in the music of famous composers justifies them in examinations.

I have coached many students for degrees, and have seen many Exercises, but I have never yet seen an unfair comment. On the contrary, the comments often show a real desire to assist the candidate.

Examiners are the upholders of the clean principles that have established the best English tradition, the tradition one finds so admirably expressed, say, in the music of Sir Hubert Parry. If a candidate is not prepared to obey those principles, he is not fit to possess a degree, which is a proof, as his Exercise is a pledge, of his adherence to them.

Some of us are quite tired of the crude and silly music of certain 'moderns,' who would have us believe that rubbishy discords are good music, and we are grateful to examiners for insisting upon a high standard of pure writing.

Further, it does not follow that because in this particular case no comment was made on the 'form or musicianship of the work,' either that this was good, or that the examiners had failed to estimate it correctly. From my own experience of such Exercises, I should say it was probably bad, which constituted the main reason for its rejection. A candidate who is capable of really big things in musicianship is usually careful in little things. Let the disappointed candidate take to heart this kindly hint, and write another Exercise that will be a credit to him and to his University.—Yours, &c.,

FREDERIC H. WOOD.

252, Hornby Road,
Blackpool.

[While welcoming Dr. Wood's letter, we must point out that it answers only one side of our 'Occasional Note.' We admitted that drastic correction of grammatical slips might be defensible, but we protested against 'an examining method that confined itself to such correction.' If, as Dr. Wood suggests, this particular Exercise was bad in form or musicianship, surely the defect (far more important than mild false relations) should have been pointed out by the examiner. The analogy between the false relations set up in an orchestral score and bad grammar in literature is less convincing than it appears to be. False relations often sound well, whereas bad grammar never does. We still hold strongly that the examiner of the Exercise under discussion did only half of his job—the easy and less important half.—EDITOR.]

COLNE ORPHEUS CHOIR AND INCREASED PRIZE-MONEY

SIR,—Will you kindly favour me with space in your October issue to correct any possible misunderstanding which might arise from the report given in the Musical Times of August on 'The Conference of Competitive Choirs and Festival Representatives,' held recently at Halifax?

The report says that the Colne Orpheus Male-Voice Choir submitted a resolution favouring increased prize-money at Competitive Festivals—a suggestion that came in for severe criticism.

As a matter of truth no representative from the Colne Orpheus Choir was present at the Conference, and the subject was entirely new to its members, who have not at any time, either in committee or in open meeting, given it even a thought.

My committee was concerned lest the report should give the impression that financial gain had chief place in the work of our choir, and this it would greatly regret, for at all times the Colne Orpheus Choir has, along with Mr. L. Greenwood (its conductor), endeavoured to attain to a higher standard of musical excellence at every successive competitive festival which it has attended.—Yours, &c.,

J. E. TAYLOR
(Hon. Secretary, Colne Orpheus Glee Union).

96, Park Drive, Colne.

[We gladly publish Mr. Taylor's letter, at the same time pointing out that the report reached us from an official of the National Association of Comeptitive Choirs.—EDITOR.]

'THE CHILDREN'S MUSIC'

SIR,—I find myself in complete agreement with Mr. J. H. Elliot's interesting article in your September issue under the above heading. Recently, at the end of a talk on music to some elementary school children, I asked one very intelligent damsel what piece of music she would most like to hear. 'Valencia,' unhesitatingly replied the maiden. For a moment I was a little dashed, having expected a 'perfectly beautiful' answer! But a little reflection showed me that the child was simply asking for something she knew she would enjoy.

Had the answer been 'Beethoven's fifth Symphony,' I should have thought, 'You little prig!' For the child who could really appreciate Beethoven (to adapt a well-known saying) would indeed be a monstrosity.—Yours, &c.,

'The Lighthouse,' Winterton, Great Yarmouth. ALEC ROBERTSON.

The Amateurs' Exchange

Under this heading we insert, free of charge, announcements by amateur musicians who wish to co-operate with others.

Soprano wishes to meet accompanist for mutual practice. Near Royal Academy of Music.—VOCAL, c/o Musical Times.

Pianist (gentleman) wishes to meet vocalists for accompaniment and mutual practice. Margate district.—X. Y. Z., c/o Musical Times.

Contralto wishes to meet pianist for mutual practice. Classical music. N.E. London.—F. L., c/o Musical Times.

'Cellist wishes to meet other string players for practice of classical string quartets.—Miss P. CARTER, Brantwood, Killinghall, Harrogate.

Pianist (good sight-reader) wishes to meet violinist or instrumentalist for weekly mutual practice. Kingston or Surbiton districts.—Miss WATERS, 5, Minerva Road, Kingston-on-Thames.

Pianist wishes to meet vocalist or instrumentalist for mutual study. N. London.—F. G., c/o Musical Times.

Accompanist wishes to practise with singer. W. or S.W. districts preferred. 'Cellist (advanced) also wanted for chamber music.—G. A., c/o Musical Times.

Violinist wishes to form string quartet. Mornings or afternoons. Good library. N. London.—'CELLO, c/o Musical Times.

Violinist (gentleman) wishes to meet another for classical duet sight-reading practice, with view to forming quartet.—A. G., c/o Musical Times.

Lady pianist (A.R.C.M., L.R.A.M.) wishes to meet violinist and 'cellist to form trio. Also good singer. Must be S.E. London district.—T. C. N., c/o Musical Times.

Contralto wishes to meet pianist for mutual practice. Ealing district.—M. S., c/o Musical Times.

Pianist (gentleman) wishes to meet violinist or other instrumentalists. City practice.—F. T., c/o Musical Times.

Wanted for string quartet, competent violinist and 'cellist. —Write, S. H. G., 11, Salisbury Road, Leyton, E.10.

Lady pianist wants accompanimental practice with vocalist. Must be S.E. district. Lewisham or Catford preferred. —A. E., c/o Musical Times.

Violinist wanted to complete pianoforte quartet for mutual practice. Orchestral music, &c. W. London district. —H. M., c/o Musical Times.

Soprano wishes to meet other vocalists for practice of quartets, &c. N. London preferred. — Melody, c/o Musical Times.

Soprano wishes to meet qualified accompanist for mutual practice. Eltham district. —S. A. G., c/o Musical Times.

Violinist (lady) wishes to meet pianist and other instrumentalists for mutual practice.—18, Normanton Road, Clifton, Bristol.

'Cellist (learner) wishes to meet good pianist and violinists for progressive practice—solos, trios, and quartets. Croydon district.—Charles P. Cocks, 158, Morland Road, Croydon.

Sharps and Flats

The humbug of the ordinary concert-hall irritates me. . . . The usual noise. . . . Humbug. . . . Virtuosos.—Arnold Dolmetsch.

You cannot have music without composers, and at present jazz has no composers in the full sense of the term ; the brains of the whole lot of them put together would not fill the lining of Johann Strauss's hat.—Ernest Newman.

The stage is in so deplorable a condition that, so far as I can see, the importance of broadcasting cannot be too strongly emphasised. . . . Actors and actresses are so busy trying to be ladies and gentlemen and golfers, that they have no time left to pay attention to their jobs.—Osbert Sitwell.

Who are these Sitwells? Who are these people? What are they out for? What do they stand for? Why do they do it?—Robert Hale.

Angry people rush in, saying, 'Who are these Sitwells?' If they have never heard of us, why do they mind what we say?—Osbert Sitwell.

This is most distressing. There is some sort of conspiracy against the family. Many people have said much more hard things about the stage than Osbert did, and no notice has been taken of it, but when a Sitwell says them it is looked upon as a very dreadful affair. It is time some of these stage people were taught a lesson, and if they are not careful they will get one of a more severe character than Osbert has given them.—Sacheverell Sitwell.

Bach wrote his 48th Prelude and Fugue for this fairylike instrument, the clavichord.—Daily Paper.

During the afternoon the band discoursed several items of music. A squad of ambulance men were present, and rendered valuable assistance.—Welsh Paper.

Among the lectures and classes arranged by the London County Council for teachers are the following on musical subjects : Ten on 'Appreciation of Music,' by Mr. Stewart Macpherson ; five on 'Youth's Introduction to Music,' by Mrs. Temple Savile ; five on '19th-century Composers,' by Miss Elsa West ; ten on 'Children's Voice-Culture and Class-Singing,' by Mr. James Bates ; ten on 'Eurhythmics,' by Miss W. Houghton ; and ten on 'The Musical Training of Infants,' by Miss H. Willis. Full particulars from the Education Officer, The County Hall, Westminster.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

The experiment of holding a Vacation Course for Teachers proved an instantaneous success, and a large number of new members have applied to join the term-time teachers' class. On Monday, September 13, a reception of teachers was held by the Principal in the new Lecture Hall of the Academy, and on September 14, 15, 16, and 17, lectures were given by Mr. Ambrose Coviello on 'Pianoforte Playing,' Dr. Stanley Marchant on 'Class-Singing,' Mr. Ernest Read on 'Aural Training,' and Mr. Stewart Macpherson on 'Interpretation and Appreciation.' There is no doubt that when these holiday courses become better known, they will prove to be a popular institution. Teachers are at liberty to take the complete course, or a course in one subject, as suits their requirements, and it is also permissible to attend any single lecture of the series.

The new buildings are on the eve of completion, and will be formally opened on October 19 by H.R.H. The Duke of Connaught, President of the Academy. The new rehearsal theatre is a chastely-designed building with a seating capacity of three hundred. There is a sunken orchestra of sufficient proportions to accommodate fifty players. The new lecture hall will also be available for dancing classes, and included in the scheme are a number of fine and convenient class-rooms. It is impossible at the moment, a month before actual completion, to give anything but a vague impression, for the builders are still in possession, but the annex should prove a welcome addition, and greatly relieve the tension of overcrowding.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC

There is good evidence that the number of students attending the College during Michaelmas term will show an increase on that of the previous term.

Lectures on popular subjects have been arranged, including one by Mr. James Brown on 'Style and Quality in String Quartet Playing,' and a series to be given by Mrs. K. W. Campbell, sometime lecturer in English literature in the University of Aberdeen and King's College, University of London, on 'English Literature.'

Mr. H. W. Stewardson, a member of the Corporation of Trinity College, has been made the recipient of an illuminated address and a purse, subscribed by the congregation of Haynes Parish Church, Bedford, as a mark of their esteem and gratitude for Mr. Stewardson's twenty-five years' service as organist and choirmaster.

The College congratulates Mr. Manders, local secretary of the Peterborough centre, on attaining his jubilee as organist of the Parish Church. Mr. Manders has held the local secretaryship for thirty-seven years.

The College has lately had the pleasure of visits from many overseas friends who have been much interested in seeing the buildings. Overseas visitors connected with the College are always very welcome.

CHORAL SOCIETY PROGRAMMES

(First List)

LONDON AND SUBURBS

Royal Choral Society.—October 23, 'Elijah' (Mr. Albert Coates) ; November 20, Verdi's 'Requiem' (Dr. Malcolm Sargent) ; December 18, Carols (Mr. H. L. Balfour) ; January 1, 'The Messiah' (Mr. H. L. Balfour) ; January 29, Mass in B minor (Dr. E. C. Bairstow) ; February 26, 'The Dream of Gerontius' (Sir Edward Elgar) ; March 26, 'The Creation' ; April 15 (Good Friday), 'The Messiah' (Sir Hamilton Harty).

Philharmonic Choir (Mr. C. Kennedy Scott).—November 25, Mass in B minor ; December 15, 'The Messiah' (Sir Thomas Beecham) ; March 10, Holst's Psalm 86 and Psalm 148, Bach's 'The Spirit also helpeth us,' Vaughan Williams's Mass in G minor, Parry's 'Songs of Farewell,' Liszt's 'By the Waters of Babylon' ; March 19 (Central Hall), Educational Concert ; April 11, Berlioz's 'Te Deum' (Sir Thomas Beecham).

Bach Choir (Dr. R. Vaughan Williams).—December 17, Bach's 'The Sages of Sheba' and Vaughan Williams's 'Sancta Civitas'; March 5 (Central Hall), 'St. Matthew' Passion; March 24, Brahms's 'Gesang der Parzen'; Holst's new 'Elegy' for female voices; Verdi's 'Stabat Mater'; Handel's 'Saul.'

Westminster Choral Society and the British Women's Symphony Orchestra (Mr. Vincent Thomas).—Stanford's 'Te Deum'; Bach's Magnificat; 'Blest Pair of Sirens'; 'The Golden Legend'; Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater'; Haydn's 'Spring'; orchestral works.

City Temple Choral Society (Mr. Allan Brown).—'Elijah'; 'The Messiah'; 'Christmas' Oratorio; 'Israel in Egypt'; 'The Dream of Gerontius'; 'The Crucifixion.'

Alexandra Palace Choral and Orchestral Society (Mr. Allen Gill).—'Judith'; Mass in B minor; 'The Mystic Trumpeter' and 'Toward the Unknown Region'; 'The Dream of Gerontius'; 'Hiawatha.' Concerts at the Northern Polytechnic Hall, Holloway Road.

Banstead Musical Society (Mr. Graham S. Rider).—Stanford's 'Songs of the Fleet'; Vaughan Williams's 'Fantasia on Christmas Carols'; 'Phaudrig Crohoore.'

Central London Choral and Orchestral Society (Mr. David J. Thomas).—'A Tale of Old Japan'; 'Elijah.'

Croydon Philharmonic Society (Mr. W. H. Reed and Mr. Alan J. Kirby).—Parry's 'The Chivalry of the Sea'; Brewer's 'Sir Patrick Spens'; Walford Davies's 'Ode on Time'; Verdi's 'Requiem.'

Crystal Palace Choral and Orchestral Society (Mr. Walter W. Hedgcock).—'Faust' selection; operatic choruses by Handel; 'Hymn of Praise' and 'Midsummer Night's Dream'; 'A Princess of Kensington.'

Ealing Philharmonic Society (Mr. E. Victor Williams).—'Hiawatha'; 'The Ancient Mariner'; scenes from opera.

Grafton Philharmonic Society, Clapham (Mr. Henry F. Hall).—Community singing; 'The Messiah'; 'St. Matthew' Passion.

Islington Choral Society (Mr. Ronald Chamberlain).—'Hiawatha'; 'Elijah'; 'King Olaf' and 'The Wedding of Shon Maclean.'

Northwood Choral Society (Mr. James Edmondson).—'Semele'; 'The Fire-Worshippers.'

Penge and District Choral and Orchestral Society (Mr. Alfred B. Choat).—'Merrie England'; 'A Tale of Old Japan'; 'Songs of the Fleet'; 'From the Bavarian Highlands.'

People's Palace Choral Society (Mr. Frank Idle).—Brahms's Requiem; 'For the Fallen'; 'Songs of the Fleet'; 'Hiawatha'; 'The Dream of Gerontius'; 'Blest Pair of Sirens'; 'The Messiah.'

Purley Choral Union (Mr. Harold Macpherson).—'The Dream of Gerontius.'

Sutton Musical Society (Mr. H. L. Balfour).—'Acis and Galatea.'

West Middlesex Musical Society (Mr. C. Stanley Smallman).—'Acis and Galatea'; Carols; 'The Swan and the Skylark.'

Wimbledon (1914) Choral Society (Mr. Kenneth A. Brown).—'Elijah'; 'The Dream of Gerontius.'

PROVINCIAL

Barnsley St. Cecilia Society (Dr. J. F. Staton).—Vaughan Williams's 'Sea' Symphony.

Bath Choral and Orchestral Society (Mr. H. T. Sims).—'Semele'; 'Pied Piper of Hamelin'; Madrigals.

Birmingham Festival Choral Society.—'The Apostles'; Mass in B minor.

Birmingham Midland Musical Society.—'The Revenge'; 'Blest Pair of Sirens'; 'Hiawatha'; 'The Redemption.'

Boston Choral Society (Mr. Gordon Slater).—Brahms's 'Requiem'; 'St. Matthew' Passion.

Bradford Festival Choral Society (Dr. Malcolm Sargent).—'Hymn of Praise'; 'Spectre's Bride'; 'The Messiah'; 'Sing ye to the Lord'; Vaughan Williams's Mass in G minor.

Bradford Old Choral Society (Mr. Wilfrid Knight).—'King Olaf'; 'The Messiah'; 'The Creation'; 'Ode to the North-East Wind.'

Brighton and Hove Harmonic Society (Mr. Percy Taylor).—'The Dream of Gerontius'; orchestral concert conducted by Sir Henry Wood; 'The Golden Legend'; 'Elijah.'

Bristol Choral and Philharmonic Society (Mr. Arnold Barter).—Parry's 'Ode to the Nativity'; Finale from Holst's first 'Choral' Symphony.

Burnley Municipal Choir.—'A Tale of Old Japan'; 'Hymn of Praise.'

Cardiff Musical Society (Mr. T. E. Aylward).—'The Dream of Gerontius'; 'Everyman.'

Crewe Philharmonic Society (Mr. R. A. Taylor).—'Tom Jones' (Diamond Jubilee Concert).

Derby Choral Union (Sir Henry Coward).—'Elijah'; 'The Apostles.'

Derby Co-operative Choral Society (Mr. F. J. Stevenson).—'Blest Pair of Sirens'; 'Carmen' selection; 'A Tale of Old Japan.'

Doncaster Musical Society (Mr. H. A. Benne).—'Acis and Galatea'; 'Peasant' Cantata; Holst's Fugal Concerto and 'Rig Veda' hymns; Brahms's 'Requiem'; Elgar's 'King Olaf.'

Downham-Market Choral Society (Dr. Henry Coleman).—'Hymn of Praise.'

Dundee Amateur Choral Union (Mr. Charles M. Cowe).—'Christmas' Oratorio; 'Everyman.'

Exeter Oratorio Society (Mr. Allan Allen).—'The Messiah'; 'The Mystic Trumpeter'; 'Hymn of Praise.'

Faversham Philharmonic Society (Mr. W. J. Keech).—'The Messiah'; 'The Yeomen of the Guard.'

Glasgow Choral and Orchestral Union (Mr. Wilfrid Senior).—'The Flying Dutchman'; 'Acis and Galatea'; 'Sea' Symphony.

Grimsby Choral Society (Mr. Percy Wilson).—'The Creation'; 'The Apostles.'

Halifax Choral Society (Dr. A. C. Tysoe).—'Caractacus'; 'The Messiah'; 'Elijah.'

Hanley, see Potteries.

Huddersfield Choral Society (Sir Henry Coward).—'Sea' Symphony; Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater'; 'The Messiah'; 'Aïda.'

Kirkcaldy Musical Society (Mr. Charles M. Cowe).—'The Messiah'; 'Christmas' Oratorio, Parts 1 and 2; 'Mount of Olives.'

Leeds Choral Union (Sir Henry Coward).—'Aïda'; 'The Messiah'; 'Elijah'; 'Hiawatha.'

Leeds New Choral Society (Mr. H. Bardgett).—'Christmas' Oratorio; 'Carmen.'

Leeds Philharmonic Society (Dr. E. C. Bairstow).—'Jesu, priceless Treasure'; 'The Messiah'; Mass in B minor.

Leicester Philharmonic Society (Mr. C. Victor Thomas, chorus master).—'The Creation'; 'Hymn of Praise'; 'The Messiah'; 'The Dream of Gerontius.' Concerts to be conducted by Sir Henry Wood.

Liverpool Philharmonic Society (visiting conductors).—Debussy's Three Nocturnes; 'Sea' Symphony; Rachmaninov's 'The Bells.'

Liverpool Welsh Choral Union (Dr. Hopkin Evans).—'Hiawatha'; 'The Messiah'; Beethoven's 'Choral' Symphony; Bach's Magnificat; 'Elijah.'

Melton Mowbray Choral Society (Dr. Henry Coleman).—'Carmen' selection; Oliver's 'Cries of London'; 'St. Matthew' Passion.

Newcastle and Gateshead Choral Union (Dr. W. G. Whittaker).—'Sing ye to the Lord'; Weelkes's 'Gloria in excelsis'; Beethoven's Mass in D.

North Shields Philharmonic Society (Mr. R. H. Stapylton).—'Job'; 'The Messiah'; 'Judith.'

North Staffs Choral Society (Mr. John James).—'Hymn of Jesus'; 'The Messiah'; Verdi's 'Requiem.'

NORTHAMPTON MUSICAL SOCIETY (Mr. C. J. King).—'The Messiah'; 'Semele' (provisional).
NOTTINGHAM PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY (Mr. William Turner).—'Phaudrig Crohoore' and 'The Revenge.'
NOTTINGHAM SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY (Mr. Allen Gill).—Third Acts of 'Tannhäuser' and 'Lohengrin'; 'The Messiah'; 'Sea' Symphony; Bach's 'Peasant' Cantata; 'The Golden Legend.'
PORTSMOUTH NORTH END CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. Ernest Birch).—'Carmen'; 'Elijah.'
POTTERIES CHORAL SOCIETY (Hanley) (Mr. Carl Oliver).—'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast'; 'For the Fallen'; 'Phaudrig Crohoore' (at Stoke).
REIGATE CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. J. E. Gomersall).—'Merrie England'; 'King Olaf.'
ROCHDALE PHILHARMONIC ORCHESTRAL AND CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. F. Leach).—'The Ruins of Athens'; part-songs; 'Elijah'; 'The Messiah.'
RYE MUSICAL SOCIETY (Mr. Roland Roberts).—'A Tale of Old Japan.'
SHEFFIELD AMATEUR MUSICAL SOCIETY (Dr. J. F. Staton).—'Everyman'; 'Sea' Symphony.
STOCKPORT VOCAL UNION (Dr. Thomas Keighley).—Brahms's 'Requiem'; Rutland Boughton's 'Bethlehem.'
STOKE-ON-TRENT.—See Potteries and North Staffs.
SUNDERLAND PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY (Mr. R. F. Jarman).—'The Spectre's Bride'; Community singing; 'Elijah'; 'A Tale of Old Japan'; 'Sea' Symphony.
TAMWORTH CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. H. Rose).—'The Rebel Maid'; 'Carmen' selection.
UCKFIELD MUSICAL SOCIETY (Mr. H. R. Reveley).—'The Creation.'
WESTON-SUPER-MARE CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. Seymour Dossor).—'For the Fallen'; 'Hymn of Praise'; 'Elijah.'
WINDSOR AND ETON CHORAL SOCIETY (Rev. B. C. S. Everett).—Dettingen Te Deum; Madrigals; 'The Messiah'; Brahms's 'Requiem.'
YEOVIL CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. F. G. Risdon).—'The Revenge'; 'Song of Destiny.'

London Concerts

THE PROMENADE CONCERTS

The first few evenings of the season, up to August 18, have already been discussed in these columns. On August 19 the 'New World' Symphony was the central attraction. This work will long retain the public's favour, but its performance must surely make a few people wonder whether Dvorák's earlier Symphonies are so vastly inferior as to deserve their total neglect in its favour. At least two of them are easily equal to No. 5. A composer far more seriously ill-represented is Dame Ethel Smyth, with her Overture to 'The Wreckers,' which is not characteristic, and becomes very tiresome by too frequent repetition.

August 20, the first Friday of the season, brought the familiar classical programme, but Sir Henry Wood gives the Beethoven Symphonies in inverse order this year, beginning with No. 8. The plan is a wise one, since a certain number of people are in London about the same time each year.

Liszt commanded the following Saturday's programme, for it included not only 'Les Préludes' and the 'Hungarian Fantasia' (still played by Mr. Arthur de Greef), but also Respighi's 'Fountains of Rome,' which is more Lisztian than Liszt himself, and a good deal better. McEwen's stern and noble 'Winter Poem,' an orchestral work worthy of greater attention than it receives, blew like a refreshing cold wind into this highly-scented atmosphere, which Saint-Saëns and Ponchielli did nothing to clear.

On August 23 a substantial Wagner programme was followed by still more Liszt, in the shape of Miss Dorothy Howell's 'Lamia.'

The second classical Tuesday programme did not attract great multitudes by its mostly unfamiliar works. Musical audiences seem hardly aware just yet of the fascination of tracking the great masters down their side-lines. Malipiero's 'Il Molino della Morte,' substitued for the much finer and more significant music from 'San Francesco d'Assisi,' proved only an ordinary descriptive symphonic poem of the Saint-Saëns brand brought up to date.

A welcome revival of the first two of Debussy's 'Nocturnes' was the outstanding event of August 25. After these colouristic masterpieces, the helpless orchestration of Schumann's fourth Symphony sounded doubly ineffectual, but the work still has a mild attractiveness.

The moderns had it much their own way on the Thursday, when three of Holst's 'Planets' were given, and the all but unknown 'Life's Dance,' by Delius, showed us a fine master in the making—and almost made. The influence of Grieg and Strauss can be discerned in this piece, but there is enough of the real Delius to make it worthy of a place in the regular repertory. Mr. Leslie England proved in Ernest Schelling's entertaining 'Suite Fantastique' that he is on the very threshold of pianistic distinction.

The second Friday brought Beethoven's seventh Symphony and the 'Emperor' Concerto, with Orlov as the admirable soloist; also the Haydn Variations of Brahms.

Saturday, August 28, recalled the now all but vanished nights of years ago ('Valse triste,' 'Hänsel and Gretel,' 'Capriccio Italien,' &c.). Nevertheless, Strauss would slip in and remind us that the flippant public taste of old is on the point of death, and transfiguration thereof at hand.

The Wagner programme of August 30 was followed by Miss Susan Spain-Dunk's Concert-Overture 'The Kentish Downs,' a piece of extremely able writing technically, a little void of imagination and poetry, but notable for its brisk energy and clean form.

The last day of August also saw the end of the early Haydn and Mozart Symphonies, so far as the present season is concerned. They were removed from the scheme for the remaining Tuesdays 'owing to lack of time for preparation,' but one hopes to hear the best of them—perhaps spread over a longer period—later on. The performance by Messrs. Jean Pougnet and Harry Berly of Mozart's 'Symphonie Concertante,' for violin and viola, was one of the season's best individual achievements so far. The Overture to Rutland Boughton's 'Queen of Cornwall,' produced on the same night, is marred by the unsatisfying orchestration and the shapelessness to which one is accustomed from that composer, and not redeemed by the distinctive invention and suggestiveness of mood of which one knows him to be capable. Frankly, this piece cannot stand up to a tremendous subject dealt with by a man of the calibre of Thomas Hardy.

Bach and Handel had it mostly their own way on September 1, and their way nowadays is that of compelling the attendance of a large crowd.

It was the presence of Saint-Saëns, most accomplished manufacturer of shams that look like the real thing, in Thursday's programme, that saved Henry Hadley's symphonic poem, 'The Ocean,' from betraying its smoothly-covered hollowness too badly.

September 3 was distinguished by a fine performance of Beethoven's fourth Pianoforte Concerto by Miss Myra Hess, who also took part, with Messrs. Charles Woodhouse and Robert Murchie, in the splendid Bach Triple Concerto in A minor.

Haydn Wood's Variations on an old-fashioned comic song made a good Saturday piece reminiscent of the early days of the 'Proms.,' but it is a really musicianly and refined treatment of a vulgar theme.

Wagner came in for his weekly round on September 6, and drew the usual crowd.

On the Tuesday the fourth Tchaikovsky Symphony was substituted for the discarded Haydn and Mozart, and the novelty was the symphonic interlude, 'La Queste de Dieu,' from Vincent d'Indy's 'Légende de Saint-Christophe'—fine, earnest, and almost rudely honest music that will make no concessions to surface beauty, but precisely for that reason convinces the serious hearer.

Something of the same stern demand was made on those who listened to the concert of September 8, which included Brahms's third Symphony and Elgar's Violin Concerto, the latter, it is hardly necessary to say, with Miss Margaret Fairless as the congenial soloist. The new 'Introduction and Allegro' by Arthur Bliss, conducted by himself, struck one as an enormous advance by that composer. There are the dignity and exhilaration of fine craftsmanship, and easy accomplishment of a self-imposed hard task behind this large architectural conception.

John Manen's Spanish Violin Concerto, brilliantly played by Miss Isolde Menges, on September 9, is small music flung out with an elegant assurance that carries it through most convincingly, at any rate at a first hearing. John Ireland's 'Mai-Dun' Rhapsody, by contrast, seemed hewn out of the toughest material at the cost of immense labour and hard thinking; it imposes its elemental strength more decidedly on the mind and memory at each new hearing.

The Friday programmes arrived at Beethoven's fifth Symphony by September 10, and on the next night only the rather laboriously ingenious 'Chant de Joie' of Honegger stood out as an uncommon Saturday item.

Edward German and Ethel Smyth shared the programme with Wagner on September 13, and on the Tuesday came Tchaikovsky's fifth Symphony in place of the ousted classics. The novelty was Hindemith's Concerto for orchestra (Op. 38), a work that shows how easy polytonality can make things for young composers. Now that it is possible to jam any number of tunes together in any number of keys, it is not surprising that even some of the least accomplished young composers prefer counterpoint to vertical harmony. The method also offers good opportunities for making commonplaces sound exceedingly novel and daring. This is not to imply that Hindemith himself is guilty of random polyphony, but it is extremely difficult to distinguish the false from the true, and one can only trust him on the evidence of his undoubted musicianship in other directions. He does possess a certain agreeable alertness of fancy and contrivance, and he certainly succeeds in making a real Concerto of this work, giving various instruments interesting things to do. But about the essential traditionalism behind his apparent modernity there can be no doubt whatever.

Bach, Handel, and Mozart practically had the bill to themselves on September 15.

Thursday, September 16, is memorable for a fine and sensitive performance of Vaughan Williams's 'Pastoral' Symphony under the composer's direction. We all remember being a little puzzled by a vague mysticism, a direct communion with Nature from which the present age is almost wholly estranged, when this work was first produced, and probably no hearer was quite sure just then whether he liked it or no. But there can be no two ways about it after two or three hearings. You are either bored by the uniformity of its contemplative mood or you become completely absorbed in its musing beauty. Most people by now, judging from the reception the Symphony had at the Promenades, would seem to have decided that they are captivated. E. B.

OLD VIC. OPERA

The operatic season at the Old Vic. opened on September 16, with 'Lohengrin,' conducted by Mr. Corri. Opera there is not done so well as Shakespeare, nevertheless it is surprising what is achieved. Amazing woman, Miss Baylis, thus to give us ninepennyworth for our fourpences! And the Old Vic. shows are not shabby nowadays. 'Lohengrin' was clad sumptuously.

The singers were Miss Winifred Kennard (Elsa), Miss Frances Geraldi (Ortrud), Mr. Henry Wendon (Lohengrin), Mr. Sumner Austin (Telramund), and Mr. Joseph Farrington (the King).

Special interest attached to the performance of the young tenor, from whom we have the right to expect much. He is undisguisedly a beginner in opera, and on this night was nervous and rigid. But he is personable and has a voice. No doubt he knows as well as anyone how much he still has to learn. His tone wants more colour and his production more freedom and ease. On a point of diction, his ay vowel too dangerously approaches ee. But on the whole he does not sing wrongly, and we have the impression that he has now principally to let himself go, to warm to his task and animate, in order to sing extremely well. His future depends probably on whether he is in good hands.

Miss Kennard's singing has improved. But Elsa's music asks for more and more beautiful quality. Mr. Austin's acting was full of intelligence, and musically his part suits him—its violence incites him to overcome the excessive melancholy of his voice.

We must not be taken to suggest that the Old Vic. 'Lohengrin' was a model. The opera calls for spaciousness and rare poetic atmosphere. At the Old Vic. it was, of course, cramped, and the performance was not as note-accurate as could be. The audience, however, was delighted, as well it might be. C.

Competition Festival Record

DUNDEE.—At a recent meeting of the committee of the Dundee Musical Festival, a sub-committee which had been appointed to consider the possibility of a guarantee fund, in view of the deficits which had been incurred by the Festival during the past three years, reported that such a fund would have to be for a period of years, and it could not see how this could be arranged. The chairman said that what weighed a great deal with the sub-committee was the question of the continuity of the guarantee. The deficit of £150 as the result of the last Festival had proved disastrous. The future was a most precarious one, and unless and until some definite means was discovered whereby they could be assured of adequate financial support and patronage by the people of Dundee, it would be hopeless to continue the Festival. Another speaker said it was not only a question of money; if they were to run the Festival, they wanted an interest taken in it. It was agreed to call a general meeting of the members of the association, and to recommend unanimously that the association be dissolved. The only comment one has to offer on this lamentable state of affairs is that if the Dundee Festival had seen fit to adopt a policy of cross-fertilisation by contact with others doing successful work in other parts of the country, instead of a policy of self-isolation, with its inevitable consequence of complete sterility, there might have been a happier tale to tell.

THE HASLEMERE FESTIVAL OF ANCIENT CHAMBER MUSIC

The second of these Festivals, instituted last year by Mr. Arnold Dolmetsch, took place at Haslemere Hall during August 24-31. There were ten concerts, three of which were devoted to the music of J. S. Bach, two to Old English concerted music for viols (fantasies, In Nomines, &c.), two to mixed Old English vocal and instrumental music, and one each to old French, German, and Italian music. The performers were members of the Dolmetsch family, assisted by a number of their pupils. To criticise the performances according to the standard of London chamber music concerts would not be fair, as Mr. Dolmetsch despises virtuosity and desires that the concerts be looked upon as 'music in the home,' where the æsthetical and emotional side of music is developed without attaching too much importance to brilliancy of technique. Nevertheless we cannot but admire even the latter in Mr. Rudolph Dolmetsch's gamba as well as harpsichord playing. His performance of Bach's 'Goldberg' Variations was at once brilliant and thoughtful. A feature of the Festival was the revival, after two centuries' oblivion, of the recorders, which Mr. Dolmetsch says he has recently succeeded in reconstructing. These soft and sweet-sounding instruments were heard in various combinations, and also with other instruments, in pieces by Purcell, Bach, Couperin, &c., and a quintet of recorders played some delightful 16th- and 17th-century popular tunes. Other items of particular interest were a majestic six-part Fantasy by William Byrd, Fantasies by Weelkes and Michael Este, and a lovely example, 'Il Doloroso,' for two viols, by Thomas Morley, which exhibited the most perfect two-part writing; a fine Sonata by Handel, for recorder, violin, gamba, and harpsichord; a remarkable Violin Sonata by that 17th-century Paganini, Joh. Jak. Walther, showing melodic invention and good musicianship; a beautiful, vivacious Suite of dance tunes in six parts (viols and two recorders) and continuo, by Lorenzo Allegri, the composer of the famous 'Miserere'; and, indeed, so many other delightful things that it would far exceed our space to describe them. Another Festival has been announced for next year. E. v. d. S.

Music in the Provinces

Birmingham and District.—As might have been anticipated, the reconstruction of the Town Hall is not finished. Originally it was to have been completed by November, but it is understood that unexpected difficulties have been encountered. The hall is not now expected to be ready until some time in the New Year. Until then all schemes on a big scale must go to Central Hall, a roomy building with plenty of seating accommodation, but not quite the ideal venue for an orchestral concert. As some organizations have a prior claim on this building, many Saturday night concerts will probably have to be abandoned this season. The symphony concerts of the City Orchestra are to be held on Thursday evenings instead of Tuesdays; the Sunday night concerts will take place at the West-End Cinema, instead of at the Futurist Theatre.——Some of the most interesting items included in the programmes of the City Orchestra are Bach's Triple Concerto, Harty's 'With the Wild Geese,' Honegger's 'Pastorale d'Eté,' the 'Don Quixote' of Strauss, and Brahms's Pianoforte Concerto No. 2, in B flat. The nine Symphonies will be given, as well as Borodin's No. 2, Mahler's No. 4, in G, Schubert's Nos. 7, 8, and 9, and Schumann's Nos. 3 and 4. Bantock will be represented by his 'Dante and Beatrice.' ——The Philharmonic mid-day concerts are to continue as usual, but will be held on Tuesdays instead of Thursdays. The names of Catherine Stewart, Louis Godowsky, Lucy Pierce, and Carl Fuchs appear in the programmes.—— A new Society, the Birmingham Bach Choir, has been formed under the conductorship of Mr. Bernard Jackson. A series of three concerts has been arranged, and in January there will be a lecture on Tudor music by Dr. Whittaker, of Newcastle-on-Tyne.——The Birmingham Choral and Orchestral Union announces a performance of 'Judas Maccabæus,' on November 27.——A performance of 'The Apostles' is promised by the Festival Choral Society during the season. Owing to the difficulty of obtaining a suitable hall it is improbable that the annual performance of 'The Messiah,' given by this Society on Boxing Day, will take place this year.—— The Wolverhampton Choral Society will give three concerts, when 'The Apostles,' Vaughan Williams's 'Sea' Symphony and 'Towards the Unknown Regions' (an early work by the same composer) will be heard.——Mr. Joseph Lewis's singers, the Musical Society of Wolverhampton, will give 'Hiawatha' and concert-versions of 'Tannhäuser' and 'Cavalleria Rusticana.'——Mr. G. D. Cunningham, who has taken over the conductorship of the City of Birmingham Choir, will conduct performances of Bantock's 'Vanity of Vanities' and Bach's 'Sing ye to the Lord.'—— Mr. Fred J. Clifford, a young Birmingham musician, has inaugurated a small choral society, to be called the Oriana Choir. G. W.

Manchester.—An echo of last season's controversy on the omission from performance of Vaughan Williams's 'Pastoral' Symphony and Strauss's 'Domestica,' after formal announcement in the syllabus, is to be found in the preface to this winter's Hallé scheme, where it is stated that:

> 'In preparing the accompanying programmes, it was felt that to include too many novelties, merely for the sake of novelty, would be a mistaken policy. The new and unfamiliar works which do appear have been chosen with great care, as likely to prove interesting and enjoyable. No change will be made in the programmes here given unless it is found to be quite unavoidable, and special pains have been taken to obviate any need for alteration.'

All this could have been said with equal truth of last year's scheme on its publication. That of the two omitted Symphonies one did not appeal to the players, and the other was not expected to appeal to the average listener, is at best a somewhat lame tale. Richter had no particular affinity with Debussy's 'L'après-midi d'un faune,' nor indeed with some of the Strauss poems (this latter fact may not be general knowledge, but was vouched for to the writer by the late E. J. Broadfield), yet that did not prevent him from sinking his own feelings in the matter, and giving Manchester a chance of acquaintance with then unfamiliar works. Sir Hamilton Harty went through an earlier season here with so rigid an adherence to the prospectus as to permit a performance of 'Omar Khayyàm' with pianoforte accompaniment, owing to the non-arrival from abroad of orchestral parts; few people would have blamed him if, under such disabling conditions, he had abandoned the work until a later date. But Manchester does not need the sort of musical spoon-feeding that Sir Hamilton's letters and speech would seem to indicate. There is, however, another important aspect which has received less notice than it merits. When such a Society as the Hallé makes a considered announcement in its prospectus, and the public buys tickets based on those advertisements, has not the purchaser a right to regard the position as somewhat in the nature of a contract to be carried out, despite conductor's, or executive's, or players' attitudes or ideas, arrived at on a later date? It could have been argued, with justice, that in the case of the Bantock work just mentioned, a sort of force majeure made a strict fulfilment of the promise to perform quite impossible. The reasonably-minded portion of the concert-going public would certainly have excused a management for such a withdrawal, but its acquiescence in a cancellation due to a conductor's changed views, or an orchestra's indifference to a particular work, is much less certain. If you cannot rely on your ability to carry out an advertised scheme, why bother about its publication in advance? As a business community, Manchester does not understand the conduct of business on these lines. The works to be given for the first time at Manchester include: 'Serenade' (Glazounov) and Divertimento No. 2, in F (Mozart), November 4; Symphony in B flat (Chausson), November 25; 'Israel' (orchestral work) (Ernest Bloch), December 16; Rumanian Rhapsody in A (Enesco) and new English Symphony (Ernest Bryson), January 13; 'Escales' (orchestral work) (Jacques Ibert), February 17; Romance for violin and orchestra (Vaughan Williams), February 3; 'Le Festin de l'Araignée' (Roussel), March 3; and the first performance anywhere, on March 10, of Bantock's new choral work, 'The Song of Songs.' On Armistice Night comes Berlioz's 'Messe des Morts,' with the co-operation of the Besses o' th' Barn Band. Beethoven's Mass in D commemorates the centenary, and Elgar's seventieth year finds the January 20 programme entirely devoted to his works, which he will conduct. There will be no broadcasting of the programmes this season. Notable groups of soloists will be heard both at the Hallé and the Brand Lane series. Under the Brand Lane scheme Strauss is to conduct two concerts on November 6 and 13; Bruno Walter that on November 27; and Sibelius the concerts on February 19 and 26. Strauss will have with him Elisabeth Schumann on November 6, and Gerhardt on November 13, both ladies singing to the composer's pianoforte accompaniment, as well as in works with orchestra. At the moment fuller details of this series are not available.——In chamber music the Edward Isaacs concerts will consist again of a series occupying a full week, October 11-16, by the Léner players.—— The Catterall Quartet devotes four of its six programmes to Mozart (October 20), Schubert (December 15), Brahms (January 19), and Beethoven (March 23). No novelties are announced this season. C. H.

Margate.—The sixth Festival of the Municipal Orchestra was held on September 11-16, and drew advantage from the great number of visitors who remained at Margate for the late season. Sir Landon Ronald conducted Mozart's G minor Symphony and Schumann's Pianoforte Concerto (Miss Katharine Goodson).

Dr. Malcolm Sargent conducted Tchaikovsky's fourth Symphony, and Mr. Percy Pitt was in charge of an operatic programme in which Miss Florence Austral and Mr. John Brownlee were the singers. The Sunday evening programme was largely given over to the English Singers, who made a success with the seaside audience, but had to work for it. The other concerts were conducted by Mr. Bainbridge Robinson, the director of the Municipal Orchestra.

Music in Scotland

Edinburgh.—The Scottish Summer School of Music and Music Teaching, promoted jointly by the Federation of British Music Industries, the British Music Society, and the British Federation of Musical Competition Festivals, ran for a fortnight, and proved an unqualified success, despite a reduction in numbers, due to the reaction of the strike on railway travel and the change of venue from St. Andrews to Edinburgh. The list of lecturers included Mr. Geoffrey Shaw ('School Class Singing'), Miss Mabel Chamberlain ('Music in the Infant Room'), Miss Watson ('Dalcroze Eurhythmics'), Mr. M.-D. Calvocoressi ('Aspects of Modern Music'), Mr. Harold Samuel ('Pianoforte Playing'), Mr. Ivor James ('The Violoncello'), Mrs. Tobias Matthay ('The Art of Speaking'), Mr. Willan Swainson ('The Elements of Choral Technique'), Miss Marie Thomson ('Songs and Singing'), and Mr. Herbert Wiseman ('Conducting and Ear-Training'). The mornings were devoted to lectures, the afternoons to games, excursions, and practising classes, while the evenings were given up to community singing and other music, and dancing. Instruction and entertainment walked hand in hand, and the social life of the School was of the happiest, thanks to the easy bonhomie of the lecturers, the purposeful oversight and infectious geniality of the Director, Mr. Wiseman, and the comfort and pleasant environment of the Playfair Hostel. An interested and interesting visitor was Mr. James Friskin, formerly of Glasgow, now of New York, who one evening collaborated with Mr. Harold Samuel in duets for two pianofortes.——At the close of last concert season, Messrs. Paterson, the well-known musical instrument dealers who run the long-established subscription series of Scottish Orchestra concerts at Edinburgh, announced that owing to the continued and substantial losses incurred by them on these concerts it would be necessary to raise a public Guarantee Fund to ensure their continuance. It is gratifying to learn that guarantees of more than twice the amount (£1,000) asked for have been received. The programmes present much the same features as those of the Glasgow Choral and Orchestral Union noticed below. Of special interest is the first appearance at these concerts as pianoforte soloist of Prof. D. F. Tovey, Reid Professor of Music at Edinburgh University. Mr. Vaclav Talich will conduct the entire series.—— The Reid Symphony Orchestra (conducted by Prof. Tovey) announces a series of seven fortnightly concerts. Mr. Gustav Holst will conduct one of the concerts, and the soloists include Pablo Casals and Adila Fachiri. Interesting items in the programmes are Verdi's 'Requiem' (to be sung by the Edinburgh Choral Union), Vaughan Williams's 'Pastoral' Symphony, the slow movement of Holst's 'Choral' Symphony, and, for the first time in Scotland, Haydn's Quadruple Concerto (flute, bassoon, violin, and 'cello). The following piquant announcement appears on the back of the prospectus :

> 'What the Reid Orchestra is doing.—(1.) It is solving the perplexing problem of the Symphony Orchestra by establishing a local orchestra of symphonic proportions and equipment ; (2.) It is providing the people of Edinburgh with the finest orchestral music at popular prices (ranging from 1*s.* 6*d.* per concert, including tax) ; (3.) It is upholding the reputation of Edinburgh as a centre of education and culture, and attracting favourable attention and interest in many of the great musical centres on the Continent and in the United States ; (4.) It is furnishing an outlet for the higher musical qualities of those professional musicians who earn a livelihood by playing in theatres, music-halls, and picture houses ; (5.) It is providing a school for the higher musical training of the large number of young and gifted instrumentalists in whom Edinburgh is so rich ; (6.) It is asking for your support to enable it to accomplish this great work.'

Glasgow.—The prospectus of the Glasgow Choral and Orchestral Union covers a fourteen weeks' season of the Scottish Orchestra, from mid-November to mid-February. The former plan of engaging a series of visiting conductors has been dropped, and Mr. Vaclav Talich, of Prague, whose conducting made so deep an impression last season, has been engaged for the entire series. Mr. Wilfrid Senior, now happily recovered from the serious illness which laid him aside last winter, will conduct the choral works, which include 'Acis and Galatea,' Vaughan Williams's 'Sea' Symphony, a concert performance of 'The Flying Dutchman,' and the Glasgow Choral Union's sixtieth annual performance of 'The Messiah.' The orchestral programmes include a larger proportion of classical and known modern works and fewer unfamiliar items than last season. They are, however, likely to meet with greater acceptance, so many of the novelties of last season proving to have little else than novelty to commend them. Music-lovers who are cognisant of the present enthusiasm of London concert-goers for John Sebastian Bach will note with surprise that in the entire series of twenty-seven programmes put forward by the Glasgow Choral and Orchestral Union, the name of Bach appears precisely twice, in each case a visiting pianist being responsible.——The Glasgow Bach Society celebrates its coming-of-age with an attractive scheme which includes the 'St. Luke' Passion (first time in Scotland), the Motet, 'Jesu, priceless Treasure,' the Church Cantatas, 'My spirit was in heaviness,' 'Bide with us,' and 'Sleepers, wake,' Orchestral Suite No. 1, in C major, 'Brandenburg' Concerto No. 4, in G major, the A minor Violin Concerto, a number of instrumental movements from the Church Cantatas, and the D minor Pianoforte Concerto with Mr. Harold Samuel as soloist. Mr. J. Michael Diack, founder of the Society and conductor of the Bach Choir, has, to the profound regret of serious music-lovers at Glasgow, found it necessary to give up his work as conductor. He is succeeded by Mr. D. T. Yacamini. Mr. F. H. Bisset will continue to take charge of the Society's chamber orchestra, with the valuable assistance of Miss Bessie Spence as leader.——The annual Chamber Music Week of the Glasgow Orpheus Choir has again been entrusted to the Léner String Quartet. The programmes show a stronger classical bent than before, the proportion of modern work being noticeably less—probably a case of playing for safety in the absence of a large number of the Choir who will be away on the long-projected American and Canadian tour.——The 'International celebrity' concert scheme introduces Friedmann, the Polish pianist, and the Don Cossack Choir, and brings back Kreisler, Clara Butt, the London Symphony Orchestra under Beecham, the Léner Quartet, and, after a long absence, John McCormack and Mischa Elman. 'International celebrities' have been rather at a discount recently, but Paderewski, who promises a Chopin recital in October, is sure to prove a notable exception. Mr. Max Mossel, who made a striking success with his series of concerts last season, offers an equally alluring scheme this season, with Elisabeth Schumann, Suggia, and Germaine Schnitzer as perhaps the outstanding attractions, and has been emboldened to extend his ambit to Aberdeen.——The annual visit of the British National Opera Company has been extended from two to three weeks this year, doubtless as a result of last year's success. A local Guarantee Fund has again been asked for, and, considering the difficulties of the time, has been well subscribed. With the single exception of the first production of 'The Leper's Flute,' the libretto and music of which are both by Scotsmen, Ian Colvin and Ernest Bryson, the three weeks' scheme offers nothing but standard fare. ——Sir Hugh Allen travelled from London to deliver the opening lecture of the session at the Glasgow Athenæum School of Music, taking as his subject 'Music as a part of life.' The running fire of penetrating, but whimsical comment on things in general, gave great delight to most of the audience, but rather perplexed those who had come prepared to hear a sober and weighty discourse from one of the 'grave and reverend seigneurs' of music.——The scheme for the founding of a Scottish National Academy of Music at Glasgow has been rather hung up by the industrial situation, but it is maturing steadily, and may be regarded as pretty certain to crystallize in the near future.——The Glasgow Grand Opera Company (Mr. R. Hutton Malcolm, conductor) intends to produce Goring Thomas's little-heard opera, 'Nadeshda.'——Mr. Thorpe Davie has succeeded Mr. Herbert G. Cross as conductor of the Glasgow Select Choir, a professional organization with a history dating back to Henry Lambeth, its first conductor.

Inverness. — Inverness Ladies' Choir (Miss Jimsie Gordon, conductor) is to sing at Æolian Hall, London, on October 1 and 2. The choir is an accomplished body, brilliantly led, and has fought its way into the front line since its meteoric first appearance at the Glasgow Festival two or three years ago, but its friends are anxious to see it recover that dewy freshness and delicacy of touch, much of which it appears to have shed in the process.

Sebastian.

Music in Ireland

Belfast.—So great was the success of the military torchlight tattoo that an additional night had to be given on August 17.——Commencing on August 30, the musical play 'Betty in Mayfair' had a successful week at the Theatre Royal. The musical numbers, by H. Fraser Simson (composer of 'The Maid of the Mountains'), made a great appeal. 'No, No, Nanette' and 'Lilac Time' had good houses in the two following weeks.——The first of a series of open-air Sunday concerts took place at Pirrie Park on September 5, and attracted a large gathering which enjoyed fully the excellent programme presented by the Queen's Island Band, under Mr. George Dean.——A three-manual organ, built by Messrs. Evans & Barr, of this city, at a cost of upwards of three thousand pounds, was opened at Holy Cross Church, Ardoyne, on September 12, by Mr. Louis Werner, who has been organist of the church since 1875.

Dublin.—Rumour says that a Dublin choir, no doubt spurred on by the high praise accorded Irish voices at this year's Feis Ceoil, intends to compete at the 1927 Eisteddfod, at Holyhead.——'No, No, Nanette' was a great success at the Gaiety Theatre during August 13-18, conducted by Mr. Kennedy Russell.

THE SALZBURG FESTIVAL

By Paul Bechert

What began modestly under the name of the Salzburg Festival five years ago, with Max Reinhardt's production of 'Everyman,' the old English mystery play modernized by Hugo Hofmannsthal, has since developed into a big and apparently firmly established annual summer institution. The success of the first Festivals seemed to warrant the inclusion of Mozart's operas in the scheme of those events. Last year a more varied programme was achieved by the inclusion of Donizetti's 'Don Pasquale'; the 1926 plans ventured into the field of contemporary opera, and presented Richard Strauss's 'Ariadne auf Naxos,' along with Johann Strauss's immortal comic opera 'Die Fledermaus.' Thus there has been no lack of variety, and the growth of the personnel of the Festival has been commensurate with the expansion of its activities. The character of the visitors, too, has changed, the majority being foreign, chiefly from England and America.

The Salzburg Festival scheme seems now to have reached a crucial point which calls for a decision on the part of the promoters. They will have to choose between two alternatives: either the Festival will have to assume the significance of a mondaine affair pure and simple—a number of productions selected at random to suit the taste of wealthy English and American tourists; or the idea will have to return to what one would wish to be also its ultimate programme, i.e., the establishment of a Mozartian Bayreuth, as it were, in Mozart's own city.

Surely there is no need for a Wagnerian Bayreuth in these days when good, even excellent, Wagner performances are the rule in all the great opera houses of the world! Bayreuth was no doubt a necessity at the time when Wagner's operas and conceptions were as far beyond the understanding of the broad public as the proper Wagner 'style' was outside the capabilities of the average German opera singer. What was true of Wagner's art in 1867 applies still more to that of Mozart in our time. The predominance of Wagnerian singing has virtually spoilt our singers (notably those of Germany) for the interpretation of Mozart, and a need for a new Bayreuth for Mozart's art is to-day more urgent than ever.

One regrets that the promoters of the Salzburg Festivals have completely lost sight of this, the noblest mission of their enterprise. The representations of 'Il Seraglio' and 'Don Juan' which we had at Salzburg this season were virtually identical with those given by the same singers—they hailed from the Vienna Opera—at Vienna year in and year out. What few 'guests' had been included tended rather to destroy the ensemble than to further it. True, the Mozart performances of the Vienna Opera are probably superior to any that may be heard anywhere in Europe, at least in Germany, to-day. But the great gulf that separates good average performances from 'model' productions such as we rightly associate with the term 'festival,' could be bridged only by ardent enthusiasm and untiring rehearsal. For the last-named there was, however, little scope amid the festival activities. 'Don Juan,' under Franz Schalk, provided a dignified performance, even though this excellent Wagner conductor seems to lack the light hand and caressing touch required by the subleties of Mozart's score. Nor were the singers particularly facile or finished vocally. The forcible personality and warm breadth of Richard Mayr are always a delight, but this great artist's conception of Leporello, more engrossing each year and much too boisterous for the small Salzburg theatre, deviates far from the Italian buffo bass rôle that Mozart had in mind. Hans Duhan's Don Juan was histrionically excellent, but not Mozartian on the vocal side. The best singing was that of Richard Tauber, as Ottavio. This artist has been acclaimed as the 'German Caruso,' a description which, with its modifying adjective, may be allowed to pass. His strained acting was somewhat painfully noticeable here, and even more in the rôle of Belmonte, in 'Il Seraglio.' This performance, beautifully led by Bruno Walter, profited from the broad humour of Paul Bender, as Osmin, and from the delightful Pedrillo of Hermann Gallos. The stage management, entrusted to Alois Mora, from Dresden, introduced some painful humour along 'slapstick' lines.

In 'Don Juan,' the presence of a stage-manager was hardly felt. Maria Gutheil-Schöder, herself a great Mozart artist in her day, was to have supervised the production scenically, but lack of opportunity for rehearsal frustrated her efforts. Yet it was in 'Don Juan' that Gustav Mahler—erstwhile director of the Vienna Opera, and initiator of the movement for modern stage-management which has recently gained so much ground in Germany—had done his greatest reform work. Mahler's Mozartian productions were living refutations of the widely-quoted but palpably false bon mot that 'good singers and a good orchestra' are alone the essentials in operatic production. Of good orchestras there has never been a dearth, and good singers were probably more frequent a few generations ago than in our time. Yet it remained for Mahler to redeem Mozart's operas from their essential weakness, i.e., their illogical and stereotyped librettos. Mahler's stage direction revealed the fact, hitherto unknown to many, that the Da Pontes and Schikaneders, the mediocre libretto purveyors to Mozart's genius, had built better than they knew. In Da Ponte's book Don Juan is less a sinner than a fool and a comic figure. Ill-luck befalls his every venture, chiefly through the all-too-frequent interference of Donna Elvira, an obtrusive elderly lady who courts ridicule for her unwanted intervention at every juncture of the plot. Mahler's master mind established a casual connection between these two weak figures: Donna Elvira was invested with the significance of a 'just fate,' waiting upon Don Juan's deeds and precipitating his downfall. Thus Mahler averted ridicule from two leading characters of the opera, and lent to them a tragic background which Da Ponte had hardly fathomed. With Mahler, moreover, 'Don Juan' became a drama with a social background. He perceived and made clear the three spheres of the plot: Don Juan, Donna Anna, and Don Ottavia representing the aristocratic caste, Elvira the bourgeois, and Masetto and Zerlina the low-born class. Leporello, the servant, was the shrewd proletarian of the old commedia dell' arte who, hovering between the three worlds, mocked them all, his keen wit triumphing over his high-born masters.

Of such subtleties there was hardly a hint in the Salzburg performance. Scenically, too, no attempt was made to depart from routine. Alfred Roller, Mahler's scenic collaborator twenty years ago, has long forgotten his master's dogma that opera, fantastic and unreal in itself, is as a species opposed to realism both in scenic design and in acting. Roller now takes refuge in naturalism, and is content to transplant to the small Salzburg stage miniature editions of his big Mozart scenery designed for the spacious Vienna Opera.

Scenically, and otherwise, the outstanding event of the Festival was the production of Strauss's 'Ariadne auf Naxos.' In order to grasp the great task of Oscar Strnad, the stage designer, and Lothar Wallerstein, the stage director, it is necessary shortly to narrate the substance of this opera, which is so little known outside Germany (and rarely played even there), although it contains some of Strauss's finest melodies and ranks as the last of his great conceptions prior to his ultimate deterioration. Act 1 of 'Ariadne' shows the turbulent events behind the scenes of a private theatre, in the palace of a rich Viennese aristocrat of the baroque period. Two troupes have been engaged to perform two spectacles for the invited guests, an opera seria, 'Ariadne auf Naxos,' to be followed by a merry commedia dell' arte. A strange whim of the Mæcenas forces both troupes to perform their respective plays simultaneously, and the resulting unique entertainment constitutes Act 2 of Strauss's opera. Strauss, ever alert to experiment, and to venture into playful imagination, draws amply upon his opportunity to contrast the grandeur and pomp of heroic baroque opera with the witticism and clowneries of improvised opera buffa.

The chief task of the stage director rested in the alternate preponderance of the three aspects—the stilted pathos of the opera seria, the buffoonery of the commedia dell' arte, and, in Act 1, the blunt realism of the 'back stage' events, which have a strong Elizabethan flavour. For Act 1, Strnad, complying with the small and narrow stage, erected a two-story edifice which made for economy of space and afforded many new and humorous episodes. In Act 2, a huge gilded baroque frame separated the two ideas, and Wallerstein effected transparency of action amid such seeming confusion by contrasts in light and grouping. With the singers the stage director achieved wonders. Lotte Lehmann, ever a noble singer, revealed unwonted comic powers in Act 1, and statuesque nobility in Act 2. Maria Rajdl and Hans Duhan were remarkable in minor rôles, and Maria Gerhardt sang the aria of Zerbinetta (perhaps the most difficult coloratura number in existence) very well, according to Teutonic conceptions of florid singing. On the whole, 'Ariadne,' under the swift and elegant baton of Clemens Krauss, was one of the finest operatic productions the writer has ever witnessed on any stage.

Johann Strauss's ingenious operetta, 'Die Fledermaus,' formed the merry postlude of the operatic festival. It is a classic example of its kind, notwithstanding the fact that the close observer will discover in it, in nuce, the germ of all that has made modern Viennese operetta so tedious—the pathos and sentimentalism, and the 'society' opera pattern that Strauss's weaker epigones have lately been resorting to with such unfailing persistence. Bruno Walter, descending from Mozartian serenity to Johann Strauss's hilarity, gave a marvellous reading of the score, notably of the electrifying waltzes. The good spirit of the production was Fritzi Massary, in the rôle of the chambermaid, Adele. Her indescribable charm is rivalled by no artist before the public to-day; her piquant wit enthralled her aristocratic grand opera partners, and her cultured singing held its own even among such distinguished company.

Bruno Walter also was the conductor of a symphony concert given by the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra, in which Mahler's fourth Symphony was the chief number. Richard Strauss's 'Sinfonia Domestica' was conducted by Clemens Krauss at another orchestral concert, and Franz Schalk had chosen his justly famous reading of Bruckner's eighth Symphony for his evening.

The dramatic side of the Festival, again entrusted to Max Reinhardt's supervision, consisted of an open-air revival of 'Everyman' in front of Salzburg Cathedral. This production has not gained by long wear, its mannerisms being still more strongly felt to-day than they were five years ago. Reinhardt's other production, 'A Servant of two Masters,' by Goldini, was also not new, having been transferred bodily from his Vienna playhouse. The pleasure derived from the accompanying music (compiled from Mozart and other sources) would have been greater had Reinhardt not compelled his actors to 'sing' them. The effect was amusing, but not pleasant to the ear.

Reinhardt's new offering for this year was Gozzi's 'Turandot,' in a modernised version by Karl Vollmöller. Evidently Reinhardt could not resist the temptation to profit from the general interest in the Turandot theme created by Puccini's posthumous opera. In Reinhardt's production, little remained of Gozzi's old comedy; the dialogue was cut to pieces, and reduced to a third of its size to provide room for an entertainment which came near being a revue—albeit, a revue staged with the exquisite taste and lavishness of a Reinhardt. It was a thing halfway between opera, ballet, and melodrama, much too long and rather incoherent. Bernhard Paumgartner supplied the musical part of the evening with a compilation from Mozart, Rameau, and Scarlatti, interspersed with a great deal of music of his own which was partly genuine Paumgartner and partly false Puccini. The scenery, again by Strnad, was beautiful and artistic, and gave fine pictures on the big stage of the reconstructed festival theatre which is situated in an old military building very artistically adapted for the purpose by Prof. Clemens Holzmeister. The comparative histrionic sensation of 'Turandot' was Harald Kreuzberg, a dancer from the Berlin Opera. It is gratifying to find a young dancer who commands the technique of his craft, and is therefore in a position to shun the false pretences of 'symbolism' and sham psychology so often exhibited by dancers in recent years as a subterfuge for genuine artistic skill.

Musical Notes from Abroad

HOLLAND

The bureaucratic methods employed in the organization of education in Holland are sources both of strength and weakness. In musical matters they may ensure a very complete technical equipment, but often they tend to repress a naturally exuberant talent. They also result in the restriction of serious musical development, with few exceptions, to the middle and upper classes. In education in musical appreciation of all classes there has been a lack of co-ordination which makes the latest effort of the labour group the more welcome, viz., the appointment by the Institute for Education of the Workers of a Permanent Music Commission. The objects in view are (a) the organization of concerts and musical festivals in connection with the local branches of the Institute, which, whenever possible, shall be preceded by lectures on the music performed or of which annotated programmes shall be issued beforehand; (b) the appointment of an advisory Council to deal with the foregoing; (c) the formation and organization of a nucleus of musicians to undertake the work in various centres; (d) the promotion of co-operation between the Institute and existing choirs and musical societies, with the understanding that the services of the Institute in this matter shall be available for bodies taking part in the scheme; (e) the future organization, in co-operation with other bodies, of courses for the education of conductors of choral and other musical societies. The chairman of this Commission is Mr. K. Vorrink, and the secretary, Mr. Paul F. Sanders, the members comprising Messrs. Otto W. de Nobel, Willem Pijper, J. van Ruyven, P. Tiggers, and I. J. Olman. The last-named, however, much to the regret of all who knew him, was taken ill and died before he could enter upon the work. Mr. Sem Dresden has agreed to act as general adviser in musical matters.

Another development in educational work is the formation of an Opera School in connection with the Conservatory at The Hague. Messrs. Albert van Raalte and Alexander Poolman, the directors of the native opera company, 'Co-opera-tie,' are acting as joint principals of the School, the curriculum of which will include all subjects concerning the performance and production of opera.

Herbert Antcliffe.

Obituary

We regret to record the following deaths:

Augustus Stephen Vogt, at Toronto. He was born at Washington, Ont., on August 14, 1861, his father being an organ-builder who had emigrated to Canada from Baden twenty years before. His mother was a native of Berne. Vogt studied the pianoforte and organ at a very early age, and when only twelve was appointed organist to the Lutheran Church at Elmira, the instrument having been built by his father. Five years later he became organist and choirmaster at the first Methodist Church at St. Thomas, Ontario, a post he held for three years only, resigning in order to study at the New England Conservatory. After a further period of two years at St. Thomas's, he went (1885) to Leipsic, where he entered the Conservatoire, studying under Reinecke, Jadassohn, &c. During the four years of his stay at Leipsic he was a regular attendant at the weekly performances of motets at St. Thomas's Church, and to this influence may be ascribed his success as a choral trainer and conductor on his return to Canada. The famous Mendelssohn Choir had its origin in the mixed-voice choir at Jarvis Street Baptist Church, Toronto, where he was appointed on his home-coming. Vogt introduced a great deal of a cappella music into the repertory, and the success of his semi-public choir and congregational practices led him to form a large choral force independent of the church; thus, in 1894, the Mendelssohn Choir came into being. It began with a hundred and eighty singers, and from the first the tests in vocal ability, sight-singing, and musicianship, were stringent. (Its name implied no special attachment to the music of Mendelssohn.) The choice of work at the start was a cappella, but soon the net was cast wider, and covered the whole field of choral music from glees and part-songs to large-scale works with orchestra. The choir made triumphant appearances at New York, Chicago, Boston, and other cities in the States. In 1917 Vogt resigned, his successor being Dr. H. A. Fricker, who has since worthily maintained the standing of the choir. Vogt's chief activity in recent years was as Principal of the Toronto Conservatoire of Music, an institution which he had previously served as one of the staff. He was made Mus. Doc. of Toronto University in 1906, afterwards becoming Dean of the Faculty of Music. He was a frequent visitor to this country, where his attractive personal qualities and high abilities brought him many friends.

Dr. F. Koeller, at Belfast, on September 6, aged sixty-three. Born at Aix-la-Chapelle, and educated at Dresden, Berlin, and Paris, he came to England in 1882, and was appointed conductor of the Belfast Philharmonic Society in 1887, in succession to Herr Adolf Blyschlag. From 1877 to 1912 Dr. Koeller laboured hard at raising the standard of choral and orchestral music, and produced works of the highest class, including the 'Dream of Gerontius' and Berlioz's 'Faust.' He was a Mus. Doc. of Oxford, and composed several cantatas, among which 'Reullura' was a great success. When compelled by ill-health to resign his post, in 1912, he received a handsome presentation from Belfast citizens prior to his voyage to Australia. He returned, however, in 1918, and resumed teaching. His services to the Philharmonic Society will not soon be forgotten.

Dr. Thomas Barrow Dowling, at Cape Town, aged sixty-five. A Hampshire man, he was born on May 31, 1861, educated at the High School and Cathedral Grammar School, Salisbury, studied at the R.A.M., was appointed organist at St. Philip's, Regent Street, and in 1888 went to South Africa to take up the post of organist and choirmaster at St. George's Cathedral, Cape Town. He soon came into prominence, founded the Combined Choral Societies of the Cape in 1891, and did much in the establishment of musical education under the Joint Education Board. From 1894 to 1912 Dr. Dowling conducted the Cape Town Musical Societies' Orchestra, and was chief organizer and conductor of about eighty choral performances and festivals.

John H. Greenhalgh, at Blackpool, suddenly, in mid-August. For over twenty years he was a well-known figure at the Winter Gardens, and for some time was director of the Blackburn Amateur Operatic Society and the Blackpool Lyric Amateurs. Before coming to Blackpool, Mr. Greenhalgh was a member of the Brand Lane Orchestra.

Algernon H. Lindo, at Sydney, N.S.W., in his sixty-fifth year. After holding the post of organist at various London synagogues, he became examiner for the R.A.M., in which capacity he visited many centres in the Dominions. A few years ago he settled at Sydney, where he had a large practice as teacher. He was on the staff of the Sydney Conservatorium.

W. J. Briscoe, at Dublin, on August 16, aged sixty. For seven years he had been organist of Monaghan Cathedral, and in 1912 returned to Dublin, where he was appointed organist of St. Joseph's, Berkeley Road. He was an excellent musician and choir-trainer.

Augustus Henry Paxton, aged eighty-seven. He was head of the firm of music publishers, Messrs. Paxton, a business which had its inception about seventy years ago, when his brother William (then an engraver) began to print cheap editions of popular music.

Miscellaneous

We have received the prospectus of the Purcell Opera Society, a new organization whose aim is the public performance of dramatic works of Purcell and other early composers. The members will include singers, orchestral players, dancers, and non-singing actors, as well as those who are interested in the subject but are unable to take an active part. The work for this season's performance is 'The Fairy Queen.' The President is Mr. Edward J. Dent, Mr. A. H. M. Kempe is musical director, and there is a strong committee that includes Miss Jane Joseph, Miss Lucia Young, and Mr. Gerald Cooper. Full particulars from the hon. secretary, Miss A. Marjorie Kempe, 36, Connaught Square, W.2.

The Central London Music Study Circle opens its season on October 2, at 3 p.m., at the Metropolitan Academy of Music, 72, High Street, Marylebone, when Mr. W. H. Kerridge will be the lecturer. Full information concerning the Circle may be had from the hon. secretary, Mr. Anton Herrick, 19, Christchurch Road, Hampstead.

Answers to Correspondents

C. P.—We are sorry to be unable to advise you as to the best way of obtaining an appointment in an orchestra or dance band. If there are any such bands in your town or district, why not beard the conductors, show them what you can do, and get your name on their books for a vacancy? We sympathise with your desire to leave your job and take up music, but don't be in a hurry. You are very young, and as you already hold an organist's post and are preparing for he R.C.O. diploma under a good teacher, your best plan is to hold on to your railway work until you have made your musical position pretty secure. We are not in the least annoyed by your writing to us (as you fear might be the case): in return, we hope you will not be annoyed with us if we advise you to improve your general education. Your letter contains some bad mistakes in spelling, the punctuation is erratic, and the writing poor. You may wonder what this has to do with your musical progress. We reply: a good deal. We are constantly hearing of cases in which illiteracy and other deficiencies in culture have proved a serious handicap to men well-equipped musically. As you appear to be still only a little more than half-way through the 'teens you have ample time to go ahead with some good general reading. Ask Dr. ——'s advice on this point.

H. C. K.—We do not hold out hopes of your being able to train for yourself your 'very good tenor drawing-room voice.' In singing, more than in any other branch of music, a teacher is to be desired. However, as you say 'hard times' prevent you from obtaining lessons, you must do what you can for yourself. You will find much good advice, simply expressed, in the two books recommended to 'Thistle.' You will be wise to join a good choral society, and be on the alert at rehearsals to snap up the numerous hints on voice production that will (or should) fall from the conductor's lips. Seize every opportunity of hearing good singers, don't forget the importance of general culture, and aim at being a musician as well as a singer.

R. T. R.—A violinist of many years' experience, you are now sacrificing yourself on the altar of chamber music by taking up the viola in order to complete a quartet. But alas! 'The alto clef bothers me terribly,' you say; 'Is there a short cut to the mastery of this strange clef?' If there be such a short cut, we have never heard of it. Our experience is that the only method is to keep pegging away, reading in that clef (beginning, of course, with very simple things) until it loses its terrors. You might also try the plan of taking simple melodies in the treble clef, copying them out in the alto, and playing from the MS. (The melodies should, of course, be unfamiliar.) No doubt a viola instruction book would contain a good deal of simple music in the hated clef.

A. R.—(1.) Opinions differ widely as to the pace of Bach's Prelude on 'All men must die,' some holding that Bach's use of the 'joy' motive justifies a rather quick pace, while others consider that the text calls for a slow rate. Probably the best way is to consider the Prelude as a kind of reverie on a fusion of the ideas of death and resurrection. We should play it lento tranquillo about quaver = 60. (2.) We have no copy available of the Stanley piece. But surely if its two movements are marked Adagio and Allegro, you need no more guidance than is given you by the character of the music itself! Bother the metronome! Beethoven was right when he said: 'He who has sound feeling doesn't need it; and he who has not, will get no help from it.'

Amateur Organist.—We believe Messrs. Rushworth & Dreaper, of Liverpool, make a serviceable two-manual and pedal organ for home use. You say you want an instrument that will give pleasure to one used to a church organ, and you complain of the reedy tone of the small practice organs you have so far heard. But you appear to forget that the round and satisfying tone of the church organ results from the use of pipes of a scale that would be impossible in the drawing-room. We fear you must be prepared to pay for the convenience and comfort of a two-manual practice-organ at home by sacrifice of a good deal in the way of real organ tone.

F. W. H. C.—You inquire as to the reason for the neglect of Schumann's 'Paradise and the Peri,' 'Faust,' 'Genoveva,' 'Manfred,' &c. The answer is that Schumann is not fashionable just now. Moreover, choral and operatic societies have during recent years lost their liking for long German works, save those by Bach and Mendelssohn. The subjects and the translated texts have something to do with this loss of appeal. If Schumann's 'Papillons' and 'Carnaval' are hackneyed, as you say, it is because they contain so much attractive music that an average good pianist may tackle with results not too bad for the rest of the household.

J. T. T.—(1.) 'Can a person play the flute with a complete under set of artificial teeth?' We don't know, but we don't see why he shouldn't. We believe some dentists specialise in sets suitable for players of wind instruments. 'Are there any prominent flautists in this predicament?' Again you have us beaten. But if there are some prominent flautists with such teeth, your first question is answered. (2.) We do not know the size of the orchestra at Covent Garden during the recent opera season. It must have varied considerably in accordance with the demands of various operas. A normal full orchestra for (say) a Wagner opera would be about sixty.

Diapason.—If you have got out of touch with the recent requirements of the R.C.O. examination, you had better obtain a copy of the revised syllabus, before purchasing any new text-books. It would be worth your while also to get from the College sets of recent examination papers. Books that you will almost certainly find useful would be the following: 'Modal Counterpoint,' Dunstan (Novello); 'Applied Counterpoint,' Kitson (Oxford University Press); 'Outlines of Musical Form,' Ham (Novello); 'Foundations of Practical Harmony and Counterpoint,' Morris (Macmillan).

A. B.—We cannot recommend teachers in this column. Consult the advertisement pages in the Musical Times and other journals. We are glad to see that although you possess the L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. diplomas for singing, and have had five years' private tuition, you still desire instruction. At the same time we think you should now be doing some of the public singing for which you seem to be so well qualified—studying hard all the time, of course.

Matric.—Apparently the examiner asks you to write down certain hymn-tunes in any specified key in order to test your ability to put music on paper from memory, and at the same time to see if you can transpose and think in terms of music. If this be so, obviously the use of a copy would invalidate the test. Why not write to the examining body on this point, and be quite sure before you sit for the examination?

H. G. L.—(1.) The metronome indication for the Andante in Rheinberger's seventh Sonata, crotchet = 80, is evidently a misprint for quaver = 80. (2.) The pace of the Andantino from Tchaikovsky's fourth Symphony should be about crotchet = 65. (3.) We do not know of an agency for cinema organ appointments. You may be able to get some information from the British Screen Music Society, Westville, Babbacombe, Torquay.

E. K.—Assuming the Bach Prelude and Fugue in the A.R.C.M. organ syllabus to be that known as 'the Great A minor,' you will find it on p. 83 of vol. i. of your Augener edition. But it might be worth your while to ascertain if the examiners insist on your using the edition specified in the syllabus.

E. S. D. (Natal).—Subdivide the time so that all the notes are in quavers, a crotchet being represented by two tied quavers; count six in a bar, and the syncopation should then be overcome easily. There is no special way of dealing with the passage at a quick pace. When it has been mastered slowly, gradually increase the speed.

Plodder.—(1.) We think your needs would be met by Harold Moore's cantata, 'The Darkest Hour,' or by Handel's 'Passion' (both Novello). (2.) By all means introduce some Bach Chorales into your choir repertory. Novello's publish a collection of thirteen, designed for just such cases as yours.

Anxious (Putney).—The label in your violin may mean much or little. Take or send the instrument to Messrs. W. E. Hill, New Bond Street, W.1, who will give you an opinion and advice on which you may rely.

Cymro.—You want an instruction book that will enable you to study 'the theory of music from the initial stages to its completion.' The question is vague. What branch of theory do you wish to study?

Discus.—The diploma about which you inquire is worth little more than the paper it is printed on—if that.

A. F.—Organ catalogues of the Continental publishers you name can be had from Messrs. Novello.

H. J. S. (Kenya).—(1.) We should prefer the diploma of Trinity College of Music, but the other you name is quite sound. (2.) We cannot undertake to recommend a 'coach'; many excellent ones advertise in our pages. (3.) We like your pace for the Imperial March, but don't attach too much importance to metronome markings. The pace of a work must vary slightly—sometimes even considerably—with the conditions of performance. (4.) We have never heard the song you mention, and have no copy. But here again the right pace will reveal itself with study.

Thistle.—(1.) Article on 'Carols,' in 'Grove'; 'Carols: Their Origin, Music, and Connection with Mystery Plays,' by J. W. Phillips (Routledge). (2.) We know of no books definitely on the teaching of singing, but the following are chosen out of a long list, as being likely to help you: 'Plain Words on Singing,' by William Shakespeare (Putnams), 'The Singer's Art: Letters from a Singing Master,' by Gregory Hast (Methuen): (3.) We should put the F.R.C.O. diploma next to a University degree in regard to musical theory in general.

C. G. L.—Presumably the later edition represents the composer's second thoughts. But we agree with you that in the passage you quote 'poured' is better as a dissyllable. The question of rhyme need not be considered seriously.

D. H. A.—(1.) The title of the Tartini Sonata gives the 'programme' of the work—'Dido Forsaken.' (2.) Question too vague. What department of musical theory do you wish to take up?

G. F. B.—For aural training for the A.R.C.O. Examination try 'Examination Aural Tests,' by F. G. Shinn (Augener).

CONTENTS.

	Page.
Hugo Wolf. By C. W. Orr	881
The Nature of Harmony.—IV. By Matthew Shirlaw	882
Canadian Folk-Song. By Mrs. Frank Liebich	886
Popularity and the Classics. By Alexander Brent-Smith	887
Manuscripts in a Museum. By Thomas Armstrong	888
'Der Doppelgänger' Problem. By John Coates	890
Ad Libitum. By 'Feste'	890
New Light on Late Tudor Composers.—XXI. Robert White. By W. H. Grattan Flood	893
Music in the Foreign Press. By M.-D. Calvocoressi	894
Points from Lectures	895
Through the 'Immortal Nine' on the Gramophone. By D. Batigan Verne	896
How to Establish a Local Orchestra. By S. Midgley	899
William Gardiner, of Leicester. By Orlando A. Mansfield	900
The English Abroad. By Jeffrey Pulver	902
Occasional Notes	904
New Music	906
The Musician's Bookshelf	910
Gramophone Notes. By 'Discus'	917
Wireless Notes. By 'Ariel'	920
Player-Piano Notes	921
Church and Organ Music	922
Royal College of Organists	922
A Sequel to 'Lead, kindly Light'	922
National Union of Organists' Associations Congress. By W. A. Roberts	923
The Three Choirs Festival. By W. McNaught	928
Letters to the Editor	931
The Amateurs' Exchange	934
Sharps and Flats	935
Royal Academy of Music	935
Trinity College of Music	935
Choral Society Programmes	935
London Concerts	937
Competition Festival Record	938
The Haslemere Festival of Ancient Chamber Music	938
Music in the Provinces	939
Music in Scotland	940
Music in Ireland	941
The Salzburg Festival. By Paul Bechert	941
Musical Notes from Abroad	942
Obituary	943
Miscellaneous	943
Answers to Correspondents	943

MUSIC.

'The Virginian Voyage.' Unison Song By Edgar L. Bainton 913

EXTRA SUPPLEMENT given with this number:

'By Marykirk, a sweet bird sang.' Four-part Song. By William Jackson.

F

DURING THE LAST MONTH.

Published by NOVELLO & CO., Limited.

BAINTON, EDGAR L.—"The Virginian Voyage." Unison Song for Massed Singing. (No. 1004, The Musical Times.) 2d.

BIZET.—"Carmen." An Abridged Concert Edition of the Opera. Selected and Adapted by W. McNaught. The Libretto by Lucia Young. 3s.

HANDEL.—"How engaging, how endearing." Chorus from "Semele." (No. 857, Novello's 8vo Choruses.) 2d.

HANDEL.—"Semele" (Abridged Concert Edition.) Act I. 1s. 6d.

MURRAY, A.—Holy Communion in G. 9d.

PONSONBY, N.—"God be in my head." Unison or Harmony. 2d.

PURCELL, HENRY.—"King Arthur." An Abridged Concert Edition of the Opera. (Adapted from the complete edition of W. H. Cummings.) 2s. 6d.

RYLEY, Rev. G. C. E.—"Lord of our Life, and Love, and Light." Hymn. 1d.

SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW, No. 412, contains the following music in both notations:—"Talisman." Unison Song by Schumann (Op. 25); and "The Secret." Unison Song by Cecil Sharman. 2d.

SCHOOL SONGS.—Published in two forms. A. Voice Parts in Staff and Tonic Sol-fa Notations, with Pianoforte Accompaniment (8vo). B. Voice Parts only, in Tonic Sol-fa Notation.

			A.	B.
Book	272.	Twelve Two-part Canons by various composers	1s.	—
	278.	Twelve Unison Songs for Junior Classes by various composers	1s.	—
	279.	Twelve Unison Songs Do. Do.	1s.	—
	280.	Do. Do. Do. Do.	1s.	—
	281.	Do. Do. Do. Do.	1s.	—
	282.	Do. Do. Do. Do.	1s.	—
	283.	Six Unison Songs for the Higher Divisions by various composers	1s.	—
	284.	Seven Unison Songs Do. Do.	1s.	—
	285.	Seven Easy Unison Songs Do. Do.	1s.	—
	286.	Thirteen Old English Songs from The School Music Review	1s.	—
	287.	Seven Easy Unison Songs by various composers	8d.	—
	288.	Do. from The School Music Review	8d.	—
	289.	Do. by various composers	8d.	—
	290.	Do. from The School Music Review	8d.	—
	291.	Do. by various composers	1s.	—
	292.	Seven Unison Songs for the Higher Divisions, from The School Music Review	8d.	—
	293.	"Autumn Days." A Song-Cycle for Young Children, by Cecil Sharman	6d.	—
	294.	Seven Easy Two-part Songs. By various composers	8d.	—
	295.	Eight Easy Two-part Songs Do.	8d.	—
	296.	Eight Easy Two-part Songs Do.	8d.	—
	297.	Six Easy Two-part Songs Do.	8d.	—
	298.	National Songs and Airs (Two-part Arrangements) Do.	8d.	—
	299.	Six Two-part Songs Do.	8d.	—
	300.	Eight Anthems and Sacred Two-part Songs Do.	1s.	—
	301.	Five Two-part Songs Do.	1s.	—
	302.	Six Two-part Songs Do.	1s.	—

DURING THE LAST MONTH.—(Continued).

		A.	B.
SCHOOL SONGS.—(Continued)
Book 303.	Six Two-part Songs. By various composers	1s.	—
304.	Six Two-part Songs Do.	1s.	—
305.	Seven Two-part Songs Do.	8d.	—
No. 1437.	Lullaby. Arranged as a Unison Song. A. R. Mote	2d.	—
1453.	"Ladybird." Unison Song. Schumann	2d.	—
1464.	"The Snow-Flake." Unison Song. Cecil Sharman	2d.	—
1465.	"The Sea-Shell's Lullaby." Unison Song. Edgar L. Bainton	2d.	—
1466.	"The City Child." Unison Song. Edgar L. Bainton	2d.	—

SMITH, W.—"Jesu, Lover of my soul." Sacred Song. 2s.

TONIC SOL-FA PUBLICATIONS:

BIZET. "Carmen." An Abridged Concert Edition of the Opera. Selected and Adapted by W. McNaught 2s.

HANDEL. "Semele." An Abridged Concert Edition. 1s. 6d.

TWENTY SHORT AND EASY PIECES FOR THE ORGAN. Set 6. Various Composers. 4s.; Cloth, 6s.

For Contents see page 958.

PUBLISHED FOR

THE H. W. GRAY CO., NEW YORK.

COOMBS, C. W.—"Pax Dei" ("Remain with us, O peace of God"). (No. 831, Church Music Review.) 10 cents. (6d.).

DONOVAN, R. F.—"Saviour, when night involves the skies." Anthem for Women's Voices. (No. 814, Church Music Review.) 12 cents. (6d.).

DR. R. WALKER ROBSON. Organist and Choirmaster of Christ Church, Crouch End, has a VACANCY for a PUPIL-ASSISTANT. Address: Hulme, Arkley, Herts.

MILL HILL AMATEUR OPERATIC SOCIETY. Rehearsals for "The Gondoliers" commence Monday, October 11th. For particulars, &c., Membership, &c., apply, Hon. Secretary, "Hendred," Daws' Lane, N.W.7.

ON SALE.—Set Small Tymps. Bass Drum. Capital-toned Harmonium. Double-Bass. Whittaker, 20, Central Drive, Blackpool.

PEDAL BOARD (Rummens) with stool, FOR SALE. As new, £5. "B.," 12, Longley Road, S.W.17.

BELOW HALF PRESENT PRICE.—THREE-manual reed organ; as new. Twenty-four speaking stops. Church organ console. Seen London. "J.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

STEINWAY BABY GRAND.—7¼ octaves. Excellent order. Low price. "J.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

CHARGES FOR ADVERTISEMENTS:—

	£	s.	d.
Two Lines	0	3	0
Three Lines	0	3	4
For every additional Line	0	0	10
One inch (displayed)	0	10	0
Half a Column	2	0	0
A Column	4	0	0
A Page	7	10	0

Special Pages (Cover, &c.) by arrangement.

A remittance should be sent with every Advertisement.

SEPTEMBER'S BULLETIN OF OXFORD MUSIC

Additional Exercises to Elementary Harmony. By C. H. Kitson. 3s. 6d. net.

The Oxford Choral Songs. General Editor: W. G. Whittaker.

Unison Songs.
50. R. Vaughan Williams, 'Take, O take' (Shakespeare). 3d.
51. R. Vaughan Williams, 'When Icicles hang by the Wall.' 4d.
52. R. Vaughan Williams, 'Orpheus with his Lute.' 4d.
56. Roy Thompson, 'Cake and Sack' (Words by Walter de la Mare). 3d.
57. Norman F. Demuth, 'Two Ships' (Words by Averil Demuth). 3d.
65. Taylor Harris, 'Come, sing and dance' (Words from an Old Carol). 4d.
66. Lilian Smith, 'Christmas' (E. Hilton Young). 3d.

Two-Part Songs.
140. Martin Shaw, 'May merry-time' (George Darley). 6d.

For Male-Voices.
216. Robin Milford, 'Rutterkin' (W. Cornish, Junr.). Sol-fa edition. 3d.

The Oxford Solo Songs.
'Yellow Wine.' By Ralph Greaves. 2s.
'Sleep Song.' By Ernest Walker. 2s.
'Summer Rain.' By Ernest Walker. 2s.
'Dream Pedlary.' By Bernard Van Dieren. 2s.
'Rioupéroux.' By Hubert J. Foss. 2s.
'Three Songs from Shakespeare.' By R. Vaughan Williams. 3s. 6d.

Midsummer Moon. For Violin and Piano. By Rebecca Clarke. 2s. 6d.

Chinese Puzzle. (Adapted from a Chinese Tune.) For Violin and Piano. By Rebecca Clarke. 2s.

Sonatina No. 2 for Piano Solo. By Willem Pijper. 3s.

Sonatina No. 3 for Piano Solo. By Willem Pijper. 3s.

Seven Pieces for Children (for Piano Solo). By Karel Mengelberg. 3s. 6d.

Elegy. For Organ Solo. By Ernest B. Farrar. 2s.

A Wedding Piece. For Organ Solo. By Ernest B. Farrar. 2s.

The Oxford Series of Modern Anthems. Edited by E. Stanley Roper.
Edward C. Bairstow. Three Introits or Short Anthems.
No. A 4. 'I sat down under His Shadow' (Song of Solomon). 3d.
No. A 5. 'Jesu, the very thought of Thee' (St. Bernard, translated by E. Caswall). 3d.
No. A 6. 'I will wash my hands in innocency.' 3d.

Oxford Orchestral Series. Edited by W. G. Whittaker.
No. O 21. A Bach Suite for Strings with Optional Wind and Timpani. Movements from the Piano Suites of J. S. Bach. Selected and arranged by Gerrard Williams. 7s. 6d. Parts: 4d. and 6d. each.
No. O 22. March from Dramma per Musica ('Vereinigte Zwietracht der wechselnden Saiten'); Prelude to Cantata No. 212 ('Mer hahn en neue Oberkeet') (Peasant Cantata); Trio. By J. S. Bach, Edited by W. G. Whittaker. 3s. 6d. Parts: 4d. each.

THE OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS

AMEN HOUSE, WARWICK SQUARE, E.C.4, and 95, WIMPOLE STREET, W.1.

(Sole Agents in Great Britain and the Colonies for the Cotta Edition of the Classics, the Anglo-French Edition, Patersons Publications Ltd., and the Edition of J. Schuberth & Co., Leipzig.

Write for Catalogues of these famous Editions to 95, WIMPOLE STREET, W 1.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE DESCANT HYMN-TUNE BOOK.

A COLLECTION OF WELL-KNOWN TUNES

ARRANGED BY

GEOFFREY SHAW

TUNES, AND APPROPRIATE HYMNS.

TUNE.	METRE.	HYMN.
Austria	8.7.8.7.D. ...	Glorious things of thee are spoken
		Praise the Lord ! ye heavens, adore Him
Bishopthorpe	C.M. ...	This is the day the Lord hath made
Darwall's 148th	6.6.6.6.4.4.4.4. ...	Ye holy Angels bright
Ein' feste Burg	8.7.8.7.6.6.6.7. ...	A safe stronghold our God is still
		Rejoice to-day with one accord
Eisenach	L.M. ...	Great God, Who, hid from mortal sight
		O Love, how deep ! how broad ! how high
Hanover	10.10.11.11. ...	Disposer Supreme, and Judge of the earth
		O worship the King, All-glorious above
Hyfrydol	8.7.8.7.D. ...	Alleluia ! sing to Jesus
Irish	C.M. ...	The Son of Man from Jordan rose
Lasst uns erfreuen	L.M. (with Alleluias) ...	Light's glittering morn bedecks the sky
		Ye watchers and ye holy ones
Leoni	6.6.8.4.D. ...	The God of Abraham praise
Luther	8.7.8.7.8.8.7. ...	Great God, what do I see and hear ?
Melcombe	L.M. ...	New every morning is the love
Morning Hymn	L.M. ...	Awake, my soul, and with the sun
Nun danket	6.7.6.7.6.6.6.6. ...	Now thank we all our God
Old 100th (1st Version)	L.M. ...	All people that on earth do dwell
Old 100th (2nd Version)	L.M. ...	Before Jehovah's awful Throne
Old 104th	10.10.11.11. ...	Disposer Supreme, and judge of the earth
		O worship the King, All-glorious above
Richmond	C.M. ...	Praise to the Holiest in the height
Rockingham	L.M. ...	My God, and is Thy Table spread ?
		When I survey the wondrous Cross
St. Anne (1st Version)	C.M. ...	O God, our help in ages past
St. Anne (2nd Version)	C.M. ...	The Son of God goes forth to war
St. Theodulph	7.6.7.6.D. ...	All glory, laud, and honour
St. Thomas	S.M. ...	The Advent of our God
Surrey	8.8.8.8.8. ...	The Lord my pasture shall prepare
		We have not known Thee as we ought
Tallis' Canon	L.M. ...	Glory to Thee, my God, this night
Unser Herrscher	8.7.8.7.8.7. ...	Come ye faithful, raise the anthem
Victory	8.8.8.4. ...	The strife is o'er, the battle done
Wareham	L.M. ...	O Saviour, Lord, to Thee we pray
Warrington	L.M. ...	Now that the daylight fills the sky
Wiltshire	C.M. ...	Through all the changing scenes of life
Winchester New	L.M. ...	On Jordan's bank the Baptist's cry
Winchester Old (1st Version) ...	C.M. ...	When God of old came down from Heaven
Winchester Old (2nd Version) ...	C.M. ...	While shepherds watched their flocks by night

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.

Voice Parts only, 8*d*.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NOVELLO'S EDITIONS.
ORATORIOS, CANTATAS, ETC.

(S.A.T.B. EDITIONS ONLY.)

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE EACH.

ADAMS, T.—†Cross of Christ, The.
——†Golden Harvest, A.
——†Holy Child, The.
——†Nativity, The.
—— Rainbow of Peace, The.
ALCOCK, W. G.—And I heard a great voice.
ANDERTON, T.—Norman Baron, The.
——†Wreck of the Hesperus, The.
ASPA, E.—Gipsies, The.
ASTORGA.—Stabat Mater.
AUSTIN, F.—†Songs in a Farmhouse.
BACH.—†Bide with us.
——† Ditto. (Welsh Words).
—— Christ lay in death's dark prison.
—— Christians, grave ye this glad day.
——†Christmas Oratorio. Parts 1—2.
Ditto Ditto. Parts 3—4.
Ditto Ditto. Parts 5—6.
——†Come, Jesu, come (Motet).
—— Come, Redeemer of our race.
—— From depths of woe I call on Thee.
—— Give the hungry man thy bread.
—— God goeth up with shouting.
——†God so loved the world.
——†God's time is the best.
——† Ditto (Welsh Words).
——†How brightly shines yon star of morn.
—— If thou but sufferest God to guide thee.
——†Jesu, Priceless Treasure (Motet).
——† Ditto (Welsh Words).
—— Jesus, now will we praise Thee.
—— Jesus sleeps, what hope remaineth.
—— Let songs of rejoicing be raised.
—— Lord is a sun and shield, The.
——†Lord is my Shepherd, The.
—— Lord, rebuke me not.
——*†Magnificat in D.
——†My spirit was in heaviness.
—— O Christ, my all in living.
—— O Jesu Christ, Thou Prince of Peace.
——†O Light Everlasting.
—— O praise the Lord for all His mercies.
—— O teach me, Lord, my days to number.
—— Praise our God Who reigns in Heaven.
—— Praise thou the Lord, Jerusalem.
—— Ready be, my soul, alway.
—— Rise, O Soul.
—— Sages of Sheba, The.
——†Sleepers, wake.
——†Spirit also helpeth us, The (Motet).
——†Stronghold Sure, A.
—— There is nought of soundness in all my body.
—— Thou Guide of Israel.
—— Wailing, crying, mourning, sighing.
—— Watch ye, pray ye.
—— When will God recall my spirit.
—— Whoso doth offer thanks.
BARNBY, J.—†Rebekah.
BARTON, M.—Mass in A.
BEETHOVEN.—†Choral Fantasia.
—— Engedi.
——†Mass in C (Latin).
——*Mass in C.
—— Mount of Olives.
BENNETT, G. J.—Easter Hymn (On the morn of Easter Day).
BENNETT, W. S.—Exhibition Ode.
——†May Queen, The.
——†Woman of Samaria, The.
BETJEMANN.—Song of the Western Men.
BLAIR, H.—†Harvest-tide.
BRAHMS, J.—Song of Destiny, A.
—— Songs of Love (Vocal Part only).
BREE, J. B. VAN.—†St. Cecilia's Day.
BREWER, A. H.—O praise the Lord.
—— Song of Eden, A.
BRIDGE, J. F.—Hymn to the Creator.
——†Inchcape Rock, The.
——†Lord's Prayer, The.
——*†Rock of Ages.
CARISSIMI.—*Jephthah.
CHERUBINI.—*Mass, Requiem, in C minor (No. 1).
—— Mass (Coronation) in A (No. 3).
—— Mass, in C (No. 4).
COBB, G. F.—My soul truly waiteth.
COSTA, M.—Dream, The.
COWEN, F. H.—†He giveth His beloved sleep.
DALE, B. J.—†Before the paling of the stars.
DAVIES, H. W.—†Hervé Riel.
—— Ode on Time.
DUNHILL, T. F.—†Tubal Cain.
ELGAR, E.—†For the Fallen.
——†Fourth of August, The.
—— Te Deum and Benedictus, in F.
ELLICOTT, R. F.—Elysium.
FRANZ, R.—Praise ye the Lord.
GADE, N. W.—†Christmas Eve.
——†Erl-King's Daughter, The.
—— Zion.
GARRETT, G. M.—†Harvest Cantata.
GAUL, A. R.—†Ruth (Choruses only).
GOETZ, H.—†By the Waters of Babylon.
——†Nœnia.
GOODHART, A. M.—Earl Haldan's Daughter.
GOUNOD, CH.—Daughters of Jerusalem.
—— De Profundis (Latin).
—— Ditto (English).
——*†Gallia.
—— Messe Solennelle, Ste. Cécile (Latin).
—— Out of Darkness.
—— Passion, The.
——†Redemption (Part 2).
—— Ditto (Part 3).
GRAUN.—Passion, The (Choruses only).
GRAY, A.—Legend of the Rock Buoy Bell.
GRIMM, J. O.—Soul's Aspiration, The.
HANDEL.—†Acis and Galatea.
—— Chandos Te Deum.
—— Dettingen Te Deum.
—— Dixit Dominus.
——*Except the Lord build the house.
——†Israel in Egypt (Pocket Edition).
——†Judas Maccabæus (Ditto.)
——†Messiah (Ditto).
——*Nisi Dominus.
—— O come, let us sing unto the Lord.
——†O praise the Lord.
—— Ode on St. Cecilia's Day.
—— Passion of Christ, The (Abridged).
—— Utrecht Jubilate.
—— Ways of Zion, The.
HARRISON, J.—Christmas Cantata.
——†Harvest Cantata.
HARRISS, C. A. E.—Sands of Dee, The.
HARWOOD, BASIL.—Love Incarnate.
HAYDN.—†Creation, The (Pocket Edition).
——*Mass, in B flat (No. 1).
—— Mass, in B flat (No. 1) (Latin).
—— Mass, in C (No. 2) (Latin).
—— Mass, in D (No. 3) (Latin).
——*Mass, in D (No. 3).
——*Te Deum Laudamus, in C
—— Seasons, The, From:
†Spring, Autumn.
Summer, Winter.
—— Seasons, The (Choruses only).
HECHT, E.—O may I join the choir invisible.
HIGGS, H. M.—Erl-King, The.
HILLER, F.—†Song of Victory, A.
HOLST, G.—Ode to Death.
—— Ode on a Grecian Urn.
HUMMEL.—Mass, in B flat (No. 1).
—— Mass, in E flat (No. 2).
—— Mass, in D (No. 3).
JENSEN, A.—†Feast of Adonis, The.
JORDAN, W.—Blow ye the trumpet in Zion.
LEMARE, E. H.—'Tis the spring of souls to-day.
LEO, L.—Dixit Dominus.
LLOYD, C. H.—O give thanks unto the Lord.
—— Song of Balder, The.
MACCUNN, H.—†Lord Ullin's Daughter.
——†Wreck of the Hesperus, The.
MACFARREN, G. A.—†May Day.
—— Outward Bound.
MACKENZIE, A. C.—†Bride, The.
MENDELSSOHN.—†As the hart pants.
——†Athalie.
——*Ave Maria (Saviour of Sinners).
——†Christus.
——†Come, let us sing.
——†Elijah (Pocket Edition).
—— Ditto (Choruses only).
——†Festgesang (Hymns of Praise).
MENDELSSOHN.—continued.
——†Hear my Prayer.
——†Hymn of Praise (Lobgesang).
——*†Lauda Sion.
——†Lord, how long.
——†Loreley.
—— Man is Mortal.
——*Not unto us.
——*St. Paul (Pocket Edition).
—— Ditto (Choruses only).
——†Walpurgis Night, The First.
——†When Israel out of Egypt came.
MEYERBEER.—91st Psalm (Latin).
—— 91st Psalm (English).
MOZART.—King Thamos.
——*Mass in C (No. 1).
—— Mass in B flat (No. 7) (Latin).
—— Mass in G (No. 12) (Latin).
—— Mass in G (No. 12) (English).
——*†Mass in G (No. 12).
—— Mass, Requiem, in D minor (No. 15) (Latin).
——*†Mass, Requiem, in D minor (No. 15).
NORTH, S.—†In the Morning.
PALESTRINA.—Surge Illuminare.
PARKER, H. W.—Kobolds, The.
PARRY, C. H. H.—†Blest Pair of Sirens.
——†Chivalry of the Sea, The (Naval Ode).
—— Glories of our Blood and State, The.
—— Te Deum Laudamus (Coronation).
PINSUTI, C.—Phantoms.
PROUT, E.—Freedom.
——†Hundredth Psalm, The.
PURCELL.—Te Deum and Jubilate, in D.
——†Te Deum, in D.
—— Te Deum, in D (Latin).
ROMBERG.—Harmony of the Spheres, The.
——†Lay of the Bell, The.
—— Te Deum Laudamus, in D.
——†Transient and the Eternal, The.
ROSSINI.—*†Stabat Mater.
SACHS, ED.—King Cups.
—— Water-Lilies.
SCHUBERT.—Mass, in A flat.
—— Mass, in B flat.
—— Mass, in C.
——†Mass, in F.
—— Mass, in G.
——†Song of Miriam.
SCHUMANN.—Advent Hymn, "In Lowly Guise."
—— King's Son, The.
—— Manfred.
—— Mignon's Requiem.
——†New Year's Song.
—— Pilgrimage of the Rose.
SCHUTZ, H.—Passion of our Lord, The.
SELBY, B. L.—Dying Swan, The.
SILAS, E.—Mass, in C.
SMITH, A. B.—In Glorious Freedom.
SMITH, A. M.—Ode to the North-East Wind.
SPOHR.—Christian's Prayer, The.
——†God, Thou art Great.
—— Hymn to St. Cecilia.
——†Last Judgment, The.
STEPHEN, D.—†Laird o' Cockpen, The.
STOCKER, S.—Song of the Fates.
STOJOWSKI, S.—Springtime.
SULLIVAN, A.—Exhibition Ode.
—— †Te Deum (Thanksgiving).
THOMAS, A. G.—†Sun Worshippers, The.
THORNE, E. H.—Be merciful unto me.
TOURS, B.—Festival Ode, A.
WAGNER.—Flying Dutchman (A Selection from Act II.)
WALKER, E.—Hymn to Dionysus, A.
—— Ode to a Nightingale.
WEBER, C. M.—Jubilee Cantata.
—— *Mass in E flat.
—— *Mass in G.
—— Preciosa.
—— Three Seasons.
WESLEY, S.—Dixit Dominus.
WESLEY, S. S.—O Lord, Thou art my God.
WEST, J. E.—Lord, I have loved the habitation of Thy House.
—— Song of Zion, A.
WOOD, C.—Ode to the West Wind.
WOODMAN, R. T.—Falmouth.

*The Works marked thus * have Latin and English words.* Those marked thus † may be had in Tonic Sol-fa Notation.
Cantatas, &c., for Female and Male Voices (see Novello's Catalogues).

LONDON: NOVELLO & COMPANY, LIMITED.

JUST PUBLISHED.

AN ABRIDGED CONCERT EDITION OF

SEMELE

A SECULAR ORATORIO

FOR FOUR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

BY

G. F. HANDEL

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE

TONIC SOL-FA, 1s. 6d.

The time of performance of this edition is about two hours, and the orchestral parts have been so cued that it may be performed with accompaniment of: (1) Strings only; (2) Strings and Pianoforte; (3) Strings, or Strings and Pianoforte, with the addition of any Wind up to the complete Score of 2 Oboes, 2 Bassoons, 2 Horns, 2 Trumpets, Drums.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

JUST PUBLISHED.

AN ABRIDGED

CONCERT EDITION

OF

CARMEN

AN OPERA

BY

GEORGES BIZET.

SELECTED AND ADAPTED

BY

W. McNAUGHT.

THE LIBRETTO FROM THE ENGLISH VERSION OF THE COMPLETE OPERA BY

LUCIA YOUNG.

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS.

Tonic Sol-fa, Price 2s.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

AN ABRIDGED

CONCERT EDITION

OF

KING ARTHUR

AN OPERA

LIBRETTO BY JOHN DRYDEN.

MUSIC BY

HENRY PURCELL.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

A

BOOK OF DESCANTS

SECOND EDITION

BY

ALAN GRAY

Organ Edition, Foolscap 4to, 5*s.*

Treble parts only, oblong 4to, 3*s* 6*d.*

The issue of a second edition has supplied the opportunity of making the collection more complete, and seventeen Descants (Nos 134-150) have been added

"Another interesting help to the improvement or enrichment of Church worship is 'A Book of Descants,' by Alan Gray. . . . It is needless to say that, the composer being a musician so accomplished, this work is done throughout in masterly fashion."—Church Times.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS

FETTER LANE - - LONDON, E.C.4

JOSEPH WILLIAMS

LIMITED.

J. RHEINBERGER.

MASS IN E♭. Op. 155. For treble voices (in three parts).

Vocal Score with Organ Accompaniment. 3*s.* 6*d.* net.
Vocal Score without Accompaniment ... 2*s.* net.
Separate Voice Parts ... ... each voice 1*s.* net.

The above is also arranged by Richard Strutt for use in the Church of England. 1*s.* 6*d.* net.

RUTLAND BOUGHTON.

*AGINCOURT. A dramatic scene for male voices, solo, and chorus.

(First performed at Glastonbury Festival.)

Vocal Score 2*s.* net.

*THE MOON MAIDEN. A choral dance for girls.

May be sung as a Choral piece for female voices, or staged for dancing.

Adapted from the Japanese Noh-Play, "Hagoromo."

Price 2*s.* net.

A. HERBERT BREWER.

*THE MILLER'S GREEN. A miniature suite of five songs for voice and piano (or orchestra).

Specially composed for "The Three Choirs" Festival.

Price 4*s.* net.

* Orchestral score and parts may be had on hire.

32, GREAT PORTLAND STREET,
LONDON, W.1.

ORGANISTS ARE INVITED TO SEND FOR FREE SPECIMEN COPY OF BOOKLET

SEVEN NEW PRIZE CAROLS

BY

BLIND POETS AND MUSICIANS.

Ideal for a Carol Service. Music by some of the foremost living Blind Composers.

Poetry of singular beauty and appeal.

FREE GRANTS of Booklets (words and music) to Choirs willing to arrange a CAROL SERVICE in aid of the great work conducted by the National Institute for the Blind

(Registered under the Blind Persons Act, 1920),

224, GREAT PORTLAND STREET, LONDON, W.1.

Early application should be made to Secretary, Music Department.

"Such settings as these cannot do otherwise than tend to popularise the Church Service."—Musical Standard, June 6, 1891.
"Good, effective, easy, and dignified."—Musical Times, April 1, 1891.
"Admirably adapted to meet the requirements of the majority of choirs and congregations." "Deserve extensive recognition and use."—Musical News, September 4 and 25, 1891.
Also recommended by the Guardian, Church Times, &c., &c.

POPULAR CHURCH MUSIC

BY

J. H. MAUNDER

	Staff Notation.	Tonic Sol-fa.
CHRISTMAS ANTHEMS.
Anthem—Christians, Awake	4d.	3d.
Carol—Once in Bethlehem	3d.	2d.
Two Christmas Carols	4d.	3d.
SERVICES
SERVICE IN G	2s.	1s. 4d.
Or, separately:—
Te Deum	4d.	3d.
Benedicite, omnia Opera	3d.	3d.
Benedictus	3d.	3d.
Jubilate	4d.	3d.
Office for the Holy Communion	10d.	8d.
Pater Noster from the above	3d.	3d.
Amen ditto	1½d.	1½d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis	4d.	3d.
SERVICE IN CHANT FORM (No. 1)	1s. 4d.	10d.
Or, separately:—
Te Deum, &c., with Kyrie	4d.	3d.
Office for the Holy Communion	8d.	6d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis	4d.	3d.
Te Deum in B flat...	4d.	3d
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in C (partly Unison)	4d.	2d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in D	4d.	3d.
ORGAN.
Voix Seraphique (for Recitals)...	2s. 6d.	—
CHURCH CANTATA.
Penitence, Pardon, and Peace (for general use) ...	2s.	1s. 4d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE BEAUTIFUL FOLK-SONGS OF FRANCE

BOOK I.

(Novello's School Song Book, No. 277)

COLLECTED BY

AUSTIN DE CROZE

AND HARMONIZED BY

GUSTAVE FERRARI

Price Two Shillings Complete

Or, Separate Numbers :

No.		Price
1440	NOËL DE STRASBOURG	2d.
1441	BERCEUSE	2d.
1442	LE MOULIN	2d.
1443	HOPSA ! LISELLA	2d.
1444	LE MIRACLE DE SAINT NICOLAS	4d.
1445	LA RONDE DU ROSIER	2d.
1446	CHANSON À BALLER	2d.
1447	LE BEAU GALANT	2d.
1448	LÉGENDE DES PÉLERINS	2d.
1449	LE PREMIER JOUR DE MAI	2d.
1450	LES TROIS JUPONS BLANCS	2d.
1451	CELUI QUE J'AIME	2d.

London : NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

INCLUDED ON THE LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL REQUISITION LIST.

THE BEAUTIFUL SONGS OF FRANCE

BOOK II. (1925).

TWELVE SONGS AND DANCES

OF

FLANDERS, ARTOIS, PICARDY, NORMANDY, CHAMPAGNE, LORRAINE, and ALSACE

COLLECTED AND EDITED BY

AUSTIN DE CROZE

WITH PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENTS

BY

LEOPOLD ASHTON, GUSTAVE FERRARI, and OTHERS.

With Illustrations, English translations, and descriptions and diagrams of the dances.

Preface by Dr. W. H. D. ROUSE, Perse School, Cambridge.

Foreword by HARVEY GRACE and Lastword by EDWIN EVANS.

CONTENTS.

FLANDERS-ARTOIS	Ah ! le joli Bois, Mesdames ; Sur les Clanquarts.
PICARDY	Les trois Canards ; Semons la Salade.
NORMANDY	Les trois Pommes blanches ; Compère et Commère.
CHAMPAGNE	Le petit Bonnet rond ; Eh ! qui marierons-nous ?
LORRAINE	Vous n'êtes pas mon Berger ; Je vais entrer dans la Danse.
ALSACE	La Chanson des Beignets ; Le Maître et Jacquot.

Messrs. Novello & Co. beg leave to announce that they have acquired the Sole Agency for all British Territory and the United States of America for the sale of the Work above described, and that copies are now on sale.

Price Four Shillings each.

NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited, 160, Wardour Street, London, W.1.

Some varying opinions upon the OVERTURE to Thomas Hardy's

"THE QUEEN OF CORNWALL"

Set to Music by RUTLAND BOUGHTON, and performed at the Queen's Hall Promenade Concert on August 31st, 1926.

THE TIMES: "It is quite suitably in a less heroic vein than Wagner's Prelude, and becomes at times boisterous in a folky way in its references to King Mark, who is according to Mr. Hardy a boor and a hard drinker. We may recognise once more Mr. Boughton's gift for a good tune and his flair for what is effective in a theatre, but also a certain amateurishness in his treatment of the material, notably in the orchestration."

THE DAILY TELEGRAPH: "Turgid Victorianism . . . . a long-winded and unsuccessful effort."

THE DAILY MAIL: "The frankness of the tunes announces that this is the prelude to a homely and thoroughly English version of the tragedy of Tristram and Iseult. There is good matter in the argument, and the work enhances the composer's reputation in spite of some thinness in the scoring."

THE OBSERVER: "There is nothing English about Mr. Boughton's music. It owns in fact to no fixed nationality. Neither is it made up in any palpable fashion of the ways and means of differing schools of composition. As regards methods it is purely personal. There is hardly another composer who treats both themes and orchestration as does Mr. Boughton."

THE DAILY HERALD: "Not a challenge to Wagner's work, but a setting from an entirely different viewpoint. The Overture has delicate and moving episodes, and bold and stirring climaxes. It is beautifully orchestrated, and there is a reserve about it that augurs well for its longevity."

THE GLASGOW HERALD: "The unfortunate feature of the Overture is the commonness of the ideas at the back of it."

THE WESTERN MORNING NEWS: "Mr. Boughton has broken away from all preconceived notions of what an Overture should be. He has broken all the time-honoured rules, but he has set up in their place a new set of ideas and a new hope for the future of music.

GET IT AND DECIDE FOR YOURSELVES.

Piano Score: Three Shillings net. Full Score and Orchestral Parts on hire.

The Complete Opera, Vocal Score and Chorus Parts, in the Press.

JOSEPH WILLIAMS, LTD., 32, Great Portland Street, London, W.1.

NATIONAL SONGS

WITH DESCANTS

ARRANGED BY

GEOFFREY SHAW.

NOVELLO'S SCHOOL SONGS. Book 271.

SET I.

THE BAY OF BISCAY (English)
A HUNTING WE WILL GO (English)
JOHN PEEL (English)
ALL THROUGH THE NIGHT (Welsh)
SCOTS, WHA HAE (Scottish)
THE OAK AND THE ASH (Scottish)

EARLY ONE MORNING (English)
OH, DEAR! WHAT CAN THE MATTER BE? (English)
THE BRITISH GRENADIERS (English)
THE ASH GROVE (Welsh)
GOOD KING WENCESLAS (Traditional)
THE FIRST NOWELL (Traditional)

JUST PUBLISHED

NOVELLO'S SCHOOL SONGS. Book 275.

SET II.

COME LASSES AND LADS (English)
WI' A HUNDRED PIPERS (Scottish)
DAVID OF THE WHITE ROCK (Welsh)

THE YOUNG MAY MOON (Irish)
THE GOLDEN VANITY (English)
THE FLIGHT OF THE EARLS (Irish)

JUST PUBLISHED.

NOVELLO'S SCHOOL SONGS. Book 276.

SET III.

MEETING OF THE WATERS (Irish)
THERE 'S NAE LUCK (Scottish)
DRINK TO ME ONLY WITH THINE EYES (English)

LET ERIN REMEMBER (Irish)
THE BAILIFF'S DAUGHTER OF ISLINGTON (English)
THE BELLS OF ABERDOVEY (Welsh)

Price Eightpence each Set.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

READY BE, MY SOUL, ALWAY

(MACHE DICH, MEIN GEIST, BEREIT)

CANTATA

(For the Twenty-Second Sunday after Trinity)

FOR FOUR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA.

BY

J. S. BACH.

(Cantata No. 115).

Edited by IVOR ATKINS.

English Text by CHARLES SANFORD TERRY.

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NOVELLO'S EDITIONS

OF THE

FAVOURITE OPERAS

ADAPTED FOR

CONCERT USE.

BALFE.
*THE BOHEMIAN GIRL.
Price 3s.

DONIZETTI.
*THE DAUGHTER OF THE REGIMENT.
Price 3s.

FLOTOW.
*MARTHA.
Price 3s.

GOUNOD.
*FAUST.
Price 2s. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d.

VERDI.
*IL TROVATORE.
Price 3s. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d.

WAGNER.
TANNHÄUSER.
Price 3s.

WALLACE.
MARITANA.
Price 3s.

* Orchestral Parts for Reduced Orchestra may be obtained from the Publishers.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST REPRINTED.

LIFE OF CHOPIN

BY

FREDERICK NIECKS.

Chopin as a Man and Musician, with a Portrait etched by H. R. ROBERTSON, and Facsimiles of the Composer's MS.

Two Vols. Cloth, Gilt. 25*s.* net.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

LONDON TOWN

SONG.

THE WORDS BY

JOHN MASEFIELD.

THE MUSIC BY

EDWARD GERMAN.

IN TWO KEYS.
Price Two Shillings each.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

ON A NANKIN PLATE

SONG.

WORDS BY

AUSTIN DOBSON

MUSIC BY

HARVEY GRACE.

TWO KEYS.

Price Two Shillings each.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

FOUR

TENNYSON LYRICS

SET TO MUSIC BY

PERCY E. FLETCHER.

1. A LULLABY.
2. THE CITY CHILD.
3. THE REIGN OF THE ROSES.
4. THE THROSTLE.

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

No. 100.—NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS.

PRONUNCIATION

FOR

VOICE-PRODUCTION

FROM

EURHYTHM: THOUGHT IN ACTION

BY

H. H. HULBERT.

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

Recent Organ and Church Music

BY

BASIL HARWOOD.

	s.	d.
FANTASIA, "CHRISTMASTIDE"	3	6
RHAPSODY	3	0
IN AN OLD ABBEY	2	0
WEDDING MARCH	2	0
THREE PRELUDES ON ANGLICAN CHANTS	2	0
VOLUNTARY IN D FLAT	2	0
A SHORT AND EASY COMMUNION SERVICE IN E FLAT ... (Voice part only, for Congregational use, 6*d.*)	1	0

ANTHEMS.

GREAT GOD, WHO, HID FROM MORTAL SIGHT (General use)	0	6
O HOW PLENTIFUL IS THY GOODNESS (Harvest) ...	0	6

HYMNS.

LEAD, KINDLY LIGHT (Tune, "Bradfield College") ...	0	2
AUTHOR OF LIFE DIVINE...	0	2

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

COMPOSITIONS FOR THE ORGAN

BY

SIGFRID KARG-ELERT.

	s.	d.
TROIS IMPRESSIONS, Op. 72.
1. Harmonies du Soir...	1	6
2. Clair de Lune	1	6
3. La Nuit	1	6
CHACONNE AND FUGUE TRILOGY WITH CHORAL (2 Trumpets, 2 Trombones, 2 Tubas, Timpani, Tam-tam, and Piatti ad lib.), Op. 73.
Organ Score	7	0
Wind Parts, &c....	3	0
FIRST SONATINA in A minor, Op. 74	5	0
FUNERALE, Op. 75, No. 1	3	0
CHORAL IMPROVISATION on "In dulci jubilo," Op. 75, No. 2	2	3
HOMAGE TO HANDEL. 54 Studies in Variation Form	3	6
CHORAL IMPROVISATION on "Der Hölle Pforten sind zerstört"	2	0
CHORAL IMPROVISATION on "Gelobt sei Gott im höchsten Thron"	2	0
SEVEN PASTELS from "The Lake of Constance"	5	6

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

HOLY COMMUNION IN C, including AGNUS, BENEDICTUS, ETC.

BY HERBERT ROLFE, F.R.C.O.

Third thousand, 9*d.*

"... One of the most pleasing and devotional compositions of its class with which we have met for some time."—Church Review.

"... thoroughly devotional in tone."—Musical News.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

T. MEE PATTISON'S POPULAR CANTATA

THE ANCIENT MARINER

33rd 1,000.

Vocal Score, 2*s.* 6*d.* Choruses only, 1*s.* 3*d.*

Band Parts may be hired.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

JESUS, THE VERY THOUGHT OF THEE.

SACRED SONG.

THE WORDS BY

BERNARD OF CLAIRVAUX,

tr. E. CASWALL.

THE MUSIC BY

ERIC H. THIMAN.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE GOD OF LOVE MY SHEPHERD IS.

SACRED SONG.

THE WORDS BY

GEORGE HERBERT.

THE MUSIC BY

ERIC H. THIMAN.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NO. 101.—NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS.

EAR-TRAINING

INCLUDING

MUSICAL APPRECIATION AND

RHYTHMIC MOVEMENTS

BY

MABEL CHAMBERLAIN.

COMPLETE, SIX SHILLINGS,

Paper Boards, 7*s.*

Or,

In Two Books: Letterpress and Illustrations, 4*s.*

Music only, 3*s.*

The Ear-Training Course outlined in this book is intended primarily for Class use, but if a judicious selection be made from the exercises, the course can be used with equal benefit by private teachers for individual pupils. Senior pupils and students who desire to Study music, and who have received little or no previous tuition, cannot do better than work rapidly through these progressive exercises and tests. A Prospectus will be sent on application.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

REEVES' LIST.

(PUBLISHED AT NET PRICES.)

ELEMENTARY.

ART OF VIOLONCELLO PLAYING. Complete tutor. —By E. van der Straeten. Text in English and French. Just ready. Book 2, 4s.; also Book 1, 3s. 6d. net.

THE STUDENT'S HELMHOLTZ.—Musical Acoustics, or the Phenomena of Sound as Connected with Music. By John Broadhouse. With more than 100 Illustrations. Fourth Edition. Crown 8vo. Just ready, in 2 vols., paper, 3s. 6d. each; Cloth, 8s. 6d. "Any careful reader may obtain so clear an insight into the principles of acoustics, as to enable him not only to pass an examination but to store up a large amount of general knowledge upon the phenomena of sound."—Musical Times.

"'The Student's Helmholtz' will be very useful to many musicians, to whom much in Helmholtz's work must appear obscure. I shall recommend the book whenever an opportunity offers itself."—Dr. Ritter.

EXAMINATION TEST-QUESTIONS.—Containing spaces for the Pupils' Written Answers. By Walter L. Twinning, F.R.C.O. No. 1, Musical Notation and Time, 7d. No. 2, Formation of Scales, 6d. No. 3, Ornament, 7d. No. 4, Intervals, 7d.

THE RUDIMENTS OF GREGORIAN MUSIC.—By Francis Burgess, F.S.A., Scot. Second Impression. Crown 8vo, limp cloth, 1s.; paper covers, 9d.

102 TEST QUESTIONS ON THE GENERAL RUDIMENTS OF MUSIC. In groups of six each lesson, for written or oral use. By Wilson Manhire, F.T.C.L., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., and L.G.S.M. 4d.

THEORY OF MUSIC FOR YOUNG MUSICIANS. With Answers given to all the Questions, and a Dictionary of necessary Musical Terms. By Mary Sharp. Cloth, 1s. 6d.; paper, 1s.

RUDIMENTS OF MUSIC.—Set forth in Graded Questions with Answers, for use of Candidates preparing for the Examinations of R.A.M., R.C.M., and T.C.L. By B. Howarth, L.R.A.M., and A.R.C.M. 1s. 6d. Questions, left-hand page, answers, right hand.

PRIMARY COURSE IN THE RUDIMENTS OF MUSIC, With Hints on Answering Questions (Written Work) for all Examinations in the Primary, Elementary, and Preparatory Grades. By Wilson Manhire, L.R.A.M., &c. 1s.

GUIDE FOR THE YOUNG COMPOSER.—Hints on the Art of Composition, with Examples of Easy Application. By Rev. E. H. Melling, F.R.C.O. Cloth, 2s. 8d.; paper, 1s. 6d.

EXTEMPORISING AT THE PIANO MADE EASY. —A Manual for beginners in Musical Composition. Hints and Aids for the "From Brain to Keyboard" Composer. By Rev. E. H. Melling, F.R.C.O. Limp cloth, 2s. 8d.; paper, 1s. 6d.

MUSICAL FORM.—A Handbook for Instrumental Players and Vocalists. By E. van der Straeten. With Musical Examples, 205 pp., cloth, 4s.; paper, 3s.

The part of the work on Dance Forms gives a history and description of the Suite or Partita, Allemande, Courante, Sarabande, Gigue, Gavotte, &c.

MUSICAL EXPRESSIONS, PHRASES, AND SENTENCES, with their Corresponding Equivalents in French, German, and Italian, By F. Berger, of Guildhall School. Cloth, 3s.; paper, 2s.

ELEMENTARY LESSONS ON SIGHT-SINGING.—Combining the Staff and Tonic Sol-fa Notations. With Music Examples throughout. By J. W. Rossington, L.R.A.M. Cloth, 2s. 6d.; paper, 1s. 6d.

STEPS IN HARMONY.—With Copious Explanatory Examples and Graded Test Exercises. A Handbook for Students. By Dr. Churchill Sibley. With Examples. Boards, 3s. 6d.; paper, 2s. 6d.

600 QUESTIONS, AND 600 EXERCISES IN ELEMENTARY MUSICAL THEORY.—By W. H. Palmer. Cloth, 2s. 6d.; paper covers, 1s. 6d.

ELEMENTARY.

THE HARMONIZING OF MELODIES.—A Text-Book for Students and Beginners. By H. C. Banister. Cloth, 3s.

MUSICAL ANALYSIS.—A Handbook for Students. By H. C. Banister. With Musical Illustrations. Cloth, 3s.; paper covers, 2s.

THE ART OF MODULATING.—A Series of Papers on Modulating at the Pianoforte. By H. C. Banister. With Examples. Limp cloth, 3s.; paper covers, 2s.

MODERN CHORDS EXPLAINED.—(The Tonal Scale in Harmony.) By Arthur G. Potter. Examples from Debussy, R. Strauss, and Granville Bantock. Cloth, 1s. 6d.; paper covers, 1s.

HOW TO COMPOSE.—A Practical Guide to the Composition of all Works within the Lyric Form, and which include the Valse, Gavotte, Mazurka, Polonaise, March, Minuet, and all Ordinary Dance Forms; as also the Nocturne, Impromptu, Berceuse, Rêverie, and Similar Characteristic Pieces. By Edwin Evans, Senior, F.R.C.O. 60 Musical Examples. Cloth, 4s. 6d.; paper, 2s. 6d.

PRONOUNCING DICTIONARY OF MUSICAL TERMS.—By Dr. Dudley Buck. Sixth Edition. Pronunciation of Terms accurately given. Revised. Cloth, 2s.; paper, 9d.

HARMONY, EASILY AND PROGRESSIVELY ARRANGED.—Presenting in a Simple Manner the Elementary Ideas, and Introduction to the Study of Harmony. 300 Musical Examples and Exercises. By P. Colberg. Cloth, 3s.; paper, 1s. 6d.

THE STUDENT'S BOOK OF CHORDS.—By Pascal Needham. 9d.

ELEMENTARY MUSIC.—A Book for Beginners. By Dr. Westbrook. With Questions and Vocal Exercises. Thirteenth Edition. Cloth, 2s.; paper, 1s.

EXERCISES ON GENERAL ELEMENTARY MUSIC. —A Book for Beginners. By K. Paige. Fourth Edition. Part 1, 9d. Part 2, 1s. Complete in Cloth, 2s. 6d.

To R.C.O. and Diploma Candidates.

COMPEND OF MUSICAL KNOWLEDGE.—By Percy Baker, F.R.C.O., L.Mus. T.C.L. A Guide with Notes, Hints, and Articles on the Study of Examination Questions. Cloth, 3s.; paper, 2s.

A FIRST BOOK OF MUSIC FOR BEGINNERS, Embodying Recent English and Continental Teaching. By Alfred Whittingham. Sixth Thousand. Crown 8vo, sewed, 3d.

HOW TO MEMORISE MUSIC.—By C. F. Kenyon. With numerous Musical Examples. Fourth Edition. Cloth, 3s.; paper, 1s. 6d.

HOW TO HARMONIZE MELODIES.—With Hints on Writing for Strings and Pianoforte Accompaniments. By J. Henry Bridger, Mus. Bac. Musical Examples. Cloth, 3s. 6d.

HOW TO WRITE MUSIC IN SHORTHAND.—For Composers, Students of Harmony, Counterpoint, &c. With Specimens from Bach, Handel, Chopin, Wagner, Mendelssohn, Spohr, Mozart, &c. By F. Taylor. 9d.

TRANSPOSITION AT SIGHT.—For Students of the Organ and Pianoforte. By H. E. Nichol. Fourth Edition, with Exercises. Cloth, 2s. 6d.; paper, 1s. 6d.

COUNTERPOINT: A Simple and Intelligible Treatise.—Containing the most Important Rules of all Text-Books, in Catechetical Form. Intended for Beginners. By A. Livingstone Hirst. 1s.

SCHUMANN'S RULES AND MAXIMS FOR YOUNG MUSICIANS. 3d.

LONDON: 83, CHARING CROSS ROAD, W.C.2. (Ask for full List "B.")

"The best and cheapest foundation for school singing."—
Dr. John E. Borland.

TWICE 55 COMMUNITY SONGS

119 Song favourites: patriotic, religious, and sociable, for unison or part singing; convenient size, $5\frac{1}{2} \times 8\frac{1}{2}$ inches.

If, as has been said, good song collections are expensive and cheap ones bad, this one is a notable exception. No better song collection is published at twice the price. The contents have been selected and arranged with the special view to use in schools. Many songs are found that are not contained in similar collections. In use by L.C.C. Schools, Y.M.C.A., Women's Institutes, Boys' Life Brigade, Girl Guides, &c., &c. Special pianoforte accompaniments are not provided, as most of the songs are scored in hymn style. Published in Old Notation only.

PRICE COMPLETE, WORDS AND MUSIC.

6D.

"This is the book so many have been waiting for."—
Rev. Robert R. Hyde,
Director, Industrial Welfare Society.

Send 3d. in stamps for specimen copy.

HAWKES & SON, LONDON
DENMAN STREET - - - PICCADILLY CIRCUS

THE MODERN SUBSTITUTE FOR THE OLD-FASHIONED TUTOR

What the Musical Press and Profession say of "Progressive Steps."

THE MUSICAL TIMES.

"Teachers of beginners will find much sound advice and abundance of excellent material for practice in this book. . . . The book has nothing in common with the old-fashioned 'Tutor.' The exercises . . . . are judiciously planned and contain plenty of variety. . . ."

MUSICAL OPINION.

"'Progressive Steps' is a great help to the learner, having all the material planned and arranged in 'steps.' It treats music as a language, and teaches it accordingly. The work performs its aim of stimulating the student's taste for good music as well as showing him how to master the pianoforte; in a word, it thoroughly fulfils the purpose it sets out to achieve."

THE TIMES EDUCATIONAL SUPPLEMENT.

". . . . The exercises throughout are of an attractive kind. . . . ."

MRS. NORMAN O'NEILL.

"I do not know of any modern instructor for learning the piano which can be compared to Miss Julia O'Neill's 'Progressive Steps.' It is so absolutely complete—so up-to-date. Nothing has been overlooked, not even modern tonalities, and reading at sight has its place. The exercises for the development of finger technique are most ingenious, and the small pieces and duets are very musical and melodious.

"Any young teacher, however inexperienced, cannot fail in training the young to achieve success if she follows carefully all the written instructions step by step.

"It is an admirable and much needed book, and I shall certainly recommend it to teachers.

"If you care to use any of my opinions for publication, I authorise you to do so.

"(Signed) A. O'NEILL
(Mrs. Norman O'Neill, Principal Music Mistress at St. Paul's Girls' School)."

"I need not say (as perhaps you know it) that I am no relation to Miss J. O'Neill. I am absolutely unprejudiced."

PROGRESSIVE STEPS

The Modern Instructor for the Piano. By J. A. O'NEILL.

In Two Books, each Book 2*s.* net. English or Continental Fingering.

Ask your Music Seller to show you Copies of "PROGRESSIVE STEPS" as well as copies of the ROWLAND SERIES OF PIANOFORTE ALBUMS (very easy to medium difficulty). Copies may also be obtained ON APPROVAL from the publishers. A Thematic list of the albums and descriptive leaflet regarding "Progressive Steps" sent free on request.

ROWLAND'S, 10, TALBOT MANSIONS, MUSEUM STREET, LONDON, W.C.1.

CHAMBER MUSIC AND INSTRUMENTAL SOLOS.

A CATALOGUE of over 120 pages would be loaned to anyone interested in above, or a copy could be purchased outright at cost price of 1/-, abroad, 2/-.

EXACTLY WHAT IS OFFERED :—

(a) Pianoforte and Instrumental Sonatas and works for various combinations from Duos to Octets. The lists incorporate the Classics and important Moderns. Over 2,000 different numbers, including many Continental publications now generally unobtainable.

(b) Each work carefully graded as to degree of difficulty, and a readable dissertation for the principal items.

(c) The easiest works known, to the most advanced Salzburg, Venice, and Coolidge Chamber Music festival items.

(d) Solo Works and Studies for PIANOFORTE (includes five pages devoted to Spanish music), VIOLIN, VIOLA, and 'CELLO—special lists free for stamp.

(e) EXCEPTIONAL PRICES ! ! ! Very large purchases often allow me to offer at half those ruling elsewhere.

Finally, the lists have been compiled by one who knows and appreciates the best in this most intimate form of music, and who is always willing to give the benefit of his experience to the first venturer in the Chamber Music Domain, as also to the enthusiastic collector of novelties.

From Iceland to New Zealand is a far cry, yet my despatches are known and give pleasure to numerous ensembles throughout the world.

EDWARD WM. ORGAN (Import and Export),
8, Mayfield Road, Acocks Green, Birmingham (N.)

NOVELLO'S ELEMENTARY MUSIC MANUALS

No.

1.—PART-WRITING FOR BEGINNERS, by J. W. IVIMEY. The Rules tabulated are for the guidance of beginners in the Art of Part-writing. Many of them change from rules to recommendations, when the students become more advanced. Bound in linen covers. Price 8d.

2.—LESSONS IN HARMONIZING MELODIES, by CUTHBERT HARRIS. Many elementary students of harmony can satisfactorily add parts to figured basses, but are unable to harmonize even simple melodies. This book gives minute instruction which any student can understand. Part I. Price 2s. 6d.

3.—AN ELEMENTARY MIXED-VOICE SIGHT-SINGING COURSE (Staff Notation through Tonic Sol-fa), by GEORGE LANE. The Exercises are written in the Treble and Bass Clefs, in order that the Book may be used by Male and Female voices in one class. Suitable for Evening Continuation Schools. Part I. Price 8d.

4.—AN ELEMENTARY MIXED-VOICE SIGHT-SINGING COURSE (Staff Notation through Tonic Sol-fa), by GEORGE LANE. Part II. Price 8d.

5.—HINTS TO YOUNG VIOLINISTS, by C. EGERTON LOWE. Price 1s. 6d.

6.—LESSONS IN HARMONIZING MELODIES, by CUTHBERT HARRIS. Part II. Price 2s. 6d.

7.—ADDITIONAL EXERCISES IN HARMONIZING MELODIES, by CUTHBERT HARRIS. Price 8d.

8.—HINTS ON PIANOFORTE TEACHING (chiefly to Boys), by E. D. RENDALL. Price 2s. 6d.

9.—SCHOOL CHOIR TRAINING, by MARGARET NICHOLLS. A Practical Course of Lessons on Voice Production for the guidance of Teachers of Class Singing. Price 3s.
(The Appendix, published separately : Hints on Part-Singing and Exercises, 3d. ; Sol-fa, 3d.)

10.—THE COMPOSITION OF SIMPLE MELODIES, by ROBERT T. WHITE. Price 2s. 6d.

11.—PHYSICAL EXERCISES IN THE INFANT SCHOOL, by MARGATET A. HUGHES. Price 4s. 6d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

TWENTY SHORT AND EASY PIECES
FOR THE ORGAN

SET VI.

No.
1.	ADAGIO FROM SEXTETT (Op. 81)	Beethoven
2.	ALLEGRO GRANDIOSO	Hugh Blair
3.	LARGO IN E FLAT	E. Bunnett
4.	MODERATO	George Calkin
5.	BERCEUSE	César Cui
6.	ADAGIO IN D	Otto Dienel
7.	POSTLUDE	Edmondstoune Duncan
8.	IMPROMPTU IN A	A. M. Goodhart
9.	WEDDING MARCH	A. Guilmant
10.	MARCH FROM "ODE ON ST. CECILIA'S DAY"	Handel
11.	LIEDER OHNE WORTE, No. 9	F. Mendelssohn-Bartholdy
12.	ALLEGRO IN C	Gustav Merkel
13.	ANDANTE	Reissiger
14.	POSTLUDE IN F	J. Varley Roberts
15.	PRELUDE	B. Luard-Selby
16.	PRELUDE IN A	Henry Smart
17.	ANDANTE CON MOTO	Charles Steggall
18.	ALLEGRETTO GRAZIOSO	Berthold Tours
19.	COMMUNION IN B FLAT	Ferris Tozer
20.	CON MOTO	John E. West

Price Four Shillings.
Cloth, Six Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

No. 102.—NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS.

THE INSTRUMENTS OF THE ORCHESTRA

BY

JOHN E. BORLAND

WITH ILLUSTRATIONS.

This is not a treatise on Instrumentation, but is a booklet intended to help listeners to the Orchestra to become familiar with the appearance and the sound of the chief instruments. It deals a little also with the technique of the instruments; that is to say, with the means of producing and controlling their sounds, but is in no sense a text-book for orchestral players.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

TWELVE INTROITS OR SHORT ANTHEMS

SET 2.

No.
1.	GIVE EAR UNTO MY PRAYER	Jacques Arcadelt
2.	WE WAIT FOR THY LOVING-KINDNESS	Philip Armes
3.	THE SACRIFICES OF GOD	Hugh Blair
4.	ALMIGHTY GOD, WHO HAST ME BROUGHT	Thomas Ford
5.	SET YOUR AFFECTIONS	Alfred R. Gaul
6.	O GOD, WHOSE NATURE AND PROPERTY	Alan Gray
7.	REND YOUR HEART	F. A. Gore Ouseley
8.	COME, LET US WORSHIP	Palestrina
9.	BEHOLD, GOD IS MY HELPER	John Stainer
10.	I WILL LAY ME DOWN IN PEACE	Arthur S. Sullivan
11.	O GOD OF BETHEL	Christopher Tye
12.	BLESSED ARE THEY	S. S. Wesley

Price One Shilling.
Each Introit may be had separately.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

MUSIC
TO
THE LITTLE MINISTER
BY
A. C. MACKENZIE.

OVERTURE.

	s.	d.
String Parts	6	9
Wind Parts (Full Orchestra)	14	8
,, ,, (Small Orchestra)	MS.
Pianoforte Conductor (Just published)	3	0

THREE DANCES.

String Parts	6	9
Wind Parts (Full Orchestra)	16	3
,, ,, (Small Orchestra)	10	5
Pianoforte Conductor (Just published)	4	0

London: Novello and Company, Limited.

SCHOOL MARCHES
FOR PIANOFORTE SOLO
BOOK III.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

CONTENTS.

Arrival of the Visitors	H. Hofmann
Bright and Buxom Lasses, from "Martha"	Flotow
Instrumental Band, The	Percy E. Fletcher
Little March, A	J. D. Davis
March from "Egmont"	Beethoven
March from "St. Polycarp"	F. A. G. Ouseley
March	Th. Kullak
March from "Tannhäuser"	Wagner
Marching off to Bed	Myles B. Foster
March of Priests, from "The Magic Flute"	Mozart
Soldiers' Chorus, from "Il Trovatore"	Verdi
Toy Soldiers' March	Tschaïkowsky

London: Novello and Company, Limited.

A Remarkable New Work on Singing

THE MELBA METHOD

DAME MELBA'S
Personal Advice on
The Art of Singing

PUBLISHED at the climax of a wonderful career Dame Melba's description of her Method of Voice Production and Singing is of outstanding importance to every vocal teacher and student.

This historic work unfolds the principles which have made Melba's voice so flawless in its purity, such a miracle of flexibility, and so perfect in its preservation.

"The Melba Method" is so lucid and so practical that teachers and students can watch every step of Melba's Work, and understand how her wonderful voice has become what it is.

All the chit-chat of the average "celebrity" has been avoided in this book. Instead, Dame Melba takes the student into the very workshop of her art, and shows why and how each principle is applied; covering every essential point with the clarity which comes only from those who really understand the art of singing.

To possess this book is to own a memento of this great artist, and to gain the advice of a singer whose name will be conjured with for generations to come.

COMPLETE, PRICE SIX SHILLINGS NET.
(By Post, 6*s.* 6*d.*)

CHAPPELL & CO., LTD., 50, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON, W.1.
NEW YORK AND SYDNEY.

NOW READY. A UNIQUE EDITION.

MODESTE MOUSSORGSKY

BORIS GODOUNOV

COMPLETE VOCAL SCORE.

STRICTLY IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE ORIGINAL VERSION

(Russian, French, and English words.)

French version by ROBERT GODET and ALOYS MOOSER

English Version by M. C. H. COLLET.

With numerous illustrations, including a series of portraits of the composer (some hitherto absolutely unknown) and his friends.

PRICE THIRTY SHILLINGS NET.

J. & W. CHESTER, LTD., 11, Great Marlborough St., London, W.1.

London:—Printed by NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited, at Novello Works, Soho and published at 160, Wardour Street, Soho, W.1. Friday, October 1, 1926.

No. 1005

THE MUSICAL TIMES

Price 6d.

FOUNDED 1844

NOVEMBER 1, 1926

SPENCER

Once you have played on a Spencer, you'll understand why nearly 81,000 Models have already been sold. Every Spencer is fully warranted and will last a lifetime.

New Overstrung Uprights from Sixty Guineas. For fullest details write to Murdoch's, The Great Piano House, 461/463 Oxford Street, London, West One . . .

Illustrated Art Catalogue Free

PIANOS

REC. NOV 20 1926 B. P. L.

ARCHIBALD RAMSDEN, LTD.

Pianoforte Merchants.

Established 1864.

SCHIEDMAYER PIANOS.

Sole IMPORTERS of the

BEULHOFF PIANOS

also the horizontal Grand Pianos, manufactured by

BORD

PARIS.

65, Wigmore Street, London. 12, Park Row, Leeds.

Branch Establishments at Scarborough, Doncaster, Darlington, and Middlesbrough.

The Great English Piano.

ALLISON
PIANOS LIMITED

LEIGHTON ROAD, KENTISH TOWN, N.W.5.
Telephone: NORTH 1660.
— AND —
Telephone: LANGHAM 1418.
60, WIGMORE STREET, LONDON, W.1.

ESTEY ORGANS
ESTEY PIANOS

ONLY ONE GRADE OF EACH.
THE HIGHEST POSSIBLE.
Largest Stock of Organs in the World.

DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE POST FREE. CORRESPONDENCE INVITED.

Telephone: Museum 1317. Telegrams: "ESTEY WESTCENT, LONDON."

Estey Organ Co.
- 12 -
RATHBONE PLACE,
OXFORD STREET,
LONDON, W.1.

IMPORTANT COPYRIGHT NOTICE.

BIZET'S CELEBRATED OPERA

CARMEN

N.B.—No English Version of the above opera, or separate numbers, is permitted to be published except by arrangement with the owners of the copyright, Messrs. Metzler & Co. (1920), Ltd., 142, Charing Cross Road, W.C.2.

Permission to perform Henry Hersee's or Herman Klein's text of the complete opera, or Hersee's Concert Version, must be obtained from Metzler & Co. Permission to sing separate numbers (Hersee or Klein text) must be obtained from the Performing Right Society, 13, George Street, Portman Square, W.1.

Complete Vocal Score, 8s. net (Hersee or Klein Text).
Chorus Parts (complete opera) („ „ „), 4s. net.
Concert Edition (Hersee Text only), 6s. net.
(Lasting 2¼ hours.)
Concert Edition, Chorus Parts, 2s. 6d. net.
(Tonic Sol-fa and Old Notation combined.)
Libretti (all above Editions). 1s. net each.

METZLER & CO. (1920), Ltd., 142, Charing Cross Road, London, W.C.2.

(ESTABLISHED 1788.)

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

FOUNDED IN 1844

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST OF EVERY MONTH

No. 1,005—Vol. 67.
Registered at the General Post Office for Canadian Postage.

NOVEMBER 1 1926

Price 6d.; Postage, 2d.
Annual Subscription, post-free, 7s. 6d.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

FIFTY-SIXTH SEASON, 1926-1927.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 20, at 2.30 p.m.

REQUIEM - - - - - - VERDI

MISS STILES-ALLEN.
MISS OLGA HALEY.
MR. TUDOR DAVIES.
MR. NORMAN ALLIN.

Conductor - DR. MALCOLM SARGENT.

DOUBLE CHORUS OF 850 VOICES.
THE ROYAL ALBERT HALL ORCHESTRA
At the Organ - MR. R. ARNOLD GREIR.

Stalls, 10s. 6d.; Arena, 7s. 6d.; Balcony (Reserved), 5s.: Unreserved, 3s. 6d.; Gallery (Promenade), 2s.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W.1.
Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.
President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT AND STRATHEARN, K.G.
Principal:
JOHN B. MCEWEN, M.A., Mus.D., F.R.A.M., F.R.C.M.

MICHAELMAS HALF-TERM begins 1st November.

CHAMBER CONCERTS, Duke's Hall, November 1st and 17th, at 3 p.m.

ORCHESTRAL CONCERT, Queen's Hall (Sole Lessees: Chappell & Co., Ltd.), 23rd November, at 3 p.m. Conductor: Sir Henry J. Wood, Mus.D., F.R.A.M.

L.R.A.M. Entries for the CHRISTMAS EXAMINATION will be accepted up to 12th November, on payment of a late fee of 5s.

A. ALGER BELL, Acting Secretary.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

PRINCE CONSORT ROAD, SOUTH KENSINGTON, S.W.7.

Patrons: { HIS MAJESTY THE KING
HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.
Director: SIR HUGH P. ALLEN, C.V.O., M.A., Mus.Doc., D.Litt.
Honorary Secretary: GEORGE A. MACMILLAN, Esq., D.Litt.
Registrar: CLAUDE AVELING, Esq., M.A.
Bursar: E. J. N. POLKINHORNE, Hon. R.C.M.

The College offers a Complete Course of Musical Education to pupils of both sexes, both professional and amateur. Upwards of seventy Scholarships and Exhibitions are founded which provide free musical education.

Classes for Score Reading, Conducting, Training of Teachers, Musical Criticism, and Ballet, are held at the College.

The OPERA CLASS has the use of the fully-equipped College OPERA THEATRE, with SUNKEN ORCHESTRA.

EXAMINATIONS for Associateship of the College (A.R.C.M.), in all subjects, held three times a year, in April, September, and December. Syllabus and all particulars may be obtained from the Registrar of the College.

MR. HERBERT HODGE will give an Organ Recital (1,925th) at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, E.C., on November 2nd, and every Tuesday at 1 p.m.

Guildhall School of Music.

(Founded in 1880 by the Corporation of London, and managed by the Music Committee.)

VICTORIA EMBANKMENT, E.C.4.

PRINCIPAL: SIR LANDON RONALD, F.R.A.M., F.R.C.M., &c.

PRIVATE Lessons in any single Musical Subject, and STAGE TRAINING in Elocution, Gesture, Dancing, Opera; Classes in Conducting.

Complete Musical Education at inclusive fees, £9 9s. and £12 12s. Opera Class, Saturdays. Special Training Course for Teachers (approved by Teachers' Registration Council).

Prospectus and Syllabus of Local Centres and Schools Examinations (open to general public) free.

H. SAXE WYNDHAM, Secretary.

Telephone: Cent. 4459; and City 5566.

The Royal College of Organists.

The SOLO-PLAYING TESTS for the next F.R.C.O. EXAMINATION are:

Trio in C minor, J. S. Bach. (Novello, Book 12, page 108; Augener, page 1173; Peters, Old Edition, Vol. 9, No. 7; New Edition, Vol. 9, No. 9).

Fantasy Prelude, Charles Macpherson. No. 21 of Recital Series. Edited by E. H. Lemare. (Novello.)

Andante from a Pianoforte Duet, Mozart. Arrangements for the Organ by J. Stainer, No. 2. (Novello.) (New and Revised Edition only.)

The 10 selected pieces and the book set for the Essay for the January, 1927, A.R.C.O. Examination, are the same as those set for July, 1926.

All Candidates for the next Examinations must send in their names for Fellowship by December 9th, for Associateship by December 16th. In the case of NEW MEMBERS, proposal forms, duly filled up, must be sent in before December 2nd. No names will be entered after the above dates.

Regulations, List of College Publications, Lectures, &c., may be had on application.

Examples indicating the character and approximate difficulty of the NEW TESTS, set for the first time at the July, 1924, Examinations, may be obtained at the College. Associateship or Fellowship, 6d. each (post free).

The College is open daily from 10 to 4: Saturdays, 10 to 1.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Secretary.

Kensington Gore, S.W.7

ROYAL
MANCHESTER COLLEGE OF MUSIC

Founded 1893. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1923.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF YORK, K.G.
Principal: DR. ADOLPH BRODSKY.
Registrar: STANLEY WITHERS, M.A.

Students are required to enter upon a complete course of Musical instruction, and are not admitted for a shorter period than one year.

Fee for the year, £36. Special fee for Organ Course, £30, and for Wind Instrument Course, £18.

Systematic Course for the training of Teachers, approved by Teachers' Registration Council.

The Prospectus, with Scholarship information, Diploma Regulations, and Entry Forms, on application.

New Pianoforte Professor, Mr. CLAUD BIGGS.

New Professor of Singing, Miss MARGUERITE SWALE.

96 & 95, WIMPOLE STREET, W.1.

TOBIAS MATTHAY PIANOFORTE SCHOOL

Instruction under his teachers, and under his own supervision.

Open to Professionals and Amateurs, and also to Children.

The Staff consists of thirty-nine senior Professors of thorough experience and platform reputation, all trained by the founder.

Special Short Courses for Teachers during term and vacation.

LECTURE-LESSON CLASS by Mr. MATTHAY on the practical teaching of Technique and Interpretation, diagnosis and correction of faults, musical analysis and synthesis, &c., alternate Wednesday evenings.

COMPLETE TRAINING COURSE FOR TEACHERS.
(Approved by the Teachers' Registration Council.)

This ONE-YEAR Course may be joined at the beginning of ANY TERM.

For further particulars please apply, Mrs. MARION COLE, Secretary.

BIRMINGHAM & MIDLAND INSTITUTE
SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Visitor ... Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M., Mus. Doc., LL.D.
Director ... GRANVILLE BANTOCK, M.A., D. Mus. (Ed.).

SESSION 1925-1926.

The Season consists of AUTUMN TERM (September 22 to December 20); WINTER TERM (January 14 to April 11); SUMMER TERM (April 20 to July 4).

Instruction in all branches of Music, Students' Orchestra, Chamber Music, Students' Rehearsals, and Concerts.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from—
H. M. FRANCIS, Secretary.
Paradise Street, Birmingham.

MANCHESTER SCHOOL OF MUSIC.
16, ALBERT SQUARE.

Founder (1892): J. A. CROSS
Late Principal (1897-1925): ALBERT J. CROSS, A.R.A.M.
Director: LEOPOLD H. CROSS, M.A.

The oldest Institution in Manchester devoted solely to the interests of music.

All branches of Music taught. Day and evening Private Lessons. Opera Class. Full Orchestral Class. Intermediate and Elementary String Orchestras, Classes for Ensemble Playing, Elocution, Choral Singing, Harmony, Aural Training, &c. Single Subjects taught.

New Pianoforte Professor:

MR. ROBERT GREGORY.

Mr. Gregory was Professor of the Pianoforte in Vienna for many years, having studied there under the eminent Leschetitzky, teacher of PADEREWSKI.

Prospectus from the Secretary, 16, Albert Square.

LONDON SCHOOL OF SINGING.
20a, Henrietta Street, Cavendish Square, W.1.

President: A. NETTLEFOLD.

Principal: DAVID GODELL.

Complete training in all subjects for the Vocalist, Professional and Amateur. Evening Lessons. Particulars from Secretary. Mayfair 3819.

THE
LEONARD BORWICK OPEN PIANOFORTE SCHOLARSHIP (NORTHAMPTON).

THE EXAMINATION for this SCHOLARSHIP will take place at the SCHOOL OF MUSIC, NORTHAMPTON, on SATURDAY, DECEMBER 11. Examiners:
Mr. HAROLD SAMUEL and Mr. H. PLUNKET GREENE.
Last day of entry, NOVEMBER 27.

Full particulars can be obtained from Miss Mary Beasley, School of Music, 27, The Drapery, Northampton.

GLASGOW
ATHENÆUM SCHOOL OF MUSIC.
SESSION 1926-27.

The Session consists of Three Terms: September 13 to December 4, December 6 to March 12, and March 14 to June 11.

Complete Musical Curriculum. Day and Evening Classes. Single Subjects taught.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from:
STUART S. FORSYTH, Secretary,
ATHENÆUM BUILDINGS, GLASGOW.

THE ASSOCIATED BOARD
OF THE R.A.M. AND THE R.C.M.
FOR LOCAL EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

LOCAL CENTRE EXAMINATIONS (SYLLABUS A).
Written Examinations held in March and November at all centres. Practical Examinations in March-April and November-December at all Centres. Entries for the March-April Examinations close Wednesday, February 9th, 1927.

"SCHOOL" EXAMINATIONS (SYLLABUS B).
Held throughout the British Isles three times a year, viz., March-April, June-July, and October-November. Entries for the March-April Examinations close Wednesday, February 2nd, 1927.

ELOCUTION EXAMINATIONS will be held at certain fixed centres in March-April, June-July, and October-November each year. For full particulars see special Elocution Syllabus.

The Board offers annually SIX EXHIBITIONS tenable at The R.A.M. or The R.C.M. for Two or Three Years.

Syllabuses A and B, Elocution Syllabus, Entry Forms, and any further information, may be obtained post-free from:
THE SECRETARY, 14 & 15, Bedford Square, London, W.C.1.

LONDON SOCIETY OF ORGANISTS.
FOUNDED 1913.

PRESIDENT FOR 1926: HARVEY GRACE, F.R.C.O.

Organists, Assistant-Organists, and Choirmasters of all denominations are eligible. Register of vacant appointments.

Particulars and application to the Hon. Sec., DR. J. WARRINER, De Crespigny House, Denmark Hill, S.E.5.

PAPER WORK BY MUS. B., F.R.C.O.
OVER 1,100 SPECIMEN WORKINGS.

"Your lessons and ideas splendid."
"Your excellent models make my attempts look cold."

RECENT SUCCESSES,
including the only pupil sent up, January, 1925.

2s. 6d. per lesson and postage.

"E. B.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

THE LONDON COLLEGE FOR CHORISTERS.
6 and 7, BLOMFIELD CRESCENT, PADDINGTON, W.2.
Founder: Mr. JAMES BATES.

Solo Boys and Chorus Boys supplied at short notice for Church Services, &c. Telephone: Paddington 5990. Sec., ARTHUR G. BATES.

WIGMORE HALL STUDIOS.—These splendidly appointed Studios are the recognised centre of the best musical activities in London. Forty-five rooms. Grand Piano in every room. Lift, telephone, and every comfort and convenience. Low inclusive rates. One morning or afternoon per week the minimum time arranged for. Apply, 38, Wigmore Street, W.1.

MUSICAL EDUCATION is admittedly incomplete without such a knowledge of Harmony as will furnish the means for understanding music in respect of Chords, Ornaments, Keys, Modulations, and Phrases.

Text-Book Harmony is only concerned with Figured Basses, and the accompaniment of simple melodies. The more generally needed use of Harmony for purposes of analysis and interpretation will be found set forth in simple and easily understood language in the 112 pages of

HARMONY FOR PIANISTS,

or Harmony in Pianoforte Idiom without written exercises.

By DR. PERCY RIDEOUT, D. Mus. Lond.

A Course of Ten Correspondence Lessons, and Examination Papers.

For further particulars call or write:
THE CHARLES A. GILLETT Pianoforte School,
11, South Molton Street, Bond Street, London, W.1.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W.1.
Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.
President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, K.G.
Principal:
JOHN B. McEWEN, M.A., Mus. D. Oxon., F.R.A.M., F.R.C.M.

LICENTIATESHIP EXAMINATION.

SEPTEMBER, 1926.

The following CANDIDATES were SUCCESSFUL:

SINGING.

As TEACHERS: Doris Marjory Goodwin, Daisy Janey Keeble, Elsie Grace Kettle, Dora Lewin, Harold Charles May.

As PERFORMERS: Maud Bostock, Marjorie Clayton, Letitia Mary Cooke, Hilda Dobbs, Elizabeth Mary Forsselius, Margaret Tatman Godley, Frederic James Griffiths, Caroline Hilda Agnes Harris, Jenny Hart, Jacques Ernest Hopkins, Carrie Hicks Kellow, Noreen Mabel Brabazon Noble, Florence Eva Pilling, E. Dora Rhodes, Maisie Scholes, Juliet Elizabeth Sladden, Muriel Evelyn Weight.

EXAMINERS: Miss Ethel Bilsland, F. Percival Driver, Thomas Meux, Marcus Thomson.

PIANOFORTE.

As TEACHERS: Henry Adkins, Ena G. Anholm, Muriel Arrowsmith, Constance Irene Aughton, Marion Joyce Avery, Margaret Elsie Bagguley, Josef Barer, Florence Mildred Bennett, Kathleen Mary Blocksidge, Marjorie Bottomley, Lilian E. Bright, Eileen M. Brown, George Randall Brown, Iris Patricia Burton, Doris Grace Chivers, Maud Clements, Agnes Jeannie Clough, Dorothy Fox Cole, Ella Mary Elizabeth Collins, Jean Isobel Marguerite Corrie, Muriel Margaret Cree, Zoë Rosemary Cubitt, Dorothy Mary Hughes Davies, Margaret Inglis Duncan, John Edmunds, Audrey Manson Elbourne, Marjorie Matilda Essam, Bessie Field, Beatrice Evelyn Flatman, Mabel Foot, Margaret Helen Gadsby, Diana Gibson, Nelis Wilhelmina Greig, Arthur Lionel Harris, Doris Irene Harrison, Ella Doreen Harvey, Gladys Mary Robertson Henderson, Norah Hird, Beatrice van Houten, Doris Muriel Hurley, Edith Shirley Hutchins, Phoebe Ingleson, Beatrice Mary Margaret Jewell, Elsie Frances Jones, Gwendolen Muriel Jones, Mary Lee, Gwyneth Marion Lewis, Vera Sophia Linton, Margaret Lott, Muriel Middleton, Evelyn Millard, Lizzie Miller, Annie Mary Ruth Morgan, Dorothy Joan Neachell, Winifred May Neave, Frieda Clara Noake, Frances Noëlle Osmond, Muriel Edith Palmer, David Ewart Parry-Williams, Ruth Amy Pigrome, Fred Poetzsch, Nita Louise Richards, Doris Winifred Roe, Annie Rosborough, Esther Margaret Salmon, Kathleen Mary Salmon, Gladys Scott, Ruby Winifred Ford Seddon, Winifred Segust, Preti Sheila Sen, Hilda Gertrude Singleton, Bert Slee, Kathleen Ethel Snell, Alice Lilian Stacey, Florence Muriel Stewart, Eudora Tabb, Edwin Francis Tanner, Enid Marjorie Tasker, Stanley Frank Thurlow, Mabel Knightly Tompkins, Lenora Frances Walker, Elsie Amelia Charlotte Wall, Mary Lonsdale Watkinson, Freda Priscilla Wellings-Harmer, Mary Westlake, Kathleen E. Wharram, Mary Irene White, Pauline Mary Nash Whitlow, Annie Frances Wilkins, Millicent M. Ennor Williams, Virginie Williams, Aileen A. Williamson, Judith Eleanor Willis, Winifred May Woodham, Isa Kathleen Wright, Phyllis Amy Wright, Jessie Zuckerman.

As PERFORMERS: Mary Greenwood, Donald Hargreaves, Koa Oliver (Easter, 1926).

EXAMINERS: Carlo Albanesi, Victor G. Booth, York Bowen, Ambrose Coviello, Harold Craxton, Welton Hickin, Thomas B. Knott, Vivian Langrish, John Pauer, Claude F. Pollard, Felix Swinstead, Lawrance Taylor, Egerton Tidmarsh, Cuthbert Whitemore.

ORGAN.

Stephen Burrowes O'Callaghan.

EXAMINERS: Stanley Marchant, Mus. D., Oxon., Reginald Steggall, Walter S. Vale.

ORCHESTRAL INSTRUMENTS.

VIOLIN.—As TEACHERS: Vera Colenbrander, Gladys Fountain, Noel Vavasor Hale, Noreen Mabel Brabazon Noble, Doris Ellen Parker, Gertrude Kathleen Salter, Valeska Witt.

As PERFORMER: Julius Ungerson.

CLARINET.

As PERFORMER: Lionel John Maiden.

EXAMINERS: Charles Draper, Spencer Dyke, James T. Lockyer, B. Patterson Parker, Lionel Tertis, Charles Woodhouse.

AURAL TRAINING and SIGHT-SINGING.

Marjorie Hilda Bonnin, Arthur Goodchild, Katharine Frances Tower.

EXAMINERS: A. J. Greenish, Mus. D., Cantab., Ernest Read, Frederick G. Shinn, Mus. D., Dunelm.

VOICE CULTURE and CLASS SINGING.

Kathleen Patricia McCabe, Jessie Wilson.

EXAMINERS: Stewart Macpherson, Stanley Marchant, Mus. D., Oxon., Ernest Read.

ELOCUTION.

As TEACHERS: Greta Fullerton, Hedley Goodall, Joyce Elton Holder, Beryl Nugent Oldrey, Christine Mary Pocock, Kathleen Marjorie Schenck, Jane Stoker, Eileen Gordon Thompson.

As PERFORMERS: Norah M. Lynch, Jacoba L. A. Punt, Marian Edith Spencer.

EXAMINERS: Acton Acton-Bond, Wilton Cole, Cecil Martin, Constance Newell, Katie Thomas.

A. ALGER BELL, Acting Secretary.

IF MEMORISING IS YOUR WEAKNESS

do not hesitate to send for my Free descriptive Book on this all-absorbing subject. Think what a tremendous asset it is to be able to play from memory any piece which is within your technical capabilities.

Imagine how gratifying it would be to be able to sit down at the Piano — or take up the Violin—and rattle off half-a-dozen pieces from memory! No more need for that disappointing excuse about having "left your music at home."

If you are a Pianist — Violinist — 'Cellist — Organist—I guarantee to give you this fascinating ability—to teach you by my short correspondence Course to play from memory with ease, certainty, and perfect confidence.

The Master-Method OF Memory-Playing

NO KNOWLEDGE OF HARMONY REQUIRED.
REPETITION ELIMINATED.
SUCCESS GUARANTEED.

POST COUPON FOR FREE BOOK.

(Unsealed envelope, ½d. stamp only.)

MR. REGINALD C. FOORT, F.R.C.O.,
19, BEACON HOUSE, HEMSTAL ROAD,
LONDON, N.W.6.

Please send me, free and post free, a copy of your Book, "The Master-Method of Memory-Playing." I play the Piano, Violin, 'Cello, Organ, and am a Beginner, Intermediate, Advanced Player. (Cross out which do not apply to you.)

Name.....
(Mr., Mrs., or Miss.)

Address.....

(4) .....

TO ALL PIANISTS

This pupil after five lessons plays with confidence music he could not even hope to play a year ago.

"The Ferns," Finedon, Northants.
August 23rd, 1926.

Dear Mr. Smith,

I enclose herewith my last report and shall be obliged if you will now forward the final lesson.

I am very satisfied with the result of the exercises you have given me. My hands are both stronger and more supple, and I can play with comparative ease and sureness things I could not even hope to do twelve months ago, such as the two Cadenzas in Liszt's No. 3 Liebestraum.

Thank you very much for your kindness and attention.

Yours faithfully,

Reginald Underwood

MANY eminent musicians, including the late Sir Frederick Bridge, have used and highly recommended my System — the ORIGINAL POSTAL SYSTEM. No apparatus or special music necessary—just an easily acquired method with much better and quicker results.

20,000 Successful Pupils.

MY illustrated book, "Light on Pianoforte Playing," will be gladly sent to any Pianist. It fully explains the principles and advantages of the methods used in the System. When applying, please do not omit to state whether an Average or Advanced Pianist. The book will be sent free of charge and post free.

M. MACDONALD SMITH, 19 BLOOMSBURY SQUARE, LONDON, W.C.1

CAN YOU PLAY FROM MEMORY?

THE

Mackinnon Musical Memory Course

ENSURES

PERFECT MEMORY FOR PIANISTS

IN SIX POSTAL LESSONS.

SUCCESS IS GUARANTEED.
TECHNIQUE IS IMPROVED.
NERVOUSNESS IS BANISHED.

A Pupil writes: "I have benefited much from the Course both in playing and memorising, and I feel that it has been well worth the money."—Nottingham, 20/8/26.

This is only one of the hundreds of unsolicited testimonials received.

The Course is recommended by many famous musicians, including—

MYRA HESS. SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY. MAURICE BESLY.
IRENE SCHARRER. IVAN PHILLIPOWSKY. ADRIAN BOULT.

Write to-day (mentioning Musical Times) for free booklet giving particulars, testimonials, and guarantee to

MISS LILIAS MACKINNON,
1, PAULTONS SQUARE, CHELSEA, LONDON, S.W.3.

Miss Mackinnon will give a Scriabin Recital at Wigmore Hall, on Tuesday, December 7th.

CORRESPONDENCE COACHING FOR EXAMINATIONS.

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING

Mus. Doc. (Lond.)., L.R.A.M.

THIS MONTH'S SPECIAL COURSES.

1.—A.R.C.M. and L.R.A.M., Xmas.
Rudiments and Harmony.
Form and Teaching.
Vivâ voce Work.

2.—Mus. Bac. & Mus. Doc., Lond., December, 1926.

3.—1st Mus. Bac., Durham, March, 1927.

4.—A. & F.R.C.O., January, 1927.

NUMEROUS SUCCESSES AT FIRST ATTEMPT
IN
Final Mus. Doc.; Mus. Doc. "Exercise"; Final Mus. Bac.; Mus. Bac. "Exercise"; Inter. Mus. Bac.; A. & L. Mus. T.C.L.; A. & L.T.C.L.; A. & F.R.C.O.; L.R.A.M. & A.R.C.M.

Candidates who are entering for the first time, and also those who have previously failed to pass any examination, should communicate with

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING,
46, CLARENDON ROAD,
REDLAND, BRISTOL.

Telephone: Bristol 3033.

"MASTERY OF THE KEYBOARD."
C. PALMER.

SIGHT-READING LESSONS.

COMPLETE COURSE OF SIX POSTAL LESSONS.

PRESS EXTRACTS.

The Times: "Deals with the subject systematically from the first stage."

Musical Times: "The idea is so simple and practical that we wonder it has not been dealt with systematically long ago."

Music: "Mr. Denham goes fully and thoroughly into his subject from every possible standpoint. Cannot fail to be of service.

Aberdeen Press and Journal: "The scarcity of good sight-readers, and even among capable pianists, is proof of the need for a more systematised form of training than obtains at present, and Mr. Denham's system has the double advantage of being both simple and practical."

Personal Lessons if desired.

GEORGE DENHAM, L.R.A.M., ETC.,
41, AVONDALE ROAD, S. CROYDON; AND 32, WIGMORE STREET, W.1.

PIANO PEDALS, with Octave Coupler

This wonderful invention supersedes all Piano Pedals, and is a Master Patent

St. George's Hall, Liverpool,
9th April, 1921.

"The simplicity of the attachment, and the clever sixteen-feet, eight-feet, or both combined, 'OPTIONAL OCTAVE' contrivance astonished me.

"I was delighted with the Pedal touch and with the variety in that touch, which your Attachment makes possible. It is very responsive to the movements of the feet, and is reliable."

HERBERT F. ELLINGFORD, Mus. Bac., Oxon., F.R.C.O.

Owing to increased output, we have reduced the price of our Popular Model to 14 guineas cash. Deferred payments if desired.

Write for Lists, Prices, and Clients' Opinions, and References to

THE MALKIN PATENT PEDAL CO., LTD.,

NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME.

London address: 11, Ashlake Road, Streatham, S.W.16.

APPLIED WEIGHT TOUCH

The final test of a method lies in the results it can produce. The very large number of letters of appreciation received afford ample proof of the value of the Charles A. Gillett Correspondence lessons in Modern Pianoforte Playing, and that pianists do find in this teaching a solution of their individual difficulties.

INCONTROVERTIBLE EVIDENCE.

Mus. Doc., Oxon., F.R.C.O., writes:
"I do think your 'School' is so excellent. The thoroughness and lucidity with which you treat every detail of pianoforte playing are amazing, and one can have no possible doubt that the principles you put forward are the correct and fundamental ones for which we have sought so painfully in years gone by."

Mus. Doc., Dunelm., F.R.C.O., writes:
"I have found your course most helpful, and I have personally derived great benefit from your instructions."

Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O., writes, from Canada:
"I am securing some considerably valuable ideas from the course."

PERSONAL LESSONS AND CONSULTATIONS DAY AND EVENING.

Mus. Bac., Dunelm., F.R.C.O., writes:
"I certainly have gained much advantage from your course, and feel thankful I started it."

Mus. Bac., Dunelm., A.R.C.O., writes:
"The lesson on Memorising is excellent, and has proved just what I wanted in this subject, and has helped me greatly. I have already memorised several short pieces quite perfectly, and by persevering with it, according to your instructions, shall soon have quite a number of pieces fixed in my mind."

Mus. Bac., Dunelm., F.T.C.L., writes:
"I am applying your method with my pupils' work, and find they are keenly interested in it. The practice of the exercises makes one long to get more and more time with them."

THE COURSE CONSISTS OF TWELVE LUCID AND PRACTICAL CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS WITH FREE POSTAL CONSULTATIONS SHOWING HOW AND WHY THE PRINCIPLES OF RELAXATION AND WEIGHT TOUCH ARE APPLIED TO ALL PHASES OF PIANOFORTE PLAYING.

The fees are quite moderate, and may be paid by instalments if desired.

Full particulars with explanatory booklet, synopsis and testimonials, will be sent free to all bona fide inquirers. Write to-day, naming one or two pieces you play and your individual difficulties. If you prefer to call and discuss the lessons with Mr. Gillett, by all means do so.

WRITE OR CALL. THE CHARLES A. GILLETT PIANOFORTE SCHOOL, 11, SOUTH MOLTON STREET, BOND STREET, W.1.

BATTERSEA POLYTECHNIC, LONDON, S.W.11.

(Within easy access of Victoria, Battersea Park, Clapham Junction, and Queen's Road Stations, Southern Railway.)

PRINCIPAL ... ... ROBERT H. PICKARD, D.Sc., F.R.S.
HEAD OF MUSIC DEPARTMENT .. ... H. DAVAN WETTON, D.Mus., F.R.C.O.

ORGAN RECITALS

WEDNESDAYS, AT 8 P.M.

NOVEMBER 3rd. M. P. CONWAY, D. Mus.
Organist and Master of the Choristers, Chichester Cathedral.

NOVEMBER 10th. HARVEY GRACE, F.R.C.O.
Editor of "The Musical Times."

NOVEMBER 17th. H. DAVAN WETTON, D. Mus.
Organist and Director of the Choir, Christ Church, Lancaster Gate.

ADMISSION, INCLUDING TAX, 1s. SERIES TICKET, 2s. 6d.

Tickets can be obtained at the Polytechnic either before or on the Recital Evenings.

MODERN CORR. COLLEGE

Principal: ARTHUR McALISTER, B.A. (Cantab.).

MATRIC. - - SUCCESSES - - - - - - 135

MUS. BAC. - - FINAL (September, 1926.)
ENTRIES 2
SUCCESSES 2

MUS. BAC. - - For ONE FEE, which can be paid by easy Instalments, Tuition is given until you GAIN THE DEGREE.

A.R.C.O. - - A student FAILS 4 TIMES (under other tuition). Joins the M.C.C. and PASSES.
RECENT SUCCESSES 27

F.R.C.O. - - A student FAILS 6 TIMES (under other tuition). Joins the M.C.C. and PASSES, January, 1926.
RECENT SUCCESSES 10

A. MUS. T.C.L. - Marks gained by M.C.C. Students:
ART OF TEACHING 88%
COUNTERPOINT... ... ... 93%

L. MUS. T.C.L. - July, 1925: Two Candidates PASSED. Both were Students of the M.C.C.

Marks gained: ORCHESTRATION... ... ... 95%
HARMONY 84%
RUDIMENTS 100%

L.R.A.M. - - (Pianoforte Teaching). A Candidate gains 66% (under other tuition). Joins the M.C.C. and gains 81%. Form and Teaching.

A.R.C.M. - - (Pianoforte Teaching). A successful Student gains 112 marks for Paper Work.

A.T.C.L. - - ART OF TEACHING 93%

September 13, 1926.

AN UNSOLICITED TESTIMONIAL.

"I have pleasure in enclosing cheque for Guarantee Course, Mus. Bac., for my son.

"I also wish to thank you for the very valuable assistance given by you by way of EXCELLENT INSTRUCTION.

"This is, as you know, his SECOND SUCCESS.

A.R.C.O. ... 1924 ... at age 16.
F.R.C.O. ... 1926 ... at age 18."

The student referred to was prepared for both Examinations by the M.C.C.

SINGLE SUBJECTS - HARMONY, ORCHESTRATION, COMPOSITION, ART OF TEACHING, FORM, ELOCUTION, SINGING.

FREE - GUIDE TO DEGREES AND DIPLOMAS IN MUSIC.

PLEASE STATE EXAM. OR SUBJECT.

20, SHERWIN ROAD, NOTTINGHAM.

TO COMPOSERS.

MR. NICHOLAS GATTY

is prepared to undertake the revision and arrangement of MSS., and to advise on any matter concerning composition and orchestration

For terms, &c., apply, 12, Upper George Street, W.1.

A.R.C.O. EXAMINATION AIDS.

A series of practical papers outlining courses of study and giving helpful hints with expert advice on the following Tests:

SOLO-PLAYING. SCORE-READING.
TRANSPOSITION. ACCOMPANIMENT
ESSAY. (with list of 75 Solos).

3s. each. 10s. 6d. the set.

At the request of many who have derived valuable help from the above, the writer has now prepared a similar AID to the

A.R.C.O. PAPER-WORK TESTS.

Price 5s.

"A.R.C.O. EXAMN. AIDS," 166, COUNTY ROAD, WALTON, LIVERPOOL.

MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS REVISED.

LYRICS SET TO MUSIC, MELODIES HARMONIZED, MUSIC TRANSPOSED AND COPIED, BAND PARTS WRITTEN, MSS. PREPARED FOR PUBLICATION BY A MASTER HAND, ACCOMPANIMENTS OF DISTINCTION WRITTEN TO SONGS.

For terms, write, A. CARRINGTON BRIGGS, Glennholme, The Common, Hessle, E. Yorks.

LONDONDERRY "FEIS."

COMPOSERS' COMPETITION FOR SONG WITH STRING OBBLIGATO.

PERPETUAL CHALLENGE CUP AND MINIATURE CUP.

Syllabus and particulars from
MRS. ABRAHAM STEWART,
"Feis" Office, Londonderry, Northern Ireland.

TO ALL ORGANISTS.

Keep this announcement by you for future reference.

THE COMPLEAT DEPUTY

HAVE YOU HAD THAT DIFFICULTY IN FINDING A DEPUTY, WHEN PERHAPS AT SHORT NOTICE YOU HAVE DESIRED A SUNDAY "OFF"?

MR. NICKOLS can help you if your Church is within the London Postal Area or within a reasonable distance outside it.

Whether for a Sunday or a week-night service, whether ROMAN or ANGLO-CATHOLIC, ANGLICAN or any of the FREE CHURCHES, you can rely upon efficient and reverent work.

No hitch can occur if you engage a deputy who, being familiar not only with the music of the various Churches but also with the order of their services, can maintain the dignity attaching to those services.

PLAINSONG SERVICES. COMPLETELY, OR IN PART.

There is no difficulty if you write to

"THE COMPLEAT DEPUTY."

HERBERT H. NICKOLS, 64, Southdean Gardens, London, S.W.19.

PIANOS

MEMBERS

OF THE PROFESSION

desiring instruments for Pupils, &c., are invited to inspect the varied stock of over 500 new and second-hand Pianos from 25 to 1,000 guineas

MAPLE & Co. Ltd.

TOTTENHAM COURT ROAD W1

THE TECHNIQUER

Invented and Patented by R. J. PITCHER, Mus.Bac.

FOR FLEXING, STRENGTHENING, STRETCHING, and DEVELOPING THE HANDS.

Send for testimony of LAMOND, POUISHNOFF, FRYER, REDDIE, WALENN, and many other eminent musicians.

"The excellent 'Techniquer' of Mr. Pitcher has been used by the writer with advantage. It does a good many things."—The Music Teacher, April, 1926.

Treatise on "Hand Development," with Photos, 1s. 6d.

Full particulars from the Secretary—
MISS F. J. FITCH, F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M.,
21, Boundary Road, N.W.8. 'Phone: Maida Vale 1715.

THE "SIMPLEXA" FINGER TRAINER.

(Registered No. 692810.)

FOR ALL INSTRUMENTALISTS.

A SIMPLE AND VERY EFFECTIVE APPLIANCE FOR GIVING STRENGTH AND FLEXIBILITY TO THE FINGERS.

Extract from "Musical Times."—"We have given a trial to the 'Simplexa Pocket Finger Trainer,' and have no hesitation in recommending it to our readers as a means of stretching the fingers and keeping them generally in good playing condition. Instrumentalists who are travelling, or unable to obtain regular practice, will find the appliance a boon. It is well-named, being simplicity itself, and so portable that it can be carried in the waistcoat pocket."

IMPROVED MODEL, 2s. 6d., POST FREE.
1, LONGFORD TERRACE, FOLKESTONE.

REVISED EDITION.

YOUNG SINGERS.

Their Voice Cultivation and Preservation.

A concise, comprehensive, and up-to-date guide to all engaged in teaching voice production and singing to girls and boys, by

JAMES BATES

(Lecturer on Voice Culture, English Phonetics, and Class Singing at the Royal Academy of Music, 1908-1926; and for the London Education Committee, 1910-1926. Twenty-four years Choirmaster at Christ Church, Lancaster Gate, London. Twenty years Teacher of Voice Production and Class Singing at the Roedean School for Girls, Brighton, &c.)

"Young Singers" gives in condensed form the results of the Author's forty years' study of young voices and of an unique experience in teaching Voice Production, Enunciation, and Singing to girls and boys.

To be obtained from:—
MESSRS. STAINER & BELL, 58, Berners Street, London, W.1.
Price One Shilling.

PROFESSIONAL NOTICES.

MISS WINIFRED DENHAM (A.R.C.M.).
SOPRANO.
"A clear, well-produced voice—exceedingly well sung."—Musical Standard.
41, Avondale Road, South Croydon.

MISS WINIFRED HELLIS
SOPRANO.
A Soprano voice of extremely pleasing quality, her cultured singing throughout was deserving of all praise.
"HYMN OF PRAISE."
20, Portman Avenue, London, S.W.14. 'Phone: Richmond 3192.

MISS LYDIA JOHN
(A.R.A.M., L.R.A.M.), CONTRALTO.
Concerts, Oratorios, Organ Recitals, &c.
Recital-Lectures of Folk-Songs, Elizabethan Songs, &c.
Pupils received for Voice-Production and Singing.
Prepared for L.R.A.M., Associated Board, &c.
28, ALBION ROAD, LONDON, N.W.6.
Tel.: Primrose Hill, 3869.
Lessons given at West-End Studio or above address.

EDMUND LANG
TENOR
ORATORIO, CONCERTS, ETC.
47, Leigh Road, Highbury, N.5.

WILLIAM LOMAS
PROFESSIONAL TENOR VOCALIST.
Extensive Répertoire.
ORATORIOS, CONCERTS, RECITALS, ETC.
Press Reports forwarded.
Holly Bank, Audenshaw Road, Audenshaw, nr. Manchester.

MILLARD THOMPSON TENOR. (L.T.C.L. Performer)
Ex-Cathedral Chorister. Available for Oratorio, &c.
"Wayside," 85, Hide Road, Harrow.

GLYN EASTMAN
BASS.
London, Daventry, and all main B.B.C. stations.
Choral Societies, &c., in all parts of Great Britain.
"A beautifully-trained voice of good quality and flexibility."—Dundee Advertiser.
"Fine voice, resonant and clear."—Bridgwater Independent.
Press Notices, Terms, &c.,
24, ST. ANDREW'S ROAD, BRISTOL.

VERNON HARRISS,
L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., Gold Medalist. BASS.
Oratorio, Concerts. Vocal Coach and Adjudicator.
Senior Music Master, Downside School, near Bath.

FRANK POULTON (L.R.A.M.),
BASSO-CANTANTE.
Available for Oratorio, Choral Societies, &c.
33, Hounslow Avenue, Hounslow. 'Phone: Hounslow 1536.

VICTOR UTTING (L.R.A.M.).
BARITONE, ROCHESTER CATHEDRAL.
56, Boundary Road, Chatham, Kent.

VOICE-PRODUCTION AND SINGING.
ALBERT GARCIA
CARRIES ON THE TRADITIONS OF HIS GRANDFATHER, THE LATE MANUEL GARCIA.
STUDIO: 59, QUEEN'S ROAD, N.W.8.

MAUD GRUNDY (HARPIST).
Can accept single engagements for Choral Societies, &c., in the North, prior to and after Scottish Orchestra season.
17, Narcissus Road, London, N.W.6.

R. ARNOLD GREIR
F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M.
Organist to the Royal Choral Society, London.
RECITALIST AND ACCOMPANIST.
2, Highview Road, West Ealing, W.13. Ealing 0201.

MR. J. C. BRYDSON
MUS. BAC. (DUNELM.), L. MUS. T.C.L.
POSTAL TUITION FOR DEGREES AND DIPLOMAS.
(ORDINARY AND GUARANTEE COURSES.)
Tuition also in SINGLE SUBJECTS.
SPECIAL HARMONY and COUNTERPOINT COURSE, Half-a-Guinea for 10 Lessons.
Send for particulars of Scholarships and offer to new students.
Address: "BALCARY," KEGWORTH, NR. DERBY.

CORRESPONDENCE COACHING.
University Degrees, R.A.M., R.C.M., R.C.O., and T.C.L. Diplomas.
DR. REGINALD HUNT
D.Mus. Lond. (1925), F.R.C.O.,
is in touch with all modern examination requirements.
Organ Lessons (3-man. Harrison, 1922), St. Mary's, Bryanston Square, W.1.
Address: 7, Woodgrange Avenue, N. Finchley, N.12.

REGINALD A. JEVONS
R.C.M. (Brussels), A.R.C.M.
(Late pupil of Maleingreau, Desmet, Moulaert, &c.).
A.R.C.M., L.R.A.M., A.T.C.L., L.G.S.M., Organ or Piano (Teachers and Performers),
Specimen papers in each section sent, corrected and returned, 4s.
Also courses by correspondence.
Course for practical work; single Lessons for visitors.
All music students should send for prospectus.
33, Braydon Road, London, N.16.

ELIZABETH LEVY
L.R.A.M., GOLD MEDALLIST.
TOBIAS MATTHAY'S PIANOFORTE METHOD taught by her at pupils' houses or her studio. SPECIAL COACHING for Scholarships, Medals, and all Examinations. 52, Fairhazel Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.6.

MISS MARY LINDSAY
L.R.A.M. (Teacher's Diploma).
Gives lessons in Voice Production and Singing.
Moderate Terms.
17, Cromwell Road, South Kensington. Tel.: Western 3595.

MISS NORAH TOWNEND, A.R.C.M.
EXPERIENCED PIANIST AND ACCOMPANIST.
Apply, 38, Heathfield Road, Acton, W.3. 'Phone: Chiswick 0384.

MISS MARY WILSON, F.R.A.M.
Professor of Singing at the Royal Academy of Music, London,
Gives SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS to Candidates entering for the L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Singing Teachers' Diplomas.
Particulars on application.
Address: 10, Harley Street, London, W.1.

MISS MARGARET WITHY
(A.R.C.M., L.T.C.L.).
Postal Tuition for L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., and T.C.L. paper-work.
Practical work (Pianoforte). Personal lessons in Bath or Salisbury.
Full particulars from 29, Church Field, Salisbury.

DR. ALLISON instructed by Post Candidates who OBTAINED DEGREES OF MUS.B. and Mus.D. at Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, London, and Durham Universities, Diplomas of L.L.C.M. (April & Dec.), L.R.A.M., F.R.C.O., L. Mus. L.C.M., A.R.C.M., Gold Medals, Silver Medals, Scholarships, Prizes, Certificates, and valuable professional appointments. Dr. Allison is willing to teach those who neither require nor desire to pass examinations. Harmony, Counterpoint, Orchestration, and Analysis of Compositions by Post, to correspondents anywhere. Personal instruction in Theory, Singing, and Piano. 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

REVISION OF MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS.
Dr. Horton Allison, 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

CAPTAIN PERCY BAKER, M.C., F.R.C.O., L. Mus. T.C.L. (Author of "Compend of Musical Knowledge," "Studies in History and Form," &c.). Specialist in Tuition by post for T.C.L. and R.C.O. Essay Models, Sight-Reading Courses, Study Aids. 9*d.* Studies in Modulation, 3*s.*
Send for interesting Pamphlets on Methods.
HAZELDENE, TEWKESBURY.

MR. J. PERCY BAKER, Mus. B. Dunelm., F.R.A.M., gives Postal Tuition and prepares for Examinations. Personal Lessons (Pianoforte and Theory), at 14, Hanover Square, W.1. Address, 12, Longley Road, Tooting Graveney, S.W.17.

SINGING.—VOICE CULTURE, BREATH CONTROL. Defects corrected. Audition by appointment. Without fee. ALBA, 139, New Bond Street, W.1.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:—

(1.) L.R.A.M. Paper Work.
(2.) A.R.C.M. Paper Work.
(3.) Interesting Courses of Study in Rudiments, Harmony, Form, &c.

L.R.A.M. Exams. 1910-26 ...301 Correspondence Pupils successful.
A.R.C.M. Exams. 1914-26 ... 81 " " "

MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.,
Waterloo Buildings, Piccadilly, Manchester.

In response to many requests, MR. BIBBY begs to announce that he has prepared the following additional CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:

(1.) The "Mus. Bac." Degree.
(2.) A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O. Paper Work.
(3.) A.T.C.L. and L.T.C.L. Paper Work.
(4.) The Associated Board Examinations in Rudiments, Harmony, and Counterpoint.

(Address as above.)

MR. BIBBY also gives PERSONAL Lessons in Manchester. Complete Preparation (Practical and Paper Work) for L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., A.T.C.L., &c. Address as above.

MR. ALLAN BROWN, F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Organist and Musical Director, The City Temple). 298, Balham High Road, S.W.17. Telephone: Battersea 0916.

Special preparation for F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O. Also L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. ORGAN EXAMINATIONS.

SINGLE LESSONS and PRACTICE on facsimile R.C.O. instrument. Pieces registered.

RECENT SUCCESSES IN ORGAN WORK:

1 L.R.A.M., Dec., 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.
1 A.R.C.M., April, 1920.	1 A.R.C.O., July, 1921.
1 L.R.A.M., April, 1924.	3 A.R.C.O., July, 1922.
1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1922.	1 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1923.
1 F.R.C.O., July, 1922.	4 A.R.C.O., July, 1923.
3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1923.	1 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1924.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1923.	3 A.R.C.O., July, 1924.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1925.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1925.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1925.	5 A.R.C.O., July, 1925.
1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1926.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1926.
4 F.R.C.O., July, 1926.	4 A.R.C.O., July, 1926.

"Hints for R.C.O. Candidates" to be obtained from the Publishers, Reid Bros., 26, Eastcastle Street, Oxford Circus, W.1.

FRANCIS CRUTE, A.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., prepares for all Exams, including L.R.A.M., and A.R.C.M. Many recent Successes.
2, Muncaster Road, S.W.11: or 60. Berners Street, W.1.

SELF-PREPARATION.
(THEORETICAL AND PRACTICAL.)

Many Music Students are at times perplexed, where but a little guidance will help them towards their goal.
Single Lesson, or Course by arrangement.

A. GRAVES, F.R.C.O., 30, Salop Road, Oswestry.

FREDERICK GREEN, L.R.A.M., ETC. Voice Specialist, Vocal Coach, and Adjudicator. Preparation for L.R.A.M. c/o Rushworth & Dreaper, 11, Islington, Liverpool.

MR. J. D. HANDS, Mus. Bac. (Dublin), L.R.A.M., gives lessons in Harmony by post. Music composed to Lyrics. Pianoforte Accompaniments written to Airs. Moderate terms. 114, Wellesley Road, Clacton-on-Sea.

DR. CUTHBERT HARRIS, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O., SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE TUITION. 410 Successes in Mus. D., Mus. B., F.R.C.O., and A.R.C.O., &c. 58, Avondale Road, Gorleston-on-Sea.

DR. HARRIS REVISES and PREPARES MSS. FOR PUBLICATION. Accompaniments to Songs written.

MISS H. HEALE COACHES for all EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC (at private residence or at West-End Studio), in Pianoforte, Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, Form, Orchestration, "Teaching," Modulation, Transposition, &c. For Terms, &c., apply, Dunraven House, 41, Albert Bridge Road, S.W.11.

DR. CHASTEY HECTOR, D. Mus. Oxon., 1922, L.R.A.M., instructs Candidates, personally or by post, for Degrees and Diplomas in Music. "The Downs," Old Shoreham Road, Hove, Sussex.

DR. W. HUNT, Mus. D. Durham (1926), F.R.C.O. Gives Lessons by Correspondence, for degrees and diplomas in music. Thorpe Road, Melton Mowbray.

SINGING LESSONS TAUGHT by Madame ROSA GLYN (Italian Style). Write, "R. G.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

DR. A. G. IGGULDEN, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O. SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE COACHING. Latest Successes: Durham, Sept. 1926. Mus.Doc., 6 Final Mus.Bac. and two 1st Mus.Bac. passes. Other recent successes, Mus.Doc. and Mus. Bac. Exs. after prelim. course in composition. 180 successes at Durham alone, besides R.C.O. Diplomas. The Durdans, Reigate.

DR. F. J. KARN (Mus. Bac. Cantab.; Mus. Doc. Toronto) continues to give lessons in Harmony and other Theoretical subjects, and prepares for all Musical Examinations. Compositions revised and Analyses written. Candidates prepared by Dr. Karn have gained the Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc. degrees at the Universities and diplomas from the Musical Colleges.

Address: 106, Haverstock Hill, London, N.W.3.

DR. KNOWLES (Manchester 1919, Durham 1920) specialises in preparing candidates by post for the Paper-work of all examinations in music. Solutions, with methods of working. Address, "Cramond," Oakhurst Avenue, East Barnet, London, N.

HERBERT HODGE, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M., Organist and Choirmaster, St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, Queen Victoria Street, London, has, since 1908, made a speciality of coaching Candidates for the Organ Playing Examinations of the Royal College of Organists, and can arrange a private course of instruction (or single lessons) to organists visiting London, at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey. Many recent F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O. successes.
5, Streatham Place, S.W.2. Telephone: Streatham 2195.

A. EAGLEFIELD HULL, Mus. Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O. For Lectures, address E. L. Robinson Direction, 199, Piccadilly, London, W.1; for personal and correspondence lessons, address Dr. Eaglefield Hull, 19, Berners Street, W.1. For Organ Recitals, address Secretary, 48, New North Rd., Huddersfield.

DECEMBER EXAMS., L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M., Vocal and Pianoforte. Special preparation courses under Mr. Frederick C. Haggis, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M., L.T.C.L., at Wigmore Hall Studios, W., and at Streatham, S.W. Address communications to The Wood End, Wallington, Surrey. Telephone: Wallington 1293, or Streatham 1177.

MR. C. E. de M. LEATHES, M.A., Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O. Tuition in Piano, Harmony, Composition, &c. Pupils successfully prepared for all examinations. Cramer's Studios, 139, Bond Street, W.1, and 128, Kensington High St., W.8.

PREPARATION L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., and all Associated Board Exams. 1925 Successes include 5 L.R.A.M. (Pianoforte). Courses of study, or single lessons, arranged at home or West End. Alan May, 31, Bonham Road, S.W.2.

DR. ORLANDO A. MANSFIELD, Mus. Doc., University of Toronto; F.R.C.O., F.A.G.O., &c., Sirsa House, Cheltenham. Correspondence Lessons. Revision of MSS. Scoring, editing, and arranging. Examination pieces analysed and annotated.

MISS F. HELENA MARKS, Author of "The Sonata: Its Form and Meaning," prepares for L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., and all other examinations, Pianoforte, Harmony, "Form and Teaching," &c. Personal or Correspondence Lessons in all Paper-Work subjects, including those for L.R.A.M., "Aural Training and Sight-Singing," and A.R.C.M. in "The Teaching of Musical Appreciation," &c. Pupils received and visited for the Pianoforte. Many recent successes L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c.

10, Matheson Road, London, W.14.

DR. H. H. L. MIDDLETON, Mus.Doc., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Twenty-five years' experience in Private Tuition and Coaching for Degrees. More than 800 of Dr. Middleton's Pupils have obtained Degrees at the Universities, R.A.M., R.C.M., and R.C.O. Address, 60, Berners Street, W.1.

CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS.

Graded Lessons especially prepared to suit individual needs—every student assured of personal care and attention. Rudiments, Harmony, Counterpoint, Orchestration, &c. Preparation for Diplomas and other examinations. Interesting courses also for those not wishing to enter examinations.

ALFRED MORRIS, L.Mus. T.C.L., 9, West Lorne Street, Chester.

PIANO TEACHING EXAMS., A.R.C.M., L.R.A.M., ETC.
(a) Outline of Course of Instruction, 5*s*.
(b) Studies for Special Purposes (first bars given), 5*s*.
(c) Four Special Test-Papers for A.R.C.M., £1 (including corrections).
"J. H.," Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M., &c., c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

MR. R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M. (Double Dip. Singing and Piano), L.R.A.M., Class A, Performer and Teacher.
Prof. Singing, G.S.M., 1905-1915. Special Lect. on Musical Appreciation to L.C.C.
"Recit. and its Rendering." 1s. 6d. "Vade Mecum for Singers." 6d.
Preparation for all Exams. by Post and Personal Lessons.
Special Courses of Papers: Singing, Piano, Touch, Musical Appreciation, &c.
Nearly 1,000 Successes for Degrees and Diplomas.
Send for Prospectus,
21, Boundary Road, N.W.8. 'Phone: Maida Vale 1715.

W. J. FREDERICK PUGH, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., prepares for L.R.A.M. (Aural Culture and Voice Culture Diplomas), A.R.C.M. (Appreciation Diploma). Recent Successes. 34, Wilmington Avenue, Chiswick, W.4. Chiswick 3267.

DR. TAYLOR'S POSTAL PUPILS HAVE passed Mus. Bac. 1st and final. A.R.C.O.; L.R.A.M.; A.T.C.L. Pupil gained the Stillie Bursary at Glasgow for Counterpoint. Latest success, A.R.C.O. for 1924. Portland Place, Lancaster.

W. G. WEBBER, F.R.C.O. Recitalist, &c. Preparation for Exams. Organ lessons given on new four-manual Willis. Address, Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road, London, S.E.1.

DR. PERCY WOOD, Mus. Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O.
SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:
(1) Elementary Harmony and Counterpoint.
(2) F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O.
(3) A.R.C.M. (Theory of Music).
(4) A. Mus. T.C.L. and L. Mus. T.C.L.
Several recent successes in all these examinations.
R.C.O. EXAMINER says: "Your system is undoubtedly an excellent one."

SUCCESS GUARANTEED—given any pupils with the requisite musical ability for the examination in view.

285 A.R.C.O. Successes since 1909.
180 F.R.C.O. " " "

RECENT SUCCESSES IN PAPER WORK:

2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1916.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1916.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1916.	5 A.R.C.O., July, 1916.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1917.	2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1917.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1917.	4 A.R.C.O., July, 1917.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.	2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.
4 F.R.C.O., July, 1918.	2 A.R.C.O., July, 1918.
1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., July, 1919.
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.	10 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1920.	6 A.R.C.O., July, 1920.
3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.	7 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.
6 F.R.C.O., July, 1921.	8 A.R.C.O., July, 1921.
5 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1922.	5 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1922.
4 F.R.C.O., July, 1922.	5 A.R.C.O., July, 1922.
8 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1923.	6 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1923.
7 F.R.C.O., July, 1923.	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1923.
7 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1924.	9 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1924.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1924.	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1924.
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1925.	8 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1925.
7 F.R.C.O., July, 1925.	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1925.
5 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1926.	6 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1926.
6 F.R.C.O., July, 1926.	6 A.R.C.O., July, 1926.

"Tralee," Warwick Road, Cliftonville, Margate.

CORRESPONDENCE TUITION. Any Exam., R.C.O., T.C.L., &c. Complete Training. One guinea ten lessons. Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, History, Form, Hints on Aural Tests, &c. "W. P. W., F.R.C.O.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

MISS MARGARET YOUNG, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Pianoforte); A.T.C.L. (Vocal and Pianoforte), Registered Teacher, T.R.C. Postal Tuition for Theoretical, above Diplomas; also General Musical Knowledge and Advice. Bawburgh, Norwich.

A.R.C.M.—Piano-teaching Exams. Coaching by post for Viva-voce, special purposes, course of studies, &c.—High marks. Madame Mabel J. Moss, A.R.C.M., 38, Stapleton Hall Road, London, N.4. Phone: Mountview 4819.

HENRY M. BYRON, Managing Director, Concerts and Recitals. Established 1890. Address: 75, Church Road, Leyton, London, E.10. Unknown Talent, Vocal and Instrumental, write. Silence a polite negative.

NEW COLLEGE, OXFORD.

A VACANCY for an ALTO will be filled up by the appointment of either a Lay-Clerk, or an Academical Clerk, after a trial to be held early in November. Salary of Lay-Clerk, £110 (with pension). Academical Clerkship (reserved for men who propose to read for a University Degree), value £80.
Apply to The Precentor, New College, Oxford.

ST. PATRICK'S CATHEDRAL, DUBLIN.

ALTO WANTED. Salary not less than £120 per annum. Light duties. Superannuation Fund. Full particulars from The Rev. The Succentor, St. Patrick's Cathedral, Dublin.
Applications must be sent in before November 15th, 1926.

CHOIRBOYS WANTED.—There will shortly be VACANCIES in the choir of St. Stephen's Walbrook, E.C.4, for boys aged nine to eleven years. Light duties Pay and expenses. Apply, Organist.

WORCESTER CATHEDRAL.—Tenor Lay-Clerk VACANCY. Applications to The Chapter Clerk, 16, High Street, Worcester.

GRESHAM COLLEGE, Basinghall Street, E.C.2. Four Lectures on Music by Sir WALFORD DAVIES, at 6 p.m. On Monday, November 8th, 1926; MUSIC AND CHOIRS; Wednesday, November 10th: CHORAL MELODY; Thursday, November 11th: CHORAL RHYTHM; Friday, November 12th: CHORAL CHORDS.

WANTED.—ORGANIST AND MUSICAL DIRECTOR for Bloomsbury Central Baptist Church, W.C.2. Send qualifications and records to Rev. Thomas Phillips.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER REQUIRES POST.—Good experience, excellent testimonials, with some other clerical remunerative position. Apply, "F. W.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

WANTED.—CHOIRMASTER and ORGANIST for St. Luke's Church, Thurleigh Rd., S.W.12. Churchman, with experience in choir training essential. Salary, £60 per annum. Write to Vicar, giving age, experience, and reference from former Incumbent.

SKEGNESS, ST. MATTHEW'S.—ORGANIST REQUIRED immediately. Commencing stipend, £60. Fine Church: bright, but not advanced, Services. Good opening for young enthusiastic musician. Qualifications and recommendations to Rector of Skegness.

ORGAN PRACTICE.—1s. 4d. an hour (pupils, 9d.). Hydraulic-blown, two-manual and pedal organ, at the Fulham School of Music, 2, Edgarley Terrace, S.W.6.
ORGAN LESSONS at St. Stephen's Walbrook, E.C.4. Large three-manual organ. Moderate fees. Special courses of combined lessons and practice for inclusive fees. Write for prospectus.
G. J. METZLER, F.R.C.O. Tel.: Putney 4208.

MR. HERBERT HODGE will give an Organ Recital at St. Stephen's Walbrook, on Thursday, November 11th, at 1.10 p.m.

HIGHGATE VILLAGE ORCHESTRA (AMATEUR).

Weekly practices at the North Hill Hall, 33, North Hill, Highgate. For full particulars of membership and places (Strings, Wood, or Brass), apply to the Conductor, Mr. PETER FARQUHARSON, "Heather Hill," Bloomfield Road, Highgate, N 6.

ACCOMPANIST AVAILABLE FOR CONCERTS or PRACTICE. Singers or String Players. "Box 1," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ACCOMPANIST DESIRES APPOINTMENT to Choral or Dramatic Society. Experienced. Write "X.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

WANTED, Post, School of Music. Six years' experience music trade; pianist, sight-reader, experience clerical work, correspondence, typing, &c., knowledge book-keeping. Keen worker. "K." c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

WANTED TO PURCHASE by MUS. BAC., F.R.C.O., a teaching connection in London, or neighbourhood. Good price given for a bona fide one. "C. M. L.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

YOUNG LADY (West Indian), 23, possessing musical qualifications, desires position in Music Publisher's or Pianoforte business. "M. N. S.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160 Wardour Street, W.1.

MUSIC COMPOSERS and LYRIC WRITERS.—Songs, Lyrics, and Musical Compositions Wanted for Publication. We compose Music to Lyrics if desired. Advice free to new authors and composers. Send MSS. (words or music) to the Carlton Music Agency, 8, Lloyd Square, London, W.C.1.

ORGANS (New and Second-hand) for SALE.—Electric and pneumatic action up-to-date. Built or reconstructed. Bedwell & Son, The Cambridge Organ Works, Cambridge.

PIPE ORGANS Restored, Enlarged, Repaired, and Tuned. Attractive Terms. Henry Morgan & Son, Church Organ Builders, 19, Cowdrey Road, Wimbledon, London. Established 1896.

ORGAN, suit small Hall, 14 Stops and Knee-swell. Fine tone and condition. Bargain. "C.," 9, Stamford Hill, London, N.16.

FOR SALE.—ÆOLIAN ORGAN. Oak Case. 20 Stops. Pneumatic action. Played by music roll or by hand. In thorough repair. Write, W. A. G. Browne, Hanwood House, near Shrewsbury.

FOR SALE.—PIPE ORGAN, at present in St. Peter's Church, Spalding. Two manuals and Pedals, 17 speaking Stops, 4 Couplers. In perfect condition. Built by Forster & Andrews, 1899. Apply, G. B. Armstrong, Uppingham House, Spalding.

LIVERPOOL CATHEDRAL ORGAN.—Whole-plate Photos of the Console (full-on view) and case. Critical definition. 5s. each. BENHAM, "Bramerton," New Barnet.

THREE-MANUAL REED ORGAN, English built. 24 Speaking Stops. Seen London. "J.," 31, Reynolds Road, Hove.

FOR SALE.—Set Malkin's Pedals for Pianoforte, and Stool. Good condition. Moderate price. Turner, Sunnybank, Sidcup.

BLÜTHNER UPRIGHT GRAND, Rosewood case. First-rate condition and tone. For SALE privately; great sacrifice; accept 120 gns. 13, Disraeli Road, Putney, S.W.15.

VIOLIN FOR SALE.—GENUINE STAINER. Address, "E.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

FOR SALE.—VIOLIN, by Béla, 1891. Valued £70; will take £65, or near offer. Apply, "C. V. H.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

DOUBLE-BASS FOR SALE.—Magnificent tone. Said to be Stainer. Valued at £50, take £25. Write, "R.," 3, Canonbury Mansions, N.1.

FOR SALE.—Oboe by Rudall Carte, Barratt action. High pitch. 17 keys to B♭. Perfect condition. £15, or nearest. F. J. Parnaby, 4, Hextol Terrace, Hexham.

A LADY wishes to dispose of her HARP. Erard double-action. Good condition. Address, "C. C.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ON SALE.—Set Small Tymps. Bass Drum. Capital-toned Harmonium. Double-Bass. Whittaker, 20, Central Drive, Blackpool.

HAYDN WALSH SCORES for Orchestra, Brass or Military Bands, Artistic accompaniments written; Music copied. Moderate terms. 72, St. Pancras, Chichester.

PART-SONGS and ANTHEMS. Fifty Sets for SALE, cheap. Send stamped envelope for list. Forster, Old Priory Choir, 148, Hull Road, York.

FREE.—Catalogue of Posters for Dances, Concerts, Operas, and all Musical Events. Stafford & Co., Ltd., Netherfield, Nottingham.

A TREATISE ON CONDUCTING.
12,000 WORDS. ILLUSTRATED METHOD.
2s. Post free. (800 Copies sold.)
Invaluable to Leaders and Members of any Orchestra, Band, or Choir.
M. T. Cooper, M.D., 23, Beech Avenue, Blackpool.

BASSES AND BARITONES should buy Songs by HAROLD OAKLEY (recently published): "THE GONDOLIER" (Compass C to C). "BEAUTY'S DAUGHTER" (Compass B♭ to E♭). "THE ERL KING" (Compass C to E♭ or F). "UP SAIL" (Compass B♭ to E♭). Price 2s. each. Weekes & Co., 14, Hanover Street, W.1. All Music Sellers.

AURAL TESTS.—L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c. Special Paper showing how to obtain proficiency. Very Successful. Enclose 4s. 6d. to "Aural Tests," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, London, W.1.

ESSAY, A.R.C.O., JANUARY, 1927. New Series of Six Model Essays on the book, "William Byrd," with valuable Hints on "How to Write the Essay." Send P.O. 4s. 6d. to "Essays," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

COMMUNION SERVICE in F, complete, with 9-fold Kyrie. Specimen 1s., from R. R. Glendinning, 13, Langton Terrace, Falmouth.

"WE WILL MERRIE BE." Charming Song, by Florence Mackintosh. Old English style. In two keys. 2s. each net. Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour St., London, W.1.

MUSICAL BOOKS.
48-Page List (Cat. B.) post free—Æsthetics—Biography—Criticism—Essays—History—Orchestra—Organ—Pianoforte—Technical—Theoretical and Elementary—Violin—Vocal—Wagner—Tutors—&c.
REEVES'S, 83, Charing Cross Road, London, W.C.2.

MUSIC COPIED, neat work, Transposition and Duplicating. E. W. Cartwright, 28, York Rd., Bournemouth.

TEXT-BOOKS
BY
ALBERT HAM, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O.

OUTLINES OF MUSICAL FORM
WITH ANALYSES FROM
WELL-KNOWN CLASSICAL WORKS.

Price ... Five Shillings.

"In all respects this is an admirable little work, with no waste, no hiatus of a serious nature, handy in size, and with a practical scheme well carried through."—Musical Times.

DR. C. W. PEARCE, in alluding to the above work, says:
"Quite the best I have ever seen, and I shall lose no opportunity for recommending it"

THE RUDIMENTS OF MUSIC AND ELEMENTARY HARMONY.
THIRD EDITION.

Price ... Five Shillings.

"Dr. Ham's admirable little work may be cordially recommended."—Musical Times.

	s.	d.
MINUET AND TRIO FOR ORGAN	2	0
PEDAL AND MANUAL SCALES AND ARPEGGIOS ...	2
ANTHEMS: The desert shall rejoice. S. or T. Solo and Chorus (S.A.T.B.)	0	3
I heard the Voice of Jesus say. Bar. Solo and Chorus (T.T.B.B.)	0	4
PART-SONG: Music, when soft voices die (S.A.T.B.)	0	3

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

Foyle's Bargain Offer.

STUDIES OF GREAT COMPOSERS
By SIR HUBERT PARRY, Mus. Doc.

We have a number of copies of Sir Hubert Parry's well-known work, of which edition after edition has been called for at 6s. net. These copies we offer, practically new, at 3s. 6d. post free. Sent on approval. Quote offer 122.

You are invited to visit the new and enlarged premises of our Music Dept., and to inspect the stock at leisure.

FOYLE'S MUSIC DEPT.,
119-125, CHARING CROSS ROAD, LONDON, W.C.2.

VIOLA DA GAMBA BOWS
AND RESTORATIONS OF OLD INSTRUMENTS.
OSKAR DAWSON
GARDEN SUBURB, HASLEMERE
(Who was head of Mr. Arnold Dolmetsch's Workshop for five years, and who specialised in this work).

FOR GOOD PRINTING SERVICE
. . Posters, Programmes, Announcements . .
Books of Words, Tickets, Press Opinions, &c.
BAINES & SCARSBROOK,
75, FAIRFAX ROAD, SWISS COTTAGE, N.W.6.
'Phone: Hampstead 0246 and 0247.

THE SUPERB

BECHSTEIN PIANOS

You can examine a magnificent selection of Bechstein Pianos—new and second-hand—at

126, NEW BOND ST., W.1.

Can be purchased by instalments, no deposit required.

Old Pianos taken in exchange, highest value allowed.

Call or write for Catalogue.

The Autoplayer Co., Ltd.,
BECHSTEIN PIANO SPECIALISTS.
Mayfair 2653.

STEINWAY STUDIOS

COMFORTABLY FURNISHED
ELECTRIC LIGHT
CENTRAL HEATING
TELEPHONE LIFT
NEW STEINWAY PIANOS

Full particulars from

STEINWAY & SONS
THE NEW STEINWAY HALL,
1 & 2, GEORGE ST., CONDUIT ST., LONDON, W.1.
'PHONE: MAYFAIR 6641-5.

PIANOS

BY

Bechstein, Bord, Schiedmayer,
Chappell, Rogers, Gors, & Kallmann

and other celebrated makers

The Profession most cordially invited to inspect our large and varied stock of New and Second-hand Pianos. Cash, Hire, or Hire-purchase. Pianos taken in exchange

Apply for lists:

CHAS. STILES & CO.
74-76, SOUTHAMPTON ROW
LONDON, W.C.1.
'Phone: MUSEUM 0439.

CRAMER STUDIOS

from

3 GNS.

per term

RECENTLY RENOVATED

NEW CRAMER PIANOS

139 NEW BOND STREET
LONDON W1

RELIEVES COLDS PREVENTS "FLU"

VAPEX
(REG TRADE MARK)
INHALANT

THE COLDS THAT OTHERS GIVE US

MORE colds are caught through contact with infected persons than from any other cause. To avoid this ever-present risk make a habit of putting a drop of "Vapex" on your handkerchief every morning, thereby surrounding yourself with a pleasant germ-proof atmosphere which will last all day.

All Chemists, 2s. and 3s.
Institutional size, 12s.

SOLE MAKERS:
THOMAS KERFOOT & CO., LTD.,
BARDSLEY VALE, LANCS.

Important additions to our BACH Catalogue.

THE ST. LUKE PASSION

A SELECTION FROM THE PASSION OF OUR LORD ACCORDING TO ST. LUKE.

Arranged by REV. A. HASTINGS KELK, M.A., and J. MICHAEL DIACK.

PRICE, STAFF, 2*s.* 6*d.* SOL-FA (CHORUSES ONLY), 1*s.*

NOTE.

THIS early work of Bach's has many interesting and beautiful features. It supplies the need for a short, simple, and dignified setting of the Passion, suitable for Choirs who would hesitate to undertake the great settings of the St. Matthew and the St. John. The part of the Narrator is given to a Tenor, and the compass rarely extends above F. The words of our Lord are assigned to a bass. The other solo parts are Pilate (bass), Impenitent Malefactor (tenor), Penitent Malefactor (bass). The choruses are dramatic and well and effectively contrasted. There are two Arias, which may be sung either by Soprano or Tenor. "The Lamb is dumb" may surely rank with the finest of Bach's sacred solos.

Time of performance, 50 minutes.

ORGAN CHORAL PRELUDES

ARRANGED FOR STRINGS
BY HARRY HODGE.

SET 1.	SET 2.
Schmücke dich, o liebe Seele.	Nun komm' der Heiden Heiland.
Ertödt uns durch dein' Güte.	Gott, durch deine Güte.
Ich ruf' zu dir.	Meine Seele erhebt den Herrn.

Price, each Set, Full Score, 2s. 6d. Separate Parts, 4d. each.

PATERSON'S PUBLICATIONS, LTD.,
152, BUCHANAN STREET, GLASGOW, C.1. 95, WIMPOLE STREET, LONDON, W.1.

A FIRST SCHOOL MUSIC COURSE

BY

W. J. R. GIBBS, M.A., MUS.B.

Foolscap 4to Pupils' Edition, 1s.

(Teachers' Edition, ready shortly, about 6s.)

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS

FETTER LANE, LONDON, E.C.4

CHAMBER MUSIC AND INSTRUMENTAL SOLOS.

A CATALOGUE of over 120 pages would be loaned to anyone interested in above, or a copy could be purchased outright at cost price of 1/-, abroad, 2/-.

EXACTLY WHAT IS OFFERED :—

(a) Pianoforte and Instrumental Sonatas and works for various combinations from Duos to Octets. The lists incorporate the Classics and important Moderns. Over 2,000 different numbers, including many Continental publications now generally unobtainable.

(b) Each work carefully graded as to degree of difficulty, and a readable dissertation for the principal items.

(c) The easiest works known, to the most advanced Salzburg, Venice, and Coolidge Chamber Music festival items.

(d) Solo Works and Studies for PIANOFORTE (includes five pages devoted to Spanish music), VIOLIN, VIOLA, and 'CELLO—special lists free for stamp.

(e) EXCEPTIONAL PRICES ! ! ! Very large purchases often allow me to offer at half those ruling elsewhere.

Finally, the lists have been compiled by one who knows and appreciates the best in this most intimate form of music, and who is always willing to give the benefit of his experience to the first venturer in the Chamber Music Domain, as also to the enthusiastic collector of novelties.

From Iceland to New Zealand is a far cry, yet my despatches are known and give pleasure to numerous ensembles throughout the world.

EDWARD WM. ORGAN (Import and Export),
8, Mayfield Road, Acocks Green, Birmingham (N.).

EXPERIENCE AND REPUTATION

BY APPOINTMENT.

Over thirty years' experience in the manufacture of Organ Blowing Machinery is behind the fine reputation held by the "DISCUS" Organ Blower. During this period, installations have been made with complete success to a very large number of Cathedrals, Churches, and Public Buildings both at home and abroad. We can supply blowers to suit any size or type of organ, and the motive power may be either electricity, gas, or oil. Our wide and varied experience is at your disposal. Write now for a free copy of our illustrated booklet, "Organ Blowing," and let us supply free estimate and suggestions from your particulars.

THE "DISCUS"
REGD. TRADE MARK.
ORGAN BLOWER.

SOLE MAKERS

WATKINS & WATSON,
WHITE LION STREET,
LONDON, N.1.
Telephone: North 2039.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, London, W.1.

President:
THE RT. HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.P., G.C.V.O., C.B.E.

Chairman of Board and Director of Studies:
Professor J. C. BRIDGE, M.A., Mus.D., F.S.A.

Director of Examinations: E. F. HORNER, Mus.D.

Wednesday, November 3, at 3 p.m. Mrs. K. W. CAMPBELL, B. LITT. OXON., delivers the Second of a Course of Lectures on English Literature. The remaining lectures will be given on Thursdays, November 18th and 25th, at 3 p.m.

Wednesdays, November 10th and 17th, at 3 p.m. Students' Concerts.

Wednesday, November 24th, at 3 p.m. Lecture by Miss GERTRUDE AZULAY. Subject: "Pianoforte teaching in connection with School Children."

Admission to the Lectures and Concerts is free.

The College provides INSTRUCTION and TRAINING in all Musical Subjects (Instrumental, Vocal, and Theoretical) and Dramatic and Operatic Elocution. The Lessons are arranged to meet the convenience of both day and evening students. Entry may be made for any number of Subjects—from one to the Full Course. The College is open to beginners as well as to the more proficient student; pupils under 16 years of age are received for the Junior School at reduced fees.

The ORCHESTRAL, CHORAL, the OPERATIC, and CHAMBER MUSIC CLASSES are open to sufficiently competent persons who are not College Students for other subjects.

Tuition in the Rudiments of the Theory of Music, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Instrumentation, Composition, and the Art of Teaching is also given by Correspondence.

There are between Forty and Fifty Scholarships tenable at the College and open to all British subjects up to certain age limits, and the Bambridge Pianoforte Scholarship, value £100 per annum; also Eighteen Scholarships which provide complete preparation for the Degree of Bachelor of Music.

Particulars of the Teaching Department, with list of Professors, Fees, Scholarships regulations, &c., and the Syllabuses of the Diploma and Local Examinations, free on application to the undersigned. C. N. H. RODWELL, Secretary.

ORGAN TRANSCRIPTIONS

FROM THE WORKS OF

EDWARD MacDOWELL

SERIES I.	SERIES II.
Transcribed by FREDERICK N. SHACKLEY.	Transcribed by C. CHARLTON PALMER.
1. Starlight.	1. Nautilus.
2. To a Wild Rose.	2. Romance.
3. At an Old Trysting Place.	3. Sea Song.
4. A Deserted Farm.	4. By Smouldering Embers.
5. With Sweet Lavender.	5. To a Water Lily.
6. A.D. 1620.	6. From Puritan Days.

Price 3*s.* 6*d.* each Album.

These two Albums are extremely useful both as Voluntaries and as Short Recital Pieces.

ELKIN & CO., LTD.,
20, KINGLY STREET, REGENT STREET,
LONDON, W.1.

BROADWOOD PIANOS

BOSWORTH & CO., LTD.

THE LYRIC ORGANIST

A COLLECTION OF EASY MELODIOUS PIECES FOR THE ORGAN.

EDITED AND ARRANGED BY
E. STANLEY ROPER.

Three Books. Price each, 2*s.* 6*d.* net.

Vol. 1. Edition No. 796.	Vol. 2. Edition No. 797.
Berceuse. M. Victor	Rêverie. G. Marchetti
Slumber Song. W. H. Squire	Chant sans Paroles. P. Tschaikowsky
Plainte d'Amour. A. Tellier	Hymn. E. Meyer-Helmund
Bridal Song. A. Jensen	Nocturne. L. Ree
Plains of Peace. D. Barnard	Album Leaf. P. Zilcher
Rêverie. J. Hubay	Evensong. L. Schotte
Angelus. A. Borodine	Souvenir. N. von Wilm
Chanson Triste. P. Tschaikowsky	Norwegian Folk-Song. Ole Bull
Andante Religioso. A. Forster	Longing. E. Paul
Romance in F. T. J. Crawford	Evening Hymn. O. Rippl
Album Leaf. P. Tschaikowsky	Vision. F. G. Byford
Song Without Words. F. Zureich	Pensée. H. Dubois
A Folk-Song. F. Zureich	Cradle Song. M. Hauser
Romanesca. R. Leoncavallo	Flemish Folk-Song.
Chorale. L. Ree	Morning Greeting. A. Tellier
	Toccata. T. J. Crawford

Vol. 3.
Edition No. 975.

Berceuse. N. Johnson	Berceuse E. Watson
Adagio. Laszky	Serenata Pastorale. G. P. Moore
Romance sans Paroles. W. H. Squire	Scene Romantique. E. Meyer-Helmund
Song Without Words. Rahn	Menuett. E. Meyer-Helmund
The Request. O. Rippl	Norwegian Berceuse. Kohler
Le Coucou. C. Daquin	Allegro Molto. N. von Wilm
Andante. N. von Wilm

Vols. 1 and 2 are also published for the American Organ. Price 2*s.* 6*d.* each.

BOSWORTH & CO., LTD.,
8, HEDDON STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.1.

JUST PUBLISHED.

FIRST CHORAL SYMPHONY

THE WORDS SELECTED FROM THE POEMS OF
JOHN KEATS

AND SET TO MUSIC FOR SOPRANO SOLO, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

BY GUSTAV HOLST.
(OP. 41.)

FULL SCORE.
Price ... £3 3*s.*

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

The Musical Times

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

NOVEMBER 1 1926

(FOR LIST OF CONTENTS SEE PAGE 1039.)

THE SPIRIT OF SINGING: A STUDY IN IDEALS

BY ERIK BREWERTON

All musical people are predominantly singers or instrumentalists. Both the instinctive enjoyment of the audience and the more judicious appreciation of the critic are inevitably coloured by this distinction. Indeed, the development of music might be envisaged as a constant and intricate conflict between two powerful media of expression—the voice and the instrument—which might be roughly compared with the rival claims of poetry and prose. But a quieter conception is preferable, and it is better to speak of compromise than of conflict, of accommodation than of rivalry. The history of an art is an unavoidable compromise—the result of the evolution of its own resources, and the reaction of those who interest themselves in it. A form of music may be perfectly intelligible and coherent and yet remain powerless because too many people shrink from it, their ears rejecting it or their minds simply indifferent to it. From the point of view of style, modern European music, so many are its compromises, may be regarded as a rather impure art, appealing to a miscellaneous sort of mind which neither the Greeks nor the Elizabethans would have envied. When, therefore, it is said that all musical people are singers or instrumentalists, two types are indicated, to neither of which can any one more than roughly approximate, for they have never been clearly differentiated. At present, therefore, the pure singer or the pure instrumentalist does not, and cannot, exist. There are signs that the future progress of music may effect this cleavage, but it is unlikely that the musical public will allow such an exclusive choice to be forced upon it for long. No doubt the primitive musician who isolated himself from his companions to make tonal experiments with pieces of skin, bone, and wood, occasionally joined with gusto in the warlike howls of his tribe, but we should have said that his bias was instrumental rather than vocal. Tudor England was emphatically vocal, very little music being written for instruments alone. Handel was much more vocal than Bach, whose voice-part is often just as suitable for the violinist as for the singer. The German spirit has associated itself peculiarly closely with instrumental music, and German lieder present an interesting and carefully effected balance of forces which subsequent developments have disturbed. If the Germans instrumentalised singing, Chopin, who said all music should be song, 'Italianised' pianoforte music. His cantilena has been compared with that of his friend Bellini, whilst in his ornamentation and in a fondness for treating his melody in thirds and sixths, he is far more akin to the Italians than to the contemporary Schumann, with whom it is customary to compare him. Mozart was his favourite composer, and he had little whole-hearted admiration for Beethoven's pianoforte work, or sympathy for the speculations and experiments of Liszt. Even so late as the second Pianoforte Concerto of Rachmaninov, we find a similar cantilena to Chopin's in a modern example of instrumental music, a trait which the Russian composer in his later works seems to have considerably modified, for the musical mind of to-day does not favour such treatment. In spite of its popularity with pianists, critics frown on the second Rachmaninov Concerto. Those long melodic passages are, it is implied, monotonous. Their only expressiveness is elegiac. They lack character and wear a sickly air. For over a generation the trend of music has been intellectual, the product of men with ideas. During the Romantic period it was the product of men with emotions. Both emotions and ideas have always preferred instrumental music as their mouthpiece. To vocal music they have never been essential. Therefore it is that Schubert's music sings as Beethoven's does not, though Schubert's range of ideas was far more limited than Beethoven's. The same contrast is evident with Chopin and Schumann.

The right relation between intellect (in the general acceptance of the word) and musical capacity will always be difficult to determine. Mozart, Bellini, Donizetti, Schubert, and Chopin were certainly not what the modern examiner would call intellectual people. In their general attitude, in their standard of taste, they were on the side of the singers. All would have agreed, for example, with the good tenors of to-day that Walther's Prize-Song is a very ungrateful composition. The vocalist is frequently accused of being unintellectual. He knows little of musical history or composition, as a rule, and his interest in other artistic directions is often slight. These charges, however, are quite irrelevant, so long as it is not certain that education, versatility, polished manners, and all that goes to form the conception of a cultured man, are indispensable to the singer's equipment. There is nothing easier than criticism that is beside the point. Those primitive, naïve, sensuous qualities which constitute the singer's temperament may be seriously deranged by the insurgence of the intellect. In a symphony of Beethoven, in a prelude of Wagner, it is impossible nowadays not to be affected by fleeting thoughts on the hopes and destiny of human beings. This association of music with feelings and ideas has been encouraged by composers who were primarily instrumental composers, and it is natural for such an attitude of mind to become quite common. But it is unreasonable to make a similar demand on the singer if he has never been a party to such a modus operandi. Most of the music to which he inclines has no clear intellectual or emotional appeal at all. From Sims Reeves's own remarks, we can see how seriously he took the popular songs connected with his name. Yet the dramatic and intellectual indications he gives for their performance do not read impressively. He confesses, for example, that the sight of a wreck off the South Coast always inspired his performance of the 'Bay of Biscay'; but it is doubtful if this experience of his had much to do with the extraordinary success of the song. So with others one hardly dares to mention—'Tom Bowling,' 'My Pretty Jane,' 'The Anchor's Weighed.' No thought, idea, or emotion can adequately account for their effect on the audience. The style of the music was no doubt popular at the time; the singer's voice did the rest. Many old-fashioned favourites by Balfe, Sullivan, and Hatton are undoubtedly excellent in their way, far better songs than the elaborate studies of the present sophisticated age. 'Come into the garden, Maud' still remains a splendid test for the tenor voice. If we cannot stomach the old favourites, our objection in the eyes of the singer is not a musical objection; it is simply because we are what he would call unmusical that we decline this simple fare, and prefer a mixed diet which will satisfy a variety of needs. No well-educated man to-day can take up singing without having his intellectual susceptibilities frequently violated. But he must sacrifice them, as a disciple of nature would sacrifice the comforts of civilisation for a greater good. The singer is a disciple of nature. He sings out of a lusty belief in the excellence of things, unlike the pianist who consoles himself for the evil inherent in them. Singing is no philosopher's métier, for it stimulates the circulation and increases the appetite. The pale cast of thought is no preparation for it. Too much refinement takes away that healthy aplomb which the good singer must assume. This is the fault of lieder singers, who, whilst always deferring to a cultivated taste, never succeed in completely breaking down the barriers of decent, conventional, civilised life. They are not sufficiently embosomed in nature, are too delicately strung, too much instrumentalised, even boasting of their fondness for the orchestra or for the pianoforte. However interesting and attractive they may be, the pleasure they give is diffused, a complex quality. The true singers—those who are on the direct line—have open countenances and unruffled brows. They have not that lean and hungry look which Julius Cæsar found the concomitant of dangerous thoughts. Their physical energy expresses itself in the ample throats they deploy, and, like the birds, they can sing all day without a fear that they may become boring. The voice, distinct from other instruments, is an intimate part of its possessor. It connects itself with the obscurest currents of his being. It is, therefore, difficult to conceive of what is so closely bound up with life as being an art. Singing harks back to nature, and suggests an innocence prior to modern thought. It is, therefore, quite rightly, the most democratic form of music, rousing the multitude, as it can, to a sense of its own inarticulate powers.

The pianist, violinist, or 'cellist sunk in his dream, like the deaf Beethoven in the streets of Vienna, is half invisible to others. His is an egotistic, jealous muse. He mounts the platform with an impassive face, and leaves it finally with an ironical smile. There is, of course, the virtuoso, exemplified by Liszt and Paderewski, but their democratic concessions must be associated only with the lighter pieces on their programmes. Paderewski's Beethoven is very different from his Liszt—in it the rhetoric subsides. Liszt himself grew tired of concert work before he was forty, and in one of his later letters confesses his mistake in putting the public's taste before his own. Again, there is that curious hybrid, that product of art and artifice, Pachmann, whose amiable coquetry fascinates and bewilders his audience. But on the whole Chopin's instinct proves itself right, and the instrumentalist grows too aristocratic to bathe in the crowd.

Yet it is precisely because the singer holds himself instinctively apart from his age that he is more popular than the instrumentalist. The time-spirit does not interest him. The values he retains he no doubt fancies eternal. No one conceives of singing as developing quite like pianoforte playing, which owes so much to Chopin, Schumann, and Liszt, and other composers still more recent. It is not surprising therefore that the vocal experiments of Schönberg or Medtner leave the unenterprising singer cold, who knows well the difficulties of Bach and Mozart. The spirit of the age, an interesting topic to all inquisitive and well-informed minds, celebrates itself badly in song. The lyrical outburst always nonplusses the critical spirit, which cannot pare it down to the fundamental bone. Revolutions proclaim themselves in Beethoven and Berlioz, but what has the rise of a Buonaparte to do with a Mozart or a Schubert? The preoccupation with the world which music has taken upon itself, if it has added to its scope, has soiled the virtue of the art. An aggressiveness, a tendency to preach, a brutality masquerading as sincerity, an appalling tediousness, a lack of reticence, a worship of large things because they are large, all this is the work of great instrumentalists—Liszt, Berlioz, Wagner, and Strauss. The modern Russians, too, are tainted in the same way. With a technique superior to that of the enthusiastic, patriotic amateurs who preceded them, their work rings hollow and wears badly. The song, the opera, and the ballet, all the picturesque elements in Russian life, are neglected, and sonatas, symphonies, and a mass of pianoforte pieces take their place, music well and often brilliantly made, but without a fresh and vigorous life of its own.

The progress of instrumental music has inevitably led to a decline in melody. For through melody is the fact most apparent that music, whilst it may minister to our intellectual and emotional needs, is in its essence independent of them. It is that music to which melody is indispensable that Schopenhauer had in mind when, in his philosophical style, he said it represented the world ante rem—that which lies behind the veil of appearances and is anterior to all conceptions of the human reason. In any case, to certain minds drawn to scholastic music on the one hand and to programme music on the other, there is something irritatingly self-centred and serene about a tune. In its very perfection it transcends our thoughts, our sorrows, and our joys. Circumscribed and complete, it rebels against treatment. Substitute the figure, the theme, the motif, and a dramatic symbolism may be evolved, as in Liszt's symphonic poems and Wagner's operas, or an imposing edifice of sound may be raised, as in Bach's Fugues and Beethoven's Symphonies. Many of the movements from Beethoven's Pianoforte Sonatas are less rich in melodic material than Schubert's, as they are finer in treatment. Much of the disconnectedness in Russian music is due to the same reason—a preponderance of tunes. Tchaikovsky is full of them: it is not in his musical nature to compose themes and work them up into an organic whole. Both intellectual and emotional interests conflict with tunefulness, and many who speak of its importance fail to realise how much real enjoyment they receive from quite other sources.

A discontent with mere beauty may not only be ascribed to the necessary evolution of an art; it is perfectly natural to our inconstant minds at any time. By itself beauty may prove cloying to the taste. Sugar and honey beget an insipidity from which salt and vinegar give a welcome change. Subdued to the world we live in, we are vitally drawn to its dramatic values, its variety, and its problematic issues. Not only so, but fundamental brain-work soon becomes necessary for our unstinted admiration. Therefore we hear much in musical discussion of organic unity, development, architectonics, and various other words culled largely from the study of the German masters.

Whereas Bach, Beethoven, Wagner, and Brahms tempt us to speak disparagingly of those whose music seems little but the stringing together of tunes, the French and Italian composers have developed a characteristic music of a strongly individualistic kind, music more and more subservient to some thought, impression, or dramatic situation. As early as the Couperins, the French had shown their taste for the concrete in instrumental music, whilst Italian opera, enervated into a type by Bellini and Donizetti, had new life infused into it, partly by Rossini, but more especially by Verdi, whose robust, peasant spirit scorned all that might be called merely trivial and pretty. Verdi's taste for strong situations, and his gift for enhancing them, involved him in violence and coarseness, but saved opera from a colourless uniformity, and from graduating into a 'concert in costume,' as Liszt described the Italian productions of his early days. Verdi's work was to reconcile melody and drama, for the melody he used was not a stock melody, as with his predecessors, to which every situation had to sacrifice itself, but something individual, and natural to the requirements of character and incident. In such operas as 'Rigoletto' and 'Aïda' his music not only sings—it speaks, it paints. And in this way it is as legitimate a solution to the operatic problem as Wagner's music-drama.

If Verdi's violence reappears in Mascagni, the lighter side of his characterisation is evident in Puccini, whose quick, economical touch lends a lyric charm to quite simple, sentimental, and mundane affairs. Puccini was too discreet ever to write an Iago's 'Credo'—an extraordinary apostasy when Verdi's previous operas are considered—for the Italians are not happy when they throw over melody in the urgency of dramatic claims. They are all too prone, as their literature shows, to revel in an exaggerated and repulsive violence. But melody will always mitigate violence. Thus is the tragedy of Aïda freed from the sheer painfulness of Otello's. 'Cavalleria Rusticana,' by its superior melody, surpasses the sordidly effective 'I Pagliacci,' where the music, instead of being above the drama, is on its level. Poetry and music are alike in this respect, that they both essentially purge the drama of the dross of realism. And it is this dross of realism which is often accepted as expressive singing, as if it were necessary when celebrating wine to simulate an incipient intoxication! The warmth or dramatic intensity a singer infuses into his performance is a matter of style. It represents the instinctive way he reacts to the musical phrase far more than a preoccupation with the meaning of the words. A comparison between Mozart's 'Il mio Tesoro,' from 'Don Giovanni,' and Beethoven's 'Adelaïde,' may illustrate the contention. Both are in the same key and written for the tenor voice; the greater expressiveness lies in 'Adelaïde,' more brilliance and finished charm in 'Il mio Tesoro.' The preference of the singer will depend not on the words of the songs, not on any conscious theory, but on the timbre and condition of his voice. Only when well-equipped will the singer perform Mozart satisfactorily. He will see much more in him after seven years' study than after three, for it is only after such a considerable period that he will realise the responsibilities and opportunities of his art. Then he forgets to regard Faust's Cavatina as a piece of sugared sentiment, and prefers to find in it an opportunity for bel canto singing. As the craftsman grows more efficient, his taste is inevitably modified. Good craftsmanship will raise second-rate material to a higher power, a fact those who judge music solely from the score do not sufficiently appreciate. Caruso's sostenuto gives a dignity to 'On with the Motley,' which, without it, becomes a mere outburst of pitiful violence; and once such gifts are made, they become part of the recipient. An emphasis on craftsmanship would have its dangers if the monotonous vocal exactitude of the 18th century were likely to be repeated nowadays. But the present tendency is too much the other way, as the indulgence shown for expressive and dramatic singing proves.

The care the good singer takes of his voice betrays the importance he rightly attaches to his craft. No temperament will prevail against a tired body or a catarrhal throat. Yet so accustomed have we become to dramatic and intellectual singers who take their standards from instrumental music, except in the matter of the hours they practise, that one of our latter-day critics wrote in a well-known paper, in his report of a Schubert song-recital, that it was a poor singer who could not sing well when his voice was not in good form. He was evidently haunted by the attempted sarcasm of Berlioz, who defined a singer as 'a performer on the larynx'—a better definition perhaps than the author of it, who wrote badly for the voice, imagined. In singing, art comes well behind nature. In fact, as regards the artistic temperament so-called, three things take precedence—good health, a cheerful disposition, and the will to work.

In these days so docile has music become to our intellectual, emotional, and experimental needs, that it is not superfluous to emphasise that element of beauty which is superior to them. Music in its rapid development has achieved almost too comprehensive a power of expression, like a language too cosmopolitan to retain a strong character of its own. The presence of beauty, that most flattering promise of perfection, is in instrumental music largely confined to the older composers, to some movement from a Mozart quartet, from a Beethoven symphony or sonata, to a nocturne, mazurka, or study of Chopin. The magic works only occasionally and does not last long, and too seldom are we properly attuned to it. A critic of literature has defined an epic poem as a series of lyrics interspersed with passages of prose, and the singer, representing the lyrical in music, will always regard the larger forms of composition in somewhat the same light. The view may be narrow, but it has the advantage of being quite natural and intelligible. The songs of Shakespeare may outlast the tragedies which have engaged so much argument and speculation. Their penetrating charm cannot be analysed and explained. So in music, to the spirit of which such verse approximates, the popular instinct hoping for a similar revelation turns first to the human voice for satisfaction. A realisation of this fact is the singer's privilege and responsibility. He acquires an ideal. He serves a muse who may occasionally speak her secrets through his lips. All other considerations then assume a secondary importance.

A choral and chamber music society with the title of Associacione Bach has been founded at Palma, Majorca, under the directorship of Señor Juan Maria Thomás. The Committee of Honour consists of Señor Manuel de Falla (Spain), M. Vincent d'Indy (France), and Dr. Eaglefield-Hull (England).

THE SPECTRUM OF MUSIC

By Alexander Brent-Smith

A rapid survey of the world's history suggests that the direction of man's thought is controlled by some external influence, as though waves of feeling, sometimes a love of beauty, sometimes a love of adventure, swept over the earth from time to time, infecting many men with similar desires and aspirations. It is not unusual to find that an eminent man in one sphere of activity is matched by an equally eminent man in another, and that each seems aiming at similar results; that while Phidias was striving for perfection of form in marble, Sophocles was striving for similar perfection in drama; that while Augustus was labouring, and successfully labouring, to turn a city of stone into a city of marble, Virgil was labouring, no less succesfully, to turn a language of utility into a language of beauty. In modern times we can discover further instances of several men being imbued with the same idea; thus we find that while Drake, Humphrey Gilbert, and Raleigh were driven by the spirit of adventure to explore the unknown territories of the world, Marlowe, Shakespeare, and Spenser were driven by a similar motive to explore and describe the unknown tracts of human experience.

Not only are actions as a whole controlled by a unifying influence, but frequently two or more individuals seem also to have similar hopes and aspirations. Thus we find Leverrier and Adams, one in France, the other in England, both stirred by a similar desire for knowledge, projecting their minds into the vast uncharted spaces of the universe, and each discovering, unknown to the other, the existence, the size, and the orbit of an unsuspected planet, which was disturbing Uranus in his gigantic journey round the sun, and which is now known as the most distant planet in the solar system—Neptune. So again we find inventors, one in France (Santos Dumont), others in America (the Wright brothers), discovering, each on his own system, the secret of mechanical flight. Knowing then that inspirations are like wandering breezes blown about the surface of the globe, we can readily understand that two men may simultaneously light upon the same idea, nor need we accuse either the one or the other of plagiarism or theft. To imagine that one great man discovered beauty or truth by stealing the work of another is as foolish as to imagine that the Laburnum learnt to grow from studying the habits and methods of the Wistaria.

It would seem, at the present day, that each important human activity and interest is being subjected to the same kind of treatment. What this treatment is we shall understand better by diving into the past ages of history.

Every school-boy knows (at least he learns) that white light, the ordinary light of day, was, until the time of Newton, considered simply as light, and nothing more. The rainbow, which might have helped men to understand the secret of light, was explained as a miraculous display of God's clemency—a promise that never again shall the earth be devastated by a flood. As an explanation it is satisfactory enough, for the rainbow cannot appear until the sun breaks through, and when the sun breaks through it is obvious that the worst of the rain is over. But the dependence of the rainbow upon the light of the sun never occurred to the ancient philosophers, and it was not until recent times that men learnt that the pure, indivisible light could be broken into its constituent colours by the agency of drops of water as in the rainbow, or by the specially prepared prism. These colours, which pass imperceptibly from violet to red, were classified by Newton (on the analogy of the musical scale) as seven, viz., red, orange, yellow, green, blue, indigo, violet. For many years after his discovery, the value or power of the separate rays of light was not considered: light was light, and that was all men knew or wished to know. True, folk-lore and medicine-men had taught that red curtains were an aid to the cure of smallpox, but no doubt the cure was attributed to the magic charm of the red curtains rather than to the high-frequency rays which filtered through them. Recently, however, scientists have begun to split the spectrum and to exploit the powers of the separate rays, concentrating their attention chiefly upon the red and the violet rays. The value of the various properties of the rays, the infra-red and the ultra-violet rays, I will not enlarge upon here. Such information can be found in medical and scientific books upon the subject.

What scientists have been doing, then, in the study of light, other thinkers have been doing in their own special spheres. Without wishing to be controversial, it may be pointed out that various admirable religious bodies are exploiting one, or perhaps two, aspects of religion, which have been split off from the pure white teaching of the early church. Painters, too, are exploiting certain aspects of their art, such as atmosphere and motion, qualities admirable in themselves but unsatisfactory and incomplete unless found in conjunction with a good design and composition. These qualities, so insisted upon to-day, had their place in the great pictures of the past, though, because they were simply two among many qualities, they attracted no particular attention—witness the 'Phæton' of Michelangelo, and such drawings of William Blake as 'The Good and Evil Angels,' 'The Ancient of Days,' and the letter-capital, 'Europe.'

As, then, scientists are splitting the spectrum of light, so musicians are splitting the spectrum of music. For several hundred years music was considered simply as music, and neither composers nor listeners troubled themselves about its constituent elements. But latterly a change has come over some musicians, and to them music in a few of its separate aspects has become of greater interest than music in all its aspects, that is, the part has become greater than the whole.

Let us for a moment consider the spectrum of music, arranging the series in the following order—rhythm, melody, form, atmosphere, ornament, humour,* harmony. I have arranged them thus to match the spectrum of light, in which the two rays most easily exploitable are at the opposite extremities. Actually, these seven constituent elements are found, combined into a complete whole, in all the greatest music of the world, music which we recognise is the real, pure, white music of the spheres, as beneficial and as wholesome to the healthy, normal man as is the pure, white light of heaven.

But just as scientists are exploiting the red rays of light, so some musicians (both high-brow and low-brow) are exploiting rhythm. In music, of course, it is scarcely possible to use rhythm exclusively, but there are a few compositions of to-day which are merely a prolonged application of certain rhythmic formulæ, and which use only such an apparatus of harmony as will enable the rhythm to display itself to the fullest extent of pitch and power. In this respect, at any rate, these compositions reveal their superiority to the tom-tom dithyrambs of the frenzied dervish.

Other composers, following the example of the violet-ray specialists, are concentrating their attention solely upon exploiting harmony, experimenting in the ultra-harmonic series as scientists also are experimenting with the mysterious powers of the ultra-violet rays. Others have set themselves to cultivate ornament, while others have squandered their resources in exploiting the slender possibilities of humour.

Now in the interest of science, and for the cure of certain diseases, it is undoubtedly worth while cultivating the mysterious properties of the high- and low-frequency rays of light, but for the ordinary man light in its natural whiteness is both the most useful and the most healthy. So to the ordinary music-lover,† music which has the highest percentage of the seven constituent elements will always appeal most strongly, though why it does so he neither knows nor cares. Indeed, if we are trying to reach a correct valuation of any symphony, sonata, or opera, we should not go far wrong in our judgment if we estimated how far it possessed or lacked these seven elements. If, for instance, we are trying to estimate the relative values of Berlioz and Beethoven, we should be obliged to give Berlioz higher marks for his use of atmosphere, but in the other six departments Beethoven would score such high marks as would leave Berlioz very far behind. For once in a way the peculiar powers of Berlioz may be of the greatest interest, even as the X-ray has at certain moments a supreme value, but for a life-time the more human and less peculiar powers of Beethoven will be found more satisfying. If we believe the axiom of Euclid that the whole is greater than the part, then we must

* By humour, I do not mean that quality which provokes laughter, but rather that finer quality of wit which pleases the intelligence.

† I am not considering the tastes of the uncultured, who appreciate music only as an adjunct to feeding, dancing, and philandering.

believe that the exercise of the whole seven constituent elements of music is more profitable than the exercise of one or two, even though these separate elements should be exploited with abnormal skill. A consideration of this truth will undoubtedly deepen our respect for established reputations, and may help us in the future to rectify and avoid rash judgments.

NEW LIGHT ON THE SCARLATTI FAMILY

By Edward J. Dent

Some years ago Stanford started a scheme for the erection of a statue of Orlando Gibbons at Cambridge, where he was supposed to have been born. The fatal accuracy of Dr. Mann pointed out that that great composer, although educated at Cambridge, was born at Oxford, and the projected statue was abandoned. But as the title of one of Scarlatti's operas observes, 'good comes out of evil,' and the funds collected, though not quite sufficient to pay for a statue, at least benefited music at Cambridge by being diverted to the music library of the Fitzwilliam Museum. I do not know whether Trapani has yet erected a statue to Alessandro Scarlatti, but there was certainly a Square there called after him when I went to Trapani in 1901, and probably some modern politician will benefit by its change of name, if the municipality ever reads the works of young Neapolitan musical researchers. The statement that Scarlatti was born at Trapani was originated by Fétis, who said that Gaspare Selvaggi, of Naples, possessed a manuscript score of his opera 'Pompeo,' with the inscription 'Del Cavaliere Alessandro Scarlatti da Trapani.' Most of Selvaggi's library was bought by the Marquis of Northampton in 1847, and presented to the British Museum. There is no score of 'Pompeo' there. The only known score of 'Pompeo' is in the Fétis collection at Brussels, and it has no inscription of the kind. Moreover it is extremely improbable that any such inscription should ever have existed in a score of 'Pompeo,' because 'Pompeo' was produced in 1683, and Scarlatti did not receive the title of 'Cavaliere' until about 1716. The church registers at Trapani and in the neighbourhood have been very carefully searched by various people, but no record of any Scarlatti has ever been found there.

A number of documents have recently been unearthed at Naples which not only prove indisputably that Alessandro Scarlatti was a native of Palermo, but also give us a great deal of information about his family.* In those days people who wished to be married had to give elaborate evidence before the Archbishop's court to show that they had not been married before, or if they had, that they were widowers or widows, and that they were not bound by any religious vows of chastity. Apparently it was not customary, probably not possible, to present copies of official certificates, as we should do now, and no great stress seems to have been laid on strict accuracy as regards dates. Two of Alessandro's sisters were married at Naples, and his evidence in support of Anna Maria, whose matrimonial career was somewhat chequered, gives us much interesting information. Further details are given in various depositions by other members of the family.

The original documents, some in Latin, some in Italian, will be found in the little book just published by Signor Ulisse Prota-Giurleo. The results of his discoveries, including some which he has been kind enough to communicate to me by letter since the publication of his book, may be summarised here.

There can be no doubt whatever that Alessandro Scarlatti and all his brothers and sisters were born at Palermo, though their baptismal records have not yet come to light. The father of the family was called Pietro, and his wife's name was Eleonora d'Amato. In the absence of baptismal registers it is very difficult to be certain of dates; we sometimes learn the age at which various members of the family died, but these figures are often inconsistent with other dates, and the ladies of the family have added to our difficulty by giving their ages on marriage as considerably less than we should infer them to be from other documents. The family of Pietro Scarlatti seems to have left Palermo in 1672. His daughter Melchiorra gives the year, and, though she mis-states her own age, the date agrees sufficiently well with the vaguer statements of the other children. Whether Pietro himself was alive then I am not clear. He was certainly dead by 1678. It is possible that he died at Palermo, and that his death was the cause of the move. His wife was certainly dead by 1688, but she may have died much earlier. Of Pietro's profession we know nothing; I suspect that he was a musician, because four of his five children became musicians, and the remaining one married a musician. It is possible that neither Pietro nor his wife were Sicilians by birth; I pointed out in my 'Life of Scarlatti' that the name is Tuscan. In default of evidence, I suggest that Pietro died in 1672, at Palermo, leaving his widow (unless she was already dead) and orphan children badly off. The three elder children certainly went to Rome, and the two younger ones to relations at Naples. Melchiorra was eighteen. She says she was only 'about nine,' but, as her statements of dates are more precise than those of the others, she was probably the oldest of the family. Alessandro was thirteen, and Anna Maria nine. The two younger ones left at Naples were Francesco, about four, and Tommaso, who says he was too young to remember the journey; he was about two.

Melchiorra lived at Rome till 1682; she then went to Naples, and in 1688 married Nicola Pagano, a double-bass player in the Royal band. One of her sons, Michele, became a landscape painter of some distinction. Melchiorra died in 1736, aged eighty-two.

* Ulisse Prota-Giurleo, 'Alessandro Scarlatti "Il Palermitano" La Patria e la Famiglia'), Naples, 1926.

Alessandro makes his first appearance as a bridegroom. His marriage register has now been found: he married Antonia Anzalone, a Roman, at the Church of S. Andrea delle Fratte, in 1678. In 1679 his eldest son, Pietro, called after his grandfather, was born at Rome; Benedetto, born at Rome, 1680, died at Naples in 1684. Two more children were born to him at Rome, Raimondo and Flaminia, and probably a second daughter, Cristina. In February, 1684, Alessandro was appointed maestro di cappella at Naples; and at Naples were born Giuseppe Domenico (1685), Caterina (1690), Carlo (1692), and Gian Francesco (1695). Of the last three we know nothing beyond what their baptismal registers tell us; but even that has a significance. Caterina and Carlo had godparents of the highest nobility; Gian Francesco had no godfathers at all, and his godmother, who did duty for all three, was the midwife.

Pietro the younger became a musician, but seems to have been a very mediocre one. He appears to have studied at Rome, returning to Naples with his father in 1708. He was then already married and father of two children. He was given a post as supernumerary organist of the Royal Chapel, and became organist in 1712, remaining there for about forty years. In 1744 he applied for the post of maestro in succession to Leonardo Leo, but did not obtain it. He died in 1750, leaving three children, Domenico, Alessandro, and Anna; another daughter probably died young. They applied jointly to the King, with a request that Alessandro might be given an organist's post, but in vain, despite their protestations of extreme poverty. Anna made a still more pathetic application in 1753. She survived until 1779, and died in destitution.

Raimondo, the second son of the great Alessandro, does not appear to have been a musician. We hear of him only through some legal business in which he represented Domenico in 1717. He was then living at Rome.

Flaminia has come down to us through the biography of Solimena, who painted a much admired portrait of her singing with her father. Solimena is now coming into fashion as a painter, so no doubt some enterprising dealer will shortly 'discover' the missing masterpiece. We hear of Flaminia again in 1711 as godmother to her niece, daughter of Pietro; but as she acted by proxy she was probably not living at Naples.

Cristina is known to us only as a godmother to another daughter of Pietro in 1714. We may naturally suppose her to have been Alessandro's daughter, younger than Flaminia, but born at Rome and probably god-daughter of Christina, Queen of Sweden, to whom Alessandro was maestro di cappella until he went to Naples.

To return to Alessandro's remaining brothers and sister, the sister, Anna Maria, had a chequered career. We hear of her on the opera stage at Naples in 1680, when she was presumably seventeen. In 1684 occurred the scandal about her at Naples, which caused her to be shut up in a convent. But she did not stay there long, for about 1685 she married Paolo Massonio Astrolusco, at Rome. I suspect that she married him a few years earlier, because the marriage took place in the Church of S. Andrea delle Fratte, and in spite of disagreements in dates, I suspect that it was not until 1684 that Melchiorra, the spinster sister, went to Naples with her brother and his family. Alessandro himself, though stating his own age frankly, is not accurate in the dates regarding Anna Maria's career, because they had to be fitted in with her own false statement as regards her age. Astrolusco was an auditor of the Imperial army, and died in Hungary in 1696. About that time Anna Maria came to live with Alessandro at Naples, and in 1699 married Nicola Barbapiccola, a wealthy ship-owner at Naples, who was himself a widower. She died, aged forty, in 1703.

Francesco was born about 1668, and did not go to Rome. He became a violinist, and obtained a post in the Royal band in 1684, when his brother was appointed maestro through the influence of Anna Maria's liaison with a Court official. He took a wife in 1690, by name Rosolina Albano. They had three sons, Matteo, Antonio, and Giovanni, who all became 'gentlemen' to members of the aristocracy. Signor Prota-Giurleo rather suggests that this term signifies a domestic servant. In 1691 he went to Palermo, and became maestro di cappella somewhere there; in 1715 he applied for a post at Vienna, and was supported by Fux, but failed to obtain it. We hear of him at Naples in 1719, and in London in 1720.

Tommaso, the youngest of Pietro's children, became a singer, and for many years sang the comic tenor parts in the Neapolitan operas. In 1701 he married Antonia Carbone, by whom he had ten children, the youngest of whom was Giuseppe, who became a celebrated composer of comic operas. A daughter, Rosa, born 1716, became a comic opera singer. Tommaso died in 1760, and, like his brother Alessandro, was buried in the Church of Monte Santo.

Giuseppe has been described as grandson of Alessandro, and son of Domenico. Domenico, so far as we know, never married; and Giuseppe was not Alessandro's grandson, but his nephew. This mistake has arisen from the fact that nepote can mean both nephew and grandson. He was born in 1723, and was probably a pupil of Leo. In 1747, he and Rosa were at Venice, where he produced his first opera. Rosa and Giuseppe seemed to have lived together for some years. Rosa sang at Vienna, and in other German towns; Giuseppe followed her, and composed operas, both comic and serious. He came back to Naples in 1754, and in 1755 had a great success at the San Carlo with 'Caio Mario,' and an even greater success, in 1756, with a comic opera, 'La Madamigella,' at the Teatro de Fiorentini. Rosa did not sing in it. She was forty, and perhaps had retired from the stage. Giuseppe returned to Vienna the same year, and died there in 1777.

PEDANTRY IN EXAMINATIONS

By Julius Harrison

The 'Occasional Note' in the September Musical Times and Dr. Frederic Wood's letter in the October issue in regard to Mus. Bac. Exercises open up a whole train of thought. Here is a subject that I dare to hope may receive still further attention and ventilation in these columns and also outside them.

Although I, for one, am in complete agreement with Dr. Wood when he says that 'some of us are quite tired of the crude and silly music of certain moderns who believe that rubbishy discords are good music,' yet I venture to think that his phrase hardly touches the heart of the matter. There are 'moderns' and 'moderns,' and there are discords and discords, and therein lies a whole world of difference.

Now the word 'modern,' as applied to music—or, for that matter, to anything else—is, in my opinion, a stupid term. Nowadays we all use the word so thoughtlessly that Dr. Wood will not, I feel sure, take amiss anything that is written here. The word has become almost a term of reproach to many musicians in these days, and in that reproach one sees the germ of a musical reaction that is highly dangerous to the sane growth of the art.

The finest modern music (and I do not count within that category any alleged 'music' by the iconoclastic group of those moderns who violate the natural laws of sound) is but an amplification of the older music.

A wider, yet logical, interpretation is put upon the age-old laws; they are never abrogated, but are obeyed just as instinctively nowadays as in past times. The differences between the older and the newer music are but differences of quality in the type of sound employed, differences that have arisen from the gradual expansion of technique in every direction, rather than from a cutting adrift from the laws.

No good composer has ever burnt his boats in this way. Willy-nilly, he has always incorporated the old within the new.

The trouble is that the many possible, defensible, and dispensable interpretations that can be put upon the laws are not readily recognised by the aural sense of the more pedagogic of the academic musicians. Too much reliance is placed upon judgment by the eye, and far too little upon judgment by the ear. Consecutive fifths, say the old pundits, are consecutive fifths all the world over, and 'that's all there is to it'! Disobey that law ever so imaginatively or musically, and, sure enough, some Beckmesser of the old school will chalk your slate full for you, and you will remain 'unmusbacked' to the end of your days.

This crabbed and unintelligent interpretation of the laws must tend to produce amongst candidates for degrees an utter atrophy of the inner musical sense baneful in the extreme.

'Reduce your musicianship and stick rigidly to the dry-as-dust formulæ of your art and we may pass you,' say the old pundits.

Judging by the pencilled markings on a recent Mus. Bac. Exercise that I have in front of me, the time is evidently not yet ripe for anything but a literal interpretation of the laws.

I do not want to scoff, for I have amongst my musical friends many Doctors of Music who are men of fine erudition, possessing far-seeing judgment and a boundless knowledge of and feeling for music as a living, throbbing art.

Yet I do feel strongly, in common with many other plain Misters of music (who, like myself, have never taken a degree because they jolly well knew that they couldn't satisfy the Doctors on the Board), that the present system of examinations is hopelessly antiquated.

The composer of the Mus. Bac. Exercise mentioned above told an acquaintance of mine that he had purposely stultified all his imagination in order to write his Exercise down to the 'book' level of what he knew to be the requirements of the Examining Board.

Surely something is wrong when a candidate for a degree has to approach his examination in this spirit?

Yet had he obtained his degree by these methods (for which you cannot blame him), he would in the eyes of the public in his locality have been accounted a far greater musician than any plain Mister who might have failed in his examination because his imaginative gift had got the better of him—to the displeasure of the Doctor examiner.

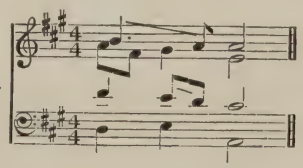
Let me take an instance or two in the Exercise in question and place them side by side with quotations from the great masters.

Here is a most musical example of consecutive fifths—pencilled by the examiner as a fault (the old Beckmesser!):

Ex. 1.

to which I append an example from the 'St. Matthew' Passion (Chorale No. 49), by John Sebastian Bach:

Ex. 2.



Both of these are examples akin to what is so admirably expressed by Stewart Macpherson in his 'Melody and Harmony':

> The importance of the Accented Passing-notes [or, for that matter, *un*accented ones as well.—J.H.] in the development of the musical art can hardly be over-estimated, for until men found out how to take dissonances upon the accent, the element of passion and of drama could be but feebly expressed.

In the first example we have an instance of musically legitimate consecutives, the 'unessential' F sharp causing no disturbance whatsoever to the demands of the ear for a satisfactory and satisfying progression of parts.

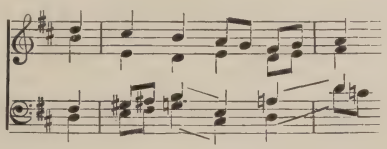
Yet the poor candidate was doomed from the moment he wrote them, despite the many examples of similar unessentials and consecutives set him by the Master of two hundred years ago! Is it just?

In the Exercise there are a score or more pencilled markings against such simple overlappings as the following:

Ex. 3.

though, be it noted, they are not marked in Ex. 1! Here the effulgence created by the 'pair of beauties' evidently blinded the examiner to the satellite 'fault.' O the inconsistency of it all! Here is John Sebastian Bach on overlappings—this time No. 55 (Chorale) of the 'St. Matthew' Passion:

Ex. 4.



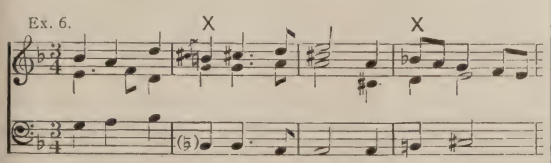
Only one more example need be given—not because they are scarce, but for want of space. This final one has to do with false relations. The candidate wrote, and got blue-pencilled for it:

Ex. 5.

Again a musically legitimate effect. The G sharp is so *un*essential to the harmonic progression that it becomes totally insignificant. (Vide Stewart Macpherson, already quoted.)

How Dr. John Blow, the teacher of Purcell, got his degree I do not know, since in 'Venus and Adonis' he was so far unashamed as to write the following bold passage, all of which will bear theoretical analysis:

Ex. 6.



Presuming that he had to write an Exercise and that it contained similar passages to the above, I can only conclude that his examiner was another wise Sir Hubert Parry, who wrote:

> The rule [of the false relation] is modified by so many exceptions that it is almost doubtful if the cases in which it is objectionable are not fewer than those in which it is not.

In conclusion let me express the fear that unless the Science and Art of Music be interpreted more in the spirit and not so much in the letter it must happen that the various degrees will fall more and more into disrepute, and eventually cease to have any value at all. That would be a thousand pities and, in addition, would be a great blow to the upholding of the more stable qualities of this curiously unstable art.

Ad Libitum

By 'FESTE'

The path of the public towards a fuller understanding and enjoyment of music is gradually being opened up. The three scientific and mechanical means—gramophone, wireless, and player-piano—have been in competition for too short a time to enable us to decide on their comparative merits with anything like finality. A year or so ago my vote would have gone to the gramophone, on the score of its greater scope and reliability—to name its two most obvious virtues. The launching of the educational scheme of the Æolian Company—a scheme so comprehensive that the adoption of the sweeping title, 'The World's Music,' seems to be justified—puts the player-piano ahead in at least one very important respect. A serious drawback of the gramophone record is that it necessarily hands its client a piece of music without comment of any sort. You may point to the fact that the monthly bulletins issued by the recording companies give a good deal of information about the music, but this information is too often concerned with unessentials, is frequently unreliable, and is usually smothered by encomiums on the wonderful performance and matchless recording. (A reader who knew no better would imagine that such blemishes as jangling pianoforte tone, scratches, piercing high notes and inaudible low ones, couldn't possibly exist!) It is true, also, that in the case of a big work, such as a symphony or string quartet, the album containing the records sometimes includes annotations on the music. But these annotations (which are usually well-written) contain no music-type illustrations, and so are behind the programme-books used in the concert-hall. Even the latter, however, are of little help to most people, because the ability to read music mentally is still by no means common. This, by the way, is the rock on which so many 'musical appreciation' books split. The very folk who need them most are those who are not only unable to read mentally even a single musical phrase; they lack ability to play it—even by the primitive one-finger method. The fatal drawback in all these aids is that the information is detached from actual performance. The gramophone records, issued a few years ago, of Sir Walford Davies talking on melody making, with illustrations on violin and pianoforte, opened up possibilities that ought to have been developed. It has always surprised me that so excellent a start was not followed up.

The B.B.C. is doing much by illustrated talks on music. Even here, however, there are drawbacks. Transmission is very variable, and a wireless set has a maddening way of going out of action at the very time when something particularly well worth while is on tap. Moreover, the tone of the pianoforte—the instrument usually employed—rarely comes through well.

The ideal for which we have been waiting is a blend of actual performance and annotation, with musical illustrations that would not depend for their efficacy on one's ability to hear through the eye, or to play an instrument, and at a bound this ideal has been achieved in 'The World's Music.' The discovery of a method by means of which letterpress can be used freely on the music-roll, reveals possibilities that I am bound to admit I had failed to grasp until I heard some of them demonstrated at the inauguration of the Æolian Company's scheme. It seems to reach the limit possible by mechanical and scientific means. In fact, direct human agency can hardly do more. In order to realise fully what is achieved by these new music-rolls, let us imagine ourselves in the company of Sir Henry Hadow, William Backhaus, Edwin Fischer, Una Bourne, and Mitja Nikisch. (I am using an actual roll as a basis for this imaginary experience.) Sir Henry opens the ball with a concise account of Brahms's life and artistic career, handing us portraits and other pictorial aids. He then discusses the various influences that made Brahms's music what it is, with illustrative passages from his works. If Sir Henry merely gave us copies of these extracts we might be none the wiser; so he calls on the assembled pianists to play them. Having thus given us a good general idea of the composer and his methods, he asks Mitja Nikisch to play, complete, the Rhapsody in G minor, the themes and construction of the work having been included in the previous demonstation. Until a few weeks ago an exposition of this sort—so practical and authoritative—would have seemed a fantastic impossibility. Yet, in effect, one of the Biographical rolls achieves it by means of letterpress, music-type, and pictures. In the shape of 'musical appreciation' aid it beats anything yet brought into the amateur's drawing-room, and a person whose musical intelligence is not quickened by it is past praying for. Not only has he no music in his soul; you couldn't even put any there by means of a surgical operation: he is music-proof.

For those who need help of a different kind from that furnished in the Biographical rolls there are the more advanced Analytical rolls. There are also Running Comment rolls, in which the letterpress is distributed over the roll in such a way as to elucidate the music during performance, e.g., 'Here the "Exposition" ends and the "Development" begins,' and so on. Simplest of all—and likely to be most popular—are the Annotated rolls, which give us some of the features of the other kinds expressed in a more easy-going way.

When Sir Henry Hadow, in his speech at the inauguration of 'The World's Music,' said that it marked the beginning of a new era in music, he was uttering no poetic flight, but sober truth. There is hardly a department of music that will not sooner or later be benefited. The school singing, dancing, drill, and appreciation classes, the lecture-hall, the pianoforte studio, the home circle, are all being catered for in a multitude of ways that can be realised only by a study of the descriptive literature issued by the Æolian Company, which I presume is to be had for the asking.

As a result of all these developments in the reproduction of musical performances, we hear jeremiads over the silencing of the amateur musician. I suppose my experience is typical. When I installed a player-piano in what must, for the want of a better term, be called my home, I was told that the members of the household would play no more. Whereas in the past we had attacked (with a measure of hope and courage that took little account of technical deficiencies) a Bach Fugue or a Beethoven Sonata, we should in future hold our hands for very shame after being able to turn on at will the performance of a Cortôt or Hoffmann. So said Jeremiah. But it hasn't worked out a bit that way. I doubt if our gnarled and stumbling fingers have played a quaver less than before. Why should they? The pleasure we take in playing is independent of any question of standard, and can never be provided by the performance of anybody else, however perfect. This is proved over and over again in a hundred activities of life. Has anyone ever heard of a visit to Lord's reducing the enthusiasm of the Saturday afternoon club smiter? Do amateur actors give up in despair after an evening at the theatre? Coming to music, we find the most convincing answer of all. The gramophone has for long been specially active in the recording of 'star' singers. According to Jeremiah, all our amateur soloists should have been silenced years ago. But have they? They have not. On the contrary, in the whole of our rough island story there were probably never so many singers, of all ages, shapes, and sizes, and of every degree of almost incredible badness, lifting up their voices as there are to-day. If we want to sing or play (and most of us do) we shall not be abashed into silence by gramophone, wireless, or player-piano. Dum spiro cano—especially those of us who can't o—and nothing but a lethal chamber can gag us.

Just as I am writing this comes—very much to the point—a press cutting of an article by Richard Capell in the New York Sunday Times. Mr. Capell heads it 'Domestic Music-Making in England,' and becomes almost lyrical concerning the joy of doing as opposed to mere listening:

> There never has been a time [he says] when music was not actively practised in England. Only the practice has generally been of a social and even (shall I say?) sporting kind—productive of endless domestic entertainment—if not of the achievements that strike the eye of the world at large.

The characteristic of English music generally, he thinks, is our 'determination to amuse ourselves with it.' This is true, and on the whole we are not bad judges.

Mr. Capell hits a good nail well on the head when he differentiates between the pleasures of the listener and the performer. How can these dull choral societies continue singing 'The Messiah,' year in year out, and amateur orchestras and chamber music parties go on with their everlasting Mendelssohn and early Beethoven? asks the mere listener. He can never get a convincing answer till he becomes a member of one of them. As Mr. Capell says, there are works so hackneyed that we cannot sit through them. 'But growl we or scrape we never so badly, we are glad to accept an invitation to take part.' To those who object that purely musical considerations have too little to do with such pleasures—that it is 'a vulgar physical result of exercising muscles and taking in oxygen'—he replies that 'you cannot separate music from the physical movements on which the creation of music depends.' And he shows that a very considerable mass of music simply owes its existence to this fact. 'The performers' fun is one of music's raisons d'être,' and 'an allowance of comfort and joy to the performer is a condition of healthy music':

> Who, I ask you, among us amateurish stumblers at the pianoforte—us who have had the best times in life picking our way through the 'Forty-eight' and Beethoven's Sonatas—has ever been able to thank Schönberg with any sincerity for his Op. 2?

In fact, if music is what it claims to be, a great popular art, its position is almost entirely due to the large proportion of fine works that are, so to speak, current coin for amateur fingers and voices. Does anybody suppose that music achieved its present universal appeal merely by being listened to? I go further, and say that in most cases we rarely get at the inside of a work until we wrestle with it ourselves. A hundred subtleties and beauties, especially in construction, reveal themselves only to 'amateurish stumblers.'

I wish I could think Mr. Capell was right in his remark concerning 'celebrity concerts.' He admits that we share with the rest of the world such brilliant musical functions as recitals by Kreisler and other stars that whirl across our firmament (or should we not call it rather our Tom Tiddler's ground?):

> But [he goes on] such things are for a mere handful of Londoners, and there is nothing characteristic about them. Such music is like canned food—it tastes the same the whole world over.

It is, and it does. Unfortunately the taste for it is not confined to a handful of Londoners. I could take Mr. Capell to many a provincial town where the art has to struggle hard, not for lack of willing, hard-working enthusiasts, but because their labours are in a constant state of semi-frustration owing to nine-tenths of the local cash available for musical spending being swallowed up season after season by these same touring celebrities. 'Canned food'—yes! But a lot of people like their victuals that way, and are even prepared to pay more for it than would give them far more wholesome fare of their own growing. A half of the sum picked up by the flying star—hard cash that disappears entirely from the district, and often even from the country—would set the local choral, orchestral, and operatic societies, and the competition festival, firmly on their feet for the rest of the year. No doubt these tourists leave behind them some trailing wisps of glory, and some stimulus to the local performers, but it is dearly bought. And in what a narrow orbit do they move! The composition and publication of music might almost cease for all the interest they arouse in contemporary art, or, indeed, in anything outside the little bag of works with which they sing, fiddle, and thump their way round the globe. Kreisler, for example, said to an interviewer a few weeks ago, 'Why should I engage an orchestra when I can fill the Albert Hall by myself?'—which is about as cynical an utterance as ever fell from the lips of a great artist. The mere asking of such a question shows that he could never really understand the answer. Yet this is so commonly the attitude of the star, that nobody seemed to see in the remark anything to cause pained surprise. On the contrary, a shock would have been felt had he said, 'I have the public at my feet, eager to listen to me whatever I play. A crowded Albert Hall is an honour that carries with it a responsibility. I shall therefore engage a fine orchestra and conductor and, rehearsing diligently, will give a performance of the (say) Beethoven or Elgar Concerto that will make the concert a matter for pride to all concerned, from myself to the programme-sellers.'

That the musical world continues to go round instead of coming pretty well to a standstill is due to the less famous artists—all honour to them!—who say 'I will' rather than 'Why should I?'

I seem to have wandered a long way from 'The World's Music,' but there is, I hope, sufficient connection to warrant the journey. Let me go a little further along the same road, and say a word or two about the Daily Express community singing enterprise. Community singing is one of the few good things of which we can hardly have an overdose, so long as we don't claim too much for it. For instance, we must not forget that it can never take the place of good, cultivated choral singing, and that in the long run its influence in every way is smaller in value than that of the less showy choral society—especially the choral society in the small town or village. With that reservation, musicians will wish well to the Daily Express venture. At the same time, I believe I am only saying what many are thinking when I point out that the campaign has started with some statements that are simply not true. For example:

> For the last hundred and fifty years the British people have had little or no opportunity of meeting in public to sing without restraint. The Daily Express movement will awaken the power of song once more in Great Britain.

—and so forth.

Perhaps it is inevitable that for a great popular newspaper the only things that happen are those that occur resoundingly in the market-place, preceded—even accompanied—by flourishes of trumpets. That is why the Daily Express is apparently unaware that excellent community singing has been heard at competition festivals up and down the country for some years, and that fine work was done even in the open air by the League of Arts at the close of the war. This burning, though belated, anxiety on behalf of popular choralism is welcome, but is the Daily Express setting about the improvement in the most practical way? (From the musical point of view, that is; nobody questions the advertising side.) Community singing would benefit far more from a decentralised method than from a solitary orgie in the Albert Hall. And instead of lavishing thousands of pounds on a new scheme, why not spend the money, or a good part of it, in supporting organizations that (despite balances on the wrong side) have been for years working successfully all over the Kingdom to revive and keep awake the power of song that has so suddenly aroused the interest of the Daily Express? I think the answer need not be given.

However, let us be glad that the newspaper has sought advice of authorities beyond cavil: we may trust the powerful committee to keep the movement on the right lines. How easily it might get on to the wrong track is shown by this extract from an article in support of the scheme, written by Dame Clara Butt:

> When I was in Australia recently I decided to give a series of really 'popular' concerts, at which I would sing just those things which my audience chose for me. . . . We were crowded to the doors, and beyond, at each of these popular concerts. My audience came to hear the things they knew—'Abide with me,' 'She wore a wreath of roses,' 'The Holy City'—and in that fact I think you have the most essential point for consideration by those who are to be responsible for this great new movement.

Can you see a committee that includes Sir Hugh Allen, Sir Walford Davies, Sir Henry Wood, Mr. John Coates, Dr. J. B. McEwen, Mr. Frederic Austin, Mr. Geoffrey Shaw, &c., regarding as an essential point the fact that a crowd of people came to hear the Dame sing 'Abide with me,' 'The Holy City,' and 'She wore a wreath of roses'?

DR. BLOW'S CHURCH MUSIC AND ITS DEFORMITIES

By Heathcote D. Statham

John Blow was born in 1648 and died in 1708. There is no need here to write about the details of his life, which can be found in Mr. Barclay Squire's article in 'Grove': but it must be mentioned that he was a Church musician in some capacity for nearly the whole of his life. At various times he was chorister at the Chapel Royal; organist at Westminster Abbey and the Chapel Royal; almoner and Master of the Children at St. Paul's Cathedral; master of the Royal vocal music and composer to the Chapel Royal. He was twice appointed organist of Westminster Abbey, relinquishing his first appointment to make room for Purcell, and being reappointed at Purcell's death.

Blow was a voluminous composer of Church music. Omitting the Anthems to Latin words (some of which are mere fragments of a few bars' length), he wrote at least a hundred Anthems and thirteen or fourteen Services. It may be safely said that, at the most, not more than half of these have ever been printed, and even this is probably a too liberal estimate. This neglect is rather surprising, for there can be little doubt that in his own day Blow held a high position as a Church composer, and was next in importance to Purcell. The latter's Church music has fared well enough as regards publication, for it was printed in its entirety in the last century and is now in process of re-publication. Greene and Croft also have bulky volumes of Church music to their credit; but Blow has received only occasional attention from editors, and no attempt has been made (so far as the writer knows) to bring out a volume devoted to even a portion of his Church music. The late W. H. Husk, however, copied out practically all of it: his beautifully written MSS. are in the British Museum (Add. MSS. 30,288-30,292), and it is to these that the student who would conveniently examine the whole body of Blow's Church music has to turn.

Blow's manner of writing for voices is unconventional; and this gives to his music an interest apart from its very real beauties. He shocked Dr. Burney terribly, as the following extracts from the famous 'History' will show:

> Though there are strokes of pathetic and subjects of fugue in Blow's works that are admirable, yet I have examined no one of them that appears to be wholly unexceptionable and free from confusion and crudities in the counterpoint. . . . It does not appear that Purcell, whom he did himself the honour to call his scholar, or Crofts, or Clark, his pupils, ever threw notes about at random in his manner.

Referring to the violation of rules in an Anthem, he says:

> . . . they seem such as no rule, authority, or effect can justify; 7ths resolving on the 8th, ascending and descending; 2ds treated with as little ceremony as 3ds. Indeed, I never saw so slovenly a score in print; and it may, in general, be said of his faults in counterpoint, that there are unaccounted millions of them to be found in his works.

By way of example the reader is then 'served with a plate full of his deformities,' and full of Dr. Burney's spirited comments on these deformities. There is some justification for Burney's severe strictures. Blow is often careless, leaving consecutive octaves for which there seems no justification; sometimes, also, his pleasure in clashing part-writing results in passages which can almost be called barbarous. He is seldom conventional; in contrapuntal passages he allows the voices to hit against each other relentlessly; two parts may move consecutively at any intervals—octaves, sevenths, fifths, fourths, or seconds; major and minor thirds are sounded above a note simultaneously, as are major and minor sixths; dominant sevenths resolve upwards, suspended sevenths almost anywhere; so that from an academic point of view his scores do show that slovenliness which so roused Dr. Burney's indignation. It would be wrong to suppose that he broke the accepted rules of harmony because he did not understand them. He understood them well enough to write a short treatise* on harmony, which appears to be quite orthodox. In breaking rules, he seems to do so on the principle that the words and the ideas that arise from them are more important than the rules of harmony; and that good tunes are more important than good harmony, or even than good counterpoint. If he gets an idea that he cannot work into his music without breaking a rule, he will break a rule rather than spoil his idea. Similarly, he will break a rule of harmony rather than spoil a good tune in one of the voice parts. The opening bars of his Anthem, 'O praise the Lord of Heaven' (7),† are a typical example of his writing:

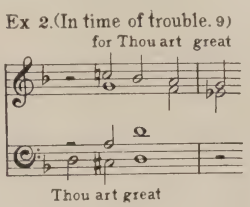
Ex 1

Here there are four places at least where an examiner would use a blue pencil: the rising dominant seventh in the first bar; the clashing C's in the second; the consecutive fifths in the second and third, and the treble D in the last. It is worth while to examine the passage in some detail, and to try to imagine the composer at work. He probably thought of the treble part first—a fine inspiring tune much too good to be altered in any circumstances. In the tenor part he wanted the tune to move straight up to 'heaven,' in a scale: to have written B on 'Lord' in the first bar would have been correct harmony, but it would have weakened the tune; therefore a rule had to be broken. In the second bar, if he had written either C natural or C sharp in both parts one would have been spoilt; therefore there has to be a clash. F is the only note in the alto that would fit into this clashing chord. To have taken the alto down on 'Lord' would have made a weak chord; therefore he keeps the stronger chord and the fifths. At the conclusion the dominant seventh resolves upwards, and the treble note of 'the' anticipates a B which does not come; but all the parts move up to the word 'height' and that, in Blow's view, is the important thing.

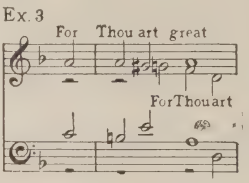
Clashes like that in bar 2 are legacies from Elizabethan music, and Blow uses them fairly frequently. The following is a perfectly logical and normal one, the sharpened seventh against the seventh with a natural:

Ex 2. (In time of trouble. 9)



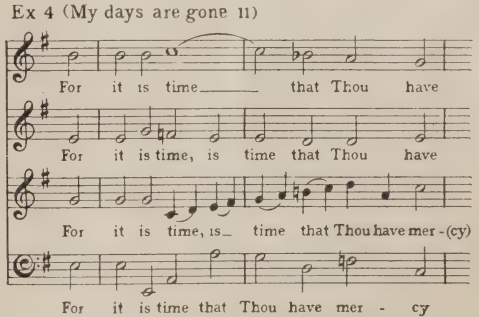
Ex. 3, from the same Anthem, is also logical enough, though it is very harsh. The treble G is obviously sharpened so that the phrase may correspond exactly with that in the bass in Ex. 2 (these two clashes are a bar apart):

Ex. 3



It is more difficult to find any logical explanation for Ex. 4, though in performance it does not sound so unpleasant as it looks on paper:

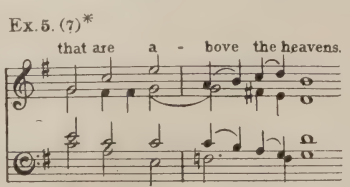
Ex 4 (My days are gone 11)



For it is time that Thou have
For it is time, is time that Thou have
For it is time, is time that Thou have mer-(cy)
For it is time that Thou have mer - cy

But Ex. 5, with the rising dominant seventh in the bass, is really barbarous:

Ex. 5. (7)*



The composer is thinking in two keys at once.

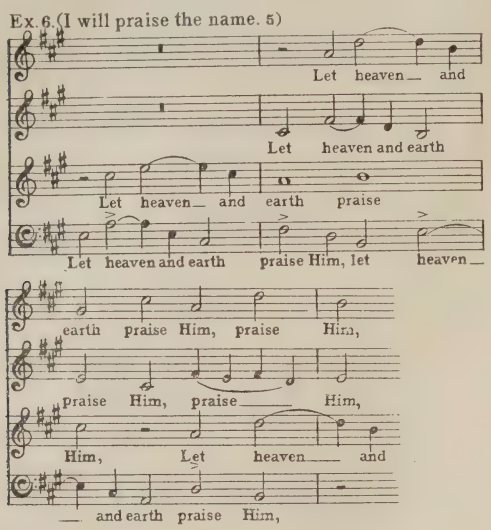
The passage is an extreme example of the lengths to which Blow will allow his regard for the melodic outline of a part to lead him. Rather than weaken the alto part with an F natural, he lets the alto sing in the key of G, while the bass sings in C at the same time.

* 'Dr. Blow's Rules for Composition' (Brit. Mus. Add. MS. 30,933).
† The examples quoted are from a set of fourteen full anthems edited by the writer. The number refers to the place of the Anthem in the set.

* It is possible that a natural in the alto F in the second bar was omitted accidentally here: but with it the passage would still be crude. The part-books quite clearly show the passage as written, and therefore it must be taken as correct. For if one once began to bowdlerise Blow's music, there would be no knowing where to stop.

In using these clashes Blow is definitely looking back to the Elizabethan period. Another link with this period is his use of rhythms which cannot be conveniently barred, a method of writing which many of the Restoration composers could assume on occasions. Ex. 6 is not in the style of the Elizabethans, but it owes something to them :

Ex. 6. (I will praise the name. 5)



Let heaven— and
Let heaven and earth
Let heaven— and earth praise
Let heaven and earth praise Him, let heaven—earth praise Him, praise Him, praise Him, praise— Him,
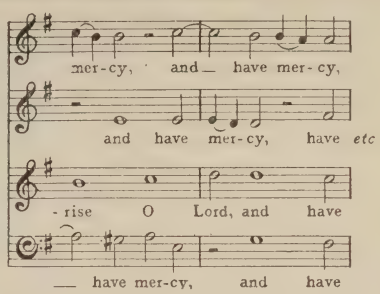
Him, Let heaven— and
— and earth praise Him,

Passages similar to this are common in Blow's Anthems, and this free handling of the voices is an integral part of his technique in part-writing. Such passages are seldom of any length : they occur in patches in the Anthems, as is to be expected at a time when composers were experimenting with new methods of composition, but were not yet far enough away from the 16th century to have completely forgotten the old. As Gibbons, the last of the great writers in the polyphonic style, could foreshadow in his music the style of a later period, so Purcell and Blow, the outstanding composers of the new period, would look back—perhaps with a shade of regret in their eyes for the great days that were gone—to the Elizabethan period.

A much finer example of independent rhythms is the following, from 'My days are gone' (11) :

Ex. 7.

A - rise O Lord, A-rise O Lord, A -
A-rise O Lord, A-rise O
A - rise O Lord, A - rise— O Lord,
A-rise— O Lord, A-rise O Lord, A-rise
-rise O Lord, and— have mer-cy, and have
Lord, and— have mer - cy, have mer-cy,
A - rise,— A-rise O Lord, A -
O Lord, and have mer-cy, and



The opening of this is quite in the Elizabethan manner. The quotation contains some unconventionalities which are fairly common in Blow's Anthems. The consecutive octaves between the treble and tenor (which are not mitigated by the minim rest) are characteristic, and the composer quite often misses direct octaves by a hair's-breadth in this way. At the end of this Anthem there are a pair of direct consecutives which look as though they were intentional, though it is of course impossible to decide whether, in writing direct consecutives, Blow was careless, or merely did not care. (There are some extremely slipshod octaves in the eight-part verse in 'Praise the Lord, O my soul' (1).) In the above example the clashing resolutions on the word 'mercy' (Dr. Burney would call these 'strokes of pathetic') give a good idea of Blow's daring and successful methods. This Anthem, 'My days are gone,' is a fine and deeply-felt work, worthy to take a place beside 'Salvator Mundi' or 'My God, my God.'

(To be continued.)

THE ENGLISH ABROAD

By Jeffrey Pulver

(Concluded from October number, page 904).

Peter Philips, organist and composer, was another of the celebrated Englishmen to enrich the Continental music of his period. He became so popular in Flanders, that when Breughel de Velours painted his set of pictures, 'The Five Senses' (Prado Museum), he limned a book of music standing on the instrument in one of the pictures, with the title-page readable : '. . . di Pietro Phillippi Inglese, organista . . .' He was active in Flanders before 1590, for he dedicated the collection of madrigals, 'Melodia Olympica,' which he edited, from Antwerp, on December 1, 1590 (published in 1591). Philips the Romanist, like Deering, found in the Netherlands a more sympathetic atmosphere than in England. In 1598 he appears (from the title-page of his eight-part madrigals) to have been organist to the Archduke Albert. The second book of madrigals (1603) shows him to have been organist to the Archduke and Archduchess Isabella. He entered holy orders, and held various ecclesiastical appointments besides his musical post. His music is well worth revival, if only on account of its historical interest. At the same time, in spite of occasional tediousness which can easily be avoided, there is much in his work that is strong, clear, and convincing. A list of Philips's works, complete as far as I was able to make it, was given in my article on this musician in Musical Opinion for January, 1922.

We now approach a performer and writer to whom the music written on the Continent for the keyboard instruments owes much more than is generally supposed—John Bull. It is now some years since the great influence of the early English writers of this class of music upon the musicians of Europe has been recognised. But it is not every reader interested in the history of English music who has the leisure (or even the command of foreign languages) to obtain the information from such works as Nagel's 'Geschichte der Musik in England,' or Van den Borren's 'Les Origines de la Musique de Clavier en Angleterre.'* It being generally—one may say at the present moment universally—accepted that the art of the Continental writers of clavier music, culminating in the productions of Johann Sebastian Bach, owed much of its development to the English musicians (notably John Bull), the importance of Bull's teacher, William Blitheman, must be apparent to all: for although it was Bull who actually exercised the influence upon the foreign writers, it was with the methods he had acquired from Blitheman that he did it. Distinguished as a composer of keyboard music that abounds in great technical difficulties and tricks of digital dexterity, William Blitheman was an exception in an age in which most musicians devoted themselves almost exclusively to ecclesiastical music. In his compositions for the virginal he shows clearly how far his teachings were impressed upon his eminent pupil, John Bull; and Blitheman thereby becomes entitled to one of the foremost places among the men who foresaw the possibilities of their instruments. And later composers and performers, such as Bull and his Continental followers, needed only the mechanical improvement of the instruments in question—an increase of power, the means of tone-gradation, the tempered tuning, and the action that would permit of more rapid repetition—fully to develop the ideas formulated by Blitheman. Like his pupil, Bull, he was also an able executant on the organ; and Francis Meres (in 'Palladis Tamia,' 1598), only seven years after Blitheman's death, names him as one of the great musicians of his age. Those who know him only from the example of his work printed by Rimbault, in 'The History of the Pianoforte' (1860)—an uninteresting arrangement of a 'Gloria Tibi'—may with justice wonder at Meres's selection. It is a pity that Rimbault was ignorant of the existence of specimens of Blitheman's art that are more representative of his skill. The research of the past sixty-five years has brought to light sufficient evidence in the form of musical compositions to justify our revised opinion on Blitheman's merits. An excellent account of his life was given by Dr. Grattan Flood in the Musical Times for June, 1926. Examples of his work may be seen in MSS. preserved in the British Museum: Add. 17,802-5 (containing Motets), Add. 29,384, Add. 30,485 (ff. 58*b* and 59, 'In Nomine'), Add. 30,513 (the Virginal Book of Thomas Mulliner, containing fourteen compositions by Blitheman), and Add. 31,403. An 'In Nomine' is included in the Fitzwilliam Virginal Book (Fitzwilliam Museum, Cambridge), constructed on the same plainsong as is used in MSS. Add. 30,485 and Add. 31,403. It is No. 50 in the Cambridge MS., and may be seen in vol. i. (p. 181) of the Breitkopf & Härtel printed version, edited by W. Barclay Squire and J. A. Fuller-Maitland (1894-99). Hawkins, in his 'History of Music' (Appendix), printed an organ piece by Blitheman, with the heading 'Meane.' In passing it may be mentioned that the 'In Nomine' was a favourite form of instrumental composition at the period, and was very frequently employed to provide music for the consort of viols. It was polyphonic, and used a few notes of an old church chant, named after the opening words of the text, 'In Nomine Domine.' This motive was given to one of the inner parts, and was carried right through the composition in sustained notes, as in its original vocal form. The remaining parts descanted freely above and below it (v. the present writer's 'Dictionary of Old English Music,' 1923).

John Bull (1563-1628) came under the tutorage of William Blitheman in the Chapel Royal of Queen Elizabeth, and succeeded his teacher as organist after the latter's death in 1591. At that period there was no especially recognised post of organist to the Chapel Royal, one of the Gentlemen performing that duty. One John Hewlett was also appointed in 1591, 'in Mr. Blitheman's place,' but this probably refers to the post of Gentleman of the Chapel in the ordinary meaning of that title. At the funeral of Queen Elizabeth (1603), both Bull and Howlett (sic) are named as 'Gentlemen of the Chappell,' without any further information as to their duties. There is, of course, ample evidence of Bull and Blitheman having played the organ in the Chapel Royal, but the present writer has not met with any entry stating specifically that John Hewlett or Howlett ever did so. The reasons for Bull's departure from England are not perfectly clear. He had already been abroad, in 1601, when he travelled on the Continent and aroused very great enthusiasm by his playing. At St. Omer he was the hero of the feat described so picturesquely by Anthony Wood. While in the city named he was shown by a musician

> . . . a lesson or song of forty parts [and was] challenged to add one more part to them.

The Englishman accepted, and was secured in a room with a supply of paper and pens. When he emerged he had added, not one more part, but forty more. Wood improves the story by an epilogue:

> The musician . . . swore by the great God that he that added those forty parts must either be the devil or Dr. Bull . . . whereupon Bull making himself known, the musician fell down and ador'd him.

It was probably the great enthusiasm his skill aroused on the Continent that caused the Queen to order his return before some ambitious foreign court secured his services. But, as already hinted, the causes for his permanent self-banishment are to a great extent mysterious. He had been accused of certain crimes which no Gentleman of the Chapel Royal could face unless he had a complete defence. Whether he was guilty or not cannot be decided to-day. He may have wished to take service at a Catholic Court, and went to Brussels without leave, realising that no licence to travel would have been granted him for this purpose. The Cheque-Book of the Chapel Royal has the entry:

> 1613.—John Bull, Doctor of Musicke, went beyond the seas without licence, and was admitted into the Archduke's services and entered into paie there about Michaelmas.

The English ambassador to the Low Countries, Trumbull, was ordered to protest. His report can be seen in the British Museum (Add. MS. 6,194), and in it he says:

> . . . and I told him plainly, that it was notorious to all the world, the said Bull did not leave Your Majesty's service for any wrong done unto him, or for matter of religion, under which fained pretext he now sought to wrong the reputation of Your Majesty's Justice but did in that dishonest manner steal out of England through the guilt of a corrupt conscience, to escape the punishment, which notoriously he had deserved, and was designed to have inflicted on him by the hand of justice, for his incontinence, fornication, adultery, and other grievous crimes.

* An English translation of this work is now published by Novello.—Editor.

These charges do not seem to have impressed the Archduke, for Bull remained with him as organist at Brussels. In 1617 he followed the famous Waelrent at Antwerp, dying in that city in 1628. There will be no need to give a list of Bull's works, for many of them are by no means difficult of access. For our present purpose it will suffice to remember that among the virginalists, organists, and writers for these instruments he was undoubtedly one of the very first, and that his technical brilliance as a performer must have been positively amazing. This being so, we need not be surprised to find that he often makes feeling and depth subservient to virtuosity. Not that he possessed no profundity; he merely preferred to cater, in the compositions he wrote for his own instrument, for the performer, and to give the latter some music in which he could exhibit his talents as an executant.

Not only were our theoreticians, virginalists, and organists deeply respected and imitated on the Continent, but our lutenists also were eagerly sought after by foreign employers of musical talent. John Dowland, indeed, was desired by a number of Continental princes with a fervour that was almost a frenzy. He was probably the greatest lutenist that graced the history of English instrumental music, and could hold his own even in Italy, where the art of the lutenist had by then reached such a high state of development. Dowland had been hoping for a post at the English Court; but when, after the death of John Johnson, that post was still withholden, he decided to leave England, on account of his religion, as he says in a letter, dated 1595, to Sir Robert Cecil.

The Duke of Brunswick made the first offer for his services. Dowland was welcomed with every mark of admiration, received > . . . a rich chain of gold, 23*l.* in money, with velvet and satin and gold-lace for apparell, and a promise to give as much as any prince in the world.

This tempting offer was declined. The lutenist then went to see the Landgrave of Hessen, who was as desirous as the Duke of Brunswick to secure Dowland's services. He sent > . . . a ring into England to my wife, valued at 20*l.*, and gave me a great standing cup with cover gilt, full of dollars.

He was equally unsuccessful, for Dowland confessed to a 'great desire to see Italy.' He wished to study with the celebrated Luca Marenzio, and went to Venice and Florence, where he 'played before the Duke and got great favours.' While at Florence he fell in with some English recusants who promised him a Papal pension if he would enter the service of the Pope. This appears to have frightened him, for he wrote that he had never 'heard any Mass in England,' and that he could not entertain the idea of serving 'the greatest enemy of my Prince, country, wife, children, and friends.' He abandoned his projected journey to Rome, gave up his plan of having lessons from Marenzio, and returned to Germany. In 1598 he became lutenist to Christian IV., King of Denmark, receiving the large salary of five hundred dollars a year, besides frequent gratuities.

There can be little doubt that Dowland influenced the Continental musicians; indeed, as a writer of songs he merits fuller recognition than he has received. Nagel ('Annalen der Englischen Hofmusik,' 1894) is perfectly right when he says that > . . . this beautiful art of the Elizabethan era, which reaches its climax in the strictly noble works of William Byrd and in the sweet strains of John Dowland.

Besides his well-known English publications, he contributed, under the name 'Johannes Dolandi Anglus,' to J. B. Besard's 'Thesaurus Harmonicus' (Cologne, 1603); to Füllsack's 'Auserlesene Paduanen' (1607-09); to Thomas Simpson's 'Opusculum' (1610); to Van den Hove's 'Delitiae Musicae' (1612); to Fuhrmann's 'Testudo Gallo-Germanica' (1615); to Besard's 'Novus Partus' (1617); and to Simpson's 'Taffel Consort' (1621). In addition he translated the 'Micrologus' of Ornithoparcus into English.

The famous lutenist Cutting was another who took the English traditions in lute-playing abroad. At the beginning of the 17th century he seems to have been in the service of Arabella Stuart, for Anne of Denmark wrote her that Christian IV. wished to engage Cutting:

> . . . the King off Denmark's gentleman haith insisted with us, for the licensing your servant Thomas Cottings to depart from you but not without your permission to our brother's service. [March 9, 1607.]

Prince Henry also wrote to Arabella in the same strain:

> The queenes majesty hath commaunded me to signifie to your ladyship that shee would have Cutting your ladyship's servant to send to the King of Denmark because he desyred the queen that shee would send him one that could play upon the lute.

Cutting went to Denmark, probably in succession to John Dowland. I am indebted to Mr. W. Barclay Squire for his courteous permission to use the Arabella Stuart correspondence.

Yet another English lutenist to achieve fame abroad was Thomas Robinson, the author of 'The Schoole of Musicke' (1603) and 'New Citharen Lessons' (1609). In the dedication of the first-named work to King James I., Robinson says:

> . . . I can say for my selfe, that once I was thought (in Denmarke, at Elsanure) the fittest to instruct your Majesties Queene, our most gracious Ladie and Mistres.

A couple of violists ought to be mentioned, too, in order to demonstrate that all branches of music's art had English exponents capable of sustaining our nation's honour 'beyond the seas.' There was, for instance, William Brade, who spent practically the whole of his active life abroad. Before the end of the 16th century he was gambist for a couple of years to Christian IV. of Denmark, whose court-music, by the way, was very largely supplied by British musicians, for besides Dowland, Robinson, Cutting, and Brade, already mentioned, there must have been a number of Englishmen of only slightly lesser repute. Previously to 1594, and after 1596, Brade made music for the Margrave of Brandenburg. In 1599 he returned to Copenhagen, and stayed there until 1606. From 1609 he was leader of the Hamburg municipal musicians. In 1614 he was active at the Court of Holstein, in 1618 he was busy at Halle-on-the-Saale, and in 1619-20 he was back at Brandenburg. At that period of his career he was at the height of his reputation, and acted as director of the Margravine music at Berlin. He was treated there as a very celebrated man, received five hundred thalers a year, was given extra board wages with free wine, all other expenses, and two 'liveries of honour.' Yet before 1620 ended he had returned to Denmark, and in 1622 he was again at Hamburg, dying there on February 26, 1630. He must have been of a very restless disposition, for he remained in no service for very long at a time. Nevertheless his influence on the performers with whom he came into contact must have been very great. In 1609 he published at Hamburg his 'Newe Ausserlesene Paduanen, Galliarden, &c.,' and his 'Musicalische Concerten.' In 1614 he appeared again in print with a similar work; in 1617 with 'Newe Ausserlesene liebliche Branden, Intraden, &c.,' and in 1621 with 'Newe lustige Volten, Couranten, &c.'

Another English performer on the viola da gamba who was considered a good enough musician to entertain and instruct his employers and colleagues on the Continent was Thomas Simpson. Like Brade, he was active in a number of musical centres, and also published his compositions on the Continent. Before 1610 he was violist at the Court of the Elector-Palatine, and between 1617 and 1621 he played for the Court of Holstein-Schaumburg. Like so many of his countrymen, he gravitated to Copenhagen, but stayed there only a short time. His works include 'Opusculum Newer Pauanen, Galliarden, Intraden,' &c. (1617), and 'Taffel Consort' (1621), besides contributions to contemporary publications.

A complete account of the influence exerted upon European music by the musicians of this country cannot of course be given in an article of this nature. But enough has been said, I think, to show that from the 13th to the 17th century England merited and enjoyed a musical reputation that made of many of her children models for the Continental artists. The moral to be drawn is surely that England can still deserve the praise of the cultured world if she be true to herself; if her musicians go to their own ancestors for their exemplars, and do not turn—as the composers who wrote in England when Purcell died—to an imitator rather than to one who brought a natural development to a certain point for his successors to take a stage farther. English models, which many of the greatest of the Continental musicians thought good enough to follow, must surely be good enough for the descendants of those models.

SCRIABIN: A COMMENT

By ROBERT H. HULL

In the July and August numbers (1926) of the Musical Times we find Scriabin pilloried by Mr. Brent-Smith, who expends considerable energy in trying to demonstrate conclusively the inherent illogicality of the composer's harmonic system and the worthlessness of the philosophic connection. In the September issue a correspondent takes Mr. Brent-Smith to task for his critical confusion of the philosophy with the music. The point I wish to make could not be better emphasised than by direct quotation from Mr. Fennell's letter:

> The test (and, I think, the justification) of Scriabin's method lies in the hearing of his work, not in the analysis of the harmony by reading the scores. His work should stand or fall as music, and consideration of it should be unhampered by the philosophic theories which may or may not have actuated him during its composition.

This comment puts the matter very clearly and, I believe, justly. The question opened by the discussion alluded to is of more than local importance, and may be extended further:

> A Delius score often seems surprisingly clumsy and incompetent, but nevertheless it seldom fails to convince one in performance (Cecil Gray).

This is equally applicable to Scriabin. On paper much of 'Le Poème de l'Extase' looks as though it were conceived originally for a keyboard instrument, and yet it is far from being orchestrally cumbersome.

The next point for consideration is Scriabin's harmonic system. For some reason its evolution is often considered to be lacking in spontaneity. But it is not claimed that there was anything new in the scale he adopted, and, if his means of self-expression was forced, then others have fallen into the same error. He employed the Duodecuple scale as Elgar and Debussy have done. It is true that there the resemblance is at an end, because Scriabin developed along his own lines, but the fundamentals are common to all modern composers who employ that particular scale. We have no more reason to charge him with an artificiality of musical construction than we have in the case of Debussy. Let us extend this a little further.

Both Scriabin and Debussy limited their resources severely by a self-imposed harmonic restriction, yet both composers developed successfully the individual systems to their extremes. The work of Debussy loses nothing of its poetry within the confines of the whole-tone scale, while Scriabin's superimposed fourths achieve only an occasional monotony. Even in certain of the later pianoforte pieces, founded virtually on two chords, sometimes only on one, he attains to real beauty by means of a melodic outline governed by the scale of his adoption and by the use of appoggiaturas. It is all quite legitimate, and for the most part, successful. The furthest possible expansion of Scriabin's harmonic scheme is seen in 'Prometheus' and later pianoforte pieces, culminating in the last five Preludes (Op. 74).

The question raised by the connection between Scriabin's music and his philosophical ideas is a little more profound. Let us first consider what should be the attitude towards the five Symphonies. It has become the fashion of our time to treat as absolute music the first two (and possibly the third) Symphonies, but to emphasise the theosophical programmes of 'Le Poème de l'Extase' and 'Prometheus.' This attitude is, to my mind, mistaken and unnecessary. Neither of the two latter works depends on the programme for its ultimate effect any more than does Strauss's 'Till Eulenspiegel.' It is possible that for some people the two later Symphonies of Scriabin gain in æsthetic value if the listeners have in mind a fable telling of the struggle of the soul or any other convenient fantasy of the imagination. The same is true of a Sonata bearing the posthumous title 'Moonlight.' The point is that such fantasies must not be insisted upon as essential to an understanding of the music. 'Le Poème de l'Extase' is a natural expansion of the germ contained in the third Symphony, while 'Prometheus' stands in the same relation to 'Le Poème de l'Extase.' That should be sufficiently convincing. With a due respect for chronology the same reasoning can be applied to the Pianoforte Sonatas.

It must be admitted that Scriabin himself is largely to blame for the misinterpretation to which his works have so often been subjected. His pianoforte and orchestral compositions are positively littered with such extravagances as Avec une volupté dormante, Avec émotion et ravissement, and a dozen others. It has been found that these rather immoderate directions are largely non-essential. They may be respected without being followed too literally. In taking this line Scriabin's interpreters are doing him no injustice. Broad, general indications are the most that a composer can reasonably hope to have followed, and it is on these lines that editors have for the most part set to work in dealing with collections of the classics. Here, as elsewhere, moderation is the safest mean, since reaction surely follows extravagance in any direction.

What of the future of Scriabin's music? For the moment his writings are out of fashion, the almost inevitable result after an overdose in the last few years. The ten Pianoforte Sonatas certainly have a niche of their own, if no very exalted one. Dr. Eaglefield-Hull seems too optimistic in ranking them with the forty-eight Preludes of Bach, the thirty-two Sonatas of Beethoven, and the pianoforte works of Chopin. Such an allowance is rather over-generous. But the pianoforte works as a whole may well go side by side with those of Debussy. After all, the estimated value of a composer is purely comparative, and any arbitrary standard is bound to prove futile. One can only indicate his own conclusions, to be confirmed or disproved by others. But to make a composer, as in Scriabin's case, the object of excessive praise or blame must prove prejudicial to fair and dispassionate judgment; in music, as in all else, no extreme will serve.

NEW LIGHT ON LATE TUDOR COMPOSERS

By W. H. Grattan Flood

XXII.—William Byrd

At the outset, let me say that the leading biographical details of William Byrd are to be found in the excellent account of his life and work by Dr. E. H. Fellowes (Oxford University Press, 1923). There are, however, not a few additional facts that I have been fortunate enough to unearth, and therefore it may be well to include this great master, 'never without reverence to be named of the musicians' (as Morley declares), in the present series. As Dr. Fellowes disarms criticism by stating that his little book 'lays no claim whatever to deal with the subject in a critical or exhaustive manner,' no apology is needed for the additional matter here presented. I do not intend to touch the subject of Byrd's works; this aspect of 'the parent of British music' has been so magnificently dealt with in 'Tudor Church Music' (vol. 2 of the Carnegie edition), that I am confining myself to the biographical data.

First of all, as to Byrd's ancestry. None of our musical historians give exact data concerning his birth and paternity, the general view being that nothing is known of his early life, save that he was probably a native of the county of Lincoln. Dr. Fellowes, like others, suggests that Byrd may have belonged to the family of that name settled at Epworth; but the registers for the year 1543 are altogether missing, and no positive evidence is forthcoming.

From a careful sifting of evidence, I feel convinced that Byrd was the son of Thomas Byrd who was a Gentleman of the Chapel Royal under Henry VIII., Edward VI., and Queen Mary. From 1528 to 1540 he enjoyed the patronage of Cromwell, and on February 19, 1537, he was presented to the parish church of Houghton, Lincolnshire, vice Master William Franklyn, resigned, on promotion to the Deanery of Windsor. He probably married in 1540, and in December, 1542, his distinguished son, William, was born. From 1542 to 1547 the name of Thomas Byrd appears among the annuitants in the Book of Payments of the Court of Augmentations. He retained his post in the Chapel Royal under Edward VI., and received livery as a Gentleman of the Chapel Royal at the Coronation of Queen Mary in October, 1553. His death occurred in 1556.

We are safe in assuming that William Byrd was brought up in the Chapel Royal from 1552 to 1559, when his voice broke, and we are told by Anthony Wood that he 'was bred up to musick under Tallis.' Bower was Master of the Children during these seven years, but it is quite probable that Tallis was organist and actual instructor in music, and in a Latin eulogy prefixed to 'Cantiones Sacrae,' in 1575, Ferdinand Richardson hints at the fact of Byrd having been a pupil of Tallis.

While still a choir-boy, in 1558, Byrd composed an elegy on Queen Mary, 'of Henry great the daughter,' he being then in his sixteenth year. We hear no definite news of him for the next four years, but he was appointed organist of Lincoln Cathedral on February 27, $156\frac{2}{3}$, the exact date being recorded in the Chapter Acts.

As is well known, he married Juliana Birley, at Leicester, on September 14, 1568, and his eldest son, Christopher, was baptized on November 18, 1569. Three months later—on February 22, $15\frac{69}{70}$—he was sworn in as a Gentleman of the Chapel Royal, and in 1572 he became Assistant-Organist to his old master, Tallis—both of them soon after obtaining a patent for printing and selling music and music-paper for twenty-one years.

In 1576, Byrd and his family settled at Harlington, a village in West Middlesex, where they remained for sixteen years. In November, 1577, Bishop Aylmer returned Juliana, 'the wife of William Byrde, one of the Gentlemen of her Majesty's Chapel,' as a recusant, and also the wife of Doctor Story (Dom. Eliz. cxviii., No. 73, P.R.O.). The Sessions Rolls of Middlesex record true bills against Mrs. Byrd for not going to church, from 1580 to 1591, while Byrd himself was returned as a recusant in October, 1586, and April, 1592. These bills are positive proof that Byrd was a staunch upholder of the ancient Faith.

About the year 1570 Byrd obtained some Madrigals and Neapolitans from Thomas Copley, a distinguished Catholic recusant, who was prosecuted by Bishop Aylmer in November, 1577. Many of these Madrigals, or Neapolitans, in three parts, were arranged for the virginals by Thomas Packington (one of the Court Minstrels), who was the composer of the famous 'Packington's Pound' ('Packington's Round').

A further proof of Byrd's strong adherence to the old creed was his setting to music Father Henry Walpole's beautiful verses on the martyrdom of Blessed Edmond Campion, S.J., in December, 1581. Curiously enough, Dr. Fellowes was unaware of the authorship of this glorious composition, though he quotes the first stanza :

> Why do I use my paper, ink, and pen,
> And call my wits to counsel what to say ?
> Such memories were made for mortal men,
> I speak of saints whose names cannot decay.
> An angel's trump were fitter far to sound
> Their glorious death, if such on earth were found.

In November, 1585, Byrd was asked by the Earl of Rutland to suggest a competent teacher for Lady Elizabeth Manners, at an indoor salary of £10 a year (Rutland MSS., i. 184).

In 1602 he appears to have lived as domestic musician in the house of the Earl of Worcester, in the Strand, London, and there is an interesting reference to him in a letter from the Earl of Worcester to the Earl of Shrewsbury, dated September 19, 1602 :

> We are frolic here at Court. Irish tunes are at this time most liked ; but in winter, 'Lullaby,' an old song of Mr. Byrd's, will be more in request, as I think. (Talbot Papers.)

Byrd, in spite of all persecutions, held his post in the Chapel Royal till his death. His last recorded appearance is as one of King James's Chapel at the funeral of Queen Anne, in 1619 (Lord Chamberlain's Accounts, vol. 556). He made his will on November 15, 1622, professing his faith as 'a true and perfect member of the Holy Catholycke Church.' The striking tribute of the clerk who noted down Byrd's death in the Cheque Book of the Chapel Royal is worth recording : 'A Father of Musicke'—July 4, 1623.

Byrd's famous 'Non nobis Domine'—still sung as a 'Grace after Meat'—is referred to by Dr. Blow, in 1699, as 'Byrd's anthem in golden notes,' and was published by Playford in 1651, with Byrd's name. More interesting still is the fact that in an autographed manuscript score of Byrd's 'Gradualia,' dated 1605, this celebrated canon is found on the title-page by a former owner, while the subject appears in one of the 'Cantiones Sacrae,' Byrd's first publication, in 1575.

Music in the Foreign Press

AN UNKNOWN SKETCH OF MOZART'S

In the September Musik, Peter Epstein describes the first rough draft of Mozart's Pianoforte Sonata in D major (K.284), which differs in many respects from the final version.

THE HISTORY OF THE TOCCATA

The September Zeitschrift für Musikwissenschaft contains an essay, by Leo Schrade, on the early history of the Toccata :

> Both the name and the actual type may be traced back to music written for the lute. In Petrucci's 'Intabulatora de Lauto' (1508), four pieces by Dalza appeared under the title 'Tastar de corde con li soi recercar dietro'; and the first known example of an actual Toccata is by Francesco da Milano. It is not so characteristic as Merulo's Toccatas. Other important stages are marked by the works of Luzzacchi, Trabacci, Sweelinck, Gabrieli, and Frescobaldi. Pichi's Toccata in the 'Fitzwilliam Virginal Book' and the Toccatas of the German composer, Steigleder, are also mentioned.

BUSONI

In Caecilia (September 10) appears Jan Van Gilse's recollections of Busoni.

MACHINERY AND MUSIC

The August Auftakt is devoted to machine-made music and to the relationship between the spirit of machinery, so to speak, and the spirit of certain types of modern music. The contributors are Dr. Steinhard, N. Stuckezschmidt, Dr. Holl, H. Weiskopf, Dr. W. Heinitz, and T. Bunzefedern.

FRENCH COMPOSERS AT WORK

From the September Revue Pleyel we learn that Albert Roussel has just completed an orchestral Suite, and is planning a dramatic work. Vincent d'Indy has written a 'Diptyque Mediterranéen' for orchestra, and is writing a Concerto for pianoforte, 'cello, and string orchestra. Ravel is at work on a Sonata for pianoforte and violin.

SOME NEW PERIODICALS

The first issue of Crescendo, a monthly published at Budapest under the editorship of Dr. Otto Gombosi, contains an article by the editor on Hans Koessler, who died at Budapest in May last, at the age of seventy-three, and under whom Bartók and Kodály studied composition.

Handel's plagiarisms are described by Romain Rolland. Dr. L. Fabian writes on film-music ; and Irma Popper offers suggestions that aim at improving the current methods of teaching acoustics.

A new Dutch periodical is referred to in the notes from Holland on p. 1037.

M.-D. CALVOCORESSI.

COLOUR-MUSIC : AN EARLY EXPERIMENT

BY W. G. BADGER

Much has been written in recent years concerning the analogy, real or imaginary, which exists between colour and sound. The theories of Prof. Wallace Rimington on this interesting subject are by now widely known ; somewhat less accessible are the theories and experiments of Scriabin, who — in collaboration with Prof. Rimington, I believe— built a large 'colour organ,' operated by a keyboard, for the purpose of combining projected colours with music, the rays of light being 'composed' and written in accordance with a pre-arranged 'scale.'

However much or little may be known of Scriabin's experiments in this direction, it is generally believed that he was a pioneer in the matter, but such is not the case. About the year 1815 a Frenchman named Castel constructed an instrument for the performance of music in terms of colour, based upon the following 'scale' :

Mid. C	... ...	Dark blue
C♯	... ...	Sea green
D	... ...	Bright green
D♯	... ...	Olive green
E	... ...	Yellow
F	... ...	Aurora
F♯	... ...	Orange
G	... ...	Red
G♯	... ...	Crimson
A	... ...	Violet
A♯	... ...	Blue-violet
B	... ...	Sky blue
C	... ...	Middle blue

Here, of course, Castel had exhausted the whole range of visible colours for one octave of sound, so he advanced the ingenious suggestion that for the succeeding octave the colours should be the same, but much more vivid!

Having arranged this scale the inventor proceeded to construct his instrument. It consisted of a pasteboard cylinder which revolved on its vertical axis within a wooden box of square section, just large enough to contain it. At the same time that the cylinder revolved it travelled upwards about half an inch per revolution. In a vertical line upon the face of the wooden case were cut eight apertures to correspond with the eight notes of a musical octave, the face of the enclosed cylinder being visible through these 'windows.' The surface of the cylinder was then marked out on a spiral line with spaces which should successively come opposite the slot in the case corresponding with the note required, according to the melody to be translated into colour. These spaces on the cylinder were then cut out, and the resulting slits covered with coloured paper corresponding with the colour of the note to be represented. The cylinder was illuminated from the inside, the coloured apertures only allowing the light to pass.

Thus we have an illuminated and perforated cylinder, looking very much like a modern player-piano roll, revolving inside a case, and during its movement bringing various spots of coloured light into the view of the spectator, each light appearing at its proper window according to the note represented. For instance, this passage:

would be represented by:

(1)	Dark blue	appearing at the bottom		'window'
(2)	Orange	,,	fifth	,,
(3)	Orange	,,	,,	,,
(4)	Orange	,,	,,	,,
(5)	Aurora	,,	fourth	,,
(6)	Yellow	,,	third	,,
(7)	Bright green	,,	second	,,
(8)	Aurora	,,	fourth	,,

and so on.

M. Castel apparently did not claim that a person viewing this succession of colours would recognise the tune represented, but he believed that any melody thus shown would present the same pleasant succession of sensations to the eye as the notes did to the ear.

So far I have not succeeded in discovering any contemporary comments upon this instrument, or any expressions of opinion by those who saw it demonstrated.

ON SIMPLICITY IN MUSIC

By Robert H. Hull

The evident reaction which has set in against the Elizabethan revival is one of the signs which prompted this article, but as that particular question has been ably dealt with already (Musical Times, August, 1926), it is not my intention to go into the matter here, except in so far as it is incidental to the discussion. The kernel of the problem concerns the essential simplicity or complexity of musical ideas, and some of the questions with which such ideas are associated.

In the last few years people have suffered a good deal from the musical policy, 'Simplicity for Simplicity's sake.' The Elizabethan revival and the 'Immortal Hour' were signs of this—good signs, perhaps, but as practical ideas they were in danger of being worked to death. The most active champions of this policy carry their argument on to somewhat dangerous ground. They urge that a simple musical idea is of greater value to musical literature than a complex idea, just because it is simple. In practice this leads to an indiscriminate support of folk-songs, madrigals, and the like, many of which are mediocre if not definitely poor in quality. My present purpose is a further examination into this argument and some of the things that it implies. Those who advance it certainly have some show of reason on their side. They point out that simple music expressed through simple media (a very important consideration) must have a wider appeal, and admit of a greater understanding by many more people, than a complex work expressed through an elaborate medium. This in itself is a perfectly sensible statement, and one with which few people would quarrel. It is the next stage of the argument that is open to question, if only on the ground that, logically, it is unconvincing—viz., the assertion that the simple in music is of greater value, to musical literature, and to ourselves, than the complex. This statement is a half-truth. Simple music, as seen in madrigals, church services, and music suitable for a small vocal ensemble, is, as it were, the 'silver' of musical currency, but it cannot claim to greater value than the 'gold' of the same currency on the score of a greater power of divisibility. Of course it depends largely upon what we take to represent 'gold.' Wagner's 'Ring' suggests itself as a possible example. But divisibility is only one stage in the argument. There is the further assertion that all music should be reduced to simple terms, that complex ideas should be excluded from musical literature just because they are complex. It is important that there should be no obscurity on this point, and perhaps some examples will prove helpful. The question, from this particular angle, resolves itself into one of texture. 'If J. S. Bach could express himself in four contrapuntal parts, why must Mr. X. Y. Z. write in twelve?' In this particular connection Bach and Reger may serve for comparison. The question is really not so hard as it seems. If Reger writes in twelve parts and Bach writes in four, we are not going to penalise Reger so long as he has something to show for the trouble which he gives himself and us in using a particularly thick texture. It is out of all reason to expect an elaborate set of Variations to be worked out in terms of a madrigal. Musical history certainly shows that great men of the past have managed to express the most elaborate ideas in comparatively simple media, but the point is that we must not condemn complexity if a complex device happens to serve a composer's purpose. His music may gain nothing in effect, but it is not for us to take it upon ourselves to issue a prohibition against this or that form of writing. It is of no use for the Elizabethan enthusiast to give himself airs at the expense of a follower of Reger.

At the same time it would be futile to deny that the 'Simplicity' movement has brought certain beneficial results in its train. For one thing it has given impetus to the endeavours that were made to free the sphere of Church music from some of the worst traditions of the last century. Composers began to write simple, well-built anthems and services which did not rely on cloying harmonies for their ultimate effect. Chromaticism in sacred music began to go out of fashion, and there was an effort to revert to a horizontal rather than a vertical texture. The idea behind the movement was excellent, but it was driven to extremes; as a result there is, by way of reaction, a spirit of moderation abroad which should adjust the balance. It is being realised that extremes in music will not serve, and development along these lines should make the musical history of the next fifty years extraordinarily interesting.

Another indirect result which seems wholly praiseworthy is the apparent revival of the chamber orchestra; one says apparent because the movement is not as yet sufficiently established to allow it to be spoken of as a recognised system. But the indications are all in favour of its development, and we have now an increasing number of such organizations. In his book, 'The New Music,' Dr. George Dyson discusses this question in a chapter entitled 'The Architecture of Music.' Quotations are apt to suffer when divorced from their context, and as the paragraphs cannot here be set down in full, I would refer those interested in the subject to this illuminating chapter contained in one of the clearest and most striking books dealing with problems of contemporary music.

With regard to the means which brought about this particular movement, the influence cannot be assigned to any one circumstance or combination of circumstances. The following suggestion is not more likely to be correct than the ideas of others, and with that permanent reservation is set down here for what it is worth. Wagner and Strauss set us the fashion in big orchestras, and their successors were apt to forget that the knowledge of how to handle successfully a large combination of instruments is not given to all. Wagner could succeed every time where others, with too great a presumption, courted dismal failure. This fashion seemed greatest in intensity about 1914; since the war it appears to have declined, for reasons that are largely economic. But the system is still with us (e.g., Honegger's 'Pacific No. 231'), and overlaps what one hopes will prove to be the rebirth of the chamber orchestra. Actually, we need to have both systems at our disposal, musical conditions being such that the one is not sacrificed at the expense of the other.

Our final consideration must be the effect the 'Simplicity' movement has had upon the composers of our time—an effect which is most noticeable in one particular direction. We have witnessed a great revival of folk-music, bringing with it inevitable excesses, but it is doubtful whether any useful purpose would be served by censoring those who had made manifest in their compositions a somewhat indiscriminate enthusiasm for the songs of the people. The matter would be serious if there were signs that the folk-song movement had left a lasting impress upon the work of those whom we count amongst the leading men of our age, but there are indications already that the influence is proving transitory in effect, and not such as to scar permanently the best achievements of those of whom it is said that they have yet to make their greatest ultimate contribution to the music of our time. There is evidence enough to show that the individual idiom of the foremost of our composers will work itself free from a superimposition of synthetic folk-music, and that a healthy reaction from what was at one time undoubtedly a strong influence will help to maintain a nice equipoise. We have an assurance, strengthened by historical precedent, that those who have anything of permanent worth to contribute to contemporary music will pursue their way, unhindered in their ultimate achievements by any of the extravagances of our age.

COMMERCIAL ORCHESTRATION

By S. W. Oliphant Chuckerbutty

The art (or, rather, 'feat') of orchestrating light music according to the requirements of music publishers is something quite apart from that idealistic and not very difficult subject imbibed by budding composers at our great musical institutions.

It is an extremely complicated affair when you go into it, and, strangely enough, many of the most successful orchestrators for the large firms are men who seldom or never compose any music of their own, but score only other people's compositions.

What, then, are the fundamental features which distinguish this 'commercial' orchestration? In the first place, it is concerned only with the hard facts of life; it is the result of actual experience in orchestras as opposed to the rules of the text-books. The main requirements are: (1.) Picturesqueness of colour; (2.) Economy in use of instruments; (3.) Ease of execution (e.g., it should not require rehearsal to obtain the general sense); (4, and most important)—The scoring should be for a full orchestra, but arranged in such a way that practically any of the instruments can be dispensed with without undue loss.

The first requirement (picturesqueness) is a matter of instinct, and also demands a minute knowledge of every effect which can be produced in every register of each instrument, including the percussion department.

The second (economy) is where the aspirant finds the shoe pinch. It is of no use to score for four flutes, four clarinets, double-bassoon, divided violas, &c. These combinations are simply never met with among the orchestras which play light music (i.e., those in kinemas, restaurants, seaside band-stands, &c.).

(3.) Ease. Unless you understand the genius and fingerings of all instruments, ease cannot be attained.

(4.) Adaptability. The work is required for all sorts and conditions of bands, from trios upwards, and one edition has to be used by all. By the use of a good pianoforte part, together with a harmonium copy, and by means of cueing-in all the essential leads of the less common instruments in the parts of those more commonly met with, it is possible to make a good full score which can be gradually thinned down to a pianoforte, violin, and 'cello trio, or even pianoforte and violin alone.

First let us consider the string department. Practically all bands have two or more violins, and one each of violoncello and double-bass; violas are not frequent, and second violins are sometimes dispensed with. In any case, don't rely on violas—give them a part, but one that can be put in on the pianoforte, as is usually done. It is advisable to write the double-bass part pretty high. This releases the violoncello to play tenor counter-melodies instead of following the bass about in octaves, like a sort of Great to Pedals coupler. The essential 'lead' comes from the first violin, which should also have cues of all wood-wind solos. The famous 'Tavan' arrangements generally cue in the oboe leads an octave lower for the violoncello. Why, it is not quite clear. There should be a good first-violin conductor copy, in case the conductor is a violinist, as generally happens.

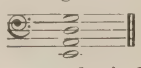
Write for the four-string double-bass, tuned



Next consider the wood-wind. The clarinet is frequently met with, and is an invaluable instrument. In a small band it acquires much greater weight and importance than in a symphony orchestra, and is chiefly used to fill up the middle registers with counter-melodies. Flute leads should be cued in the clarinet part. A flute is often met with also. Here the treatment is similar to that of the symphonic flute. The lowest register, however, tells out wonderfully in a small band. Oboes and bassoons are infrequent, but still not absolutely unknown. They should be scored for, but not made indispensable. The large bands usually have two flutes, two clarinets, one oboe, and one or two bassoons.

Now we consider the brass. You can count on at least one cornet or trumpet in any but the smallest band, and you should study the way in which the cornet has a decided lead of its own, as well as doing a great deal of solo work and filling in. Score for two cornets in A or B flat.

Horns are very infrequent, the parts being usually put in on the pianoforte. Score for four horns in F or E flat, but don't count on having any.

One tenor trombone is very frequently met with, and puts in both tenor and bass parts. Score for two tenor trombones and one bass.

Nearly every band has what are known as 'double drums'—i.e., one player manages timpani, bass drum, cymbals (with the feet); side-drum, triangle, tambourine, &c. This part wants very careful writing, and may make or mar an otherwise excellent score. In any event the score should be able to dispense with the pianoforte at the following strength: 1st and 2nd violins, 'cello, bass, 1 flute, 1 clarinet, 2 trumpets, 2 trombones, 4 horns, and drums.

A good harmonium part is required, and is not easy to make; many such parts are mere travesties and of no use at all. The harmonium should contain all the wood-wind parts at least. Put in an obbligato real bass for Pedal 16-ft. in case an organ is available, as happens in many picture houses.

Lastly, study a few good examples. Fletcher, Coates, Higgs, German, Coleridge-Taylor, are all excellent models; but the best object-lessons in this kind of scoring are the justly celebrated 'Tavan' operatic transcriptions, which are thought out with great minuteness and sound well on any combination of instruments.

'TONGUEING' ON WIND INSTRUMENTS

By Maurice E. Whittaker

(Of the Hallé Orchestra)

Many a good player is harassed throughout a lifetime by a 'bad tongue.' A quick staccato passage causes great nervousness, and its execution blemishes otherwise faultless playing.

In this article I purpose to discuss this branch of the wind-player's necessary equipment, with a view to assisting those who suffer from such an irritating handicap.

In the first place the matter is psychological and also somewhat paradoxical. If a player thinks he can 'tongue' rapidly—he can; if he believes he cannot—he cannot, no matter even if he can! The first essential, then, is to build up some reasoned confidence. We all know the player who actually stutters and yet can tongue with terrific speed; and on the other hand, the man who possesses a quite fluent speech but whose tongue lags behind his fingers in maddening fashion when he is confronted with rapid staccato.

Certain players believe that one has but to practise tongueing with increasingly fast tempi to be certain of great improvement. Contrarily, many others maintain that the tongue cannot be materially improved by any amount of practice.

If the latter view is correct, is there then no hope for sufferers? Let us endeavour to look at the problem from fresh angles. It is possible that a little trickery may mean more to us than all the steady, legitimate, dreary practice on the old lines.

We are familiar with the old exercise:

I suggest that it is a waste of time to tongue slowly if speed is desired. Therefore the first portion of this exercise means so much waste time and energy. Let the pupil try a different avenue and carry out the following instructions:

Stand erect and completely fill the lungs; then, forming the lips as if about to whistle, emit the air in tiny gusts, from the diaphragm, as it were, not the throat, while keeping the tongue absolutely still.

After emptying the lungs a few times slowly in order to accustom himself to the idea, the pupil should endeavour, seriously, to imitate the sound of a motor car before and after the driver pulls the lever to drop a gear. It is difficult to explain without practical demonstration, but the earnest investigator should find that he can induce the reiterated gusts of air suddenly to attain great rapidity.

This is the underlying secret of this method of rapid staccato and when it has been acquired it is necessary to persuade the tongue to 'wag' and follow the gusts of air when they are being emitted at the maximum of rapidity. The rest is a matter of practice, this exercise being applied to the instrument. Never try to apply it to the instrument, however, until the matter is fixed in the mind.

There is certain to be some difficulty at first in getting the tongue to move with the reiterated breaths, but ultimately, if persevered in, the player will experience a kind of mental 'click,' and the tongue will shoot merrily away on the second speed in the same way, almost, as the motor engine does when the driver pulls over the gear lever.

One player will acquire the trick almost at once, whilst another may take weeks, but that it can be done—and without a teacher—has been proved. Given an understanding of the principle, and the necessary perseverance and concentration, success is certain. It may be helpful to point out that in the normal tongueing the player must make a separate and distinct effort (small though it may be) for each note, but in the second speed the only effort called for is the start, and of course the required 'push,' to secure the necessary accent of the music.

In applying the tongueing to the instrument the best way to commence is by this rhythm :

Ex. 2.

&c.

Begin the triplets at such a tempo that the tongue must use its fastest 'first speed,' so that when the semiquavers are reached the speed will call for that 'spurt' into the 'second speed' which is wanted. Here let the tongue 'race.' It does not matter much how uneven and out of time it is at first, so long as the transition into the second speed is obtained.

The player should utilise every opportunity to practise, away from the instrument, as it is far more useful to practise for several short periods than a few long ones. As soon as fatigue manifests itself stop ! To attempt to force the effort is to injure one's prospects of success.

It will be found later that it is more difficult to 'race' in triplets—that is, to obtain an accent on the first of threes instead of fours, but practice will cure this. Master the second speed in fours first.

The reader may object that it is an unwise procedure to depend on a method which appears to be unreliable and uncertain ; but practice and familiarity will prove the 'second speed' quite dependable, and bring into being the necessary confidence for its use. Further, it is my opinion that all players possessed of a rapid staccato use the 'second speed' consciously or unconsciously.

It should not be imagined that this method of attaining a high speed (the 'second speed') implies strain. On the contrary, it eliminates strain.

When the 'second speed' has been acquired the player will have perceived that it is distinct in character from his normal tongueing, and that it will become actually easier than the other.

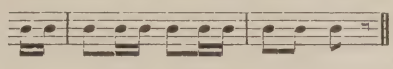
Let us now pass on to consider another method —a very ingenious one. In this the tongue, instead of touching the reed in the usual way, attains the same end by passing across the aperture by an up-and-down (not a horizontal) movement. By so doing the tongue, instead of having to make two movements, a forward and a backward, for each note, makes each attack by a single movement, up or down as the case may be. Begin with a downward stroke preferably. The synchronization of the tongue strokes with the fingers in moving passages will probably cause some difficulty, but the method ought to be fairly easily acquired.

And now to a third plan. All that has been said applies particularly to the oboe, clarinet, and bassoon, many of the players of which instruments envy the flute and brass players who can 'double-tongue' and 'treble-tongue,' and who consequently do not experience the difficulty of executing all rapid staccato whether in threes or fours or sixes, by the ordinary tongueing.

Writers on instrumentation seem to agree in asserting that 'double-tongueing' is an impossible achievement on a reed instrument. Prout in his 'Instrumentation' (chap. iv., p. 92) says : 'On reed instruments, as the reed itself is in the mouth, this [double-tongueing] is impossible.' Now, although the fact of the reed being in the mouth makes it more difficult than in the case of the flute, double-tongueing is not impossible on reed instruments. On the contrary, it is a practical and convenient assistance whether employed for the easy execution of such figures as in the last movement of the 'William Tell' Overture :

tah kah tah tah kah tah tah kah tah tah tah.

Ex 3.



or in longer passages such as the clarinet and bassoon runs in the last movement of Beethoven's fourth Symphony. True, it is a matter of some difficulty to surmount the natural tendency to unevenness, but the flute players are under the necessity of overcoming the same trouble although not quite to the same extent. The unevenness is caused by the undoubted tendency of the second syllable, the 'throat-note' (the 'kah'), to lower slightly the pitch of the note. This tendency can be counteracted by the familiarity acquired by the necessary practice.

Of the three foregoing methods the student should select the one which most appeals to him as being best and most easily acquired, and ignore the others —at least, until he has properly and safely acquired that one.

THE TOUR OF THE MÄRKISCHE SPIELGEMEINDE THROUGH THE SOUTH OF ENGLAND

By ROLF GARDINER

The Märkische Spielgemeinde, or Playguild of Mark Brandenburg, was founded in 1921 by members of the Altwandervogel, one of the oldest orders of the German 'youth movement.' Its purpose was to specialise in play-acting and singing, and to lead the movement in these activities.

For three years, week-end expeditions were undertaken with a faithful regularity, a day's marching in the country leading the score or so of young men and women into some provincial town of the Mark. Here they would put up a booth in the market-place, or go into a school building, and entertain the local inhabitants with a mystery play, a comic play by Hans Sachs, or one of their own improvisation. They would sing in the streets and market-places, and on the Sunday morning in the parish church. They also took part in certain national festivals, at Flensburgh under the Danish frontier, and in Carinthia at a big Wandervogel meeting.

Latterly the play-acting was given up in order that they might concentrate wholly on singing and instrumental music. They were fortunate in having a leader of exceptional gifts and ability in Georg Götsch, now Professor of Music at the Volkmusik Hochschule at Charlottenburg. He was one of the chiefs of the Wandervogel movement, and also a member of the Jöde-kreis (Prof. Fritz Jöde, Fritz Reusch, &c., who are responsible for the revival of the Madrigal in Germany). Supported by a loyal publishing firm (Kallmeyer Verlag, Wolfenbüttel), and by the Prussian Ministry of Education (at the head of which is the very able Dr. Becker), these friends have been able to move continually about Germany holding courses of community singing and instruction in the old madrigals and folk-songs, thus creating a national movement which so far has had only a somewhat tentative counterpart in this country.

The Märkische Spielgemeinde is, so to speak, the vanguard of this movement. It consists of some hundred members, chiefly resident at Berlin, a large number being students, but also including engineers, bank clerks, teachers, and the like. The average age is twenty-two to thirty. All are amateur musicians, with the exception of Prof. Götsch and a few students of the Charlottenburg Conservatoire.

The Spielgemeinde does not give 'concerts.' In Germany no audience may listen to the singers without being made to sing in turn itself. Georg Götsch and his friends consider the concert a lopsided and spiritually bankrupt form, which must be overcome and transformed. Likewise, in sympathy with Mr. Arnold Dolmetsch in this country, they are opposed to the use of the pianoforte; old instruments, consorts of viols, lutes, flutes, and recorders are to be used again.

The visit of the Spielgemeinde to England this autumn was made partly in response to two expeditions undertaken by English Morris dancers to Germany since the war, of which the second took place last July, when the 'Travelling Morrice' (a party of students and others from Cambridge) journeyed to Hamburg to take part in a Festival there with German folk-dancers and the Märkische Spielgemeinde, dancing later in the streets of Lübeck, and on the shores of the Baltic.

The preparation of the Spielgemeinde tour was beset with difficulties. Prejudice, undue cautiousness, apathy, lack of time, or overcrowded programmes, made the task arduous and often hopeless. At one point, it seemed almost wiser to abandon the expedition. Finally, however, a restricted itinerary in the South and West of England was arranged, and twenty singers (including six instrumentalists) were invited, with their leader, Prof. Georg Götsch.

Arriving at Southampton on September 18, where they were greeted by students of University College, the company went direct to Bedales School, near Petersfield, where, by the kindness of Mr. J. H. Badley, a building was provided. A week was spent in rehearsals and in giving local and impromptu concerts. On September 23 a recital of sacred music, including Bach's Motet, 'Singet dem Herrn,' and works by Josquin, Schütz, Walther, Prætorius, and Gumpelzhaimer, was given in Petersfield Parish Church to a crowded congregation. The next day, at very short notice, a madrigal concert was arranged at Charterhouse School, Godalming, where warm applause ended an unusual programme. The singers entered the hall, coming through the audience, singing in procession a canon of Beethoven's, 'Signor Abate.' Madrigals by Senfl, Othmayr, and Melchior Frank were given, canons by Haydn and Mozart, and many folk-song settings, some by Götsch himself. At the end a Bach Motet, 'Der Geist Hilft Schwacheit auf,' was sung.

Saturday, September 25, saw the party at Leighton Park School, Reading, together with the Berkshire Branch of the English Folk-Dance Society; and Sunday, after a fifteen-mile walk, at Marlborough College. Here the memory of Charles Sorley was specially emphasised by the concert given in the Memorial Hall.

A walk over the Wiltshire downs brought the company to Calne, and Bath, where the stones of the Abbey and the Roman Bath both asked for the homage of music, but where local prejudice was too strong and had the upper hand. A warmer welcome was given at Bristol, where the students of the University provided generous hospitality. 'Sellengers Round' was danced on the summit of the University tower, and a recital of sacred music given at Oakfield Road Church.

The company dividing, concerts were given next day at Winscombe, in Somerset, and in the Town Hall, Hereford. At Winscombe the audience was aroused to sing English rounds and sea-shanties between the pauses of the programme, and a vigour was shown worthy of a singing county.

On September 30 a large congregation assembled to hear the Spielgemeinde in Hereford Cathedral. Despite certain acoustic difficulties and the smallness of the choir (only twenty-two singers), a memorable service took place. Particularly did Josquin's 'Ave Verum,' with its quiet simplicity, impress the audience. A similar recital at Worcester Cathedral next day was even better. The acoustics were more favourable, and Bach's 'Jesu, meine Freude' was sung—unaccompanied, of course, and from memory.

A fine autumn day's marching led the company over the Cotswolds to Burford. At Stow-on-the-Wold a halt was made to dance English country dances in the market-place, and the grey stone walls rang with the Lantsknechtlieder of the Thirty Years' War. In the evening the church house at Burford was packed, and a programme of 17th-century songs seemed wonderfully in tune with the spirit of the place.

On October 3 we went to Boars Hill, Oxford, to visit the Poet-Laureate and to sing Bach, Schütz, Prætorius, and Josquin to him and other distinguished friends. Later, in the courts and gardens of Chilswell, small knots of singers made music in turn, so that, to quote Mrs. Bridges herself, 'it seemed as if the garden were blossoming into sound.' Mrs. Bridges played Byrd and Purcell to us on her clavichord, and for good-bye the Spielgemeinde sang part of 'Singet dem Herrn.' Then we marched down through the mists of the Thames Valley and up into Oxford City to the strains of old marching songs and Lantsknechtlieder.

London offered a busy programme, with recitals in the churches of St. Martin-in-the-Fields and St. Michael Cornhill, and madrigal concerts at the National Union of Students, Student Movement House, the English Folk-Dance Society, and the German Embassy. Despite the heavy strain of these engagements (all within two and a-half days) the company maintained its freshness and gaiety of spirit. A farewell concert was given at Southampton on October 7. The hall was overcrowded, and the audience enthusiastic. It was with much regret that the Spielgemeinde left England. The party bade farewell by singing the lovely 17th-century madrigal, 'Wir lieben sehr in Herzen,' on the tender which took them to their ship.

Mr. Gardiner, who has written the above, was responsible for the tour he describes, and I should like to place on record the extraordinary amount of work and energy that he put into the organization of the event, despite the fact that his time was already fully occupied. He suffered many disappointments over it; but I am sure that, along with everyone who heard the choir, he was amply repaid by the results.

The Spielgemeinde has taught some of us several very important things in connection with our music. The first is that most of us do not know how to sing a Bach Chorale. As Mr. Fox-Strangways has said:

> Surely seldom has such singing of Bach Chorales been heard here; impetuous, vital, and of a fervent expressiveness that might well serve as an example to our own choral societies.

The second is that the performance of choral works of the Bach period by giant choirs is a mistake; and the third, that the English madrigal school is far superior to the German.

As to the choir itself, there were many things to learn from its singing; but the visitors still had one very important thing to learn, and that was to sing a little more lightly and buoyantly.

But the greatest lesson to be gathered from this tour is that we must consider seriously the example offered by Prof. Götsch and the Spielgemeinde of ceasing to treat music as a 'concert art,' and of bringing it among the people of the land, with a higher standard both of technique and quality than has so far been attained by the festival movement. We must treat music less as a social activity and more as a definite part of everyday life. When we can understand this, we can understand the real significance of the English tour of the Märkische Spielgemeinde.

Christopher Mayson.

Points from Lectures

Rather out of the usual routine of lectures have been some of the speeches during the month. The Right-Hon. David Lloyd George was present at the inauguration of an organ at Clapham Junction Welsh Presbyterian Church, associated with the work of his deceased daughter. Called upon to speak, he referred to the prejudices against instruments in his youth at Criccieth. Even a tuning-fork would have been too prominent, but an adjustable pitch-pipe was tolerated if sounded faintly. Later a harmonium was introduced. He added: 'You are going to have a harp in heaven, but it was difficult to get even a harmonium on earth. Why it should be a sort of desecration of the temple to have an instrument down here with the saints on earth when you could have a full orchestra up in heaven, they never condescended to explain, and to me is one of the mysteries of the theology I was taught as a child. But a great change has come over Welsh music. I asked three great musicians which are the five greatest hymn-tunes. They chose "Mannheim," the great Luther hymn, the German "Hallelujah," the "Old Hundredth," and "Moab." Just think: "Moab" one of the five greatest hymn-tunes on earth!' Mr. Lloyd George went on to say that even bishops, not to speak of great politicians, expected a mansion in the skies. The Bishop of Chester asked only for a very subordinate position in the orchestra when he got there—or did he say 'if'? When he was addressing the conference of the British Federation of Musical Competition Festivals, and church choirs were under discussion, he spoke of village life being more satisfying because of village choirs. Certain villages, too, were associated with particular instruments: bassoon, clarinet, oboe. He (the Bishop) would gladly surrender any harp, golden or otherwise, if he might be allowed to play a note or two on the oboe in the heavenly orchestra. Instrumental music, the Sleeping Beauty, ought to be awakened in the villages, even with a caress. He wished that music were more at home in our villages, and our villages more at home with music.

The topics announced at the Federation Conference at Chester sought to strengthen what are weak points in the armour of the competition festivals. Reasons were given by the Rev. C. J. Beresford why church and chapel choirs tended to decrease in competitions. Sir Richard Terry regarded the points urged as mere excuses, futile and unreal, and if valid now were equally applicable when church choirs were the backbone of the movement. It was quite wrong to suppose that failure in a competition lowered the status of the choir-master. Some committees, added Sir Richard, chose a few pieces, and got the choirs together for combined performance, thinking that it was the whole thing required of them. Concerted music was most desirable, but a modern work demanded more than pianoforte accompaniment, and should be given adequate rehearsal, otherwise the adjudicator who took the baton could not be regarded as the 'star turn' he was billed for.

School choirs were also passed under review at Chester. Major J. T. Bavin suggested means of meeting the objections of teachers to competitions. The adjudicator should be sympathetic and helpful, and criticisms should be given to the teachers in the absence of the children. Mr. MacInnes, H.M. Inspector for Cheshire, said that locally the Board of Education did not mulct the children of their school attendances when attending competitions. The National Union of Teachers also left the teachers free to compete. The Cheshire Director of Education was equally favourable to school choir competitions, holding that the advantages outweighed any disadvantages.

The Church Congress at Southport departed from its usual apathy towards music, and one of the largest audiences of the week listened to the Rev. Prof. Percy Dearmer. Nothing was so bright as religion, he said, but we obscured it by our bad art, when by good art we ought to express it. The credit of the Church to-day stood not on the theological systems of the past, but on its architecture, its ceremonial, its music, crafts, sculpture, and painting. In the view of the Archdeacon of Sheffield, religion tended to be conventional and hieratic, while, on the other hand, art was apt to be in the grip of commercialism. Art to-day in all its processes was struggling to manifest truth, but its vision at the moment was incomplete. The Church had its opportunity and its duty to help the world to see that 'out of Zion God hath appeared in perfect beauty.' Mr. Vernon Crompton saw signs of change for the better. In the new Liverpool Cathedral there was a new humanism being clothed upon the old forms. We were too near that effort to be quite sure of our criticism, but progress was bound to be slow in face of the virulence of a civilization which, based on economic principles pure and simple, seemed to find salvation only in the scientific categories.

The service of music in the Church, the subject which Sir Henry Hadow took in preference to one announced for him, permitted him to follow up the thoughts of previous speakers at the Church Congress. As a rule, he said, Church music had been free from that commercialism which was the chief enemy of art and literature. Yet there should be an unflinching resolve not to admit to our Church services any kind or example of music which fell short of the highest standard that it could attain. It was simply untrue that there was not enough of the right sort of music to go round. The rapid advance in the understanding of music which had spread through this country in the last few years was far outstripping the bad music of his childhood. An increasing number of people were offended by what was trivial, or false, or irreverent. But a vast number adopted no criteria of excellence at all; music that was rapid in movement and brief in duration sufficed for them. He thought that nothing should be admitted to the canon of Church music which was not accepted as deserving of its place by a consensus of the liberal and trained opinion of those best fitted to pronounce judgment. A corpus of such music could easily be prepared.

Sir Hugh Allen, opening the session of the Glasgow Athenæum School of Music, extolled the delights of the string player in comparison with those of people who learned to play the pianoforte. There was no limit to the value and enjoyment of ensemble or orchestral playing. Singing, however, was the most important thing in music, and was a part of life. Community singing and congregational singing were developing, but full enjoyment was to be found in choral societies, where the range of experience was infinitely wider and more complex. Here was discipline of the finest order. The choral society habit was the great one to cultivate. The good fellowship it engendered, and the patience, grit, and obedience to authority it required, made it a most desirable culture. Referring to music in churches, he said the Church showed them the way to heaven, but it was a curious thing that when one was on the way to heaven he should meet so many tunes going in the opposite direction.

Victorianism had a bad time during a lecture by Sir Richard Terry, at the Nottingham Music Club. Musical snobs of the Victorian era, he said, contended that musical appreciation was the privilege of the few. They talked about music in a foreign language. From a nation of performers we came to be known as a nation of listeners, and that was when we began to get our false ideas about music. The gift of understanding music was a common heritage. There was an assumption of superiority, which still lingered, that we were on a higher plane musically than our ancestors. Those people whom we looked back upon as crude gropers in the dark were in many respects our superiors. Sir Richard's set subject was 'The Romance of Musical Notation,' and his lantern slides, reproducing ancient manuscripts, illustrated these prefatory remarks.

The training of Scottish organists in traditions of music in worship is being undertaken by a joint committee on Instruction in Church Music. The Rev. Dr. Millar Patrick, Edinburgh, has given the introductory lecture. As he pointed out, English chorister traditions were lacking in Scotland. Skilled executants on the organ often forgot that there was a spiritual dignity in leading a congregation in worship. Organists needed to be instructed in the interesting and significant history of Scottish Church music. Examples of errors of pace, abuse of organ tone-power, and of secular voluntaries, were given.

Beethoven is bound to come into lecture schemes during the winter season, and rightly so in celebrating the centenary of his birth. Such lectures are already being given at various places. Little that is new can be presented here. The man in the street and in the lecture-room will benefit by this useful musical propaganda. Weber, Wagner, Handel, and other great musician lecture series have also figured in the programmes of the month. J. G.

New Music

SONGS

Again in a big parcel of songs a high standard in the choice of words is noticeable; there are scarcely more than one or two examples of the old shop-ballad style. This may indicate an improvement in taste on the part of the general song-buying public; more likely it is that the publishers who specialise in that type of song have refrained from sending their issues. At the same time, apparently, we have not yet advanced far enough from the ballad age to be free from some remnants of selfconsciousness. Thus the Winthrop Rogers volume of examples by living composers is a 'Miscellany of Artistic Songs.' One doesn't want to carp at a very good thing, but if Armstrong Gibbs sets de la Mare, and E. J. Moeran sets Housman, do we need telling that the result is artistic? But that's a petulant grumble, for the volume itself is an excellent idea, well carried out. Fourteen songs are reprinted, among the composers being Clive Carey, Armstrong Gibbs, Gerrard Williams, Howells, Warlock, Maurice Besly (not perhaps very worthily represented), and Quilter. The volume is a credit to the publishers, whose agents are Messrs. Hawkes. From the same house comes Peter Warlock's 'The Toper's Song,' whose words are from an 18th-century ballad sheet, the sort of thing that Warlock has constantly produced, to every one's admiration and delight. The tune is a good straight one with a singable refrain, and the setting interesting without being far-fetched. This composer's own individuality is more clearly felt, however, in his 'Pretty ring time' (Oxford University Press), a song which is at once lifted above the ordinary level by the stimulating accentuation of the words, and some original yet simple touches of distinction in the pianoforte part. Colin Taylor, for the same publishers, has newly arranged the lovely 'O can ye sew cushions,' and fitted to it an accompaniment of undoubted charm. The charm, at any rate so far as some of the harmony is concerned, is of the pale and slightly precious sort, for this very simple tune rather over-sophisticated; but it is an effective setting, and will be popular. It is for a high voice. Herbert Menges's 'Silence, beautiful voice' (again Oxford University Press) is a setting for soprano, violin, and pianoforte of Tennyson's familiar lines. Here again the colours are pale, and there is little suggestion of real vitality in them, but at the same time the recitative is well-planned, and the effect, undeniably suitable to some aspects of the poem, well achieved.

Dekker's 'Golden Slumbers,' newly set by Maughan Barnett, is issued by Elkin under the title 'A Lullaby.' There is no great distinction about the music, though the easy melody of the first stanza fits the words quite well; when the second stanza, however, with its changed accentuation, is sternly forced into the same mould and made to fit the unaltered melody, the result is stiff and ungrateful to a degree. Vivien Lambelet's 'King's Messenger' is made by its rhythmical energy, which carries it through in spite of some mediocre material. Vitality of movement conceals the lack of other qualities: the quickness of the hand deceives the mind—for a time, at any rate. Elkin's, who publish it, also issue under one cover two short songs by Roy Agnew, 'Dusk' and 'Infant Joy.' The first of these is an effective suggestion of the atmosphere indicated by its title. Technically the result is obtained in an unusual way. A simple vocal line in the Æolian Mode—in this case G to G with B flat and E flat—is treated as if its seventh degree were its final; in other words, as if its tonic harmony were that of F major. The G, the true final and tonic of the tune, is imposed as a kind of ninth over F and C. The effect is unsatisfying; in other circumstances it would be definitely unsatisfactory, but in this example the hazy outline is suitable to the tone of the poem—and the thing comes off. 'Infant Joy' is less successful. The setting does not strike again the note of fineness that lifts the poem above the commonplace. It isn't that there is anything wrong with the music, but just that it doesn't quite get there: it is not far-reaching enough. The poem asks an intense and highly-tempered simplicity which this music cannot give.

Paterson's continue their excellent series of solos from the Cantatas of J. S. Bach, with the addition of 'Twas in the cool of eventide,' 'Only be still,' 'Hallelujah,' and 'My heart rejoiceth,' the soprano air from the Magnificat. The first of these numbers is already well-known; the second, a lovely tenor aria from Cantata No. 93, will be new to many singers, and should be noticed. 'Hallelujah' is from Cantata No. 29, and for contralto. The same publishers add two light numbers to their 'One Shilling Song Series.' The first of these is Plymouth Harbour,' by Victor Merriman, a good, plain tune, straightforwardly treated, and the second, 'Molly Dear,' a pseudo-Irish, pseudo-humorous song, which, if it deserves little, claims little.

The beautiful tune, 'Quittez, pasteurs,' has been arranged as a song, 'O leave your sheep,' by Cecil Hazlehurst: the pianoforte part is well suited to the character of the tune, as well as musicianly and imaginative; there are some good points of imitative writing, and some bell touches, in which perhaps the 'fifths' effect is too extensively relied upon. All the same, it will make a good Christmas song. The same publishers (Enoch) issue singly Landon Ronald's 'The voices all are still,' from an album, 'Songs of Remembrance,' which was noticed here on its publication some months ago. Rimsky-Korsakov's 'Hymn to the Sun,' from 'Le Coq d'Or,' is now published by Hawkes, with an English version by George Harris, jun., and Deems Taylor. The number is well-known and deservedly popular, and a new issue of it is useful. The translation is singable, but 'even the best Translation is for mere Necessity but an evil imped Wing to fly withal, or a heavy Stump Leg of Wood to go withal.' This truth applies but little, however, to Fox-Strangways's new translation of Tiedge's 'An die Hoffnung,' which was set by Beethoven and is issued by the Oxford University Press. The limp is noticeable once or twice in the opening recitative, where the difficulties are perhaps greatest; for the rest, the English is well-fitted to the musical text, and is, in addition, simple and natural in style, without any of the absurdities that used so often to mark translations.

From Schirmer's come three new songs by Bernard Wagenaar—'At dusk,' 'May-night,' and 'I stood in dreams.' In each case, again, the English or rather American words ('Thru' the branches glimmering') are a translation, the first from Verlaine, the second from Koster, the third from Heine. The music too, though published in the U.S.A., seems to have its spiritual home in Europe. Perhaps the composer when at Rome does as Rome does, when at Paris does as Duparc does, and when at Vienna does as Strauss does, or even Wagner. The songs are undeniably good, in a way: the handling is sure, and there are effects of luscious harmony that will easily pass as beautiful. But they are so much derived, so pretentious, yet so frankly studio-pieces, and the models on which they are based are so very much more the real thing, that one cannot regard them as of much importance. Of the same school, in a lower class, is Alice Barnett's 'Music, when soft voices die,' which has a pianoforte part of heavy, luxurious texture, made up of material which is really thoroughly commonplace, and only very thinly disguised by its elaborate lay-out. The music shows a knowledge of certain kinds of effect, both pianistic and vocal, and is thoroughly self-indulgent in its use of them. The inevitable result is that it very soon, if not immediately, repels the listener; this always happens, sooner or later, with music that lacks austerity. There is more vitality in Sidney Homer's setting of 'General William Booth enters into Heaven'; the force of the words made it inevitable, and the facility here is not of that sort: facility there is, however, in the over-repetition of the initial idea, and the weak sequential effects in the middle section. Some people resent and dislike the poem, others will feel, as I do, that it deserves the serious attention of some big composer. If it were really well set, as perhaps Bliss might do it, the effect would be tremendous. Its intensity will fire even this setting, if performance is good, but the spark will have come from Vachel Lindsay rather than from Sidney Homer.

There is more austerity about Leslie Woodgate's 'Littleport' (Murdoch), with its good tune and strongly-woven pianoforte part; but if there is no concession to weakness in it, there is no aloofness. Influences of the prevailing tone of English music are inevitably felt, but the song is none the worse for them, and suggests, in comparison with former works, that the composer's individuality is developing strongly. The same publishers send five new songs by Arnold Bax: 'Carrey Clavel,' 'I heard a soldier,' 'In the morning,' 'Out and away,' and 'Eternity,' which again are only for those performers who can sing with the heart and sing with the understanding also. But it is not to be expected that the songs should make themselves obvious to the first glance, and there is no doubt that as one becomes familiar with the music things soon fall into place and leave the composer's meaning clear. Take, for instance, 'In the morning.' The first impression here is that the fresh simplicity of a tiny lyric has been lost in a maze of elaboration. But as one learns to let the pianoforte part murmur along very quietly, and never become more than a hazy background, the beauty emerges clearly. The subtle meanings of Housman's last line are exactly touched, in a very far-seeing piece of musicianship. Absolute simplicity might have made an even more telling method of dealing with the poem: Bax didn't choose that way, and his method is undeniably an elaborate one; but it is a successful one. A fine song again, but on a much larger scale, is 'Eternity.' It is a great poem, but the broad outlines of Bax's opening idea do not fall short of what is wanted, and make a striking beginning. The listener feels at once that here is the real thing, an authentic experience, and no mere sham or verbosity. More dramatic in style is 'I heard a soldier,' with its quiet close after a big climax. 'Out and away' is the hardest of all to grasp and, incidentally, very difficult to perform. Its intention soon becomes fairly clear, but whether it is going to 'come off' is another question. In addition to its technical problems, the atmosphere of the poem is a highly rarefied one; and if it is captured by a slight touch, it is lost that way too. Hardy's 'Carrey Clavel' is a very different poem, and it is interesting to see now utterly the composer's style changes in dealing with it. The instinct is right again, but the result somehow seems less true to the composer's individuality than are some of the other songs; and the note of bitterness does not sound quite strongly enough in the music. Perhaps a really good singer would be able to find it and make a fine thing of the song: at present it seems to me not quite to hit the nail on the head. After these songs it is a sad drop to Mabel Browning Fairlie's 'He shall sustain thee,' which is a sacred song of the bad old type, with organ ad lib. It is difficult to see why meaningless music of this sort should be associated with words whose first quality is that of intensity. The publishers are Weekes.

Probably most children's poetry appeals chiefly to adults, and Hermann Bielefeld frankly designs his, 'Kinder-lieder fur Erwachsene.' The humour seems to me gauche and dull; some of the tunes are sprightly, but the pianoforte parts are heavy going—like the portentous gambols of baby elephants. The total result is far from childlike.

Two volumes of Polish national songs, arranged by Adam Wieniawsky, are published by Gebethner & Wolff, Warsaw. The words are printed in the original only, which prevents me from getting to the heart of the songs; but some of the tunes, whether they are genuine folk-song or not, are first-rate, and the settings are plain and effective. There is a stirring one, headed 'Oj da dyna,' in vol. ii., and a quieter but equally good one, 'Ja jade droga,' in the first set. Kinship with Chopin's Polonaises is superficially quite obvious.

Lastly, published by Wilhelm Hansen, Leipsic and Copenhagen, are two volumes of songs by Albert Mallinson, based on poems of Sappho, in Bliss Carman's translations. 'Sapphic Lyrics' is one volume, 'Songs of Lesbos' the other, and both contain songs of undoubted quality, some of which have been recently introduced at a London recital by the composer's daughter. Mallinson's style has obviously been modelled on that of the great song-writers, but if he has unconsciously and wisely followed the example of, for instance, Brahms, he has extended Brahms's technical range in every direction to meet his own needs: particularly noticeable is an imaginative and skilful use of the pianoforte's resources. The prevailing character of the poems involves a certain sameness in the colouring of the music, which is largely one of heavy emotionalism. But there is relief in the lighter texture of 'A beautiful child' and 'In the grey olive groves,' and in the rhythmic energy of 'When the Cretan maidens.' Singers ought not to let these songs remain unknown, for they contain many moments of real beauty.

T. A.

COLLECTIONS OF SCHOOL SONGS

These are days in which economy is a burning need in schools. Timely, then, are about thirty volumes of unison and two-part songs just published by Novello, which constitute, to my mind, about the best value I have seen for a long time. Twelve good songs for a shilling is the bargain in Books 278, 279, 280, 281, and 282 (these, and all the rest, are in the series of Novello's 'School Songs'). Some of the composers represented are Geoffrey Shaw, Alec Rowley, Ethel Boyce, Brahms, Bernard Johnson, and H. A. Chambers. So far we have unison songs for junior classes. For the higher divisions there are Books 283 and 284, with six and seven songs respectively. No. 284, for example, contains Holst's 'Song of the Shoemakers,' Gardiner's 'Sir Eglamore,' Shaw's 'Worship,' Sullivan's 'Orpheus,' and three others. Is not this splendid value? Seven easy songs (still unison) are in Book 285, and thirteen old English favourites of the 16th, 17th, and 18th centuries rub shoulders in a jolly company in Book 286. There are five sets, each of seven easy songs, in Books 287 to 291. All the above cost a shilling each book, except Nos. 287, 288, 289, and 290, which are even cheaper—eightpence. This is the price also of Book 292—seven higher grade unison songs, that include Arne's 'Water, parted from the ocean,' 'The lass with the delicate air,' of his son Michael, Wallace's 'Bell-ringer,' with its old-fashioned but simple and sincere touch of pathos, Henry Lawes's 'Sweet Echo,' Dudley Buck's 'When the heart is young,' and a couple of dainty items by John Ireland. I mention the contents of this as a sample of the quality of these books. Last of the unison collections is 'Autumn Days,' a song-cycle for young children, by Cecil Sharman. In a single page the composer manages to catch a mood and present it winsomely, with the aid of a cleanly drawn, nicely balanced vocal line. These are happy and attractive little ditties—sixpence the lot.

There is capital practice in canonic singing, as well as plenty of enjoyment of good tunes, in Book 272, 'Twelve Two-part Canons' (1*s.*). The remaining books (all two-part) comprise four described as 'easy' (Nos. 294, 295, 296, and 297, all 8*d.* each), one of National songs (No. 298, 8*d.*), one of anthems and sacred songs by Mendelssohn, Gounod, Charles Macpherson, and others (No. 300, 1*s.*), and half-a-dozen books containing from five to seven songs each, all of very moderate difficulty and of delightful tunefulness. These are Nos. 299, 301, 302, 303, 304, and 305 (the first and last, 8*d.*; the others, 1*s.*). To name the contents of just another volume, No. 301 contains Walford Davies's 'Humpty-Dumpty,' Mendelssohn's 'You spotted snakes,' old Morley's 'It was a lover,' Rathbone's 'Up the airy mountain,' and Ethel Boyce's 'The Swallow.' Anyone can easily get to know the contents of the other books, and I can promise that they are all 'up to sample.' Every one of the two hundred and thirty-seven songs (under 25*s.* for the lot!) can be had separately. The majority have Sol-fa as well as Staff notation.

W. R. A.

EASY PIANOFORTE MUSIC

The following numbers from the Oxford Pianoforte Series, edited by A. Forbes Milne (Oxford University Press), may all be recommended for teaching purposes. 'A Graceful Waltz,' by Norman F. Demuth, is a brief but well-written and attractive piece of about lower to higher division standard. Full of interest and widely varied in style are the five pieces under the title 'Idle Moments,' by Eric Mareo. The music contains many original touches, and though in the main fairly easy, frequently calls for considerable imagination on the part of the young player (elementary to lower grade). Two pieces for elementary pupils are 'An Old-Style Measure,' by F. Percival Driver, and 'A Tiny Suite for Tiny People,' by Olive J. Wood. Both are useful examples of two-part writing. The former is in minuet time, and one of its sections takes the form of a canon in the octave. The Suite is rather simpler, and consists of four neatly-written little dances—Prelude, Gavotte, Minuet, and Gigue. Suitable for beginners are the two books of pieces under the title 'Gleanings,' by Olive Lloyd. The pieces are very short, are graded, and could be used as first pieces.

From Paxton's come two sets of 'Contrasts,' by Harry Farjeon, Ernest Newton's Suite, 'Peter and Wendy in Never-Never-Land,' and 'Toy-Joys,' by T. Haigh. 'Contrasts' No. 1 consists of 'Leggiero' (a dainty little piece providing excellent practice in delicate staccato and mezzo-staccato) and 'Pesante' (a brief study in firm chord-playing). 'Semplice' (a simply-treated melody) and 'Con Tenerezza' (a graceful little Andante movement) constitute 'Contrasts' No. 2. They are from elementary to lower grade. The 'Peter and Wendy' Suite consists of seven easy pieces, tunefully-written in a straightforward style which should easily appeal to pupils of elementary grade—particularly those who like most of the work to be given to the right hand. From an educational point of view, Dr. Haigh's 'Toy-Joys' are more valuable, since both hands are treated as of equal importance. The four pieces in the book are also decidedly attractive, and will provide a pleasant means of developing technique. They are rather more difficult than the Suite mentioned above.

Ivy Herbert's 'Minuet' from 'Three Old Dances' (Joseph Williams) is a graceful, delicately-written little work, the chief weakness of which lies in its lack of rhythmical variety. The same publishers also send Graham Clarke's 'Snapshots' (six miniature sketches suitable for primary grade), and Book 4 of 'Music Land,' by Madeleine Evans. This last concludes a course of elementary instruction in four books, and, we are told, might serve as a link between the Primary and Elementary Grade examinations. According to the list of contents, each book provides work in aural training, reading tests for pianoforte, and short pianoforte solos. The book under notice gives some drilling in the more difficult time-figures associated with the usual time-names, reading-tests, several pages of melodies for sight-playing, and some short studies and pieces.

Elementary pupils might profitably prepare for Christmas by working at a delightful set of pieces under the title 'Pantomime,' by Dudley Glass (Murdoch). They are capital examples of descriptive music, and each piece is provided with a running commentary written-in above the notes. The music, however, will be appreciated quite apart from the comments.

G. G.

CHAMBER MUSIC

Serge Bortkiewicz's Sonata for violin and pianoforte (D. Rahter, Leipsic), and Leo Weiner's F sharp minor Sonata (E. W. Organ, Birmingham), may be considered together, since both betray in different degrees a tendency towards a saner conception of chamber music than is shown by ultra-moderns, and both composers owe something to the example of César Franck. This return to a normal state of things may induce the casual reader to express the opinion that all that these composers say has been said before. As a fact neither Bortkiewicz nor Weiner is an imitator. Both try to express ideas which are entirely their own, and often in individual fashion. They show themselves children of our time in the odd way in which they fail when they attempt to write an equivalent for the slow movement. One would say that the thoughtful, meditative mood adopted by the older composers is no longer possible to a modern, who is happiest when he is flying off at a tangent. Weiner's slow movement might be described without injustice as a succession of colour effects; Bortkiewicz's consists of platitudes, and falls far below the standard of the first movement. His Sonata indeed would gain much if the second movement were omitted, and if the third had fewer quasi-tremolandos, which may be of excellent effect in the orchestra but in music for solo instruments sound clumsy in the extreme. Both composers are happiest when they can 'go ahead' in the lyrical manner in the first movement.

The 'Caprichos Romanticos' for two violins, viola, and violoncello, by Conrado del Campo (E. W. Organ, Birmingham), if somewhat lacking in imaginative force, are well written, and should in consequence appeal to those who are eager to read new works—especially as the music offers little difficulty to experienced players.

Still easier are 'Zwei Quartette,' for two violins, viola, and 'cello, by Tartini, edited by E. Pente (E. W. Organ). These excellent specimens of the music of the period should provide capital material for teachers of ensemble, even though they do not equal the best work of their composer. A 'Streich Quartet,' by Johann Zahn, edited by H. Schindhelm (E. W. Organ), belongs to the same class. The first violin part seldom goes further than the first position, and never above the third. The composer, an 18th-century musician, born in Bohemia, has twenty-two Symphonies to his credit, yet his name will be unknown to the immense majority of performers.

Neat reprints of classical work are included in Cefe's Edition (E. W. Organ). Schubert's Trio, revised by F. Rehfeld, can he had either for two violins and 'cello, or violin, viola, and 'cello. Beethoven's duets for violin and viola provide a new version of the duet for violin or flute or oboe. A Trio of Beethoven for two violins and viola is really the two Pianoforte Sonatas, Op. 49, No. 2 providing the first movement, No. 1 the Andante and the Rondo. Schumann's 'Marchenerzählungen,' for clarinet (or violin), viola, and pianoforte, are not new music, but clearly printed and carefully edited.

B. V.

EASY VIOLIN MUSIC

A very attractive set of eight short pieces in the first position is 'The Old Man's Hour,' by Cecil C. Dalmaine, whose chief design has been to give the player some useful, well-thought-out studies in bowing and phrasing, while keeping the left-hand technique quite simple. There are variety and interest from the beginning of the 'Old Man's' reminiscences to the last of the hour when 'The old man sleeps'—a useful study in quiet sostenuto playing. The accompaniments are simple and effective. For more advanced players there are several pieces, published in separate numbers by the Year-Book Press. The arranging has been done by various hands, and the violin part edited all through by Ernest Yonge. There are some questionable details in the bowing and fingering, and in several places the pianoforte accompaniments are awkwardly laid out—notably in the Andante in E major (William Russell), which is perhaps the least successful of the pieces. It is, however, interesting to have this old music in easily accessible form. Beside the Russell item mentioned above is an Andante and Polacca by the same composer, and three pieces of Handel—Andante Larghetto from 'Saul,' Musette and Minuet from 'Alcina,' and Minuet from an Organ Concerto.

Henry Tolhurst's arrangements of 'Three Old English Tunes' (Paxton) are quite simple and effective for the soloist, but the accompaniments are rather feeble.

It is perhaps too much to expect originality in a minuet nowadays, but Frederick J. Bodilly's Minuetto-Grazioso (Paxton) makes up for lack of fancy by grace and attractiveness. D. G.

VIOLA

Every attempt to enlarge the somewhat restricted repertory of the viola commands respect, and Gordon Jacob deserves recognition for having made the viola the protagonist of his Concerto in C minor (Oxford University Press). The extraordinary skill of performers like Lionel Tertis has called attention to the neglect with which the viola has been treated so far, and perhaps a few more concertos might show composers that, in spite of its limitations, the viola has qualities of its own which are not shared by any other instrument. Merits and demerits should both be carefully considered, for the great flaw in most recent compositions and arrangements is just that they ignore the inevitable limitations and make the viola ape the tricks of the violin. The result is that instead of exhibiting its strongest, most characteristic qualities, they reveal the weakest; instead of exploiting the fields where the viola is supreme, they make use of those where not the viola but the violin reigns unrivalled. A composer with special bent for the genius of instruments could never be guilty of such error. 'Harold in Italy' may not be a great piece of music, but in this respect at least it is a pattern which we commend to the attention of Mr. Gordon Jacob and others who wish to convince the public that the viola is not merely a violin tuned a fifth lower. Apart from this, the Concerto holds out the promise of better things to come. Some ideas possess interest, and even charm, which would be more evident if they were not strung together in somewhat haphazard fashion.

Carl Herrmann's 'Zwei Stücke' (E. W. Organ, Birmingham) do not probe too deeply into the heart of things, but answer perfectly the description of 'morceau de salon,' which may be translated without offence, 'parlour music.' The 'Variationen über eine ernste Weise,' by the same composer, reach a higher level. They are carefully and conscientiously written, and should be effective in performance.

'CELLO

The second part of Ludwig Lebell's 'Studies and Exercises for the Violoncello' (Joseph Williams) concerns chiefly the extended first and half-positions, with which the author deals thoroughly. But he has also made these studies more interesting and profitable by employing a variety of bow-strokes, every one of which deserves the careful attention of the student. And perhaps with the idea of bringing up the young 'cellist so that modern devices will have no terrors for him, an exercise is provided in 5/4 time. It may be doubted whether the plan is a wise one. In the first place, it would seem that before going to mixed rhythms the student ought throroughly to master the simpler forms. Modern players have had no difficulty in dealing with complex forms, even though they were brought up on 4/4 and 3/4. Moreover, it is literally impossible to keep pace with all the vagaries of the modern composer. Who can foresee the number of crotchets or quavers he may crowd into one bar five years hence? By all means let us take him seriously, but not so seriously as to suppose that the very foundations of music must quake at his word. B. V.

CHURCH AND CHORAL MUSIC

Of new works to be considered this month, one of the most interesting is Harold E. Darke's setting for chorus and orchestra of 'Ring out, ye crystal spheres,' from Milton's 'On the morning of Christ's Nativity' (Oxford University Press). The opening movement is of an exuberant character. It is in 3/2 time, and is largely built over a four-crotchet figure treated as a ground-bass. Much of the writing for the voices is in pairs of parallel fourths; this, in conjunction with the orchestral bass, brings about an abundance of characteristic clashings. Later, effective use is made in the accompaniment of a chiming figure of four descending crotchets over a three-minim figure in the bass. The movement closes quietly, and is followed by a brief section (meno mosso e tranquillo) in E flat minor, an Andante maestoso ('Yea, truth and justice then'), with some expressive counterpoint for the voices, and a beautifully-treated little passage in B major ('And mercy set between'). A return is then made by the orchestra to the thematic material of the opening movement, a crescendo is worked up over a dominant pedal, and a final entry of the chorus (ff) brings the work in a few broad phrases to an imposing finish.

From the same publishers comes a thoughtful setting, by George Oldroyd, of 'Stabat Mater Dolorosa,' with Latin and English text—English translation by Charles Williams. The writing is modal in character, and is set for unaccompanied mixed choir. The parts occasionally divide, but the demands on technique are never more than moderate. It calls mainly for a good sostenuto, rhythmic freedom, and a good command of nuance and tone-colour. Given these, the work should sound impressive. There is a printer's error on the top line of p. 17; the last treble note is presumably B. Other issues from the Oxford University Press include settings of the Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis by Dr. John Blow and Joseph W. G. Hathaway, and an 'Organ and Choir Book of Varied Accompaniments and Descants for use with the English Hymnal,' edited by J. Lionel Bennett. Blow's setting is in the Dorian Mode, and has been transposed up a tone and edited by Heathcote D. Statham. An occasional use of brackets over the voice parts should help in securing a rhythmical performance. Dr. Hathaway's treatment of the Evening Canticles is fresh and interesting. The vocal writing is effective without being over-elaborate, and the organ is used with judgment and skill. In a preface to the 'English Hymnal' book the editor explains that the scheme is to provide opportunities for making use of some of the old-time methods of dealing with the 'People's Tune,' e.g.—the method of the Metrical Psalmodists (a vocal harmonization with the tune in an inner part—generally the tenor); the methods of J. S. Bach (the most characteristic and most generally familiar being that 'in which the big, slow tune is borne along on a stream of constantly shifting harmony which prevents it from being hurried, yet keeps it intensely alive and interpretatively sensitive'); the ancient method of Antiphony, various devices of which are indicated by the editor. The book contains fifteen tunes, each accompanied by a number of varied arrangements by different composers, from which a selection may be made. Thus, for 'Richmond' are provided three free organ settings for unison verses by Charles Wood, a faux-bourdon setting by Martin Shaw (from the 'Tenor Tune Book'), and two organ settings by R. T. Woodman. Other contributors include Charles Macpherson, R. R. Terry, Geoffrey Shaw, Harvey Grace, and the editor himself—some of the last-named's settings being of a fairly elaborate character.

Palestrina's Motet for double-choir, 'O bone Jesu, exaudi me' ('O blessed Jesu, hear Thou my prayer'), has been edited, with an English adaptation, by Ivor Atkins (Novello). The writing for the two choirs is mainly antiphonal, actual eight-part singing being rarely called for. It is of only moderate difficulty. This new issue, with Latin and English text, should assist in making this beautiful work still more widely known. From the same firm comes an arrangement for school use of Mendelssohn's 'If with all your hearts,' in the key of C, and with the music in both notations; also a well-written Vesper Hymn by Alan Burr—a setting of words by George Herbert, 'O Lord, Who hast given so much.'

Two settings of the Communion Service from the Faith Press should prove useful. Palestrina's Missa 'Iste Confessor,' founded on the well-known hymn-tune, has been adapted for use in the English Church by Herbert Ware. It is for four voices unaccompanied, and is of moderate difficulty. In the third line of the last page the pair of quavers in the alto should, of course, be semiquavers. C. Hylton Stewart's 'Missa Roffensis' is an admirable little work, also for unaccompanied singing. It is straightforward in style and quite easy to sing, but is by no means lacking in interesting touches. The setting of the Sanctus for double choir—mostly in responsive phrases—is an excellent example of what can be done by very simple means. In the Gloria, too, the parts are freely divided with excellent effect, but always in such a way as to be easily negotiated by the singers. It should be noted that neither of these settings includes the Creed. The Faith Press also sends a Carol, 'Christ was born on Christmas Day,' by E. T. Chapman. This is a well-written work for four voices and organ, for which a good choir is needed. The second verse is sung by solo voices, with an organ part which may optionally be hummed by the chorus. In the next verse, for full choir, the voice parts are treated imitatively, and are unaccompanied. The last verse is set as a two-part canon—men and boys—in the octave, with a free organ part.

Additions to the Year-Book Press series of Anthems and Church Music, edited by Martin Akerman, include a setting for single voice and organ of 'My Father, for another night,' by P. C. Buck; hymns for beginning and ending of term—'Lord, behold us,' by C. V. Stanford, and 'Lord, dismiss us with Thy blessing,' by C. H. Lloyd, in each case for four voices, with a free organ part for the last verse; 'Lead, kindly Light,' to the old tune, 'Sandon,' by C. H. Purday, with varied treatment by J. A. Fuller-Maitland; and Parry's harmonization of an 18th-century tune for 'When I survey the wondrous Cross,' with a free organ accompaniment for vv. 3 and 4, added by Dr. Charles Wood at the request of the editor. The S.P.C.K. sends two sets of Three Christmas Carols, from 'The Cambridge Carol Book,' by Dr. G. R. Woodward and Dr. Charles Wood. The first set contains 'From Galilee they came,' 'O the morn, the merry, merry morn,' and 'Our Lady sat within her bow'r'; in the second set are 'Past three a' clock, and a cold, frosty morning,' 'To redeem a race forlorn,' and 'To us this morn a Child is born.' The words are by Dr. Woodward, except for the refrain, 'Past three a' clock.' The tunes are mostly 16th- and 17th-century melodies, harmonized by Dr. Charles Wood. From the S.P.C.K. may also be obtained Arthur Henry Brown's carol, 'Lo! peace on earth,' words by Agnes Aubrey Hilton.

From Joseph Williams come two arrangements for treble voices in three parts of Rheinberger's Mass in E flat. The first, apparently dating back some years, is arranged by Richard Strutt for use in the English church, with the organ part laid out on three staves. The other arrangement contains both Latin and English text, and includes the nine-fold form of Kyrie. The publishers also issue separately the vocal score without accompaniment, the separate voice parts, and string parts both complete and separate.

G. G.

'Musica Sacra: Benediction Services and Motets for Catholic Services,' is a series consisting of three Benediction Services and two Motets, composed by Prof. Robert O'Dwyer, organist of St. Francis Xavier's Church, Dublin. As is to be expected from the Professor of Irish Music in University College, Dublin, the compositions show considerable skill in part-writing, and can be recommended as suitable for Roman Catholic choirs. No. 4, in A flat, is a tuneful Benediction Service, though the chromatic intervals in the 'Tantum ergo' will require very careful handling by the singers.

W. H. G. F.

Occasional Notes

It is commonly said that pianoforte recitalists ring the changes on a mere handful of pieces, and that their répertoire is almost as limited as that of the least distinguished of amateurs, the difference being solely in regard to quality. Thus, while the drawing-room soloist delivers easily-recognisable performances of Rachmaninov's Prelude, Sinding's 'Rustle of Spring,' Rubinstein's Melody in F, Paderewski's Minuet, and a dozen similar works, the recitalist rarely travels outside a short list that will certainly include the 'Carnival,' the 'Appassionata,' a Chopin Ballade and Scherzo, a Bach-Liszt or Bach-Tausig sample, and Ravel's 'Jeux d'eau.' The Musical Courier has just published an analysis of a hundred and seventy recitals given in New York last season, and the result shows that the charge of monotony is scarcely valid. The statistics give some unexpected facts. First, we are surprised to find Beethoven rather poorly represented. Among the works played most frequently are only two of the Sonatas—the 'Appassionata' and the 'Waldstein'—and these make only a modest show with ten and nine performances respectively, against the 'Carnaval,' which heads the list (thirteen), and Chopin's F minor and G minor Ballades (twelve each). Even Brahms's E flat Rhapsody tops them with eleven. Chopin is easily first, the list of thirty-nine works most frequently played containing no fewer than nineteen by him. A table giving the number of appearances made by composers in the hundred and seventy programmes is so instructive that we quote it in full:

Composer	Number of Programmes
Chopin	123
Bach	87
Liszt	78
Beethoven	65
Schumann	62
Brahms	52
Debussy	51
Busoni	21
Godowsky	21
Ravel	21
Rachmaninov	21
Scriabin	21
Scarlatti	20
Albeniz	18
Dohnányi	18
Schubert	18
Mozart	17
Tausig	13
De Falla	12
Franck	12
MacDowell	10

This reveals the curious fact that, despite the natural popularity of Chopin, some fifty of the programmes—more than a fourth—managed to get along without him. The analyst points out that Busoni's twenty-one appearances are due chiefly to his Bach transcriptions, and Tausig owes his total entirely to his arrangements of Bach and Schubert. (Ought the transcribers' names to appear at all? Surely only those of the composers matter in a list of this sort.) Franck makes a good show, seeing the fewness of his pianoforte works.

As a good many of the recitalists are players heard on this side annually, it is likely that a study of London programmes would yield pretty much the same result as that given above. There would, however, be probably rather less MacDowell and more Bach.

Mr. Donald Malins, who is responsible for this New York analysis, gives other interesting findings. Thus, the tradition of beginning a recital with a classical piece still holds good. In sixty-eight programmes Bach opened the ball, Beethoven doing the same thing on only twenty-two occasions. In about forty other recitals the composers called on were Handel, Scarlatti, Rameau, Mozart, and Haydn. And as recitalists agreed to open thus soberly, so are they unanimous in winding up with a display of fireworks, provided on forty-three occasions by Listz, and on thirty-three by Chopin in his most brilliant mood. 'The Ride of the Valkyries' did duty several times, and one player wound up with transcribed Bach.

Some of the younger of these New York recitalists made bold experiments in arranging their programmes. Thus, Hyman Rovinsky gave a scheme entitled 'Parallels, Contrasts, and Conceits,' a Rameau item being followed by Debussy's 'Hommage à Rameau'; a group of Chopin's Preludes led into Casella's 'Hommage à Chopin'; and a Bach-Liszt Prelude and Fugue was associated with another organ work—Bauer's arrangement of Franck's Prelude, Fugue, and Variation. The daring Rovinsky then bracketed a Beethoven Sonatina with Bartók's six Roumanian Dances, and ended with a pungent mixture of Satie, Liszt, Ravel, and Scriabin.

We have never believed in chronological programmes for general consumption. Concerts of a special character (e.g., designed to illustrate the growth of a musical form, or a national school of composition) with an audience to match, demand such an arrangement. But for ordinary purposes it is a mistake, because it is almost certain to induce monotony, especially when the scheme includes a good deal of very early music. On the other hand most pieces of a simple, tuneful character gain greatly by being sandwiched between highly-coloured and complex modern works; they provide the necessary contrast (to the advantage of both types), and also give ear and mind a rest.

That is why we are interested to learn from Mr. Malin's article that some of these New York players made a complete break-away from custom by groupings that must have struck the average hearer as fantastic. Thus, Oscar Zeigler plunged at once into the profundities with Beethoven's Op. 111, and promptly climbed out again with a group of pieces by Hanson and Whithorne. Then followed a daring step: Honegger's 'Sept Pièces Breves,' instead of being played as a group, were alternated with antiques by Rossi, Pasquine, Scarlatti, Arne, &c. Having kept his hearers on the qui vive thus, Mr. Zeigler ended, as he began, with a long and lofty flight—the Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue of Bach.

A similar studied inconsequence was observed by another player, who made a multiple sandwich of sweet and bitter, mellow and tart, with layers of Gluck, Satie, Bull, Chausson, Rameau, and Ireland.

Summing up, Mr. Malins says that the monotony of which critics and other regular recital-goers complain is due, not to a repetition of a few works, but to the stereotyped order in which the programmes are arranged. As he rightly says:

> To the hardened recital-goer a programme consisting of the Bach-Tausig Toccata and Fugue, a Beethoven Sonata, some Chopin Etudes and a Polonaise, and a Liszt Rhapsody, differs but little from a programme which begins with the Chromatic Fantasy and Fugue, proceeds to another Beethoven Sonata, follows with Chopin Preludes and a Ballade, and ends with the Liszt F minor Etude.

Even the inclusion of novelties in themselves of no great value may give a fillip to a scheme, by providing contrast, and sometimes even by throwing fresh light on a familiar work by opening up for the listener a new way of approach. For example, Beethoven heard immediately after Brahms for once in a way, is hardly likely to be the same as on the ninety-nine occasions when he is preceded by Bach. There are now so many powerful counter-attractions that concert-givers cannot afford to neglect any detail concerning the attractiveness of their performances.

(Continued on page 1013.)

Like Apple-blossom, white and red

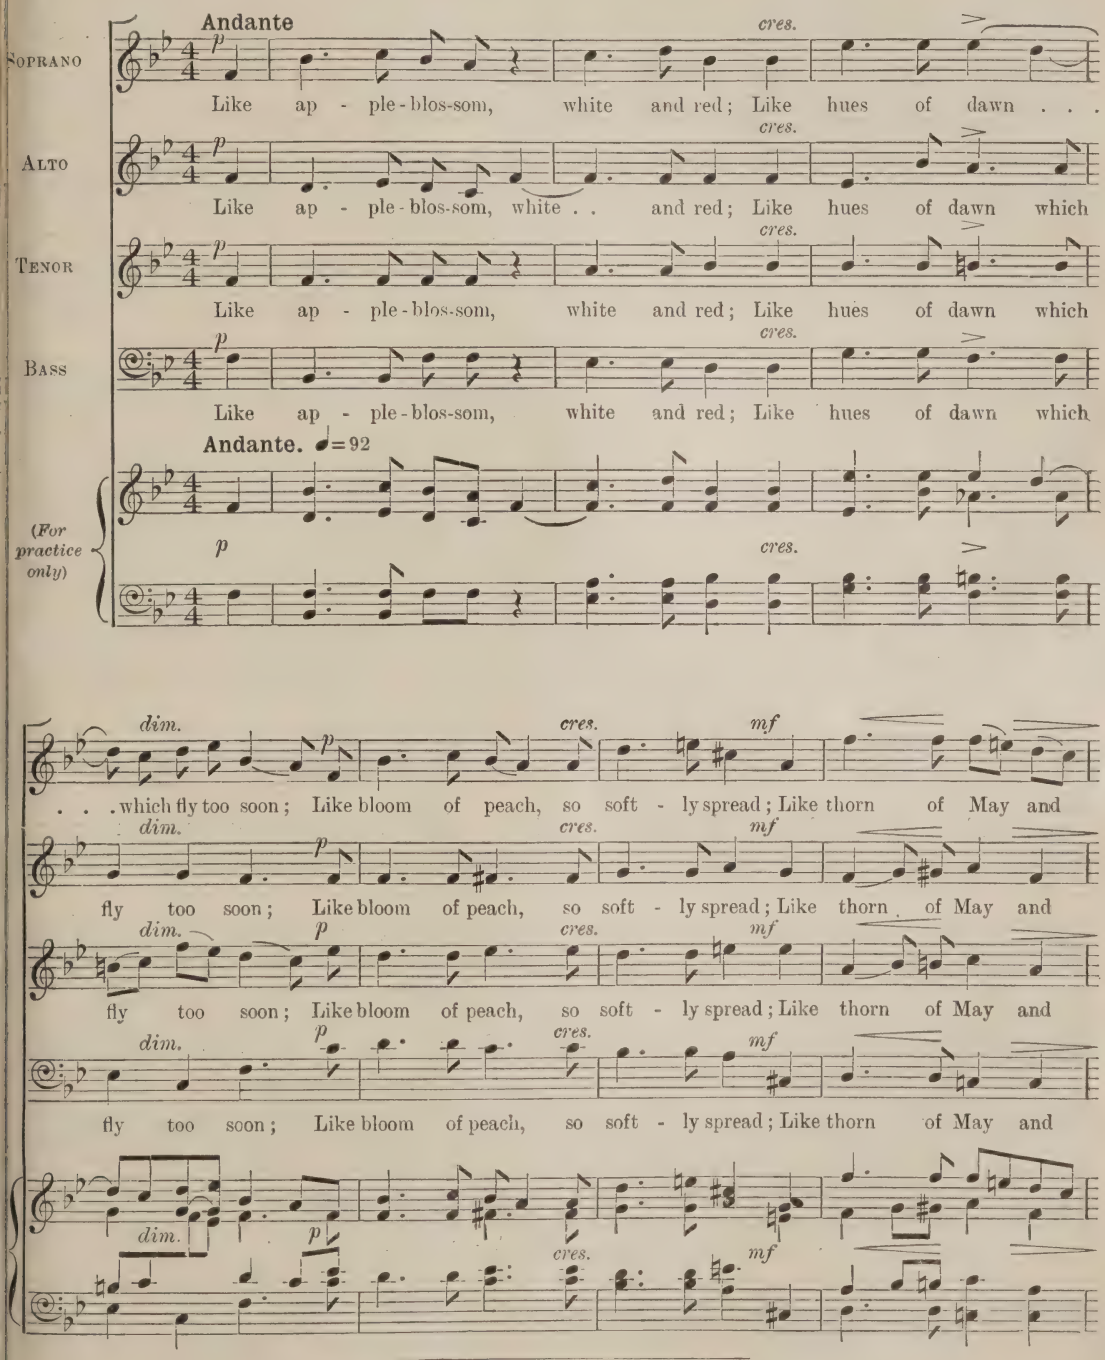
FOUR-PART SONG

ARRANGED FOR MIXED VOICES

* Words from "Dorothy Forster," by Walter Besant

Music by C. H. Lloyd

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited; New York: THE H. W. GRAY CO., Sole Agents for the U.S.A.



Andante
Soprano
Like ap - ple-blos-som, white and red; Like hues of dawn . . .
Alto
Like ap - ple-blos-som, white . . and red; Like hues of dawn which
Tenor
Like ap - ple-blos-som, white and red; Like hues of dawn which
Bass
Like ap - ple-blos-som, white and red; Like hues of dawn which Andante. ♩=92
(For practice only)
p
cres.
dim.
mf
. . . which fly too soon; Like bloom of peach, so soft - ly spread; Like thorn of May and fly too soon; Like bloom of peach, so soft - ly spread; Like thorn of May and fly too soon; Like bloom of peach, so soft - ly spread; Like thorn of May and fly too soon; Like bloom of peach, so soft - ly spread; Like thorn of May and

Copyright, 1926, by Novello and Company, Limited

* By permission of Messrs. Chatto and Windus.

Originally published for Men's Voices (A.T.T.B.) in The Orpheus, No. 222.

rose of June—Oh, sweet! oh, fair! be - yond com-pare, Are Daph - ne's

rose of June—Oh, sweet! oh, fair! be - yond com-pare, Are Daph - ne's

rose of June—Oh, sweet! oh, fair! be - yond com-pare, Are Daph - ne's rose of June—Oh, sweet! oh, fair! Are Daph - ne's cheeks, are Daph - ne's blush - ing, blush - ing cheeks, I swear.

cheeks, are Daph - ne's blush - ing, blush - ing cheeks, I swear.

cheeks, are Daph - ne's blush - ing, blush - ing cheeks, I swear.

cheeks, are Daph - ne's blush - ing, blush - ing cheeks, I swear.

That pret - ty rose, which comes and goes, Like A - pril sun - shine in . . the sky, . . I

That pret - ty rose, which comes and goes, Like A - pril sun - shine in the sky, I

That pret - ty rose, which comes and goes, Like A - pril sun - shine in the sky, . . I

That pret - ty rose, which comes and goes, Like A - pril sun - shine in the sky, I mp

pp
can command it when I choose; See how . . it ri - ses if I cry, Oh, can com - mand it when I choose; See how . . it ri - ses if I cry, Oh,
cres.
mf
can com - mand it when I choose; See how it ri - ses if I cry, Oh, can command it when I choose; See how it ri - ses if I cry, Oh,
cres.
f sweet! oh, fair! be - yond com - pare, Are Daph - ne's cheeks, are Daph-ne's blush-ing, sweet! oh, fair! be - yond com-pare, Are Daph-ne's cheeks, are Daph-ne's blush-ing, sweet! oh, fair! be - yond com-pare, Are Daph - ne's cheeks, are Daph-ne's blush - ing, sweet! oh, fair! Are Daph - - ne's cheeks, are Daph-ne's blush-ing, blush - - ing cheeks, I swear. Ah, when it lies round lips and eyes, And blush - - ing cheeks, I swear. Ah, when it lies round lips and eyes, And blush - - ing cheeks, I swear. Ah, when it lies round lips and eyes, And blush - - ing cheeks, I swear. Ah, when it lies round lips and eyes, And dim.

f fades a - way . . a-gain to spring, No lov - er sure would ask for more Than fades a-way a - gain to spring, No lov - er sure would ask for more Than fades a-way a - gain to . . spring, No lov - er sure would ask for more Than fades a-way a - gain to spring, No lov - er sure would ask for more Than pp
cres.
still to cry and still to sing, Oh, sweet! oh, fair! be-yond com-pare, Are Daph-ne's still . . to cry and still to sing, Oh, sweet! oh, fair! be-yond com pare, Are Daph-ne's still . . to cry and still to sing, Oh, sweet! oh, fair! be-yond com-pare, Are Daph-ne's still to cry and still to sing, Oh, sweet! oh, fair! Are Daph - - ne's cheeks, are Daph - ne's blush - ing, blush - - - ing cheeks, I swear.
cheeks, are Daph - ne's blush - ing, blush - ing, blush - ing cheeks, I swear.
cheeks, are Daph - ne's blush - ing, blush - - - ing cheeks, I swear.
cheeks, are Daph - ne's blush - ing, blush - - - ing cheeks, I swear.

(Continued from page 1008.)

So much interest was roused by the five operatic choruses sung at the recent Handel Festival that many readers will be glad to hear of another performance. We note, therefore, that they will be included in the Crystal Palace Choral and Orchestral Society's concert on December 4 (7.30). The version used will be that specially prepared for the Handel Festival by Sir Henry Wood. The remainder of the programme on December 4 is also operatic, and will include a liberal selection from Gounod's 'Faust.'

At the time of writing we do not know the fate of Poldini's comedy-opera, 'Love Adrift,' at the Gaiety Theatre. Critical opinion seemed to be unanimous as to the mixture of merits and defects. Weakness of the story in an opera is no very serious fault, else the repertory would be even smaller than it is. Lack of incident and humour, however, is fatal, and here we think Poldini's work fails badly. The pointlessness of the text accentuates the disproportion between the elaborate and continuous music and the weak story. But on the credit side must be set some rare virtues. On the occasion of our visit —which was not the first night—the performance of the music reached a notably high level. Choral singing on the operatic stage is usually poor in every way. In 'Love Adrift' it is distinguished by an alertness, ring, and variety that we associate rather with a first-rate choral society than with a stage chorus. And when all is said as to Poldini's indebtedness to other composers—especially to Wagner and Humperdinck—there is no questioning the effectiveness of his score. However, as the opera is dealt with elsewhere in this issue, there is no need to discuss it further here. Our concern is with the enterprise that brought about its production. It has long been a reproach that, alone among European centres, London has no opéra-comique. Between grand opera and musical comedy (a form of entertainment that is now little more than a glorification of 'jazz') there is a big gap only partially made good by a brief season of Gilbert and Sullivan. The new managers of the Gaiety, aiming at a permanent filling of the hiatus, have in view the production of a series of comedy-operas, both modern and classical, of varying degrees of familiarity. The success of the scheme depends largely on the genuinely musical public. If it supports the project heartily and promptly, there can be little doubt that theatre-goers in general will be attracted. Musicians have long complained of the poverty of the London stage where their art is concerned. Improvement will not be brought about by mere abuse of the noisy vulgarity that now obtains, but by backing up of any effort to establish something better. The real issue, therefore, is not the merits and demerits of 'Love Adrift,' but the success or failure of the enterprise behind it.

We were pleased to see in a issue of the New York Times a generous appreciation, by Mr. Richard Aldrich, of Sir Henry Wood's work in London. Mr. Aldrich took as his text the programmes of the recent series of Promenade Concerts, and analysed them thoroughly. We quote one or two passages :

> Sir Henry Wood's little book of programmes may well make the New York concert-goer's mouth water and his ears do whatever the corresponding thing is for ears to do. They are, of course, avowedly popular programmes, and are not by any means suitable to be transferred bodily to the New York winter concert schedules. But they are of a singularly high class of popular programmes; and it is what they contain of the higher interest and importance that will appeal to the music-lover in New York, hankering to get out of the ruts of the conventional.

Here is a paragraph that will be much appreciated on this side :

> Are the hard-worked and highly paid galaxy of foreign conductors who furnish orchestral music to New York devoting sleepless nights and laborious days to reading and pondering new and unfamiliar orchestral compositions for the coming New York season, giving special thought and attention to the strong, vital, and frequently powerful music of the contemporaneous English school?
>
> They are not.
>
> They are taking well-earned and much-needed rest in various summer resorts in Europe. Such attention as they are giving to their New York programmes is devoted to plotting new, brilliant, and entirely original combinations of Beethoven's third 'Leonore' Overture (never letting the other two cross their vision); of several of his symphonies, with special emphasis on the fifth; of Tchaikovsky's sixth and doubtless his fifth Symphony; of Dvorák's 'New World' Symphony; of Franck's Symphony; of Brahms's first and fourth Symphonies, &c.

—he compiles a list of battle-horses too long to quote.

Concerning the British School, Mr. Aldrich says :

> Nothing is more likely than that there will be no modern English composition on the lists to be presented in the coming winter season of orchestral concerts [in New York]. And yet it may be asserted that there are modern English works eminently worthy of appearance there, if the highly-paid and hard-worked gentlemen would only spare time from their well-earned vacations to inspect and and study them. There are works by Elgar, Vaughan Williams, Delius, Bax, Holst, McEwen, Ireland, and numerous others, some of which are known here from single or very few performances, and some of which are not; but many of which are deserving of better acquaintance. But it will be like pulling teeth to get any single one of them on next season's New York programmes.

And he winds up with a word on the 'Prom. novelties :

> Not all of these things, doubtless, would be deserving of a place in the New York season. Some of them are probably on trial, and a popular series is an appropriate place for a trial. Some of the names represented are unknown to music-lovers hereabout, and are doubtless unknown also to the highly-paid and overworked gentlemen who make the programmes for New York. And, in order that New York may not be too envious, it should be said that in not a single case, probably, will the amount of rehearsal be given to these items that would be considered needful here, even to those entirely strange to the orchestra; and that the performances, although the English orchestra is astonishingly quick at reading, able, resourceful, and supple under the conductor's hand, will not be so good in most respects as would be regarded as indispensable here. And no wonder—the concerts are given every night in the week except Sunday, from August 14 to October 16. A series of programmes of such variety and contrast, deviating into such unexplored paths, would not be possible under the conditions prevailing here. But the lamentable thing is that there will be no approximation to them.

On another page we print an article from Mr. Julius Harrison concerning the examination question raised in these notes recently. In broaching the subject we described some corrections in a Mus. Bac. Exercise as 'footling,' and we feel that the term is also well earned by the examples quoted by Mr. Harrison. We have received also a long and interesting letter from one of the most experienced and respected of examiners, who, however, wishes to remain anonymous. He points out that examiners are not bound to mark anything in an Exercise. Their job is to assess, not to criticise. He does not think that any University examiners are compelled to give reasons for the rejection of an Exercise, though a professor may have the discretionary power to tell a candidate why he has failed. Our correspondent says that it is perhaps a tradition to mark 'howlers' in order that they might be corrected if, after all, the Exercise passes. But candidates are sensitive, and prone to think that the errors marked are the only defects, so some examiners prefer to mark nothing. He adds that he has known an Exercise pass despite a fair sprinkling of 'howlers,' the work being otherwise excellent. On the other hand, he has known one rejected, though free from technical errors, because the music was bad. We are grateful to this examiner for his letter, which certainly clears the air somewhat. The one thing it cannot do, of course, is to enable anyone to understand how an examiner could take exception to the passages quoted by Mr. Harrison. On this showing, even the most respectable collection of hymn-tunes is food for the blue pencil.

We have not yet seen the new edition of the 'Encyclopædia Britannica,' so the following facts are given at second-hand, being gathered from a Weekly Dispatch article, entitled 'Who are our Immortals?' Well, who are the musical ones, according to the 'E. B.'? Irving Berlin, as composer of 'Alexander's Ragtime Band' and other American songs, finds a place in the encyclopædic sun, with titles of his compositions and dates of their production. Sir Henry Wood and Sir Landon Ronald, however, are left in the cold, though we should have thought that to an English editor (Mr. J. L. Garvin) they would have seemed at least as important (and even as well-known) as Mr. Berlin. Much the same capricious method of selection has been observed in other arts. In regard to the stage, for example, Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, and Charles Chaplin are included, but no space is found for Sir Gerald du Maurier, Sir John Martin Harvey, or Sir Harry Lauder. Of course, the compiler of a work of reference of this kind is always up against the problem of the folk who are on the borderline of fame. But surely Wood and Landon Ronald are as unmistakably on the right side of the line as Chaliapin and Kreisler, both of whom are given a place. Moreover, the musical public is more indebted to the two conductors than to an army of ragtime composers and star soloists.

Our October number contained an article entitled 'A Sequel to "Lead, kindly Light."' The reader who kindly sent us the hymn was under the impression that neither words nor tune had been previously published, and the article was written and the hymn printed on that understanding. We now learn that both were issued some years ago in leaflet form by Messrs. Banks, of York. We regret this infringement of copyright, and assure the publishers that both the sender of the hymn and the writer of the article acted in good faith.

In our October issue we asked (on behalf of a firm of brewers) for information as to the origin of a song called 'A Rill from the Town Pump.' We are obliged to several readers who tell us it is not a song, but a sketch, or essay, by Nathaniel Hawthorne.

Gramophone Notes

By 'Discus'

COLUMBIA

The winter season has started with a flood of good things. There could be no better opening for a half-year that will include the Beethoven Centenary than a complete recording of the Ninth Symphony. The Columbia Company has got off the mark splendidly with a set of eight records that give the work complete, save for the omission of the first repeat in the Scherzo. The performers are the London Symphony Orchestra, Miriam Licette, Muriel Brunskill, Hubert Eisdell, Harold Williams, and an adequate anonymous chorus, conducted by Weingartner. It would be idle to pretend that anything but a first-hand performance under the best possible conditions can give us all the tremendous import of this greatest of all symphonies. What we have to look for rather is clarity and a good measure of the orchestral colour, and certainly we get them here. The rugged grandeur of the opening movement is well caught. The Scherzo is less satisfactory. Weingartner is a bit on the staid side, I feel. After all, it is not enough for the composer to be 'unbuttoned'; the conductor must let himself go similarly. The Scherzo strikes me, then, as being too respectable. The pace may be right, but it certainly seems a trifle slow at the start, and we hardly ever get the irresistible 'drive' that is in the music. There are, too, a few places where the ensemble lapses. The chief merit is clearness. The drums are capital.

Those of us—an increasing number, I fancy—who find the Adagio somewhat boring, except during the delightful swaying second subject, are hardly likely to be converted by the most perfect of gramophone recording. This example is good as a whole, but more variety seems to be called for, and the ensemble is not always faultless. Wood-wind and horns are usually first-rate. The transition from slow movement to Finale is highly effective (despite an apparent cough that fits into a beat's rest so neatly that it might have been rehearsed. 'Not these tones, brother!'). The soloists struggle heroically, and manage to avoid giving us the usual impression of being 'up against it.' Mr. Williams declaims the opening finely. The chorus—inevitably, maybe—comes through the least well of the forces engaged. The orchestral part is so good that it makes the Finale perhaps the most successful part of the recording. There is, too, the energy that was a bit lacking in the Scherzo. For the benefit of readers who wish for parts of the Symphony, here are the divisions: First movement, Nos. L1775-6; Scherzo, L1777 and first side of L1778; Adagio, second side of L1778, L1779, and beginning of L1780; Finale, second side of L1780 and L1781-2.

The completest of contrasts is provided by the other orchestral work recorded—'L'après-midi d'un Faune,' played by the Philharmonic Orchestra, conducted by Paul Klenau. This is well above the average, the detail being clear and the range of power good. Best of all is the sensitiveness of the performance. I do not think the Company has done anything better than this record (L1772).

Percy Pitt is to be thanked for the enterprise shown in his choice of work. Who would have expected this quality to have scope in the selection of music by Puccini? Yet here is an orchestral piece that is surely very little known—'The Witches' Dance' from his first opera, 'Le Villi.' It is vivid and picturesque, though, of course, far from being original. (The main theme bears a strong resemblance to that of the Scherzo of the Ninth Symphony.) In it one sees the unfailing eye for effect that enabled Puccini to be far more successful than many composers whose actual musical gift was far greater. The companion piece on this record is Glazounov's Concert Waltz in A, also well performed and reproduced. The players are the B.B.C. Wireless Symphony Orchestra (9114).

Excellent solo instrumental records are of William Murdoch playing the Schubert-Liszt 'Hark! hark! the lark' (D1549), and that admirable violoncellist, Antoni Sala, in a couple of Bach pieces—the Adagio from the Organ Toccata in C, and an Arioso. This vaguely described movement is the beautiful movement used by Bach in the Clavier Concerto in F minor, and also as an Introduction to the Cantata, 'I stand with one foot in the grave.' M. Sala's phrasing and delicacy of nuance are a delight (9103).

Tonally, massed choirs are hardly ever full value for their numbers. The further you get beyond the three-figure mark the greater the disproportion between the size of the choir and the amount of tone. Add to this the difficulties brought about by the slow rate at which sound travels, and it is easy to understand why at such demonstrations the thrills (if any) are generally due to factors other than bigness of sound. That is why I am doubtful about the future of recording of mammoth choralism. The first-hand effect being, as a rule, disappointing, the reproduction seems bound to be even more so. Much, however, depends on the choice of music. The Handel Festival records showed that fugal work, even at a moderate pace, is mere confusion of sound. The latest effort is far better. It is a record of the massed choirs at the Nonconformist Choir Union Festival, at the Crystal Palace, singing 'Praise, my soul, the King of Heaven' to Smart's 'Regent Square,' and 'Sing Alleluia forth' to a tune by Eric Thiman. This is by far the clearest and best bit of big choral recording I have heard. The singing is capital, too, and Mr. Frank Idle, the conductor, is to be congratulated on the astonishing unanimity (9117).

The attempt to capture the effect of four thousand boy and girl violinists at a Festival of the National Union of School Orchestras is less successful — probably because a lot of the young monkeys looked anywhere but at the conductor. Half of the record is devoted to the advanced section—a mere fifteen hundred, but I cannot say the result is much less ragged. The Grenadier Guards band assists, but only now and then does it come to the surface through the welter of gut-scraping. Still, it was capital fun, even for the audience, judging from the rapturous applause. Mr. Arthur Payne must have had an exciting time conducting (9119).

Good, clean part-singing is that of the Sheffield Orpheus Male Quartet in Brewer's amusing 'Alexander.' On the other side is 'On Ilkla Moor baht 'at,' for the full enjoyment—even understanding—of which one must be a Yorkshireman. It is a pity the arrangement used has a pianoforte accompaniment. Four singers of this quality sound better alone (4031).

No doubt there is something funny in the duet 'The Two Beggars,' so rousingly sung by Frank Mullings and Norman Allin, but the words come through only fitfully, and so the point doesn't get home. Sarjeant's 'Watchman, what of the night?' is on the other side (L1774).

Very dramatic is the record of Aroldo Lindi in a couple of extracts from Verdi's 'Otello'—one being the death scene, in which the gasps in extremis come through with harrowing realism (L1773).

H.M.V.

Although this month's output includes some orchestral records of the highest quality, pride of place goes to a chamber work—Schubert's B flat Trio, played by Cortôt, Thibaud, and Casals (D947-950). (In order to avoid splitting the second movement, the work is divided thus: first movement, 947 and one side of 948; third movement, second half of 948; second movement, 949; Finale, 950.) With three players who are so outstanding, singly and as a trio, the reviewer has little to do. Occasionally a bit of fiddle or pianoforte tone leaves something to be desired, of course, but there fault-finding stops. Even so, there are degrees of excellence, and I fancy both playing and recording improve as the work goes on. Anyway, I enjoyed the third and fourth records even more than the first two. Not often is the panegyric of the catalogue rhapsodist so nearly justified as in this instance.

From a batch of capital orchestral records I choose as the pick that of the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra (conductor, Leopold Stokowski) playing Saint-Saëns's 'Danse Macabre' (D1121). Here is the amplitude in power and grading that distinguishes the new recording, plus a faithfulness of tone and balance that so far have been sometimes lacking. For example, the string tone is as near perfection as anybody can ever want, surely. The playing is of the finished type that we have been taught to expect from orchestras with practically unlimited rehearsals. Incidentally, the issue of so fine a record of his best-known instrumental work should do something to raise the cloud under which Saint-Saëns's name seems to be at present. In his lifetime he was perhaps over-rated; now the pendulum has swung too far the other way.

Hardly have the bells of the Columbia '1812' records ceased echoing in my ears, when along comes a set from H.M.V. Here, however, the work is squeezed on to three sides, the remaining space being used for the rather feebly-blatant Waltz from 'Eugène Onegin.' The 'cutting' has been drastic—so much so as to leave too much of an impression of purple patches without the necessary relief. The recording is wonderfully vivid, and the final section, I think, even beats the Columbia version—which I thought would have been impossible. The players are the Covent Garden Opera Orchestra, conducted by Eugène Goossens (C1280-1).

The same band and conductor score hardly less brilliantly in Berlioz's 'Rakocsky' March and Schubert's 'Marche Militaire' (C1279).

In the light music department there are some well-sounding things—Ivanovici's 'Danube Waves' Waltz and Rosa's 'Over the Waves' Waltz, played by the International Concert Orchestra (C1278); Nos. 1 and 3 of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Four Characteristic Waltzes,' played by the Victor Olof Sextet (B2346); and the Coldstreams Band is recorded in a 'Pinafore' selection (C1283).

Irene Scharrer plays three Sonatas by Scarlatti and the well-known Toccata by Paradies, with brilliance and clarity, but at times with a bit more power than this lightly-scored music can effectively carry (D1120).

Recent Chopin records have disappointed some of us by dwelling overmuch on the weak side of the composer, and making it even weaker by overdone rubato. A record of Wilhelm Backhaus gives us fine playing and recording of the composer at his best—the 'Revolutionary,' F major, C major, and A minor (Chromatic) Studies. This is a record far above the usual run in every way (DB928).

With a terrible decline, we come to Kreisler playing an arrangement of Lemare's Andantino. I leave readers to supply the right emphatic comment. He partially atones by bracketing with it his own transcription of Tchaikovsky's Humoresque in G, brilliantly played (DA803).

Three organ records call for notice. Stanley Roper plays excellently the first movement of Handel's well-known Concerto in F (not the 'Cuckoo and Nightingale'; the writer in the catalogue goes astray here) and Ernest Farrar's stirring Epilogue on the 'Old Hundredth.' The detail is rather muddled at times, owing to echo. The organ used is that of St. Margaret's, Westminster (1282).

Much clearer is the effect of Marcel Dupré's performance of the Allegretto and Finale from Mendelssohn's Sonata in B flat, played at Queen's Hall. But M. Dupré's reading of the Allegretto is entirely devoid of any kind of feeling. The time is metronomic, with never a bit of easing-up at such points as the return of the opening theme. The solo stop is too powerful. The Finale opens splendidly, with the best real organ tone I have heard from the gramophone. The playing throughout is beautifully clean—as one would expect—but again the tempo is too rigid. M. Dupré seems to have toured and recited himself into a fatal kind of slickness (E438).

What is one to say of the record of Arthur Meale playing his own storm on the organ at Central Hall? No question about it, Mr. Meale has a technical equipment that is to be envied. He ought to put it to better use than this. As organ storms go, this one is passable, though the climax is spiteful rather than awe-inspiring. (The criticism by a member of my household was, 'What a catty storm!') I am a bit doubtful as to whether it is a marine or land effort. Early on in the proceedings, what appears to be a quartet of goats is brought on, lamenting; but later, when Dykes's well-known tune, 'Melita,' is played, we think we are at sea; then a single bell tolls, and we are at the village church (or is it a ship's bell? or a knell for somebody who went overboard, and stayed there?). However, those who like organ storms will enjoy this—and be amazed, no matter how much the rest of us may be amused (B2347).

Vocal records are unusually good this month. All the following are to be commended in varying degrees: the De Reszke Singers in spirituals, 'Travellin' to de grave' and ''Tis me, O Lord' (E346); Paul Robeson and Lawrence Brown in more spirituals, 'Joshua fit de battle ob Jericho' and 'Swing low, sweet chariot' (B2339); Evelyn Scotney singing brilliantly 'Non di mir' and, rather less so, 'Mi tradi quell' alma ingrata,' from 'Don Giovanni' (D1119); Walter Widdop in a very fervent performance, with first-rate diction, of 'Deeper and deeper still' and 'Waft her, angels'—here, as in the 'Don Giovanni' record, the orchestral accompaniment is notably good (D1118); Galli-Curci, out of her usual vein, in Tosti's Serenade and 'The Prison Song' from Chapi's 'Las hijas del Zebedeo' (DA805); and Percy Heming, duly grim and resolute, in Lidgey's 'Out of the night' (why does he sing 'My head is bloody but un-a-bowed'?) and, full of jollity, in 'The Yeoman's Wedding'—a capital record this (E437).

VOCALION

Again no orchestral records come from this Company. There are, however, some admirable examples in various solo classes.

Adila Fachiri and Jelly d'Aranyi made a happy choice in a couple of Godard's six duets for two violins. In the piquant Serenade they are joined by Ethel Hobday. 'Minuit' is an effective piece in which, by means of double stopping, the duet becomes a quartet, so to speak (K05260).

I like these fine players rather less in two movements from a Trio by Tartini. The music, like so much of this composer's, is of greater interest to fiddlers than to fiddlees (X9877).

York Bowen plays brilliantly Chopin's Waltz in A flat, Op. 34, No. 1, and the C sharp minor Polonaise; the tone, however, is not always good (K05261).

Cornet soloists invariably choose to be heard, not in music written for their instrument, but in the slushier type of song. So Trumpet-Major H. N. Harman is recorded corneting (better than they deserve) 'The Rosary' and 'O sole mio' (X9859,) and 'A Perfect Day' and 'Somewhere a voice is calling' (X9858).

I am glad to find that William Wolstenholme has not been overlooked by the recording companies. Here he is, playing his own Prelude in F and 'Carillon' with that admirable fluency and taste we know so well. The organ is that at Æolian Hall. It lacks the body and richness of a big church organ, of course, but it comes out far more clearly than some finer instruments—no doubt because of the absence of echo (K05258).

Good vocal records are: Roy Henderson, 'The Two Grenadiers,' Schumann's 'Love, when I gaze into thine eyes,' and Henschel's 'Morning Hymn' (K05250); Frank Titterton, four Quilter songs, excellently done, with taste and refinement (K05251); Luella Paikin, airs from Verdi's 'Falstaff' and 'Un Ballo in Maschera' (A0267); and, best of all (perhaps the best vocal record of the month), Olga Haley, singing in German a couple of Schubert's songs—'Ave Maria' and 'Gretchen am Spinnrade.' The latter is particularly good, with a most touching close. Here is lieder-singing of a quality we get too rarely from English singers. The accompaniments of Ivor Newton must not be left out of the praise (K05257).

The Sunday Evening Concert Society started its season on October 17, with a programme that comprised Brahms's Sextet in G, and Quintets by Boccherini and Vaughan Williams (Wood-Smith Quartet, with Miss Patience Lucas and Mr. Walter Britton), and Brahms's 'Four Serious Songs' (Mr. John Buckley). The report of last season (the sixth) shows an adverse balance of £10. The concerts take place at the Working Men's College, Crowndale Road, N.W. (one minute from Mornington Crescent Tube Station), at 6.30 p.m. Admission is free, and there is a collection. The programmes and performers are of very high quality.

The Musical Times. EXTRA SUPPLEMENT. November 1, 1926.
No. 1143 NOVELLO'S OCTAVO ANTHEMS (Price 4d.)

THERE WERE SHEPHERDS

ANTHEM FOR CHRISTMAS

St. Luke ii. 8—11, and 13, 14

MUSIC BY

H. W. JONES

D. Mus., Lond.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited; New York: THE H. W. GRAY CO., Sole Agents for the U.S.A.

Copyright, 1926, by Novello and Company, Limited glo - ry of the Lord shone round a - bout them, and they were sore a - p

p
- fraid. And the an - gel said un - to them,
mf
TENOR SOLO
Fear not; for, be - hold, I bring you good mf
mf
Ped.
ti - dings of great joy, which . . shall be . . to all peo - ple. For un - to you is born this day, ... in the ci - ty of

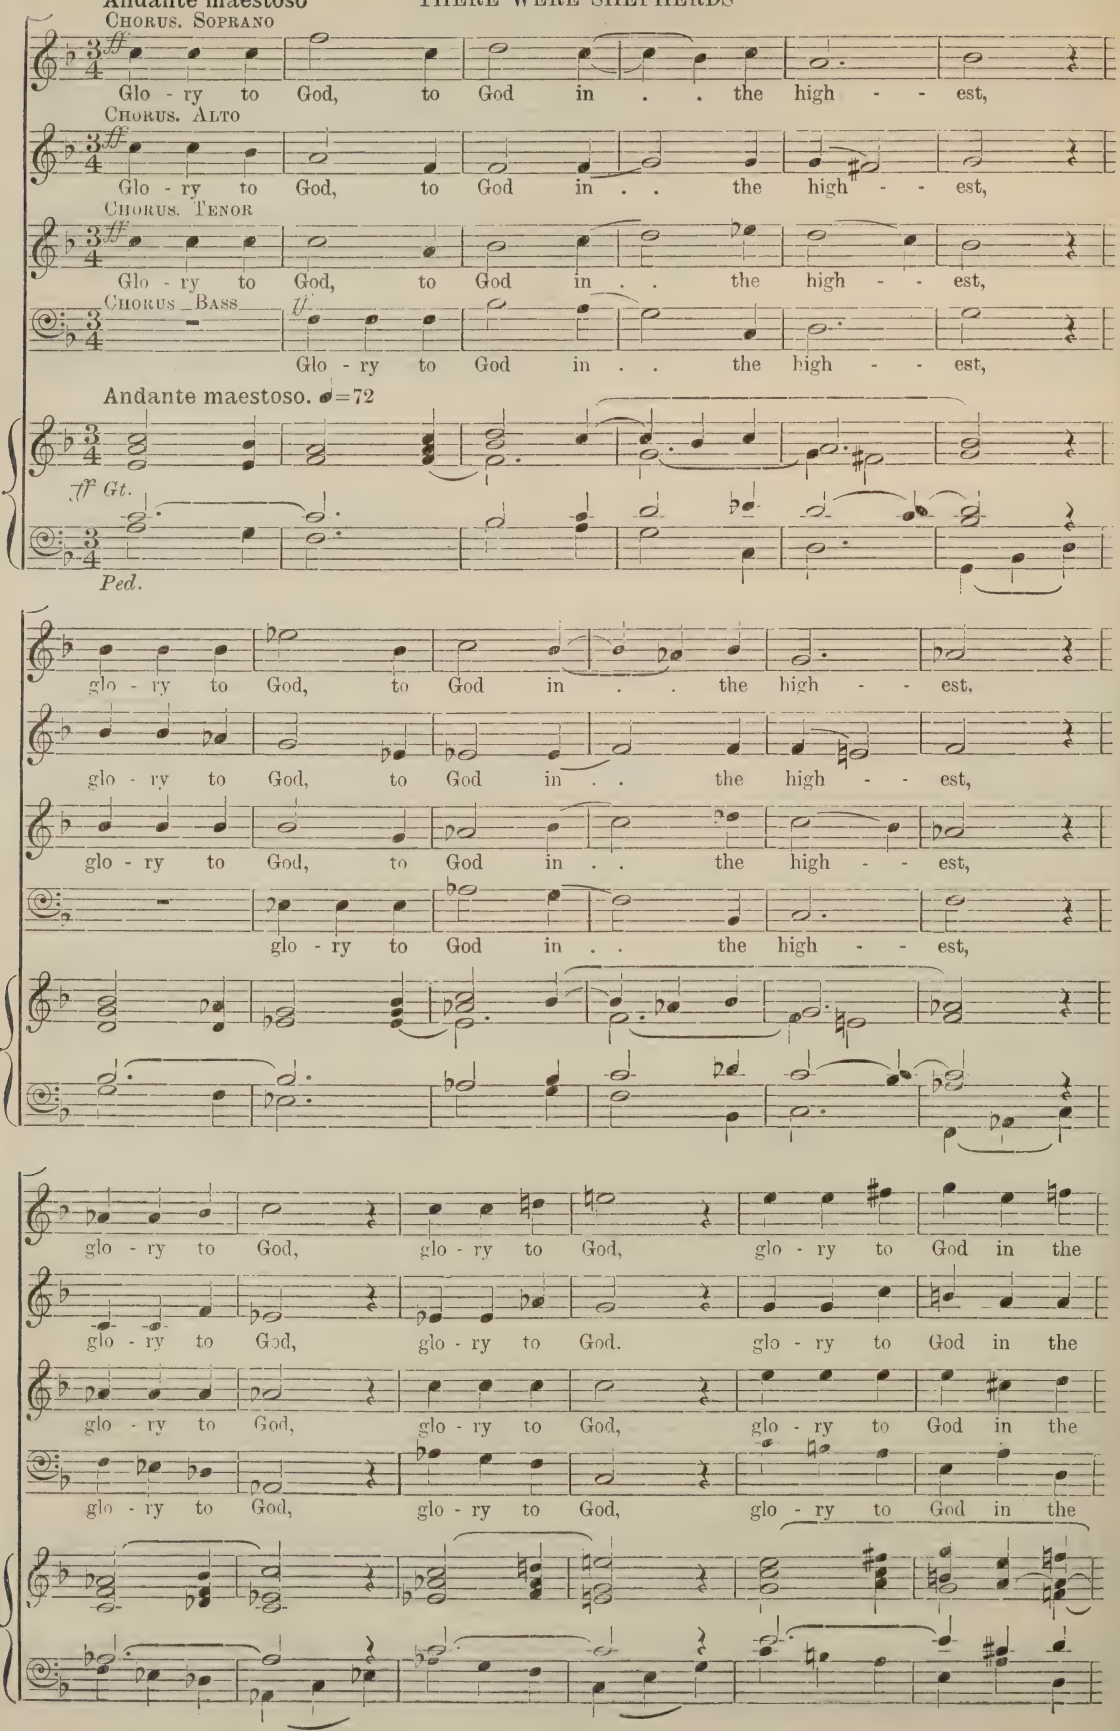
THERE WERE SHEPHERDS



Andante maestoso
Chorus. Soprano
Glo - ry to God, to God in . . the high - - est,
Chorus. Alto
Glo - ry to God, to God in . . the high - - est,
Chorus. Tenor
Glo - ry to God, to God in . . the high - - est,
Chorus. Bass
ff
Glo - ry to God in . . the high - - est,
Andante maestoso. ♩=72
ff Gt.
Ped.
glo - ry to God, to God in . . the high - - est,
glo - ry to God, to God in . . the high - - est,
glo - ry to God, to God in . . the high - - est,
glo - ry to God in . . the high - - est,
glo - ry to God, glo - ry to God, glo - ry to God in the glo - ry to God, glo - ry to God. glo - ry to God in the glo - ry to God, glo - ry to God, glo - ry to God in the glo - ry to God, glo - ry to God, glo - ry to God in the

Solo
p high - - - est,
and on earth
Solo
p high - - - est,
and on earth
Solo
p high - - - est,
and on earth
Solo
p high - - - est,
and on earth
Chorus
mf
peace, and on earth peace, good - will, good - will . . towards men, Chorus
mf
peace, and on earth peace, good - will, good - will towards men, Chorus
mf
peace, and on earth peace, good . will, good - will towards men, Chorus
mf
peace, and on earth peace, good - will. good - will towards men,
p Sw.
mf
Solo and on earth peace, and on earth peace, good - will, good - Chorus
f Solo
p
and on earth peace, and on earth peace, good - will, . . good - Chorus
f Solo
p
and on earth peace, and on earth peace, good - will, . . good - Chorus
f Solo
p
and on earth peace, and on earth peace, good - will. good - Chorus
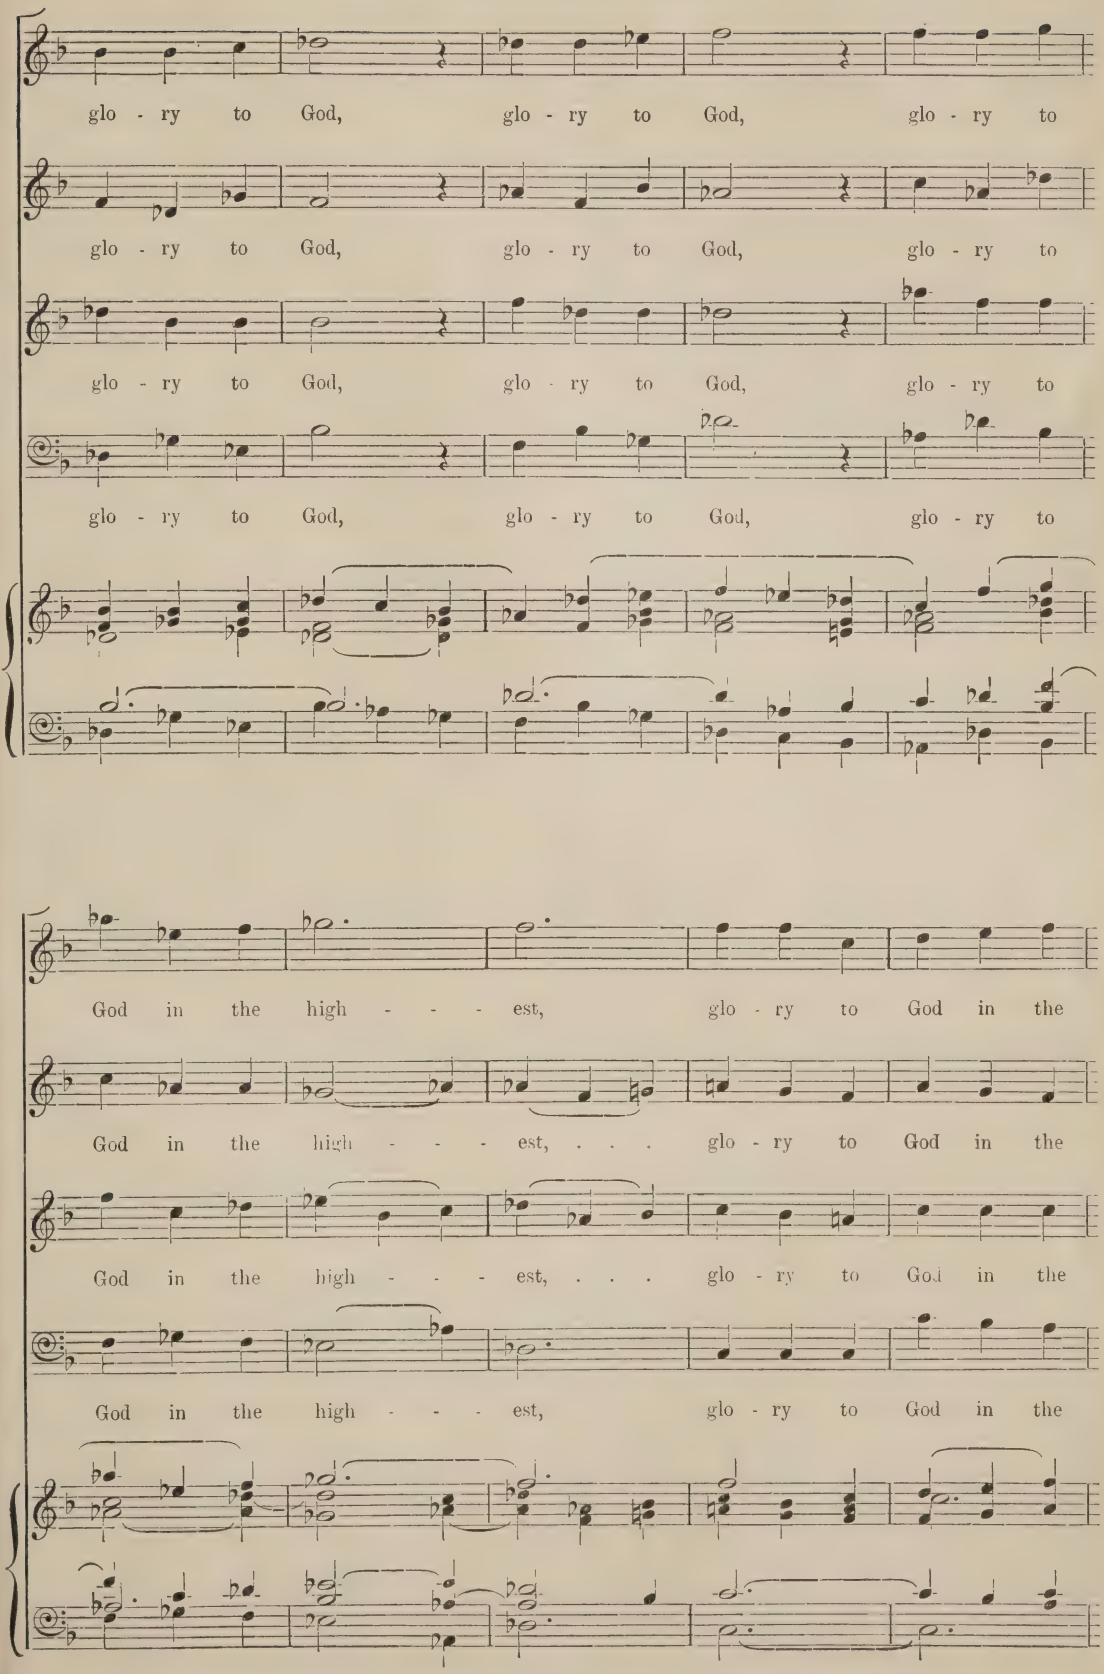
f
f Gt.

- will . . towards men, good - will . . towards men.
- will towards men, good - will . . towards men.
- will . . towards men, good - will towards men.
- will . . towards men, good - will towards men.
p Sw.
f Gt.
Man.
Ped.
ff
Glo - ry to God, to God in . . . the high - - est,
Glo - ry to God, to God in . . the high - - est,
Glo - ry to God, to God in . . the high - - est,
Glo - ry to God in . . the high - - est,
glo - ry to God, to God in . . . the high - - est,
glo - ry to God, to God in . . the high - - est,
glo - ry to God, to God in . . the high - - est,
glo - ry to God in . . the high - - est,



glo - ry to God, glo - ry to God, glo - ry to glo - ry to God, glo - ry to God, glo - ry to glo - ry to God, glo - ry to God, glo - ry to glo - ry to God, glo - ry to God, glo - ry to God in the high - - - est, glo - ry to God in the God in the high - - - est, . . . glo - ry to God in the God in the high - - - est, . . . glo - ry to God in the God in the high - - - est, glo - ry to God in the high - - - - - - est, and on high - - - - - - est, and on high - - - - - - est, and on high - - - - - - est, and on earth peace, and on earth . . peace.

earth peace, and on earth . . peace.
earth peace, and on earth . . peace.
earth peace, and on earth . . peace.
p pp rall.
ppp
p Sw.
pp
rall.

Player-Piano Notes

Duo-Art.—Perhaps the outstanding roll in this month's collection is Scriabin's fine study known as the 'Pathetic' (Op. 8, No. 12) (6623), beautifully played by Cortôt.

The first movement of the E minor Chopin Concerto, arranged and played by Josef Hofmann, was favourably noticed last month. The second roll, the Romanza, is even better, because it appears to lend itself more readily to solo pianoforte arrangement. M. Hofmann gives it a most expressive performance (6917).

Rudolph Reuter displays a neat and lively conception of the Gavotte in B minor, from Bach's second Violin Sonata, though he is inclined to rush some of the semiquaver passages. The transcription is by Saint-Saëns—a trifle heavy-handed, perhaps (6771). Incidentally it causes one to marvel yet again at Bach's genius for writing solo violin music that, despite its inevitable thinness, is so complete in its harmonic implications as to make the filling in a matter of ease and certainty.

Reminiscent in places of Percy Grainger and Balfour Gardiner is a very jolly Morris Dance of Herbert Fryer, played by himself (0229).

Two attractive rolls are Valse Lente No. 2 (Op. 23), by V. Dolmetsch, well and daintily played by Geneviève Pitot (7014), and a pleasantly inconsequential 'Valse de Ballet,' by Grunfeld, with Eustace Horodyski as performer (6759).

Hand-played.—The best of a very small set this month is a Bach Gigue (Partita in B flat, Book 1, No. 1), played by Harold Samuel with all his customary fluency (A919*f*), though at a slower pace than most of us would like.

In Alkan's 'The Wind,' Op. 15, No. 2 (A921*e*), the expert player-pianist will find ample opportunity for indulging his taste for effects. Harold Bauer gives the foundation for them with much virtuosity. The actual musical interest is slight, as is almost inevitable, owing to the fact that wind can hardly be expressed musically save by rapid chromatic scales and rumbling basses. One is glad to hear an occasional piece by this almost-forgotten French composer.

The 'Hansel and Gretel' Dream Music (A929*a*) makes a rather uninteresting pianoforte solo, but is well played by Robert Armbruster.

Percy Grainger gives a performance of his arrangement of the Irish tune from County Derry in a very forceful manner; the ending is unnecessarily long drawn out (A927*f*).

Metrostyle.—In the Prelude and Fugue in G sharp minor from the 'Well-Tempered Clavier,' Part 1, the harmony at the end of the Fugue is badly blurred by the pedal. Both Prelude and Fugue need a quicker tempo than that indicated on the roll. Played as marked, the Prelude loses its fluency, and the Fugue sounds stodgy (T2466*b*).

Leschetitzky's charming Arabesque, Op. 45, No. 1, makes a very attractive roll, with opportunities for some delicate effects (T30269*a*).

Schubert's 'Moment Musical,' Op. 94, No. 6, in A flat, is an old friend, but, like so much of Schubert, it achieves length by mere repetition, and so fails to hold us after passing the half-way line.

Only an experienced player could make a success of Chopin's Valse in E (posthumous) (T30284*a*). It is not well timed, and a novice who is apt to pin too much faith to the Metrostyle line will gain but a very poor idea of it. Moreover, it is one of the least attractive of Chopin's Valses.

Song Rolls.—All of the 'When we were very young' series have so far proved delightful, but the most charming yet is the latest—'The Three Foxes' (26670).

Other very effective rolls are Schubert's 'Ständchen,' played by Templeton Murray (26694), 'When all was young' (Gounod's 'Faust'), played by Carl Monteith (26695), and 'Comin' thro' the rye,' played by Charles Blackmore (26693).

Song-dance enthusiasts will welcome 'Oh! Charley, take it away!' a march two-step. Apparently it took three people to create this—Hedges, Malcolm, and Le Clerq—and two to play it. Messrs. Norman and Swift do this efficiently (26700).

From a great number of dance rolls, Gershwin's 'Tip-Toes' selection seems the most original (30192*c*).

BLÜTHNER

A brilliant performance of Moszkowski's richly-harmonized and effective 'En Automne,' Op. 36, No. 4 (58145), is given by Joh. Wijsman.

Saint-Saëns's 'Allegro Appassionata,' Op. 70 (57275), played by Lucien Wurmser, sounds no emotional depths, despite its title. The lack of continuity is perhaps the most serious defect in an unequal performance.

A Valse-Caprice, by Chaminade (53574), proves attractive, but only if put on at a pace a good deal quicker than that marked.

Walter Petzet makes a melancholy attempt at a portrayal of Bach. Music of this type needs little more than freedom to speak for itself. Is it so very difficult to play just what is written—no more, no less? This pianist is apparently unable to give a straightforward performance: at least, judging from the two rolls received this month of 'Suite Anglaise' No. 3 (59107-8). The second roll is perhaps the better one, but there is a marked tendency to dot notes in groups that should be even, and the result is a constant heaviness and halting—the last fault a Bach player should commit. D. G.

[After the above notes were in type, a consignment of the new Annotated rolls of the Æolian Company was received. A review must be held over till next month.]

Wireless Notes

BY 'ARIEL'

Opponents of wireless concerts point to the unreliability of transmission as a fatal defect, and just lately my own set has played so many tricks that I am disposed to agree with those who say that it can never compete with the concert-hall—until I remember that these are still the early days of wireless. Hasn't it got an immense distance further than anybody dreamt five years ago? And, after all, don't we often miss an ordinary concert through some unforeseen circumstance? A fog, a bad cold, lack of spare time—even of spare shillings. Still, I admit that a failure of one's wireless set is perhaps more maddening, especially when the failure is of the type that enables you to hear faint sounds of a fine concert—just enough to help you to realise the torments of Tantalus. Worse still is the gradual fading-out in the middle of a good transmission. This was my experience on the occasion of the first

B.B.C. Albert Hall concert. The Brahms Symphony was coming through splendidly (I can well believe those who say that from a wireless point of view it was a triumph), when a gradual diminuendo set in . . . and the rest was silence. In my mind's eye I saw another 'Farewell' Symphony—an improvement on Haydn's—with the orchestra not walking out singly, but gradually becoming disembodied en masse. I cannot yet rid myself entirely of the idea that my set is also a telephone in connection with Savoy Hill, and on disastrous occasions of this sort I still feel an added sense of helpless injury in not being able to ring up and complain that somebody cut us off in the middle of the recapitulation, or wherever it was. . . . Yet, as I said above, these are early days, and such tantalising experiences will become less and less, till they too fade out.

Enough of the programme selected by 'A Man in the Street' (October 16) came across to show the instructive nature of his choice. If all his fellow men in the street have a taste as well on the right road, things are in no bad way. But how came he to choose Balfe's 'Siege of Rochelle' Overture? How many of us musicians had ever heard it before? It proved to be an effective work of its type; I have heard at Queen's Hall overtures that were less good, though signed by more distinguished names. But (again) how did this man in the street come to know it? A search in the gramophone catalogues shows no record of it, though Peter Dawson has been recorded singing an air from the opera. One would have thought that the Overture was on the very top shelf with the rest of the 'Siege.'

A curious discrepancy showed itself on two evenings recently. Vaughan Williams's birthday was celebrated by a fifteen minutes' recital of four of his songs; on the evening before we had a whole hour of A. W. Ketèlbey! I don't say that there should not be an hour of Mr. Ketèlbey for those who want temple bells and Persian markets, with all their naïve and inexpensive pseudo-orientalism, with songs of a similar degree of originality; but surely more than a quarter of that time should have been given to the composer rightly described by the Radio Times as occupying 'one of the highest places in British music.' On the principle suggested by Alice in regard to presents, it is clearly better to be honoured by an un-birthday celebration than by a mere birthday one.

The transmission of the dedication of the Liverpool Cathedral organ was highly successful, especially in regard to the singing. I have rarely, if ever, heard anything better in the way of long-distance choral work than the Holst Psalm. The Liverpool trebles, judging from this, must be first-rate. The organ itself varied, but I got a real thrill at the final pedal entry of the subject in the last page of the 'St. Anne' Fugue—that tremendous A flat that Crotch or some other old worthy said sounded as if it ought to be fired off by a cannon. The Litany that opened the service contained an effect on which somebody at Savoy Hill deserves to be congratulated. Twice the chanting was gradually toned down while a voice in the studio declaimed passages from 'Il penseroso' (the bit about the 'pealing organ') and 'Abt Vogler.' (I learn since that the extracts were printed in the service paper for silent reading by the congregation.) The effect of these fine lines, heard against the faint but beautifully clear chanting, was really moving. This was one of the magical things that only wireless can do, and it opens up possibilities compared with which the much-talked-of 'juxtaposition of sonorities' of some modern composers is mere fumbling.

BOOKS RECEIVED

[Mention in this list neither implies nor precludes review in a future issue.]

'A First Glimpse of Great Music.' By J. H. Elliot. Pp. 128. Blackie, 3*s.* 6*d.*

'The Singing Voice.' By Bantock Pierpoint. Pp. 15. Edwin Ashdown, 2*s.*

'The New Music.' By George Dyson. Second Edition. Pp. 152. Oxford University Press. 8*s.* 6*d.*

'The English Ayre.' By Peter Warlock. Pp. 142. Oxford University Press. 3*s.* 6*d.*

'The Musical Design of the Ring.' By A. E. F. Dickinson. ('The Musical Pilgrim' series.) Pp. 82. Oxford University Press, 1*s.* 6*d.*

'On Memorizing.' By Tobias Matthay. Pp. 19. Oxford University Press, 2*s.*

'The Life of Jenny Lind.' By Mrs. Raymond Maude. Pp. 222. Cassell, 10*s.* 6*d.*

[Book reviews are unavoidably held over.—EDITOR.]

Church and Organ Music

ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS

With reference to the Andante from a pianoforte duet, Mozart—Arrangements by J. Stainer, No. 2 (Novello), selected for Fellowship Examinations, January, 1927—Candidates are informed that only the new and revised edition of this Arrangement will be accepted by the Examiners.

GLASGOW SOCIETY OF ORGANISTS

A lecture with illustrations, entitled 'The R.C.O. Tests (1924-25-26)' will be given under the auspices of the Royal College of Organists, ar Renfield Street U.F. Church, Renfield Street, Glasgow, on Saturday, November 6, at 7.30 p.m., by Dr. Henry G. Ley, M.A. Full particulars may be obtained from Mr. J. Macfarlane, 51, King's Park Avenue, Cathcart, Glasgow.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Secretary.

LIVERPOOL CATHEDRAL ORGAN DEDICATION

An important event in the progress of the building of the great Cathedral at Liverpool was marked by the dedication of the stupendous organ, on Monday, October 18. Twenty-two years have elapsed since King Edward VII. laid the foundation-stone of the Cathedral in July, 1904, and in 1906 H.R.H. The Duke of Connaught laid the foundation-stone of the Chapter House, erected at the cost of the Freemasons of West Lancashire. The consecration of the beautiful Lady Chapel followed in 1910. Building operations on the main site continued until the outbreak of war in 1914, and then for five years progress was almost entirely arrested.

It was resumed in 1919, and the consecration of the Cathedral took place in July, 1924, in the presence of King George V. and Queen Mary. On this memorable occasion only the departments of the instrument placed on the north side of the great choir were available for use. These comprised the Swell organ of thirty-one stops, the Choir organ of twenty-three stops, and sixteen of the thirty-five stops of the Pedal organ—seventy sounding stops in all. The most powerful departments of the organ—the Great Solo, and Bombarde organs, including the family of 30-in. tubas and 50-in. tuba magna—are housed in the case on the south side, being placed there so that the organist should not be overwhelmed by the power of sound his fingers are evolving from the console high up above the choir-stalls on the north side.

Owing to an unfortunate leakage of wind conveyed in earthenware drain-pipes and ducts, which were faultily constructed (not by the organ-builders) the organ on the south side could not be played at the consecration in 1924, so that Their Majesties have yet to hear the big tubas, whose arresting tones have so greatly impressed the multitudes who attended the opening recitals. The Dedication ceremony was admirably carried out. Liverpool Cathedral has already established a tradition in the orderly, dignified, and reverent impressiveness of its pageantry on great occasions. It was attended in state by the Lord Mayor and City Fathers, with the civic regalia, and by other Mayors and notabilities. Clergy were present in great numbers, and the procession was long and imposing.

Commencing with the National Anthem, the 'Litany of Joy and Humility' was sung in procession, and after the Lord Bishop had made the Dedication, the organist, Mr. H. Goss Custard, played Bach's 'St. Ann's' Fugue, in which the stupendous power of the Pedal organ was firstly launched in the final pedal entry of the subject. It provided the first thrill of the day. Holst's anthem 'Praise of all created things' followed, and another organ solo, Harwood's 'Pæan,' gave an opportunity for the Great organ diapasons and magnificent chorus reeds to be finely heard. To many present, a vivid memory will also remain of the very beautiful singing by the cathedral solo boy, Lawrence Davies, of 'The Allelluia, as it was written by Purcell,' and of Handel's 'Organ Song' from the 'Ode to St. Cecilia,' 'What art can teach.' Two hymns, 'Praise the Lord' (sung to 'Austria'); and 'City of God' (sung to 'Richmond)', with Martin Shaw's effective descant, completed the memorable ceremony, in which the Bishop asked his people to pay > '. . . grateful honour to all those whose generous intent, or labour of brain, or skill of craftsmanship, are here woven into one glorious accomplishment.'

In the evening, Mr. H. Goss Custard played the following programme :

Etude Symphonique	Bossi
'Siegfried Idyll'	Wagner
Prelude and Fugue, A minor ...	J. S. Bach
Pastorale	Franck
Sonata in D minor	Best
'Curfew'	Horsman
Finale (1st Symphony)	Vierne

It was a programme and performance well-designed to exploit the resources of the mighty instrument, and to display every variety of tone, from the delicate shades of the softer stops—the flutes, strings, and wood-wind—to the rolling richness of the diapasons and stupendous climaxes of tuba tone. As a combination of cathedral-organ and concert-organ, the instrument is a masterpiece in conception and achievement, worthy of the noble building.

Congratulations to its genius-builder, the third Henry Willis, and also to the accomplished Cathedral organist, Mr. H. Goss Custard, who has added new laurels to his reputation as a great executive artist. W. A. ROBERTS.

NEWCASTLE CATHEDRAL

An impressive service was held in Newcastle Cathedral on October 4, in celebration of the seven-hundredth anniversary of the death of St. Francis of Assisi. The choirs of the cathedral and of Jesmond Parish Church joined forces for the occasion. The music was directed by Mr. William Ellis, organist of the cathedral, and Dr. Hutchinson, organist and choirmaster of Jesmond Parish Church, was at the organ. The music included Weelkes's 'Hosanna to the Son of David,' Vittoria's 'Jesu dulcis memoria,' Stanford's Te Deum in D flat, and some fine hymns. There was a very large congregation.

DR. H. J. EDWARDS

Dr. H. J. Edwards has just celebrated his diamond jubilee as organist of Barnstaple Parish Church. On September 26, the actual date, the entire music of the day's services, with the exception of one chant (composed by his father), was of his composition. The Doctor's name is a household word in the West of England, and friends and admirers came from far and near to attend the service. Feeling references were made from the pulpit, and special peals were rung on the bells. Dr. Edwards was appointed to the position of organist of the Parish Church when he was but twelve years of age, and he has served under six Vicars.

Photo by] [Jno. R. Browning, Exeter

DR. H. J. EDWARDS

ST. MICHAEL'S, CORNHILL

The annual Festival will take place from November 14 to 18 inclusive. Special features will be the dedication and re-opening of the organ, after renovation and extensive additions, and the provision of an evening devoted to secular music. On Monday, November 15, at 6 o'clock, the St. Michael's Singers will perform 'Ring out, ye crystal spheres,' a new ode written specially for the occasion, and dedicated to the Singers, by Dr. Harold Darke, the 'Stabat Mater' of Stanford, and Parry's 'Blest Pair of Sirens.' On November 16, at 6, there will be a secular concert at Bishopsgate Institute, consisting of madrigals, folk-songs, &c., old and new, and a Concerto for two pianofortes, played by Mr. Thalben Ball and Dr. Darke; on November 17, at 6 p.m., the St. Michael's Singers will give an evening of Parry's works, including the 'Glories of our Blood and State,' 'Three Songs of Farewell,' and 'The Vision of Life' (first time in London); on November 18, two Bach cantatas—'Give the hungry man thy bread' and 'Watch ye, pray ye'—will be sung, and also the Motet, 'Jesu, Priceless Treasure.' Organ recitals will be given each day at one o'clock, by Dr. Harold Darke, Mr. Stanley Roper, Dr. Henry Ley, and Mr. G. D. Cunningham, in the order named. Sir Hugh Allen will give an address at the opening recital on November 15. A strong list of soloists has been engaged. Programmes, with book of words, and all particulars, may be obtained from the Secretary, St. Michael's Vestry, Cornhill, 1s. (postage, 2d.).

'SATURDAY MUSIC' AT ST. MARTIN-IN-THE-FIELDS

A series of recitals is now being given at St. Martin-in-the-Fields on Saturdays at 3.15 p.m., under the homely title of 'Saturday Music.' The director is Mr. Arnold Goldsborough, Master of the Music. The arrangements for November are: 6th, orchestral concert (Bach's Violin Concerto in G minor, Mozart's Concerto for harp, in G minor, and a Handel Concerto), soloists, Marian Jay, Marie Korchinska, and Herbert Creighton; on the 13th, a Bach recital (the 'Schemelli Hymns,' a Violin Sonata, Organ Choral Preludes, the 'Italian' Concerto, and the Cantata, 'Ich lasse dich nicht'), soloists, Elizabeth Mellor, Dilys Jones, John Adams, and George Parker. The programme for the 20th is being arranged by Mrs. St. John Mildmay, and details are not yet available. On the 27th, Elsa West and Owen Bryngwyn will give a violin and vocal recital, including Welsh songs. The December arrangements include some Bach Cantatas, and the 'Christmas' Oratorio, sung by the St. Martin's Choral Society, and a programme by the virtuoso String Quartet. The recitals began on September 18, and we understand that the performances are worthy of the admirable programmes.

A BACH FESTIVAL AT NORWICH

A successful Bach Festival was held at St. Mary's Baptist Church and Lecture Hall, Norwich, on October 13-15. The three well-chosen programmes included the solo cantata, 'False Love' (Mr. T. G. Skingley), the French Suite in G (Mr. Cyril Pearce), the third 'Brandenburg' Concerto, the Concerto in C for two pianofortes and strings (Mrs. Johnstone and Mrs. Bryan), the double Concerto for violins (Mrs. W. Tillett and Miss Renee Carter), Sonatas for violin and pianoforte, in B minor (Mrs. Tillett and Mr. Pearce), and A major (Miss Carter and the Rev. V. N. Gilbert), and flute and pianoforte (Mr. John Ashford and Mr. Pearce), and the cantatas, 'Weeping, wailing' and 'Come, rejoice, ye faithful,' sung by the St. Mary's Baptist Church Choir, &c. There was a string orchestra of fifteen. Mr. Cyril Pearce, the promoter, was also conductor and handyman, adding organ solos to his other activities. The audiences could have been larger, but hardly more enthusiastic, and the venture—carried out as it was by purely local talent—was well worth while.

THE GRAMOPHONE IN CHURCH

Gramophone recitals have become established features in Claines Parish Church, Worcestershire. The programmes of the most recent have included records of Elgar's second Symphony and A minor 'Pomp and Circumstance' March, Strauss's 'Death and Transfiguration,' Schubert's Trio in B flat, organ solos, and extracts from the B minor Mass. This strikes us as being an excellent feature, and well worth noting by those who wish to help forward the cause of good music in villages. We understand that at Claines the gramophone has been an immense help in the local musical clubs, senior and junior.

A Festival service was held at Hexham Abbey on October 7, for the deaneries of Hexham, Bellingham, and Corbridge-on-Tyne. The evening canticles were sung to Vaughan Williams in C, and the anthem was Garrett's 'In humble faith.' The same music was sung at the Alston Moors Festival, at Alston Parish Church, on September 28. Mr. C. H. Richards, organist of Hexham Abbey, accompanied, and also gave a recital, his programme including the 'St. Ann' Fugue, Charles Wood's Prelude on 'St. Mary's Tune,' and the Overture to 'Zauberflöte.'

A new organ of three manuals and twenty-five stops, built by the Æolian Company, has been erected in the United Methodist Church, Carshalton. The opening took place on September 28, Mr. E. T. Cook giving the recital.

A series of eighteen half-hour recitals was given at Lichfield Cathedral on the Saturdays during the summer by Mr. Ambrose P. Porter. The recitals were chiefly for the benefit of the large number of visitors to the city. The following composers were represented in the programmes: Bach (5), de Sévérac, Saint-Saëns, Parry (5), Charles Wood (5), Howells (3), Grace (2), Rootham, Healey Willan, Alan Gray, Frank Bridge, Walford Davies, &c. We are glad to see so good a proportion of English music in this series.

A choir of over fifteen hundred took part in the district festival of the Nonconformist Choir Union, at East Finchley Congregational Church, on September 30. The anthems sung included John E. West's 'All people that on earth do dwell,' Mendelssohn's 'O great is the depth,' and the 'Hallelujah Chorus' from 'Judas Maccabæus.' Stanford's Magnificat in B flat and Parry's 'Welcome, Yule' were also sung. Mr. Frank Idle directed, Mr. William Parkyn was at the organ, and Mr. Roy Henderson was the soloist.

Handel's rarely-heard oratorio, 'Belshazzar,' was sung at Snow Hill Congregational Church, Wolverhampton, on October 3, by a largely augmented choir. Part of the work was given in the afternoon, and the remainder in the evening. Mr. Arthur Jordan was among the soloists. Mr. Theodore Grosvenor conducted, and Mr. Horace Turner was at the organ.

About six hundred members of Free Church choirs in the Wellingborough district took part in their forty-second choral festival at Wellingborough High Street Congregational Church on October 9. There was a capital choice of music, the hymns being of fine quality, and under Mr. F. Heddon Bond's direction the singing reached an even higher standard than usual. Mr. Bernard Archer was at the organ.

A series of recitals will be given at St. Mary's, Aldermary, Queen Victoria Street, E.C., at 1.5, weekly in November, each recital being devoted to one composer, and the players being: November 5, Dr. Walker Robson (César Franck); November 11, Mr. E. T. Cook (Bach); November 18, Mr. Allan Brown (Guilmant); November 26, Mr. Harvey Grace (Rheinberger).

In connection with the West and North-west branch of the London Society of Organists, a recital of music for organ and strings will be given by Mr. F. W. Belchamber, at St. Gabriel's, Cricklewood, on November 20, at 3.30 p.m. Tea will be provided for those who send word to Mr. Albert Orton, 9, Clarence Gardens, W.9, not later than November 17.

The organ at Horton Lane Congregational Church, Bradford, was re-opened on September 22, when Mr. G. D. Cunningham gave a recital. His programme included Bach's Prelude and Fugue in G, the Reubke Fugue, Wolstenholme's Cantilène in A flat, Gigout's Scherzo, and Lemare's Variations on 'Hanover.'

The organ at Woodgrange Baptist Church, Stratford, E., was re-opened after enlargement and reconstruction on September 26. Mr. Frank Idle gave a recital, playing Bach's Toccata and Fugue in B minor, the Overture to 'William Tell,' and his own Berceuse and 'Graceful Measure.'

We frequently give records of long service in the cause of Church music. Here is one notable not only for length of days, but for a quality in which choirmen as a rule do not excel—punctuality. Mr. Septimus Rosten, a member of St. Luke's, Southport, choir, has now given fifty-one years' continuous service and has not once been late. Bravo!

Messrs. Rushworth & Dreaper have recently installed an organ in Methil Parish Church, Fifeshire—a two-manual of nineteen speaking stops and fifteen pistons and pedals.

The organ in the Free Trade Hall, Manchester, has been rebuilt, and a fourth manual added, by Messrs. Wadsworth, of Manchester.

RECITALS

Mr. C. E. R. Stevens, St. Paul's, St. Helier, Jersey—Elegy, Parry; Marche Triomphale, Karg-Elert; Concerto in G, Bach; Wedding March, Harwood.

Mr. F. W. Belchamber, St. Stephen's Walbrook—Sonata in D minor, Ritter; Andante (Quintet No. 5), Mozart; Allegro (Suite No. 3), Handel; 'Le Cygne,' Saint-Saëns.

Mr. Charles Stott, Whitcliffe Road Wesleyan Church, Cleckheaton—'The Sea,' H. Arnold Smith; Grande Pièce Symphonique, Franck; Fanfare Fugue, Lemare; Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, Bach; Grand Chœur, Gigout.

Mr. Eric Read, St. Margaret's, Ilkley—Prelude and Fugue in B minor, Bach; Prière, Jongen; Pæan, Harwood; Psalm-Prelude No. 1, Howells; Fugue in A flat minor, Brahms; Choral No. 3, Franck.

Mr. Joseph Soar, St. David's Cathedral—A Bach programme: Passacaglia; Prelude and Fugue in E minor ('The Wedge'); Chorale Prelude—'When in the hour of utmost need'; First movement (Sonata No. 4); Prelude and Fugue in B minor, &c.

Mr. Alban Hamer, St. George's Cathedral—Fantasy Prelude, Macpherson; Sposalizio, Liszt; Scherzo, Bairstow; Reverie on 'University' and 'Cradle Song,' Harvey Grace.

Mr. P. F. Guthridge, St. Paul's Cathedral, Melbourne—Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, Bach; Kyrie Eleison, Karg-Elert; Choral (Symphony No. 10), Widor; Sonata No. 12, Rheinberger.

Mr. Herbert F. Ellingford, St. George's Hall, Liverpool—Suite for Organ No. 1, Lyon; Minuet and Trio, Albert Ham; Variations on an Original Theme, Archer; Impromptu in A, Goodhart; Air with Variations and Fugue in E, Best; Fantasia in E minor, Silas; Masonic March, Ellingford; Overture in D minor, Handel-Elgar; Chant de Printemps, Bonnet; Sonata No. 2, Bach; Introduction, Variations, and Fugue on 'Sedbergh,' Dixon.

Miss Lilian Trott, St. Stephen's Walbrook—Overture to 'Athalia'; Prelude and Fugue in C minor, Bach; Air with Variations and Finale, Lyon; March in B minor, Schubert.

Mr. Frank White, Spalding Wesleyan Church—Concert-stücke in form of Polonaise, Lemare; Fugue alla giga, Bach; Sonata in C sharp minor, Harwood; Rondino in D flat, Wolstenholme.

Mr. A. E. Howell, Wesleyan Methodist Church, Westbury—Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Prelude on 'Rhosymedre,' Vaughan Williams; Evening Song, Bairstow; Sonata No. 5, Mendelssohn.

Mr. R. A. Jevons, Stamford Hill Congregational Church—Prelude and Fugue in D minor, Mendelssohn; Prelude on 'St. Cross,' Parry; Evening Song, Bairstow; Largo and Minuet, Handel.

Mr. G. W. Beasley, Parish Church, Lyminge—Prelude on 'Melcombe,' Parry; Intermezzo on the 'Londonderry Air,' Stanford; Prelude and Fugue in E minor, Bach; Two Monologues, Rheinberger.

Mr. Clifford Smith, St. Stephen's Walbrook—Festival Prelude on 'Ein' feste burg,' Faulkes; Prelude and Fugue in A minor, Bach; Postludes on 'Martyrs' and 'The Old 100th,' Grace.

Mr. John Pullein, St. Mary's Cathedral, Glasgow—Sonata in B flat, Arne; Fugue on the Magnificat, Bach; Cantabile, Franck; Prelude on Croft's 136th, Parry. (The Cathedral Choir sang unaccompanied works by Farrant, Tallis, Gibbons, and Kalinnikov.)

APPOINTMENTS

Mr. J. W. Barron, choirmaster, Clapton Park Congregational Church.

Mr. Arthur G. Gilbey, choirmaster and organist, Leyton Parish Church.

Mr. Clifford Marshall, choirmaster and organist, St. Mary's, Walton-on-the-Hill, Liverpool.

Mr. H. V. F. Miniken, choirmaster and organist, Christ Church, Harlsden.

Mr. G. H. Jackson, choirmaster and organist, St. Hilda's, Prestwich.

Letters to the Editor

JOHN ABELL: A FORGOTTEN ENGLISH MUSICIAN

SIR,—Up to the present, the fullest account of John Abell, remarkable alto singer and lutenist, is that to be found in Grove's 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians,' yet quite a sheaf of new facts have recently come to light, and deserve to be placed on record. It was not hitherto suspected that Abell—who was a castrato—married into a noble English family, nor was anything known of his visit to Ireland, or of his stay at Amsterdam, therefore the present details will likely prove of interest to musicologists. Not only was he a good musician, but he was a diplomatist, and was Intendant at Cassel in 1698 and 1699.

Born in $165\frac{2}{3}$, and educated as a chorister in the Chapel Royal, Abell was appointed 'Musician for the private music to His Majesty in ordinary, with fee, in the place of Anthony Roberts, deceased,' at a salary of £40 yearly, the patent being dated June 5, 1679 ('The King's Musick,' p. 340). Two years later he was appointed 'Musician for the Lute and Voice,' in the room of Alphonso March, deceased, and also 'Musician for the Violin,' in the place of Richard Dorney, deceased ('The King's Musick,' p. 355). So highly was he esteemed by Charles II. that in 1680 the king sent him to Italy for further study. Evelyn, the diarist, then describes a meeting with him after his return, under date of January 27, 1682:

> 'After supper came in the famous treble, Mr. Abel, newly returned from Italy. I never heard a more excellent voice, and would have sworn it had been a woman's, it was so high and so well and skilfully managed, being accompanied by Signor Francisco on the harpsichord.'

Abell—being a Roman Catholic—was high in favour with James II., under whom he was sworn 'one of the Countertenors for the private musick,' on August 31, 1685. From the Lord Chamberlain's Accounts it appears that on October 15, 1686, he was ordered to be paid £10 'for a Guitar by him bought for his Majesty's service in his bedchamber.' From 1685 to 1688 Abell had 3*s.* a day 'riding charges' for attending the King and Queen, and between the years 1679 and 1688 he received bounty money amounting to £740. He gave a grand concert on June 18, 1688, in honour of the birth of the Prince of Wales; and on October 20, 1688, he got special payment for his services at Windsor.

From the Rutland MSS. we learn of Abell's marriage to no less a personage than the sister of Lord Banbury. This interesting fact is mentioned in a letter from Peregrine Bertie to the Countess of Rutland, under date of January 1, $168\frac{5}{6}$:

> 'I suppose your Ladyship has already heard of my Lady Frances Abell's marriage, at which my Lady Banbury and my Lady Catherine are extremely disturbed, but for my Lady Anne Littleton she was that night at my Lord Berkeley's ball and seemed to be very well pleased.'

The fact is more explicitly stated in a gossiping letter from the Hon. Bridget Noel to her sister, the Countess of Rutland, five days later:

> 'Cousin Peregrine goes to travel with Lord Manchester. Lord Banbury's sister, Lady Frances, is married to Abell, the singing master; her brother is extremely concerned at it. As soon as Lord Banbury knew of it, he put her out of the house. She was married that night that the company was there, which was a Tuesday [December 29, 1685], and on Wednesday night my Lady Exeter and my Lord Exeter and my brothers and sister and Lord Banbury and Lady Frances [Mrs. Abell] and Sir Mortan and his lady supped at Mr. King's in the Great Room where the Musick plays of public days, and I could not perceive anything of love between them, for she courted my brothers as much as ever she used to do' (January 6, 1686).

At the Revolution, Abell fled to the Continent, and made money by his voice and lute. He was at Zell in 1695, and on January 6, 1696, Prior wrote to Charles Montague that Abell was singing successfully at Amsterdam, but was anxious to return to London. At length, in 1699, he was permitted to come home, and was immediately taken into the household of the Duke of Ormonde. Congreve, in a letter dated December 10, 1700, says that Abell 'certainly sings beyond all creatures upon earth, and I have heard him very often both abroad and since he came over.' (It was Congreve who wrote the famous line, 'Music has charms to soothe the savage breast.')

In 1701, Abell published an old Irish song, 'Shein sios agus suas liom' ('Down beside me'), with music, the Irish words being printed phonetically. He sang it with great success at one of his concerts at Stationers' Hall. He also published a song on Queen Anne's Coronation in 1702, the words being by an Irishman, Nahum Tate, of 'Tate and Brady' fame. A year later he accompanied the Duke of Ormonde to Ireland. The Duke arrived at Dublin, as Lord Lieutenant, in May, 1703, and appointed Abell 'Master of the State Musick.' At the celebration of Queen Anne's birthday, on February 7, 1704, at Dublin Castle, Abell sang his Irish song with tremendous applause. However, in December, 1704, he felt a longing to be back in England, and his post as Master of the State Music was given to William Viner. His patron, the Duke of Ormonde, left Dublin on June 28, 1705, and did not return to Ireland for six years.

I have not traced any details regarding Abell between the years 1705 and 1715, but he gave a concert at Stationers' Hall in 1716, and his death took place at Cambridge in 1724.—Yours, &c.,

W. H. GRATTAN FLOOD.

IN DEFENCE OF THE PIANOFORTE

SIR,—In the October issue of the Musical Times your stimulating contributor 'Feste' refers to the pianoforte in terms which hardly do justice to that long-suffering instrument. He says that 'nobody seems to be greatly affected by the pianoforte,' and he attributes this to the 'fatal' defect, the lack of sostenuto. He also suggests that the pianoforte is capable of a greater variety of amusing effects than any other instrument.

I seem to remember performances which did unmistakably affect the audience in a purely musical sense, performances in which the handicraft or technical side was completely lost sight of in the message which the composer and performer (the latter cannot be ignored) had to convey.

As regards the lack of sostenuto, it appears to me that there is a widespread misunderstanding as to the meaning of this term in the truly musical sense as apart from the mere sustentation of sound.

The pianoforte is literally an instrument of percussion. Everyone admits so much, and Song would seem to be alien to its genius. So it is, if the vital factor in Song, which counts for more than mere sustentation of sound, is omitted. How few seem to realise that to sing is to phrase—i.e., to feel the sounds in their musical relationship one to the other, to convey the feeling of inevitability in progression, to feel the melodic line with those subtle inflections in 'time' which convey musical meaning. By such means and such means alone can the illusion of song be created at the keyboard, and few there are who realise it—certain players of repute not excepted.

Singers and violinists often lack this song sense, despite the fact that the literal physical sostenuto is at their command.

Whatever developments in music may be in store for us, the melodic line has up to the present constituted its essence, and when pianists think in terms of true song rather than in those of rhythm (in the limited sense of insistence) the pianoforte will be re-created, and its position as a musical instrument will, I venture to think, no longer be questioned. Let us blame, not the pianoforte, but the pianists. It is a mysterious instrument, and illusion enters largely into musical performance thereon, but it is an illusion which can take on a curious air of reality. A performer who possesses this gift or understanding of song can create the illusion of 'singing-tone' even on an indifferent instrument (i.e., he will play in such a way as to make his listeners oblivious of the actual gaps between the sounds). The carping, critical attitude towards the pianoforte which is a feature of the musical criticism of to-day would seem to suggest a misunderstanding as to its spirit and its place in music. It has its limitations; but, then, so has every medium through which music comes to us, the much-vaunted orchestra being no exception. Whilst limitations, however, must always be reckoned with, it surely is a new canon of criticism to compute values in terms of limitation and to ignore virtues.

The raw, emotional excitement associated with the orchestral volume and variety of timbre has often little enough connection with true musical emotion. The pianoforte cannot compete with the orchestra in this sense, and the endeavour to make it do so results in a disservice to the pianoforte.

As to 'amusing effects,' I should have thought that the organ, violin, violoncello, and the voice easily took precedence in this respect.—Yours, &c.,

34*a*, Bold Street, Liverpool. FRANK BERTRAND.

'POPULARITY AND THE CLASSICS'

SIR,—With reference to Mr. Brent-Smith's article on the similarity of modern popular airs and classical themes, may I draw your attention to the likeness between 'Hitchy-Koo' and the men's subject in the 'Gloria Patri' from Bach's Magnificat? I became aware of this in November, 1917, when in France. No doubt the letter that I then sent to you was lost in the maze of war and post-war activities.—Yours, &c.,

40, Playfield Crescent, S.E.22. P. J. BURKE.

The Amateurs' Exchange

Under this heading we insert, free of charge, announcements by amateur musicians who wish to co-operate with others.

Pianist (lady) wishes to practise with other instrumentalists or to accompany vocalists. London only.—C. M., 51, Hackford Road, S.W.9.

Violist wishes to meet other string players to form quartet for mutual practice. Morning or afternoon. Good library. N. London.—ALTO, c/o Musical Times.

Viola player (gentleman) wanted, to join quartet. Must reside in Dulwich or Peckham.—C. H. S., c/o Musical Times.

Lady viola player seeks practice of chamber music. Easy access of Streatham.—OMEGA, c/o Musical Times.

'Cellist wanted for quartet practice. S.W.11 district. Classical music only. N. M. A., c/o Musical Times.

Vocalist wishes to meet male accompanist for mutual practice and experience. S.E. district. — R. B., c/o Musical Times.

'Cellist (learner) wishes to meet good pianist and violinists for progressive practice. Solos, trios, and quartets. Croydon district. — CHARLES P. COCKS, 158, Morland Road, Croydon.

Young lady pianist wishes to meet vocalist or instrumentalists, or would join trio. S.W. London.—H. V. G., c/o Musical Times.

Lady amateur singer wishes to meet pianist for mutual practice. Good pianoforte. N. London.—L. M., c/o Musical Times.

Lady pianist, good reader, wishes to meet singer or instrumentalist for mutual practice. Leeds district.—E. E. D., c/o Musical Times.

Sharps and Flats

What we need now is more songs like the 'Lost Chord.' There is something of the grandeur of Beethoven in it.—Dame Clara Butt.

I never practise, you know. I should hate to become stilted.—Fritz Kreisler.

I have never grown tired of singing 'Abide with me.'—Dame Clara Butt.

I am a little astonished that Dame Clara is pining for another song like 'The Lost Chord.' There are some things that should only be done once.—'——' in the Daily News.

I know there exist two or three other press correspondents who lay claim to have written a far greater number of letters than I. Doubtless that is perfectly true, but whether their extraordinarily numerous epistles have served any useful purpose is quite another question.—Algernon Ashton.

A bishop declares that he would rather play the oboe than the harp in a celestial choir. The prospect of hearing the Higher Clergy on the wood-wind is yet another inducement to be good.—Punch.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

The Michaelmas term opened on September 20, and a large increase of students has again to be recorded. The new buildings in York Gate, a brief account of which appears below, have only just been finished in time. Now there is elbow room in plenty.

The first fortnightly concert took place on Saturday, October 9, and there were presented several items of interest in the programme. Arthur Bliss's 'Madame Noy,' for soprano and six instruments (flute, clarinet, bassoon, harp, viola, and double-bass), is perhaps a more valuable vehicle for students' practice than for public performance. The first movement of Mozart's Symphonie Concertante for violin and viola was well played by John Hamilton and Philip Burton, and there was a notable exhibition of ensemble in the performance of Popper's 'Requiem' for three 'cellos, Op. 66. A young student, Guirne Creith, played two of her compositions for the pianoforte. She is to be admired, and should be encouraged to carry on in the art of composition. There is no doubt that she is gifted with imagination, and to a certain extent is able to depict its effects, but the two pieces in question are very reminiscent. Especially is this true of the first. Mr. Geoffrey Dunn has a pleasing light tenor voice, and sang three modern songs intelligently. His diction was excellent, for which he should be highly commended. The art is not generally recognised.

The new rehearsal theatre, lecture hall, and a group of well-proportioned studios are at last out of the builders' hands, and on Tuesday afternoon, October 19, the Duke of Connaught declared the extension open. When the buildings at Marylebone Road were originally erected, some five hundred students were on the books; at the present moment the number is over a thousand. The rehearsal theatre will seat three hundred, and it has a sunk orchestra fashioned after the Bayreuth plan. In declaring the buildings open, the Duke very happily remarked that his connection with the Royal Academy had been of such a long and intimate nature that he was very glad to associate himself with everything happening within its walls. The new theatre is to be known as the 'Duke's Rehearsal Theatre.' After the ceremony His Royal Highness and other guests listened to a short programme of music played by the Academy orchestra, under the conductorship of Mr. Charles Woodhouse.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC

The Christmas term is in full cry, and the usual stiff fences in the shape of countless concerts and rehearsals are being negotiated as they come into view. Among the concerts, the hundredth 'informal' concert deserves more than passing mention. These 'informal' concerts were inaugurated seven or eight years ago, and have served as stepping-stones to the regular College concerts. Newly-fledged performers have thus been enabled to test their fragile wings in the presence of a friendly and encouraging audience, and many composers have found opportunities for making experiments in strange forms and tonalities, free from that bogey of total eclipse which too often haunts the ambitious innovator. The hundredth concert gave composers two such chances, with promising results, e.g., three songs by H. T. Abady (of which 'Beauty' was the best) showed real instinct for the song-form, and a Sonata for viola and pianoforte by W. Gurney, which aimed at compressing the whole machinery of a sonata into less than a quarter of an hour, proved attractive and musical in spite of a somewhat too slight interdependence of the two instruments.

In addition to three Patrons' Fund rehearsals and the usual College concerts, it is proposed to pay tribute during the term to the memory of the late Dr. Charles Wood, by performances of his 'Swinburne' Ode, written for the State opening of the new College building in 1894, and of his two short operas (originally produced at the College), founded on episodes in the works of Charles Dickens.

The College is happy in the possession of many valuable portraits of distinguished musicians and benefactors, and, since the re-decoration of the Concert Hall, has been able to adorn its walls with some of the most interesting examples, among which are (in addition to the busts of King Edward VII., the Founder, and Sir George Grove and Sir Hubert Parry, Directors), Henry Leslie, Sir Arthur Sullivan, Sir Ernest Palmer, and S. S. Wesley. But a recent addition to this gallery is the most notable of all. Mr. Robert Finnie McEwen, a member of the Council, desired, shortly before his death, to present to the College a portrait of His Majesty The King, Patron of the College. His Majesty readily acceded to the proposal, and graciously gave special sittings for the portrait. This has been painted by Sir Arthur Cope, and now has the place of honour on the walls of the Concert Hall. The portrait is a happy conception, and is unusual in the sense that it is not a 'ceremonial' one, but represents His Majesty in the dress worn at dinner parties on private occasions, thus picturing a personal rather than an official impression of the Patron. Both artistically and historically it is an accession of the highest importance, and is a fitting memorial of the generous donor.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC

A former scholar of the College, Mr. E. Beck Slinn, and a student, Mr. Adrian W. Beecham, have been admitted to the Mus. Bac. degree of Durham University.

The lecture by Mr. James Brown, on 'Style and Quality in String Quartet Playing,' proved of great interest and instruction to the students, and a similar remark may be made of the course of lectures on 'English Literature,' which were given in October, and are being continued during the present month, by Mrs. K. W. Campbell.

By the kindness of Mr. H. Llewelyn Howell, a fund to help orchestral students has been inaugurated at the College.

The College Library is continually supplemented by gifts of interesting and valuable books, and amongst recent additions are a book of Songs by Jeremiah Clark (1791), presented by Dr. C. Vincent; the reprint of Morley's 'Introduction to Practical Music,' issued by Randall in 1773; and a copy of the first edition of Goss's 'Harmony,' with the autograph of the author.

A successful tour of centres in Scotland in connection with the distribution of prizes and certificates gained under the College scheme of Local Examinations was recently made by Dr. J. Warriner. Amongst the centres visited were Aberdeen, Perth, Edinburgh, and Dundee. Distributions have also been held at Stoke-on-Trent, Tottenham, Frome, and Brighton, when Prof. Bridge represented the College; Southampton and Northampton, at which Dr. Horner attended; at Newcastle, where Sir Richard Terry, Chairman of the Centre, presided; and Birkenhead, where the Secretary of the College was present.

The silver medal given triennially to the College by the Worshipful Company of Musicians has been awarded to the violin scholar, Harry Blech, who received it at the hands of the Worshipful Master at the annual dinner of the Company on October 26.

CHORAL SOCIETY PROGRAMMES

(Second List)

LONDON AND SUBURBS

BARCLAY'S BANK MUSICAL SOCIETY (Mr. Herbert Pierce).—Brahms's 'Alto Rhapsody'; 'Hymns from the Rig Veda'; 'Landerkennung' (Grieg); 'If thou but sufferest' (Bach).

BATTERSEA AND WANDSWORTH CHORAL UNION (Mr. F. Wilment Bates).—'The Rebel Maid'; 'A Tale of Old Japan.'

BROMLEY CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. F. Fertel).—'Christmas' Oratorio; 'King Olaf'; 'Blest Pair of Sirens.'

CHISWICK AND GUNNERSBURY PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY (Mr. David M. Davis).—Gounod's 'Faust' (concert version); 'The May Queen.'

DULWICH PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY (Mr. Leslie Regan).—'Tom Jones': 'Blest Pair of Sirens'; 'The Banner of St. George'; 'The Kingdom.'

EALING CHORAL AND ORCHESTRAL SOCIETY (Mr. A. C. Praeger).—'Hymn of Praise'; Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater.'

HAMPSTEAD (ST. LUKE'S) MUSICAL SOCIETY (Mr. W. P. Lambert).—'Hymn of Praise'; 'The Rose Maiden.'

HARROW AND GREENHILL CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. F. W. Belchamber).—'King Olaf'; 'Semele.'

LONDON CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. Arthur Fagge).—'Omar Khayyàm' (Parts 2 and 3); Berlioz's 'Faust'; Bach's 'St. John' Passion.

LOUGHTON CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. Henry Riding).—'Carmen' (concert version); 'The Banner of St. George'; 'The Messiah.'

PLUMSTEAD CENTRAL HALL CHOIR (Mr. W. Wilson).—'Elijah'; 'Carmen' (abridged concert edition); Verdi's 'Requiem'; 'The Messiah.'

SOUTH LONDON PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY (Mr. W. H. Kerridge).—'King Arthur' (abridged version); Brahms's 'Liebeslieder'; 'From the Bavarian Highlands'; 'Parsifal'; 'A Tale of Old Japan'; Parry's 'Pied Piper of Hamelin.'

STOKE NEWINGTON CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. Ernest W. Agate).—'The Golden Legend'; 'Carmen' or 'Hiawatha's Departure'; Fantasia on 'The Beggar's Opera'; 'Sleepers, wake.'

WATFORD CHORAL UNION (Mr. Wallis Bandey).—Brahms's 'Requiem'; 'The Messiah' (Part 3); 'King Olaf.'

WELWYN GARDEN CITY MUSICAL SOCIETY (Miss Alice Hare).—Carols and Part-songs; 'The Beggar's Opera.'

WILLESDEN GREEN AND CRICKLEWOOD CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. F. W. Belchamber).—'The Messiah'; Berlioz's 'Faust'; 'The Rebel Maid.'

WIMBLEDON CHURCH CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. Frank W. Bates).—'A Tale of Alsatia' (Vincent Thomas).

WOODSIDE CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. Norman Appleton).—Selections from 'Masaniello,' 'Faust,' 'Idomeneo,' and 'Acis and Galatea.'

PROVINCIAL

ABERDEEN ORATORIO CHOIR (Mr. Willan Swainson).—'The Mystic Trumpeter'; 'The Dream of Gerontius'; 'The Messiah'; Mass in B minor.

ARBROATH CHORAL UNION (Mr. Claude A. Forster).—'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast' and 'The Death of Minnehaha.'

BELFAST PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY (Mr. E. Godfrey Brown).—'Glory and Honour and Laud' (Charles Wood); 'Out of a Silence' (Rathbone); Act 2 of 'Orpheus'; Parts of 'St. Matthew' Passion and Mass in B minor; 'The Messiah.'

BEXHILL CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. George Christian).—'Elijah.'

BLACKPOOL CHORAL AND ORCHESTRAL SOCIETY (Mr. Percy M. Dayman).—'A Tale of Old Japan'; 'The Messiah.'

BOGNOR PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY (Mr. Norman F. Demuth).—'The Mystic Trumpeter'; 'Toward the Unknown Region.'

BOLTON CHORAL UNION (Mr. Thomas Booth).—'The Dream of Gerontius'; 'The Messiah'; 'Hiawatha.'

BOURNEMOUTH MUNICIPAL CHOIR (Sir Dan Godfrey).—'Acis and Galatea'; 'The Mystic Trumpeter'; 'Elijah'; 'The Dream of Gerontius'; 'Merrie England.'

BRIDGEWATER CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. Arthur Trowbridge).—'The Light of Life' (Elgar).

BRISTOL (J. S. FRY) MUSICAL SOCIETY (Mr. C. Read).—'The Ancient Mariner'; 'The Messiah.'

CARDIFF BLUE RIBBON CHOIR (Mr. Jenkyn Morris).—Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater'; 'At the Foot of the Cross.'

CARLISLE CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. F. W. Wadely).—'The Messiah'; 'The Black Knight'; Vaughan Williams's 'Fantasia on Christmas Carols.'

CATTERICK CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. Arthur Fountain).—'The Revenge.'

CHESHAM CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. R. B. Green).—'St. Paul'; 'The Messiah.'

COLCHESTER AND DISTRICT MUSICAL SOCIETY (Mr. W. F. Kingdon).—'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast'; 'The Death of Minnehaha'; 'The Last Post.'

DOVER CHORAL UNION (Mr. H. J. Taylor).—'Il Trovatore'; 'Blest Pair of Sirens'; 'The Messiah.'

EASTBOURNE Y.M.C.A. CHORAL SOCIETY (Dr. W. A. Hall).—'The Golden Legend.'

EXETER ORATORIO SOCIETY (Mr. Allan Allen).—'The Messiah'; 'The Mystic Trumpeter'; 'Hymn of Praise.'

FOLKESTONE PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY (Mr. F. E. Fletcher).—'Carmen' (abridged concert edition); 'The Creation.'

FORFAR CHORAL UNION (Mr. Stephen Richardson).—'The Creation' (selection); 'Ode to the North-West Wind.'

GREENOCK CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. Frank Smith).—'A Tale of Old Japan.'

HECKMONDWIKE CHORAL SOCIETY.—'The Messiah'; 'Samson.'

HULL VOCAL SOCIETY (Sir Henry Coward).—'King Olaf'; 'Blest Pair of Sirens'; 'The Messiah.'

KIDDERMINSTER CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. J. Irving Glover).—'Hiawatha' (Parts 1 and 2); 'The Dream of Gerontius.'

LINCOLN MUSICAL SOCIETY (Dr. G. J. Bennett).—'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast'; 'Toward the Unknown Region'; 'Blest Pair of Sirens'; 'The Messiah' (Part 1).

MAIDSTONE CHORAL UNION (Mr. F. Wilson Parish).—'Carmen' (abridged concert edition).

MALMESBURY CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. J. A. Jones).—'The Messiah'; 'King Olaf.'

MANCHESTER (HALLÉ CHORUS) (Sir Hamilton Harty).—At the Hallé concerts: 'Messe des Morts (Berlioz); Mass in B minor; 'The Messiah'; Beethoven's Mass in D; 'The Song of Songs' (Bantock, first performance). At the Municipal concerts: Berlioz's 'Faust'; 'Elijah'; 'Carmen'; 'The Revenge'; 'The Golden Legend.'

NANTWICH CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. R. A. Taylor).—'Hymn of Praise.'

NEWARK CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. R. Curtis Richardson).—Choral Fantasia on 'Tannhäuser.'

NEWCASTLE BACH CHOIR (Dr. W. G. Whittaker).—Purcell's 'Ode on St. Cecilia's Day; Bach's Cantatas No. 63, 121, and 152; Whittaker's Psalm 139; Bach's 'St. John' Passion. Recitals in the Cathedral: Bach's Cantatas, No. 51, 65, 161, and 171; Byrd's Mass in three parts; Henschel's Communion Service in eight parts.

NORTHWICH PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY (Mr. J. Patterson Shaw).—'Carmen' (abridged concert edition); 'Hymn of Praise.'
NORWICH CHORAL SOCIETY (Dr. Frank Bates).—'The Spectre's Bride'; Beethoven's Mass in C.
NORWICH PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY (Dr. F. Bates).—'The Spectre's Bride'; Beethoven's Mass in C.
NOTTINGHAM ST. MARY'S CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. Vernon S. Read).—Vaughan Williams's 'Fantasia on Christmas Carols'; 'St. Matthew' Passion.
OKEHAMPTON CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. Sydenham James).—'Carmen' (abridged concert edition).
OXFORD BACH CHOIR (Dr. W. H. Harris).—'Christmas' Oratorio.
PLYMOUTH ORPHEUS SOCIETY (Mr. David Parkes).—'Lohengrin'; 'St. Matthew' Passion.
RICHMONDSHIRE CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. Arthur Fountain).—Parry's 'Pied Piper of Hamelin'; 'St. John' Passion.
RIPON CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. P. R. Pfaff).—'A Tale of Old Japan'; Choral Fantasia on 'Tannhäuser.'
SHEFFIELD MUSICAL UNION (Dr. Henry Coward).—'Aïda'; 'The Messiah'; Mass in B minor.
SHREWSBURY PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY (Mr. F. G. Rowland).—'The Spectre's Bride'; 'The Messiah'; 'The Wedding of Shon Maclean.'
STEPHEN RICHARDSON CHORAL SOCIETY.—'Elijah'; Gounod's 'Faust.'
TONBRIDGE CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. G. J. Kimmins).—'The Wedding of Shon Maclean'; Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater.'
TORQUAY PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY (Mr. H. W. Rhodes).—'The Messiah.'
TWYNHAM MUSICAL SOCIETY (Mr. C. H. Flatt).—'The Death of Minnehaha'; Choral Fantasia on 'The Beggar's Opera.'
VICTORIA HALL CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. A. S. Burrows).—'Judas Maccabæus'; 'The Messiah'; 'Maritana'; 'Elijah'; 'St. Paul.'
WALSALL PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY (Mr. Appleby Matthews).—'The Immortal Hour'; 'The Messiah'; 'Maritana'; and a Bach Cantata.
WARRINGTON MUSICAL SOCIETY (Mr. F. H. Crossley).—Gounod's 'Faust'; 'The Dream of Gerontius.'
WEYBRIDGE AND DISTRICT CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. Sydney N. Lovett).—'Peasant Cantata'; 'Carmen.'
WINDSOR AND ETON CHORAL SOCIETY (Rev. B. C. S. Everett).—'Dettingen' Te Deum; 'St. Matthew' Passion; 'The Messiah'; Brahms's 'Requiem.'
WOLVERHAMPTON CHORAL UNION (Dr. Ernest Darby).—'The Apostles.'
WORCESTER FESTIVAL CHORAL SOCIETY (Sir Ivor Atkins).—'Christmas' Oratorio.
YEOVIL CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. F. G. Risdon).—'Hiawatha'; 'Mount of Olives'; 'Hymn of Praise.' (In our last issue the 1925-26 programme of this Society was entered by mistake.)

We have received the annual report of the South Place Sunday Popular Concerts, with a prospectus of the coming season (the forty-first). On November 14 the concert will be in aid of the Musicians' Benevolent Fund. The thousandth concert takes place in February, and the Beethoven Centenary will be duly celebrated. The distinguished standard that has marked these concerts for so long promises to be fully maintained. For the benefit of readers who have not yet discovered them, we add that they take place at 6.30 p.m., and the Hall is close to Liverpool Street Station. Admission is free, with a collection.

A junior orchestra and choir have been inaugurated under the auspices of the Philharmonic Choir. Members should have left school for two or three years. Orchestral practices are held at the Royal Academy of Music on Fridays, at 6, conducted by Mr. Ernest Read. The choir meets at the Swedish Church Hall, Harcourt Street, W., on Tuesdays, at 6, and is directed by Mr. Kennedy Scott. Subscriptions are 12*s*, 6*d*. for orchestra and 10*s*. 6*d*. for choir. Further particulars from the hon. secretary, Miss B. Callender, County Secondary School, Bermondsey, Southwark Park Road, S.E.16.

E

London Concerts

—

ORCHESTRAL CONCERTS

The first of the Queen's Hall Saturday afternoon symphony concerts began the Beethoven memorial celebrations, with which, by the end of next March, the whole world will be resounding. Sir Henry Wood conducted the 'Coriolanus' Overture, the fifth and eighth Symphonies, and the C minor Pianoforte Concerto, in which Mr. Harold Bauer was the soloist.

The performance of the fifth Symphony was strong and gripping. A very similar method of approach was too overbearing for the eighth. The conductor refused to smile, and it was suggested to one's fancy that he was rather in the mood of one of those 'Prom.' performances where unrelaxed vigilance and the iron hand are of practical necessity. But could not the eighth Symphony have been left a little more to itself? The conducting of the Concerto was a marvel of efficiency—it allowed the soloist every chance, and total freedom from worry. Mr. Bauer played superbly. Ease and dignity were beautifully blended.

The London Symphony Orchestra was conducted by Mr. Albert Coates at its first concert on October 18. The Symphony was Tchaikovsky's No. 5, a hard-worked composition at the L.S.O.'s Monday nights. Well, Tchaikovsky is, we suppose, a popular 'draw.' The large doses of him promised once again this winter cannot assuredly be the orchestra's or conductors' willing choice, and if, indeed, a Tchaikovsky Symphony fills Queen's Hall we must grin and bear it. Credit is due to Mr. Coates and the Orchestra for having treated the music with all possible dignity and seriousness. We admire this conductor most when he moderates his spiritedness. He certainly obtained a fine performance.

The Orchestra also played up to him well in the performance of his own 'Suite after the Old Masters.' This composition is an oddity. We thought of the reproductions of the antique seen in furniture shops. The 18th century made furniture so attractive, and in every way adequate, that no improvement seems possible, and we can do no better than copy the old forms. Shall the same be said about music? It might, if there were an exact analogy between music and chairs—but there isn't.

The instrumentation is, of course, modern, so that there is some resemblance between the Suite and those scored versions of Handel and Bach made by Elgar and Wood. But the material here is Mr. Coates's own, up to a point. At the end we were left still in the dark by whatever motive there was behind this solid, serious anachronism.

A remarkable performance of Schumann's Pianoforte Concerto lent distinction to the concert. Mr. Walter Gieseking played the solo with a new finesse and charm. He has a curious way of crouching over the keyboard, and, as it were, acting the music as he plays. It is sometimes a trifle worrying to look at him, but to listen that night was to be enchanted. The player simply made himself at one with the delightful composition, which sprang into life under the encouragement of his just rhythmic feeling, caressing touch, and wonderful control of tone-volume. Mr. Coates's accompanying was first-rate. C.

The first National Concert of the B.B.C., held at the Royal Albert Hall on September 30, led to a sharp division of opinion. Those within the hall said that an orchestra of a hundred and fifty failed to impress them, that the multiplicity of strings had no effect, and that Sir Hamilton Harty's dignified tempi intensified the prevailing air of despondency. Probably their feelings were largely due to the psychological effect of a half-empty Albert Hall, for those critics who listened at home praised the vitality of the whole affair and the splendour of the orchestral sound. For the purpose of following the score of Brahms's first Symphony Sir Hamilton's steady, balanced performance seems to have been the most successful in the history of broadcasting. One who heard no note of the concert either within or without can leave the disputation to itself and pay a tribute to the B.B.C. for taking so high a view of its functions as to organize this big and serious concert. The programme included the 'Mastersingers' Overture, some new Handel-Harty works, Rimsky-Korsakov's 'Mlada,' and a number of songs sung by Madame Olczewska.

Messrs. Chappell opened a new series of Saturday afternoon concerts at Queen's Hall on October 16, and the experiment was not unsuccessful. Sir Henry Wood conducted the Queen's Hall Orchestra in a programme similar to a Saturday evening programme at the ordinary Promenades. Eight of these concerts are to be given, the last being dated February 26.

Children's concerts at Central Hall are to be given on similar lines to those of last season, with a first-class orchestra and eminent soloists. The first concert was conducted by Dr. Malcolm Sargent on October 16, when the programme included the Scherzo from the Ninth Symphony and Vaughan Williams's 'The lark ascending,' played by Samuel Kutcher.

Miss Gwynne Kimpton's first orchestral concert for young people was held at Æolian Hall on October 2. The soloist was Mr. Backer-Gröndahl, who played the Grieg Pianoforte Concerto. M.

THE PROMENADE CONCERTS

The concerts of the thirty-second Promenade season still to be reviewed cover exactly a calendar month (September 17 to October 16). The first of the nights in question brought with it the one departure from Sir Henry Wood's custom of performing the Beethoven Symphonies on Fridays. The exception was, as usual, made in favour of Schubert's 'Unfinished.' A feature in the same programme was the Bach C major Concerto for three pianofortes (Messrs. Norman Greenwood, Edwin Benbow, and E. Kendall Taylor).

The programme of September 18 was that of a typical popular Saturday concert, the only relatively unfamiliar item being a delightful Suite from Mendelssohn's 'Midsummer Night's Dream' music, containing some of the rarely-heard numbers.

The following Monday was, of course, devoted to Wagner, except for the all-British second part ('Wand of Youth' (Elgar) and 'Britannia' Overture (Mackenzie)).

The first of the Brahms Symphonies (which for once were all included in this year's scheme) formed the climax of Tuesday's concert, which was also remarkable for a predominance of Mozart.

September 22 brought classics and moderns into contest. Schumann's first Symphony stood next to Hindemith's 'Nusch-Nuschi' Dances, and Mozart's fourth Horn Concerto —deliciously played by Mr. Aubrey Brain—was separated only by a Meyerbeer Aria (Mr. Joseph Hislop) from Germaine Tailleferre's 'Ballade' for pianoforte and orchestra, a work that cleverly disguises a certain tenuity of thought by a good deal that is fresh in colour and adroit in contrivance. The difficult solo part was played with extraordinary alertness by Mr. Clifford Curzon.

Gordon Jacob's Concerto for viola and orchestra, interpreted with great taste and musicianship by Mr. Bernard Shore, on September 23, is less of an asset to British music than to the repertory of an instrument that is all too shabbily treated by composers. It is earnest and likable music, sound in technique and well laid out for the soloist, but deficient in individual character. There is too much of the polite phraseology of the conventional concerto style about it, and this makes the composer's obvious sincerity and depth of feeling unhappily inarticulate.

The second Friday under notice forsook the classics (Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, and Weber) only at the close, when MacCunn's strong and upright 'Land of the Mountain and the Flood' Overture was heard.

It was pleasant to notice on September 25 that such things as Delius's 'Brigg Fair,' Holst's 'Planets,' and McEwen's 'Grey Galloway' are now regarded as sufficiently popular for performance on Saturday nights.

Wagner duly came round on Monday, September 27, and on Tuesday the second Brahms Symphony occupied the centre of the programme. Mr. Moiseiwitsch played Mozart's D minor Pianoforte Concerto in a rather aridly objective manner, and Miss Dora Labbette and Mr. John Brownlee sang arias by the same master, the former almost ideally and the latter less satisfactorily than one had been led to expect from previous experiences of him. A symphonic poem, 'Pan and the Priest,' by an American composer, Howard Hanson, proved on agglomeration of clichés which made it easy for the hearer to establish associations between the music and an imaginary programme, but are hardly calculated to convince him of the utility of pictorial precision that can be gained only at the expense of higher imaginative qualities. A huge orchestral apparatus is dexterously employed in this work, but one is not sure that greater economy in the use of the medium would not have led to finer moulding of the actual matter. Much of the music is mere pretentious splashing about with colour, and the frequent use of ostinato accompaniments is a tiresome affectation if not a grievous line of least resistance.

The classics, from Bach to Schumann, occupied the whole programme of September 29, and on the following night César Franck's Symphony was the one considerable attraction; it is difficult to imagine, at any rate, that Joseph Marx's 'Romantic Concerto' for pianoforte and orchestra can have drawn a single music-lover to the concert, or held him there. The work is a succession of tiresome, over-lavish embroideries of commonplace fustian, and one hardly knew whether to admire that admirable pianist, Mr. Victor Schiöler, for having learnt and memorised the immensely difficult and crowded solo part, more than one commiserated with him for the uselessness of such a task.

On the following Friday, the Beethoven Symphonies, taken in inverse order this year, had arrived at the 'Eroica,' and the most arresting item in the Saturday programme was the fine Dance Suite by Béla Bartók. Monday, October 4, brought, next to Wagner, a revival of George Butterworth's fine-feeling 'Shropshire Lad' Rhapsody.

The novelty of October 5 was the orchestral version of five pieces from Dohnányi's 'Ruralia Hungarica,' which lose nothing of their neatness and directness in this new guise. The rest of the programme was mainly Handel and Brahms, a combination of which the latter composer would obviously have approved, since he voluntarily associated himself with the former to write one of his best works. It was the turn of the fourth Brahms Symphony, and Miss Jelly d'Aranyi played the Violin Concerto with her accustomed mastery.

Dohnányi was also in the programme for the next night, when Mr. Fridtjof Backer-Gröndahl played the diverting 'Variations on a Nursery Song.' Schubert's C major Symphony unfolded its heavenly dimensions on the same evening.

The Thursday programme of October 7 was on the whole so light that the rather ponderous counterweight of Brahms's second Pianoforte Concerto (Mr. Franciszek Goldenberg) became it very well. Mr. Eric Coates conducted a new orchestral Phantasy of his, based on the tale of 'The Three Bears,' a smoothly written little work that contrives to outline the story and to retain at the same time a certain shape of its own.

The most uncommon item on the Friday was the Concerto for four pianofortes, given as plain Bach in the programme, but which surely ought to bear the names of Vivaldi-Bach. The soloists were the Misses Anthea Bowring, Virginia McLean, Eunice Norton, and Hilda Bor. The following night the amusing 'Carnaval des Animaux' of Saint-Saëns was revived.

On October 11, after the usual glut of Wagner, Mr. Frederic Austin conducted a Suite, specially arranged for concert use, and re-scored for full orchestra, from his music to the 'Insect Play,' by the Brothers Capek. The music is perhaps a little too dependent upon an explanatory programme note to be quite at its ease away from the play whose moods and situations it follows so faithfully, but a great deal of it makes most agreeable hearing.

Tuesday, October 12, witnessed a tragedy—the omission of Elgar's 'Falstaff,' which had been inserted in the scheme owing to some necessary alterations, but by a further modification had itself to make way for Strauss's 'Tod und Verklärung.' Surely 'Falstaff' is the most ill-fated great work in recent musical history.

Bach, Handel, and Mozart shared the last Wednesday programme, and on Thursday Mendelssohn's 'Italian' Symphony was resuscitated. On the Friday the circle of Beethoven Symphonies was completed with No. 1.

The final night, on Saturday, October 16, attracted an immense crowd to hear such popular works as Elgar's 'Cockaigne' Overture and Grieg's Pianoforte Concerto, or to listen to such favourite singers as Miss Florence Austral and Mr. Maurice d'Oisly, but more especially to witness the enthusiastic ovation which is always so wholeheartedly and deservedly accorded to Sir Henry Wood at the close of a Promenade season.

At the risk of being invidious, one may perhaps single out a few of the artists who, apart from those already mentioned, made one or more appearances during this month of concerts. Singers: Miss Bella Baillie, Miss Margaret Balfour, Miss Muriel Brunskill, Miss Rosina Buckman, Mr. Keith Falkner, Mr. Arthur Jordan, Mr. Malcolm McEachern, Madame Tatiana Makushina, Miss Leila Megane. Pianists: Mr. Arthur Benjamin, M. Marcel Ciampi, Miss Myra Hess, Miss Irene Scharrer, Mlle. Germaine Schnitzer. Violinists: Madame Adila Fachiri, Miss Margaret Fairless, Miss Isolde Menges, Mr. Charles Woodhouse (who again led the orchestra and conducted the last piece in every programme, except that of the final night). Violoncellists: Mr. Howard Bliss, Miss May Mukle. Many members of the orchestra also appeared as soloists.

The orchestral playing, as might be expected under conditions that leave roughly only the same amount of time for rehearsals as for actual performance, was not uniformly first-rate, but as usual one could not help marvelling at the surprisingly high average of excellence maintained by Sir Henry Wood and his devoted forces. E. B.

B.B.C. 'INTERNATIONAL' CONCERTS, GROTRIAN HALL, OCTOBER 5, HUNGARY

Whilst commending the enterprise of the B.B.C. in arranging these six 'International' Concerts of contemporary chamber music, one cannot help questioning its discretion. Those of us who are in sympathy with modern music would hesitate to administer it in such large unadulterated doses to any but a friendly audience. At this moment the musical public is experiencing the aftermath of a surfeit. Yet here is a plan to offer this caviare to the million-eared 'general.' Moreover, both the works and the performers are those associated with the International Society for Contemporary Music whose London branch gives, within its means, precisely similar concerts. There is a duplication of effort which is hard to justify, especially in conjunction with the small audience that gathered at Grotrian Hall, despite the personal popularity of the Hungarian (Waldbauer) Quartet. It would seem as if one undertaking had the money, the other the audience.

This first programme, devoted to Hungary, comprised three chamber works of which two were new and the other only relatively familiar. Dohnányi's new Quartet in A minor lacks only unity of purpose to be a remarkably fine work. But the composer has been content, in his slow movement and Scherzo, to follow his conservative inclinations and show us the maîtrise with which he can turn out really attractive movements without saying anything particularly new, whilst in his opening Allegro he has aired a wholesome discontent with exactly that form of procedure. It is this section that holds the most weighty contrasts, although in some respects, mainly formal, it is not so well 'turned out' as those others. But which represents the Dohnányi to whom we are to look in the future? He is evidently questioning himself on that very point. At least that is what his Quartet suggests. The second work was Kodály's Serenade for two violins and viola. Why Kodály is constantly bracketed with Bartók is a mystery. The latter is a daring spirit, scrupulous as to himself, but without compunction towards others. Kodály is a gentle, romantic soul, a kind of Magyar Schubert, even to that composer's not always heavenly length. His Serenade is a fine work, and the more rapid sections were not unsuited to be broadcast. But that peculiarly intimate meditation which forms its middle movement was meant to be enjoyed by three players and their nearest and dearest associates. All who listened in were guilty of eavesdropping. Of the Molnar Quartet, a short one, there is not much to be said. It flickered up towards the end, but was never exciting.

Though one could not understand her Magyar texts, and the programme gave no help, the singing of some Kodály and Bartók songs by Madame Maria Basilides was full of interest. As an artist she belongs to the same category as Marya Freund. Her chief thrills are those of personality. She has a similar magnetism, combined with a subtle facial expression which made many points clear without need of intelligible words. It would be interesting to hear her in a language we know. But the songs themselves justified the exotic experiment. E. E.

SINGERS OF THE MONTH

Miss Margaret Mallinson (Wigmore Hall, September 22) was the first of the vocal reciters of the new season. Her programme included a dozen songs by her father, Mr. Albert Mallinson, who was her accompanist. Among these were settings of translations from 'Sappho' by Bliss Carman. This agreeable music lacked any very arresting quality. Phrases of real felicity occurred, but were weakened by a descent into the merely facile. Another group included the justly-popular 'Slow, horses, slow' (only marred by a too easy cadence) and 'Four by the Clock.'

A more finished singer would have made more of this music. Miss Mallinson has undoubted gifts imperfectly developed. Her scale is too uncertain whether to make for soprano, mezzo-soprano, or contralto quality. A shorter range and a steadier line would have been desirable. Tones wobbled, and there was not the technique to make clean, bright diction. Prominent among her faults was the inclination to turn 'oh' into 'oo.' Hence her admonition, 'Sloo, horses, sloo.' All the time there was felt to be a truly pleasant voice there, if only it could have been exposed. And Miss Mallinson's musical feeling and interpretative sense were not in any doubt.

Mr. Howard Fry (Æolian Hall, October 8) was the best singer the writer has heard so far at this autumn's recitals. One was struck by his fair recognition of the double claim of fine tone and verbal eloquence. The two things are irreconcilable in the efforts of a beginner, and are, indeed, rarely equably balanced in mature artists. Mr. Fry has made up his mind to hold the scales fairly, and in his long and exacting programme he often succeeded uncommonly well. His singing of arias from the 'Peasant' Cantata of Bach was exceptionally jolly. 'My heart now is merry,' in particular, was in every way excellent.

Then there was a great deal to be said for his Schubert and Brahms, but here one felt him to be hampered to some extent by the foreign language. His German was too studied, and at the same time not always accurate. Thus he missed the delightful interplay of speech and tone of his Bach. We must put his 'Nacht und Träume' (Schubert) down as a gallant failure. (But it was very nearly a distinguished success.) In 'Geheimes' his sighing mezza-voce was delightful.

In Verdi's 'Eri Tu' Mr. Fry was least good. Possibly a serious tackling of real Verdian singing would be the best thing for him at the moment. It would develop in him breadth of vowel-sounds and of phrasing. He must realise as well as anyone that he did not answer adequately to the demands of 'O dolcezze perdute.' In the English group were some fine songs of Parry's. The whole programme spoke for his musical intelligence. His general style was animated, unaffected, fairly flexible, and thoroughly likeable. With Mr. Harold Craxton's invaluable collaboration this was a musical and not a merely personal display.

Miss Muriel Dugarde, who sang at Wigmore Hall (September 24), accompanied by Mrs. Hobday, appeared to be very young, but she has already learnt to make her words tell and her personality felt. Her programme, which included an interesting Spanish Romance of Medtner's and Granados's beautiful 'Nightingale' (sung in Spanish—what linguists our young singers are, or pretend to be !), taxed her resources, but she showed no sign of embarrassment. She caught the spirit of Pergolesi's 'Se tu m'ami' at the outset, and throughout she kept up a standard of intelligent performance. But she needs now, if she would make sure of progress, to tackle the problem of breath-control seriously, particularly in respect to the production of high notes. She seemed unaware of the peril in the lack of a proper 'covering' process; consequently her high notes vibrated harshly. Mr. Albert Sammons's violin-playing was a great pleasure at this concert.

Mr. George Northover was that rarity at a London song recital—a true bass. He gave us the pleasure of hearing such things as, 'O Isis and Osiris,' from 'The Magic Flute,' and the famous aria from Verdi's 'Don Carlos,' sung with a wealth of deep, warm tone. At that we must stop, and say that as an artist he was quite immature. His voice sounded best when he was in full song. He had little idea of varying its colour. His mezza-voce was dull, his parlando characterless. Yet the voice was thoroughly well poised—only waiting, so to say, for the imaginative impulse that should prompt it to artistic effect. Operatic experience is clearly what this singer needs. His French was rather better than the Wigmore Hall average, but still not good enough.

One feels some little embarrassment in speaking of the singular demonstration made by the American bass, Mr. Whitney Tew, at Grotrian Hall (September 28), especially as he announced himself as a theorician, anxious to lead neophytes in his paths. In a considerable experience one had never before heard anything at all like his singing, and one decided after an hour of it that if his claim to have rediscovered the vocal principles of the Italian 17th- and 18th-century maestri was well-founded, that period had been excessively esteemed. The singer essayed compositions in several languages, but it was only rarely, and then as though by oversight, that a word was clearly articulated. A remarkable feature was the extremely wide opening of the mouth. The sounds that issued were peculiarly cavernous. Their oddity provoked nervous laughter from some listeners.

Miss Mildred Dana also sang at this concert, after explaining that she had been studying her art for only nine months. H. J. K.

Two of the best singers heard thus far in the season have been at the concerts organized by the B.B.C. At the first of the ambitious series of 'National' concerts at the Albert Hall, which Sir Hamilton Harty conducted, the soloist was Madame Maria Olczewska, the mezzo-soprano who had established her fame in two seasons at Covent Garden by her distinguished singing of such parts as Fricka, Brangäne, and Waltraute.

This was her first London appearance as a concert singer. She chose Beethoven's song 'To Hope,' and three songs of Wagner's. We were all smitten by the exquisite beauty of her voice, and even more by her elaborate art in its management. This singer leaves nothing to chance—nothing, one would go on to say, to the impulse of the moment. If any felt inclined to regret the absence of a more artless spontaneity, the answer is that this is out of place in the solid structure of the German music in which she excels. There is no call for the rhapsodic style in the vocal music of either Beethoven or Wagner, or, for that matter, of any other German composer we can think of at the moment. Madame Olczewska sang on a beautifully equalised scale. The way in which she adjusted her tone to shifting positions was an example that, we trust, may have been observed, here and there, among the unnumbered audience of this concert. My province not being the discussion of the orchestral playing that night (Brahms's C minor Symphony, and works by Handel, Wagner, and Rimsky-Korsakov), I suggest only that the problem of assembling an orchestra suited to the acoustics of the hall is still to be solved.

The B.B.C.'s series of chamber concerts began with an evening of unfamiliar Hungarian music at Grotrian Hall. The Hungarian Quartet played interesting works by Dohnányi, Kodály (a charming String Trio-serenade), and Molnar. We knew all the virtues of the Quartet, but the singer of the evening, Madame Maria Basilides, was new. She sang songs by Bartók and Kodály with an art that recalled the finest Russian style—that is to say, it was not a vocal display, but became rather a musical recitation. Although ignorant of one single word of Hungarian, we found her performance admirable and engrossing to a degree. Calmly, and without any sort of extravagance, Madame Basilides dramatised each one of these lyrics in convincing fashion. She was so far a mistress of the vocal art as not to suggest the slightest technical preoccupation, and the layman might have been excused for thinking that she was simply a natural singer.

Another vocal recital in an unknown tongue was that of Madame Sophie Thomson-de-Konshen, who at Æolian Hall sang Tchaikovsky, Rachmaninov, and Rimsky-Korsakov. But we cannot allow that she was a good exponent of the Russian style referred to above. She had a fine, natural soprano voice which would have been more effective with the backing of a more substantial technique. Her singing was of a sort known as temperamental, entailing explosive high notes. At the bottom of the ineffectiveness of her performance there was, however, a lack of imaginative characterisation.

Madame Marguerite D'Alvarez sang a mixed, a rather too mixed, programme at the Albert Hall at the second of the Sunday afternoon concerts. In point of good tone she was at her best in some negro plantation hymns (called, by a neologism that does not commend itself to English ears, 'Spirituals'). In some Spanish songs she sang with plenty of spirit. Undoubtedly she is a personality, but she strikes us as rather too much inclined to make music a mere servant to her successes. H. O. C.

PIANISTS OF THE MONTH

Mr. Moiseiwitsch is losing his juvenile charm. He used to provoke us to wide-eyed admiration, like a child playing diabolo, so unconscious did he seem that he was doing anything clever. At Wigmore Hall, recently, he was plainly asking for applause nearly all the time, and we no longer found him amusing. He played things too quickly, and with too much noise. Why he should do so is past comprehension, because he merely competes with better men of the flamboyant class. Let Mr. Moiseiwitsch go back to his deftness. A well-known pianist seated in the audience declared that he could still give all other pianists a beating as a manipulator of keys.

If only Mr. Josef Hofmann were an Irishman we could call him a broth of a pianist. He has a fine upstanding manner, he can let fly when he wants to, and is withal a bit of a simpleton. His greatest asset (discarding geography) is touch. He solves all problems by touch, and in doing so offends some stylists by transforming every piece of music into a Toccata. And it is true that some depths and distances are lost among his crisp outlines—or dots and dashes, if you will. Stretching a point, the pianoforte may be made to sound like a glockenspiel or like a string orchestra. Mr. Hofmann favours the glockenspiel. But the defects of his articulateness are as nothing to the gain. He can put every note in its place; he can pick out and connect up just those he wants for a sostenuto, not involving melody and accompaniment in each other's habits; he can put what gradient he likes to a crescendo or diminuendo; he can be commanding in a mezzo-forte, scale his emphasis up to forte, and pour out his reserves up to fortissimo just when and where they are wanted, instead of spilling the whole bucketful at every excuse. All this is method. The thinking part of his interpretations is, happily, quite adequate, although no one would call Hofmann a musical seer. He dealt with Mendelssohn's E minor Prelude and Fugue sensibly—that is, without any fuss—at Wigmore Hall on October 2. The Brahms-Handel Variations he delegated more or less to his fingers and to his sense of rhythm. This was a prime instance of the astonishing effect of well-harboured reserves. A fortnight later, at Grotrian Hall, he played Beethoven's last Sonata with calm poetry, I was told. I did not hear him in the Beethoven (having decided that the best part of Miss Myra Hess's concert at Wigmore Hall would be Bach's French Suite in G, which she played delightfully), but came in for Schumann's F sharp minor. This was unlucky, for I found him far too unconcerned about it. He gave it the Mendelssohn air, or made us think of Schumann's own Novelettes. It is better to treat it, as Mitja Nikisch did, as if it had the depth of late Beethoven. M.

Mr. Brailowsky played at Wigmore Hall on four successive days—a demonstration, a challenge to fame. No one but a grandee can take the field in that way without becoming rather ridiculous. Mr. Brailowsky ran no sort of risk. He proved to be someone to hear, a pianists' pianist. His execution was beautiful and fiery. He cleared all obstacles seriously and gracefully, always with plenty to spare.

He was concentrated on pianoforte-playing, and did not seem to care much to play with the thought of music. Chopin, therefore, was his strong suit. The other things, too, he did beautifully in his serious way. But Beethoven and even Liszt allow and indeed ask for glances away from the pianoforte to life in general, and Mr. Brailowsky seemed not anxious for any such distraction. For an ascetic pianist like him, Chopin is the composer—Chopin, the saint of the pianoforte. All the others, Bach to Busoni, are by comparison secular. C.

WELSH IMPERIAL SINGERS

The Welsh Imperial Singers, a small male-voice choir of picked voices, sang at Æolian Hall on October 12. Mr. Festyn Davies conducted. The programme did not fly very high. We may name, however, Schubert's 'The Lord is my Shepherd' and Gounod's 'Hymn to Apollo' (these two bracketed together, with the effect of the broadest doctrinal eclecticism), and among the modern pieces part-songs by Granville Bantock and Cyril Jenkins. The pianoforte was freely used as support. The choir broke away from the dreary picture made by a group of men in modern evening dress, by adopting a sort of fancy costume (1820 or thereabouts).

The choir was wholly of real singers, and had subjected itself to a rigid discipline. It was as though the word had gone round, 'Who said Cossacks? We will out-Cossack them!' While there was much to admire, a suspicion of 'stunting' made us uncomfortable. Everything was exaggerated. Martial allegros were fiercely jerky; slow pieces were dragged; and soft passages were suppressed into a kind of pained hush. We did not hear one choral piece in which the music was allowed to flow naturally.

Yet the choir contains first-rate material. We heard three tenor soloists, and not one was throaty. A young bass, Mr. Jack Newbery, quite took our fancy by his calm and sonorous singing of 'O Isis and Osiris.' Apart from a suspicion, once or twice, of nasal tone, his technique was unexceptionable. After the freedom and looseness of his low notes in Mozart, his beautifully controlled, baritonish legato in a ballad that followed was more than could have been hoped for. C.

'LOVE ADRIFT'

A Hungarian opera, 'Love Adrift,' by Eduard Poldini, on a text by Ernest Vadja, translated by M.-D. Calvocoressi, was produced at the Gaiety Theatre, a house not hitherto associated with this class of entertainment.

Preparations are on foot for a wedding in a remote Hungarian country house, in 1830. A snowstorm delays the bridegroom, while hospitality is extended to a number of casual, storm-stressed travellers. Among these is a student—young and tenor—with whom the bride quickly comes to an understanding. When, after some days, the roads are clear again, information comes to hand that the bridegroom, too, has reached some similar understanding in another country house during the storm. Nothing, then, stands in the way of a happy ending. The slender story is helped out a little by a secondary pair of lovers, for whom the end of the storm means an idyll's end and a resumption of legitimate ties.

It is strange that the composer should have considered this structure able to bear any important weight of music, especially since there is in the detail of the action hardly any inventiveness, and the fun is ingenuous to a degree. The music is continuous, and is due to no 'prentice hand. It all demonstrates the ability of a thoroughly practised professional—the sort of man who, in England (may we suggest?), would be relied upon to turn out safe and acceptable incidental music for an important production at His Majesty's Theatre, or the like. He would, we gather, hardly possess the originality or the personal idiom needed for thoroughly grand opera. On the other hand, he lacks the witty brevity and frivolousness of a true composer of operetta. One guessed from the sound made by the orchestra and the fullness of the chorus that the composer had had a much bigger theatre in view. The sheer noise was excessive, and it was a welcome moment when a little Tzigan band (with cimbalom complete) took over the business for a while.

But if 'Love Adrift' hung fire pretty badly at times, it won sympathy by a certain musical aspiration, as well as by the picturesque setting and the talent of several of the performers. It was very far from being a vulgar musical comedy. The cast included, alongside some new-comers, several well-known operatic singers, chief of them Madame Eva von der Osten, formerly applauded at Covent Garden. She had the part of the bride's mother, and it was amazing how she built without, so to speak, any straw. Her English was adequate.

The bride was a nervous but pretty new-comer, Miss Eva Sternroyd. Miss Kathleen Lafla sang very pleasantly. Miss Gwen Knight had a small comic part. Easy and accomplished stage manners had not been acquired by everyone, but there was no lack of good intentions. How much we need an established Opéra Comique! Mr. Andrew Shanks was perhaps the most acceptable singer among the men. Even he was inclined (oppressed, possibly, by the formidable tones of the orchestra) to force the note. This was the glaring fault of both the tenor, Mr. Jack Wright, and the bass, Mr. Frederick Collier. The latter (as the bride's father) acted well, but it is a pity he persistently subjects his fine voice to a barking style of production. The tenor was obviously inexperienced, and forced badly. Let him acquire a legato, and he should become a proper singer. The conductor was that amazingly versatile young musician, Mr. Hubert J. Foss. C.

GILBERT AND SULLIVAN

Gilbert and Sullivan are fascinating both young and old again at the Princes Theatre this autumn. If there was a time when Savoy operetta was under partial eclipse it has certainly passed.

'The Mikado' came first, then 'Patience,' then 'Trial by Jury' and 'The Pirates of Penzance.' The performances have reached a higher standard than any others of recent times. (One has to speak cautiously of Gilbert and Sullivan shows. There are hosts of zealots who saw every one of the first nights, and who know far more of the facts and traditions of the case than anyone under the age of forty possibly can.)

Dr. Malcolm Sargent is conducting the season, and to his talent must be ascribed in good part the delightful musical point of the performances. The general public, even, has felt the spell, and though a Gilbert and Sullivan audience is musically about as obtuse as can be, the Overtures have actually been listened to, and some of the ritornels at the end of the songs have escaped from the usual bombarding of applause. Both orchestra and chorus have been excellent.

'The Mikado' was newly dressed by Mr. Charles Ricketts, to very brilliant and fantastic effect. Katisha (Miss Bertha Lewis) did this time indeed look a redoubtable dragon of a bride. To Miss Lewis, a first-rate popular favourite, fall all the Gilbertian parts of fierce elderly females hungrily snapping round after young men. As a rule, she looks far too handsome and genial to justify the venomous references in the text to these hags. (How strange, by the way, that Gilbert's satire should ever have been taken as humorous. His wit was often pretty, and sometimes petty, his nature was too fierce for humour.)

Old favourites, Mr. Henry Lytton's Ko-Ko and Mr. Leo Sheffield's Pooh-bah, appeared in Mr. Ricketts's wondrous disguise. The latter was more superb than ever in a vast golden confection. The former seemed a trifle hampered by his novel trappings. Mr. Lytton has but little voice left. Yet what there is tells to good effect. How pretty is the incisiveness of his words! What a cultivated wit and intelligent sense of the comic there is in the little man!

Mr. Sheffield is, of course, another pillar of the Company. The word 'unctuous' is not to be resisted when we are talking of him. Now and again he allows a mannerism to grow too marked, and in some parts he is not above playing for the sillier sort of laughter—but not in 'The Mikado,' where he could not have been better.

Mr. Charles Goulding was the tenor, Nanki-Poo, and he launched off with a charmingly neat performance of 'A Wandering Minstrel.' He has one of the smallest of possible voices, but he uses it with art, and so makes it serve well. In some of the concerted pieces he inclined to something dangerously near forcing, but he never did this in his solos. As an actor, he is unaffectedly easy and graceful. Both in voice, then, and in deportment, he is a perfect partner for Miss Elsie Griffin (Yum-Yum). She, too, has the merest thread of a voice, but it is enough, for it has quality.

The failure of the performance, to our taste, was the Mikado of Mr. Darrell Fancourt. Instead of playing the part in an oily and sinister way, he leapt about like a raging savage. He was made up to macabre effect, and the whole result was ogreish. Mr. Fancourt does not sing as well as he might. He certainly has a good voice, as notes and phrases often prove. But he seems not to know when he is singing well, and he will leave a good line of tone for a hard and roaring one. He is occasionally timid about his higher notes, and will 'cover' elaborately and unnecessarily in the midst of a robust bit of singing (there was a conspicuous example in his singing of the Pirate King a few weeks later).

In 'Patience' we saw the Rapturous Maidens in the charming 'æsthetic' dresses designed for them a few seasons ago by Mr. Rumbold. They are full of amusing allusions to the cultivated tastes of the early 1880's—Renaissance sleeves, Rossettian hair, and rainbow-coloured angels' wings of 15th-century Florentine paintings, a touch of the classic, and a hint of Burne-Jones, Whistler's Butterfly, and Wilde's Sunflower.

Mr. Lytton (Bunthorne) cut a decidedly Whistlerian figure, by aid both of his white forelock and of his spitefulness of manner. The second poet, Archibald, was played by a newcomer to the Company, Mr. Gregory Stroud, who had a useful and pleasant voice, and adopted all the traditions with perfect ease. Miss Winifred Lawson was the Dresden-china milkmaid, Patience. She was pretty and sophisticated, and sang very prettily too. Only once or twice was there a suspicion of a hard edge. Miss Lewis looked far from a guy as Lady Jane, a personage whose spinster state and passing attractiveness are brutally guyed in the text. Apart from this, she played the part with magnificence. Only her singing at moments displeased, for the simple reason that it belonged to two different scales. It alternated between an excellent light and controlled quality, and a typically heavy and helpless contralto. The alternations made for strange vowels in 'Silvered is the raven hair.' But in 'Sing heigh to you,' a single quality was maintained with excellent effect. One ventures on this criticism because the justly popular artist has so fine a voice that its technical defect (the break between the registers) seems really a pity.

As the imposing housekeeper Ruth, in 'The Pirates,' Miss Lewis was admirable. The break we have mentioned was usually unnoticeable, and when she was on the scene she dominated everything. There were no performers new to us, and the delightful piece went sparklingly. 'Trial by Jury' made us regret that the authors never again tried the scheme of an operetta without spoken words. Gilbert's dialogue is, truth to tell, often rather a bore. And 'Trial by Jury' is such a little masterpiece. There is to be tasted in it a certain amusing raffishness that was never to occur later in the series. Mr. Sheffield made a magnificent Judge. Both Plaintiff and Defendant, Miss Louise Whittock and Mr. David Grundy, met the case. The Counsel, Mr. John Huntingdon, needed rather clearer diction. The mid-Victorian costumes were a good part of the fun.

C.

INVERNESS LADIES' CHOIR

A small choir of ladies from Inverness, conducted by Miss J. I. Gordon, sang at Æolian Hall on October 1 and 2, and gave a fair indication of the art which won them the highest award at a Glasgow Festival. Probably some of their best tone had been left behind at Inverness, for the general ensemble of voices was not firmly founded, and there was a perceptible thinning out of quality in the upper register. But the delicacy of the singing was effective, and the grace of the diction was a constant delight. The programme opened with early English pieces and ended with folk-songs; between came some familiar test-pieces of what may be termed the 'B' class, such as Brahms's 'Minnelied' (which was taken too slowly).

M.

Competition Festival Record

BRITISH FEDERATION OF MUSICAL COMPETITION FESTIVALS

ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING AND CONFERENCE AT CHESTER, OCTOBER 1-3

The annual general meeting, conference, banquet, and hymn festival of the British Federation of Musical Competition Festivals, held this year in the ancient but busy city of Chester, brought together over a hundred representatives from England, Scotland, Ireland, and Wales.

A civic reception was given by the Mayor at the Town Hall on the opening Friday evening, when the delegates inspected the city plate, listened to trios by Arensky, Alice Vern-Bredt, and Beethoven, and conversed to the accompaniment of light refreshments.

Serious business began on Saturday morning with a private meeting between adjudicators and festival officials for the informal discussion of matters of common interest. Most of the time, we understand, was taken up with a discussion on a proposed revision of marking-sheets, opinion being about equally divided between retention of the present detailed system of marking and the substitution of a scheme providing for a maximum of fifty points for technique and equipment and fifty for artistry and interpretation.

The annual general meeting, held in the beautiful Refectory of the Cathedral, and presided over by Sir Henry Hadow, was largely concerned with the transaction of formal business.

After luncheon at the Grosvenor Hotel, the representatives returned to the Refectory for the annual conference, which was attended by over two hundred people. Sir Henry Hadow opened the conference with a characteristically lucid and felicitous speech. He stressed the necessity for a large increase in the number of individual members of the Federation to offset the reduction in income due to the gradual diminution in the Carnegie Trust grant. He referred to the need for stimulating entries of church, chapel, and school choirs at many of the Festivals, and appealed for more team work and, in particular, more chamber music in the instrumental classes, which he thought tended too much to solo playing. Discussing the question of training young adjudicators, Sir Henry emphasised the need for co-operation between the Festivals and the Central Board to ensure a broadening of the basis of supply of judges with the requisite knowledge and experience. This, he thought, was a point of principle worthy of special attention.

The Rev. C. J. Beresford, People's Palace, London, introduced a discussion on church and chapel choirs, reviewing briefly the debate which had taken place on the same subject at the Summer Conference in London three months earlier. The after-discussion rather flagged, suggesting that the subject had been talked out at the last conference. A refreshing note came from the Bishop of Chester, who took occasion to introduce a generously expressed and understanding word of welcome to the delegates, and charmed every one by his naively whimsical confession that if he were ever allowed to play an instrument in the celestial choir, he would gladly surrender any harp, however golden, if only he might be permitted to play a few confidential notes on the oboe. His plaint that so many villages thought it necessary to welcome the Bishop with a positive salvo of over-elaborate music found a sympathetic and amused audience.

Major J. T. Bavin, Educational Director of the British Federation of Music Industries, introduced a discussion on 'School Choirs in relation to the Festival Movement,' and showed a lively understanding of the difficulties involved, particularly as between the teacher, Education Authority, and the time-table. Subsequent speakers on the subject included Mr. J. MacInnes, H.M. Inspector of Schools for Cheshire, Mr. F. F. Potter, County Director of Education for Cheshire, and Mr. Matthews, ex-President of the Cheshire Branch of the National Union of Teachers, the latter giving some interesting personal experiences of school and festival work, but rather spoiling the good effect of this by speaking at such length as to make the discussion obviously outlive its interest and usefulness, and upset the afternoon's time-table.

The liveliest interest of the afternoon centred round the discussion on 'The Adjudicator: His Function and Equipment,' thanks in part to the fact that every one present had a direct interest in the subject, and probably just as much to the challenging way in which it was introduced by the Vice-President of the Federation, Mr. F. H. Bisset.

Mr. Bisset, pointing out by way of preface that his remarks referred more particularly to the young and less experienced adjudicator, but applied also to some who were not so young and far from inexperienced, remarked that what he had to say was deliberately contrived to provoke discussion. He proceeded to traverse the not uncommon idea that a good examiner was ipso facto a satisfactory adjudicator. What, he asked, were the qualities required of a successful adjudicator? Musicianship, both all-round and specialised. Critical faculty. Capacity to compare and assess different degrees of accomplishment. A combination of the analytical and synthetic mind. Facility and lucidity in self-expression. Clearness and resonance of speech. Something of the mathematician, the diplomat, the public entertainer. Capacity to conduct. Iron nerves. The physical endurance of a horse. Job-like patience in affliction. Resource in emergency. Personality—authoritative, sympathetic, dynamic, magnetic, persuasive, able to hold and interest competitors and audience.

Compared with these high, multiform, and exacting qualifications, the equipment of a Pachmann, a Heifetz, a Galli-Curci seemed small. Yet it appeared to be thought that no systematic training was required. For a violinist, a pianist, a singer, even a conductor—yes. But for an adjudicator—no. How was the adjudicator in the making to remedy this? What was he to set before him? He must, above all things, visualise his function as essentially educative—not that of a Beckmesser knocking off points, but that of a Hans Sachs, encouraging youth in artistic progress and endeavour by good counsel and wise guidance.

It was up to him (1) to know his music beforehand; (2) combining analysis with synthesis, to see his work steadily and see it whole; (3) to send every competitor away encouraged with some definite piece of help and guidance; (4) to avoid personalities and resist strenuously the temptation to be funny at a competitor's expense; (5) in criticism, to look not at the competitor and his work, but to look with the competitor at his performance; (6) to speak clearly and to speak up; (7) to be interesting, dullness being the unforgivable sin in adjudicating just as in any other art. The adjudicator with such an equipment would find himself overwhelmed with offers of work.

Sir Richard Terry, following, laid about him with characteristic raciness and self-enjoyment. He thought it futile to discuss the qualifications of adjudicators. If they were unsatisfactory, don't have them again, and they would ultimately drop out of the movement automatically. Regarding church choirs, the discussion was really 'barking up the wrong tree.' The excuses given by so many church choirs for now staying out were superfluous. It all boiled down to this—they didn't want to be beaten. Sir Richard entered a lively protest against billing the unfortunate adjudicator as the star turn of the festival as conductor of the combined choirs, and gave an amusing account of what the adjudicator-conductor had to put up with in name of a combined rehearsal. Give him a reasonable practice, he adjured, or refrain from starring him on the bills.

Mr. Bisset thought Sir Richard Terry's suggestion that the problem of the unsatisfactory adjudicator could be solved by dropping him, to be a policy of despair. It was just as much the function of the Festival to educate adjudicators as to educate competitors and audiences. Sir Richard here protested hotly that he had not said adjudicators refused to be criticised. He was sure they were more criticised than anyone else. Mr. Long (Stour) interposed with a short but vehement speech to the effect that the Conference was not a school for adjudicators, and that he considered it an impertinence that adjudicators should be criticised by any amateur as had been done that afternoon.

While the meeting was recovering its breath after this remarkable outburst, the Chairman announced that the hour had arrived at which the Conference was to have been closed, and the delegates entertained to tea. Was it the will of the meeting that the proceedings now come to an end? This was strongly protested against by the Mayor of Buxton and others, and on a show of hands it was decided to resume after tea.

On resumption, however, it was found that the vitality had departed from the discussion, and after some rather desultory talk, brightened by an engagingly fresh little speech from Miss Potter (Northampton), who suggested parenthetically that adjudicators needed to simplify their language, the Conference closed. On most of those present two points must have impressed themselves as regards future conferences—the desirability of getting new and vital subjects for discussion, and the necessity for putting a strict time-limit on the speeches.

In the evening the annual banquet was held. There were no set speeches, the singing of madrigals taking their place, but opportunity was taken to thank the Mayor and Mayoress of Chester for their hospitality, and Mr. Fairfax-Jones and the rest of the Federation staff for their good work. The madrigal singing was only a qualified success, the unfamiliar pieces selected being singularly unsuited to the occasion. Another time, let us hope, the selection of these will be left to an experienced choirmaster. Mr. D. T. Yacamini, of Perth, did his cheerful and capable best to pull them off, but the task was a hopeless one, and we were only restored to comfort and happiness when Sir Walford Davies stepped into the breach and revealed himself in a new and vastly entertaining rôle at the pianoforte.

We left Chester with the general impression that, valuable as is the work done at these Federation functions, the social and musical value of the personal intercourse between the representatives of Festivals from all over the Kingdom far outweighs in importance the proceedings at the actual public meetings and conferences. Long may they continue!

S. B. N.

The British Federation of Musical Competition Festivals is again organizing its panel of voluntary conductors, and will be pleased to hear from musicians who are prepared to undertake the conductorship of singing classes in girls' and boys' clubs, Guide companies, and Scout troops, or other groups in the poorer parts of London which cannot afford to pay professional fees. Bare travelling expenses only can be paid. Voluntary accompanists also are invited to offer their services. Clubs, &c., requiring conductors and accompanists should send full particulars.

The series of classes for amateur conductors which were arranged last season were so much appreciated that others will be held if a sufficient number of applications are received. Beginners, especially, are invited to apply. All particulars may be obtained from the Secretary, B.F.M.C.F., 3, Central Buildings, Westminster, S.W.1.

DUNDEE.—A public meeting, called by the Dundee and District Musical Competition Festival Association to consider whether the Festival should be continued, was held in the City Chambers. The chairman of the executive committee, presiding, said that suggestions which could offer only hopes for success were insufficient. Something definite must be proposed before the recommendation to dissolve, which the Association had recently adopted, could be altered. The time had come when the Festival must either receive full support or be discontinued. Mr. John F. Simpson, speaking to the motion that the Association be dissolved, said he thought the non-success of the Festival was in some measure due to the fact that class after class had been added, and the thing had become top-heavy. He thought it would be easily possible to carry on the Festival at Dundee so long as it was confined to classes properly belonging to a competitive festival, and so long as the public sessions could be condensed into a reasonable time. Ultimately, by twelve votes to six, an amendment for delay was adopted, and it was agreed that the executive committee should confer with a number of those interested, when some concrete proposal might be put forward.

GAELIC MOD.—The most satisfactory feature, musically, of the Gaelic Mod, held this year at Oban, was the improvement in the choral singing, but many of the choirs would make more rapid progress were they to take part in some of the open competitive festivals. While the difficulties of any other arrangement are obvious, and at present insuperable, a system of adjudication can never be satisfactory which provides for separate and independent adjudicators on the musical and language sides—particularly when, as is apt to happen at times, one side or the other is determined to see that 'the Whig dogs do not get the best of it.'

BRADFORD FESTIVAL OF CHAMBER MUSIC

It has been reserved for Bradford, the birthplace of Frederick Delius, to show us how an interesting festival can be organized with a minimum of risk for the promoters and guarantors, and a maximum of pleasure to the public. Indeed the wonder is that the great advantages offered by chamber music have never been exploited before. There are (or, at least, there were a little while ago) four or five different schemes for the establishment of opera involving lavish expenditure—one of these alone asked for the modest sum of £2,000,000. The hundredth part of that sum would suffice to establish and maintain a quartet in every town of any importance in the Kingdom. But chamber music can subsist even without subsidies. I don't know what the balance sheet at Bradford disclosed at the end, but the facts are that the hall was well filled at the morning sessions and the attendance was still more satisfactory at the evening concerts. Even more important is the fact that the audience enjoyed, and enjoyed thoroughly, every minute of it. It was the kind of audience performers long to play to—little knowing what it may mean if things should go awry: for it is the most sympathetic public that reveals most clearly and unmistakably its impressions, favourable or unfavourable alike. This audience could show its pleasure without noise, without hand-clapping, without shouts of 'bravo.' The listeners were so wrapt up in the music that only when the players were leaving their seats did they express approval in the conventional way. There was no preconcerted action, no etiquette, no humbug about it. They did not always act in this way. A brilliant scherzo, obviously meant to provoke approval, would get it. But a serious, thoughtful piece of music, like the Franck Quartet, was heard in silence—as needs must happen if the public is really held in the grip of the music and feels the sway of the emotions the composer portrays.

The heaviest responsibility of the Festival fell on the shoulders of the leader of the quartet, Miss Marjorie Hayward; and on the whole the ordeal added to her laurels, for her playing and her readings were often most admirable. If we were prepared to take for granted a representative performance of one of the 'Rasoumovsky' Quartets from such players as Miss Hayward and her coadjutors (Messrs. E. Virgo, R. Jeremy, and Cedric Sharpe), or the exquisite phrasing in Brahms's Sextet in G, the energy, balance, and restraint shown in Schönberg's Sextet surpassed all our expectations. Only in Mozart Miss Hayward's playing seemed deficient in charm. Perhaps she was ill at ease, or possibly her natural bent is for stronger meat than Mozart can offer. A number of other artists took part occasionally as the Quartet was reduced to a trio or duet, or expanded to a sextet. The most notable performances, outside the Quartet, were contributed by Mr. William Murdoch and Mr. Leon Goossens. The first belongs to the small number of pianists who realise that it is, at least, ungenerous to smother a fiddler or a 'cellist who is doing his best, merely to prove strength of wrists or the capacity of the pianoforte to act the bully. Yet Murdoch never fails to give the strings support when support is timely or desirable. Mr. Leon Goossens surpassed himself in Mozart's Oboe Quartet, and contributed to the unquestionable success of Arnold Bax's Oboe Quintet Other English works in the programme were Elgar's Quintet and Delius's Pianoforte and Violin Sonata.

It was admitted that a young musician, Mr. Keith Douglas, was largely instrumental in bringing about the Festival. Mr. Douglas deserves well of his fellow citizens. It was also whispered that he was the author of the 'notes' of the programme. If this is so, we may be permitted to hint that he should really make up his mind about the great and the greater. To say on one page that Brahms is the greatest of all composers, and on another that Delius is the greatest since Wagner, is not illuminating. B. V.

THE MÄRKISCHE SPIELGEMEINDE

This is a choir of twenty students, of both sexes, from Berlin University—Märkische because they are Brandenburgers, Spielgemeinde because the original plan was to give both plays and music. But music, it appears, claimed too much of her own, and the dramatic and musical workers found it necessary to study and travel apart. These wander-birds (Wandervögel) do not haunt the large commercial centres of music. They prefer to play or sing in school-rooms or churches, or on village greens, or in any quiet corner where nature and art give a setting to their enjoyment of old German folk-song and sacred music. The choral singers of the Gemeinde have toured in Austria and in Scandinavia, and last month they came to England to follow a queer and pleasant West-country itinerary away from the track of the 'international celebrity'—a Church hall at Bristol, an assembly-room at Winscombe, the Cory Hall at Hereford, Hereford and Worcester Cathedrals, Burford, St. Martin-in-the-Fields and St. Michael's in Cornhill, Bedales School, Marlborough College, the Poet Laureate's house at Boar's Hill, and Southampton for their departure on October 7.

They are only students, and they do not practise show pieces. We did not, therefore, expect them to give us an exhibition of choral technique. All the same it was their choral technique that chiefly interested us. The voices made a beautiful blend. There were no tricks of individuality to disturb it. They might have been notes on a single organ stop for all the personality that came into the utterance of their tone. Probably there was not an ounce of vibrato between them. They had a finished textual knowledge of their music, and what with going ahead smoothly and singing the right notes at the right time they were able to tackle music of intricacy, such as the eight-part unaccompanied works of Bach, and make us feel that it was not an exorbitant task for twenty voices. But they were chiefly concerned (we refer to their performance at St. Martin's) with the remoter period of Church music—Prætorius, Despres (an 'Ave Verum'), Schultz, and an 'Ave Maria' by Gumpelzaimer, in which four of the singers played the preliminary entries on violins and then became singers again. All that could be said against the performance was that the impersonality of it went too far towards eliminating the words. But clean and simple art redeemed all fault. The conductor himself, Dr. Georg Götsch, was at one with the picture in his restrained and intimate conducting. M.

[An article on the origin and aims of the Märkische Spielgemeinde, with further particulars of its tour, appears on p. 999]

Music in the Provinces

BATH.—Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony and Haydn's 'London' were played on October 6 at the opening of the Pump Room Symphony Concerts under Mr. Jan Hurst.

BIRMINGHAM AND DISTRICT.—The big audience which gathered on October 3 for the first Sunday concert given by the City Orchestra augurs well for the success of the coming season. These concerts are to be housed in the West-End Cinema, a larger and more comfortable building than the Futurist Theatre. It has, besides, the advantage of a stage for the players and balconies where listeners may be sociable with their friends. There have been some changes in the personnel of the Orchestra since last season, and the result is an improved ensemble, though the tonal balance still cries out for more strings.——Beethoven's seventh Symphony was the principal work in the programme. A rather slow tempo lent a sense of tameness to the performance, and the note of passion which lies hidden in the music was not developed as it might have been. Chabrier's 'España' Rhapsody was, on the other hand, played splendidly. Miss Mary Abbott was the soloist in Liszt's 'Hungarian' Fantasia. She played with great spirit and finely-held rhythm, but the balance between the solo instrument and the orchestra was not ideal. Miss Eveline Stevenson sang Dubussy's 'Air de Lia' and a group of Shakespeare songs with beautiful, pure tone.——The first symphony concert of the season took place on October 7 at Central Hall. Mr. Harold Bauer was the soloist of the evening, playing the 'Emperor' Concerto in the broad, masterful style pertaining to it, and with a clear insight into its spiritual meaning, Mr. Adrian C. Boult conducted the work extremely well, but was a little less happy in the 'Enigma' Variations, which concluded the concert.——Dvorák's Symphony in G was played at the Sunday concert on October 10. This work is not equal to the better known 'New World' Symphony, but is well worth a hearing even if only for its sheer musical loveliness. Dvorák does not, one supposes, strive to impart a message after the manner of the bigger composers, but he makes happy, genial music, full of likable tunes and constructed with amazing skill. Butterworth's 'A Shropshire Lad' Rhapsody found a place on the programme, along with the Ballet music from Berlioz's 'Faust.'——Handel's 'Semele,' which was given in a concert version by the chorus and orchestra of the Birmingham Wireless Station, is a beautiful, dignified work that deserves to be better known than it is. It is possible that with the absence of dramatic action much of the opera's intrinsic beauty was lost, yet the performance provided a feast of lovely music. An abridged edition, published by Novello, which retains all the most beautiful numbers, was used. Mr. Joseph Lewis conducted, and managed to capture throughout the steady, rhythmic movement of the music. Miss Gertrude Johnson, Miss Dorothy d'Orsay, Mr. John Armstrong, and Mr. Joseph Farrington sang their arias with much vocal skill.——At the first concert in the Catterall series, on October 5, a Mozart programme was given. In two Quintets—that in C, and the E flat—Mr. Arthur Kennedy shared with Mr. Park the music for violas. The Quartet in D completed the programme.——There have been several recitals during the month—one by Mr. Leslie Bennett and Mr. Michael Mullinar, at which Mr. Mullinar played Bax's second Sonata and John Ireland's 'Bergamask.' Mr. Bennett sang several groups of songs, including Peter Warlock's setting of 'Twelve Oxen,' and some Hungarian folk-songs arranged by Kodály.——On October 11, Miss Mary Abbott and Mr. Harry Stanier joined forces in a pianoforte and 'cello recital, and on October 6 Miss Edna Iles gave a pianoforte recital.——The first concert of the 'Celebrity' series took place on October 8, Fritz Kreisler giving a recital after his usual manner.——A new singer made her appearance at the first concert of the season's Philharmonic Mid-day series on September 28. Miss Catherine Stewart is the possessor of a beautiful contralto voice, which in its best moments is reminiscent of a fine 'cello. Her style too is reposeful and controlled, and she sings with evident understanding. In the more passionate songs, however, there was some lack of imaginative insight. Her singing of Bach's 'Jesus Sleeps' was a thing to be remembered for its lovely vocal tone and easeful phrasing. Mr. Tom Bromley accompanied, and played some solos extremely well. Schubert's Trio in B flat was the principal work played at the second Mid-day concert. Miss Beatrice Hewitt, with Mr. Catterall and Mr. Hock, brought sound musicianship to the playing of this beautiful item, but they did not wring from it every ounce of loveliness. There was a sense of hurry which tended to increase as the music progressed, and the rhythm was often inflexible. The Philharmonic String Quartet played Brahms's C minor Quartet on October 12. This combination is settling down to a really good ensemble, and at this mid-day event it gave us playing of fine, vigorous quality. Although there was much to admire in the performance, the romantic quality of the work was missed: the healthy, open-air feeling of the last movement, however, was well caught.

G. W.

BOURNEMOUTH.—At the Winter Gardens, Sir Dan Godfrey recently gave the second performance of Mr. Leigh Henry's Prelude 'Llyn-y-Fan,' which was produced at the Swansea National Eisteddfod this year.——Bruckner's fourth Symphony was played at the opening of the winter series.

BRADFORD.—A report of the Chamber Music Festival is given on p. 1032.——The first of the Sunday evening concerts took place on October 10, when Mr. Keith Douglas, the organizer, conducted the Bradford Permanent Orchestra in Ravel's 'Le Tombeau de Couperin.'

BRIGHTON.—A Centenary Festival will be given by the Brighton and Hove Harmonic Society on November 2, 4, and 6. 'The Dream of Gerontius,' 'The Golden Legend,' and 'Elijah' will be conducted by Mr. Percy Taylor, and a Wagner programme on the Thursday afternoon by Sir Henry Wood. The orchestra will be augmented by Queen's Hall players.

GUILDFORD.—The usual series of symphony concerts has been arranged by Mr. Claud Powell with the Guildford Symphony Orchestra. The first programme (October 12) contained Symphonies of Haydn and Mozart (E flat); the second (October 26) Schubert's C major and Walford Davies's 'Wordsworth' Suite. At the third concert (November 23) Mr. William Alwyn, Mr. York Bowen, and Mr. Thomas F. Dunhill will conduct works of their own.

HARROGATE.—The excellence of the programmes given by Mr. Basil Cameron with his Municipal Orchestra is well sustained, and the Royal Hall is becoming, during its season, one of the important musical centres in the North. At every concert a Symphony is given, or, if other important things are happening, a symphonic movement. On October 13 the programme contained the 'Kleine Nachtmusik' of Mozart, and Beethoven's Septet.

LIVERPOOL.—At a concert of the British Music Society, on October 14, the Music Society Quartet gave the first performance anywhere of a String Quartet by Maleingreau.

MANCHESTER.—Under normal conditions Manchester's season opens only about the third week in October, but the incident of a Civic Week in the early days of the month brought an autumn spate of music of all kinds save opera and orchestral work. No more convincing demonstration of the city's power to make its own music has ever been afforded. Recitals, vocal and instrumental, commenced each day during the lunch-hour, and with only brief intervals continued until 6 o'clock, the evenings being occupied by choral concerts proceeding sometimes simultaneously in different halls. It is not possible to indicate fully the nature of all this music, but mention must be made of the remarkable choral recital given by the united forces of the Co-operative Wholesale Society and the Orpheus Male Choirs, under the conductorship of Manchester's distinguished veteran conductor-adjudicator, Mr. Walter S. Nesbitt. Apart from an occasional casual massed performance at some competitive gathering, opportunities for such an experience of alla cappella work of the best type by so fine a body of disciplined singers are quite rare even in the North. The only really comparable instance one can recall would be the Vienna Männergesangverein concert here in pre-war days, in music of a definitely lower standard of merit. The Ancoats Girls' Choir, the Manchester Vocal Society, and the Beecham Operatic Chorus each contributed an evening's programme. The conductor of the last-named body, Mr. W. A. Lomas, was responsible for the organization of the week of music. Sir Hamilton Harty conducted a chamber orchestra in the Town Hall, but the Free Trade Hall being otherwise occupied no full-dress orchestral concerts were possible. Of the twenty or more recitals given at the Tudor Galleries two call for special mention—the Zuleika songs from Goethe's 'West-Östlicher Divan,' of Hugo Wolf, sung by Mr. Fred Crompton, to translations of Mr. Samuel Langford, preceded by Mr. Langford's thoroughly succinct and illuminating estimate of Wolf's songs in general and these Zuleika numbers in particular; and a recital of songs by Manchester composers (given by Miss Nellie Pollitt)—the late Edmondstoune Duncan, Messrs. Edward Agate, Eric Fogg, John H. Foulds, Hamilton Harty, John Ireland, Leo Smith (now at Toronto), and George Whittaker. The last-named composer accompanied. The Wolf song accompaniments were superbly played by Miss Katharine Mills. The Edith Robinson Quartet during this Civic Week played Eric Fogg's A flat Quartet. These players (as also the Catterall group) have given several performances of this work which I have heard; one's early impressions are now confirmed in finding the greater originality in the Scherzo, and the slow 'rhapsody' as possessing the finer qualities of expressiveness. The most ambitious chamber music programme of the Civic Week was given on October 8, by the Misses Edith and Muriel Robinson, Lucy Pierce, and Messrs. Harry Mortimer, Philip Whiteway, Maurice Ward, Carl Fuchs, Frank Merrick, and Miss Dora Gilson (accompanist). It included first-time readings here of Prokofiev's 'Overture on Yiddish Themes,' Poulenc's Suite for pianoforte, 'Napoli,' and John Ireland's Sonata No. 2, in A minor, for violin and pianoforte.——The second week in October brought a series of half-a-dozen quartet concerts, by the Léner players, organized by Mr. Edward Isaacs. Manchester never gets into its stride of appreciation of such an 'entire week' series straight away, and it does seem worth while re-considering in the light of experience whether such procedure, begun last year and continued this, is the best way of enabling Manchester's numerous patrons of chamber work to do fair justice either to themselves or to so distinguished a band of visitors.——By the time these notes appear Kreisler and Paderewski will both have visited us; the first municipal orchestral concert, the first and second Hallé concerts, and the opening Catterall quartet concert will all have taken place. —— No fewer than twenty-two of the Hallé players have now completed twenty years' service in the Orchestra, six of them having received the 'recognition' medal at the opening concert on October 21. The Hallé executive is adopting thoroughly enlightened means of catching potential Hallé audiences whilst they are young, facilities being extended to many educational institutions, also to large works and business establishments. For many years the blind in our midst have received much consideration, and also the nurses in hospitals and private homes. It is surely far better to accustom folk to good music in this way than to rely on the 'drawing' power of men and women of 'international celebrity' fame. C. H.

St. Helen's.—At a concert given on October 6 by the St. Helen's Glee Club, a presentation was made to the conductor, Dr. S. B. Siddall, who founded the Club twenty-one years ago. The programme of the occasion included Arnold Bax's 'Now is the time of Christymas' and a number of B.E.F. songs.

Scarborough.—At the last three classical concerts given by the Spa management, under the direction of Mr. Alick Maclean, the principal works played were Beethoven's fourth Pianoforte Concerto (with Miss Irene Scharrer) and the last movement of the 'Eroica.'

Southend.—Three concerts (October 5, November 9, and December 14) have been arranged by the Chamber Music Society. The programme of the first included Vaughan Williams's 'Five Mystical Songs,' sung by Mr. Percy Judd, accompanied by pianoforte quintet.

Southport.—Miss Alma Moodie will play the Brahms Violin Concerto at the first of three subscription concerts announced by the Southport Orchestral Society under Mr. J. E. Matthews. The three principal works in the three programmes are Mozart's Symphony in G minor, Glazounov's sixth Symphony, and the second Pianoforte Concerto of Rachmaninov, to be played by M. Orloff.

Music in Scotland

Aberdeen. — For its concert scheme this season Aberdeen is dependent on the enterprise of Mr. Willan Swainson, Mr. Max Mossel, and, acting in conjunction with them, Messrs. Paterson. Mr. Swainson announces a visit by the Scottish Orchestra under Vaclav Talich, with a programme including Hamilton Harty's 'Mystic Trumpeter,' a performance of Elgar's 'Gerontius' by the Aberdeen Madrigal Choir and the Scottish Orchestra, a festival performance of 'The Messiah,' and a special subscription performance, for the first time in the north of Scotland, of Bach's B minor Mass. Mr. Mossel is extending his excellent series of subscription concerts to Aberdeen for the first time, and the advance bookings are already such as to justify his enterprise.

Edinburgh.—The Glasgow and Edinburgh orchestras, about sixty strong, of the British Broadcasting Company, combined to give a charity concert in Usher Hall, under the direction of Mr. Herbert A. Carruthers, musical director of the Glasgow station, with Miss Dorothy Silk (soprano) and Mr. Solomon (pianoforte) as soloists. The programme included Honegger's 'Pacific 231,' Vaughan Williams's 'Wasps' Overture, a new suite, 'Æsop's Fables,' by W. H. Reed, and the Franck Symphonic Variations for pianoforte and orchestra. Both programme and performances deserved a better audience than the mere handful of people who were present. Mr. Albert Sammons and Mr. Mark Hambourg gave a violin and pianoforte recital, their programme including the Franck Sonata and the 'Kreutzer' Sonata. As was to be expected from the combination of two individualities so marked and so diverse, 'when they were good they were very very good, and when they were bad they were horrid.' Mrs. Marjory Kennedy Fraser, with the collaboration of her daughter Patuffa, her sister Margaret Kennedy, Hugh Mackay (tenor), and Ruth Waddell ('cello), gave one of her always distinctive and enthralling recitals of 'Songs of the Hebrides.' The most enthusiastically received number was the hauntingly beautiful 'Deirdre's Farewell,' with its curious resemblance in places to a once ubiquitous popular song. The Falconer String Quartet announces a series of three concerts, with programmes ranging from Boccherini to Dohnànyi. The Edinburgh Education Authority is again undertaking to subsidise, under certain conditions, the provision of choir-trainers and meeting places for young industrial choirs. The Edinburgh Grand Opera Society (conductor, Mr. De La Haye; producer, Mr. Hebden Forster) is to present Goldmark's 'Queen of Sheba' and 'Tannhäuser' in the spring. The Edinburgh Opera Society has selected for performance Bizet's 'Carmen' and Weber's 'Freischütz.' Mr. Ralph T. Langdon has been appointed conductor, and Mr. E. C. Hedmondt will again act as producer. The St. Andrew's Amateur Orchestral Society has appointed Mr. J. M. Begbie as conductor in succession to Mr. De La Haye, resigned. The works to be performed this season by the Edinburgh Royal Choral Union are Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius,' Verdi's 'Requiem,' and, of course, 'The Messiah.'

Glasgow.—Mr. Hugh S. Roberton and fifty members of the Glasgow Orpheus Choir had a great send-off on their departure for a six weeks' American and Canadian tour. Cabled reports indicate that their singing is arousing extraordinary enthusiasm among audiences and providing the critics with some new problems. The absence of the party made little difference to the attendances at the Glasgow Orpheus Chamber concert week, now in its eighth season. Seven concerts were given by the Léner String Quartet, the programmes comprising fifteen complete works and excerpts from twenty others, ranging from Dittersdorf to Dohnànyi and Kodály. In some cases there was more looseness in texture and ensemble and less security in tuning than we have learned to expect from the Léner Quartet, but the performances rose from peak to peak as the week proceeded, and the final ones reached well-nigh a perfection of ensemble, spontaneity, warmth, firmness of line, and subtlety of phrasing. It was announced at the close that for next year's 'Orpheus Week' the artists would be the London String Quartet and Miss Myra Hess, and that the Léner Quartet would return the following year. —— This year's three weeks' season of the British National Opera Company brought us the usual répertoire and one novelty, 'The Leper's Flute,' libretto by Ian Colvin, music by Ernest Bryson—both Scotsmen. Thanks to a good deal of purposeful publicity and the nationality of the author the first production of the work was very largely attented, but failed to create any very deep impression. The performances of the B.N.O.C. showed on the whole an improvement on previous occasions, but attendances were not up to last year's standard, and the enthusiasm of the local guarantors is likely to be damped by a very substantial call upon them. ——Miss Clara Sias Davis, an American singer who has been studying Hebridean song under Mrs. Kennedy Fraser, with a view to specialising in this branch of song in the United States, gave an invitation recital of 'Songs of the Hebrides,' Mrs. Kennedy Fraser accompanying at the pianoforte. Miss Davis is an intelligent and musicianly singer, with an agreeable voice, but she appeared to have little natural affinity with the mood of the songs, and it is not thus we would wish them presented to our friends overseas.—— Mr. Herbert Heyner, the well-known bass, gave a lecture-recital on 'The Evolution of Song,' to the members of the Glasgow Society of Organists. Mr. Stewart Macpherson lectured on 'Aural Culture' to the members of the British Music Society, Glasgow centre.——Mr. Herbert Walton's annual autumn series of organ recitals in Glasgow Cathedral covered a wide selection of representative organ works, and attracted, as usual, large audiences.

HELENSBURGH.—The thirty-fifth annual series of four subscription concerts will be undertaken by the English Pianoforte Quartet, Mr. John Coates, M. Borovsky, the Scottish Orchestra, and the Léner String Quartet.

SEBASTIAN.

Music in Wales

ABERYSTWYTH.—The fourth Summer School in music took place from August 19-30, under the direction of Sir Walford Davies, assisted by Dr. D. J. de Lloyd (harmony and counterpoint), Miss Evelyn Cooke (violin), Mr. Arthur Williams (viola, 'cello, and string ensemble), Mr. Charles Clements (organ and pianoforte), and Mr. W. R. Allen (singing and choral technique). Mr. Leslie Bennett gave song recitals, chiefly of modern works. Dr. Lloyd Williams lectured on the advantage of the Welsh language for vocal training and Mr. Alec Robertson on 'How to Use the Gramophone.' Mr. Norman Greenwood and Miss Sybil Eaton also assisted. The Director gave a chain of morning lectures on melody (from folk-song to sonata, and from plainsong to church cantata), intervals, scales, chords, harmony, rhythm, form, Bach and his twenty-four keys, and 'music in harness.' During the practical periods and listening practices many works were studied, e.g., by Palestrina, Byrd, Bach, Mozart, Brahms, and others, and special attention was given to a Haydn Quartet and certain melodies of Handel. Periods were devoted to questions daily. The mornings were given to all this intensive study, the afternoons being free for recreation or private work, and school concerts of chamber and orchestral music were held each evening, the performers being members of the staff and students. Two of these concerts were open to the public, and were held in University Hall. A wonderful spirit of enthusiasm prevailed throughout the school. A great factor in the success was the arrangement by which the majority of the students lived together at the Hostel under the sympathetic care of Mrs. Guthkelch, the warden.

BANGOR.—The first College weekly concert of the session (the hundred and eighteenth of the series) was given at University College on October 7, the programme including: Two Minuets (Handel); Concerto for two violins (Bach); Trios—slow movement of Beethoven in B flat, Op. 11, and Finale in E flat, Op. 1, No. 1; 'Celtic' Prelude (Rutland Boughton); and the slow movement from 'The Nigger' String Quartet (Dvorák). Mr. E. T. Davies lectured on 'Music of the Handel-Bach Period.'——On October 14 were performed Haydn's Trio in G ('Gipsy'); Phantasy Trio in A minor (Ireland); Sonata for 'cello and pianoforte (Handel); and two movements from the 'Kreutzer' Sonata. —— Lecture-concerts for children are being held monthly at University College this year, the series inaugurated last session having proved highly successful. Over four hundred children attend these concerts regularly, and show the keenest interest in the carefully chosen programmes. The first concert of the present session, October 15, consisted of the 'Berenice' Minuet and the Overture to 'Armenius,' the slow movement from Schubert's Trio in B flat, and Haydn's Trio in G, together with solo items. Mr. E. T. Davies gave a short lecture.—— The College Choral and Orchestral Societies have commenced activities, and announce their first concert on December 8, when 'Acis and Galatea' and carols, together with a Haydn Symphony and Mozart's Violin Concerto in A, will be performed.

CARMARTHEN: WEST WALES THREE CHOIRS FESTIVAL. —This interesting event took place on September 15, 16, 17, and 19. It opened with an orchestral concert at St. David's Hall, which included Beethoven's first Symphony and an excerpt from 'Tannhäuser.' The remainder of the Festival took place at St. Peter's Church. The Thursday afternoon service began with Elgar's arrangement of the National Anthem, and was devoted to Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' and Elgar's 'For the Fallen.' It was attended by the Mayor and Corporation in state, with the Lord-Lieutenant of the County. The Mayors of Cardigan and Kidwelly also attended by invitation. On Thursday evening 'Elijah' was given, on Friday evening 'The Messiah,' and on the following Sunday afternoon 'The Hymn of Praise' and 'For the Fallen' were repeated. The choir of about a hundred and twenty voices was drawn mainly from Carmarthen, Brynamman, and Ammanford. The soloists were the Misses N. Fuller Mills, Annie Davies, M. Conwil Evans, May Jones, Sally Williams, and Olive Gilbert, Messrs. John Aikens, Tom Bonnell, J. Myrddin Jones, Idris Daniels, and David Brazell. The orchestra was led by Mr. Victor Jones, and the organ accompaniment was supplied with conspicuous ability by Mr. S. J. Mundy (Exmouth). Mr. J. Charles Williams, the able conductor and organizer of the Festival, hopes to make this gathering a regular feature of South Wales musical activities, somewhat on the lines of the Three Choirs Festival.

MOUNTAIN ASH.—During the last two months a series of four orchestral concerts has been given by the Aberpenner Orchestral Society, for the benefit of the distress fund of the area. The programmes included the slow movements of Beethoven's fifth and seventh Symphonies, Schubert's 'Unfinished,' the Overtures to 'Egmont' and 'The Magic Flute,' and many other works. Mountain Ash has, fortunately, a huge Pavilion, and the audiences numbered about eight thousand at each concert. The prices of admission were 1*d.*, 2*d.*, 3*d.*, and a very substantial sum was handed over to the fund. This orchestra has given several concerts in various towns in South Wales during the strike period.

Music in Ireland

BELFAST.—At a general meeting of the Larne Musical Festival Association, presided over by the Earl of Antrim, on September 17, it was announced that the first year's working, with an income of over £500, wound up with a credit balance of £180.——Mr. Peter Dawson, with Miss Edith de Pauley and Miss Cathleen Wright, gave an attractive concert at Ulster Hall, on September 18. Mr. Jack McKeown did efficient work as accompanist.——The fourth annual band contest at Newry, on September 18, was a great success. The Senior Brass was won by 55th Old Boys' Silver, Belfast, and the Junior Brass and Reed fell to Grosvenor Hall, Belfast. Mr. J. Brady, Liverpool, was adjudicator.——At Londonderry Philharmonic Society's annual meeting, on September 18, under the presidency of Mr. D. S. Irvine, the annual report showed that the finances were in a sounder condition than for some time past. At present there were three hundred and thirty members, and it was hoped to increase that number to four hundred.——Bangor Harmonic Society, on September 21, re-elected Mr. Robert Jones as conductor, with Mrs. F. A. Sloss as accompanist.——On September 22, at the Belfast Station, Sir Ivor Atkins, organist of Worcester Cathedral, conducted the Station Orchestra, giving fine readings of 'In the Cotswolds' (Brent-Smith), Handel's Overture in D minor, and Elgar's 'Enigma' Variations. Songs were contributed by Mr. Harold Williams.——Mr. A. J. Cunningham has been appointed conductor of Derry Philharmonic Society.——A general meeting of the Ulster Society of Professional Musicians was held on September 24, in the Carlton Restaurant, under the presidency of Capt. C. J. Brennan, when important addresses were given by the chairman, Dr. Walker, and Mr. James Dann.——Miss Marjorie Gullan's Verse-Speaking Choir—on the initiative of Mr. James Stewart—gave a fine performance at the Assembly Buildings on October 2, and displayed to an appreciative audience the methods of this remarkable amateur combination. Miss Gullan also gave three lectures (under the auspices of the Belfast Musical Competitions Committee), explaining her aims and ideals, on October 4, 5, and 6. It is proposed to found a Belfast school for verse-speaking.——The last of the Sunday open-air concerts took place on October 3, at Pirrie Park, in the presence of a vast concourse. Choice selections were given by the Queen's Island Band, under Mr. George Dean.——In the programme for the forthcoming Philharmonic season, the names of Mesdames Winifred Brady, Dorothy Silk, Olga Haley, and May Foster, and Messrs. A. M'Credie, Dale Smith, and Pouishnov, appear.

DUBLIN.—A concert in aid of the Central Catholic Library was given at La Scala Cinema on September 26. Miss Mamie Dingle, Mr. Denis Cox, and Mr. Arthur Darley contributed many agreeable items, and the band of the Garda Siochana (Civic Guard) discoursed a pleasing programme.——A delightful song recital was given at the Abbey Theatre on October 6, by Miss Elizabeth Graves, Mr. W. F. Watt, and Mr. Denis Cox, assisted by the Nancie Lord String Quartet, with Miss Eileen Buckley at the pianoforte.——On October 11, Dr. Esposito commenced a series of pianoforte recitals devoted to Beethoven, in anticipation of the Beethoven centenary. These recitals were continued on October 18 and 25.——Miss Annie Lord and Miss Nancie Lord have been elected members of the R.I.A.M.——Quite gratifying was the annual report of the Feis Ceoil at the annual meeting, held on October 11, under the presidency of Dr. J. T. Larchet. Both in the number of entries and in the financial department 1926 was a record year. There were 1,003 entries, and the profit for the year was £435, which, added to the last year's balance, made a credit balance of £1,607. Dr. Larchet pointed out that, though the report was most satisfactory, they had to deplore the shortage of choirs, and he hoped an effort would be made to revive choral singing at Dublin.——The Army Band No. 1, under Col. Fritz Brase, had a most successful tour in the South-Eastern counties from October 7 to 14, and presented admirably selected programmes ranging from Handel to Weingartner and Debussy.

WATERFORD.—At the annual general meeting of the Waterford Instrumental Society, on October 1, Mr. Mercer was elected band president, with Mr. W. H. Murray as conductor.——Mr. A. Begas, a Belgian, has been appointed musical director of the Wallace Grand Opera Society.

Musical Notes from Abroad

GERMANY

A BACH FESTIVAL AT BERLIN

The beginning of the musical season was marked by the festival, at Berlin, of the Neue Bachgesellschaft of Leipsic, the choice of venue being due to the inauguration in the capital, twenty-five years ago, of the first Festival of the Society. Five choral concerts and several other musical events comprised the Festival week.

Berlin cannot complain of having too little of Bach. Under the leadership of Siegfried Ochs, the Philharmonic Choir—it is now known as the Hochschulchor—has for many years worthily honoured John Sebastian. The greater works, more particularly the cantatas, have been performed so many times that, concerning them, no gap was felt. Meanwhile, many scholars have devoted their studies to Bach's predecessors, not the least benefit flowing from these researches being the new light thrown upon one who, although he predeceased Bach by some four-score years, yet may be said to have influenced his great successor. For it was Heinrich Schütz, the German musician of the 17th century, who, during his stay in Italy—especially at Venice—had learned to use double choirs, a knowledge which he employed in such fashion as very markedly to affect the evolution of German music. However much we may have advanced the descriptive power of music, or progressed in the development of harmony and counterpoint, or in the employment of colour, yet the works of Heinrich Schütz are a revelation even to those who feel the highest respect for Bach. Bach's chromaticism and his enormously expressive faculty may have foreshadowed the future of music, but Schütz, this musician standing alone in his country, has fulfilled a no less important task. The Festival afforded opportunity for hearing some of his works for double-choir, and even more complex compositions. In 'Saul, was verfolgst du mich,' or 'Es erhub sich en Streit,' one could feel the great distance separating the exultant magnificence of Schütz and the more chromatic sonorities of Bach.

It was interesting to observe the growth of the cantata towards the point to which it was carried by Bach; or, rather, it would have been interesting if the conductor, Carl Theil, with his madrigal choir, had possessed the faculty of animating the dry bones of those things that demanded personal suggestive qualities on the part of the modern artist. The outstanding names in this group of composers were those of Dietrich Buxtehude, Johann Krieger, and Friedrich Zachow, Handel's master. These represented the evolution of the form. Then, under Georg Schumann as conductor, the choir of the Singakademie repeated what it had already sung several times before. There were also orchestral and chamber concerts, among them one which threw some light on Wilhelm Friedemann Bach, that son of John Sebastian who deserves more attention than he has yet received outside the circle of musicologues.

On the whole, it must be said that this Bach Festival, taking place in a city which just now shows a dangerous inclination for music of very low level, has not had the resounding success that it would have met with in the country. The principal lesson to be drawn would be for modern composers who think that it is possible to reproduce Bach's methods in present-day compositions. They could have seen that it was not so much Bach's technical devices as it was the spirit animating his works that decided his greatness. Whether this spirit can be recaptured and developed according to our modern thought and feeling is the problem to be solved.

OPERATIC FUSIONS

Opera in Germany at this moment deserves the highest attention. It is undergoing new experiences, e.g., that of the State monopoly that seeks to include the greater part of the opera-houses once belonging to municipalities. So far as Berlin is concerned, an alliance between the State Opera and the Municipal Opera-house at Charlottenburg is planned. What matters, however, are not so much institutions as personalities. Berlin is so fortunate as to attract the greatest personalities among conductors, and to employ them in the institutions existing in that city. The near future will bring, beside Bruno Walter—who, of course, is the leading spirit in the operatic life of Berlin—Otto Klemperer (former general-music-director at Wiesbaden) and Erich Kleiber, now general-music-director of the State Opera, where Leo Blech is doing his work. The question is, How may all these united forces be led to serve one aim?—and for this task a new general-intendant, Heinz Tietjen, has been chosen. For the moment the great State Opera-house, Unter den Linden, must be omitted, because of some important structural alterations that cannot be finished before 1927. In the meantime the State Opera will have to content itself with very limited space in the house of Kroll, where just now (October 9) the first performance of Prokofiev's 'Love of the three Oranges' is being performed.

A wonderful presentation of 'Fidelio,' in the Municipal Opera House, under Bruno Walter, marked the celebration of the conductor's fiftieth birthday. The occasion was suffused with the Mahlerian spirit; that is to say, the single singer did not dominate the evening, but success was spread over the company. Preceding Beethoven came Handel's 'Otto and Theophano,' which, in spite of the excellent singing of Grete Stückgold, and the careful conducting of Fritz Zweig, was, in performance, nothing more than a tribute paid to the new Handel cult. This movement may have some wholesome effect on the general level of singing, though of no considerable duration.

Adolf Weissmann.

HOLLAND

In view of the fact that the Beethoven centenary will be here before the beginning of next season, two of the closing concerts of the summer season at Scheveningen were devoted to the ninth Symphony, which was repeated to crowded houses. Schnéevoigt had no new ideas on this work to give us, but the way in which the traditional reading was presented was magnificent. I have not heard the Residentie Orchestra play better; and the vocal parts, both choral and solo, were admirably done. It is announced that both Schnéevoigt and Neumark will come back next season. The opening items of the winter season at Amsterdam and The Hague have been the delightful little works presented by the Berlin Musikalische Kammerspiele, with Claire Jache, Ruth Jalinke, Carl Fischer, and Herbert Neustadt in the leading rôles.

Co-Opera-tie started its season with 'Herodiade,' 'Lohengrin,' and 'Thaïs,' in which the soloists and orchestra distinguished themselves, the chorus and the mounting being unsatisfactory. A new experiment is shortly to be made with 'Orpheus,' in which the chorus will not be visible. It is freely suggested that if this meets with any success it might be applied to as many works as possible. In any case, however, the direction of the chorus should be placed in the hands of some one who will and can insist on reasonable posture and gesture. In 'Lohengrin' the singing was adequate, but in dress and awkwardness the chorus remained an eyesore. The general standard of performance in this work showed that Albert van Raalte is far ahead of either of his assistants as an opera conductor, and the manner in which the characterisation of the music was achieved, as well as that in which the voices were allowed to carry through the heaviest instrumentation, was altogether admirable.

Of new works already produced on the concert-platform the two principal are Sigtenhorst Meyer's Introduction, Theme, and Variations for violin alone, and Willem Pijper's second Violoncello Sonata, which confirm, without greatly increasing, the reputation of their respective composers. A new Symphony by Pijper is announced to be produced at one of the Concertgebouw concerts during November.

That Dutch organ music is also making progress was exemplified by a recital given in the New Church at Amsterdam, of which the programme consisted entirely of native works. The composers were Philip Loots, Simon Kroon, Hubert Cuypers (who has just been publicly congratulated on thirty-five years' work at Amsterdam), Cor Kint, and the recitalist himself, A. W. Ryp.

A movement is on foot for restoring the old Dutch folk-dances, and a preliminary demonstration aroused much interest. The outstanding feature of the dances is that they are performed to vocal music, either sung by the dancers themselves or by groups of singers standing near to them.

A real event in the musical life of Holland is the appearance of the first number of De Musiek, a new monthly under the editorship of Paul F. Sanders and Willem Pijper, published by Seyffardt, at Amsterdam. The first number consists of sixty pages of excellent matter bound in an artistic cover that makes it a joy to preserve. There are no editorials, though Pijper contributes a long and thought-provoking article on 'Tonality Problems,' and Sanders a shorter one on 'Stage Music.' Other contributors are J. G. Prod'homme, on 'Robin des Bois' and 'Der Freischütz'; Dr. A. Sandberger, on Orlando di Lasso and the Cultural Tendencies of his time'; and Matthijs Vermeulen, on 'Ernst Levy.' Contributions for future numbers are promised by M.-D. Calvocoressi, Guido M. Gatti; G. Jean-Aubry, Charles van den Borren, Aloys Haba, Dr. Eaglefield Hull, Lionel de la Laurencie, A. Salazar, Adolf Weissmann, and many others. The financial success of the undertaking is assured by the fact that the new magazine is the organ of the Federatie van Nerderlandsche Toonkunsteraarsvereenigingen, which comprises practically all the leading professional societies in the country, while lay societies outside the Federation have expressed their sympathy with the aims of the committee in founding the periodical.

Herbert Antcliffe.

Obituary

Louis Wolff, whose death on October 10 is reported from America, was born at Amsterdam on May 15, 1865. As a youth of ten years old he had great success in Germany, but was withdrawn from public life and sent to school at The Hague. Later he was a pupil successively of Gillag, Massard, Leonard, and Marsick, and played second violin in a quartet with Sivori as leader. Among his various appointments were those of leader of the Concerthaus Orchestra at Berlin, and of the Concertgebouw Orchestra at Amsterdam, joint Principal of a Music School at Belfast, and professor of the violin at Rotterdam Conservatoire. With A. B. H. Verhey and Isaac Mossel he started the Rotterdam Trio, and was associated with Verhey in promoting and giving concerts in Holland and other countries. On the outbreak of the war he went to America, and was professor of the violin at the Minneapolis Conservatoire, and leader of the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra.

Carlo Albanesi, on September 29, at his London residence. He was born in 1857, at Naples, and received his early training in Italy. In 1878 he went to Paris as a recitalist. Four years later he was settled in London, and in 1893 he was appointed professor of the pianoforte at the Royal Academy of Music in the place of the late Thomas Wingham. He won wide recognition as a pianist and teacher of outstanding quality. He was also a successful composer for his instrument. Among other numerous positions he held was that of pianoforte examiner at the Dublin Royal Academy of Music, and his distinctions included the order of Chevalier of the Crown of Italy. His widow is Madame Albanesi, the well-known novelist, and one of his two daughters was the gifted young actress, Meggie Albanesi, who died in 1923.

Harry Warner Hollis, at Hampstead, on September 19. He was born on May 1, 1862, and his musical career began at St. Paul's Cathedral, where he was a choir-boy during Stainer's régime. As one of the original members of the London Symphony Orchestra, he was a familiar figure to concert audiences; and he also held the post of flautist to the Sovereign since his appointment to that position by Queen Victoria in 1897. He was a highly-esteemed teacher, being professor of his instrument at Westminster and Mill Hill Schools. His last professional appearance was at the recent Worcester Festival.

Hans Wessely, at Innsbruck, aged sixty-three. Born at Vienna, on December 23, 1862, he began his study of the violin when nine years old, and shortly afterwards entered the Vienna Conservatorium, making a successful début in his native city at the age of twenty-one. After touring Europe he settled in England in 1888, being appointed to the teaching staff of the Royal Academy of Music in 1889, and later holding until his death the post of chief professor of the violin. He was a distinguished chamber music leader, and the quartet that bore his name was of high repute.

Mathilde Bauermeister, at Herne Bay, aged seventy-seven. Though born at Hamburg, she spent most of her life in this country. She was for about forty years a familiar and popular figure in grand opera, touring the United States sixteen times. Her farewell appearance was at Covent Garden, in 1905, at a matinée organized by Dame Nellie Melba, who was a close friend.

William Mann Dyson, at Worcester. He was born at Huddersfield, and was appointed principal tenor at Worcester Cathedral in 1865. Although he had reached the great age of eighty-five, Mr. Dyson was remarkably active, and carrying out his duties until a few months ago, when he met with an accident.

Miscellaneous

We are sorry to hear that the Chamber Music Club is having a struggle, owing (presumably) to wireless and other counter-attractions. The Club meets at Lindsey Hall, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, on alternate Tuesday evenings, from November 2. There are eight meetings, and among the performers are the Withers Pianoforte Quartet, the Grimson String Quartet, the Spencer Dyke Quartet, and a fine array of soloists. The works down for performance include Quintets by Elgar, Glazounov, Stanford, Frank Bridge, Quartets by Beethoven, Dvorák, Debussy, Elgar, Frank Bridge, &c. There will also be played the Beethoven and Schubert Septets, and the latter's Octet. More members are needed. Particulars from the president and hon. secretary, Mr. Paget Bowman, 46, Elm Park Road, Chelsea, S.W.3.

At the recent celebrations at Assisi commemorating the sept-centenary of St. Francis (il poverello), one of the outstanding features—from a musical point of view—was the performance, by a picked choir of two hundred, of an oratorio composed by the gifted cleric-composer, Dom Licineo Refice, professor in the Pontifical School of Music, Rome, whose previous oratorios, 'Maria Maddalene' (1917), and 'Sant' Agnese' (1919), met with considerable success. His new oratorio is based on the life of St. Francis, and is a work of rare charm. It was performed for three nights in the Cathedral of San Rufino, and was vociferously received by the Italian press and public.

The problems of our present-day music are problems of tonality. There is no essential difference between the melody of Schönberg and that of the official Wagner epigones; the melodic passages of Hans Sommer are more expressive than those of the composer of the 'Gurrelieder,' but it is a gradual difference. Equally there is little essential difference between the structure of Stravinsky's 'Le Sacre du Printemps' and the 'Coppélia' Ballet of Délibes. And who would dare maintain that Honegger, in his 'Pacific 231,' goes further rhythmically than the seventh of Beethoven?—(Willem Pijper, in 'Tonality Problems,' in De Muziek, October, 1926.)

The fifty-third session of the Musical Association will open on November 2 with a paper by Mr. Arthur A. Pearson on 'European Balladry,' with illustrations. Anyone interested should write to Mr. J. Percy Baker, 12, Longley Road, S.W.17, who will also furnish particulars of the other arrangements, which include papers on 'Broadcasting,' by Captain Eckersley and Mr. P. A. Scholes; on 'Sir Charles Stanford,' by Mr. Thomas F. Dunhill; on 'The Eton MS.,' by Dom Anselm Hughes; and on 'Beethoven, 1827-1927,' by Mr. A. Brent-Smith.

Answers to Correspondents

T. H. C.—(1.) It is difficult to explain without demonstration what is meant by 'covering' the voice. The term is used to describe a readjustment of the apparatus (or change of register, or method of production) at a certain point in the singer's compass. With basses or baritones this would occur at about top C; with tenors about a fourth higher. Sometimes the voice so produced is called the 'mixed voice,' the word 'mixed' being used because some teachers hold that the result is a mixture of two registers—the lower and upper. A familiar analogy is the break in a boy's voice, and a similar change (though less pronounced) is found in women's voices. If you are a bass or a tenor, and have not yet learned to produce the top notes in this way, you should do so. The 'open tone' for high notes is not only ugly and inexpressive; it is also a strain on the vocal organs. (2.) You ask if there is any 'known liquid which would help in producing a clear voice.' There isn't; but (such is human gullibility) from time to time nostrums of this kind are advertised. In our issue of January, 1925, a contributor discussed 'Vocalax,' which claimed to impart a 'feeling of lightness in the middle'—in the middle of the voice, we hasten to add. And in her book, 'The Singer's Pilgrimage,' Madame Blanche Marchesi tells of various quack compounds, among them 'Italian Water, at five shillings a bottle,' the theory being that 'in Italy the voices are good because the water is good; so if you drink Italian water . . .' Well, there you are! 'Vocalax,' by the way, also came from Italy, and, like the water, was five shillings per bottle. Perhaps it was the same liquid, only the label being fresh.

G. H.—(1.) You ask (in fear and trembling, lest your question be thought 'too feeble') to be told the difference between a nocturne and a symphony. You don't understate the feebleness of the inquiry! But here goes: A nocturne is literally a 'night piece,' or serenade, and is therefore of an emotional character. It belongs to the shorter, lyrical forms of music. The symphony, on the other hand, is the biggest of the musical forms. It is usually written for a full orchestra (we say usually, because the term is sometimes used to describe important works for organ, or for smaller collections of instruments), and consists of at least three movements, or more often four—the first long and quick (sometimes preceded by a short, slow introduction); the second quick and light, usually called a scherzo (literally a 'jest'); the third slow, quiet, and expressive; the fourth quick, and often as long as the first, but usually lighter in style. Sometimes the order of the two middle movements is reversed. Having told you what a symphony is, we recommend you to go and hear one. (2.) The obtaining of organ practice is always a difficult problem. You had better inquire of a few friendly organists in the districts you name. We know of no public hall thereabouts with an organ.

False Relation.—Neither of the diplomas for which you contemplate sitting has much value. Like several other correspondents, you remark that these Colleges are not advertised in our journal, and you ask the reason. The answer is, that we do not believe them to be satisfactory (we use as mild a term as possible). You, and other readers who have written to us lately on this subject, should obtain a copy of 'Musical Examinations,' published a few years ago by the Musical News office. (It is apparently out of print, but a copy might be borrowed.)

G. M. B.—(1.) We have not heard of anyone so bold as to write a history of music from 1880 to 1920. Histories of music generally begin at the beginning with speculations as to the songs the Sirens sang, or at latest with Hucbald, and by the time space is exhausted, have arrived at the period at which the interest of the modern reader begins. We think you will find out all you wish to know from the 'Dictionary of Modern Music and Musicians,' edited by Eaglefield Hull (Dent). This book was a step in the right direction, inasmuch as it refrained from repeating a mass of information that was easily accessible, and concentrated on a period from about 1880 to the present day. (2.) For the history of English folk-song you cannot do better than consult 'English Folk-Song, Some Conclusions,' by Cecil Sharp (Barnicott & Pearce, Taunton; to be had from Novello).

J. E. B.—(1.) We do not, as you say, undertake to criticise compositions in this column. On the other hand, we don't say we won't, so we tell you that of the two hymn-tunes we very much prefer the common metre specimen. It is not particularly original, but it is straightforward and wholesome. The longer tune suffers from an over-use of the with which it begins. If the tune be sung to a long hymn, the insistence on this would become maddening—even to the composer, we hope. There are one or two weak progressions, but technically the writing in both tunes is good. (2.) We advise you to have no dealings with a firm of publishers making such conditions as those you mention. (3.) A book that would suit you in your present stage would be Kitson's 'Harmony' (Oxford University Press).

C. H. T.—The Fugue about which you inquire is one by Bach, from Book 3, Novello edition. It is a double fugue, or rather a fugue on two subjects, both borrowed from a Fugue of Corelli. Corelli's Fugue is thirty-nine bars long; Bach's is just over a hundred. It is evidently a fairly early work. The key is B minor, not C minor, as given in your quotation, and you are not quite correct as to the form of the lower of the two subjects.

'CARRY-ON.'—Elgar's 'Carillon' is published by Elkin, Beak Street, W. It may be had in the following forms: Orchestra with recitation (parts on hire only); orchestra without recitation; pianoforte with recitation; pianoforte without recitation; and in an organ arrangement.

TUNING (Notts.).—Good books on pianoforte and organ tuning are 'Repairing the Pianoforte' (Musical Opinion office) and 'Organs and Tuning,' Elliston (Weekes). No doubt these books will provide answers to your other questions.

C. K. LE F.—We do not know a Dorset version of the folk-song 'Sheep Shearing.' No doubt Mr. John Goss, whom you have heard sing it, will tell you where a copy can be obtained.

AMATEUR PIANIST.—'Pianoforte Accompaniment,' Welton Hickin (Novello). See also the series of articles by Hubert J. Foss, in the Musical Times for November and December, 1924.

Too late, or held over till next month: 'Spohr,' 'W. E.,' 'Supertonic Seventh,' 'Notation,' 'D. H. A.,' 'R. H.,' and 'Ambitious.'

SPECIAL NOTICE.

To insure insertion in their proper positions, Advertisements for the next issue should reach the Office, 160, Wardour Street, London, W.1, not later than FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 19 (FIRST POST).

CONTENTS.

	PAGE.
The Spirit of Singing: A Study in Ideals. By Erik Brewerton	977
The Spectrum of Music. By Alexander Brent-Smith	980
New Light on the Scarlatti Family. By Edward J. Dent	982
Pedantry in Examinations. By Julius Harrison	984
Ad Libitum. By 'Feste'	985
Dr. Blow's Church Music. By Heathcote D. Statham	988
The English Abroad. By Jeffrey Pulver (concluded)	990
Scriabin: A Comment. By Robert T. Hull	993
New Light on Late Tudor Composers. XXII. William Byrd. By W. H. Grattan Flood	994
Music in the Foreign Press. By M.-D. Calvorcoressi	995
Colour-Music: An Early Experiment. By W. G. Badger	995
On Simplicity in Music. By Robert T. Hull	996
Commercial Orchestration. By S. W. Oliphant Chuckerbutty	997
'Tongueing' on Wind Instruments. By Maurice E. Whittaker	998
The Tour of the Märkische Spielgemeinde through the South of England. By Rolf Gardiner	999
Points from Lectures	1001
New Music	1002
Occasional Notes	1007
Gramophone Notes. By 'Discus'	1014
Player-Piano Notes	1017
Wireless Notes. By 'Ariel'	1017
Church and Organ Music	1018
Royal College of Organists	1018
Liverpool Cathedral Organ Dedication. By W. A. Roberts	1018
Letters to the Editor	1021
The Amateurs' Exchange	1022
Sharps and Flats	1023
Royal Academy of Music	1023
Trinity College of Music	1023
Royal College of Music	1023
Choral Society Programmes	1024
London Concerts	1025
Competition Festival Record	1030
British Federation of Musical Competition Festivals: Annual Meeting and Conference	1030
Bradford Festival of Chamber Music	1032
The Märkische Spielgemeinde	1032
Music in the Provinces	1033
Music in Scotland	1033
Music in Wales	1035
Music in Ireland	1036
Musical Notes from Abroad	1036
Obituary	1037
Miscellaneous	1038
Answers to Correspondents	1038
MUSIC.
'Like apple-blossom, white and red.' Four-part Song. By C. H. Lloyd	1009

TWO EXTRA SUPPLEMENTS given with this number:
(1.) 'There were shepherds.' Anthem for Christmas. By H. W. Jones.
(2.) 'Hush! for amid our tears.' Hymn for an Armistice (or Memorial) Service. By H. A. Chambers.

DURING THE LAST MONTH.

Published by NOVELLO & CO., LIMITED.

BOOTH, T.—"The day was done." Part-song for Mixed Voices. 3d.

GERMAN, EDWARD.—"London Town." Song in the Key of C. 2s.

HOLLINS, ALFRED.—Concert Toccata in B flat, for the Organ. (Original Compositions for the Organ (New Series), No. 106.) 3s.

JONES, H. W.—"There were shepherds." Anthem for Christmas. (No. 1143, Novello's 8vo Anthems.) 4d.

LLOYD, C. H.—"Like apple-blossom, white and red." Part-Song. Arranged for Mixed Voices. (No. 1005, The Musical Times.) 2d.

MILLER, G.—"Mary, Maiden-Mother." Carol. 1½d.

SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW, No. 413, contains the following music in both notations:—"The Fairy Queen" and "The Little Flute." Unison Songs by Bernard Johnson. 2d.

SCHOOL SONGS.—Published in two forms. A. Voice Parts in Staff and Tonic Sol-fa Notations, with Pianoforte Accompaniment (8vo). B. Voice Parts only, in Tonic Sol-fa Notation.

1190.	"The Policeman." A Fox-Trot.	ALEC ROWLEY	3d.	—
1471.	"Sailing." Unison Song	ALEC ROWLEY	2d.	—
1438.	"Cherry Ripe." Arr. as a Two-part Song	C. E. HORN	—	2d.
1458.	"He that hath a pleasant face." Arr. for S.S.A.	J. L. HATTON	—	2d.

DURING THE LAST MONTH.—(Continued).

SHARP, CECIL J.—The English Country Dance. Graded Series. Containing description of Dances, together with Tunes. 4 Volumes, 3s. each. For Contents, see page 1051.

THOMAS, G.—Vesper Hymn, "Now the Evening Shadows Gather." 2d.

TONIC SOL-FA SERIES:

No. 2516. "I saw the Lord." Anthem. CUTHBERT HARRIS. 3d.
2517. "How far is it to Bethlehem?" Arr. for S.S.A. by GEOFFREY SHAW. 2d.
2518. "The Bonnie Banks of Loch Lomond." Arr. for T.T.B.B. by JOHN E. WEST. 3d.
2519. "Who Rides for the King?" Arr. for T.T.B.B. by REGINALD SOMERVILLE. 3d.
2520. "That very Wise Man." C. H. H. PARRY. Arr. for Mixed Voices 2d.
2521. "Better music ne'er was known." Part-song for Mixed Voices by C. H. H. PARRY. 3d.
2523. "Grant us Thy peace." Anthem. G. BULLIVANT 3d.

TOWNEND, REV. D. A.—Belbrough Church Music. Hymn, Kyrie, Gloria, and Three-fold Amen. 1d.

PUBLISHED FOR
THE H. W. GRAY CO., NEW YORK.

BALDWIN, R. L.—"Spring is here again." Song for High Voice. 50 cents (2s.).

BANKS, C. C.—Prelude for Organ.

BARNES, E. S.—Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in E. (S.S.A.A.) 20 cents (10d.).

CHADWICK, G. W.—"In Tadaussac Church. For Organ.

HELD, PAUL.—"Indian Flute." For Organ.

KNIGHT, G. H.—"A Bell." (For Christmas.) Mixed Voices. 12 cents (6d.).

LANGLOIS, H. G.—"Holy Lord God Almighty." Motet. For Mixed Voices. 10 cents (6d.).

LESHURE, J.—"The Choral Host." Christmas Anthem. Mixed Voices. 15 cents (8d.).

MACKINNON, H. A.—"O Scholars and Sages." Christmas Carol. Mixed Voices. 10 cents (6d.).
—— "Where go ye?" Christmas Anthem. Mixed Voices. 20 cents (10d.).

RICHARDS, G. D. — "Holy Child." Lullaby. Christmas Carol. Mixed Voices. 10 cents (6d.).

TILY, H. J.—"Calm on the list'ning ear of night." Christmas Anthem. Mixed Voices. 15 cents (8d.).

VORIS, W. R.—"A Great and Mighty Wonder." Christmas Carol. Mixed Voices. 12 cents (6d.).
—— "When Christ was born," Christmas Madrigal. Mixed Voices. 12 cents (6d.).

WEBBE, W. Y.—"O Wondrous Mystery." Christmas Anthem. Mixed Voices. 12 cents (6d.).

WOOD, C. P.—Canzonetta. For Organ.

EVELYNE KING (L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.)
CONTRALTO.
All Modern and Standard Works.
BACH a speciality.
Works prepared at very short notice,
Also Dinners, Concerts, At Homes, &c.
Vacancies for Pupils in Voice-Production and Singing.
Studios at Berners Street, W.1.
Apply, 117, HAMPSTEAD WAY, N.W.11.
'Phone: Speedwell 2209.

MARGARET KEENE (SOPRANO)
Available for ORATORIOS, ORGAN RECITALS, CONCERTS.
9, Culworth Street, St. John's Wood, N.W.8.

ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER WANTED for Mansford Street (Unitarian) Mission, Bethnal Green. Evening service only; Thursday practice. £20 per annum. Test at Notting Hill Gate, 6th November. Full details to Alfred R. Stock, F.R.C.O., 8, Crondace Road, S.W.6.

VIOLA.—At liberty for Orchestral and Operatic Societies, &c.; 20 years' experience. "B. V.," 3 Brandram Road, S.E.13.

ST. JOHN'S WOOD PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH,
MARLBOROUGH PLACE, ABBEY ROAD, N.W.8.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 20th, at 5.30 p.m.
THE SECOND OF A SERIES OF
FIVE ORGAN RECITALS
BY MR. W. IRWIN-HUNT
Organist and Master of the Music of the Church.

PROGRAMME.

I.

Prelude and Fugue, D major	Bach
Scherzo, Fourth Symphony	Widor
Carillon	Vierne

II.

(a) Impromptu, F major	Coleridge-Taylor
(b) Minuet, G major	Beethoven
(c) Walzer, A major	Brahms
Overture, "Tannhäuser"	Wagner

NOVELLO'S
ELEMENTARY MUSIC MANUALS

No.
1.—PART-WRITING FOR BEGINNERS, by J. W. IVIMEY. The Rules tabulated are for the guidance of beginners in the Art of Part-writing. Many of them change from rules to recommendations, when the students become more advanced. Bound in linen covers. Price 8d.
2.—LESSONS IN HARMONIZING MELODIES, by CUTHBERT HARRIS. Many elementary students of harmony can satisfactorily add parts to figured basses, but are unable to harmonize even simple melodies. This book gives minute instruction which any student can understand. Part I. Price 2s. 6d.
3.—AN ELEMENTARY MIXED-VOICE SIGHT-SINGING COURSE (Staff Notation through Tonic Sol-fa), by GEORGE LANE. The Exercises are written in the Treble and Bass Clefs, in order that the Book may be used by Male and Female voices in one class. Suitable for Evening Continuation Schools. Part I. Price 8d.
4.—AN ELEMENTARY MIXED-VOICE SIGHT-SINGING COURSE (Staff Notation through Tonic Sol-fa) by GEORGE LANE. Part II. Price 8d.
5.—HINTS TO YOUNG VIOLINISTS, by C. EGERTON LOWE. Price 1s. 6d.
6.—LESSONS IN HARMONIZING MELODIES, by CUTHBERT HARRIS. Part II. Price 2s. 6d.
7.—ADDITIONAL EXERCISES IN HARMONIZING MELODIES, by CUTHBERT HARRIS. Price 8d.
8.—HINTS ON PIANOFORTE TEACHING (chiefly to Boys), by E. D. RENDALL. Price 2s. 6d.
9.—SCHOOL CHOIR TRAINING, by MARGARET NICHOLLS. A Practical Course of Lessons on Voice Production for the guidance of Teachers of Class Singing. Price 3s.
(The Appendix, published separately: Hints on Part-Singing and Exercises, 3d.; Sol-fa, 3d.)
10.—THE COMPOSITION OF SIMPLE MELODIES, by ROBERT T. WHITE. Price 2s. 6d.
11.—PHYSICAL EXERCISES IN THE INFANT SCHOOL, by MARGATET A. HUGHES. Price 4s. 6d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

BLÜTHNER (Upright Grand) FOR SALE.—Practically new. Beautiful tone. £120. Write, Goodman, 39, Nevis Road, Balham, S.W.17.

ON SALE.—Orchestral Music; Band parts and score, "Messiah"; Grove's Dictionary, 5 vols. Fletcher, 6, Brown Street, Manchester.

FOR SALE.—GENUINE BRINSMEAD Upright Grand Player Pianoforte, Higel 88-note action. Transposer. As new. £150. Palmer, 33, Minster Road, Oxford.

ORGAN PEDALS (Norman & Beard) attached to Bechstein Pianoforte.—FOR SALE. With or without the pianoforte. In perfect order. Apply, "W. G.." 536, West Green Road, Tottenham, N.15.

BRILLIANT CONCERT PIANIST, from the Royal Albert Hall, Æolian Hall, &c. (late pupil of world-famous pianist), offers Pianoforte Tuition at Half Fees to the most talented and promising applicants (irrespective of age). Kindly address all inquiries to "E. P.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1, not later than November 25th.

MUSIC COPIED, TRANSPOSED, &c., by experienced musician. Moderate charges. Neat work. "A.R.C.O.," 154, Ramsden Road, Balham, S.W.12.

MUSIC COPYING.—Transpositions, Band Parts, Arrangements. Smith, 40, Coniston Rd., Muswell Hill, N.10.

DR. E. T. SWEETING: (Address) Rydal Lemsford Road, St. Albans. Tel.: St. Albans 989.

MOWBRAY'S CAROL BOOKS.

"These two collections contain a vast mine of artistic wealth with never a lapse into bad taste or mediocrity."—Mr. Francis Burgess in the Green Quarterly.

THE COWLEY CAROL BOOK

For Christmas, Easter, and Ascensiontide.

FIRST SERIES.

COMPILED AND ARRANGED BY

THE REV. GEORGE R. WOODWARD, MUS. DOC.,

Music and Words, Paper, 2*s.*; Cloth, 3*s.* 6*d.*

SECOND SERIES.

COMPILED BY

THE REV. GEORGE R. WOODWARD, MUS. DOC.

and DR. CHARLES WOOD

Music and Words, Paper, 2*s.*; Cloth, 3*s.* 6*d.*

Words only, First and Second Series, complete, 3*d.*

"A perfect treasure house of ancient song."—Church Times.

THE ENGLISH CAROL BOOK

MUSIC EDITED BY

MARTIN SHAW

WORDS EDITED BY

THE REV. PERCY DEARMER, D.D.

FIRST SERIES.

Music and Words, Paper, 2*s.* 6*d.*; Cloth, 3*s.* 6*d.*

SECOND SERIES.

Music and Words, Paper, 2*s.* 6*d.*; Cloth, 3*s.* 6*d.*

Words only, First and Second Series, complete, 3*d.*

"Dr. Dearmer's book is essentially a popular collection in the sense that it gives us the words and sometimes the music which were on the lips of the people at the time of the carol's most robust health."—The Times.

Certain Carols from these books are published separately, with music, 1½d. each.

A. A. MOWBRAY & Co., Ltd.,

28, Margaret Street, Oxford Circus, London, W.1.; and 9, High Street, Oxford.

POPULAR CHURCH COMPOSITIONS

By H. MORETON, Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O.

Organist, &c., Plymouth Parish Church (St. Andrew's).

Used in over 1,000 Churches at home and abroad.

PRECES AND RESPONSES ... ... 33rd thousand 3d.

TE DEUM IN D. For Choir and Congregation ... ... 3d.

Sung at Exeter Diocesan Choral Festival, 1913.

BENEDICITE OMNIA OPERA, IN E FLAT ... ... 2d.

"GOD IS A SPIRIT" (two Settings). For use at the commencement of each Service ... ... 3d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

THE UNKNOWN TRUTH ABOUT THE VOICE AND ITS DEVELOPMENT. By E. DAVIDSON PALMER, Mus. Bac., Oxon. Showing the prevailing Error in the Training of Men's Voices, and the primary cause of Voice-Failure in Singers and Public Speakers. Price 1*s.*, post free, from the Author, 11, Grazebrook Road, Stoke Newington, N.16.

A.R.C.O. Exam. Series of Articles and General Hints for Organ and Paper Work Tests. Complete, 10*s.* 6*d.*, post free. "A.R.C.O.," 154, Ramsden Road, Balham, S.W.12.

F

The Modern Substitute for the Old-Fashioned Tutor

"Progressive Steps" embodies the best modern ideas of piano-teaching. The interest of the child in music is established on a sound and lasting basis, because the ear, mind and fingers are developed simultaneously. The child's first indelible impressions of music thus become truly happy, and his memory is trained to cherish each pleasant experience.

PROGRESSIVE STEPS

THE MODERN INSTRUCTOR FOR THE PIANO.

By J. A. O'NEILL.

English or Continental Fingering. In two books.

PRICE 2*s.* NET EACH.

Ask your Music Seller to show you Copies of "Progressive Steps," as well as Copies of the Rowland Series of Piano Albums. Copies may be also obtained on approval from the publishers. A Thematic List of the Albums, and descriptive leaflet regarding "Progressive Steps," sent free on request.

ROWLAND'S,

10, TALBOT MANSIONS, MUSEUM STREET, LONDON, W.C.1.

CAROLS BY JOSEPH C. BRIDGE.

M.A., D. Mus. Oxon. et Dunelm.; F.S.A.; Chairman of the Board of Trinity College, London: Professor of Music in the University of Durham.

1. ON CHRISTMAS NIGHT ... ... 3d.
2. AWAY WITH GRIEF ... ... 3d.
3. THE MERRY CHRISTMAS MORN ... ... 3d.
4. HOLY NIGHT ... ... 2d.
5. AWAKE THE VOICE (S.S.A. only) ... ... 4d.
6. CHRISTMAS IN THE FIELDS (Béarnais Melody) ... 2d.
7. WHEN CHRIST WAS BORN (Chester Mystery Play) 3d.
8. REJOICE WITH HEART AND VOICE (Old French Melody) ... ... 2d.
9. THE SHEPHERDS' CAROL (Coventry Mystery Play) 2d.
10. LULLABY (Coventry Mystery Play) ... ... 2d.
11. ACROSS THE SNOW ... ... 2d.
12. THE SHEPHERDS HAD AN ANGEL (S.S. only) ... 2d.
13. ON BETHLEHEM'S HILL ... ... 3d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

CAROLS FOR CHRISTMAS

BY

W. D. V. DUNCOMBE.

One Series of Ten, and one Series of twelve, 2*s.* each.
Separate numbers, 3*d.* each.
Original and Traditional Melodies.

ST. STEPHEN'S DAY.
"Head of the Church triumphant."
"Prince of Martyrs."

ST. JOHN'S DAY.
"Teach us by His example."

HOLY INNOCENTS.
"Blest little Martyrs."

CIRCUMCISION.
"Eight days amidst this world of woe."

PURIFICATION.
"Who is this from Bethlehem coming?"
"Hail to the Lord Who comes."

WEEKES & Co., 14, HANOVER STREET, W.1.

CANTATAS FOR CHRISTMAS

THE HOLY CHILD

FOR SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BASS SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORGAN

THE MUSIC BY

T. ADAMS.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence;
Tonic Sol-fa, Eightpence.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

THE NATIVITY

FOR SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BASS SOLI AND CHORUS

With Hymns to be sung by the Congregation
(THE WORDS AND HYMNS SELECTED)

THE MUSIC BY

T. ADAMS.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence;
Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

†CHRISTMAS ORATORIO

THE MUSIC BY

J. S. BACH.

Divided into six sections, intended originally for separate performance on the three days of Christmas, New Year's Day, New Year's Sunday, and the Festival of the Epiphany.

Price, Paper Cover, Three Shillings.
Boards, 4s.; Cloth, 6s.
Vocal Parts, One Shilling and Sixpence each.
Parts 1 and 2, 1s. 6d.; Parts 3 and 4, 1s. 6d.
Parts 5 and 6, 1s. 6d.
Tonic Sol-fa (Parts 1 and 2), 8d.
Book of Words, complete (per 100), 12s. 6d.
Books of Words, Parts 1 and 2 (per 100), 6s. 6d.

†CHRISTIANS, GRAVE YE THIS GLAD DAY

(CHRISTEN ÄTZET DIESEN TAG!)

A Christmas-Day Cantata (S.A.T.B. Soli)

Edited by J. E. WEST. English Words by C. AVELING.

THE MUSIC BY

J. S. BACH.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

†BEFORE THE PALING OF THE STARS

A CHRISTMAS HYMN

(FOR VOICES AND ORCHESTRA)

THE WORDS BY

C. ROSSETTI.

THE MUSIC BY

B. J. DALE.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.
Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling.

THE COMING OF THE KING

CANTATA FOR FEMALE VOICES

THE WORDS BY

H. M. BURNSIDE.

THE MUSIC BY

M. B. FOSTER.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence;
Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling.
Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.

†CHRISTMAS EVE

FOR CONTRALTO SOLO, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

THE MUSIC BY

N. W. GADE.

Price, Paper Cover, One Shilling and Sixpence.
Boards, Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Tonic Sol-fa, Sixpence.

CHRISTMAS CANTATA

FOR SOLI AND CHORUS

THE WORDS BY

R. D. BETJEMANN.

THE MUSIC BY

J. HARRISON.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.
Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.

†FIRST CHRISTMAS MORN

THE WORDS BY

S. J. STONE.

THE MUSIC BY

H. LESLIE.

Price, Vocal Score, Four Shillings.
Vocal Parts, Eightpence each.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

BETHLEHEM

FOR FOUR SOLO VOICES AND CHORUS

Interspersed with Hymns to be sung by the Congregation.

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND ARRANGED BY

E. C. NUNN.

THE MUSIC BY

J. H. MAUNDER.

Price Three Shillings;
Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling and Sixpence.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

†THE STORY OF BETHLEHEM

FOR SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BASS SOLI, CHORUS AND ORGAN

THE WORDS BY

S. WENSLEY.

THE MUSIC BY

J. E. WEST.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence;
Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

† Full Score and Orchestral Parts may be had.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

ANTHEMS, &c., FOR CHRISTMAS.

JUST PUBLISHED.

H. W. JONES.

THERE WERE SHEPHERDS.

Price Fourpence.

RECENTLY PUBLISHED.

P. E. FLETCHER.

NOW ONCE AGAIN

CAROL-ANTHEM.

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.
Ditto, Female Voices, Fourpence.

G. RATHBONE.

AND WE BEHELD HIS GLORY

Price Fourpence: Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

SELECTED LIST.

A. ADAM.

O HOLY NIGHT

ARRANGED AS ANTHEM FOR SOPRANO (OR TENOR) SOLO AND CHORUS.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

T. ADAMS.

ARISE, SHINE, O JERUSALEM

Price Fourpence'; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

T. ADAMS.

THOU ART MY SON

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

W. G. ALCOCK.

BREAK FORTH INTO JOY

Price Fourpence.

E. C. BAIRSTOW.

OF THE FATHER'S LOVE BEGOTTEN

Price Fourpence.

C. BAYLEY.

GLORY TO GOD IN THE HIGHEST

Price Twopence: Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

J. F. BRIDGE.

IN THAT DAY

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

E. BUNNETT.

ARISE, SHINE, FOR THY LIGHT IS COME

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

E. BUNNETT.

BEHOLD, I BRING YOU GOOD TIDINGS

Price Threepence.

E. BUNNETT.

IN THE BEGINNING WAS THE WORD

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

H. A. CHAMBERS.

ARISE, SHINE, FOR THY LIGHT IS COME

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

P. E. FLETCHER.

RING OUT, WILD BELLS

FESTIVAL CAROL

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Fourpence.
Ditto, T.T.B.B., Fourpence; Tonic Sol fa, Fourpence.
Ditto, S.S.A., Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.
Ditto, S.A., Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

M. B. FOSTER.

CHRIST'S INCARNATION

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

CH. GOUNOD.

NAZARETH

ARRANGED FOR BARITONE SOLO AND CHORUS.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

E. V. HALL.

WHILE SHEPHERDS WATCHED

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

A. HOLLINS.

SING, O HEAVENS

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

C. H. LLOYD.

REJOICE GREATLY, O DAUGHTER OF ZION

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

A. W. MARCHANT.

O COME, REDEEMER OF MANKIND

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

J. H. MAUNDER.

SING, O HEAVENS

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

G. SHAW.

HOW FAR IS IT TO BETHLEHEM

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.
Ditto, Unison Setting, Twopence.
Ditto, S.S.C., Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

C. V. STANFORD.

WHILE SHEPHERDS WATCHED

Price Fourpence.

B. STEANE.

LET US NOW GO EVEN UNTO BETHLEHEM

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

B. STEANE.

SING, O HEAVENS

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

A. S. SULLIVAN.

SING, O HEAVENS

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

J. E. WEST.

A SONG OF JOY

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

A. W. WILSON.

WITH ALL THY HOSTS

Price Twopence.

LONDON: NOVELLO & COMPANY, LIMITED.

THE BEST BOOKS OF

CHRISTMAS CAROLS

Paper bound, 2*s.* each book. Cloth gilt, 3*s.* 6*d.* net.
Outline of Carol Lecture, 6*d.* net.

DR. RALPH DUNSTAN'S FIRST BOOK OF

CHRISTMAS CAROLS

Containing 58 English, Welsh, Scotch, Irish, Latin, German, French, Swedish, and Traditional Carols.

DR. RALPH DUNSTAN'S SECOND BOOK OF

CHRISTMAS CAROLS

ANCIENT CHRISTMAS HYMNS.

Veni Redemptor Gentium	4th Cent.
Jesu Redemptor Omnium	5th Cent. (?)
A Solis Ortus Cardine	5th Cent.

ANCIENT ENGLISH and TUDOR CAROLS.

Mater Salutaris	13th Cent.
Alma Redemptoris Mater	15th Cent.
I Sing of a Maiden	15th Cent.
The Chester Carol	15th Cent.
The Salutation of the Angel Gabriel	15th Cent.
So Blessed be the Time	15th Cent.
Be Merry, Be Merry	15th Cent.
Out of the Blossom Sprang a Thorn	15th Cent.
Regina Coeli, Letare	15th Cent.
Man, Be Merry, as Bird on Berry	15th Cent.
My Love that Mourns for Me	16th Cent.
Nowell, Nowell	16th Cent.
Jesu Fili Virginis	16th Cent.
A Little Child there is Yborn	16th Cent.
In this Time our God hath sent	16th Cent.
Out of the Orient Crystal Skies	17th Cent.
So Blest a Sight	16th Cent.
Querister's Song of Yorke	c. 1600.
Come, Love we God	c. 1600.

IRISH CAROLS.

Good People all	c 1680
Christmas Day Carol	c. 1680
A Virgin Most Pure	Traditional
The Seven Joys of Mary	Traditional

SCOTTISH CAROL.

Let us Rejoice and Sing	1567

FRENCH NOELS with ENGLISH WORDS.

Whence Appear these Shepherds Gay?	16th Cent.
Une Crèche de Noel	Traditional
Ou s'en vont, &c.	16th Cent.
Grand Concours, &c.	1701
Chantons Noel	Traditional
Allegresse à la, &c.	Traditional
As Joseph was a-Walking	Traditional
In Slumber Rest	Traditional
It was the Hour of Quiet Night	Traditional

GERMAN CAROLS and BACH SETTINGS.

How Brightly Beams the Morning Star.
All my Heart this Night Rejoices,
To us a Child is Born.
The Moon's Pale Beams are Shining.
Let all with Gladsome Voice.

TRADITIONAL CAROLS.

The Lord at First had Adam made.
God's Dear Son.
The Worcestershire Carol.
A Virgin Most Pure (II.)
All Bells in Paradise.
Hark from the Clouds.
The Prince of Life.
While Shepherds Watch'd	Sheffield
While Shepherds Watch'd	Old Proper Tune
While Shepherds Watch'd	W. of England
While Shepherds Watch'd	From MS.
The Splendour	From MS.
Righteous Joseph (I.)
Righteous Joseph (II.)
Sound, Sound your Instruments of Joy	Yorkshire
The Gooding Carol	Yorkshire
The Advent Images Carol	Yorkshire
The Vessel-Cup Carol	Yorkshire
The Yorkshire Wassail Song
Welcome, Yule!
The Withy Carol. The Holy Well
Carol of the Twelve Days
The Holly and the Ivy (Melody by King Henry VIII.).
Now the Holly Bears a Berry (Saint Day Carol).

THE CHRISTMAS BELLS.

I Heard the Bells on Christmas Day.

REID BROS., LTD.,
26, EASTCASTLE STREET, LONDON, W.1.

"Such settings as these cannot do otherwise than tend to popularise the Church Service."—Musical Standard, June 6, 1891.
"Good, effective, easy, and dignified."—Musical Times, April 1, 1891.
"Admirably adapted to meet the requirements of the majority of choirs and congregations." "Deserve extensive recognition and use."—Musical News, September 4 and 25, 1891.
Also recommended by the Guardian, Church Times, &c., &c.

POPULAR CHURCH MUSIC

BY

J. H. MAUNDER

	Staff Notation.	Tonic Sol-fa.
CHRISTMAS ANTHEMS.
Anthem—Christians, Awake	4d.	3d.
Carol—Once in Bethlehem	3d.	2d.
Two Christmas Carols	4d.	3d.
SERVICES
SERVICE IN G	2s.	1s. 4d.
Or, separately:—
Te Deum	4d.	3d.
Benedicite, omnia Opera	3d.	3d.
Benedictus	3d.	3d.
Jubilate	4d.	3d.
Office for the Holy Communion	10d.	8d.
Pater Noster from the above	3d.	3d.
Amen ditto	1½d.	1½d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis	4d.	3d.
SERVICE IN CHANT FORM (No. 1)	1s. 4d.	10d.
Or, separately:—
Te Deum, &c., with Kyrie	4d.	3d.
Office for the Holy Communion	8d.	6d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis	4d.	3d.
Te Deum in B flat	4d.	3d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in C (partly Unison)	4d.	2d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in D	4d.	3d.
ORGAN.
Voix Seraphique (for Recitals)	2s. 6d.	—
CHURCH CANTATA.
Penitence, Pardon, and Peace (for general use)	2s.	1s. 4d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

POPULAR CHRISTMAS ANTHEMS

COMPOSED BY EDWYN A. CLARE.

*BEHOLD, I BRING	33rd 1000	4d.
*SING, O HEAVENS	23rd 1000	4d.
*CHOIRS OF ANGELS	12th 1000	4d.
*GOODWILL TO MEN	21st 1000	4d.
*WE HAVE SEEN HIS STAR	24th 1000	4d.
*BLESSED BE THE KING	8th 1000	4d.
A SAVIOUR, CHRIST THE LORD	7th 1000	4d.
THE PRINCE OF PEACE	20th 1000	4d.
FAVOURITE MAGNIFICAT AND NUNC DIMITTIS IN D	31st 1000	6d.

Full of flowing melody and effect. Sung at a Choir Festival.

*Those marked * may also be had in Tonic Sol-fa.*

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.
New York: THE H. W. GRAY CO., Sole Agents for the U.S.A.

OVER EIGHT MILLION COPIES OF CALEB SIMPER'S Compositions in Church Music now sold.

NEW CHRISTMAS ANTHEMS, Etc.

COMPOSED BY CALEB SIMPER.

*WITH ANGELS SING. Just Published. 4d.
Melodious and expressive Solo. Irresistible Choruses with running parts which will delight the singers.

*GLORY SHONE AROUND	8th Edit.	4d.
*PEACE AND GOODWILL	11th Edit.	4d.
*A SON IS GIVEN	10th Edit.	4d.
*THE PRINCE OF PEACE	6th Edit.	4d.
*AND ON EARTH PEACE	6th Edit.	4d.

NEW CAROLS.

*THE SONG OF LOVE. *STAR OF THE MORNING	each 1½d.
*O SOFTLY TREAD. *JOYFUL CAROLS SINGING	each 1½d.
*HEARKEN TO THE CHRISTMAS BELLS	1½d.
*LET BELLS OF NOËL RING	1½d.
*GOODWILL AND PEACE. *O CAROL EXULTANT	each 1½d.
GOD IS OUR REFUGE	9th Edit. 8d.

Short Work. Solos and Choruses. Occupies about 18 minutes.
Very Popular Voluntary Books, 2s. each. Nearly 200,000 sold.
Recent Nos., Books 11 and 12. Seventeen Pieces in each, written on Two Staves with Pedal-part indicated.

*Those marked * are also issued in Tonic Sol-fa.*

London: A. WEEKES & Co., 14, Hanover Street, Regent Street, W.1.
Chicago, U.S.A.: CLAYTON F. SUMMY CO., 429, S. Wabash Ave.

OXFORD BULLETIN OF OCTOBER MUSIC

Books on Music.
'The English Ayre' (World's Manuals Series). By PETER WARLOCK. 3s. 6d. net.
'The New Music.' By GEORGE DYSON (Second Edition). 8s. 6d. net.

Orchestral Scores.
'Norfolk Rhapsody, No. 1.' By R. VAUGHAN WILLIAMS. Full Score, 21s. Parts, 4d., 6d., and 9d. each.
'In the Mountain Country.' For Orchestra. By E. J. MOERAN. Full Score, 10s. 6d. Parts, 4d. and 6d. each.

Oxford Orchestral Series.
Edited by W. G. WHITTAKER.
No. 023. Sinfonias to Church Cantatas. Nos. 150 and 196 (Bach). Arranged by W. G. WHITTAKER. Score, 3s. Parts, 4d.
No. 024. Concerto from Church Cantata, No. 142 (Bach). Arranged by W. G. WHITTAKER. Score, 3s. Parts, 4d.

Concerto in one movement. For Viola and Orchestra. By GORDON JACOB. Arrangement for Viola and Piano. 7s. 6d.

Sonata for Flute and Pianoforte. By WILLEM PIJPER. 5s.

Trio for Violin, 'Cello, and Piano. By E. J. MOERAN. 10s. 6d.

Romeo and Juliet. Ballet in Two Tableaux. Music by CONSTANT LAMBERT. Choreography by NIJINSKA. Arrangement for Piano Solo by the Composer. 10s. 6d.

The Shoemaker. A Children's Christmas Opera. By ROBIN MILFORD. For Piano (or Orchestra) and Voices. 3s. 6d.

The Oxford Piano Series
Edited by A. FORBES MILNE.
No. P 46. 'Spanish Waters.' By PAUL CORDER. 3s.
No. P 48. 'Old Style Measure.' By F. PERCIVAL DRIVER. 2s.
No. P 52. 'A Graceful Waltz.' By NORMAN F. DEMUTH. 1s.
No. P 53. 'Three Dance Measures.' By F. PERCIVAL DRIVER. 2s. 6d.
No. P 54. 'Prelude No. 1.' By ROY E. AGNEW. 1s. 6d.
No. P 55. 'Prelude No. 2.' By ROY E. AGNEW. 1s. 6d.
No. P 56. 'Prelude No. 3' ('The Wind'). By ROY E. AGNEW. 2s.

Tempo di Gavotta (WILLIAM BOYCE).
Edited and arranged for Piano Solo by HAROLD CRAXTON. 2s.

Folk Dances of the World.
SCOTLAND.
1. 'Clydeside Reel.' Arranged for Piano by MARJORIE KENNEDY-FRASER. 1s. 6d.
2. 'Lowland Scots Reel' ('Jenny Nettles'). Arranged for Piano by MARJORIE KENNEDY-FRASER. 1s. 6d.
3. 'A Dance from the Scots Isles.' Arranged for Piano by MARJORIE KENNEDY-FRASER. 1s. 6d.
POLAND.
4. 'Mazurek' (Mazurka). Children's Pieces. By KAROL SZYMANOWSKI. 1s. 6d.
5. 'Krakowiak' (Cracovienne). Children's Pieces. By KAROL SZYMANOWSKI. 1s. 6d.
6. 'Oberek.' By KAROL SZYMANOWSKI. 2s.
7. 'Polonaise.' By KAROL SZYMANOWSKI. 1s. 6d.
ROUMANIA.
8. 'Two Roumanian Folk Dances.' I.—By FILIP LĂZAR. 1s.6d.
9. 'Two Roumanian Folk Dances.' II.—By FILIP LĂZAR. 1s.6d.

THE OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS

AMEN HOUSE, WARWICK SQUARE, E.C.4, AND 95, WIMPOLE STREET, W.1.

(Sole Agents in Great Britain and the Colonies for the Cotta Edition of the Classics, the Anglo-French Edition, Paterson's Publications Ltd., and the Edition of J. Schuberth & Co., Leipzig.

WRITE TO 95, WIMPOLE STREET, W.1, FOR CATALOGUES OF THESE FAMOUS EDITIONS AND FOR MUSIC ON APPROVAL.

JOSEPH WILLIAMS LIMITED

The Famous Tragedy of THE QUEEN OF CORNWALL

Play by THOMAS HARDY

Vocal Score, 12s. 6d. net
Separate chorus edition, 4s. net

Set as a music-drama by RUTLAND BOUGHTON

N.B.—This work will be presented during the month of January by the Liverpool Repertory Opera Co. in Liverpool.

AGINCOURT
A dramatic scene for male voices, solo, and chorus
Adapted from SHAKESPEARE
Music by RUTLAND BOUGHTON
Price 2s. net

THE MOON MAIDEN
A choral dance for girls
(May be used as a choral piece for female voices or staged with dancing)
Adapted from the Japanese
Music by RUTLAND BOUGHTON
Price 2s. net

MARY MAGDALEN
An oratorio (S.C.T.B.)
Words by H. S. LEIGH. Price 6s. net

EVE
A mystery in three parts (S.A.T.B.)
Words by FRANCIS HUEFFER. Price 4s. 6d. net

Both works set to music by JULES MASSENET.

THE CHILD JESUS
Mystery in five tableaux (Charles Grandmougin)
Words translated by M. C. GILLINGTON
Music by FRANCIS THOMÉ
Price 3s. 6d. net; words only, 8d. net

THE SOUL OF THE WORLD
A mystery play of the Nativity and the Passion
Written by MRS. PERCY DEARMER.
Music by MARTIN SHAW
Price 3s. 6d. net; words only, 1s. net

* Orchestral score and parts may be had on hire

32, GREAT PORTLAND STREET, LONDON, W.1.

NEW PUBLICATIONS

SELECTED LIST OF NOVELLO'S SCHOOL SONG BOOKS

Songs contained in these Books are, with a few exceptions, issued separately, at prices ranging from 2d. to 4d. each.

VERY EASY UNISON SONGS

BOOK 278.

TWELVE UNISON SONGS FOR JUNIOR CLASSES.

A MOUSE IN THE MOON	J. M. CAPEL
TREES AND FLOWERS OF MAY	GEOFFREY SHAW
DAFFIES AND TULIPS	E. BOYCE
BABY BROTHER MINE	HUNGARIAN MELODY
A CHILD'S GRACE	ROY THOMPSON
ACORN TEA	ALEC ROWLEY
THE GAS-JET	H. A. CHAMBERS
HAREBELLS	E. NEWTON
VIOLETS	G. RATHBONE
GOOD-BYE, GOOD-BYE TO SUMMER	A. RICHARDS
THE CENTIPEDE	ALEC ROWLEY
A SONG OF BOLD ROBIN HOOD	ALEC ROWLEY

PRICE 1s.

BOOK 279.

TWELVE UNISON SONGS FOR JUNIOR CLASSES.

BELLS AND SHELLS	GEOFFREY SHAW
THORN-APPLE TREE	ALEC ROWLEY
THE DREAM LADY	G. RATHBONE
PAT-A-CAKE	W. TAUBERT
THE SLEEPLESS CHILD	R. H. MACDONALD
THE HAY LOFT	R. H. MACDONALD
THE TORTOISE	E. BOYCE
THE MAN IN THE MOON	R. MCLEOD
JACKY, COME, GIVE ME THE FIDDLE	ROY THOMPSON
THE MERRY FISHERMAN	ALEC ROWLEY
SNOWDROPS	A. RICHARDS
WHEAT CRADLES	ALEC ROWLEY

PRICE 1s.

BOOK 281.

TWELVE UNISON SONGS FOR JUNIOR CLASSES.

STILTON HALL	J. M. CAPEL
WHEN MOTHER READS A FAIRY TALE	H. A. CHAMBERS
BED IN SUMMER	T. P. M. BEVAN
MASTER ASCHAM IS A GOOD MAN	ROY THOMPSON
CUCKOO CLOCK	H. E. HUNT
MY SHIP AND I	R. H. MACDONALD
A TINY CALENDAR	GEOFFREY SHAW
AN AUTUMN SONG	ALEC ROWLEY
MISTER SAILORMAN	ALEC ROWLEY
MY GARDEN FLOWERS	A. RICHARDS
LITTLE BROWN HORSE	E. BOYCE
THE COMING OF SPRING	A. RICHARDS

PRICE 1s.

BOOK 282.

TWELVE UNISON SONGS FOR JUNIOR CLASSES.

LITTLE BOY BLUE	ALLAN BIGGS
WONDERING	ALEC ROWLEY
LADYBIRD	W. TAUBERT
THE OLD WOMAN	BERNARD JOHNSON
THE LITTLE OLD MAN	BERNARD JOHNSON
THE DONKEY RIDE	PERCY BOWIE
SOLDIER LAD	RUSSIAN FOLK-SONG
MANNERS	H. A. CHAMBERS
WHAT BECAME OF THEM	A. RICHARDS
THE RAINBOW	ALEC ROWLEY
THE FAIRY WING	ALEC ROWLEY
THE STAR ELF	ALEC ROWLEY

PRICE 1s.

EASY UNISON SONGS

BOOK 285.

SEVEN EASY UNISON SONGS.

KING BRUCE AND THE SPIDER	PERCY E. FLETCHER
ALL AMONG THE BARLEY	E. STIRLING
A SAD STORY	G. RATHBONE
WHERE THE POOLS ARE BRIGHT AND DEEP	C. H. LLOYD
THE OAK AND THE STREAMLET	G. HENSCHEL
LAUGH A BIT	R. B. ELLIOTT
WINDLASS SONG	ALEC ROWLEY

PRICE 1s.

BOOK 287.

SEVEN EASY UNISON SONGS.

AS I WAS GOING TO BANBURY	ROY THOMPSON
A HILL SONG	ALEC ROWLEY
SLUMBER TOWN	COLIN TAYLOR
THE ROBIN	EDGAR L. BAINTON
LADY DAFFADOWNDILLY	EDGAR L. BAINTON
GOLDEN SLUMBERS	ROY THOMPSON
LEGEND: FAIR WAS THE GARDEN	P. TCHAIKOVSKY

PRICE 8d.

BOOK 288.

SEVEN EASY UNISON SONGS.

THE SQUIRREL	R. MCLEOD
CRADLE SONG	W. TAUBERT
TO A DAISY	W. G. DIETRICH
A FLOWER CHORUS	P. E. FLETCHER
FISHER-MAIDEN'S LULLABY	R. T. WHITE
THE SINGER IN THE NIGHT	C. SHARMAN
SWING SONG	E. MOY

PRICE 8d.

BOOK 289.

SEVEN EASY UNISON SONGS.

GOSSAMER THREADS	ALEC ROWLEY
FAIRY ECHO	R. B. ELLIOTT
WHITHER AWAY	ALEC ROWLEY
BED-TIME (LULLABY)	P. BOWIE
SPRING BELLS	R. B. ELLIOTT
SWEET AND LOW	A. RICHARDS
SWEET SCENTED HAWTHORN	E. NEWTON

PRICE 8d.

BOOK 290.

SEVEN EASY UNISON SONGS.

BALLAD OF SOL AND THE BOY	FROM THE RUSSIAN
AS I LOITERED IN THE WOOD	FRENCH NURSERY RHYME
MILK O!	FELIX WHITE
MY LAND	H. RAWLINSON
OLD FOLKS AT HOME	S. C. FOSTER
SONS OF THE ISLES	W. MCNAUGHT
THE LAND WE'LL NOT FORGET	J. C. FORRESTER

PRICE 8d.

BOOK 291.

SEVEN EASY UNISON SONGS.

SANTA CLAUS	R. MCLEOD
THE LADYBIRD IN THE FIELDS	A. RICHARDS
AN ALPHABET OF FLOWERS	E. BOYCE
QUEEN MAB	C. H. LLOYD
THROUGH LOVE TO LIGHT	A. C. MACKENZIE
WHAT DOES LITTLE BIRDIE SAY?	P. E. FLETCHER
WAKE, BIRD, AWAKE	J. C. FORRESTER

PRICE 1s.

UNISON SONGS SUITABLE FOR HIGHER DIVISIONS

BOOK 284.

SEVEN UNISON SONGS

ORPHEUS WITH HIS LUTE	A. SULLIVAN
AN EMPIRE SONG	PERCY E. FLETCHER
KILLARNEY	W. M. BALFE
THE VILLAGE BLACKSMITH	W. H. WEISS
SIR EGLAMORE	H. BALFOUR GARDINER
SONG OF THE SHOEMAKERS	G. HOLST
WORSHIP	GEOFFREY SHAW

PRICE 1s.

BOOK 283.

SIX UNISON SONGS.

WHERE THE BEE SUCKS	A. SULLIVAN
SONG OF THE SEA KING	PERCY E. FLETCHER
ENGLAND AND HER COLONIES	PERCY E. FLETCHER
THE DRUMS OF FREEDOM	HERBERT E. CRIMP
IN PRAISE OF NEPTUNE	E. GERMAN
TRUTH	GEOFFREY SHAW

PRICE 1s.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NOVELLO'S SCHOOL SONG BOOKS—continued.

EASY OR MODERATELY EASY TWO-PART SONGS

BOOK 295.

EIGHT EASY TWO-PART SONGS.

NOW ONCE AGAIN OUR HEARTS WE RAISE — TUNE—"LASST UNS ERFREUEN"
ROBIN, SWEET ROBIN ... GRANVILLE BANTOCK
RIDING TO FAIRY-LAND ... GRANVILLE BANTOCK
A WIGWAM SONG ... ALEC ROWLEY
FORTUNE ... SCHUMANN
AWAY WITH MELANCHOLY ... MOZART
WEEL MAY THE KEEL ROW ... NORTHUMBRIAN SONG
THE CITY CHILD ... E. KREUZ

PRICE 8d.

BOOK 294.

SEVEN EASY TWO-PART SONGS.

THE NEW YEAR COMES ... P. E. FLETCHER
SING, BONNIE BIRD ... SCHUMANN
THERE IS MUSIC BY THE RIVER ... PINSUTI
ROBIN HOOD ... JOHN E. WEST
APRIL SHOWERS ... J. L. HATTON
THREE DOUGHTY MEN ... W. W. PEARSON
MARCH AWAY ... ALEC ROWLEY

PRICE 8d.

BOOK 297.

SIX EASY TWO-PART SONGS.

THE HOUR OF THE TRANQUIL NIGHT ... J. L. ROECKEL
BOATING ... T. HUTCHINSON
TIMES AND SEASONS ... E. M. BOYCE
HAIL, HAIL, TO WINTER BOLD ... P. E. FLETCHER
THE FROG ... E. NEWTON
SIR ROGER DE COVERLEY ... T. FACER

PRICE 8d.

BOOK 296.

EIGHT EASY TWO-PART SONGS.

BOBBIE SHAFTOE'S GONE TO SEA ... ROY THOMPSON
DING, DONG, BELL ... ROY THOMPSON
A SONG OF SUNSHINE ... G. TOOTELL
ELFINTOWN ... GRANVILLE BANTOCK
SONG OF THE ZEPHYR ... PERCY E. FLETCHER
WHAT DOES LITTLE BIRDIE SAY? ... E. KREUZ
THE GLOW OF EVENING TINTS THE BAY ... H. SMART
A MORNING SONG ... BERLIOZ

PRICE 8d.

BOOK 298.

NATIONAL SONGS AND AIRS.

COME LASSES AND LADS ... OLD ENGLISH
WHERE ARE THE JOYS? ... SCOTTISH FOLK-MELODY
THE BELLS OF ABERDOVEY ... WELSH AIR
OH! WHERE'S THE SLAVE? ... IRISH AIR
WITH JOCKEY TO THE FAIR ... OLD ENGLISH
THE ASH GROVE ... WELSH AIR
ANNIE LAURIE ... SCOTTISH AIR
WHEN THROUGH LIFE UNBLEST WE ROVE IRISH AIR
THE BONNIE BANKS OF LOCH LOMOND ... SCOTTISH AIR
THE MEETING OF THE WATERS ... IRISH AIR
OH! DEAR! WHAT CAN THE MATTER BE? ... OLD ENGLISH

PRICE 8d.

TWO-PART SONGS SUITABLE FOR HIGHER DIVISIONS

BOOK 272.

TWELVE TWO-PART CANONS.

O BEAUTIFUL VIOLET ... C. REINECKE
SONG OF THE SHIP-BUILDERS ... G. HOLST
MY SHADOW ... S. P. WADDINGTON
CLOUDS O'ER THE SUMMER SKY ... G. HOLST
FOUNTAINS, WAKEN ... A. RICHARDS
TWINKLE, TWINKLE LITTLE STAR ... G. RATHBONE
COME TO THE FIELDS ... A. RICHARDS
DOWN IN A GREEN AND SHADY BED ... K. BOUNDY
WAKEN NOT THE SLEEPER ... C. REINECKE
NINETEEN BIRDS ... G. RATHBONE
GOOD-NIGHT ... C. REINECKE
A CHRISTMAS CAROL ... C. REINECKE

PRICE 1s.

BOOK 299.

SIX TWO-PART SONGS.

THE CORNELIUS MARCH ... MENDELSSOHN
THE SCISSOR-MAN ... G. RATHBONE
ABOUT THE SWEET BAG OF A BEE ... H. A. CHAMBERS
HOLY NIGHT ... BEETHOVEN
A FAIRY SONG ... W. S. DESBOROUGH
SONG SHOULD BREATHE ... J. L. HATTON

PRICE 8d.

BOOK 300.

EIGHT SACRED ANTHEMS AND TWO-PART SONGS.

I WAITED FOR THE LORD ... MENDELSSOHN
AWAKE, MY SOUL ... C. MACPHERSON
AN EASTER SONG ... G. RATHBONE
O FOR THE WINGS OF A DOVE ... MENDELSSOHN
CHILDREN, PRAY THIS LOVE TO CHERISH ... SPOHR
THY WORD IS A LANTERN ... A. M. RICHARDSON
THERE IS A GREEN HILL FAR AWAY ... GOUNOD
OH HOW AMIABLE ARE THY DWELLINGS ... J. H. MAUNDER

PRICE (Staff) 1s.

BOOK 301.

FIVE TWO-PART SONGS.

UP THE FAIRY MOUNTAIN ... G. RATHBONE
HUMPTY DUMPTY SAT ON A WALL ... H. WALFORD DAVIES
YOU SPOTTED SNAKES ... MENDELSSOHN
THE SWALLOW ... E. BOYCE
IT WAS A LOVER AND HIS LASS ... T. MORLEY

PRICE 1s.

BOOK 302.

SIX TWO-PART SONGS.

AUBADE ... J. IRELAND
AT DAWN OF DAY ... F. H. COWEN
DREAM SONG ... G. RATHBONE
THE LONELY KNIGHT ... E. BOYCE
MY LADY WIND ... A. CARSE
LULLABY ... R. B. ELLIOTT

PRICE 1s.

BOOK 303.

SIX TWO-PART SONGS.

THE CAMEL'S HUMP ... E. GERMAN
A WET SHEET AND A FLOWING SEA ... C. H. LLOYD
RING OUT, WILD BELLS ... PERCY E. FLETCHER
THE GOSLINGS ... J. F. BRIDGE
TOM-TIT ... COLIN TAYLOR
OH, THE SUMMER NIGHT ... PERCY E. FLETCHER

PRICE 1s.

BOOK 304.

SIX TWO-PART SONGS.

BEES ... PERCY E. FLETCHER
ROLLING DOWN TO RIO ... E. GERMAN
ORPHEUS WITH HIS LUTE ... G. RATHBONE
CHERRY RIPE ... C. E. HORN
SPRING IN THE WOODS ... G. RATHBONE
THE FAIRY QUEEN ... PERCY E. FLETCHER

PRICE 1s.

BOOK 305.

SEVEN TWO-PART SONGS.

TO SYLVIA ... SCHUBERT
PIPER'S SONG ... RUTLAND BOUGHTON
WHERE THE BEE SUCKS ... ARNE
THE MINUET ... A. RICHARDS
OH, THE SPRING ... H. LAHEE
RING ON, SWEET ANGELUS ... GOUNOD
TWIST YE, TWINE YE ... A. REDHEAD

PRICE 8d.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

THE DESCANT HYMN-TUNE BOOK.

A COLLECTION OF WELL-KNOWN TUNES

ARRANGED BY

GEOFFREY SHAW

TUNES, AND APPROPRIATE HYMNS.

TUNE.	METRE.	HYMN.
Austria	8.7.8.7.D.	... Glorious things of thee are spoken
		Praise the Lord! ye heavens, adore Him
Bishopthorpe	C.M.	... This is the day the Lord hath made
Darwall's 148th	6.6.6.6.4.4.4.4.	... Ye holy Angels bright
Ein' feste Burg...	8.7.8.7.6.6.6.7.	... A safe stronghold our God is still
		Rejoice to-day with one accord
Eisenach	L.M.	... Great God, Who, hid from mortal sight
		O Love, how deep! how broad! how high
Hanover	10.10.11.11.	... Disposer Supreme, and Judge of the earth
		O worship the King All-glorious above
Hyfrydol	8.7.8.7.D.	... Alleluia! sing to Jesus
Irish	C.M.	... The Son of Man from Jordan rose
Lasst uns erfreuen	L.M. (with Alleluias)	... Light's glittering morn bedecks the sky
		... Ye watchers and ye holy ones
Leoni	6.6.8.4.D.	... The God of Abraham praise
Luther	8.7.8.7.8.8.7.	... Great God, what do I see and hear?
Melcombe	L.M.	... New every morning is the love
Morning Hymn	L.M.	... Awake, my soul, and with the sun
Nun danket	6.7.6.7.6.6.6.6.	... Now thank we all our God
Old 100th (1st Version)	L.M.	... All people that on earth do dwell
Old 100th (2nd Version)	L.M.	... Before Jehovah's awful Throne
Old 104th	10.10.11.11.	... Disposer Supreme, and Judge of the earth
		O worship the King All-glorious above
Richmond	C.M.	... Praise to the Holiest in the height
Rockingham	L.M.	... My God, and is Thy Table spread?
		When I survey the wondrous Cross
St. Anne (1st Version)	C.M.	... O God, our help in ages past
St. Anne (2nd Version	C.M.	... The Son of God goes forth to war
St. Theodulph	7.6.7.6.D.	... All glory, laud, and honour
St. Thomas	S.M.	... The Advent of our God
Surrey	8.8.8.8.8.	... The Lord my pasture shall prepare
		We have not known Thee as we ought
Tallis' Canon	L.M.	... Glory to Thee, my God, this night
Unser Herrscher	8.7.8.7.8.7.	... Come ye faithful, raise the anthem
Victory	8.8.8.4.	... The strife is o'er, the battle done
Wareham	L.M.	... O Saviour, Lord, to Thee we pray
Warrington	L.M.	... Now that the daylight fills the sky
Wiltshire	C.M.	... Through all the changing scenes of life
Winchester New	L.M.	... On Jordan's bank the Baptist's cry
Winchester Old (1st Version) ...	C.M.	... When God of old came down from Heaven
Winchester Old (2nd Version) ...	C.M.	... While shepherds watched their flocks by night

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.

Voice Parts only, 8*d.*

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED

JUST PUBLISHED.

AN ABRIDGED CONCERT EDITION OF

SEMELE

A SECULAR ORATORIO

FOR FOUR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

BY

G. F. HANDEL

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE
TONIC SOL-FA, 1s. 6d.

The time of performance of this edition is about two hours, and the orchestral parts have been so cued that it may be performed with accompaniment of: (1) Strings only; (2) Strings and Pianoforte; (3) Strings, or Strings and Pianoforte, with the addition of any Wind up to the complete Score of 2 Oboes, 2 Bassoons, 2 Horns, 2 Trumpets, Drums.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

JUST PUBLISHED.

AN ABRIDGED

CONCERT EDITION

OF

CARMEN

AN OPERA

BY

GEORGES BIZET.

SELECTED AND ADAPTED

BY

W. McNAUGHT.

THE LIBRETTO FROM THE ENGLISH VERSION OF THE COMPLETE OPERA BY

LUCIA YOUNG.

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS.
Tonic Sol-fa, Price 2s.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

AN ABRIDGED

CONCERT EDITION

OF

KING ARTHUR

AN OPERA

LIBRETTO BY JOHN DRYDEN.

MUSIC BY

HENRY PURCELL.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

JUST PUBLISHED.

READY BE, MY SOUL, ALWAY

(MACHE DICH, MEIN GEIST, BEREIT)

CANTATA

(For the Twenty-Second Sunday after Trinity)

FOR FOUR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA.

BY

J. S. BACH.

(Cantata No. 115).

Edited by IVOR ATKINS.

English Text by CHARLES SANFORD TERRY.

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NOVELLO'S EDITIONS

OF THE

FAVOURITE OPERAS

ADAPTED FOR

CONCERT USE.

BALFE.
*THE BOHEMIAN GIRL.
Price 3s.

DONIZETTI.
*THE DAUGHTER OF THE REGIMENT.
Price 3s.

FLOTOW.
*MARTHA.
Price 3s.

GOUNOD.
*FAUST.
Price 2s. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d.

VERDI.
*IL TROVATORE.
Price 3s. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d.

WAGNER.
TANNHÄUSER.
Price 3s.

WALLACE.
MARITANA.
Price 3s.

* Orchestral Parts for Reduced Orchestra may be obtained from the Publishers.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST REPRINTED.

LIFE OF CHOPIN

BY

FREDERICK NIECKS.

Chopin as a Man and Musician, with a Portrait etched by H. R. ROBERTSON, and Facsimiles of the Composer's MS.

Two Vols. Cloth, Gilt. 25s. net.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

LONDON TOWN

SONG.

THE WORDS BY

JOHN MASEFIELD.

THE MUSIC BY

EDWARD GERMAN.

IN TWO KEYS.

Price Two Shillings each.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

ON A NANKIN PLATE

SONG.

WORDS BY

AUSTIN DOBSON

MUSIC BY

HARVEY GRACE.

TWO KEYS.

Price Two Shillings each.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

FOUR TENNYSON LYRICS

SET TO MUSIC BY

PERCY E. FLETCHER.

1. A LULLABY.
2. THE CITY CHILD.
3. THE REIGN OF THE ROSES.
4. THE THROSTLE.

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

No. 100.—NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS.

PRONUNCIATION

FOR

VOICE-PRODUCTION

FROM

EURHYTHM: THOUGHT IN ACTION

BY

H. H. HULBERT.

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE ENGLISH COUNTRY DANCE

GRADED SERIES

CONTAINING THE DESCRIPTION OF THE DANCES

TOGETHER WITH THE TUNES

BY

CECIL J. SHARP.

VOL. 1.

BRIGHTON CAMP.
GALOPEDE.
NANCY'S FANCY.
THE BLACK NAG
GATHERING PEASCODS.
RUFTY TUFTY.

VOL. 2.

RIBBON DANCE.
GODDESSES.
THE MARY AND DOROTHY.
IF ALL THE WORLD WERE PAPER.
PICKING UP STICKS.
HASTE TO THE WEDDING.

VOL. 3.

BONNETS SO BLUE.
THE MAID PEEPED OUT AT THE [WINDOW.
CHRISTCHURCH BELLS.
HEY, BOYS, UP GO WE.
SELLENGER'S ROUND.
THE MERRY, MERRY MILKMAIDS.

VOL. 4.

SAGE LEAF.
EPPING FOREST.
CHILDGROVE.
THE OLD MOLE.
HIT AND MISS.
NEWCASTLE.

Price Three Shillings each Volume.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

Recent Organ and Church Music

BY

BASIL HARWOOD.

	s.	d.
FANTASIA, "CHRISTMASTIDE"	3	6
RHAPSODY	3	0
IN AN OLD ABBEY	2	0
WEDDING MARCH	2	0
THREE PRELUDES ON ANGLICAN CHANTS	2	0
VOLUNTARY IN D FLAT	2	0
A SHORT AND EASY COMMUNION SERVICE IN E FLAT ... (Voice part only, for Congregational use, 6*d.*)	1	0

ANTHEMS.

GREAT GOD, WHO, HID FROM MORTAL SIGHT (General use)	0	6
O HOW PLENTIFUL IS THY GOODNESS (Harvest) ...	0	6

HYMNS.

LEAD, KINDLY LIGHT (Tune, "Bradfield College") ...	0	2
AUTHOR OF LIFE DIVINE...	0	2

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

COMPOSITIONS FOR THE ORGAN

BY

SIGFRID KARG-ELERT.

	s.	d.
TROIS IMPRESSIONS, Op. 72.
1. Harmonies du Soir...	1	6
2. Clair de Lune	1	6
3. La Nuit	1	6
CHACONNE AND FUGUE TRILOGY WITH CHORAL (2 Trumpets, 2 Trombones, 2 Tubas, Timpani, Tam-tam, and Piatti ad lib.), Op. 73.
Organ Score	7	0
Wind Parts, &c....	3	0
FIRST SONATINA in A minor, Op. 74	5	0
FUNERALE, Op. 75, No. 1	3	0
CHORAL IMPROVISATION on "In dulci jubilo," Op. 75, No. 2	2	3
HOMAGE TO HANDEL. 54 Studies in Variation Form	3	6
CHORAL IMPROVISATION on "Der Hölle Pforten sind zerstört"	2	0
CHORAL IMPROVISATION on "Gelobt sei Gott im höchsten Thron"	2	0
SEVEN PASTELS from "The Lake of Constance"	5	6

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

HOLY COMMUNION IN C, including AGNUS, BENEDICTUS, ETC.

By HERBERT ROLFE, F.R.C.O.

Third thousand, 9*d.*

"....One of the most pleasing and devotional compositions of its class with which we have met for some time."—Church Review.

"....thoroughly devotional in tone."—Musical News.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

T. MEE PATTISON'S POPULAR CANTATA

THE ANCIENT MARINER

33rd 1,000.

Vocal Score, 2*s.* 6*d.* Choruses only, 1*s.* 3*d.*

Band Parts may be hired.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

JESUS, THE VERY THOUGHT OF THEE.

SACRED SONG.

THE WORDS BY

BERNARD OF CLAIRVAUX,

tr. E. CASWALL.

THE MUSIC BY

ERIC H. THIMAN.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE GOD OF LOVE MY SHEPHERD IS.

SACRED SONG.

THE WORDS BY

GEORGE HERBERT.

THE MUSIC BY

ERIC H. THIMAN.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NO. 101.—NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS.

EAR-TRAINING

INCLUDING

MUSICAL APPRECIATION AND

RHYTHMIC MOVEMENTS

BY

MABEL CHAMBERLAIN.

COMPLETE, SIX SHILLINGS,

Paper Boards, 7*s.*

Or,

In Two Books: Letterpress and Illustrations, 4*s.*

Music only, 3*s.*

The Ear-Training Course outlined in this book is intended primarily for Class use, but if a judicious selection be made from the exercises, the course can be used with equal benefit by private teachers for individual pupils. Senior pupils and students who desire to Study music, and who have received little or no previous tuition, cannot do better than work rapidly through these progressive exercises and tests. A Prospectus will be sent on application.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

TWENTY SHORT AND EASY PIECES
FOR THE ORGAN

SET VI.

No.
1.	ADAGIO FROM SEXTETT (Op. 81)	BEETHOVEN
2.	ALLEGRO GRANDIOSO	HUGH BLAIR
3.	LARGO IN E FLAT	E. BUNNETT
4.	MODERATO	GEORGE CALKIN
5.	BERCEUSE	CÉSAR CUI
6.	ADAGIO IN D	OTTO DIENEL
7.	POSTLUDE	EDMONDSTOUNE DUNCAN
8.	IMPROMPTU IN A	A. M. GOODHART
9.	WEDDING MARCH	A. GUILMANT
10.	MARCH FROM "ODE ON ST. CECILIA'S DAY"	HANDEL
11.	LIEDER OHNE WORTE, No. 9	F. MENDELSSOHN-BARTHOLDY
12.	ALLEGRO IN C	GUSTAV MERKEL
13.	ANDANTE	REISSIGER
14.	POSTLUDE IN F	J. VARLEY ROBERTS
15.	PRELUDE	B. LUARD-SELBY
16.	PRELUDE IN A	HENRY SMART
17.	ANDANTE CON MOTO	CHARLES STEGGALL
18.	ALLEGRETTO GRAZIOSO	BERTHOLD TOURS
19.	COMMUNION IN B FLAT	FERRIS TOZER
20.	CON MOTO	JOHN E. WEST

PRICE FOUR SHILLINGS.
Cloth, Six Shillings.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

JUST PUBLISHED.

No. 102.—NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS.

THE INSTRUMENTS OF THE ORCHESTRA

BY

JOHN E. BORLAND

WITH ILLUSTRATIONS.

THIS is not a treatise on Instrumentation, but is a booklet intended to help listeners to the Orchestra to become familiar with the appearance and the sound of the chief instruments. It deals a little also with the technique of the instruments; that is to say, with the means of producing and controlling their sounds, but is in no sense a text-book for orchestral players.

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

JUST PUBLISHED.

TWELVE INTROITS OR SHORT ANTHEMS

SET 2.

No.
1.	GIVE EAR UNTO MY PRAYER	JACQUES ARCADELT
2.	WE WAIT FOR THY LOVING-KINDNESS	PHILIP ARMES
3.	THE SACRIFICES OF GOD	HUGH BLAIR
4.	ALMIGHTY GOD, WHO HAST ME BROUGHT	THOMAS FORD
5.	SET YOUR AFFECTIONS	ALFRED R. GAUL
6.	O GOD, WHOSE NATURE AND PROPERTY	ALAN GRAY
7.	REND YOUR HEART	F. A. GORE OUSELEY
8.	COME, LET US WORSHIP	PALESTRINA
9.	BEHOLD, GOD IS MY HELPER	JOHN STAINER
10.	I WILL LAY ME DOWN IN PEACE	ARTHUR S. SULLIVAN
11.	O GOD OF BETHEL	CHRISTOPHER TYE
12.	BLESSED ARE THEY	S. S. WESLEY

PRICE ONE SHILLING.
Each Introit may be had separately.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

MUSIC
TO THE LITTLE MINISTER
BY
A. C. MACKENZIE.

OVERTURE.

	s.	d.
String Parts	6	9
Wind Parts (Full Orchestra)	14	8
,, ,, (Small Orchestra)	MS.
Pianoforte Conductor (Just published)	3	0

THREE DANCES.

String Parts	6	9
Wind Parts (Full Orchestra)	16	3
,, ,, (Small Orchestra)	10	5
Pianoforte Conductor (Just published)	4	0

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

SCHOOL MARCHES
FOR PIANOFORTE SOLO
BOOK III.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

CONTENTS.

Arrival of the Visitors	H. Hofmann
Bright and Buxom Lasses, from "Martha"	Flotow
Instrumental Band, The	Percy E. Fletcher
Little March, A	J. D. Davis
March from "Egmont"	Beethoven
March from "St. Polycarp"	F. A. G. Ouseley
March	Th. Kullak
March from "Tannhäuser"	Wagner
Marching off to Bed	Myles B. Foster
March of Priests, from "The Magic Flute"	Mozart
Soldiers' Chorus, from "Il Trovatore"	Verdi
Toy Soldiers' March	Tschaïkowsky

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

REEVES' LIST.

( See also "Musical Times." October issue, Pp. 879 and 955.)

THE MUSIC STORY SERIES.

Indispensable Volumes: Authoritative, Interesting, and Educational. Crown 8vo. Designed cloth. Postage (each), 6*d.*

14 Volumes, £3 13*s.* 6*d.*; or separately (as marked).

ORATORIO, The Story of. By Annie W. Patterson, B.A., Mus. Doc. 14 Chapters, with Musical Examples, Photogravure Frontispiece and 17 illustrations. Alphabetical list of Oratorio excerpts mentioned in the work. Appendix containing list of principal Oratorio Composers and their works; first performances of important Oratorios, &c., 5s. net.

NOTATION, The Story of. By C. F. Abdy-Williams, M.A., Mus. Bac. 12 Chapters on its Origin and Development. Many rare and curious Musical Examples, Photogravure Frontispiece, 4 Illustrations and 19 Pictures of Instruments. Appendix of Authorities referred to; Glossary and Chronological Table of Notation. 5s. net.

ORGAN, The Story of the. By C. F. Abdy-Williams, M.A., Mus. Bac. Told in 9 Chapters. 38 Illustrations and Photogravure Frontispiece. Appendix containing: Two Instruments found at Pompeii; Rev. F. W. Galpin's Hydraulus; Organ Builders; Stops; Technical Terms; Bibliography and Chronological List of Organ Specifications. 5s. 6d. net.

VIOLIN, The Story of the. By Paul Stoeving, 44 Chapters. Photogravure Frontispiece and 42 Illustrations of Instruments, Musical Autographs and Portraits, fine Portraits of Paganini, his House and Violin. With additional Appendix. 5s. 6d. net.

HARP, The Story of the. By W. H. Grattan Flood. 22 Chapters. Photogravure Frontispiece and 32 Illustrations of Instruments, &c. Appendix containing: The Æolian Harp, Epochs in Harp Making, and Bibliography. 5s. 6d. net.

ORGAN MUSIC, The Story of. By C. F. Abdy-Williams, M.A., Mus. Bac. 15 Chapters. Some Musical Examples, Photogravure Frontispiece and 14 Illustrations of Title-pages, Tablature, Keys and Portraits. Appendix containing: Musical Illustrations; Chronological Synopsis of Organ Composers; Bibliography and Collections of Organ Music. 5s. net.

ENGLISH MUSIC, The Story of (1604-1904). Seventeen Lectures delivered at the Music Loan Exhibition of the Worshipful Company of Musicians. By T. L. Southgate, W. H Cummings, H. Watson, E. Markham Lee, J. Finn, Sir F. Bridge, A. S. Rose, A. H. D. Prendergast, F. J. Sawyer, G. F. Huntly, D. J. Blaikley, Rev. F. W. Galpin, W. W. Cobbett, J. E. Borland, A. H. Littleton, and Sir E. Clarke. Photogravure Frontispiece, and 115 Illustrations, including Portraits, Instruments. Title-pages, &c. Some Musical Examples. 5s. 6d. net.

MINSTRELSY, The Story of. By Edmondstoune Duncan. 15 Chapters of Research, Poem and Story, with Musical Examples, facsimile of "Sumer is i-cumen in" (frontispiece) and 18 Illustrations. Appendix: containing Literature of Minstrelsy, and Song-Collections; Glossary and Definitions; Chronological Table. 5s. net.

MUSICAL FORM, The Story of. By Clarence Lucas. An Explanation of the Principles of Form, in 15 Chapters. With many Musical Examples, and some Facsimile Signatures of famous Composers. 9 Illustrations. Appendix, giving Explanatory List of over 200 Forms in Composition, and Bibliography. 5s. net.

OPERA, The Story of. By E. Markham Lee, M.A., Mus. Doc. 19 Chapters of International Interest. Musical Examples. Photogravure Portrait of Sullivan, by Millais, and 14 Illustrations. Appendix: Chronological List of Opera Composers, Conductors, &c., Glossary and List of Instruments employed in Opera Orchestras at different Periods, and Bibliography. 5s. net.

CAROL, The Story of the. By Edmondstoune Duncan. 14 Chapters of Historical Survey. Musical Examples, Photogravure Frontispiece and 9 Illustrations. Appendix: Biographical, Glossary and Chronological Table, &c. 5s. net.

BAGPIPE, The Story of the. By W. H. Grattan Flood, 25 Chapters of Historical Interest. Photogravure Frontispiece and 25 Illustrations; Musical Examples. Appendix: Chronological List of Pipers of all Ages; Glossary of Terms and Pipe Mechanism; Composers who have employed Pipe Music; Bibliography; Pipe Bands of the British Army, and O'Farrell's "Treatise on the Irish Bagpipe." 5s. 6d. net.

FLUTE, The Story of the. By H. M. Fitzgibbon, M.A. 19 Chapters on Flutes, Flute-players, and Music. 49 Musical Examples. Photogravure Frontispiece after Meissonier. 45 Illustrations, including Instruments and Portraits. Appendix: Early Instruction Books; Particulars of Wooden and Metal Flutes, and Bibliography. 5s. 6d. net.

SYMPHONY, The Story of the. By E. Markham Lee, M.A., Mus. Doc. 17 Chapters concerning Symphonic Music of all Ages. Musical Examples and some Facsimile Signatures, Photogravure Frontispiece and 9 Illustrations. Appendix: Chronological List of most important Composers of Symphonies; Glossary; List of Instruments employed in Symphonies of different periods; a List of entitled Symphonies, and Bibliography. 5s. 6d. net.

LONDON: 83, CHARING CROSS ROAD, W.C.2.

JUST PUBLISHED.

FINAL BOOK
OF THE
BREARE VOCAL SERIES
No. 5,
"VOCAL ANALYSES:
SENSITISING BREATH—
EMOTIONAL EVOLUTION."

Price 5*s.*, by Post, 5*s.* 4½*d.*

Previous Books of the Series—No. 1, "Vocalism: Its Structure and Culture, from an English Standpoint." No. 2, "Elocution: Its First Principles." No. 3, "Vocal Faults and their Remedies." No. 4, "Vocal Technique: How it Feels to Sing."

Books No. 1 to No. 4, price 3*s.* 6*d.* each, till pre-war editions exhausted.

By W. H. BREARE, J.P., M.I.J., Vocal Adviser.

Address: HERALD BUILDINGS, HARROGATE, ENGLAND

Publishers—
London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT & Co.
Harrogate: R. ACKRILL, Ltd.

JAMES LYON, Mus. Doc.

ELEMENTS OF HARMONY
3*s.* 6*d.*

Answers to Questions and Exercises on the Elements of Harmony.
2*s.* 6*d.*

BANKS & SON, MUSIC PUBLISHERS, YORK.

MUSICAL LITERATURE.

H. R. occupies an unique position in the Bookselling World. Staff and extensive premises are devoted entirely to Musical Literature. In addition to Old and Rare Works, H. R. is able to supply the most Recent and Modern Books on Music and Musicians and Music by Modern and Living Composers of all Countries. Special attention given to the making of Collections on any Branch of the Art and Science of Music.

HAROLD REEVES has issued the following Catalogues:—

No. 68. A List of over 1,000 Miniature Scores of Standard Classical and Modern Orchestral Works, Operas, Chamber Music, and Ballets.
No. 67. Miscellaneous Second-hand Music of all kinds, Old Psalm and Hymn Tune Books, prior to 1890, &c.
No. 64. A Catalogue of Books relating to Musical Instruments, their History, Development and Technique, including a small assortment of Early Tutors.
No. 61. Music by Classical and Modern Composers for all manner of Instruments by Modern Composers.
No. 52. Books on Music and Musicians, Biographies, Reminiscences, and Collected Writings.

MUSIC OF ALL KINDS PURCHASED FOR CASH.

HAROLD REEVES,
210, Shaftesbury Avenue, London, W.C.2.

DARLINGTON'S HANDBOOKS.

"Nothing better could be wished for."—British Weekly.

FRENCH AND ITALIAN RIVIERA. 60 Illustrations, Maps and Plans, 6/-.
WEST SWITZERLAND. 100 Illustrations, Maps and Plans. 4/-.
2/- Paris, Lyons, and Rhone Valley.
2/- Chamonix and Environs.
2/- Lake Geneva, Rhone Valley, and Zermatt.
2/- The French Riviera.
2/- The Italian Riviera.
2/- Bernese Oberland and Lucerne.
NORTH WALES. 60 Illustrations, Maps and Plans, 7/6.
DEVON & CORNWALL. 100 Illustrations, Maps and Plans. 7/6.
NORTH DEVON AND NORTH CORNWALL. 50 Illustrations, 6 Maps, 4/-
SOUTH DEVON AND SOUTH CORNWALL. 50 Illustrations, 6 Maps, 4/-.
THE HOTELS OF THE WORLD. A Handbook to the Leading Hotels throughout the World, 2/6.

List of DARLINGTON'S HANDBOOKS post free.
Llangollen: DARLINGTON & Co. London: SIMPKINS. Railway Bookstalls and all Booksellers.
Paris and New York: BRENTANO'S.

NOVELLO'S CHRISTMAS CAROLS.

LATEST NUMBERS.

No.
390.	By Nazareth's green hills ...	J. F. Bridge	2d.
391.	Sweet hours of night	H. C. Dixon	1½d.
392.	The Carollers	A. M. Goodhart	1½d.
393.	The Rose and the Lily ...	A. Rowley	1½d.
394.	Carol of the Three Kings ...	J. F. Bridge	2d.
395.	Green grows the Holly Tree ...	J. F. Bridge	1½d.
396.	The coming Christmas ...	J. F. Bridge	1½d.
397.	I sing the Birth ...	Thomas Adams	1½d.
398.	O lovely voices of the sky ...	W. G. Alcock	2d.
399.	This Day	Gerrard Williams	1½d.
*400.	Hark! what mean those Holy voices	A. Sullivan	4d.
*401.	Four Christmas Carols		2d.
	1. In Bethlehem, that noble place	B. J. Dale
	2. Sleep, Holy Babe! ...	R. W. Robson
	3. The First Christmas Night	W. H. Sangster
	4. There dwelt a King ...	John E. West
	(Words only, 4s. per 100.)
*402.	Silent Night	Franz Grüber	2d.
403.	Carols of Bethlehem	C. W. Pearce	2d.
	1. No room in the Inn. 2. The heavenly host. 3. Our "House of Bread."
404.	Good King Wenceslas... ...	Geoffrey Shaw	2d.
*405.	O lovely voices of the sky (Unison)	Cuthbert Harris	1½d.
*406.	Ditto. (Four Voices)	Cuthbert Harris	2d.
407.	His Birthday Keep ...	A. M. Goodhart	1½d.
408.	Christmas Cradle Song ...	J. F. Bridge	1½d.
409.	Carol, Carol, tenderly, sweetly	J. F. Bridge	1½d.

No.
410.	Rejoice, the Christ has come	Stanley Marchant	1½d.
*411.	The shepherds found Thee by night	Geoffrey Shaw	3d.
412.	The Carollers	E. Bunnett	1½d.
413.	The stars are shining bright and clear ... ... Carol, sweetly carol ...	E. Bunnett	1½d.
414.	Christmas Bells	E. Bunnett	1½d.
415.	A Child this day is born Hark! what mean those Holy Voices ...	E. Bunnett	1½d.
416.	The Angel's Carol	E. Bunnett	1½d.
417.	While shepherds watched Angels from the realms of glory	E. Bunnett	1½d.
418.	A Christmas chime	E. Bunnett	1½d.
419.	A Cradle Song	A. H. Brewer	1½d.
420.	Gather the holly-bough... ...	H. E. Watts	1½d.
421.	The Three Wise Men ...	Alfred Hollins	1½d.
422.	The Holly and the Ivy...	Geoffrey Shaw	1½d.
423.	There is no rose... ...	Gerrard Williams	1½d.
*424.	The Christ-Child	G. Rathbone	2d.
425.	All Christian men ...	H. A. Chambers	1½d.
426.	I saw three Kings	G. Rathbone	1½d.
427.	O come this day	H. G. Ley	1½d.
428.	All hail with joy	Chastey Hector	1½d.
429.	Rosa Mystica	B. J. Dale	4d.
430.	Cradle Song	B. J. Dale	4d.

* Also published in Tonic Sol-fa.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

LATEST ADDITIONS to our COLLECTION of SPANISH WORKS.

ISAAC ALBENIZ

CORDOBA AND SOUS LE PALMIER

from "Chants d'Espagne."

PIANO SOLO. PRICE, EACH, 2*s.* 6*d.* NET.

The re-issue of these two favourite pieces by Albeniz, the greatest composer of pianoforte music ever produced by Spain, should be heartily welcomed by all pianists. The "Chants d'Espagne" are highly characteristic of their composer, yet by no means as difficult to play as the famous set entitled "Iberia," which can be tackled only by highly-equipped players.

MANUEL DE FALLA

SUITE POPULAIRE ESPAGNOLE

ADAPTED FOR VIOLONCELLO AND PIANO FROM THE "SEVEN SPANISH SONGS"

BY MAURICE MARECHAL.

1. EL PAÑO MORUNO.
2. NAÑA.
3. CANCIÓN.
4. POLO.
5. ASTURIANA.
6. JOTA.

PRICE 6*s.* NET.

Violoncellists have every reason to be delighted with this new set of brilliant and musically valuable solo pieces, made by MAURICE MARECHAL out of six of MANUEL DE FALLA'S beautiful Spanish songs.

J. & W. CHESTER, LTD., 11, Great Marlborough Street, London, W.1.

London:—Printed by NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited, at Novello Works, Soho, and published at 160, Wardour Street, Soho, W.1. Monday, November 1, 1926.

No. 1006

THE MUSICAL TIMES

Price 6d.

FOUNDED 1844

DECEMBER 1, 1926

THE WORLD FAMOUS

Bösendorfer

PIANOS

(Established 1828.)

BUSONI "The Piano was ideal & helped me to give expression to my highest conceptions". . . . . .

HAROLD BAUER "These instruments are sympathetic to me in the highest degree".

PADEREWSKY "The Piano was quite wonderful". . . . .

MORITZ ROSENTHAL "The Piano sounded ravishing"...

SOLE AGENTS

The WIGMORE HALL & PIANO GALLERIES Ltd.

32-40, WIGMORE STREET, W.1

ROGERS

PIANOS

How often the men and women of to-day who buy a Rogers Piano owe their love of fine music to the influence of the Rogers in their parents' home, on which they learnt their earliest pieces.

A small deposit will secure any model. Prices from 75-620 Gns. Write for Catalogue and name of nearest Agent. GEORGE ROGERS & SONS, 60 Berners Street, London, W.1

The Most Acceptable Gift of all an Album of "His Master's Voice" Records

Any set of the Records featured below will make an ideal gift to any music lover. Your local dealer will give you full details of these records, and be pleased to play them over for you.

REMEMBER any record can be purchased separately.

SCHUBERT'S TRIO, No. 1 in B Flat, Op. 99

On these four records, D.B. 947 to D.B. 950, you have Schubert played to perfection by three great artists, Cortot, Thibaud and Casal. These records are without doubt the finest set of chamber music records ever issued.

Complete in Album £1:14:0

PARSIFAL

Parsifal played by the Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Albert Coates and Eugene Goossens, and sung by the following famous vocalists, Göta Ljungberg, Walter Widdop, Percy Heming, George Baker, Robert Radford, and Full Chorus. Record numbers D B. 862 and D. 1025 to D. 1031.

Complete in Album £2:14:0

DER ROSENKAVALIER

These four records, D. 1094 to D. 1097, contain selections of the specially written accompaniment of Der Rosenkavalier. The fact that they were produced under the conductorship of no less a person than Dr. Richard Strauss himself, makes them really interesting.

Complete in Album £1:6:0

THE KREUTZER SONATA

Beethoven's Sonata in A Major for pianoforte and violin. Op. 47, popularly known as the Kreutzer Sonata, played by Isolde Menges and Arthur De Greef on record numbers D. 1066 to D. 1069.

Complete in Album £1:6:0

GILBERT & SULLIVAN

Here are the titles of nine operas now recorded in complete form, under the direction of Rupert D'Oyly Carte. The Gondoliers, H.M.S. Pinafore, Iolanthe, Mikado, Patience, Pirates of Penzance, Princess Ida, Ruddigore Yeomen of the Guard.

Prices complete in Album varying from £2:12:0 to £3:11:6

To hear these records to perfection, ask for them to be played on

Ask your dealer for particulars of other recorded works, obtainable complete with album.

The NEW

"His Master's Voice"

Gramophone

The Gramophone Co., Ltd. Oxford St., London, W. 1.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

FOUNDED IN 1844

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST OF EVERY MONTH

No. 1,006—Vol. 67.
Registered at the General Post Office for Canadian Postage.

DECEMBER 1 1926

Price 6d.; Postage, 2d.
Annual Subscription, post-free, 7s. 6d.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

FIFTY-SIXTH SEASON, 1926-1927.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 18, at 2.30 p.m.

CAROLS.

MISS DOROTHY SILK.
MR. WALTER GLYNNE.
MR. JOHN GOSS.

Conductor: MR. H. L. BALFOUR.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 1, 1927, at 2.30 p.m.

MESSIAH - - - - - HANDEL

Conductor: MR. H. L. BALFOUR.
MISS RUTH VINCENT.
MISS CONSTANCE WILLIS.
MR. FRANK MULLINGS.
MR. HORACE STEVENS.

Conductor: MR. H. L. BALFOUR.

DOUBLE CHORUS OF 850 VOICES.
THE ROYAL ALBERT HALL ORCHESTRA
At the Organ - MR. R. ARNOLD GREIR.

Stalls, 10s. 6d.; Arena, 7s. 6d.; Balcony (Reserved), 5s.; Unreserved, 3s. 6d.; Gallery (Promenade), 2s.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W.1.
Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.
President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT AND STRATHEARN, K.G.
Principal:
JOHN B. MCEWEN, M.A., Mus.D., F.R.A.M., F.R.C.M.

ENTRANCE EXAMINATION for the LENT TERM begins January 5th.

SPECIAL COURSES:

CONDUCTORS, under SIR HENRY J. WOOD, Mus.D., F.R.A.M.

OPERA, under JULIUS HARRISON, Hon. R.A.M.

ENSEMBLE PLAYING, under LIONEL TERTIS, F.R.A.M., and HERBERT WITHERS, F.R.A.M.

JUNIOR SCHOOL for those under sixteen years of age.

Full particulars of the curriculum, &c., from
A. ALGER BELL, Acting-Secretary.

LONDON SOCIETY OF ORGANISTS.

FOUNDED 1913.

PRESIDENT FOR 1926: HARVEY GRACE, F.R.C.O.

Organists, Assistant-Organists, and Choirmasters of all denominations are eligible. Register of vacant appointments.

Particulars and application to the Hon. Sec., DR. J. WARRINER, De Crespigny House, Denmark Hill, S.E.5.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

PRINCE CONSORT ROAD, SOUTH KENSINGTON, S.W.7.

Patrons: { HIS MAJESTY THE KING.
HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.
Director: SIR HUGH P. ALLEN, C.V.O., M.A., MUS.DOC., D.Litt.
Honorary Secretary: GEORGE A. MACMILLAN, Esq., D. Litt.
Registrar: CLAUDE AVELING, Esq., M.A.
Bursar: E. J. N. POLKINHORNE, Hon. R.C.M.

The College offers a Complete Course of Musical Education to pupils of both sexes, both professional and amateur. Upwards of seventy Scholarships and Exhibitions are founded which provide free musical education.

Classes for Score Reading, Conducting, Training of Teachers, Musical Criticism, and Ballet, are held at the College.

The OPERA CLASS has the use of the fully-equipped College OPERA THEATRE, with SUNKEN ORCHESTRA.

EXAMINATIONS for Associateship of the College (A.R.C.M.), in all subjects, held three times a year, in April, September, and December. Syllabus and all particulars may be obtained from the Registrar of the College.

The Royal College of Organists.

The SOLO-PLAYING TESTS for the next F.R.C.O. EXAMINATION are:

Trio in C minor, J. S. Bach. (Novello, Book 12, page 108; Augener, page 1173; Peters, Old Edition, Vol. 9, No. 7; New Edition, Vol. 9, No. 9).

Fantasy Prelude, Charles Macpherson. No. 21 of Recital Series. Edited by E. H. Lemare. (Novello.)

Andante from a Pianoforte Duet, Mozart. Arrangements for the Organ by J. Stainer, No. 2. (Novello.) (New and Revised Edition only.)

The 10 selected pieces and the book set for the Essay for the January, 1927, A.R.C.O. Examination, are the same as those set for July, 1926.

All Candidates for the next Examinations must send in their names for Fellowship by December 9th, for Associateship by December 16th. In the case of NEW MEMBERS, proposal forms, duly filled up, must be sent in before December 2nd. No names will be entered after the above dates.

A LECTURE entitled "ORGAN MUSIC IN THE CINEMA," will be given at the New Gallery Cinema, 123, Regent Street, W.1, on Saturday, December 11, at 11 a.m., by Mr. REGINALD FOORT, F.R.C.O. Mr. H. CART DE LAFONTAINE will preside.

Members and friends are invited. No tickets required.

Regulations, List of College Publications, Lectures, &c., may be had on application.

Examples indicating the character and approximate difficulty of the NEW TESTS, set for the first time at the July, 1924, Examinations, may be obtained at the College. Associateship or Fellowship, 6*d*. each (post free).

The College is open daily from 10 to 4: Saturdays, 10 to 1.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Secretary.
Kensington Gore, S.W.7

GLASGOW
ATHENÆUM SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

SESSION 1926-27.

The Session consists of Three Terms: September 13 to December 4, December 6 to March 12, and March 14 to June 11.

Complete Musical Curriculum. Day and Evening Classes. Single Subjects taught.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from:

STUART S. FORSYTH, Secretary,
ATHENÆUM BUILDINGS, GLASGOW.

Guildhall School of Music.

(Founded in 1880 by the Corporation of London, and managed by the Music Committee.)

VICTORIA EMBANKMENT, E.C.4.

PRINCIPAL: SIR LANDON RONALD, F.R.A.M., F.R.C.M., &c.

PRIVATE Lessons in any single Musical Subject, and STAGE TRAINING in Elocution, Gesture, Dancing, Opera; Classes in Conducting.

Complete Musical Education at inclusive fees, £9 9s. and £12 12s. Opera Class, Saturdays. Special Training Course for Teachers (approved by Teachers' Registration Council).

SPRING TERM begins January 10.

Prospectus and Syllabus of Local Centres and Schools Examinations (open to general public) free.

H. SAXE WYNDHAM, Secretary.

Telephone: Cent. 4459; and City 5566.

96 & 95, WIMPOLE STREET, W.1.

TOBIAS MATTHAY PIANOFORTE SCHOOL

Instruction under his teachers, and under his own supervision.

Open to Professionals and Amateurs, and also to Children.

The Staff consists of thirty-nine senior Professors of thorough experience and platform reputation, all trained by the founder.

Special Short Courses for Teachers during term and vacation.

LECTURE-LESSON CLASS by Mr. MATTHAY on the practical teaching of Technique and Interpretation, diagnosis and correction of faults, musical analysis and synthesis, &c., alternate Wednesday evenings.

COMPLETE TRAINING COURSE FOR TEACHERS.
(Approved by the Teachers' Registration Council.)

This ONE-YEAR Course may be joined at the beginning of ANY TERM.

For further particulars please apply, Mrs. MARION COLE, Secretary.

BIRMINGHAM & MIDLAND INSTITUTE
SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Visitor ... Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M., Mus.Doc., LL.D.
Director ... GRANVILLE BANTOCK, M.A., D.Mus. (Ed.).

SESSION 1925-1926.

The Season consists of AUTUMN TERM (September 22 to December 20); WINTER TERM (January 14 to April 11); SUMMER TERM (April 20 to July 4).

Instruction in all branches of Music, Students' Orchestra, Chamber Music, Students' Rehearsals, and Concerts.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from—
H. M. FRANCIS, Secretary.
Paradise Street, Birmingham.

ROYAL MANCHESTER COLLEGE OF MUSIC

Founded 1893. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1923.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF YORK, K.G.
Principal: DR. ADOLPH BRODSKY.
Registrar: STANLEY WITHERS, M.A.

Students are required to enter upon a complete course of Musical instruction, and are not admitted for a shorter period than one year.

Fee for the year, £36. Special fee for Organ Course, £30, and for Wind Instrument Course, £18.

Systematic Course for the training of Teachers, approved by Teachers' Registration Council.

The Prospectus, with Scholarship information, Diploma Regulations, and Entry Forms, on application.

New Pianoforte Professor, Mr. CLAUD BIGGS.

New Professor of Singing, Miss MARGUERITE SWALE.

LONDON SCHOOL OF SINGING.

20a, Henrietta Street, Cavendish Square, W.1.

President: A. NETTLEFOLD.
Principal: DAVID GODELL.

STUDENTS' CONCERT, Grotrian Hall, December 8th, at 8 p.m.

Complete training in all subjects for the Vocalist, Professional and Amateur. Evening Lessons. Particulars from Secretary. Mayfair 3819.

THE ASSOCIATED BOARD
OF THE R.A.M. AND THE R.C.M.
FOR LOCAL EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

LOCAL CENTRE EXAMINATIONS (SYLLABUS A).

Written Examinations held in March and November at all centres. Practical Examinations in March-April and November-December at all Centres. Entries for the March-April Examinations close Wednesday, February 9th, 1927.

"SCHOOL" EXAMINATIONS (SYLLABUS B).

Held throughout the British Isles three times a year, viz., March-April, June-July, and October-November. Entries for the March-April Examinations close Wednesday, February 2nd, 1927.

ELOCUTION EXAMINATIONS will be held at certain fixed centres in March-April, June-July, and October-November each year. For full particulars see special Elocution Syllabus.

The Board offers annually SIX EXHIBITIONS tenable at The R.A.M. or The R.C.M. for Two or Three Years.

Syllabuses A and B, Elocution Syllabus, Entry Forms, and any further information, may be obtained post-free from:
THE SECRETARY, 14 & 15, Bedford Square, London, W.C.1.

MANCHESTER SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

16, ALBERT SQUARE.

Founder (1892): J. A. CROSS
Late Principal (1897-1925): ALBERT J. CROSS, A.R.A.M.
Director: LEOPOLD H. CROSS, M.A.

The oldest Institution in Manchester devoted solely to the interests of music.

All branches of Music taught. Day and evening Private Lessons. Opera Class. Full Orchestral Class. Intermediate and Elementary String Orchestras, Classes for Ensemble Playing, Elocution, Choral Singing, Harmony, Aural Training, &c. Single Subjects taught.

New Pianoforte Professor:

MR. ROBERT GREGORY.

Mr. Gregory was Professor of the Pianoforte in Vienna for many years, having studied there under the eminent Leschetitzky, teacher of PADEREWSKI.

Prospectus from the Secretary, 16, Albert Square.

BATTERSEA POLYTECHNIC, LONDON, S.W.11.

Principal: ROBERT H. PICKARD. D.Sc., F.R.S.

Head of Music Department:
H. DAVAN WETTON, Mus. D., F.R.C.O.

CLASSES IN THEORY OF MUSIC, HARMONY, AND COUNTERPOINT.

UNIVERSITY COURSES FOR DEGREES AND HIGHER EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., and L.G.S.M., Associated Board of the R.A.M. and R.C.M.

Class and Private Lessons in MUSICAL APPRECIATION and AURAL TRAINING, SOLO and SIGHT SINGING, PIANOFORTE, VIOLIN, VIOLA, VIOLONCELLO, and DOUBLE-BASS.

SOUTH THAMES MUSICAL UNION. ORCHESTRA and CHORAL CLASS.

Lessons on CONCERT ORGAN (Reconstructed and Modernised). PREPARATION FOR R.C.O. EXAMINATIONS.

SPECIAL CLASSES FOR TEACHERS. (Recognised by the London County Council.)

NEXT TERM BEGINS Thursday, January 13th, 1927.

Particulars of all Classes on application to the Principal.

PAPER WORK BY MUS. B., F.R.C.O.

OVER 1,100 SPECIMEN WORKINGS.

"Your lessons and ideas splendid."
"Your excellent models make my attempts look cold."

RECENT SUCCESSES,
including the only pupil sent up, January, 1925.

2s. 6d. per lesson and postage.

"E. B.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

WIGMORE HALL STUDIOS.—These splendidly appointed Studios are the recognised centre of the best musical activities in London. Forty-five rooms. Grand Piano in every room. Lift, telephone, and every comfort and convenience. Low inclusive rates. One morning or afternoon per week the minimum time arranged for. Apply, 38, Wigmore Street, W.1.

MR. HERBERT HODGE will give an ORGAN RECITAL at St. Stephen's Walbrook, on Thursday, December 9th, at 1.10 p.m.

CAN YOU PLAY FROM MEMORY?

To play well you must play artistically. To play artistically your must play from memory. A trained memory is essential for securing the most remunerative engagements as an artist, and it is an asset of immense value to teachers and performers alike.

Playing from memory is merely a matter of habit. YOU can acquire this habit by means of the

Mackinnon Musical Memory Course

FOR PIANISTS.

COMPLETE IN SIX POSTAL LESSONS.

Hundreds of grateful letters have been received from students, teachers, and performers whose nervousness spoilt their playing, or who had given up all hope of being able to memorise.

The Course is also recommended by many famous musicians, including—

MYRA HESS.	SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY.	ADRIAN BOULT.
IRENE SCHARRER.	STEWART MACPHERSON.	MAURICE BESLY.

INCLUSIVE FEE FOR THE COURSE, £3 : 3 : 0.

SUCCESS GUARANTEED OR FEE REFUNDED.

Write to-day (mentioning Musical Times) for free booklet giving particulars, testimonials, and guarantee to—

MISS LILIAS MACKINNON,

1, PAULTONS SQUARE, CHELSEA, LONDON, S.W.3.

Miss Mackinnon will give a Scriabin Recital at Wigmore Hall, on Tuesday, December 7th.

TO ALL

PIANISTS AND ORGANISTS

MR. FOORT, who broadcasts every week an Organ Recital from 2LO, is one of my valued pupils, and writes me as follows:

New Gallery Kinema,
Regent Street, W.1.
August 29th, 1926

Dear Mr. Macdonald Smith,

I take this opportunity of letting you know that I am continuing to use your System with the finest results, and as my professional work keeps me so busy that there is little opportunity to practise, I find it of the greatest value. The exercises alone save many weary hours of keyboard work, enabling one to get flexibility and finger-control far more easily and efficiently than by the out-of-date method of scales, arpeggios, &c. I recommend your System to beginners and advanced players alike whenever occasion arises. Yours sincerely,

Reginald Foort

F.R.C.O.

(Solo Organist)

MANY eminent musicians, including the late SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, have used and highly recommended my Brain to Keyboard Course—the ORIGINAL POSTAL SYSTEM—just an easily acquired method with much better and quicker results.

20,000 Successful Pupils.

MY illustrated book, "Light on Pianoforte Playing," will be gladly sent to any Pianist. It fully explains the principles and advantages of the methods used in the System. When applying, please do not omit to state whether an Average or Advanced Pianist. The book will be sent free of charge and post free.

M. MACDONALD SMITH, 19, BLOOMSBURY SQUARE, LONDON, W.C.1.

CORRESPONDENCE COACHING
FOR EXAMINATIONS.

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING
Mus. Doc. (Lond.)., L.R.A.M.

THIS MONTH.

1.—REVISION LESSONS
- (a) for L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Christmas. All Paper Work and viva voce questions.
- (b) for January A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O.

2.—FULL PREPARATION COURSES
- (a) for L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. April, 1927.
- (b) for 1st Mus. B. Durham, March, 1927.

NUMEROUS SUCCESSES AT FIRST ATTEMPT
IN

Final Mus. Doc.; Mus. Doc. "Exercise"; Final Mus. Bac.; Mus. Bac. "Exercise"; Inter. Mus. Bac.; A. & L. Mus. T.C.L.; A. & L.T.C.L.; A. & F.R.C.O.; L.R.A.M. & A.R.C.M.

Candidates who are entering for the first time, and also those who have previously failed to pass any examination, should communicate with

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING,
46, CLARENDON ROAD,
REDLAND, BRISTOL.

Telephone: Bristol 3033.

"MASTERY OF THE KEYBOARD."
C. Palmer.

SIGHT-READING LESSONS.

Complete Course of Six Postal Lessons.

PRESS EXTRACTS.

The Times: "Deals with the subject systematically from the first stage."

Musical Times: "The idea is so simple and practical that we wonder it has not been dealt with systematically long ago."

Music: "Mr. Denham goes fully and thoroughly into his subject from every possible standpoint. Cannot fail to be of service.

Aberdeen Press and Journal: "The scarcity of good sight-readers, and even among capable pianists, is proof of the need for a more systematised form of training than obtains at present, and Mr. Denham's system has the double advantage of being both simple and practical."

Personal Lessons if desired.

GEORGE DENHAM, L.R.A.M., Etc.,
41, Avondale Road, S. Croydon; and 32, Wigmore Street, W.1.

PIANO PEDALS, with Octave Coupler

This wonderful invention supersedes all Piano Pedals, and is a Master Patent

St. George's Hall, Liverpool,
9th April, 1921.

"The simplicity of the attachment, and the clever sixteen-feet, eight-feet, or both combined, 'OPTIONAL OCTAVE' contrivance astonished me.

"I was delighted with the Pedal touch and with the variety in that touch, which your Attachment makes possible. It is very responsive to the movements of the feet, and is reliable."

HERBERT F. ELLINGFORD, Mus. Bac., Oxon., F.R.C.O.

Owing to increased output, we have reduced the price of our Popular Model to 14 guineas cash. Deferred payments if desired.

Write for Lists, Prices, and Clients' Opinions, and References to

THE MALKIN PATENT PEDAL CO., Ltd.,
NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME.

London address: 11, Ashlake Road, Streatham, S.W.16.

MODERN CORR. COLLEGE

PRINCIPAL:

ARTHUR McALISTER, B.A. (CANTAB.).

YOUR DEGREE FOR ONE POUND PER MONTH

The value of a Degree to all professional men and women and especially to those engaged in teaching Music cannot be over-estimated.

The Principal of the "Modern" urges all such to obtain a University Degree at the first opportunity, and has arranged special courses and individual tuition to meet each pupil's requirements. These special courses are held for

MATRICULATION.	EXERCISE.
1ST MUS. BAC.	FINAL MUS. BAC.

Candidates may enrol for any of these examinations separately, but to those who join for an "Inclusive Course" (Matriculation, 1st Mus. Bac., Exercise, and Final) the "Modern" offers specially reduced terms.

For the fee of two pounds down and 18 payments of one pound per month, the "Modern" guarantees tuition for Matriculation, 1st Mus. Bac., Exercise, and Final.

NOTE THE FOLLOWING POINTS:

1. The first instalment of fee is due at the time of joining, and the remaining 18 instalments are due on the first day of each succeeding month.
2. Those who take the Shortened Matriculation, are allowed a reduction of one pound.
3. Those who have already matriculated may take an "Inclusive" 1st Mus. Bac. Exercise and Final Course for £15.
4. Students giving up a course for any reason, are not liable for further fees beyond the pound due on the first of the next month.
5. There is no need to rush the examination. Students work at their own speed.
6. Special Terms to Associates and Fellows of the Royal College of Organists.

MODERN CORR. COLLEGE

"CLOVELLY," 20, SHERWIN ROAD, NOTTINGHAM.

LONDON

Musical Competition Festival.

President: H. H. PRINCESS HELENA VICTORIA.
Chairman: ARTHUR R. SAUNDERS, Esq., F.R.C.O.
Vice-Chairman: Dr. R. WALKER ROBSON, F.T.C.L., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.

THE TWENTY-SECOND ANNUAL COMPETITIONS will be held at
CENTRAL HALL, WESTMINSTER,
MARCH 21st to APRIL 2nd, 1927 (Sunday excepted), in all Musical Subjects, viz.:
Choral, Vocal, and Instrumental Solos and Ensembles.
Also Theory, Composition, Elocution, and Country Dances.

ADJUDICATORS:
J. PERCY BAKER, H. L. BALFOUR, WILTON COLE, E. T. COOK, MAURICE D'OISLY, T. F. DUNHILL, SPENCER DYKE, ERNEST FOWLES, Mdme. EDITH HANDS, WELTON HICKIN, Dr. E. F. HORNER, FREDK. KEEL, DOUGLAS KENNEDY, STEWART MACPHERSON, Dr. STANLEY MARCHANT, DAN PRICE, ERNEST READ, W. H. REED, Dr. WALKER ROBSON, ARTHUR R. SAUNDERS, KENNEDY SCOTT, Dr. SYDNEY SCOTT, Dr. FREDK. SHINN, Rev. H. T. SPENCER, Mrs. HELEN TRUST, MISS KATIE THOMAS, and Dr. JOHN WARRINER.

Syllabus (post 1*d.*) from the Hon. Secretary,
T. Lester Jones, 130, Belgrave Road, Wanstead, London, E.11.

MENDELSSOHN SCHOLARSHIP.

A SCHOLARSHIP at the rate of not less than £100 a year is now vacant.

The qualification for election is "a decided talent for music, exhibited in composition."

Candidates of either sex, being single and natives of Great Britain or any part of Ireland, are eligible for election, provided that they are below the age of thirty on the 1st May, 1927, when the list of entries will be closed.

Further particulars may be obtained from the Hon. Secretary,
Mr. J. F. R. STAINER,
The Old Rectory, Ashtead, Epsom.

THE LONDON COLLEGE FOR CHORISTERS.
6 and 7, Blomfield Crescent, Paddington, W.2.
Founder: Mr. JAMES BATES.

Solo Boys and Chorus Boys supplied at short notice for Church Services, &c. Telephone: Paddington 5990. Sec., Arthur G. Bates.

TO COMPOSERS.

MR. NICHOLAS GATTY

is prepared to undertake the revision and arrangement of MSS., and to advise on any matter concerning composition and orchestration.
For terms, &c., apply, 12, Upper George Street, W.1.

A.R.C.O. EXAMINATION AIDS.

A series of practical papers outlining courses of study and giving helpful hints with expert advice on the following Tests:

SOLO-PLAYING.	SCORE-READING.
TRANSPOSITION.	ACCOMPANIMENT (with list of 75 Solos).
ESSAY.

3*s.* each. 10*s.* 6*d.* the set.

At the request of many who have derived valuable help from the above, the writer has now prepared a similar AID to the

A.R.C.O. PAPER-WORK TESTS.
Price 5*s.*

"A.R.C.O. EXAMn. AIDS," 166, County Road, Walton, Liverpool.

IF MEMORISING IS YOUR WEAKNESS

do not hesitate to send for my Free descriptive Book on this all-absorbing subject. Think what a tremendous asset it is to be able to play from memory any piece which is within your technical capabilities.

Imagine how gratifying it would be to be able to sit down at the Piano — or take up the Violin—and rattle off half-a-dozen pieces from memory! No more need for that disappointing excuse about having "left your music at home."

If you are a Pianist—Violinist—'Cellist—Organist—I guarantee to give you this fascinating ability—to teach you by my short correspondence Course to play from memory with ease, certainty, and perfect confidence.

The Master-Method OF Memory-Playing

NO KNOWLEDGE OF HARMONY REQUIRED.
REPETITION ELIMINATED.
SUCCESS GUARANTEED.

POST COUPON FOR FREE BOOK.

(Unsealed envelope, ½d. stamp only.)

MR. REGINALD C. FOORT, F.R.C.O.,
19, BEACON HOUSE, HEMSTAL ROAD,
LONDON, N.W.6.

Please send me, free and post free, a copy of your Book, "The Master-Method of Memory-Playing." I play the Piano, Violin, 'Cello, Organ, and am a Beginner, Intermediate, Advanced Player. (Cross out which do not apply to you.)

Name.....
(Mr., Mrs., or Miss.)

Address.....

(4) .....

PIANOS

MEMBERS

OF THE PROFESSION

desiring instruments for Pupils, &c., are invited to inspect the varied stock of over 500 new and second-hand Pianos from 25 to 1,000 guineas

MAPLE & Co. Ltd.

TOTTENHAM COURT ROAD W1

THE TECHNIQUER

Invented and Patented by R. J. PITCHER, Mus.Bac.

FOR FLEXING, STRENGTHENING, STRETCHING, and DEVELOPING THE HANDS.

Send for testimony of LAMOND, POUISHNOFF, FRYER, REDDIE, WALENN, and many other eminent musicians.

"The excellent 'Techniquer' of Mr. Pitcher has been used by the writer with advantage. It does a good many things."—The Music Teacher, April, 1926.

Treatise on "Hand Development," with Photos, 1*s.* 6*d.*

Full particulars from the Secretary—

MISS F. J. FITCH, F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M.,

21, Boundary Road, N.W.8. 'Phone: Maida Vale 1715.

REVISED EDITION.

YOUNG SINGERS.

Their Voice Cultivation and Preservation.

A concise, comprehensive, and up-to-date guide to all engaged in teaching voice production and singing to girls and boys, by

JAMES BATES

(Lecturer on Voice Culture, English Phonetics, and Class Singing at the Royal Academy of Music, 1908-1926; and for the London Education Committee, 1910-1926. Twenty-four years Choirmaster at Christ Church, Lancaster Gate, London. Twenty years Teacher of Voice Production and Class Singing at the Roedean School for Girls, Brighton, &c.)

"Young Singers" gives in condensed form the results of the Author's forty years' study of young voices and of an unique experience in teaching Voice Production, Enunciation, and Singing to girls and boys.

To be obtained from:—

MESSRS. STAINER & BELL, 58, Berners Street, London, W.1.

Price One Shilling.

MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS REVISED.

LYRICS SET TO MUSIC, MELODIES HARMONIZED, MUSIC TRANSPOSED AND COPIED, BAND PARTS WRITTEN, MSS. PREPARED FOR PUBLICATION BY A MASTER HAND, ACCOMPANIMENTS OF DISTINCTION WRITTEN TO SONGS.

For terms, write, A. CARRINGTON BRIGGS, Glennholme, The Common, Hessle, E. Yorks.

ORCHESTRAS, SCHOOL AND AMATEUR.

"OTHO" OVERTURE BY HANDEL.

Arranged for String Orchestra, with or without Wind.

By H. W. HUNT, Mus. Doc.

Score, 3*s.* 6*d.* Piano and Harmonium, 2*s.* Single Parts, 6*d.*

Copies sent on approval, post free.

H. F. W. DEANE & SONS The Year Book Press, Ltd., 31, Museum Street, London, W.C.1.

EXPERIENCE AND REPUTATION

BY APPOINTMENT.

Over thirty years' experience in the manufacture of Organ Blowing Machinery is behind the fine reputation held by the "DISCUS" Organ Blower. During this period, installations have been made with complete success to a very large number of Cathedrals, Churches, and Public Buildings both at home and abroad. We can supply blowers to suit any size or type of organ, and the motive power may be either electricity, gas, or oil. Our wide and varied experience is at your disposal. Write now for a free copy of our illustrated booklet, "Organ Blowing," and let us supply free estimate and suggestions from your particulars.

THE "DISCUS"

REGD. TRADE MARK.

ORGAN BLOWER.

SOLE MAKERS

WATKINS & WATSON,

WHITE LION STREET,

LONDON, N.1.

Telephone: North 2039.

PROFESSIONAL NOTICES.

MISS WINIFRED DENHAM (A.R.C.M.).
SOPRANO.
"A clear, well-produced voice—exceedingly well sung."—Musical Standard.
41, Avondale Road, South Croydon.

F. WOLFSOHN KIRBY (TENOR)
For Oratorios, Choral Works, Concerts, &c.
17, Bournemouth Road, Merton Park, S.W.19.

MISS VYRA DAVID MEZZO.
ORATORIO, LIEDER, AND OPERATIC
(Bach, Speciality).
(Laureate of the Brussels Conservatoire).
43, Heathfield Road, S.W.18.

MISS LYDIA JOHN
(A.R.A.M., L.R.A.M.), CONTRALTO.
Concerts, Oratorios, Organ Recitals, &c.
Recital-Lectures of Folk-Songs, Elizabethan Songs, &c.
Pupils received for Voice-Production and Singing.
Prepared for L.R.A.M., Associated Board, &c.
28, ALBION ROAD, LONDON, N.W.6.
Tel.: Primrose Hill, 3869.
Lessons given at West-End Studio or above address.

EVELYNE KING (L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.)
CONTRALTO.
All Modern and Standard Works.
BACH a speciality.
Works prepared at very short notice,
Also Dinners, Concerts, At Homes, &c.
Vacancies for Pupils in Voice-Production and Singing.
Studios at Berners Street, W.1.
Apply, 117, HAMPSTEAD WAY, N.W.11.
'Phone: Speedwell 2209.

MR. LEONARD GOWINGS
TENOR.
Now RESIDENT in London, and available for Concert and Oratorio engagements.
210, Adelaide Road, N.W.3. Tel.: Primrose Hill 3036.

EDMUND LANG
TENOR
ORATORIO, CONCERTS, ETC.
47, Leigh Road, Highbury, N.5.

LANGDALE BROWN
BASS-BARITONE.
MESSIAH, ELIJAH, CHRISTMAS ORATORIO, ETC.
29, Sedgeford Road, W.12. 'Phone, Riverside 4353.

VERNON HARRISS,
L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., Gold Medalist. BASS.
Oratorio, Concerts. Vocal Coach and Adjudicator.
Senior Music Master, Downside School, near Bath.

OLIVER ORCHARD BARITONE.
ORATORIO, CONCERTS, ETC.
"Cowley Bank," Thetford Road, New Malden, Surrey.

REGINALD PENDRED
BASS-BARITONE.
ORATORIOS, CONCERTS, ETC.,
Terms Moderate.
90, Palatine Road, N.16.

FRANK POULTON (L.R.A.M.).
BASSO-CANTANTE.
Available for Oratorio, Choral Societies, &c.
33, Hounslow Avenue, Hounslow. 'Phone: Hounslow 1536.

VICTOR UTTING (L.R.A.M.).
BARITONE, ROCHESTER CATHEDRAL.
56, Boundary Road, Chatham, Kent.

MAUD GRUNDY (HARPIST).
Can accept single engagements for Choral Societies, &c., in the North, prior to and after Scottish Orchestra season.
17, Narcissus Road, London, N.W.6.

VOICE-PRODUCTION AND SINGING.

ALBERT GARCIA
CARRIES ON THE TRADITIONS OF HIS GRANDFATHER, THE LATE MANUEL GARCIA.
STUDIO: 59, QUEEN'S ROAD, N.W.8.

R. ARNOLD GREIR
F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M.
Organist to the Royal Choral Society, London.
RECITALIST AND ACCOMPANIST.
2, Highview Road, West Ealing, W.13. Ealing 0201.

ELIZABETH LEVY
L.R.A.M., GOLD MEDALLIST.
TOBIAS MATTHAY'S PIANOFORTE METHOD taught by her at pupils' houses or her studio. SPECIAL COACHING for Scholarships, Medals, and all Examinations. 52, Fairhazel Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.6.

MISS MARY LINDSAY
L.R.A.M. (Teacher's Diploma).
Gives lessons in Voice Production and Singing.
Moderate Terms.
17, Cromwell Road, South Kensington. Tel.: Western 3595.

HARRY LYTTLER
SOLO FLUTE (AND PICCOLO), L.R.A.M.
London, 2LO. and Provincial Concerts.
Concerts, Recitals, Masonics, &c., also Tuition.
20, Hampstead Road, London, N.W.1. 'Phone: Museum 3236.

ARTHUR MANGELSDORFF SOLO PIANIST
FOR BEETHOVEN CENTENARY.
CONCERTS AND RECITALS.
BEETHOVEN'S SONATAS.
For terms, apply to ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

MISS NORAH TOWNEND, A.R.C.M.
EXPERIENCED PIANIST AND ACCOMPANIST.
Apply, 38, Heathfield Road, Acton, W.3. 'Phone: Chiswick 0384.

MISS MARY WILSON, F.R.A.M.
Professor of Singing at the Royal Academy of Music, London,
Gives SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS to Candidates entering for the L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Singing Teachers' Diplomas.
Particulars on application.
Address: 10, Harley Street, London, W.1.

MISS MARGARET WITHY
(A.R.C.M., L.T.C.L.).
Postal Tuition for L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., and T.C.L. paper-work.
Practical work (Pianoforte). Personal lessons in Bath or Salisbury.
Full particulars from 29, Church Field, Salisbury.

MR. J. C. BRYDSON
MUS. BAC. (DUNELM.), L. MUS. T.C.L.
POSTAL TUITION FOR DEGREES AND DIPLOMAS.
(ORDINARY AND GUARANTEE COURSES.)
Tuition also in SINGLE SUBJECTS.
SPECIAL HARMONY and COUNTERPOINT COURSE,
Half-a-Guinea for 10 Lessons.
Send for particulars of Scholarships and offer to new students.
Address: "BALCARY," KEGWORTH, NR. DERBY.

CORRESPONDENCE COACHING.
University Degrees, R.A.M., R.C.M., R.C.O., and T.C.L. Diplomas.

DR. REGINALD HUNT,
D. Mus., Lond., F.R.C.O.,
is in touch with all modern examination requirements.

ORGAN LESSONS: St. Mary's, Bryanston Square, W.1.
Address: 7, Woodgrange Avenue, North Finchley, N.12.

MR. J. PERCY BAKER, Mus. B. Dunelm., F.R.A.M., gives Postal Tuition and prepares for Examinations. Personal Lessons (Pianoforte and Theory), at 14, Hanover Street, W.1. Address, 12, Longley Road, Tooting Graveney, S.W.17.

CAPTAIN PERCY BAKER, M.C., F.R.C.O., L. Mus. T.C.L. (Author of "Compend of Musical Knowledge," "Studies in History and Form," &c.). Specialist in Tuition by post for T.C.L. and R.C.O. Essay Models, Sight-Reading Courses, Study Aids, 9*d*. Studies in Modulation, 3*s*.

Send for interesting Pamphlets on Methods.

HAZELDENE, TEWKESBURY.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:—

(1.) L.R.A.M. Paper Work.
(2.) A.R.C.M. Paper Work.
(3.) Interesting Courses of Study in Rudiments, Harmony, Form, &c.

L.R.A.M. Exams. 1910-26 ... 301 Correspondence Pupils successful.
A.R.C.M. Exams. 1914-26 ... 81 " " "

MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., Waterloo Buildings, Piccadilly, Manchester.

In response to many requests, MR. BIBBY begs to announce that he has prepared the following additional CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:

(1.) The "Mus. Bac." Degree.
(2.) A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O. Paper Work.
(3.) A.T.C.L. and L.T.C.L. Paper Work.
(4.) The Associated Board Examinations in Rudiments, Harmony, and Counterpoint.

(Address as above.)

MR. BIBBY also gives PERSONAL Lessons in Manchester. Complete Preparation (Practical and Paper Work) for L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., A.T.C.L., &c. Address as above.

MR. ALLAN BROWN, F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Organist and Musical Director, The City Temple), 298, Balham High Road, S.W.17. Telephone: Battersea 0916.

Special preparation for F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O. Also L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. ORGAN EXAMINATIONS.

SINGLE LESSONS and PRACTICE on facsimile R.C.O. instrument. Pieces registered.

RECENT SUCCESSES IN ORGAN WORK:

1 L.R.A.M., Dec., 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.
1 A.R.C.M., April, 1920.	1 A.R.C.O., July, 1921.
1 L.R.A.M., April, 1924.	3 A.R.C.O., July, 1922.
1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1922.	1 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1923.
1 F.R.C.O., July, 1922.	4 A.R.C.O., July, 1923.
3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1923.	1 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1924.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1923.	3 A.R.C.O., July, 1924.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1925.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1925.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1925.	5 A.R.C.O., July, 1925.
1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1926.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1926.
4 F.R.C.O., July, 1926.	4 A.R.C.O., July, 1926.

"Hints for R.C.O. Candidates" to be obtained from the Publishers, Reid Bros., 26, Eastcastle Street, Oxford Circus, W.1.

FRANCIS CRUTE, A.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., prepares for all Exams, including L.R.A.M., and A.R.C.M. Many recent Successes.
2, Muncaster Road, S.W.11; or 60, Berners Street, W.1.

SINGING LESSONS TAUGHT by Madame ROSA GLYN (Italian Style). 27, Gloucester Street, Victoria, S.W.1.

SELF-PREPARATION.

(THEORETICAL AND PRACTICAL.)

Many Music Students are at times perplexed, where but a little guidance will help them towards their goal.
Single Lesson, or Course by arrangement.

A. GRAVES, F.R.C.O., 30, Salop Road, Oswestry.

FREDERICK GREEN, L.R.A.M., ETC. Voice Specialist, Vocal Coach, and Adjudicator. Preparation for L.R.A.M. c/o Rushworth & Dreaper, 11, Islington, Liverpool.

DR. CUTHBERT HARRIS, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O., SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE TUITION. 410 Successes in Mus. D., Mus. B., F.R.C.O., and A.R.C.O., &c. 58, Avondale Road, Gorleston-on-Sea.

DR. HARRIS REVISES and PREPARES MSS. FOR PUBLICATION. Accompaniments to Songs written.

MISS H. HEALE COACHES for all EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC (at private residence or at West-End Studio), in Pianoforte, Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, Form, Orchestration, "Teaching," Modulation, Transposition, &c. For Terms, &c., apply, Dunraven House, 41, Albert Bridge Road, S.W.11.

DR. CHASTEY HECTOR, D. Mus. Oxon., 1922, L.R.A.M., instructs Candidates, personally or by post, for Degrees and Diplomas in Music. "The Downs," Old Shoreham Road, Hove, Sussex.

HERBERT HODGE, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M., Organist and Choirmaster, St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, Queen Victoria Street, London, has, since 1908, made a speciality of coaching Candidates for the Organ Playing Examinations of the Royal College of Organists, and can arrange a private course of instruction (or single lessons) to organists visiting London, at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey. Many recent F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O. successes.
5, Streatham Place, S.W.2. Telephone: Streatham 2195.

A. EAGLEFIELD HULL, Mus. Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O. For Lectures, address E. L. Robinson Direction, 199, Piccadilly, London, W.1; for personal and correspondence lessons, address Dr. Eaglefield Hull, 19, Berners Street, W.1. For Organ Recitals, address Secretary, 48, New North Rd., Huddersfield.

DR. A. G. IGGULDEN, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O. SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE COACHING. Latest Successes: Durham, Sept. 1926. Mus. Doc., 6 Final Mus. Bac. and two 1st Mus. Bac. passes. Other recent successes, Mus. Doc. and Mus. Bac. Exs. after prelim. course in composition. 180 successes at Durham alone, besides R.C.O. Diplomas. The Durdans, Reigate.

DR. F. J. KARN (Mus. Bac. Cantab.; Mus. Doc. Toronto) continues to give lessons in Harmony and other Theoretical subjects, and prepares for all Musical Examinations. Compositions revised and Analyses written. Candidates prepared by Dr. Karn have gained the Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc. degrees at the Universities and diplomas from the Musical Colleges.

Address: 106, Haverstock Hill, London, N.W.3.

DR. KNOWLES (Manchester 1919, Durham 1920) specialises in preparing candidates by post for the Paper-work of all examinations in music. Solutions, with methods of working. Address, "Cramond," Oakhurst Avenue, East Barnet, London, N

MR. C. E. de M. LEATHES, M.A., Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O. Tuition in Piano, Harmony, Composition, &c. Pupils successfully prepared for all examinations. Cramer's Studios, 139, Bond Street, W.1, and 128, Kensington High St., W.8.

DR. ORLANDO A. MANSFIELD, Mus. Doc., University of Toronto; F.R.C.O., F.A.G.O., &c., Sirsa House, Cheltenham. Correspondence Lessons. Revision of MSS. Scoring, editing, and arranging. Examination pieces analysed and annotated.

MISS F. HELENA MARKS, Author of "The Sonata: Its Form and Meaning," prepares for L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., and all other examinations, Pianoforte, Harmony, "Form and Teaching," &c. Personal or Correspondence Lessons in all Paper-Work subjects, including those for L.R.A.M., "Aural Training and Sight-Singing," and A.R.C.M. in "The Teaching of Musical Appreciation," &c. Pupils received and visited for the Pianoforte. Many recent successes L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c.

10, Matheson Road, London, W.14.

DR. H. H. L. MIDDLETON, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Twenty-five years' experience in Private Tuition and Coaching for Degrees. More than 800 of Dr. Middleton's Pupils have obtained Degrees at the Universities, R.A.M., R.C.M., and R.C.O. Address, 60, Berners Street, W.1.

CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS.

Graded Lessons especially prepared to suit individual needs—every student assured of personal care and attention. Rudiments, Harmony, Counterpoint, Orchestration, &c. Preparation for Diplomas and other examinations. Interesting courses also for those not wishing to enter examinations.

ALFRED MORRIS, L. Mus. T.C.L., 9, West Lorne Street, Chester.

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., A.T.C.L. Exams. Correspondence lessons in Harmony, Form, Teaching, &c. 23 pupils' successes. Moderate terms. Arthur W. Morrison, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c., 39, Clarendon Road, Fulwood, Sheffield.

MR. R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M. (Double Dip. Singing and Piano), L.R.A.M., Class A, Performer and Teacher.
Prof. Singing, G.S.M., 1905-1915. Special Lect. on Musical Appreciation to L.C.C.
"Recit. and its Rendering." 1*s*. 6*d*. "Vade Mecum for Singers." 6*d*.
Preparation for all Exams. by Post and Personal Lessons.
Special Courses of Papers: Singing, Piano, Touch, Musical Appreciation, &c.
Nearly 1,000 Successes for Degrees and Diplomas.
Send for Prospectus,
21, Boundary Road, N.W.8. 'Phone: Maida Vale 1715.

W. J. FREDERICK PUGH, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., prepares for L.R.A.M. (Aural Culture and Voice Culture Diplomas), A.R.C.M. (Appreciation Diploma). Recent Successes. 34, Wilmington Avenue, Chiswick, W.4. Chiswick 3267.

DR. TAYLOR'S POSTAL PUPILS HAVE passed Mus. Bac. 1st and final. A.R.C.O.; L.R.A.M.; A.T.C.L. Pupil gained the Stillie Bursary at Glasgow for Counterpoint. Latest success, A.R.C.O. for 1924. Portland Place, Lancaster.

W. G. WEBBER, F.R.C.O. Recitalist, &c. Preparation for Exams. Organ lessons given on new four-manual Willis. Address, Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road, London, S.E.1.

DR. PERCY WOOD, Mus. Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O.
SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:
(1) Elementary Harmony and Counterpoint.
(2) F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O.
(3) A.R.C.M. (Theory of Music).
(4) A. Mus. T.C.L. and L. Mus. T.C.L.
Several recent successes in all these examinations.
R.C.O. EXAMINER says: "Your system is undoubtedly an excellent one."

SUCCESS GUARANTEED—given any pupils with the requisite musical ability for the examination in view.

285 A.R.C.O. Successes since 1909.
180 F.R.C.O. " " "

RECENT SUCCESSES IN PAPER WORK.

2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1916.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1916.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1916.	5 A.R.C.O., July, 1916.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1917.	2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1917.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1917.	4 A.R.C.O., July, 1917.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.	2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.
4 F.R.C.O., July, 1918.	2 A.R.C.O., July, 1918.
1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., July, 1919.
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.	10 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1920.	6 A.R.C.O., July, 1920.
3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.	7 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.
6 F.R.C.O., July, 1921.	8 A.R.C.O., July, 1921.
5 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1922.	5 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1922.
4 F.R.C.O., July, 1922.	5 A.R.C.O., July, 1922.
8 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1923.	6 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1923.
7 F.R.C.O., July, 1923.	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1923.
7 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1924.	9 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1924.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1924.	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1924.
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1925.	8 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1925.
7 F.R.C.O., July, 1925.	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1925.
5 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1926.	6 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1926.
6 F.R.C.O., July, 1926.	6 A.R.C.O., July, 1926.

"Tralee," Warwick Road, Cliftonville, Margate.

CORRESPONDENCE TUITION. Any Exam., R.C.O., T.C.L., &c. Complete Training. One guinea ten lessons. Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, History, Form, Hints on Aural Tests, &c. "W. P. W., F.R.C.O.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

YOUNG LADY (Registered Teacher, L.R.A.M.) desires a part-time post as Teacher of Pianoforte and Theory. Leeds or Bradford district preferred. "F. E.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

SOLO SINGING.—Highly-qualified Lady Teacher wishes to purchase Teaching Connection. West-End of London. "M.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

LEARN TO IMPROVISE and to play and accompany by ear without always having to depend on written music.
By means of a short postal course, I guarantee to IMPROVE YOUR MUSICIANSHIP so as to enable you easily to do this, and at the same time to develop your MUSICAL IMAGINATION, MEMORY, CONFIDENCE, and to improve your playing beyond recognition.
No knowledge of harmony is necessary, and my course is available for all instrumentalists.
Send P. C. for my free booklet, and state whether beginner, elementary, or advanced.
MR. H. CRAWFORD, KINGSLEY GREEN, HASLEMERE.

DR. E. T. SWEETING: (Address) Rydal, Lemsford Road, St. Albans. Tel.: St. Albans 989.

ALTO REQUIRED.—£20. Dr. R. H. Hunt, St. Mary's, Bryanston Square, W.1.

ALTO (male) desires POST. Good reader, ten years' full church experience. "G. G. T.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

CONTRALTO WANTED to join Soprano. Duettists. Write, stating experience, &c., to "F. L.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

TENOR and BASS WANTED. All Saints', Devonshire Road, South Lambeth. £12. "W. A.," 21, Thurlestone Road, S.E.27.

TENOR REQUIRED. Brondesbury Baptist Church, N.W.6. Must read well, and be familiar with standard Arias. Two Sunday services and Wednesday rehearsal. Salary £20. Apply by letter, "Tenor," 175, Chevening Road, N.W.6.

TENOR WANTED, also SECOND ALTO, for Christ Church, Marylebone (close to Edgware Road and Marylebone Stations). Sight-reading essential. Duties light. Write, C. E. Miller, 11, Kensington Hall Gardens, W.14.

WANDSWORTH PARISH CHURCH.—BASS WANTED, good reader essential. Two Services Sunday: one practice weekly. £15. Apply, W. C. Barnes, Organist.

ROCHESTER CATHEDRAL.
VACANCY for BASS LAY-CLERK. Salary, £100. Applications, on forms to be obtained from the Chapter Clerk, The Precinct, Rochester, should be sent in by 11th December, 1926.

ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER WANTED for St. Paul's, Cliftonville, Margate. New 4-manual organ. Salary according to experience and qualifications. Write, giving names of referees, to Vicar.

ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER.—The Trustees of Mostyn Road, Brixton, Wesleyan Church invite applications for this post. Keen choir. Wesleyan preferred. Duties to begin February 1st. Applications, by letter only, with testimonials, to Mr. J. D. Archer, 107, Burton Road, Brixton, S.W.9.

WANTED.—ORGANIST-CHOIRMASTER, St. Peter's, Sudbury, Suffolk. Fine 3-manual Lewis organ—hydraulic-pneumatic. State salary required. Apply Rector.

ORGANIST-CHOIRMASTER REQUIRED for North London Nonconformist Church. Efficient mixed choir, 3-manual organ. State experience and salary required. Address, "S. J. C.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

JERSEY.
WANTED at once, ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER for St. Helier's Parish Church, to hold also the appointment of MUSIC MASTER at Victoria College (Public School).
Promising opening for keen young musician.
Applications not later than December 15 to Headmaster, Victoria College, from whom full particulars can be obtained.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER requires Post. Good training and experience. Within a reasonable distance of Kingston preferred. "D. H.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

AN ORGAN COMPETITION, open to Organists from any District, will be held at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey on Saturday Afternoon, March 26th, 1927, in connection with the London Musical Competition Festival.
Candidates will be required to play Smart's Andante in G, No. 4 of Smart's Compositions for the Organ (Novello).
Apply for Syllabus, T. LESTER JONES, Hon. Secretary, 130, Belgrave Road, Wanstead, London, E.11.

MISS LILIAN TROTT, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M., L.R.A.M., will give an ORGAN RECITAL (1,930th) at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, E.C., on Tuesday, December 7th, at 1 p.m.

KETTERING EISTEDDFOD, February 16th to 19th, 1927. Syllabus free, from C. Adams, 108, Windmill Avenue, Kettering.

ORGAN PHOTOGRAPHS.—St. Paul's Cathedral. Old and new consoles. Old case. 5*s.* each. Critical definition; every stop readable. Benham, "Bramerton," New Barnet.

PARTNER WANTED.—Small Music Publishing Company. Apply, William C. Benson, Estate Agent, Borough Salerooms, Hallgate, Wigan, Lancs.

PIANO TEACHING EXAMS., A.R.C.M., L.R.A.M. Outline Course of Instruction, 5*s.*; Studies Special purposes (first bars), 5*s.*; Five Test Papers for A.R.C.M., 25*s.* "J. H.," Mus.Bac., L.R.A.M., c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ORGAN PRACTICE.—1*s.* 4*d.* an hour (pupils, 9*d.*). Hydraulic-blown, two-manual and pedal organ, at the Fulham School of Music, 2, Edgarley Terrace, S.W.6.
ORGAN LESSONS at St. Stephen's Walbrook, E.C.4. Large three-manual organ. Moderate fees. Special courses of combined lessons and practice for inclusive fees. Write for prospectus.
G. J. METZLER, F.R.C.O. Tel.: Putney 4208.

CHURCH ORGANS STANDARDISED.—Two Manuals, Pneumatic Pedals, various sizes: specially built. Five to fifteen stops. Introduced to meet the requirements of the times at minimum cost. W. E. Richardson & Sons, Central Organ Works, Manchester, S.W.

ORGANS (New and Second-hand) for SALE.—Electric and pneumatic action up-to-date. Built or reconstructed. Bedwell & Son, The Cambridge Organ Works, Cambridge.

PIPE ORGANS Restored, Enlarged, Repaired, and Tuned. Attractive Terms. Henry Morgan & Son, Church Organ Builders, 19, Cowdrey Road, Wimbledon, London. Established 1896.

BELOW PRE-WAR PRICE.—Two-manual Pedal ORGAN. New condition. Also Schiedmayer BABY GRAND. Excellent order. "J. B.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

PIANO and PEDAL BOARD (Rummens) ATTACHMENT, FOR SALE. In perfect condition. "I.," 89, Grosvenor Avenue, Carshalton, Surrey.

BECKHARDT OVERSTRUNG BOUDOIR GRAND FOR SALE.—£90; nearly new. Room wanted. Mr. G. Rutter, 80, Mark Lane, E.C.3. Royal 3524.

MAGNIFICENT STEINWAY BOUDOIR GRAND, FOR SALE. In new condition. Price £200, or near offer. Sharman, 1, North Park Road, Roundhay, Leeds.

A BEAUTIFUL 7-octave GRAND PIANOFORTE, as new, in burr walnut case, by Kirkman. Delightful tone. A better instrument could not be found. Offers wanted. 18, Grafton Road, Worthing, Sussex.

ROSENTHAL UPRIGHT, rosewood case, beautiful tone and condition. Little used, always kept tuned. Suit appreciative player. Private sale, 50 gns. Dr. Hoare, 227, Oldfield Road, Salford.

MUSIC STUDIO TO LET, near R.A.M. Available till 10 p.m. ACCOMPANIST if desired. Write, "X. L.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

VIOLIN, attributed to "Santus Seraphin." Fine tone. Suitable for Solo or Orchestra. Price £250, or near offer. William C. Benson, Estate Agent, Borough Salerooms, Hallgate, Wigan, Lancs.

WANTED, any Music by John Henry Jay, 1770-1849. particularly his song, "How oft at eve," flute and piano accompaniment. Apply, "W. B. S. S.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

FOR SALE.—26 copies of "St. Matthew" Passion, J. S. Bach (Paxton's Edition). Price 1s. per copy. Apply, Vicar, Builth Wells, Brecknock.

FOR SALE.—One complete set of piano accompaniment pieces, L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. current exams. As new, Cost 27s., "professional." Send P.O. 21s. "F.R.C.O." 63, Horsford Road, Brixton Hill, S.W.2.

A.R.C.O. PAPERWORK. 10 Sets Specimen Exam. papers. 7s. 6d. post free, from "F.R.C.O.," 46, Anglesea Road, Ipswich.

PIANOFORTE TUNING.—Postal Lessons given by qualified Tuner. Little cost. Write for terms. W. Cawson, Bankfield House, 117, Armley Road, Leeds.

MUSIC COPYING.—Transpositions, Band Parts, Arrangements. Smith, 40, Coniston Rd., Muswell Hill, N.10.

MUSIC COMPOSERS and LYRIC WRITERS.—Songs, Lyrics, and Musical Compositions Wanted for Publication. We compose Music to Lyrics if desired. Advice free to new authors and composers. Send MSS. (words or music) to the Carlton Music Agency, 8, Lloyd Square, London, W.C.1.

ON SALE.—Set Small Tymps. Bass Drum. Capital-toned Harmonium. Double-Bass. Whittaker, 20, Central Drive, Blackpool.

HAYDN WALSH SCORES for Orchestra, Brass or Military Bands, Artistic accompaniments written; Music copied. Moderate terms. 72, St. Pancras, Chichester.

FREE.—Catalogue of Posters for Dances, Concerts, Operas, and all Musical Events. Stafford & Co., Ltd., Netherfield, Nottingham.

A TREATISE ON CONDUCTING.
12,000 WORDS. ILLUSTRATED METHOD.
2s. Post free. (800 Copies sold.)
Invaluable to Leaders and Members of any Orchestra, Band, or Choir.
M. T. Cooper, M.D., 23, Beech Avenue, Blackpool.

COMMUNION SERVICE in F, complete, with 9-fold Kyrie. Specimen 1s., from R. R. Glendinning, 13, Langton Terrace, Falmouth.

"WE WILL MERRIE BE." Charming Song, by Florence Mackintosh. Old English style. In two keys. 2s. each net. Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour St., London, W.1.

"WINGS OF NIGHT." Grand new Song. Just Issued; all Music Sellers, 2s. net. Professional copy free from E. Birch, 216, Acre Lane, Brixton, S.W.2.

PALESTRINA.—Choice Selections from, set as Short Anthems (S.A.T.B.), to English words. Specimen copies gratis to Choirmasters, from Dr. H. G. Smith, St. Margaret's, N.C.R., Dublin.

"MARY, MAIDEN-MOTHER." CAROL by GERALD MILLER. Easy and tuneful. Words and music, 1½d. per copy. Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour St., W.1.

ESSAY.—A.R.C.O. (Jan., 1927), on the book "WILLIAM BYRD." A first, and second, Series of 6 MODEL ESSAYS, with valuable hints. Very important. Successful. For each Series enclose P.O. 4s. 6d. to "Essays," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

EAR-TESTS, F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O. Special Paper showing how to Succeed. Exceptionally important. State whether F.R.C.O. or A.R.C.O. paper required. Enclose P.O. 4s. 6d. to "Ear-Test," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

AURAL TESTS.—L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c. Special Paper showing how to obtain proficiency. Very Successful. Enclose 4s. 6d. to "Aural Tests," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, London, W.1.

BASSES AND BARITONES should buy Songs by HAROLD OAKLEY (recently published): "UP SAIL!" (Compass B♭ to E♭); "THE GONDOLIER" (Compass C to C); "BEAUTY'S DAUGHTER" (Compass B♭ to E♭); "THE ERL KING" (Compass C to E♭ or F); "LOVE FOR EVER LOST" (Compass B to D or F). Price 2s. each. Weekes & Co., 14, Hanover Street, W.1.

NEW CHRISTMAS CARD FOR BOYS.
Ready December 1st.
"DON'TS FOR CHOIR BOYS."
BY JOHN NEWTON.
Price 6d. net, postage 1d.
Of HEFFER & SONS, Cambridge: and of all Booksellers.

FOR GOOD PRINTING SERVICE
. . Posters, Programmes, Announcements . .
Books of Words, Tickets, Press Opinions, &c.
BAINES & SCARSBROOK,
75, FAIRFAX ROAD, SWISS COTTAGE, N.W.6.
'Phone: Hampstead 0246 and 0247.

CHAMBER MUSIC
AND INSTRUMENTAL SOLOS.

A CATALOGUE of over 120 pages would be loaned to anyone interested in above, or a copy could be purchased outright at cost price of 1/-, abroad, 2/-.

EXACTLY WHAT IS OFFERED:—

(a) Pianoforte and Instrumental Sonatas and works for various combinations from Duos to Octets. The lists incorporate the Classics and important Moderns. Over 2,000 different numbers, including many Continental publications now generally unobtainable.

(b) Each work carefully graded as to degree of difficulty, and a readable dissertation for the principal items.

(c) The easiest works known, to the most advanced Salzburg, Venice, and Coolidge Chamber Music festival items.

(d) Solo Works and Studies for PIANOFORTE (includes five pages devoted to Spanish music), VIOLIN, VIOLA, and 'CELLO—special lists free for stamp.

(e) EXCEPTIONAL PRICES!!! Very large purchases often allow me to offer at half those ruling elsewhere.

Finally, the lists have been compiled by one who knows and appreciates the best in this most intimate form of music, and who is always willing to give the benefit of his experience to the first venturer in the Chamber Music Domain, as also to the enthusiastic collector of novelties.

From Iceland to New Zealand is a far cry, yet my despatches are known and give pleasure to numerous ensembles throughout the world.

EDWARD WM. ORGAN (Import and Export),
8, Mayfield Road, Acocks Green, Birmingham (N.).

THE SUPERB

BECHSTEIN PIANOS

You can examine a magnificent selection of Bechstein Pianos—new and second-hand—at

126, NEW BOND ST., W.1.

Can be purchased by instalments, no deposit required.

Old Pianos taken in exchange, highest value allowed.

Call or write for Catalogue.

The Autoplayer Co., Ltd.,
BECHSTEIN PIANO SPECIALISTS.
Mayfair 2653.

STEINWAY STUDIOS

COMFORTABLY FURNISHED
ELECTRIC LIGHT
CENTRAL HEATING
TELEPHONE LIFT
NEW STEINWAY PIANOS

Full particulars from
STEINWAY & SONS
THE NEW STEINWAY HALL,
1 & 2, GEORGE ST., CONDUIT ST., LONDON, W.1.
'PHONE: MAYFAIR 6641-5.

PIANOS

BY
Bechstein, Bord, Schiedmayer,
Chappell, Rogers, Gors, & Kallmann
and other celebrated makers

The Profession most cordially invited to inspect our large and varied stock of New and Second-hand Pianos. Cash, Hire, or Hire-purchase. Pianos taken in exchange

Apply for lists:
CHAS. STILES & CO.
74-76, SOUTHAMPTON ROW
LONDON, W.C.1.
'Phone: MUSEUM 0439.

CRAMER

THE trademark "Cramer, London," on any instrument guanantees all that science and art have made possible in perfecting the Pianoforte. New and second-hand Pianos on deferred terms of payment . . . . .

Call or write for Catalogue.

J. B. CRAMER & CO. LTD.
139 NEW BOND STREET W.1
128 KENSINGTON HIGH STREET
46 MOORGATE E.C.

RELIEVES COLDS PREVENTS "FLU"
VAPEX
(REG TRADE MARK)
INHALANT

WHEN WINTER COMES

WINTRY weather always finds out the weak places, and the nose and throat are especially liable to infection by the germs of colds and 'flu. Use "Vapex" regularly. Put a drop on your handkerchief each morning, and inhale from it occasionally during the day.

All Chemists, 2s. and 3s.

SOLE MAKERS:
THOMAS KERFOOT & CO., LTD.,
BARDSLEY VALE, LANCS.

THE TEST OF CRITICISM.

1/10/26. Musical Times.—The Year Book Press batch always contains some sound stuff.

1/11/26. Journal of Education.—The high standard set by the Year Book Press is reflected in this new Series of Instrumental Music. We know of no publishers who take more trouble in selecting and publishing only what is good and worthy of the dignity of print.

1/10/26. Organists' Quarterly Record.—The unison and part-songs recently issued by the Year Book Press maintain their high standard. It is doubtful if any finer list is published.

18/9/26. Times Educational Supplement.—The remaining numbers belong to the Series of Anthems and Church Music, much the most remarkable being Buck's "My Father for another night" (A. 42), a really fine and individual hymn-tune.

9/10/26. Times Educational Supplement.—The six Ancient include Nares's pleasant Sonata in B flat (A.M. 7) and a charming "Musette and Minuet" (Violin and Pianoforte) (A.M. 10) from "Alcina."

24/9/26. Education.—We are glad to see this enterprising firm giving attention to music suitable for the School Scripture lesson and "assemblies." Hymns for beginning and end of term with tunes by Stanford and Lloyd may be recommended.

23/10/26. The Girl Guide.—I feel sure that musical Companies will welcome some of these songs as valuable additions to their répertoire.

1/10/26. Scottish Educational Journal.—D. W. Stewart has set eight "Songs of Innocence" (264). Most of them are well done, and some of them are really excellent. "A Song of the Sea" (270, C. Wood) has the swing of a good old English Folk-Song, and "Trees" (265, C. Wood) has the lilt and ending (almost) of an Irish one.

18/9/26. Times Educational Supplement.—Charles Wood's "The Blossom" (269). Technically very able and musically charming.

1/10/26. Organists' Quarterly Record.—We very heartily commend an attractive series of Instrumental Music published recently by the above firm. A number of most useful arrangements for violin and pianoforte are included, and they will, we believe, be welcomed by teachers.

THE TEST OF EXPERIMENT.

Full catalogues and approval parcels post free will be sent to any address at home or abroad. When writing, please state whether samples of one, two, or three of the Series are required. There are Three of them as follows :—

YEAR BOOK PRESS SERIES OF UNISON AND PART-SONGS.
YEAR BOOK PRESS SERIES OF ANTHEMS AND CHURCH MUSIC.
YEAR BOOK PRESS SERIES OF INSTRUMENTAL MUSIC, ANCIENT AND MODERN.

H. F. W. DEANE & SONS, The Year Book Press, Ltd.,
31, Museum Street, London, W.C.1.

NOVELLO'S ELEMENTARY MUSIC MANUALS

No.

1.—PART-WRITING FOR BEGINNERS, by J. W. IVIMEY. The Rules tabulated are for the guidance of beginners in the Art of Part-writing. Many of them change from rules to recommendations, when the students become more advanced. Bound in linen covers. Price 8d.

2.—LESSONS IN HARMONIZING MELODIES, by CUTHBERT HARRIS. Many elementary students of harmony can satisfactorily add parts to figured basses, but are unable to harmonize even simple melodies. This book gives minute instruction which any student can understand. Part I. Price 2s. 6d.

3.—AN ELEMENTARY MIXED-VOICE SIGHT-SINGING COURSE (Staff Notation through Tonic Sol-fa), by GEORGE LANE. The Exercises are written in the Treble and Bass Clefs, in order that the Book may be used by Male and Female voices in one class. Suitable for Evening Continuation Schools. Part I. Price 8d.

4.—AN ELEMENTARY MIXED-VOICE SIGHT-SINGING COURSE (Staff Notation through Tonic Sol-fa), by GEORGE LANE. Part II. Price 8d.

5.—HINTS TO YOUNG VIOLINISTS, by C. EGERTON LOWE. Price 1s. 6d.

6.—LESSONS IN HARMONIZING MELODIES, by CUTHBERT HARRIS. Part II. Price 2s. 6d.

7.—ADDITIONAL EXERCISES IN HARMONIZING MELODIES, by CUTHBERT HARRIS. Price 8d.

8.—HINTS ON PIANOFORTE TEACHING (chiefly to Boys), by E. D. RENDALL. Price 2s. 6d.

9.—SCHOOL CHOIR TRAINING, by MARGARET NICHOLLS. A Practical Course of Lessons on Voice Production for the guidance of Teachers of Class Singing. Price 3s.
(The Appendix, published separately : Hints on Part-Singing and Exercises, 3d. ; Sol-fa, 3d.)

10.—THE COMPOSITION OF SIMPLE MELODIES, by ROBERT T. WHITE. Price 2s. 6d.

11.—PHYSICAL EXERCISES IN THE INFANT SCHOOL, by MARGATET A. HUGHES. Price 4s. 6d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

THIS NEW HYMN BOOK FOR CHILDREN IS THE CHEAPEST AND BEST ISSUED.

THE

CHURCH & SCHOOL HYMNAL

EARLY REVIEWS :

"At last the children have the Hymn Book they have been waiting for so long. 'The Church and School Hymnal' is A MONUMENT OF INSPIRED COMMON SENSE. Words and music alike are admirably chosen."—The Pilgrim.

"Where the children's worship needs livening up—as it does in many parishes—let this Hymnal be introduced at once. IT HAS FIRE. IT WILL ATTRACT."—The Winchester Diocesan Chronicle.

"With such a book the parish priest and the Sunday School teacher will be able to educate children in their worship TO LOVE THE BEST AND MOST VIGOROUS SACRED VERSE AND MUSIC."—The Church of England Newspaper.

A prospectus with specimen pages of each edition post free on application.

PRICES : SMALLEST TYPE, paper covers, 3*d.*; cloth, 5*d.* LARGER TYPE, paper, 4*d.*; cloth, 6*d.* LARGEST TYPE, cloth, cut flush, 1*s.*; cloth, red edges, 1*s.* 6*d.*; quarter leather, 2*s.* 6*d.* MUSIC EDITION, cloth, 3*s.* 6*d.*; cloth extra, red edges, 4*s.* 6*d.*; quarter leather, 6*s.*; full leather, 7*s.* 6*d.*

LONDON :

S.P.C.K., Northumberland Avenue. SEELEY SERVICE & Co., Ltd., Shaftesbury Avenue. C.E.S.S.I. Serjeants' Inn.

100 YEARS OF MUSIC

(From BACH to CHOPIN).

5*s.* net.

FOR TEACHERS, MUSIC-LOVERS, AND READERS OF BIOGRAPHY.

BY WM. PLATT,

Lecturer to the London County Council.

"Teachers of music will be delighted."—Daily Chronicle.

FOUNTAIN PRESS,
CLIFFORD'S INN, FLEET STREET, E.C.4.

FOYLE'S SPECIAL OFFERS.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF MUSIC. By POLE. An exhaustive treatise on the Theory or Philosophy of Music—its elements and its development—divided into three parts : (1) The Material of Music ; (2) Elementary Arrangements of the Material ; (3) The Structure of Music. (Published at 10*s.* 6*d.* net), offered (new) at 6*s.* post free.

THE MUSICAL EDUCATOR.—Published by the Caxton Publishing Co. A complete Guide to everything Musical. 5 vols. Condition as new. (Published at £3 10*s*). Our price, 25*s.* post free.

ABOVE SENT ON APPROVAL. QUOTE OFFER 122.

Visit the new and enlarged premises of Foyle's Music Dept. and inspect the large and carefully classified stock at leisure. If unable to call, write outlining requirements.

FOYLE'S MUSIC DEPT.,
119-125, CHARING CROSS ROAD, LONDON, W.C.2.

NOVELLO'S CHRISTMAS CAROLS.

LATEST NUMBERS.

No.
390.	By Nazareth's green hills ...	J. F. Bridge	2d.
391.	Sweet hours of night	H. C. Dixon	1½d.
392.	The Carollers	A. M. Goodhart	1½d.
393.	The Rose and the Lily ...	A. Rowley	1½d.
394.	Carol of the Three Kings ...	J. F. Bridge	2d.
395.	Green grows the Holly Tree ...	J. F. Bridge	1½d.
396.	The coming Christmas ...	J. F. Bridge	1½d.
397.	I sing the Birth ...	Thomas Adams	1½d.
398.	O lovely voices of the sky ...	W. G. Alcock	2d.
399.	This Day	Gerrard Williams	1½d.
*400.	Hark! what mean those Holy voices	A. Sullivan	4d.
*401.	Four Christmas Carols		2d.
	1. In Bethlehem, that noble place	B. J. Dale
	2. Sleep, Holy Babe! ...	R. W. Robson
	3. The First Christmas Night	W. H. Sangster
	4. There dwelt a King ... (Words only, 4s. per 100.)	John E. West
*402.	Silent Night	Franz Grüber	2d.
403.	Carols of Bethlehem	C. W. Pearce	2d.
	1. No room in the Inn. 2. The heavenly host. 3. Our "House of Bread."
404.	Good King Wenceslas... ...	Geoffrey Shaw	2d.
*405.	O lovely voices of the sky (Unison)	Cuthbert Harris	1½d.
*406.	Ditto. (Four Voices)	Cuthbert Harris	2d.
407.	His Birthday Keep ...	A. M. Goodhart	1½d.
408.	Christmas Cradle Song ...	J. F. Bridge	1½d.
409.	Carol, Carol, tenderly, sweetly	J. F. Bridge	1½d.
410.	Rejoice, the Christ has come	Stanley Marchant	1½d.
*411.	The shepherds found Thee by night	Geoffrey Shaw	3d.

No.
412.	The Carollers	E. Bunnett	1½d.
413.	The stars are shining bright and clear ... ... Carol, sweetly carol ...	E. Bunnett	1½d.
414.	Christmas Bells	E. Bunnett	1½d.
415.	A Child this day is born Hark! what mean those Holy Voices ...	E. Bunnett	1½d.
416.	The Angel's Carol	E. Bunnett	1½d.
417.	While shepherds watched Angels from the realms of glory	E. Bunnett	1½d.
418.	A Christmas chime	E. Bunnett	1½d.
419.	A Cradle Song	A. H. Brewer	1½d.
420.	Gather the holly-bough...	H. E. Watts	1½d.
421.	The Three Wise Men ...	Alfred Hollins	1½d.
422.	The Holly and the Ivy...	Geoffrey Shaw	1½d.
423.	There is no rose... ...	Gerrard Williams	1½d.
*424.	The Christ-Child (Unison) ...	G. Rathbone	2d.
425.	All Christian men ...	H. A. Chambers	1½d.
426.	I saw three Kings	G. Rathbone	1½d.
427.	O come this day	H. G. Ley	1½d.
428.	All hail with joy ...	Chastey Hector	1½d.
429.	Rosa Mystica	B. J. Dale	4d.
430.	Cradle Song	B. J. Dale	4d.
431.	O lovely voices ...	H. A. Chambers	1½d.
432.	The Christ-Child (Four Voices)	G. Rathbone	2d.
433.	A Lullaby Carol	Geoffrey Shaw	2d.
434.	While shepherds watched	C. Lee Williams	1½d.

* Also published in Tonic Sol-fa.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NOVEMBER BULLETIN OF OXFORD MUSIC

Books on Music.

The Musical Design of 'The Ring,' by A. E. F. Dickinson. (Musical Pilgrim Series.) 1s. 6d. net.

Music.—Oxford Solo Songs.

'A Poplar and the Moon' (Siegfried Sassoon). By RALPH GREAVES. 2s.

In Time of 'The Breaking of Nations' (Thomas Hardy). By GORDON SLATER. 2s.

'The Shawl' (Lawrence Atkinson). By DOROTHY HOGBEN. 2s.

'Heraclitus' (William Cory). By EDWIN BENBOW. 2s.

Three Songs of Innocence (William Blake). By GORDON JACOB.

'The Lamb.' 2s. 'The Shepherd.' 2s. 'Laughing Song.' 2s.

Oxford Choral Songs. Edited by DR. W. G. WHITTAKER.

Unison.

No. 58. ROBIN MILFORD: 'Taffeta Coat of Sovereign Prince.' 3d.
No. 59. ROBIN MILFORD: 'The Gracious Time.' 3d.
No. 60. ROBIN MILFORD: 'A Frosty Christmas Eve.' 4d.
No. 61. ROBIN MILFORD: 'When at night I go to sleep.' 3d.
No. 62. ROBIN MILFORD: 'Lo, here are Shepherds.' 3d.
No. 63. ROBIN MILFORD: 'There were Three Jolly Welshmen.' 3d.
No. 64. ROBIN MILFORD: 'There was an Inn.' 4d.
No. 67. HARRY FARJEON: 'Carol' (Eleanor Farjeon). 3d.
No. 68. HARRY BROOK: 'A Cradle Song' (Martin Luther). 3d.

Two-part Songs.

No. 141. ROBIN MILFORD: 'Six Little Mice.' 3d.

For Male Voices.

No. 604. GERRARD WILLIAMS: 'Henry Martin.' 6d.
No. 605. GERRARD WILLIAMS: 'Sweet Kitty.' 6d.
No. 606. GERRARD WILLIAMS: 'Seventeen come Sunday.' 5d.

For Mixed Voices.

No. 712. GERRARD WILLIAMS: 'The Pretty Ploughing Boy.' 1s.
No. 713. ARNOLD FOSTER: 'The Coventry Carol.' 5d.

From the Old Masters.

No. 347. HENRY PURCELL: 'Music shall proclaim.' 4d.
No. 348 J. S. BACH: Sinfonia, from Church Cantata No. 75. 2d.

Oxford Church Music.

Communion Service in F major. By HAROLD E. DARKE. 1s. 3d.

Oxford Modern Anthems.

No. A 8. ERNEST BULLOCK: 'Christ, the fair glory of the Holy Angels' (Anthem for St. Michael and All Angels' Day). 6d.

Organ Solos. By ERNEST B. FARRAR.

Two Preludes and Postlude. 2s.
Trio and Pastorale. 2s.

Oxford Piano Series.

Edited by A. FORBES MILNE.

No. P 43. COLIN TAYLOR: 'Bubble and Squeak.' 3s.
No. P 45. NORMAN F. DEMUTH: Rhapsody for Two Pianos. 2s.
No. P 47. OLIVE J. WOOD: A Tiny Suite for Tiny People. 1s. 6d.
No. P 49. OLIVE LLOYD: Gleanings. Part I. 2s.
No. P 50. OLIVE LLOYD: Gleanings. Part II. 2s. 6d.
No. P 51. ERIC MAREO: 'Idle Moments.' 3s. 6d.

Folk Dances of the World.

No. 10. Two Greek Folk Dances (for small hands). By G. PONIRIDY. 1s. 6d.
No. 11. Two Greek Folk Dances (for small hands). By G. PONIRIDY. 1s. 6d.
No. 12. 'La Pernette.' Chanson Francaise (XII^e Siècle). 'Lous Esclôs' ('Les Sabots'). 'Ronde montagnarde.' By VINCENT D'INDY. 1s. 6d.
No. 13. Bourrée en Rondeau (XVII^e Siècle). By VINCENT D'INDY. 1s. 6d.
No. 14. 'Het Patertje langs den Kant.' Dutch Children's Dance. 'Scharmoes.' Dutch Folk Dance. By WILLEM PIJPER. 1s. 6d.
No. 15. 'De Bonfon.' Dutch Folk Dance. By WILLEM PIJPER. 1s. 6d.
No. 16. Irish Love Song. By E. J. MOERAN. 1s. 6d.

THE OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS

AMEN HOUSE, WARWICK SQUARE, E.C.4, AND 95, WIMPOLE STREET, W.1.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE

DESCANT HYMN-TUNE BOOK

BOOK II.

A COLLECTION OF WELL-KNOWN TUNES

ARRANGED BY

GEOFFREY SHAW

TUNES AND APPROPRIATE HYMNS.

TUNE.	METRE.	HYMN.
Abridge	C.M.	Be Thou my Guardian
Aberystwyth	7.7.7.7.D.	Jesu, Lover of my soul
Alleluia, dulce Carmen	8.7.8.7.8.7.	Alleluia, song of sweetness
Capetown	7.7.7.5.	Three in One, and One in Three
Caswall	6.5.6.5.	Glory be to Jesus
Crüger	7.6.7.6.D.	Hail to the Lord's Anointed
Dix	7.7.7.7.7.7.	As with gladness men of old
Duke Street	L.M.	Fight the good fight with all thy might
Dundee	C.M.	The people that in darkness sat
Ebenezer	8.7.8.7.D.	Hail, Thou once despisèd Jesus
Farley Castle	10.10.10.10.	'Lift up your hearts.' We lift them
Franconia	S.M.	Bless'd are the pure in heart
Lincoln	C.M.	Lord, in Thy Name Thy servants plead
London New	C.M.	God moves in a mysterious way
Mannheim	8.7.8.7.8.7.	Lead us, Heavenly Father, lead us
Merton	8.7.8.7.	Hark! a thrilling voice is sounding
O Filii et Filiæ (1st Version)	8.8.8. (with Alleluias)	O sons and daughters, let us sing
O Filii et Filiæ (2nd Version)	8.8.8. (with Alleluias)
Old 124th	10.10.10.10.10.	Here, O my Lord, I see Thee face to face
Passion Chorale	7.6.7.6.D.	O Sacred Head, surrounded
Praise, my soul	8.7.8.7.8.7.	Praise, my soul, the King of Heaven
St. Albinus	7.8.7.8. (with Alleluias)	Jesus lives! no longer now
St. Cross	L.M.	O come and mourn with me awhile
St. Cuthbert	8.6.8.4.	Our Blest Redeemer, ere He breathed
St. James	C.M.	Thou art the Way; by Thee alone
St. Michael (Old 134th)	S.M.	Above the starry spheres
St. Stephen	C.M.	O God of Hosts, the mighty Lord
St. Thomas	8.7.8.7.8.7.	Lo! He comes, with clouds descending
Southwell	S.M.	Thou Judge of quick and dead
Stuttgart	8.7.8.7.	Earth has many a noble city
Tallis' Ordinal	C.M.	O God unseen yet ever near
University	C.M.	The God of Love my Shepherd is
Veni Creator	L.M.	Come, Holy Ghost, our souls inspire
Veni Sancte Spiritus	7.7.7.7.7.7.	Come, Thou Holy Spirit, come
Westminster	C.M.	My God, how wonderful Thou art

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.

Voice Parts only, 8*d*.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, London, W.1.

President:
THE RT. HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.P., G.C.V.O., C.B.E.

Chairman of Board and Director of Studies:
Professor J. C. BRIDGE, M.A., Mus.D., F.S.A.

Director of Examinations: E. F. HORNER, Mus.D.

December 4th.—Last day of entry for the January next Diploma Examinations, also for open competition for fourteen Scholarships.

December 8th, at 3 p.m.—Students' Concert.

December 9th, at 3 p.m.—Chamber Music and Choir Concert at Grotrian Hall, Wigmore Street, W.1.

December 11th, at 3 p.m.—Orchestral Concert at Queen's Hall, Langham Place, W.1 (sole lessees of Hall, Chappell & Co.).

The College provides INSTRUCTION and TRAINING in all Musical Subjects (Instrumental, Vocal, and Theoretical) and Dramatic and Operatic Elocution. The Lessons are arranged to meet the convenience of both day and evening students. Entry may be made for any number of Subjects—from one to the Full Course. The College is open to beginners as well as to the more proficient student; pupils under 16 years of age are received for the Junior School at reduced fees.

The ORCHESTRAL, CHORAL, the OPERATIC, and CHAMBER MUSIC CLASSES are open to sufficiently competent persons who are not College Students for other subjects.

Tuition in the Rudiments of the Theory of Music, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Instrumentation, Composition, and the Art of Teaching is also given by Correspondence.

Particulars of the Teaching Department, with list of Professors, Fees, Scholarships regulations, &c., and the Syllabuses of the Diploma and Local Examinations, free on application to the undersigned. C. N. H. RODWELL, Secretary.

ORGAN TRANSCRIPTIONS

FROM THE WORKS OF

CYRIL SCOTT.

FIRST ALBUM.	SECOND ALBUM.
Transcribed by Dr. A. W. POLLITT.	Transcribed by Dr. EAGLEFIELD HULL.
1. Vesperale.	1. Ode Heroique.
2. Alpine Sketch, No. 2.	2. Over the Prairie.
3. Chansonette.	3. Diatonic Study.
4. A Song from the East.	4. Cavatina.
5. Solitude.	5. Evening Idyll.
6. Berceuse.	6. Prelude Solennel.

Price 3*s.* 6*d.* each Album.

In these two books are comprised a selection of the most suitable pieces by one of the most interesting keyboard writers of our time.

ELKIN & CO., LTD.,
20, KINGLY STREET, REGENT STREET,
LONDON, W.1.

BROADWOOD PIANOS

SACRED MUSIC FOR CHRISTMAS

ANTHEMS.

	Price
RICHARD DERING.
Whom saw ye, Shepherds? (6 parts)	4d.
GOSS, JOHN.
Behold, I bring you good tidings	3d.
HANDL, JACOB.
Behold, thou shalt conceive	4d.
HOPKINS, E. J.
Let us now go even unto Bethlehem	3d.
LASSO, ORLANDO DI.
Let Zion resound with praise	4d.
Whom saw ye, Shepherds? (5 parts)	4d.

CAROLS.

ADAMS, THOMAS.
SIX CHRISTMAS CAROLS. Separately ... each	3d.
In one volume, complete	9d.
BRIDGE, J. FREDERICK.
Ring out with jocund chime	3d.
A Babe ys borne I wys	3d.
Welcome, Yule...	3d.
Christmas Day...	3d.
When Christ was born	3d.
Yonder in Bethlehem	3d.
THE STAR OF THE EAST.
A Christmas Fantasy for Contralto Solo (ad lib.) and Chorus	9d.
A CHRISTMAS PAGEANT FOR CHILDREN.
Delightful music and words combined with very simple acting	1s. 6d.
CHRISTMAS CAROLS.
A selection of 25 (Ancient and Modern)	1s.

THE LYRIC ORGANIST.
A Collection of Easy Melodious Pieces Edited and Arranged by E. STANLEY ROPER.
Volumes 1, 2, 3, for Organ. Price 2s. 6d. each.
Volumes 1 and 2, for American Organ. Price 2s. 6d. each.

BOSWORTH & CO., LTD., Music Publishers,
8, HEDDON STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.1.

JUST PUBLISHED.

AN ABRIDGED CONCERT EDITION
OF CARMEN
AN OPERA
BY
GEORGES BIZET.

SELECTED AND ADAPTED BY
W. McNAUGHT.

THE LIBRETTO FROM THE ENGLISH VERSION OF THE COMPLETE OPERA BY
LUCIA YOUNG.

PRICE ... THREE SHILLINGS.
Tonic Sol-fa, Price 2*s.*
Book of Words, price 41*s.* 8*d.* per 100.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

Photo by] [Stewart Bale, Liverpool

LIVERPOOL CATHEDRAL ORGAN

The Musical Times

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

DECEMBER 1 1926

(FOR LIST OF CONTENTS SEE PAGE 1136.)

GUSTAV HOLST: NOTES FOR A BIOGRAPHY (I.)

BY RICHARD CAPELL

Gustavus Theodore von Holst was born at 4, Pittville Terrace, Cheltenham, on September 21, 1874. He was of Swedish extraction on his father's side; English on his mother's.

The Holst family had migrated from Sweden to the Russian Baltic provinces early in the 18th century; and at Riga, about 1769, was born Matthias von Holst, great-grandfather of our composer. He was a musician. In 1807 he came to prosecute his calling in England, in consequence probably of liberal opinions that were discouraged in that part of the world. He died at Hampstead, in 1854.

Gustav Holst's grandfather, Gustavus Valentine, was born at Riga in 1799. He was a pianist, harpist, and composer. Before 1840 he was teaching music at Cheltenham. His wife was Honoria Goodrich, of Norwich—the first English forbear of Gustav Holst. He wrote copiously in a light, fashionable manner, and there is the widest dissimilarity between his works at the British Museum and those of his grandson. A brother, Theodore, was a painter, whose work was praised by Rossetti.

Our composer's father, Adolph, was born in London, in 1846, and he too, as was natural in this family, was brought up to be a musician. The most brilliant member of this generation was an elder brother, Matthias, a pianist, who was born in 1833, and died in Scotland in 1874. A sister, Benigna, was also a musician.

Adolph von Holst settled at Cheltenham, where for thirty years he was organist of All Saints'. He married Clara Lediard, of Cirencester. Gustav was his eldest son; Emil was the next. Emil made his career in America. Serving in the Canadian Army, he was severely wounded in the war. There were also two sons of Adolph von Holst's second marriage. Matthias became a professional violoncellist in London. Thorley, the second, went to the United States, and made a legal career. The father died in 1901.

For our purpose, the salient fact of Gustav's young years was that he grew up with music always about him: it was the family language, and he had this advantage, for which there is in later life no equivalent, of using it from the first like any other. Indifferent health threw a shadow over his childhood. He had more than his fair share of ailments. The sheltered climate of Cheltenham never agreed with him, and he retained no particularly joyous memories of his school-days. But at home, so far from any starvation of musical longing, it was assumed he would follow his father's calling. Holst is in the company of the majority of eminent musicians in that music came to him like his mother-tongue, and had not to be wrestled with, like the foreignness of Latin.

The young Holst learnt early to play the pianoforte, organ, and violin. At twelve his father set him to work at the trombone, which suggested itself as a preventive of the boy's attacks of asthma. The asthma was overcome, but the trombone was not dropped, and it played an important part in Holst's life and art.

The musicianship of the earlier generations of Holsts was exempt from adventurousness, and no very disturbing forms of the art reached the Cheltenham household. There was no undue austerity, and Sullivan was delighted in. It came naturally to the boy to compose almost as soon as he could write. At eleven he was engaged in setting to music Macaulay's 'Lays of Ancient Rome.' Later in his teens he abounded with cantatas, operettas, chamber music, and what not.

At sixteen Holst spent six months at Oxford, at counterpoint, working under George Frederick Sims, organist at Merton. This experience marked the end of his unregretted boyhood, and gave him a more sanguine view of the world. He worked exercises for eight or ten hours a day, and felt braced.

Before he was eighteen he became organist and choirmaster at Wyck Rissington, in the Cotswolds. Hereabouts he taught several choirs, and with the Choral and Orchestral Society of Bourton-on-the Water had his first experience of conducting. (Farmer's 'Christ and His Soldiers,' at Bourton, in 1892, was an undertaking that no doubt had quite an adventurous charm for the youth in charge.)

'Here,' says Dr. Vaughan Williams, 'he laid the foundations of his knowledge of choral effect, and of his powers as a teacher; for Holst is a great teacher as well as a great composer.'*

In 1892 he enjoyed an excursion from the Cotswolds to Covent Garden, which gave him a hearing of 'The Twilight of the Gods,' under Mahler. The young country organist, fresh from his courses of scholastic counterpoint, was tremendously disturbed by such undreamt-of chromaticism. He had another year on the hills before he went up to the Royal College of Music.

At that period he used to attend the Three Choirs Festival as critic for a Cheltenham newspaper, and at the 1893 Worcester Festival he had his first impression, a powerful one, of the B minor Mass. He received, that year, as honorarium, a copy of Grove's 'Dictionary.'

At the Royal College he studied under Stanford (composition), Frederick Sharpe (pianoforte), George Case (trombone), Stevenson Hoyte

* 'Dictionary of Modern Music and Musicians.' (Dent.)

(organ), and Rockstro (theory). Stanford did not, as time went on, see eye to eye with Holst, any more than with others in the galaxy of his pupils. But later, to his own pupils, Holst freely acknowledged Stanford as a great teacher, and thanked him for inspiring him with a delight in good workmanship. Rockstro may have been an insecure theorist, but he fired the young man by the almost religious fervour of his teaching.

Young Holst's College friends were Fritz Hart (born at Brockley, 1874), the composer and later Director of the Melbourne Conservatory of Music; Evlyn Howard-Jones (born in London, 1877) the pianist; and most particularly, Ralph Vaughan Williams (born near Cirencester, 1872). Vaughan Williams and Holst were to be, through all the important years to come, more than brothers in their common artistic endeavour, as in most other sympathies of their lives.

In 1895, Holst won a composition scholarship. He took part in that year in a students' performance at the Lyceum Theatre, of Purcell's 'Dido and Æneas'—the beginning of his predilection for Purcell, which was to have a considerable sequel.

In those student days money was scarce, and Holst would spend part of his holiday walking from London to his home in Gloucestershire. He celebrated his twenty-first birthday by completing his first walk of ninety-five miles. He also played his trombone in seaside bands, and fellow-students remember how, at a réunion in the autumn term for the discussion of holiday experiences, one having been to Bayreuth, another to the Three Choirs, and so on, the most useful contribution was Holst's account of the special technics of the trombone playing required on the Folkestone Front.

In 1895 he felt attracted by the romantic social ideals of William Morris, and joined the Hammersmith Socialist Society, at whose meetings, at Kelmscott House, he made the acquaintance of his future wife. He then conducted the Hammersmith Socialist Choir, on whose programmes the names of Morley, Purcell, and Pearsall began to figure.

> The tawdriness of London, its unfriendliness, the sordidness both of its riches and poverty were overwhelming to an enthusiastic and sensitive youth; and to him the ideals of Morris, the insistence on beauty in every detail of human life and work, were a revelation. No wonder, then, that the poetic socialism of the Kelmscott Club became the natural medium of his aspirations; to Morris and his followers 'comradeship' was no pose, but an absolute necessity of life. And though as years go on Holst has grown out of the weak points in Morris's teaching, yet his ideal of thoroughness, of beauty, and above all of comradeship have remained and grown stronger.*

When he left the College in 1898 his compositions had reached Op. 6, but of these only one or two songs have been published. Years before, he had finished ambitious scores, such as a choral setting of Kingsley's 'Ode to the North-East Wind.' In 1891 his name began to appear on the programmes of Cheltenham concerts, as the composer of an Orchestral Scherzo, an Intermezzo, and so on. In 1893 there was produced at Cheltenham his operetta (one of a number of youthful pieces of the sort) 'Lansdown Castle; or, The Sorcerer of Tewkesbury,' composed, so the Gloucestershire Press alleged, under the influence of Sullivan.

Under Stanford he mostly wrote chamber music, as he was later glad to remember, telling his pupils that it focussed one on the essentials of art. In view of rather common assertions that the unusual metres and the daring of the rhythms of Holst's mature music are due to this or that exotic influence, it is interesting that already in a String Trio of 1894 there is a Scherzo in 7-4 time. Under Stanford, too, were written operas, 'The Revoke' (1895), in one Act, on a text by Fritz Hart, being, although unpublished and never performed, Holst's acknowledged Op. 1.

At the time of his leaving the College, neuritis —which was to become Holst's worst enemy— manifested itself, and rendered it plain that he could not make a career as pianist or organist. Trombone playing afforded the readiest means of a livelihood. During the next few years he was hard at this work here, there, and everywhere, from the Scottish Orchestra to the bas-fonds of musical comedy. He first joined the Carl Rosa Opera Company at Southport. He acted as répétiteur for them, and did various odd jobs. He played the trombone in operettas, in the music-hall, and on the pier.

He nevertheless wrote actively. The Overture, Op. 7, 'Walt Whitman' (1899), was an early tribute to a poet in whom Holst, like Delius, Vaughan Williams, Charles Wood, and Hamilton Harty, all at much the same time, found texts apt for music. He scored part of his 'Cotswolds' Symphony, Op. 8, on the sands at Skegness, in the intervals of the performances of the band. The slow movement was an elegy for William Morris. The Overture was never heard. The Symphony was performed at Bournemouth under Dan Godfrey, in 1902, and not again. But another work of 1899-1900, the Ballet Suite in E flat, Op. 10, was one of the compositions chosen to be played at the first of the Ernest Palmer 'Patron's Fund' concerts, 'for the encouragement of young British composers and executive artists,' in 1904. It was revived in 1911 at a Patron's Fund concert, in which were gathered the best successes of the seven years, and it was the first of Holst's orchestral works to be published.*

Some of the part-songs of 1899-1900 have been published. They include the eight-part 'Ave Maria' for women's voices, which is perhaps the first of his pieces allowed by his admirers to be beyond doubt 'real Holst.' His name had first appeared on a West-End programme in 1897, when the Magpie Madrigal Society sang his sixpart 'Light leaves whisper,' at St. James's Hall. The same Society sang the 'Ave Maria' in 1901, under Lionel Benson. Since then it has become known far and wide (it was, for example, a test-piece at the 1920 Blackpool Festival).

* R. Vaughan Williams in Music and Letters, July, 1920

* Novello, 1911.

In 1901 (the year of his father's death) Holst married Isobel Harrison. A daughter was born to them, Imogen Holst. Holst's marriage incited him to turn to a different means for a livelihood. He threw up his orchestral work, and for the next twenty years he was busy teaching and, in the intervals of teaching, composing, in London.

(To be concluded.)

SOME NOTES ON 'MY LADYE NEVELLS BOOKE'

By Charles van den Borren

The recent edition, by Miss Hilda Andrewes, of 'My Ladye Nevells Booke'* enables us to develop our estimate of William Byrd as composer for the clavier—an estimate so far based on his pieces in the 'Fitzwilliam Virginal Book' and in 'Parthenia.'

Of the forty-two pieces in 'My Ladye Nevells Booke,' however, there are but seventeen hitherto unpublished.† With few exceptions these seventeen are all of superior quality, and their interest is enhanced by their early date; indeed, it is known that 'My Ladye Nevells Booke' was compiled as early as 1591. Thus it is proved beyond doubt that William Byrd was the pioneer of virginal music, and that he had raised it to a great height well before the end of the 16th century. As Miss Andrewes so justly notes in her remarkable 'Introduction,' this is an astonishing feat to the master's credit, if one remembers that between these refined pieces and the essays (singularly advanced for the period, yet still very simple) of a Hugh Aston, at the beginning of the 16th century, there is a break, which the repertory of 'Mulliner's Book' (devoted more especially to the organ, and unequal in quality) fails to bridge.

It is reasonable to suppose that the music composed for the virginals in the intermediate period (from about 1510 to 1580) was not written down, or else that the existing manuscripts were lost, and that, consequently, Byrd only developed a method common at the time of his youth. Nevertheless, the fact remains that at a given moment the master did synthetic work in this branch of composition, as in that of the vocal madrigal, and summed up in a vast ensemble all the detail of his predecessors.

From the standpoint of the psychology of invention, William Byrd is incontestably one of the most interesting figures in musical history. Indeed, a more harmonious union of naïveté and audacity cannot be conceived. Byrd it is, among musicians of all time, who above all gives us an impression of the childlike and ingenuous. But that child who plays with such spontaneous joy, and with so candid a smile, is, at the same time, a grave and contemplative soul, who surrenders himself most willingly to dreaming, and to rapture. His dream is all blue, of that immaterial blue of distant horizons, where heaven and earth seem to melt together. A mystic dream, crossed by visions of haloed angels; a dream of which the sweetness penetrates and soothes one in an atmosphere of infinite blessedness. An earthly dream, however, because that child of heaven never loses contact with his fellows, his brothers, whose songs of joy and of sadness he lovingly gathers, to vary them, to adorn them, and to figure them in such a way as to bring out all their freshness, all their wild, bitter perfume.

There are moments of languid ecstasy, endlessly prolonged, which would give birth to lassitude were one not conquered, in spite of oneself, by so much sweetness and serenity. In this respect the Voluntaries Nos. 26, 29, and 42, of 'My Ladye Nevells Booke,' are particularly characteristic. In reality, they are ricercari with several themes, more or less freely developed; but contrary to the Continental ricercari, which appear, for the most part, as pieces severely built in the manner of the Motet that they imitate, these Voluntaries are distinguished by a dreamy freedom, notwithstanding the scholastic proceedings which govern their composition. Is it the peculiar quality of the thematic material, or the manner in which that material is used, which creates this impression of technical freedom and of expressive spontaneity? It is impossible to say, for indeed there is here something quite indefinable, that genius alone can explain.

This child who plays, dreams, and so willingly abandons himself to rapture is, nevertheless, a great technician. He knows his counterpoint better than anyone. But, like all true geniuses, he has no prejudices. And when the question arises of endowing the clavier with a repertory all its own, he hesitates not one instant to imagine a new idiom which responds at once to the material demands of the instrument and to the poetic effects he hopes to draw from it. If, in order to accomplish this, it becomes necessary to transgress the rules, he will transgress them: hence that intentionally ambiguous harmony, those unexpected modulations, those strange false relations, those successive or simultaneous contrasts between binary and ternary times; hence those spondees, those iambics, those pointed figures, or those scrolls in triplets, the subtle tracery of which evokes rounds danced by sylphs in an Eden-like landscape.

All these particulars are to be found in diverse degrees, but always used with an exquisite sense of poetry, in the majority of the new pieces in 'My Ladye Nevells Booke,' whether in those in the form of Grounds,* in the delightful 'Medley'

* 'My Ladye Nevells Booke.' William Byrd. Edited, with an Introduction and Notes, by Hilda Andrewes; with a Preface by Sir Richard Terry. (Curwen.)

† All the others are to be found in the 'Fitzwilliam Virginal Book,' save 'The Galliard for the Victorie,' which has been edited by Madame Farrenc, after a manuscript which belongs to the Conservatoire of Paris.

* No. 1, 'My Ladye Nevells Grownde'; No. 2, 'Qui passe'; No. 3, 'The Second Grownde.'

bearing the title, 'The Barelye Breake' (No. 6), in the audacious 'Fancie' (No. 41), where Byrd makes such original use of homophony, or in the series of Pavans and Galliards which occupy the middle of the collection. Among the last, there is one which surpasses in extent all the others, viz., 'The fifth Pavian' (No. 18), followed by 'The Galliarde of the fifth Pavian' (No. 19). Written in the key of C minor, to which numerous anomalies confer a colour altogether apart, the 'Pavian' is the finished prototype of that sort of composition which was to come into favour at the beginning of the 17th century, under the name of 'Lachrymæ,' or 'Tears.' The rhythm and form of the Pavan serve here only as pretexts for superior stylization, thanks to which the nobility and the gravity proper to that stately dance are enriched by an element of sensibility, half dramatic, half contemplative, in which, up to a certain point, the origin of the lamenti of the Italian opera, and of the instrumental Tombeaux of the 17th and 18th centuries can be seen.*

One of the most interesting pieces in 'My Ladye Nevells Booke' is the fourth number of the collection, 'The Battell.' Assuredly it is not the most significant from a purely æsthetic standpoint. Certainly there is something essentially puerile in the attempt to represent in music the different phases of a battle. On the whole, the constantly descriptive character of so long a suite of pieces becomes rather monotonous. Yet the minute realism of the work—quite the opposite of the rather conventional and limited side of the instrumental battles of the Continent—constitutes an invaluable document concerning the popular life of the time. Those flourishes, those march themes, those airs characteristic of fife and bagpipe, all take us back to Shakespeare's time, and give us a very suggestive and probably a very exact idea of the music that accompanied the warlike evocations of his plays. Certain of these little pieces, moreover, rise above the level of of simple local and casual productions; thus 'The Bagpipe and the Drone' offers us, under an extremely primitive form, the model for all the 'pastorals' for organ and for clavier, of the 17th and 18th centuries, beginning with the 'Capriccio Pastorale per Organo' of Frescobaldi,† the thematic material of which is clearly related to that of Byrd's piece, as may be seen from the following citations:

* The existence before Byrd, and even from the 14th century, of polyphonic lamentations on the death of illustrious personages is, however, to be noted. Byrd himself, and several of his younger contemporaries, composed vocal or vocal-instrumental pieces of the kind.

† See Torchi, 'L'Arte Musicale in Italia,' vol. iii., p. 223.

In the same manner, 'The Flute and the Drone' foreshadows, more than a century distant, the 'Musettes' of Couperin le Grand,* if not in the detail of the motives, at least in the atmosphere, which, more rugged in Byrd, has not yet attained that gentillesse which Couperin was to put into it as a matter of course in the century of shepherds à la Watteau.

Thus William Byrd appears more than ever, after the publication of 'My Ladye Nevells Booke,' as a great precursor in the domain of musical expression and form. His art has the inestimable freshness proper to all innovations realised for the first time by a consummate genius, who, though profiting by his predecessors' inventions, uses them only that he may the better spread his wings, and so express the depths of his soul with greater truth and intensity.† His soul, as we have seen, is essentially that of a poet-child, of a dreamer, full of faith and rapture. Could one, indeed, imagine anything more exquisite than music capable of communicating to us, through the centuries—and with what power of persuasion!—all that is purest and sweetest in a man's heart?

* See Livre iii., of the 'Pièces de Clavecin,' 15e Ordre (Musettes de Choisy et de Taverny).

† In order to be in perfect accordance with the psychological reality, one must, of course, make allowance for the 'subconscious' in those creative proceedings.

MUSIC WITH TEARS

By Frank Howes

It has been said of old that music can soothe the savage breast, and it has lately been shown in these columns that it can wet the cheeks even of the strong and silent critic. How, and why? The only hopeful way to find an answer has already been indicated in the scientific spirit of 'Feste.' The phenomena have been collected—not exhaustively, of course, that must be done each for himself, and every man must become his own psychologist; but we have been shown how to arrange our data. Can we now begin to frame a few hypotheses? If so, we can proceed to test them. Let us conjecture an hypothesis to account for tears, to which we are only moved by certain passages, not by all music. When the stream of emotion evoked by particular passages is swollen with a sudden accession of feeling—as, for example, in Sachs's monologue, when to the pensive mood engendered by the night and the elder scent is added the wistful human poignancy of what might have been, the overflow of feeling becomes a physical stream.

Some fundamental instinct has been touched, our ordinary channels of emotion have been filling by sympathy, and there comes a point when the sudden extra spate of feeling is more than they can carry off. The physical discharge provides an outlet for the psychical flood. This interaction of mind and matter as the result of an experience having 'meaning' for us is one of the strongest arguments, if any such to-day were needed, against a material interpretation of life. This commonly observed psycho-physical mechanism is extremely mysterious.

Now, take an actual case and watch the mystery happening. One of the things that made me cry was Act 2 of 'Die Rosenkavalier.' There was a kind of frozen immobility of perfection in which the whole world stood still; and yet the laws of life were not broken so completely as that. The situation changed slowly, and its loveliness became more intense thereby, until, as the young squire advanced towards Sophie, I could bear no more. Now there was nothing sad in this at all; the moving thing was its sheer loveliness. I have an idea (it is no more than a hazy speculation) that this kind of ravishing beauty (cf. much of Brahms's chamber music, Bach's chorale, 'Jesu, Joy of man's desiring,' 'Comfort sweet,' the slow movement of the D minor Concerto for two violins, the Quintet in 'Die Meistersinger') gets its poignancy from the fact that it is a hopeless challenge to Time. Here is a moment of the most intense experience, during which we are more alive than we are in going about the world, and we wish to retain it unchanged; we are deluded for a little into feeling that Time is standing still for us, yet we know that it and the vision are slipping away from us. Music, unlike a picture, passes before we can take our fill of it. It is an intolerable thought that that sublime quintet should ever stop; but we feel—nay, we know—it will. The conflict between success and failure in having and holding this piece of more abundant life intensifies our emotion to breaking point.

Now, if we cry at a passage such as the one in 'Hiawatha,' our tears come more readily and their source is sadness—a different emotion, but having at bottom the same cause. Our strongest instinct is that for life itself (self-preservation, ego instinct, self-regarding sentiment, call it what you like according to the school of psychology you most favour); one day that instinct will be thwarted for ever. Hiawatha's single word 'Farewell' brings us face to face with that biggest fact, though not in any self-regarding way, for it is the sorrow of parting from another. The immediate response to the emotion of sorrow from our earliest years has been tears. But the interesting thing about this passage is that it is a little jammy chromatic harmony which adds the last touch of poignancy to the cup. Bitter words have been spoken (not without provocation) about the moral quality of chromaticism, but by a mysterious symbolism poignancy expresses itself in music by semitones. It just does, there is no arguing about it; and whether it is good or bad depends on the sincerity and the sensibility of the user. Prof. Dent has recently said (in 'Terpander') that 'sincerity is a virtue with which art has no concern'; as great an untruth surely (may he forgive my presumption!) as ever fell from the lips of a wise man. Young Coleridge-Taylor had not spent half a lifetime working on feigned emotions from an organ-loft. He went straight to the point, and spoke his real feelings in the idiom that came immediately to him. Professors of composition advise you (very wisely) nowadays to avoid the use of diminished sevenths, yet Bach used them, and they do not sound reprehensible, and I have no doubt that if Dr. Vaughan Williams wanted to say something with a diminished seventh he could do so, and we should wonder what new chord he had discovered. Sincerity is all-important in these matters, for in music very fortunately no deceit is possible. If you write music you show your soul to the world. You may deceive some people some of the time, but it will not be for ever. A publisher told me the other day that a decent composer couldn't write a bad ballad even with his tongue in his cheek, and that a composer who had written many bad ballads, finding the market now dried up, could not for all his musical skill write anything else. Be sure your music will find you out. We may, therefore, take comfort that we shall not in the long run be called upon to share with composers experiences that they have not had. I have argued elsewhere that music is a form of communication, and the examination in these columns of the listener's as opposed to the composer's or performer's emotions seems to me to confirm that general proposition: the composer imparts his experience to us, and causes in us analogous reactions to his own.

Analogous, but not necessarily identical reactions. Let me describe another of my own responses. I can listen to hardly anything of Liszt's without seething with anger. A few bars and I am throwing my body about, and towards the end of whatever it is I want to stamp and cause a riot. Being a well-behaved person I withdraw from concert halls when pianists reach the Liszt stage. I have occasionally, however, been trapped by an orchestra playing one of the Hungarian Rhapsodies. The sheer vulgarity of these works has sometimes made me laugh, not good-humouredly, but in the same sort of way as indecency causes laughter. In vulgarity there is always vitality, and the titillation of our vital centres provokes laughter instead of tears. But there is no more humour in laughter of that sort than there is anguish in tears of joy. What makes me angry, I think, is the blatant exhibitionism of the man. Up to a point our reaction to indecency is to be amused, but beyond that point amusement turns without any willing from us into disgust. Liszt, however, did not write his pianoforte pieces and his Rhapsodies as an out come of experiencing anger, vulgarity, and disgust. He and I, communicator and communicant, share an experience, but react to it with different, though related emotion. What makes him swell makes me wilt. His unrestrained inflation deflates me until I begin to rebel; my feeling of humiliation turns to contempt, then to disgust, and finally to anger.

Besides tears and violence, there are yet other bodily reactions which need to be catalogued in the instructive way which has lately been employed in these pages. In my own case I notice myself smiling at beautiful phrasing. Those who are 'absolutists' in music should find this particularly instructive, as it is the nearest isolatable phenomenon which has a bearing on 'purely musical emotion.' Would it be possible to collect answers from auditors as to their reaction to Miss Jelly d'Aranyi's playing of Bach? Another discharge of pleasurable emotion is to incline the head, slightly sway the body, or open the hand. In dramatic music I have known at a crisis a tingling to begin in my trunk and extend to my extremities, and take at least thirty seconds to do it. But this is almost always in opera, and in computing general laws, individual emotions of this kind would have to be discounted by bearing in mind that except for opera I rarely go to the theatre, and do not as a rule read more than half a dozen novels in the course of a year. So that dramatically I am in the position of the person who comes to Liszt without sophistication, and is taken in by his sheer effectiveness.

The emotions of the listener form a different avenue of approach to the general problem of emotion in music from those of the performer or the composer. In the case of the performer there is always the element of construction. All these will have to be correlated. It is a big inquiry of which the fringes are only now being touched (e.g., by Vernon Lee, as I happen to know). This must be my excuse for boldly exposing my own mind to the public gaze. The points I have tried to suggest without adequate elaboration are: (1.) Tears are the outcome of several emotions, and they come at different stages in different emotions. Tears of sorrow ('Hiawatha') are more easily produced than tears of joy ('Rosenkavalier'), and tears of joy are easier than tears of anger; it would take more than Liszt to make me cry with rage. (2.) Emotion is the point of contact between music and life. It is therefore improper to separate rigidly moral from æsthetic judgments. Even purists speak of bold melodies, erotic motifs, disgraceful diminished sevenths (cf. Eric Blom), vigorous rhythms, sympathetic interpretations, and so on. (3.) Results no less instructive than those given by weeping might be obtained from investigating other bodily reactions.

WIRELESS AND THE CONCERT-GOER

By Thomas Armstrong

It will certainly be what the Evening Standard calls a 'London Music Sensation,' and a very unpleasant one, if the glorious march of civilization turns Beethoven out of Queen's Hall to make a home for newer deities. The prospect of losing that familiar atmosphere brings home sharply enough the strength of its hold on our affections; and most of us who have never been over-sympathetic with talk about the 'dear old St. James's Hall days' will soon, apparently, be boring others with our own tale of woe about the 'dear old Queen's Hall times.' But the shock tactics of the evening Press presented too gloomy a view of the prospect, and a fuller consideration of the question leaves one in a more sanguine state of mind.

Indispensable as the Langham Place hall seems to have become in London musical life, there is no reason whatever to suppose that its place could not in time be filled. The question will not turn on that. More serious is the subsequent statement that the hold of Broadcasting is going to throttle other enterprise, and make orchestral concert-giving a clear impossibility for all private concerns. The obvious and tremendous advantage that the B.B.C. has over other companies makes this seem at first sight a likely development, and it is worth while to consider it.

This is no place to enter into any controversy about the possibilities of wireless transmission, which must always be dominated by the optimistic forecasts of the professionally interested. It is safe to say, however, that the time is not yet at hand when wireless will produce results entirely satisfactory to the musician or the musical concert-goer—even if this can ever come to pass. To begin with, mere physical results, apparently, can never be the same. We shall never have from a small microphone and a trumpet the actual, first-hand waves of sound, the highly complicated scheme of harmonics and overtones, which fill the atmosphere of a concert-hall and surround and play upon our ears and our whole sensitive being. It is impossible to exaggerate the importance of this physical effect of sound, which must depend not only upon, as it were, surface qualities, but upon volume, texture, and solidity. Not a hundred scientists, swearing by their various Baals, will convince a musician that the sound of a violin can be made or reproduced by anything but a violin—a thing of resonant wood, strings, and a bow. We get, at present, surprisingly good reproduction, and we shall get better: but it is doubtful whether it will ever be anything more satisfactory as a substitute than the reproduction that a mirror gives of a human face—an image with neither warmth nor solidity, as intangible as it is dead and cold, as really unlike as it is mockingly similar. One cannot help marvelling at it. Only the merest nothing is lost; but that little is everything that matters. It is the life of the thing.

Moreover, broadcasting means the loss of all that personal side of music which has hitherto meant so much. The possibility of hearing music that will be free from distracting influences is an attractive one; but in reality it is no advantage to be shut out from the human side of a concert, deprived of all 'sense of occasion,' and out of touch with those who are actually making the music. Theoretically, perhaps, it ought not to matter. In fact, it matters a great deal, for everything that tends to dehumanize music tends to devitalize it, and there is little doubt that this purely personal side of the art is one of the channels through which its most profound influences exert themselves. Nobody who has examined his sensations on a big 'Phil.' night, or at any other time, can fail to appreciate the importance of this atmosphere, and the B.B.C. perfectly realises it. The Company has tried in various ways to remedy the lack of it, and freely admits that only at an actual concert is the full effect obtainable. But at present broadcasting cannot reproduce atmosphere, and it is difficult to see how this can ever adequately be done. Television may, in time, become a common installation, but even this will be powerless to provide the mere physical human contact which seems to be the essential thing. It is a primitive element in music, but none the less to be reckoned with; it is vital and deep-seated, and will prove itself so as soon as we lose it. Highly significant at the present moment is the return which we are told is being made to choral societies. Broadcasting at first affected them severely—but its hold on that class of listener is less potent than it was. In many cases singers return to their organizations because they feel the need of that human side which has been spoken of above, and because real lovers of music demand some personal expression, some effort of their own, and are not satisfied by a mere feeble receptiveness.

One's firm ground for optimism, therefore, is faith in music itself. Broadcasting throws its net very wide; apart from the millions who watch only for motoring talks and children's hours, it attracts superficially a large number of those whose interests are not vitally musical. Mere desire to get perfect mechanical results holds many who have no real enthusiasm for the art, but, like hunters, despise all except the gamest quarry. Speeches and jazz they can get well enough, but to some extent great music still eludes them. Then there are the thousands who palely like music, who never used to go to concerts in the old days, and who now will not 'trouble to go out at night' for a concert they can partly enjoy by their own firesides. All these make an enormous wireless public opinion. But it is not they who will ultimately count. The decisions will be made by those who have the root of the matter in them, and are fully responsive to the undoubted educational potentialities of wireless. As soon as these listeners are made genuinely keen and critical, and have the thirst for music created in them, wireless will cease to satisfy them, and they will want the real thing. The demand will be created, and unless the B.B.C. satisfies it by good concerts, in an acoustically satisfactory hall and at reasonable prices, other enterprise will again become possible. This means that if broadcasting does, in fact, kill other concerts, it will have to provide alternatives of its own. The material influence of such a development on the lot of orchestral musicians cannot be dealt with here. Musically the results might not be entirely bad. Weekly symphony concerts, with a permanent orchestra, no deputies, a regular conductor and occasional guest-conductors, might produce playing better than we are accustomed to hear in London. If the concerts were more frequent, and perhaps regular, at three a week, we should, in a long season, be compensated for the loss of a short season of nightly concerts. It is assumed that these concerts, which would be broadcast to the provinces, would be open to the general public, on payment, as ordinary concerts now are. The loss, if they were to go, of such institutions as the Royal Philharmonic concerts, with their background of fine traditions and irreplaceable atmosphere, would be a serious one. Sentimentally to lots of musicians it would be a tremendous blow; but actually, and in course of time, if wireless creates the demand it claims to be creating, it does not seem as if Londoners would be much the poorer. In course of time, that is: at first they would be seriously so.

Another likely result of the difficulty of orchestral enterprise would undoubtedly be felt in the sphere of composition itself. It has, indeed, been already felt. There is a marked tendency for musicians to write for the small orchestra, or for combinations of single instruments which, in a body, are beyond the scope of chamber music, and with skilful handling would be adequate to a fairly large hall. Performance of the 'Siegfried Idyll,' for instance, with its original force of seventeen instruments, gives a new and delightful sensation to ears which have become accustomed to an ensemble of at least twice that number, inevitably coarsening the sound and altering the proportions. 'Pierrot Lunaire' is another example, Bliss's 'Rout' a third, and the possibilities are clearly tremendous. It may be thought that small combinations of instruments will be found unsuitable for the expression of really big ideas; but even if this be true, which is highly improbable, one could argue that it is so only because our ears have become insensitive and coarse, owing to frequent subjection to improper treatment in recent years. Many sensitive listeners find themselves seriously tried and irritated by the exceedingly loud noises of the modern orchestral style, even when the material is good. When the material is weak the noise is unbearable. Many of us would welcome quieter expression, be the emotion as intense as it will; and it is likely that with the changed conditions we should get a great deal of subtle and keen pleasure. The Schönberg Sextet, quite apart from its musical import, was severely criticised as being beyond the range of chamber music, and too orchestral in intention and effect; and one may perhaps see in this work the beginnings of a new technique. In the new genre it would no longer be judged as a chamber work, and might be found more satisfactory. A big readjustment of our attitude and tuning-up of our perceptions would be demanded, but there is little doubt that in time we should find that big spiritual effects are sometimes best obtained with small material ones; and I suppose the re-scoring for small orchestra of many great works—a welcome reversal of the present Elgar process—would follow as a matter of course.

Quite likely, moreover, if things came to the worst as regards orchestral concerts, would be a revival of real chamber-music, a development which would bring a tremendous range of new beauty into the experience of many keen listeners who have never had adequate opportunity to acquire this fine taste. Again, there would be an inevitable effect of cleaning and fining-up our palates, and forcing us to get our satisfaction from smaller perfections and the more rarefied sensations of form and line, rather than from the heavy colouring of a large orchestra. It would be a wholesome revival, which, even if it did not altogether compensate us for the loss of a good deal of fine music, would bring us great gain in other directions, and call our attention to a large field of neglected experience.

It seems, however, that the position is not so gloomy as it appeared at first, when these startling announcements were made; and that until the progress of broadcasting reaches achievements which now seem impossible, there will still be orchestral concerts for those who want them. Whether they are provided by a Broadcasting Company or by private enterprise matters little, so long as the concerts are good. If broadcasting does achieve the impossible and learn to transmit in such a way as to satisfy the real needs of keen musicians, we shall all be its grateful, devoted followers. And even if large orchestras entirely cease to exist, we shall not be without substantial compensations, however much we may lose by that development.

It should be pointed out that the present article, which is written from the point of view of a Londoner who is able to attend concerts when he wants to do so, is in no way an attack on broadcasting; nor is the writer ignorant of all that can be said in its favour. It is merely an attempt to indicate some of its possible influences on music and musicians, and to inquire what steps we must take to make room in our world for a late-comer who is obviously here on a very long visit.

THEORETICAL TEACHING: SOME SUGGESTIONS FOR REFORM

By Cyril Bradley Rootham

Mr. Julius Harrison's article on 'Pedantry in Examinations' incites me to follow his lead. May I suggest some reforms in theoretical teaching? As University lecturer in harmony and counterpoint, and examiner for degrees at Cambridge, I have had to define for myself what counterpoint and harmony mean in examination papers. I decided that counterpoint means practice in 16th- and early 17th-century methods of writing, and that harmony implies the various musical styles which have flourished since (say) the time of Purcell onwards. All examinations should, as I think, involve scholarship, i.e., knowledge of the great works of the past. In this connection I exclude contemporary composition, since contemporary methods are nearly always a matter of controversy. Musical degrees, if they are to be of any value, are primarily concerned with scholarship, and not with original contemporary composition: although Cambridge welcomes originality in the two composition papers in the final Mus.B. examination, in the Exercise for Mus.M., and in the compositions that have to be submitted for the degree of Mus.D. (Incidentally it would be well if all singers and instrumentalists, as well as composers, conductors, and critics, had more scholarship, in addition to their purely technical training.)

I always teach from scores of great composers, and not from text-books, and even the shortest exercise in notes written by a student must be musical; that is, the writer should be anxious that other people should take some pleasure in hearing it performed. If any exercise fails in this test, then it is of little value. If a vocal melody is set for three- or four-part writing, then the student is expected to study a Mass or a madrigal, a chorale of Bach, or a chorus from Purcell or Handel, according to the style of the question, before a note be written down. If a violin or viola or violoncello part be set, then similarly a dance movement from, say, Purcell's 'Fairy Queen,' or a movement from a Beethoven quartet, must first be studied. If no training has been undergone at school, then a start must be made to write in one part—i.e., melodies; for thus, as it seems to me, should all music-writing begin. It is obviously useless to write musical notes on paper, unless one hears what one is writing as a whole, and a continuous whole. No one can begin to write in four parts if he or she be unable to think and write one part—i.e., a melody. The next stage is to put that melody in the bass and add another part to it. This is a big step, and requires thinking in two parts at once. How few people can hear two parts at once I have demonstrated by testing so-called musical audiences (teachers included) with our National Anthem in the left hand and a gay tune in the right hand above it. Very few among my audiences have recognised the tune in the left hand. How then expect beginners (children or adults) to think in and to write four parts at once?

After two-part writing will come three-part writing. Once the student can hear and write three parts at once, the rest is comparatively easy. But only after three-part contrapuntal writing has been achieved should block harmony, i.e., chords, be studied. The reverse method spells mathematical puzzles, not musical thinking: the beginner writes chords without connecting their different parts in his mind melodically; he thinks in chords, not phrases (words, not sentences). Such a method also induces other faults, such as inability to follow good part-writing, poor sight-reading, failure to follow the use of accidentals through a bar, or the different lengths of notes in the various parts that make up the polyphony of any reasonably good composition.

All serious musical students then should approach the art of writing music on paper by the historical method—tunes first, then the gradual addition of more parts. The style of each little piece of music written should be determined beforehand: moreover, it should be written always for a definite medium, i.e., voices, or strings, or pianoforte, or organ, &c.; and, as I have written above, some examples by great masters of the past should first be played and examined by the eye carefully before any attempt is made to write, whether it be a tune or intricate polyphony. It is perhaps hardly necessary nowadays to insist on the advantages of learning to write first in the style of the great vocal writers of the 16th and early 17th centuries. Just as the study of Latin is a living thing, if one would understand the great literature of the Romans and realise the foundations of much of our own English language and literature, so is the close study of the pure diatonic vocal school of those great days of our English pre-eminence in music a first necessity in true musical education. Its free rhythm and declamation, founded upon the plain-chant tradition, are perhaps its most valuable object-lessons. The later styles, involving the use of unprepared discords, chromatics, &c., should come afterwards. Figured bass is, in my opinion, for advanced students only. It should be studied historically, as a method of shorthand used by composers of a certain period. By its means these composers indicated to the organ player or harpsichord player who accompanied singers, or choruses and orchestra, the skeleton outlines of the piece of music which was being performed. It is obvious, then, that to accompany a singer from a figured bass part written by, say, an 18th century composer, the accompanist will play flowing parts in accordance with the style of the music. He will use passing-notes and figures of accompaniment (which are not, of course, expressed in the figures) to suit the composer's style. What, then, is to be said of the stupid, cramped exercises given so often in examinations to students? In such exercises the students are supposed to follow the figures strictly, the result being a dull succession of chords. Or in other examination papers that I have seen, all the passing-notes are figured as well—the resulting figures looking like a logarithmic table. Do examiners who set these papers realise the absurdity, historically and musically, of such futile puzzles?

In conclusion, it should be remembered that in any style of composition, the possibilities of permutations of chords are comparatively limited, whereas the possibilities of new effects in true polyphony are illimitable.

The Tudor Singers and the Kendall String Sextet will join forces at Æolian Hall on December 3, at 8.15, in a programme of old music, comprising choral works by Byrd, Fayrfax, Aston, Morley, Weelkes, Palestrina, &c., and string sextets by Byrd and Gibbons.

Ad Libitum

By 'FESTE'

Last month I ventured to protest against a remark of Kreisler—a remark which expressed in a few words his policy of confining his activities to the playing of trifles, and the neglect of the concerted masterpieces. It is only fair that I should take the earliest possible opportunity for giving him credit of being better than his word: during the past month he played superbly the Brahms and Elgar Concertos at Queen's Hall, with the London Symphony Orchestra, and so did much to remove a long-standing reproach. Incidentally, the occasion showed that musical critics, after all, have their uses. There is hardly one of those writing for the London press who has not expressed himself frankly concerning Kreisler's choice of programme during the past two or three seasons, and it is evident that (1) they said what the genuinely musical public thought, and (2) they did not say it in vain. A great artist needs to be reminded from time to time that although hoi polloi will sit at his feet and rapturously acclaim his performance of trifles, a very large proportion of this same crowd will join with musicians in appreciation of the big standard works. A half-arrived performer may be excused for playing the safety game, whereas a Kreisler holds both publics so securely in the hollow of his hand that he risks nothing in catering for both. On the other hand, if he takes the easy line of merely fiddling to the crowd, he risks his reputation as an artist.

Mr. St. John Ervine has lately released some characteristic denunciations of the hysterical flappers who spoil the enjoyment of the general public at theatrical first nights. I wish musical critics would deal as faithfully with the unbalanced enthusiasts at the Gilbert and Sullivan operas and the Russian Ballet. There must be a good many folk who avoid the former annual revivals simply because of the lengths to which the applauding and encoring fiends have been allowed to go. No doubt the management takes the view that as the theatre is always crowded, everything is as it should be. It appears to forget that a more stringent line in the matter of encores would not keep one rabid enthusiast away, whereas it would improve the performances by allowing of greater continuity, and so would attract people who can manage to be enthusiastic without temporarily taking leave of their senses. The run of the 'Beggar's Opera' was spoilt by similar excesses. On the occasion of my one visit practically every song was encored, and the process became almost entirely mechanical. The result was, of course, a constant holding up of the story, and the lengthening of the show by the better part of an hour. We heard of some devotees attending anything from ten to fifty performances, but no statistics are available concerning those who, like myself, made their first visit also their last, merely because of the senseless and indiscriminate encoring.

Yet the public that prefers a 'straight-through' performance of a dramatic work ought to be considered, small and unvociferous though it may be. I gather that Dr. Sargent has somewhat improved things at the Gilbert and Sullivan revival. Let us hope that he will eventually nduce the Savoy audience to listen to the interludes and other bits of purely instrumental music. It is an anomaly that to-day, when Sullivan's genius seems at last to be fully appreciated, his works are being performed to an audience that is apparently the least musical in London.

As for the Russian Ballet, the hysteria of the attendant flappers of both sexes is perhaps best reflected in a notice of the opening performance that appeared in the Evening News of November 15. The writer (not the journal's excellent music critic, by the way) dithyrambs his way down nearly a whole column of the paper—which is quite six times as much space as would be allowed for a first-class concert, and far more than double the amount given to the first performance of a new opera or play.

He begins on a note of high ecstasy:

> Young men and maidens, when they have fallen deeply in love, often wonder what they thought and talked of before the revelation came that changed the whole world for them. It is surely so with us true lovers of the Russian Ballet: we cannot imagine how we existed in, say, the Augustan Age (meaning the era of Sir Augustus Harris), when stage dancing was a matter of mechanical evolutions and meaningless display, and M. Diaghilev's ideal of a newer and more intimate art, able to express the whole chiaroscuro of life, was by us undreamed of!

Sir Augustus died thirty years ago, and it is hard to believe that a writer youthful enough to regard anything so exotic and artificial as the Russian Ballet as being 'able to express the whole chiaroscuro of life' was born at so savage and remote a date.

And only the young and unsophisticated can see in the Ballet what the E. N. devotee sees:

> To-day, thanks to M. Diaghilev and his incomparable company, all of them immortal if only for a moment, we have been endowed with a new synthesis of the arts as significant as Wagner's, and more far-reaching, I believe, in its artistic consequences.

The artistic synthesis known as music-drama may not be all that Wagner thought it to be, but the one element of speech alone gives it a range and definiteness which must always be denied the ballet, captivating though the latter may be.

The writer goes on:

> But are we as grateful for this glorious gift as we ought to be? Do we show our gratitude as we ought? Indeed, I don't think so; a fury of applause and a frenzy of flowers are not sufficient.

However, he does not suggest what is sufficient. Perhaps, after all, he would be at a loss to say what is left beyond noisy fury and floral frenzy. Why not try a little eloquent silence? When we are in the presence of immortals (even though they be immortal 'only for a moment') our feelings might well be too deep for words and flowers.

> The Lyceum was packed, from the floor up and up to the dizzy gallery, and never before had this historic theatre—in which dwell the echoes of old ovations to Henry Irving and Ellen Terry, like the sound of the sea in a sea-shell—been shaken by such air-quakes of acclamation.

Well, the old Irving-Terry days were not without packed houses and 'air-quakes of acclamation,' but in order to be sure that the quakes of a given day excelled all previous cataclysms one would need to have been present at them all. I can see some old playgoers, with the great days of the Irving régime in mind, smiling at the writer's easy dogmatism on this point.

The emotional climax of the article is reached in the following:

> It was proved . . . that the Diaghilev Ballet appeals to the heart of the people. I had the feeling that it was really a lover's meeting after too long a parting. So sincere and single-hearted was the passionate applause that it brought tears to one's eyes. There was a spirit of fraternisation in the audience, all sorts and conditions of men and women being made one and indivisible by the sense of a great and glorious triumph. The heart of London was heard beating [not to say palpitating].

To make a long and foolish story short, here are a few more flowers of speech culled almost at random: 'land of modish faery'; 'white-kirtled girls, faintly passionate in nocturnes of silver and grey, or of blue and palest gold'; 'dances of young athletes and stripped flirtations and merry pranks of an irresponsible, irrepressible young set'; 'dancing that owes nothing to costume [tut!], scenery purged of colour, music without melodious prettiness. I always liked Francis Poulenc's explosive plangencies [you would!] despite the preaching of the musical critics'; 'Vera Petrova, in her blue velvet jumper and little more [tut-tut!] was loveliness without lendings, and the Rag Mazurka would have set Chopin laughing so heartily as to bring on a bronchial attack'—assuming Chopin to have been as easily amused as Master and Miss 1926. 'At the end we all went mad'—and sat down to write about it without waiting for a lucid interval. How M. Diaghilev must smile behind his hand when the press-cuttings reach him!

'Kill-joy!' says a reader. Not a bit of it. I get as much pleasure out of 'Petrouchka' as any average man. I have written the above because uncritical gush is the worst enemy of art. Can we imagine this gathering of fervid 'fans' exercising an atom of the critical discrimination that is the breath of life to all true artists? We can not. Concert audiences may not be ideal in this respect, but musicians may (and probably do) thank heaven that such excesses as those of the 'Beggar's Opera,' Savoy, and Russian Ballet worshippers are almost unknown in the concert-hall. When the 'heart of London is heard beating' at a Queen's Hall Symphony concert as it is alleged to have beaten at the Lyceum, and when our musical critics join the audience in going mad—and apparently staying there—we may write 'Ichabod.' For when Hysteria comes in, Art goes out.

DR. BLOW'S CHURCH MUSIC AND ITS DEFORMITIES

By HEATHCOTE D. STATHAM

(Concluded from November Number, page 990)

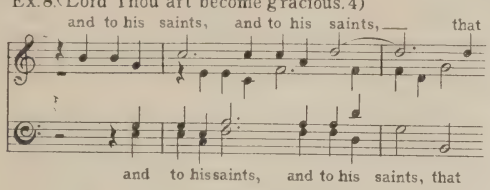
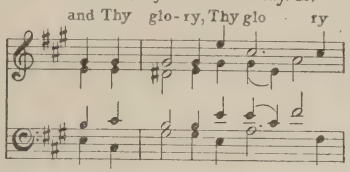
Burney in his comments on Blow's music draws attention to the treatment of sevenths. The dropping of the suspended seventh to the fifth with a rise immediately afterwards to the octave is quite common :

Ex. 8. (Lord Thou art become gracious. 4)

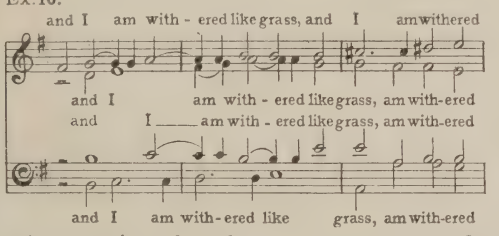


Ex. 9. (O God, my heart is ready. 12)



Ex. 16, to be quoted further on, shows the suspended seventh rising to the third of the chord. In Ex. 10, the seventh rises, and here again, consecutive octaves are only just missed :

Ex. 10.



and I am with - ered like grass, and I am withered and I am with - ered like grass, am with-ered
and I am with - ered like grass, am with-ered
and I am with-ered like grass, am with-ered

This quotation also shows the use, and a very effective use, of consecutive seconds on the word 'withered.'

Examples both of consecutive fifths and consecutive fourths used in an unusual way are to be found in the following quotation from Anthem No. 12 :

set up thy - self O God
- self O God a - bove, a - bove the heavens a-bove the heavens set up thy-self a - bove the heavens
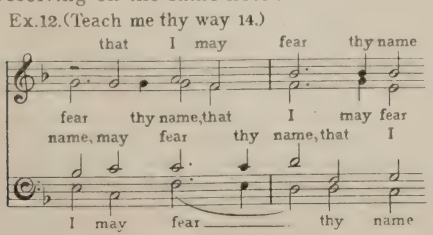
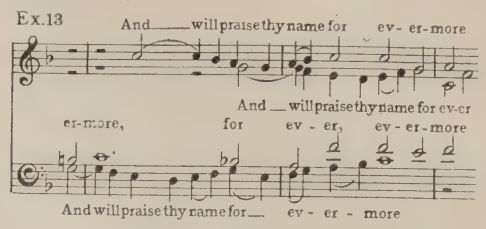
O God, set up thy-self O God while, to revert to the subject of suspensions, the following quotation gives a rather barbarous example of a suspended ninth and its accompanying third, both resolving on the same note :

Ex. 12. (Teach me thy way 14.)



Blow's free way of using the voices in contrapuntal passages is remarkable, and almost any bar taken at random from one of his fugal choruses will bear witness to this. The following is from the end of Anthem No. 14 :

Ex. 13



And will praise thy name for ev - er - more
And will praise thy name for ev-er er-more, for ev - er, ev - er - more
And will praise thy name for ev - er - more and Ex. 14, from 'Praise the Lord, ye servants' (10), shows the alto and tenor disagreeing. The organ part adds to the clashing effect of the passage by doubling the tenor in thirds :

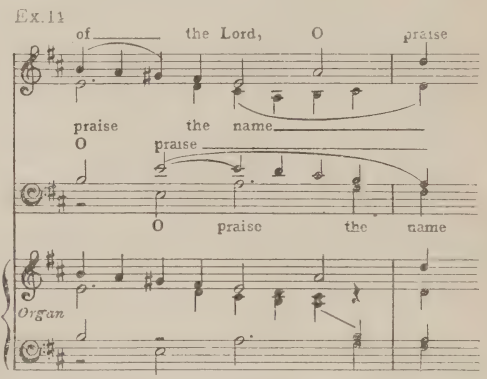
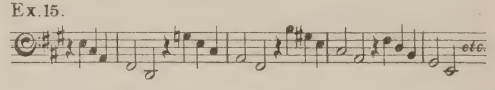
Ex. 11



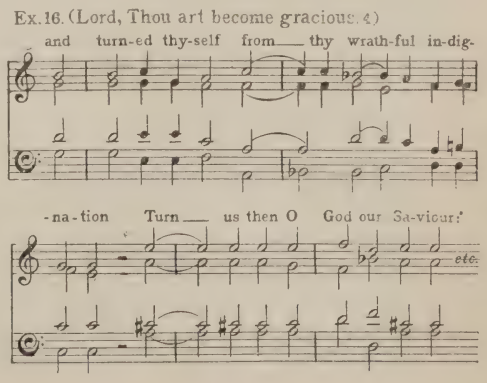
In these fugal choruses in the major a little jostling of the voice parts is a matter of no moment. Each voice gets a good tune to sing, and that is the thing that counts. Sometimes the melodic outline is remarkably bold and unconventional. The following is a bass passage that occurs in the final chorus of 'I will praise the Name of God' (5), to the words 'That men may dwell there,' repeated four times :

Ex. 15.



So far only Blow's counterpoint has been noticed. His modulations and his harmonies deserve a few words. Boyce commends him for 'his success in cultivating an uncommon talent for modulation,' and rightly, for he can, when he has caught the inspiration of the words, make a sudden change of key which is brilliantly effective :

Ex. 16. (Lord, Thou art become gracious. 4)



Ex. 17. (7)

praise the name of the Lord, of the Lord of the Lord, the name of the Lord praise the name of the Lord, praise the name of the Lord
Let them praise the name of the Lord
For he spake the word and they were made
For he spake the word and they were made and they were made

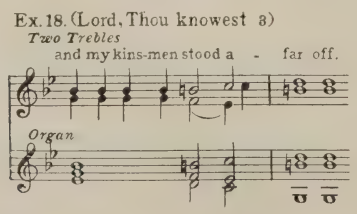
But in his fugal choruses, or in choruses of a jubilant character in the major key, such as the first chorus in 'Praise the Lord' (1) his methods of modulation are not always quite comfortable. He has a habit, then, of side-stepping from one key to another instead of taking the usual route, so that the listener finds himself suddenly and rather surprisingly in a new key without any very clear understanding of how he got there. An example of this, which is too long to quote, can be found in the concluding chorus of 'O God, my heart is ready,' where, after four bars of fugal entry in A major the key is changed in the fifth bar very quickly, so that at the beginning of the sixth bar there is a distinct feeling that the key of G has been reached and the tonality shifted down a tone. In most of the fugal choruses Blow's touch is somewhat tentative and uncertain; it is in such choruses that his inspiration seems to fail him. These choruses are often written to words which are not particularly inspiring; and this lack of inspiration in the words results in a similar lack in the music. Blow was very susceptible to the influence of words: to words which express some appeal for pity or mercy, or have in them some element of sadness, he responded with music which has the unmistakable ring of sincerity; so he did to words which express plainly and simply some fundamental fact such as the majesty of the Creator; but it is in his settings of the tag-ends of sentences as final choruses that his unconventionalities become irritating, and appear as slipshod workmanship. In common with other composers of the Restoration, he was always quick to seize an opportunity to illustrate a single word or a pictorial phrase in his music. Words like 'groaning,' or 'height,' and phrases like 'My strength hath failed me' and 'Thy hand presseth me sore' are neatly touched in the music. The idea of distance is admirably portrayed in the spacing of the organ chord (which appears thus in the original organ books) in the following example:

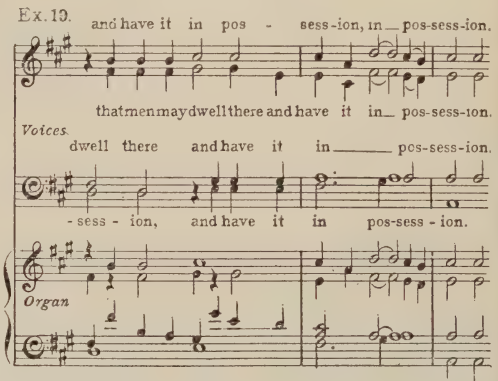
Ex. 18. (Lord, Thou knowest 8)



Some mention must be made of the organ parts before this summary of Blow's style is concluded. Though a good many full Anthems by Blow (as by other composers of the period) can be sung without accompaniment, there is little doubt that they were intended to be sung with it.

In the organ part to every one of the Anthems by Blow that the writer has studied there are places, sometimes only a chord or two, where the organ does more than just double the voice parts. A frequent touch is the adding in the organ part of a sixth, when the voices are singing a common chord. Sometimes the organ supplies the tonic bass when the voices are singing a 6-4 chord. A certain freedom usually appears in the organ part at the end of a fugal chorus. A good example of this can be found at the end of 'I will praise the Name':

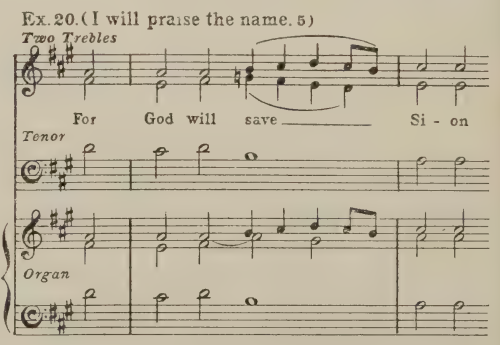
Ex. 19.



and have it in pos - sess-ion, in pos-sess-ion.
that men may dwell there and have it in pos-sess-ion.
Voices.
dwell there and have it in pos-sess-ion.
- sess - ion, and have it in pos-sess - ion.
Organ

The flowing inner part here might well be played in the treble where it would be more effective. In playing the organ parts to these old Anthems, an organist may reasonably allow himself some licence in going beyond the actual written notes. The original organ parts are, of course, sketchy; except where they depart from doubling the voices only the treble and bass are given, figures indicating the harmonies. They may well be taken as a framework on which a more elaborate organ part can be built by an organist of artistic capabilities. (The writer, in editing some of Blow's Anthems, has reproduced as far as possible the original organ parts, adding the full harmonies where the organ part doubles the voice parts.) One really charming use of a free organ part must be quoted:

Ex. 20. (I will praise the name. 5)



This is very slight, but very neat.

It is probable that editors of the last century (at least of the early part of it) did not pay sufficient attention to organ parts. 'With an organ part by ——' is common reading in many old scores. But the fact is that all these old Anthems have their organ books, and whoever ignores them does so at the risk of missing some subtle touch like that in Ex. 20. The late Mr. Husk, for instance, splendid though his work for Blow's Church music was, made the error of omitting any reference to the organ parts in many of the full Anthems.

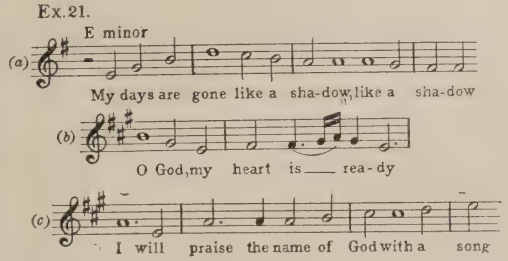
Whatever opinion one may hold about the 'deformities' in Blow's Church music, there is one test which can be applied to all Church music (one might say to all vocal music), and this test his music passes triumphantly. This is, whether the words and music move together so that they are felt to be inseparable; or, to phrase it differently, whether the music enhances the meaning of the words. No one expects every piece of Church music to be a work of genius; but in all Church music two things seem essential—dignity in the rhythm, and a melodic outline on which the words lie naturally and beautifully. Apply this test to Purcell's Church music, or to Wesley's, and it will pass it again and again. So, to take a modern instance at random, will Geoffrey Shaw's 'Worship.' Apply it to some of the florid and vulgar settings of the Canticles, and they fail to pass it. It is only necessary to glance at the openings of some of Blow's Anthems to see how beautifully music and words fit, and to feel at once the sincerity of the composer:

Ex. 21.



It would be ridiculous to place Blow among the three or four really great English composers. He could not soar on eagle's wings like Byrd, or like Elgar. He was essentially, as were all the men of his period, including Purcell, a composer who worked on a small scale. (Purcell was big in spite of this.) But granting his limitations, he is far from being a small figure. There is breadth, dignity, and sincerity about the best of his Church music which will ensure its being sung as long as Church music is sung at all. And it is beautifully singable; in the flowing grace of his interweaving melodies he can meet, and sometimes beat, the Elizabethans on their own ground. Above all he was an experimenter; and so he wins that lurking affection which goes out to those who treat conventions in a cavalier fashion. He combines the characteristics of a Church musician (his massive, serious face framed in its full-bottomed wig is just such a face as one feels an Abbey organist should have) with a gay bravado which compels him to 'throw his notes about at random,' and this makes him rather an attractive figure.

It is interesting to wonder what the course of English music might have been if some composer of genius had followed Blow and taken up his unconventional methods and carried them further. Would the reign of consecutive fifths have come two hundred years ago? Undoubtedly Blow was feeling his way away from academic methods of harmony and counterpoint; but he was destructive rather than constructive. It is at least amusing to imagine that something approximating to modern music, or some phases of it, might have grown from Blow's music if the right man had been forthcoming. But only the solid and respectable Greene and Boyce were to follow him (Croft died some twenty years after Blow); and even while Blow was still alive there was a young man at Hamburg writing operas, whose easy genius was before very long to crush all individuality out of English Church music for a generation or more.

Points from Lectures

At mid-November the tidal wave of lectures is at the highest point. The wave reaches inland and into the remotest places. Sir Walford Davies said at Gresham College that he had just been lecturing to miners, their wives and babies, in a Welsh valley. He was asked by telephone to come earlier, as the place was crowded. The silent, tense interest far exceeded that of town audiences. As admission was free, he wondered how he was to receive any fee, and found that the coal-owners paid for these Welsh treats, while the men refused to work.

Greater variety and interest are to be noticed in lecture subjects this season compared with recent years. To group them is impossible, and any selection must cut out notices of many lectures.

A beginning may be made with the Gresham lecture incidentally referred to. The Professor said it was the first time he had touched upon choral music. It came into his lengthy series having the general title, 'The Nature and Practice of Music.' The manner of it was quite Sir Walford's own, which is to say that it was that of one of the most distinguished of lecturers on music. The listener is part of the lecture, either as illustrator or mental commentator. The characteristic, often discursive, style rouses even the sleepy elderly 'student' when he or she is called upon for the exercise or the chorus, and the professional helpers are also put through their facings. The four practical points of choir-training, said Sir Walford, were Energy, Unity, Tone, and Tune—not his own selection, but those thrashed out in a discussion in the conductors' class at the Royal College of Music. Much of this introductory lecture, which was followed by others on Choral Melody, Choral Rhythm, and Choral Chords, dealt with the choralists' twofold task, 'the perpetual difficulty of relating the physical and mental elements to each other, and then of relating the individual effort to the whole.' These main thoughts led the large audience into many bypaths, there to linger while being assisted in the 'physical and mental discernment of beauty.'

Choir-training was also Dr. Bairstow's subject at the meeting of the Liverpool Organists' and Choirmasters' Association. To be successful, he said, the choir-trainer must be a good musician with a nicely discriminating taste, with a knowledge of human nature, and, naturally, of the voice. He should be able to appreciate words and poetry. Above all, he must rule his choir by love, and not by fear. Dr. Bairstow emphasised the importance of developing correct breathing, resonance, diction, and purity of phrasing.

Lady Mary Trefusis was one of the chief speakers at the Norwich meeting of the Church-Music Society. Her subject was 'Nationality in Hymn-Tunes.' Why should the old books have been more than half full of foreign tunes? Presumably because they were more accessible. But, beautiful as were many of the German chorales, they were not really at all suited to the English temperament, besides being no finer than our national tunes. Our penchant for singing 'Austria' and 'Nun danket' would be understandable if we had no beautiful hymn-tunes of our own.

The Clan MacLeod Society at Edinburgh heard a lecture on Folk-Song, by Robert Macleod of that ilk. Professional musicians were being stimulated by going back to the fountain-head of melody, said the lecturer, but at the 'Mod,' and at musical festivals, he found that not one per cent. of the competitors caught the spirit of the tunes. They had spent their time endeavouring to catch the essence of the words, and in doing so had lost the elusive, spiritual quality of the melody. There were no pauses in the melodic land. It was rather a pity that a good deal more thought had not been given to this spiritual value in tunes, because the songs of the North had it in an extraordinary degree. No doubt there was a great deal of trash in the folk-songs of our country; that was inevitable. Great songs, like great poetry, came from great minds.

Speaking on 'Melody,' at Sheffield, Sir Henry Hadow said that the appreciation of music wanted three essentials. The first of these was a pair of ears; the primary object of music was to be heard. Some people did not hear much more than the top or bottom lines, the inner parts being nothing but a blur. The second essential was a clean, wholesome emotion, which liked honest, human feeling. The third was commonsense. We had to apply to music the same standard of reasonableness that we applied to things that we read about and looked at. Music had meaning just as much as literature. The best music always carried its own significance. There was one other qualification—some knowledge and understanding of musical history. There was the big element in music. One might say there were six general heads under which beauty of tune could be considered, viz., line, rhythm, colour, climax, organization, and sentiment.

Rotarians at Taunton were told by Mr. Gibson Young that at the second of his concerts in the churchyard of St. Martin-in-the-Fields, Lord Beaverbrook just 'happened in,' and was so struck with the idea that he decided to inaugurate a campaign for community singing.

Giving 'The Story of the Pianoforte and its Literature,' at Leicester, Mr. A. M. Henderson, of Glasgow, commented on Bach's preference for the clavichord rather than the harpsichord. Some of Mr. Henderson's illustrations were taken from the Virginall-Booke in the Fitzwilliam collection. He remarked that Queen Elizabeth was a noted performer on the virginals, but if she could play a quarter of the pieces in her book, she must have played uncommonly well.

Lecturing on the Player-Piano at Bradford, Mr. Percy Scholes said that in America the 'Duo-Art' had superseded the 'Pianola' for several reasons. First, the American was rolling in wealth, and whatever his neighbour got he must have also. Then, he did not care to work out his own interpretation on the 'Pianola'; he would rather sit in an arm-chair and let a master play for him on the 'Duo-Art,' without any necessity for providing expression himself. In his determination to go ahead, he didn't always go the way that was best for him. Mr. Scholes would be sorry to see the 'Pianola' superseded in this country. This instrument did not cut out the human element, and a large measure of individual expression was possible. The 'Duo-Art' or the 'Pianola' grew with one, so to speak, and could not be outgrown.

Although the subject of his lecture at Grantham was 'First Steps in Musical Appreciation,' Mr. Geoffrey Shaw had some hard things to say of the title. Who gave it that name he did not know, but whichever godfather the child had he very wisely remained anonymous. He had inspected schools where he was told that they 'did' appreciation. What he heard was a not very good piece of music not very well played to a class of children not at all interested. At the end of the playing the teacher asked, 'Now, children, of what does that remind you?' 'Waves on the seashore?'—No. 'Wind rustling the leaves of the trees?'—No. 'Fairies dancing by moonlight?'—'Quite right, dear.' He knew nothing more flabby and more woolly-minded than that way of teaching. We had to build on the liking for music, but to that we had to add love for music and understanding. Quoting Blake's lines, Mr. Shaw said there were many ways to 'Heaven's gate,' and music was one of them.

Dr. Markham Lee's final remark at a lecture on Mozart at West Hartlepool is noteworthy. Commenting on the fact that many people spoke of Mozart's music as being too simple and straightforward, he said that those who drank cocktails didn't enjoy ginger-beer; yet the sooner they got back to ginger-beer the better.

International as an interpreter, Mr. Edward Mitchell broadened the sympathies of his audience at Belfast when he spoke upon, and played, modern pianoforte music. His programme represented ten countries. When studying the music of any period, he said it was unwise to ignore the relations between musical art and other spheres of human activity. The character of modern music had been formed to a considerable extent by outside influences, and it had also been influenced by science. There was also the influence of the extreme nationalism which had arisen in so many countries during the last hundred years. Mr. Mitchell referred to the progress of British music, and said that British composers had now that absolute pre-eminence which was formerly held by Germany and later by Russia. The tendency of the present day amongst British composers was towards extreme diversity of style.

Jazz, in the opinion of Mr. Appleby Matthews, when speaking at Birmingham, was no more music, the greatest of the arts, than a circus was music. It could have no bearing upon the future of music. His regretful opinion was that the outlook for English orchestras was desperate, in spite of the fact that English players were the finest in the world. Was there no end to the destruction to be wrought in the ranks of public music by mechanical reproduction? No machine could give that intimacy of performance which was part of the very art of music.

The embodiment of the arts was compared in this simple way by Mr. Walter Yeomans, when addressing Halifax Rotarians: A painter painted a picture, and said, 'This is my picture'; an architect erected a building, and said, 'This is my building'; but a composer had to rely on another party to give audible expression to his ideas, and often a composer was extremely badly served by his interpreter.

Sir Henry Coward, speaking at Mexborough, favoured the definition of 'What is Art?' as being 'Art is the well-doing of what has to be done.' This applied more especially to the fine arts, which implied the possession of a soul, and the using of it to create some object or impression of beauty. Music was in that class. Its manifestation of soul redeemed the commonplace, fired the imagination, and aroused or subdued the passions. J. G.

RAVEL'S PIANOFORTE TECHNIQUE

By Henri Gil-Marchex

It was in 1902 that Demets, a far-sighted publisher, brought out 'Jeux d'eau.' This work proved to be the beginning of a new pianoforte technique which was destined to restore to virtuosity all the éclat it had lost and to revivify many ingenious combinations which had become only monotonous. The austere and despotic influence of César Franck and of Brahms—as embarrassing in the domain of chamber music as was the influence of Wagner in that of theatrical music—had practically done away with all subtle refinement in musical composition. One was content to utilise Mendelssohn's adroit processes, though these were already outworn, or Beethoven's maladresses, which did not always bear the stamp of genius. Any skill of a somewhat audacious order seemed put out of court, and all invention was an object of suspicion. One had to continue in servile fashion to put up with the old methods, and the pianoforte itself was no more than an almost useless instrument, on the down grade, which composers mainly used as the best substitute they could find for the orchestra. The marvellous discoveries of Liszt and Chopin were either neglected or despised. Music had become a means of philosophising, and the pianoforte had ceased to be the instrument of secret avowals, the interpreter of the most intimate sensations.

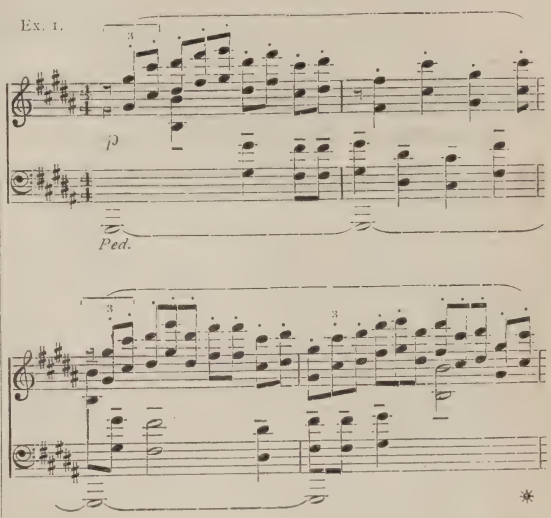
With that delightful symbolical line of Henri de Régnier, 'Dieu fluvial riant de l'eau qui le chatouille,' as exergue, 'Jeux d'eau' made its appearance.

Debussy was quite the first to perceive the coming of a new pianistic orchestration; he saw a whole universe of sound to be explored, far removed from the burlesque musical digressions or the so-called 'salon' morceaux—occasionally charming, and then greatly in the fashion—of Grieg and Massenet: modest works which have endured longer than lucubrations with more pompous claims.

Adapting his subtle genius to the discoveries of Ravel, Debussy immediately turned them to good account, as we see in the case of the three 'Estampes,' composed in 1903. We need but compare them with the Suite 'Pour le piano,' written two years previously—a charming work, assuredly, though quite conventional in style—to have a proof of the influence of 'Jeux d'eau.'

In 'Pagodes,' the first of the 'Estampes,' the theme is given by the left hand in octaves, against a delicate counter-theme played by the right hand, whilst the pedal, kept long pressed down, creates a delightful harmonic atmosphere, drowning all the notes which nevertheless do not blend into one another, by reason of the registers in which they are placed:

Ex. 1.

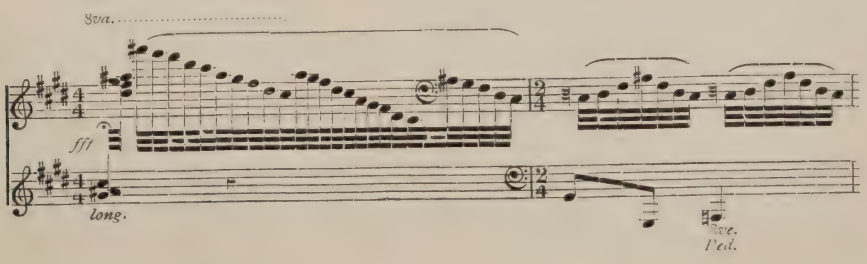


In order to express daintily the theme in octaves, it should be played by slightly pressing the keys with a very pronounced movement of the forearm from below upwards, keeping the wrist extremely supple, thus causing the hand to leave the keyboard with a gesture somewhat resembling the graceful attitude of a harpist striking a harp string. Is not this method a direct outcome of the following passage from 'Jeux d'eau'?:

Ex. 2.

In both instances, the technical means to be used are the same. And that glissando culminating in an amazing A natural, also in 'Jeux d'eau':

Ex. 3.



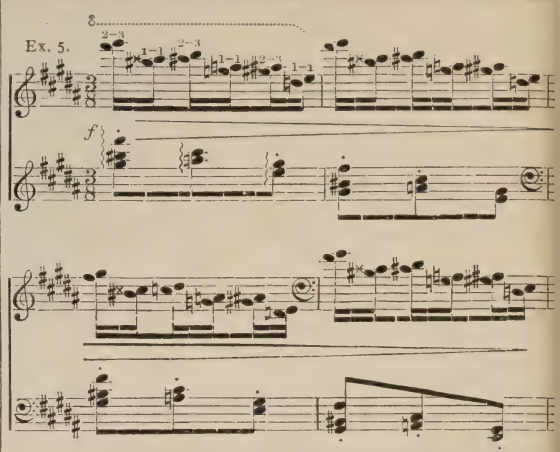
There is the same striking effect in 'Jardins sous la pluie':

Ex. 4.

The technique of 'Jeux d'eau' came direct from Liszt, but the necessity for a clearness and evenness of tone as precise as on the clavecin, the balance of skilful pedalling, which should inevitably vary with each instrument and combine with the constant variety of attack, the absence of any vehement or sentimental laisser-aller—all this, along with many another peculiarity, demands of the performer a very different preparation from that which was used in solving the pianistic problems of romantic music. It is rather with the clavecinists, and particularly Scarlatti, that Ravel may be compared as regards fingering; for subtlety of touch, the Chopin of the 'Etudes' and the 'Preludes' is an excellent guide; the mode of phrasing frequently resembles that of Chabrier.

Had he wished, Ravel, like Saint-Saëns, could have been a very fine virtuoso, but he contented himself—for he never practised—with being a tolerably efficient pianist whose hands are perhaps 'the tyrants of musical creation,' as Weber wrote with reference to himself. He takes an amazingly low seat at the keyboard, a peculiarity which is perhaps one of the reasons why he never utilises octave strokes; his long, agile fingers and slender hand attached to an extremely supple wrist seem to be those of a sleight-of-hand conjurer; his thumb comes back to the palm of the hand with incredible facility, which enables him easily to strike several notes together. It is this thumb which explains the seconds in 'Scarbo':

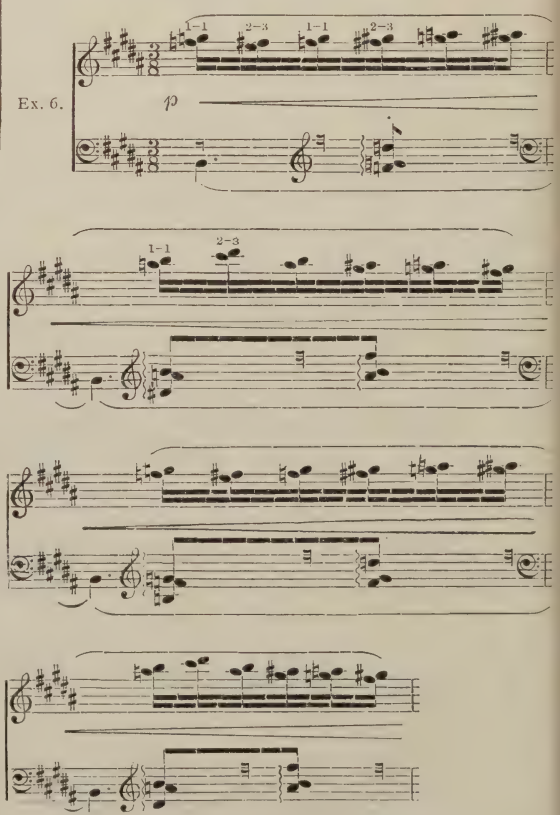
Ex. 5.



It is impossible to overcome this difficulty otherwise than by this fingering, aided by a violent balancing of the hand: a new habit for pianists to adopt. Articulation is useless, the play of the fingers upon the keys being subordinated to the movement of the wrist which controls the oscillation of the first and second fingers, forming a compact mass and moving in a piece, as does the thumb.

Another passage, a few bars earlier, seems to present a difficulty of the same kind:

Ex. 6.



Here, however, the wrist simply facilitates the activity of the fingers which have the chief part to play and must attack the notes with very clear articulation, though more or less emphasised according as they have to reach black keys or white ones. The inconvenience created at the outset by these seconds is not easy to overcome, and the endless exercises written to explain how to play double notes are scarcely of the slightest use.

Another instance of a thumb effect, absolutely different in character, may be seen in the sixth of the 'Valses nobles et sentimentales':

Ex. 7.

Here again the wrist is the principal factor; the thumb, if it is to be expressive, glides from the bottom of the black key to the edge of the white one; to aid this movement, the hand must be continuously rotating.

Extremely rapid thumb passings are very frequent, and are often combined with repeated notes, in a way that bears a striking resemblance to that of Scarlatti. This may be seen in all Ravel's works as well as in the latest 'Tzigane,' where, although the pianoforte plays only the part of accompaniment, the composer insisted on writing the fingering himself:

Ex. 8.

This feature, while being an imitation of the Hungarian cembalo, is nevertheless extremely Ravelian in its technique, and it is interesting to note how it is connected with the following extract from the Finale of the 'Sonatine':

Ex. 9.

To conclude the special thumb gymnastics, I mention also the dainty arpeggios, placed outside the bars, which they must not slow down; this we have seen in the 'Pavane pour une Infante Défunte,' and again in 'Une Barque sur l'Océan,' but more particularly in 'Ondine':

Ex. 10.

This kind of very light arpeggio gives the impression of a glissando, and compels the articulation of fingers and wrist to be reduced to a minimum. Still, the clearness of the performance should be as pronounced as for a brilliant arpeggio; it calls for exactness in moving the hand somewhat as on a string instrument when the position is changed; a pedal vibrato ensures an airy and vaporous sound effect.

As a rule, the pedal is not difficult to manage, but as it frequently happens that it has to remain pressed down for a lengthy period, considerable variety of attack is necessary if the various harmonies are not to be confused. The pianist must have at his disposal a 'sound palette' whose colours it is impossible to enumerate, so different are they, and so unlike anything hitherto supplied by pianoforte music. The keys should be struck or gently stroked, now right at the edge, now in the middle, now almost against the keyboard cover, with a well-thought-out manipulation of the different weights of fingers, hand, forearm, and entire arm.

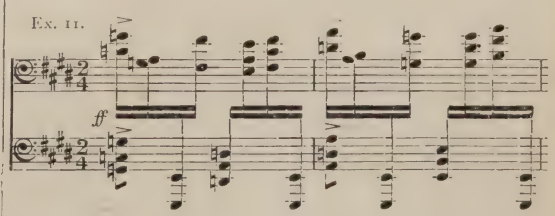
Sometimes it is the finger alone that has to play very loudly, sometimes the entire arm is needed to obtain the requisite quality of pianissimo.

Each interpreter, according to his physical powers, will create for himself a whole system of varied sounds, the rules and regulations of which will doubtless one day be standardised in some handbook or other.

I have calculated that in the 'Gibet' it is necessary to use twenty-seven different methods of touch. It would take too long to demonstrate them here.

I should like, however, to point again to the combined movements for both hands in producing certain effects; as, for instance, in the sparkling peroration of the 'Toccata' in the 'Tombeau de Couperin':

Ex. 11.



necessitating independence in the arms—a technique which has to be acquired, even after having worked up Liszt's 'Etudes transcendantes.' The same difficulty—for pianissimo—is found in 'Ondine,' though here it calls for articulation of the wrist alone because of the nuance:

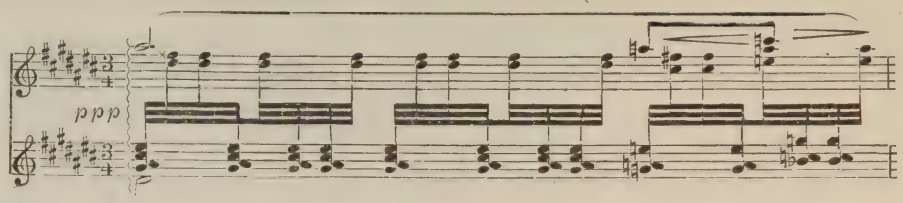
Ex. 12.



Thus Ravel made it possible for the pianoforte to play in music an important rôle which, ever since the time of Liszt, it seemed to have lost. I have pointed out no more than a few technical curiosities characteristic of his manner; a volume might be filled with exercises to meet the new difficulties of this pianistic style. Fortunately Ravel's composition is always admirably clear, each sign having its own exact importance. The magical formulæ are ready prepared, with almost meticulous precision; the player has but to read the text scrupulously and no doubt is possible as to the pianistic interpretation. On the other hand, the poetical interpretation is extremely subtle; the effort of imagination needed to express the thought of Ravel goes far beyond the powers of an ordinary player. In the music of Chopin, Schumann, or Beethoven, feelings are encountered in the rough; whether we are dealing with love or hate, tenderness or anger, the interpreter may make them his own by utilising his powers of sensibility in every way and without the least shame. Ravel's music does not permit of a like sans-gêne, his genius being most punctiliously sensitive. His is an art of extraordinarily voluptuous refinement, though one which simulates an almost disconcerting impassiveness amid the keenness of the sensations the composer evokes in all their complexity.

This is music which must be played with the heart, though also with a clear intellect: the latter controlling the possible unruliness of the former. To enter into and assimilate the thought of a composer, in order to pass it on with ever new fervour to an audience that is irregularly attentive and variously impressionable, is, in the case of 'Les Miroirs' and 'Gaspard de la Nuit,' a very delicate task to fulfil worthily. It is a delightful game—full of pleasing surprises—to try to make one's own the thought of Ravel: one can never get altogether lost, for the text is too precise; and yet this music, clear as it is, will not mean the same thing to every one; it will always be coloured by the various susceptibilities of different performers.

This universality of character is the sign of its importance, and pianists should be grateful to the author of 'Jeux d'eau' for having so frequently chosen their own particular instrument to reveal somewhat of the impenetrable mystery which each man bears within himself.

(Authorised translation by Fred Rothwell.)

Music in the Foreign Press

THE MUSICAL LORE OF THE EAST

The first issue of Muzykalnaya Etnographia, published at Leningrad under the editorship of Prof. Findeisen, contains twenty-five Kirghiz folk-tunes collected by A. Bimboes, songs from the Kostroma district, collected by L. Karunovskaya, an article on musical theory in contemporary Persia by E. Bertels, and an essay on the Jewish tympanon and its music by the Editor. It is to be hoped that this highly instructive publication will continue. Judging by the reports and programmes which it contains, the commission for the study of folk-music, under whose auspices it is issued, is very active at present.

EARLY MEDIÆVAL MUSIC

In the Zeitschrift für Musikwissenschaft (October), Peter Wagner investigates the origin of part-singing:

> In the 7th-century Ordo Romanus mention is made of the 'Paraphonistae' and the 'Archiparaphonista,' who sang not at the 'antiphonic' interval of the octave, but at the 'paraphonic' intervals of the fourth or fifth. Hence it is obvious that Roman 'paraphony' preceded the Organum or diaphony by at least two centuries.

In the same issue, Friedrich Gennrich devotes a long and instructive essay to the relation between the Trouvère songs and the earliest known examples of Motets. This is to be continued in the November issue.

CONTEMPORARY CRITICISM OF BEETHOVEN

The October Musica d Oggi reminds us of certain criticisms of Beethoven recently quoted by Karl Grunsky:

> Kreutzer, the violinist to whom Beethoven had inscribed a Sonata, urged Habeneck to cease propagating Beethoven's 'barbaric filth.' Spohr said that the opening theme of the fifth Symphony lacked the dignity which should characterise the main theme of a symphony, and that the noisy Finale was unsatisfactory. The Leipsic Allgemeine Musikalische Zeitung described the 'Eroica' as teeming with harsh and bizarre effects. Johann Spazier (said to have been an esteemed composer and an influential critic and editor of musical journals) considered the second Symphony as monstrous and repulsive.

THE SECRET OF MOZART'S 'THE VIOLET'

The first instalment (eight printed pages) of an essay on this subject by Dr. Alfred Heuss (November Zeitschrift für Musik) constitutes an example of thoroughness which will surely prove hard to beat. The secret is that Mozart has conceived the violet in a twofold aspect—that of the humble floweret as described by Goethe, and that of a proud, full-sized being ('ein Wesen in voller Menschengrösse').

WALDEMAR VON BAUSSERN

In the same issue, Fritz Ohrmann devotes an essay to this composer's music on the occasion of his sixtieth birthday.

ELLA VON SCHULTZ ADAIEWSKY

Also in the November issue is an obituary notice by Erich Kraak on Ella von Schultz Adaiewsky (d. July 29, 1926, in her eighty-first year). Her music is little known; her critical essays on Russian music and on the folk-music of various nations are worthy of attention.

A REMARKABLE INVENTION

The Monde Musical (September 30) describes the results achieved by the 'Cinetype,' a film camera used for photographing music manuscripts, which can be either shown on the screen or printed. The cost of photographing fifty-two pages is only 3fr. 10*c.* (or, at the present rate of exchange, less than fivepence), and the weight of a three-hundred-page score thus reproduced is only about two ounces.

A MALTESE MUSICAL PERIODICAL AND A STATEMENT 'MADE IN GERMANY'

The Malta Music Society 'The King's Own' has started the publication of a monthly journal entitled Filarmonica, which contains articles in English, Italian, and Maltese.

In the September issue an article, translated from the German of Herbert Johannes Gingler, contains the following startling assertion:

> There are regions . . . which have never produced any composer of rank, nor have they ever tried (sic) to leave their imprint on any musician. To these regions belong England, Holland, Switzerland and the Western part of Austria, Tyrol, and Salzburg.

A GRAND SPECIAL NUMBER

The October issue of Muzyka (Warsaw) is devoted to a survey of contemporary music in twenty-five European countries and in the United States. It consists of a hundred and ninety-two pages and contains twenty-two portraits of composers. British music is dealt with by L. Dunton Green. The information provided on little-known topics, such as the musical activities of Portugal, Denmark, Latvia, Esthonia, and Lettonia, will prove very useful.

CRITICISM AGAIN

Under the above title R. St. Hoffmann (in the October Musikbote) considers a few questions referring to musical criticism:

> The chief one is, 'Who should be a music critic?' It is not easily answered. The best critic, perhaps, is not he whose opinions are most 'right' (for the final test of 'rightness' lies merely in the success or failure of the works criticised), but he whose opinions are most sincerely expressed. Even a Paul Bekker may err in his forecasts, and will be seen to alter his views often enough. Possibly the best critic is he who 'works off,' in his criticism, his own unconscious or suppressed impulse towards artistic creation. In the last resort criticism is art; and to ask who should be a critic is as foolish as to ask who should be an artist.

M.-D. CALVOCORESSI.

A NEGLECTED OPERA: GLUCK'S 'ALCESTE'

BY L. N. C. BARNABY

(President, Oxford University Opera Club)

A short while ago Mr. Ernest Newman, in the Sunday Times, remarked that it was a great pity that nobody performed Gluck's 'Alceste' nowadays. So far as I know, it has not been given in this country since it was done privately by the Royal College of Music in 1908. Even after making allowances for the war, 1908 is a long time past, and there must be many musicians and opera-goers who would agree with Mr. Newman and welcome a revival. Fortunately the public will have the opportunity of hearing the work again this month, for the newly-formed Oxford University Opera Club is making its début with performances of 'Alceste,' at Oxford, from December 6 to 11.

Following upon the production of Monteverde's 'Orfeo' last year, the performances will be of unique interest, for Gluck is the next most important figure, after Monteverde, in the historical development of lyrical drama. 'Alceste' is a mature work, written when Gluck was fifty-three years old. It was first performed at Vienna, on December 16, 1767. By this time the composer had abandoned his tedious experiments in the Handelian style, the writing of loosely-knit 'pasticcios,' performances on the 'musical glasses,'* and other follies of his youth. He had formed certain definite theories about the writing of opera, which are set out very clearly in the Preface to 'Alceste.' The following extracts will suffice to bring out his main aims and endeavours:

> I resolved to avoid all those abuses which had crept into Italian opera through the mistaken vanity of singers and the unwise compliance of composers, and which had rendered it wearisome and ridiculous. . . . I endeavoured to reduce music to its proper function, that of seconding poetry by enforcing the expression of the sentiment, and the interest of the situations, without interrupting the action or weakening it by superfluous ornament. . . . I have therefore been careful never to interrupt a singer in the heat of a dialogue in order to introduce a tedious ritornello, nor to stop him in the middle of a piece, either for the purpose of displaying the flexibility of his voice [surely it is usually her voice] on some favourable vowel, or that the orchestra might give him time to take breath before a long-sustained note. . . . My idea was that the Overture ought to indicate the subject and prepare the spectators for the character of the piece they are about to see: that the instruments ought to be introduced in proportion to the degree of interest and passion in the words. . . . I also thought that my chief endeavour should be to attain a grand simplicity, and consequently I have avoided making a parade of difficulties at the cost of clearness.

I have quoted from this 'Preface' at some length because in the opera itself we may see Gluck consciously putting his theories into practice. Speaking generally, he was trying to find a via media between the florid Italian school, where melody and vocal gymnastics predominated to the exclusion of all else, and the arid French school, where the musical interest was entirely subordinated to the formal correctness of the conventional classical drama. So far as most of his contemporaries were concerned Gluck fell between two stools. The ardent champions of each extreme turned and rent him, but he found two supporters of no mean authority in the Abbé Arnaud and J. J. Rousseau.*

* Gluck made his first appearance in London at the Haymarket Theatre, on April 23, 1746, as a performer on the musical glasses, accompanied by orchestra.

In 'Alceste' we note the theorist working out his principles practically. Compare the restraint of the following example† with the exuberant display of Italian opera in the grand manner :

Ex. 1. ALCESTIS.

This is as near as Gluck ever gets to the conventional cadenza. For which relief much thanks ! As an example of the 'grand simplicity' mentioned above, there are two fine passages. One at the entrance of the High Priest and his attendants before the Temple of Apollo :

Ex. 2. Moderato, dolce ed appoggiato.

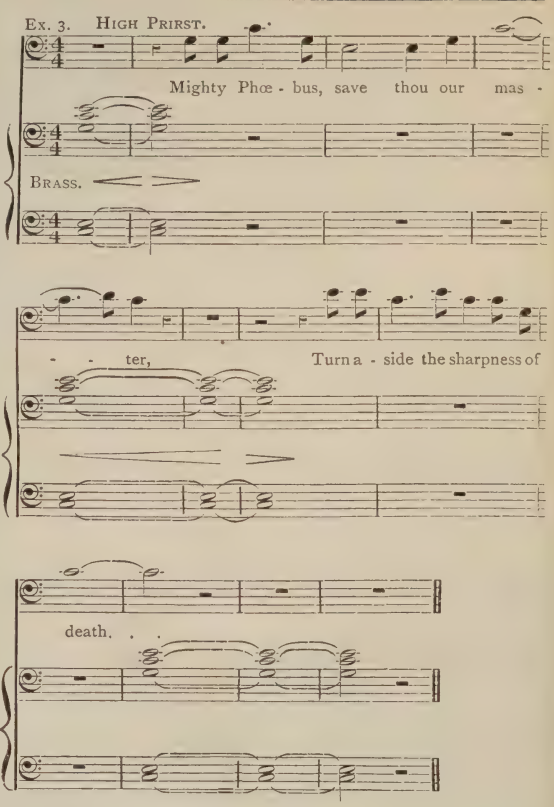
which for simple dignity may be compared with the entrance of Sarastro at the beginning of Act 2 in 'The Magic Flute.' The other, the Priest's opening words, where the orchestral technique employed (if such simplicity deserves the name) reminds one strongly of the Statue in 'Don Giovanni,' and less strongly perhaps of 'Proficiscere anima Christiana' in 'Gerontius' :

Ex. 3. HIGH PRIRST.



In fact, the Priest's part shows a remarkable breadth and dignity all through. Here is an oft-recurring phrase :

Ex. 4. Andante.
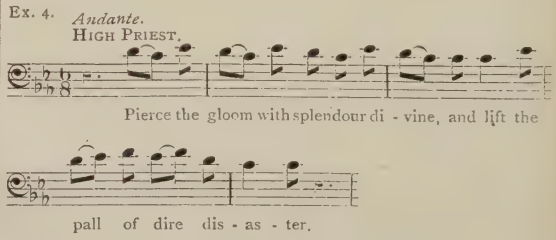
HIGH PRIEST.



By contrast, the part of Admetus (tenor), though long and important, is weak. But here again we must remember Gluck's principles. Admetus is without doubt the weakest character in the opera, and the one least calculated to excite our sympathy. He is the selfish husband for whom a loving wife sacrifices her life. True, in Gluck's version he is more likeable than in that of Euripides, but his protestations somehow do not ring true. Witness his futile attempts to dissuade Alcestis from death, in Act 3, sc. 4 (Breitkopf, pp. 238 et seq.).

The opera as it has come down to us is not the original version as performed at Vienna. In the original, the rescue was eventually effected by Apollo, but in the recension made by the composer Gossec, and the librettist du Roullet, for its performance at Paris (1776), the character of Heracles is introduced, thus making a return to the true Euripidean tradition. Musically, the end of the opera may have suffered somewhat in the recension, but the character of Heracles is in fine contrast with the gloomy spirits of the underworld. Observe his full-blooded entry, greeting Admetus and the world of shadows :

* The latter criticised him adversely in certain details, but agreed with his theory of the drama as a whole.

† All these examples are quoted from the Breitkopf & Härtel edition. The translation is by Mr. Claude Aveling.

Ex. 5. Presto.
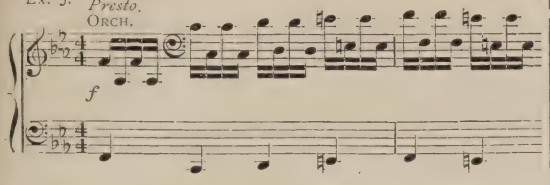
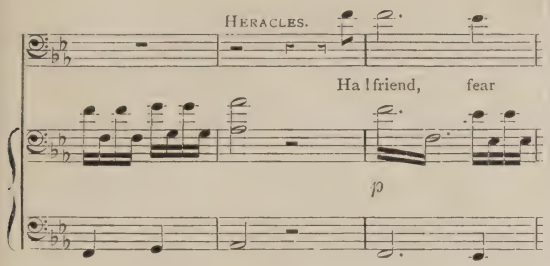
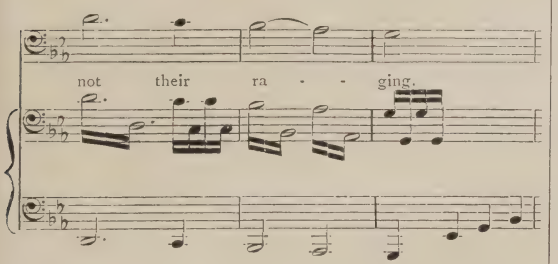
ORCH.



HERACLES.

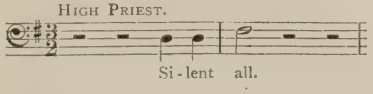




Unfortunately, so near is the sublime to the ridiculous, so frail the barrier between simplicity and bathos, that there are passages in 'Alceste' where tragedy descends suddenly almost to comedy, and musical comedy at that. For example, at the High Priest's solemn announcement :—

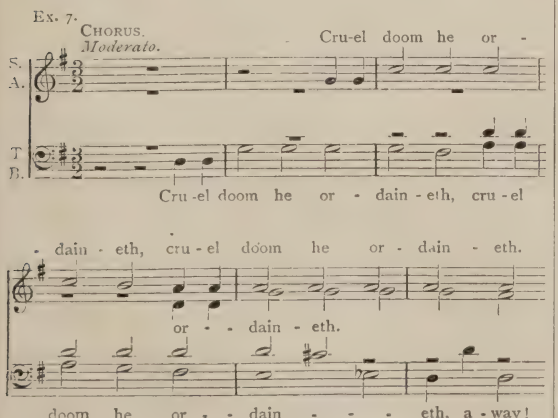
HIGH PRIEST.

Ex. 6.



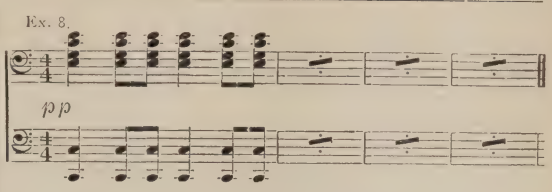
one trembles lest he should go on 'It was the cat'; but, as a fact, the passage is at once redeemed by a chorus of great beauty :

Ex. 7.
CHORUS.
Moderato.



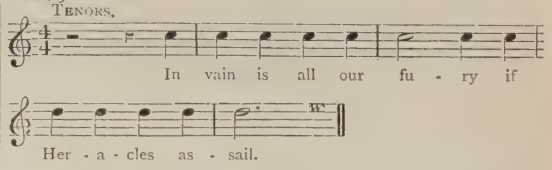
Less fortunate is the following. Suddenly, without warning, in the darkness of Hades the orchestra confronts us with this :

Ex. 8.



But no shade of the Duke of Plaza Toro emerges to explain matters. A chorus of altos, tenors, and basses (sopranos, for some reason, do not appear in Hell) proceeds with a tune which, such as it is, resembles 'the noble Duke of York who had ten thousand men' :

Ex. 9.
TENORS.

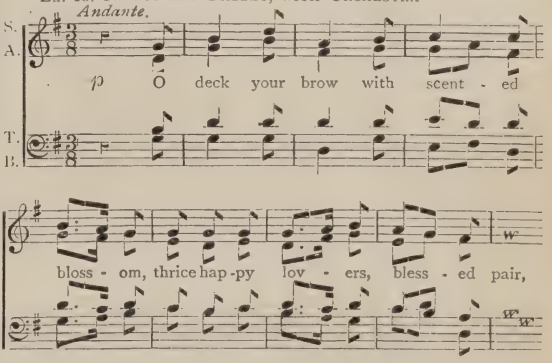


It may be remarked, in extenuation, that this passage is probably the work of Gossec, and not of Gluck.

There remain to be considered the chorus and the ballets. Gluck's management of the chorus is extremely skilful. He has restored it more or less to its classical position as the ideal spectator. It makes the obvious comments without hindering the action of the drama, or degenerating into mere tautology.

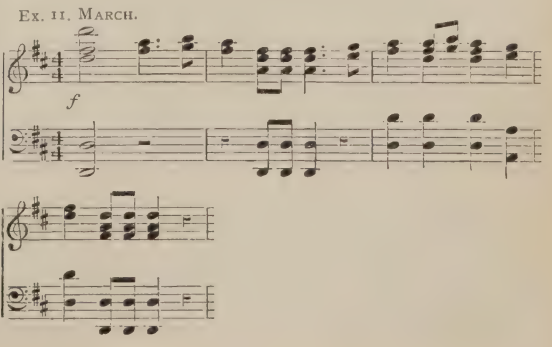
The ballets, of which there are a good many, and which no doubt had to be inserted to please the taste of a Paris audience, are of three kinds. There is first the conventional classical ballet, sometimes with chorus, of which the following is the most engaging :

Ex. 10. CHORUS AND BALLET, WITH ORCHESTRA
Andante.



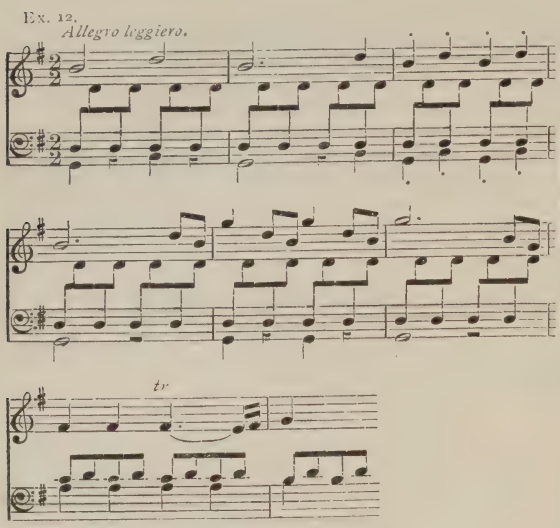
Then there are some which seem to aim deliberately at comic relief, as in this absurd little toy march, which looks like a parody of 'Die Meistersinger :

Ex. 11. MARCH.



And lastly, there are some which are absolutely mimes representing action incidental to the drama. The following is an example of a 'hunting song':

Ex. 12.



Besides these there are formal minuets and gavottes in the 18th-century manner.

'Alceste' is a work of primary importance in the history of opera, and it is surprising that though much quoted among musicians it is so seldom heard. It contains, of course, 'Divinités du Styx'—but enough. Gluck's influence on Mozart in several places has often been noted, chiefly at the climax of the oracle's pronouncement; and the Chorus of Spirits consisting entirely of a repeated F is often cited as one of the boldest innovations ever made in music. Like so much in 'Alceste' it looks trivial and commonplace on paper, but it has the supreme virtue of effect heightened by simplicity. It must be heard to be believed.

PERMANENT BRITISH OPERA IN LONDON

By Mrs. Albert de Belleroche

The British, since the war, by their continual contact with the Latin races, have thrown off something of the barrier of timidity and reserve (by many taken to be coldness), which prevented them from adequately expressing their genius in music and art. The Latins too have gained by the fusion, and are now becoming enthusiastic votaries of outdoor sports. Thus the result of the closer intercourse between the two races has been mutually beneficial; the Latins are now beginning to vie with the British in outdoor games, while the latter are in a position to contest with their Latin neighbours, on equal terms, in the spheres of art and music.

The Americans have taken advantage of this fusion of sympathies between the Anglo-Saxons and the Latins to stimulate Continental interest by means of musical competitions organized in France and Italy by Mrs. Coolidge and other American ladies. Substantial prizes are offered to the young musicians of these two countries, with the result that all the leading American composers are invited to important concerts on the Continent, where their productions are warmly appreciated. They thus return to the United States with established and international reputations, and benefit accordingly. Could not some of our well-known British ladies do the same service for the musicians of this country? I know that we do not possess the financial resources of America, but against this we have the advantage of closer proximity to Continental musical centres, and a musical ancestry of which we may well be proud.

Unfortunately the British still lack confidence in their own musical ability, and entertain an exaggerated respect for that of foreigners. The time has arrived when this timidity should be shaken off, and the true state of affairs realised. We possess distinguished composers, some of whose works may be placed side by side with the finest classics. The Directors of our leading schools of music cannot be reproached with inefficiency, since it has been possible for one of these institutions to produce one of the most difficult of Wagner's operas, in a manner which critics placed in the same rank as those given by well-known German artists at Covent Garden. At such schools it might be possible, by way of contrast, to give us interpretations of some of the earlier classics—Gluck, for instance—produced with equal success. That British artists are excellent may be gauged by this performance. British orchestras have been praised by all foreign conductors (Nikisch among others), while the standard of British musical criticism, in ability and impartiality, is unexcelled.

The foregoing reflections were inspired by a recent visit to France, after an absence of several years. I was surprised to find the Opéra and Opéra-Comique invaded by crowds of British and Americans, and I was told by French artists that the pecuniary success of these institutions was largely due to their Anglo-Saxon adherents. The fact of the latter so extensively patronising opera abroad shows the need for permanent opera in London. The enterprise might involve a sacrifice at first, but even the most confirmed pessimist cannot say that opera, if well managed, might not achieve a great success. Belgium, a much smaller and poorer country, manages to keep its famous opera-house 'La Monnaie' open for ten months during the year, and in spite of limited resources it has served as a training school for great artists of all nations, and has given numerous young composers their first opportunity of making themselves known to the public.

Surely what Brussels has achieved might be emulated with even greater success in London, with its far larger population and wealth. But such a project cannot be successfully realised without numerous objections being raised. One of these will certainly be that the establishment of a permanent opera will cause the opera season, as it exists at present, to lose much of its prestige. But this might be obviated by organizing a series of gala performances, to correspond with the present opera season, when the help of foreign celebrities might be enlisted. Their presence would stimulate British artists, and at the same time an arrangement might be made that, in return for the hospitality extended to those foreigners, British performers should be afforded the opportunity of appearing in the Continental opera-houses.

It should also be arranged that the principal colleges and academies of music should have the opportunity, as is done abroad, of offering, as prizes, engagements at the National Opera to their most successful pupils.

A permanent Opera would offer to the young school of composers, who have now little chance of being heard in important work, fine opportunities for displaying their talents either in serious or comic opera. Though its establishment might entail serious sacrifices, it is certain that they would be more than repaid by the gain that would accrue to the national school of music.

While looking forward to the development of the modern school, the genius of the past should not be neglected. Would it not be possible to found at one of the schools of music a section in which the works of the old masters might be performed on the instruments for which they were designed?

Obviously, had Dowland, Purcell, Monteverde, Lulli, Rameau, Bach, Gluck, Mozart, and so many others lived in our time, they would of course have availed themselves to the full of the resources afforded by modern instruments, and in doing so they would have created entirely different works.

Surely we owe them a sufficient debt of gratitude to move us to perform their masterpieces as these were actually designed, and so reveal their full beauty to modern ears.

Something in this way has already been achieved by small groups of musicians who, despite numerous difficulties, have already revived the works of many of the older composers, but their efforts deserve supplementing in order that instrumentalists and vocalists may be trained in sufficient numbers to give faultless performances of the great masterpieces of the past, or series of recitals of madrigals of the Elizabethan period. The rationality and beauty of this old music would be a welcome corrective to the atmosphere of jazz and bad taste which at present envelops us, and might well serve as an inspiration for music of refinement and serene power in the future.

New Music

CAROL AND SONG BOOKS

In 'A Second Book of Carols' (Reid Brothers), Dr. Ralph Dunstan has brought together material from Old English, Tudor, and traditional sources, with some examples from Ireland, Scotland, France, and Germany—about seventy carols in all. The bulk are Old English and traditional, as is fitting. Among the latter are some excellent specimens of the old 'fugueing' tunes—naive and of little musical value on paper, but often surprisingly effective in performance. Dr. Dunstan adds interesting historical and critical notes throughout. He has, perhaps, gone astray in regard to 'The Querister's Song of Yorke,' set to 'Jerusalem, my happy home.' Dr. Dunstan calls it 'a notable melody,' whereas it has every appearance of being, not a melody, but a bass part. Some interesting correspondence on this 'tune' took place in The Times Literary Supplement during the spring of 1922, and the whole matter was convincingly summed up by Sir Richard Terry in a letter to the Musical Times of March in that year. Sir Richard took the view that the notes originally constituted a bass part, and gave various explanations as to its survival and adoption as a melody. He also reconstructed the tune in the style of the period, with very satisfactory effect. Dr. Dunstan uses the tune as a unison melody, and also as a tenor, but its bass-like character is shown by the difficulty of writing a satisfactory bass part against it in the cadence.

Any domestic circle that contains at least a quartet able to read as well as sing, will find in this collection material for some enjoyable half-hours. (By the way, we are sorry to see on p. 29 that horrid vulgarism 'Xmas'!)

Dr. Dunstan has a hand, as co-Editor with C. E. Bygott, in 'Musical Appreciation through Song' (Schofield & Sims). This volume gives a kind of sketch of song, in sections labelled, Ancient and Eastern Song (Egyptian, Hindoo, Jewish, Greek, and Arab); Music in Western Europe (Ecclesiastical Music, plainsong, early secular songs, keys and modes, bards, minnesingers, &c.); Shakespeare music; Tudor and Elizabethan music; the New Style; Classical songs; Songs with special histories. The songs number a hundred and thirty five, and although the interest in several examples is historical rather than musical, there are many good things. It is perhaps a pity that some of the early examples, e.g., the Egyptian 'Hymn to the Evening Sun' and 'The Lament of Isis,' could not have been left unaccompanied. In the latter, and in other traditional songs, the pianoforte part is made doubly anachronistic by over-elaboration. Dr. Dunstan's note says that the accompaniment of the 'Lament' 'comprises nothing which might not have been played on Egyptian instruments five thousand years ago!' The note of admiration is his, and its fitness is realised when we turn to the song, and find a pianoforte part that might have been written by Mendelssohn, in the key of G minor, without a touch of the modality suggested by the melody.

We wish Dr. Dunstan had cast a sterner eye over some of the folk-song arrangements. There is, for example, a dreadful harmonization of 'The Bells of Aberdovey,' in which that delightful tune is oppressed with diminished sevenths and dominant minor ninths—harmonic richnesses that we refuse to swallow, although they are contributed 'specially for this work' by a 'Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M.' Here is a fault of taste that should be a bar to any musical degree worth the having! Does the reader think we are hypercritical? If so, here are a few bars with which he may test his own sense of fitness in the matter of harmonizing a simple tune:

(a)
Oft I lis - ten to the chime,
O'er the hills their voi - ces clear:
(b)
cres.
poco rit.
a tempo.
Still I hear their dul-cet tone; "Peace is found in heav'n a-lone."

A small collection of songs designed for educational purposes would be damned by writing of this sort, but this volume is saved by its size and scope. Used by teachers able to distinguish its merits from its defects, it could be made a basis for much valuable class work.

H. G.

PART-SONGS FOR CHILDREN'S AND FEMALE VOICES

Alec Rowley, aided and abetted by his sister, has written a two-part fox-trot for children, 'The Policeman.' Haters of the witches' Sabbath that they imagine modern dancing to be may save their fury. This piece is harmless, if not necessary. It is, indeed, a quite agreeable conceit. Edward German's style is always happy. Here it is again in 'It was a lover.' This, like the others in this division, is in two parts (Novello).

A dainty song is W. McNaught's 'Wood Fairy.' Leggiero is the indication. Lightly floating off, the thing should be like thistledown. Hilda Milvain's 'Song of the harebell fairy' is nicely aerated and shaded (Cramer).

Clifford Roberts's 'Folly's Song' (Keats) is marked to be played 'with or without pianoforte accompaniment.' I do not think it would be particularly effective without the pianoforte. With it, the song is active; its leaping intervals offer practice in clean, firm attack and release (Williams).

In jocund mood, Martin Shaw's 'May merry-time' hits off the spirit of the words. Several moods, or shades of mood, have to be expressed, and there is staccato singing (Oxford University Press).

MALE-VOICE

A Sol-fa edition of Robin Milford's 'Rutterkin' is issued (T. BAR. BASS-BAR., three parts). This, with free rhythm, can be made effective, with its sudden changes from soft to very loud. Gerrard Williams produces three T.B.B. arrangements of tunes collected by Cecil Sharp—'I'm seventeen come Sunday,' 'Henry Martin,' and 'Sweet Kitty.' All are brisk, and capably done, as may well be expected (Oxford University Press).

Quite simple and unadventurous are Bantock's arrangements for T.T.B.B. of 'Here's a health,' 'Drink to me only,' 'Here's to the maiden,' and 'Love will find out the way' (Williams).

As agents for Belaieff, Messrs. Hawkes publish two Gretchaninov pieces, a cappella—'Autumn' and 'Sun and Moon' (S.A.T.B., with the parts divided at times). There is a good deal of Russian repetitiveness here, though both songs contain plenty for the singers to do. The latter has a tune very like that of the 'Song of the Haulers on the Volga.'

MIXED-VOICE

Another of Cecil Sharp's collected songs is the Somerset 'Pretty Plough-boy,' set for S.A.T.B. by Gerrard Williams, with some division of parts, and plenty of 'half-closed lips' in its fifteen pages. There is a good deal of family likeness about many of these tunes. Better, before buying new folk-song settings, make sure that you have not already a piece with a tune much like the new one. There are some harmonic twists in Arnold Foster's setting (for S.A.T.B.) of the Coventry Carol. Some of them 'come off,' others only half succeed. This, like the last, is for unaccompanied chorus. Alan Burr gets something of the dignity of the Highland boat-song that includes the famous lines

> From the lone shieling on [?of] the misty island,
> Mountains divide us, and the waste of seas.

The verse is for solo voice, or trebles in unison, and the chorus is for S.S.S.B., the latter part being optional. All from the Oxford University Press.

Two five-part madrigals by Gesualdo (about whom Mr. Heseltine and Mr. Gray have written recently) are edited by Dr. J. B. McEwen. These are 'Resta di darmi noia' ('Cease then to give me sorrow'), and 'Moro lasso al mio duolo' ('Death alone can still my grief'). The harmonic style is impressive and imaginative. In the latter work the running counterpoint is not particularly strong. The dramatic life in the music is its best quality. Neither of these is a really difficult specimen, in spite of the chromatics. (Williams).

A final work, from the Oxford University Press, is in a category of its own. It is a sextet for S.M-S.A.T. BAR.B., by H. E. Randerson, and is sung on vowels, without accompaniment. The vocal tone would soften many of its asperities, but I am not sure that that would be a benefit. There is five shillings' worth of novelty here, but how much value in musical beauty? Those who wish our experimenters well can try it, and form their own opinion. I find some happy effects in the work, and much that seems to me not worth while.

W. R. A.

PIANOFORTE

A writer in The Times recently suggested that the modern composer's lot is not a happy one, because if he speaks in an unfamiliar idiom he is suspected of affectation, and if he uses a well-known one his music has no message for present-day listeners. This statement is curiously illustrated in the pianoforte music which comes up for review in the present article. Here is Algernon Ashton's Sonata No. 8, in F (what a strangely familiar sound, that 'No. 8, in F!') together with Bliss's new Suite, from Curwen's, and a Sonata by P. C. Darnton, published by Goodwin & Tabb.

The first of these works, in four movements, is very wisely built on the traditions of the great masters; and, wisely again, no attempt is made to bring the idiom superficially up-to-date by surface tinkering. The music is frankly reminiscent of Brahms, even of Beethoven, in its slow movement; and it unfolds itself with fluent urbanity for the proper length of time, for all the world like a West-End preacher. Its accents, however, are not the impassioned ones of a man with urgent things to say—as are, for all the complexity of his idiom, those of Arthur Bliss.

Bliss's style is still, presumably, modern, and to a good many people, strange; yet the sincerity of what he has to say is felt through everything. This urgency comes out in the present Suite, not only in the Elegy, with its dignity and restrained, yet deep feeling (it contains, by the way, some strikingly beautiful harmonic effects), but also in the Finale, where it has more 'modern' tricks of method to get over before it reaches the listener. Some of these seem overdone: the clash of major and minor thirds, for instance, in the Polonaise, and the unrelieved dissonance of some sections of the Overture, become irritating, despite the rhythmic vitality and strength of texture that are felt in both these numbers. Even so, the handling and design are always strong, and there are many evidences of real impulse, as opposed to mere cleverness, behind it all.

In the case of P. C. Darnton's Sonata, the strangeness of the idiom is a more serious obstacle: the music is intensely difficult both to read and to play, and the difficulty is not lessened by the composer's having temporarily abolished time-

The Musical Times. EXTRA SUPPLEMENT. December 1, 1926.
No. 432 NOVELLO'S CHRISTMAS CAROLS Price (2d.)

The Christ-child

CHRISTMAS CAROL ARRANGED FOR S.A.T.B.

Words by GILBERT CHESTERTON Music by GEORGE RATHBONE

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY LIMITED NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Moderato
SOPRANO
ALTO
TENOR
BASS
mf
p
The Christ-child lay on Mary's lap, His hair was like a light, (O
The Christ-child lay on Ma - ry's lap, His hair was like a light, (O
The Christ-child lay on Ma - ry's lap, His hair was like, was like a light, (O
The Christ-child lay on Ma - ry's lap, His hair was like, was like a light, (O espress.
cres.
f
A little quicker
A little slower
wea - ry, wea-ry were the world, But here is all a - right,) The wea - ry, wea-ry were the world, But here is all a-right, is all a-right,) The wea - ry, wea-ry were the world, But here is all a - right,) . . The wea - ry, O wea - ry were the world, But here is all a - right,) The

Copyright, 1926, by Novello and Company, Limited

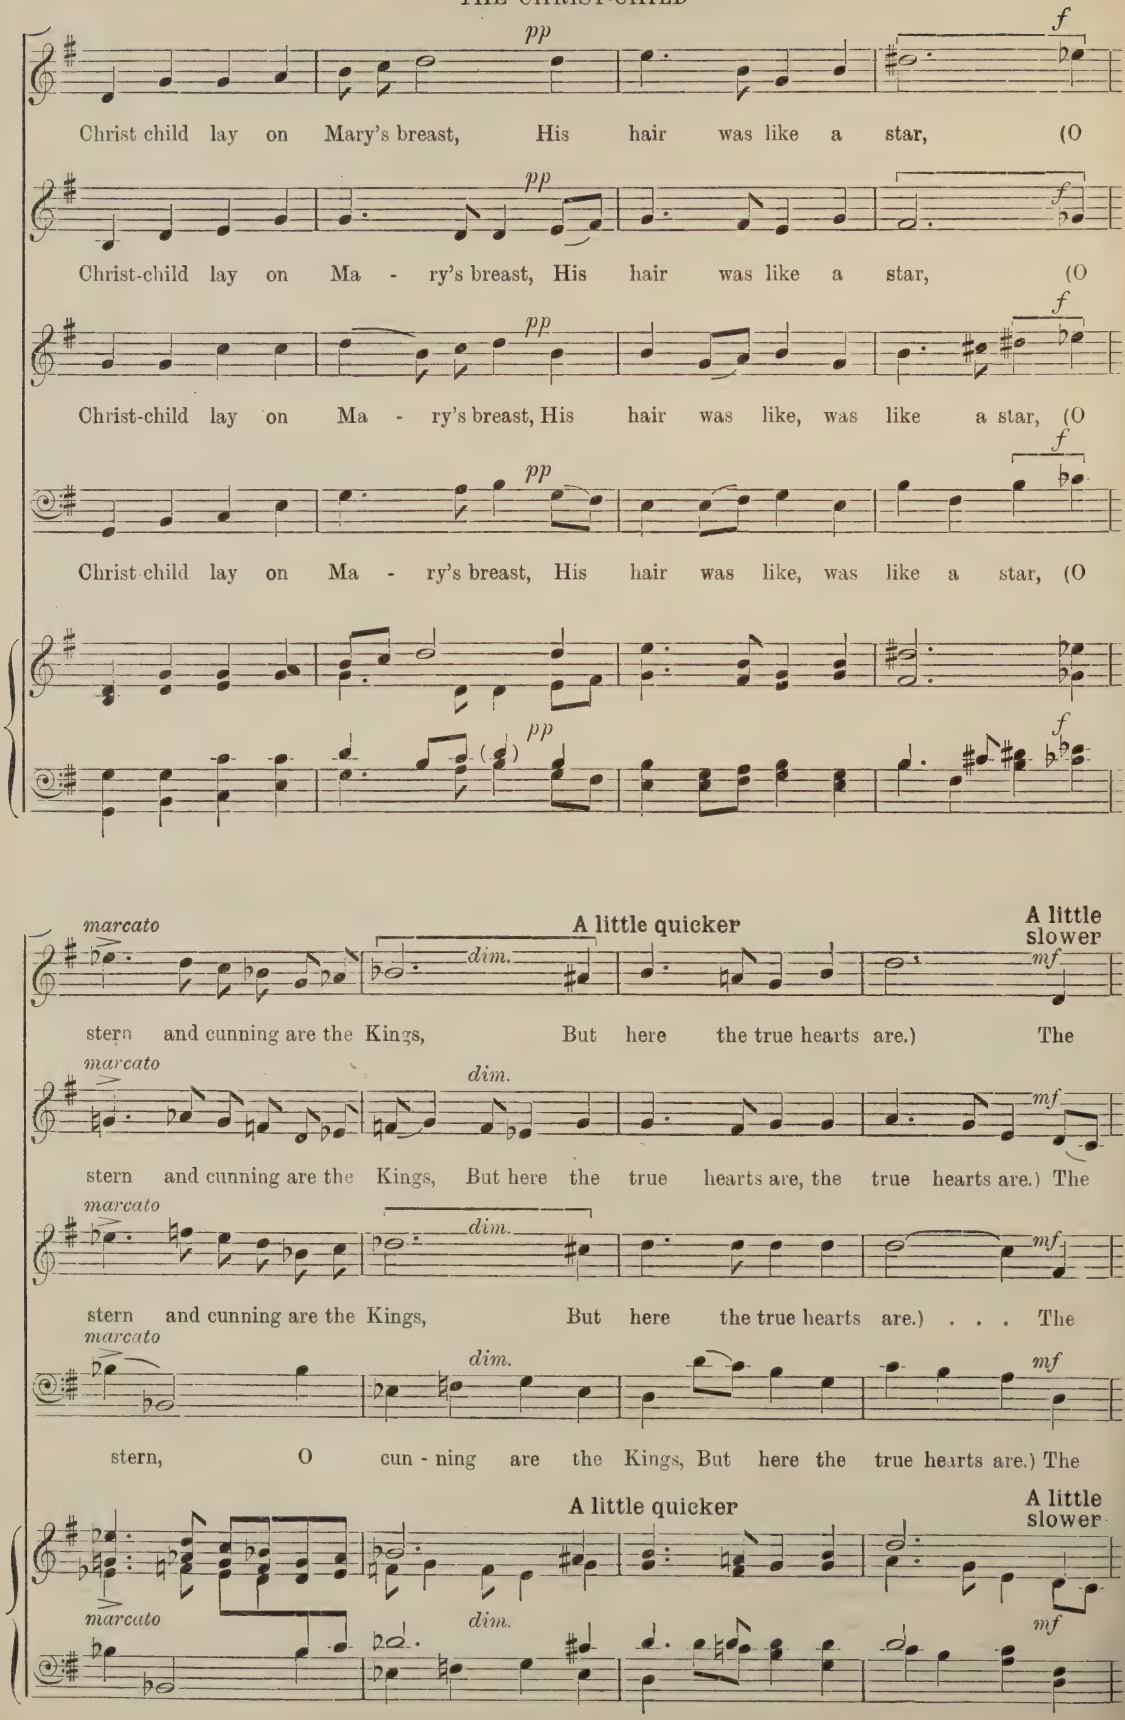
Also published as a Unison Song in THE SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW, No. 389



pp
f
Christ child lay on Mary's breast, His hair was like a star, (O
Christ-child lay on Ma - ry's breast, His hair was like a star, (O
Christ-child lay on Ma - ry's breast, His hair was like, was like a star, (O Christ child lay on Ma - ry's breast, His hair was like, was like a star, (O marcato
A little quicker
A little slower
dim.
mf stern and cunning are the Kings, But here the true hearts are.) The stern and cunning are the Kings, But here the true hearts are, the true hearts are.) The stern and cunning are the Kings, But here the true hearts are.) . . . The stern, O cun - ning are the Kings, But here the true hearts are.) The

No. 431. NOVELLO'S CHRISTMAS CAROLS. Price (1½*d.*).

O LOVELY VOICES OF THE SKY

Composed by H. A. CHAMBERS.

Stainer, John } CAROLS,
Bramley, H. R. } NEW AND OLD.

FIRST SERIES. Three-halfpence each.
Tonic Sol-fa (complete), 1/6.

*1.	God rest you merry, gentlemen	Traditional
*2.	The Manger Throne	C. Steggall
*3.	A Virgin unspotted	Traditional
*4.	Come, ye lofty	Elvey
*5.	Come, tune your hearts	Ouseley
*6.	The First Nowell	Traditional
*7.	Jesu, hail	J. Stainer
*8.	Good Christian men	Old German
*9.	Sleep, holy Babe	Dykes
*10.	Good King Wenceslas	Traditional
*11.	When I view the Mother	J. Barnby
*12	The seven joys of Mary	Traditional
*13.	On the Birthday of the Lord	Dykes
*14.	What Child is this?	Old English
*15.	Glorious, beauteous	Maria Tiddeman
*16.	Waken! Christian Children } 1½d.	S.C. Hammerton
*17.	A Child this day is born } 1½d.	Traditional
*18.	Carol for Christmas Eve	Ouseley
*19.	When Christ was born	A. H. Brown
*20.	Christmas Morning Hymn	J. Barnby

SECOND SERIES. Three-halfpence each.

*21.	Carol for Christmas Eve	Traditional
22.	Jesus in the Manger	H. Smart
*23.	The Holly and the Ivy } 1½d.	Old French
24.	The Moon shines bright } 1½d.	Traditional
*25.	The Virgin and Child	C. Steggall
26.	The Incarnation	Traditional
*27.	Christmas Day	J. Stainer
28.	The Cherry-Tree Carol	Traditional
29.	God's dear Son	Traditional
*30.	See, amid the winter's snow	Goss
31.	The Babe of Bethlehem	Traditional
32.	In Bethlehem, that noble place	Ouseley
*33.	A Cradle Song of the Blessed Virgin	J. Barnby
34.	Christmas Song	Dykes
35.	Jacob's Ladder	Traditional
36.	The Story of the Shepherd	J. Barnby
*37.	The Wassail Song	Traditional
*38.	In terrâ pax	Dykes
39.	Dives and Lazarus	Traditional
*40.	From far away	Dykes
*41.	Carol for Christmas Day	A. Sullivan
42.	The Child Jesus in the Garden	J. Stainer

THIRD SERIES. Three-halfpence each.

43.	What soul-inspiring music	Har. by J. S.
44.	In the country nigh to Bethlehem	G. Hine
45.	We three Kings of Orient are	Har. by J. S.
46.	Emmanuel, God with us	H. Gadsby
47.	New Prince, new pomp } 1½d.	C. Steggall
48.	A Babe is born } 1½d.	Har. by J. S.
49.	Come, let us all sweet Carols sing	F. Champneys
50.	Let music break on this blest morn	J. B. Calkin
51.	Carol for New Year's Day	A. H. Brown
52.	The Angel Gabriel	Har. by J. S.
53.	The Shepherds amazed	A. H. Brown
54.	Noël! Noël!	Har. by J. S.
55.	I sing the birth	G. C. Martin
56.	Christmas Night	A. H. Brown
57.	The Christmas Celebration	E. Prout
58.	Arise and hail the Sacred Day	A. H. Brown
59.	The Holy Well	Har. by J. S.
60.	The Angel and the Shepherds	E. H. Thorne
61.	The Coventry Carol	Har. by J. S.
62.	The Morning Star	J. F. Bridge
63.	The Shepherds went	J. F. Barnett
64.	I saw three ships	Har. by J. S.
65.	Mountains, bow your heads	W. H. Cummings
66.	Luther's Carol	J. Higgs
67.	The Boy's Dream	W. H. Monk
68.	Legends of the Infancy	J. F. Bridge
69.	Let Christians all } 1½d.	Traditional
70.	Immortal Babe } 1½d.	Traditional

	s.	d.
The above 70 Carols, complete, cloth, gilt	6	0
Library Edition, with Historical Preface Roxburgh binding	11	6
Illustrated Edition, 1st and 2nd Series	11	6
Three Series (cloth, gilt, 3s.) each	1	6
Words only, complete	0	6
Words, each Series	0	2

Helmore, T. } CAROLS,
Neale, J. M. } Set to Ancient Melodies.

71.	Here is joy for every age.	1½d. each.
72.	Earthly friends will change.
73.	Gabriel's message.
74.	Christ was born on Christmas Day.
75.	Earth to-day rejoices.
76.	Good Christian men, rejoice.
77.	From church to church.
78.	In the ending of the year.
79.	Royal day that chasest gloom.
80.	O'er the hill and o'er the vale.
81.	Good King Wenceslas.
82.	Toll! toll! because there ends.

	s.	d.
The above 12 carols, complete	1	6
Folio, with pianoforte accompaniment	7	0
Treble part	0	8
Words only	0	2

Twelve Carols.—Words by S. WENSLEY.
Twopence each.

83.	O holy star	J. Stainer
84.	The shepherds	Eaton Faning
85.	Hymn of the angels	G. M. Garrett
*86.	The anthem of peace	J. Barnby
87.	The desert	Emma Mundella
88.	Bethlehem	Myles B. Foster
89.	Daybreak	Berthold Tours
90.	In the manger	J. Barnby
91.	The mother and child	Myles B. Foster
92.	Christ is born	J. F. Bridge
93.	Christmas Day	Battison Haynes
*94.	Sweet Christmas Bells	J. Stainer

Complete, 1/6. Tonic Sol-fa, 1/-. Words only, 3d.

Ten Carols. Twopence each.

95.	Now join we all with holy mirth	J. Stainer
96.	Softly the night	J. M. Crament
97.	Sleep, Holy Babe	J. T. Field
98.	Now dies in David's City	J. Swire
99.	There dwelt in Old Judea	R. Jackson
100.	Good people, give ear	J. Swire
101.	Carol for Christmas Day	J. T. Field
102.	Ye stars of night	J. Swire
103.	Ring out, ye bells	J. H. Wallis
104.	Two thousand troubled years	J. F. Bridge

Complete, 1/6. Tonic Sol-fa, 1/- Words only, 3d.

 All Carols marked with an asterisk are also published separately in Tonic Sol-fa.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

August, 1925. MADE IN ENGLAND

O lovely voices of the sky

CAROL

Words by FELICIA D. HEMANS — Music by H. A. CHAMBERS Brightly

mf
1. O love - ly voi - ces of the sky, That
2. O star! which led to Him Whose love Brought hymn'd the Sa - viour's birth! . . Are ye not sing - ing down man's ran - som free: . . Where art thou? 'midst the Ye . . . that sang "peace on . .
May . . . we still gaze on . .
still on high, . . Ye that sang "peace on . .
hosts a - bove, . . May we still gaze on . .

Copyright, 1926, by Novello and Company, Limited

earth ?"
thee ?
earth ?" . . .
thee ? . . . .
To . . us . . yet
In . . heav'n thou
To . . us . . . yet
In . . heav'n . . thou
Where - with, in days gone
Thy rays earth may not speak the strains Where - with, in . . days gone art not set, Thy rays earth may not by, Ye bless'd, ye bless'd the dim, Send them, send them to
f by, Ye bless'd the Sy - rian swains, the dim, Send them to . . guide us yet, to
f poco rall.
Sy - rian swains, O voi - ces of the sky.
guide us yet, O star which - led to Him.
poco rall.

NOVELLO'S
CHRISTMAS CAROLS.

*198.	O Babe! in manger lying / The Virgin is hushing / What Child is this? / Darkness fell ..	J. Barnby (Words only, 4s. per 100.)	2d.
199.	Holy night! peaceful night	J. Barnby	3d.
200.	In excelsis gloria ..	J. M. Crament	2d.
201.	When Christ was born ..	J. T. Field	2d.
202.	What Child is this?.. ..	J. T. Field	2d.
203.	There were whisperings .. / Shades of silent night ..	J. T. Cooper / .. S. Gee	2d.
*204.	Legend of Saint Christopher	Sawyer	2d.
205.	I hear along our street ..	E. Silas	6d.
*206.	In dulci Jubilo	Pearsall	4d.
207.	Caput apri defero	Pearsall	4d.
*208.	Holly berries, holly berries	Westbrook	2d.
209.	A New Year's Carol.. ..	J. Shaw	2d.
210.	There was silence (Unison) / The star in the East (Unison)	J. Stainer / H. Leslie	2d.
211.	A Christmas Carol (Two Parts)	Reinecke	3d.
212.	Glad Christmastide.. ..	J. Barnby	2d.
213.	All things were in silence ..	J. Barnby	2d
214.	This is the month	Hugh Blair	2d.
215.	How peaceful was the night	Hugh Blair	2d.
216.	There came a little child .	R. Jackson	2d.
217.	As with gladness ..	C. V. Stanford	2d.
218.	One night as I was sleeping	J. Swire	2d.
219.	The Golden Crown	J. Stainer	2d.
220.	Joy fills our inmost heart	A. C. Mackenzie	2d.
221.	Who is this	Myles B. Foster	2d.
222.	See, the Morning Star ..	E. G. Monk	1½d.
223.	Carol, Christians ..	Victoria Grosvenor	2d.
*224.	On Christmas Morn	A. C. Mackenzie	1½d.
225.	In the ages past ..	F. A. J. Hervey	2d.
226.	We sing a song of gladness	J. Swire	2d.
227.	The morn, the blessed morn	Grosvenor	4d.
228.	Carol, carol, Christians	Mrs. J. W. Bliss	4d.
229	O was not Christ our Saviour	J. Shaw	2d.
230.	Carol, Christian children ..	A. Moffatt	2d.
*231.	There was silence (S.A.T.B.)	J. Stainer	2d.
232.	Come, all ye Christian men	H. Clarke	2d.
233.	Shepherds in the fields	Hamilton Clarke	2d.
234.	Come and sing ..	J. Varley Roberts	2d.
235.	The Christmas bells ring loud	„	2d.
236.	Bethlehem	J. Varley Roberts	d.
237.	The birth ever new ..	R. H. Legge	2d
238.	The old news	R. H. Legge	2d.
239.	Christmas Eve ..	R. H. Legge	2d.
240.	The Christmas vision	R. H. Legge	2d.
241.	The Shepherds' Carol	R. H. Legge	2d.
242.	Mary's Cradle Song ..	R. H. Legge	2d.
243.	The Angels' Carol ..	R. H. Legge	2d.
244.	Children's Chorus ..	R. H. Legge	2d.
245.	The Holy Quest ..	R. H. Legge	2d.
246.	The Five Kings ..	R. H. Legge	2d.
247.	Praise we now.. ..	R. H. Legge	2d.
248.	Nazareth town ..	R. H. Legge	2d.
249.	An ode on the birth of our Saviour	Lloyd	2d.
250	See, the morning star	A. Herbert Brewer	2d.
251.	Christ was born	A. Herbert Brewer	2d.
252.	Christmas Morn ..	H. C. Havergal	3d.
253.	The Kings of the East	H. C. Havergal	3d.
254.	The Star	H. C. Havergal	3d.
255.	The Angels' Song ..	H. C. Havergal	3d
256.	The Holy Birth ..	H. C. Havergal	3d.
257.	The Humiliation ..	H. C. Havergal	3d.
258.	Rejoice, O daughter ..	C. Macpherson	2d.
259.	The Virgin and Child	C. Macpherson	2d.
*260.	The Annunciation	Barnby	2d.
*261.	The Message to the Shepherds	Barnby	2(
*262.	Cradle Song of the Blessed Virgin	Barnby	2(
*263.	Gloria in Excelsis	Barnby	2(
264.	Sing the Holy Child-Christ	Myles B. Foster	2(
*265.	Sleep, Baby, sleep	T. Adams	2(
*265A.	Sleep, Baby, sleep (2nd setting)	Adams	2(
266.	Noël	A. M. Goodhart	2
267.	What sudden blaze of song	C. Harris	1½
268.	What sudden blaze of song	J. F. Bridge	1½
269.	Shepherds, leave your flocks	J. V. Roberts	1½
270.	Heavenly music ..	J. V. Roberts	1½
271.	Silent night, holiest night	J. V. Roberts	1½
272.	Angels singing	J. H. Mee	1½
273.	Little children	J. H. Mee	1½
274.	Blessed Babe ..	H. W. Wareing	1½
275.	Ring the Bells	Barnby	2
*276.	Sweeter than songs (Words, 4s. per 100.)	J. F. Bridge	2
277.	The night in solemn stillness hung	Smith	2
278.	The Son of Mary ..	Thomas Adams	1½
279.	Hark! all around	W. A. C. Cruickshank	1½
280.	It is the day	W. A. C. Cruickshank	1½
281.	Mortals, awake	W. A. C. Cruickshank	2
282.	In the field with their flocks	J. E. West	2
283.	It came upon the midnight	B. Haynes	1½
284.	Royal Bethlehem ..	W. Montgomery	2
285.	I hear along our street	S. H. Nicholson	1½
286.	The Child Jesus in the garden (2nd Setting)	J. Stainer	1½
287.	The Prince of Peace	A. H. Brewer	1½
288.	Remember God's goodnesse ..	arr.	2
289.	Christmas Tree Carol	H. Davan Wetton	1½
290.	Christmas morn ..	Thomas Adams	1½
291.	Child Divine	Thomas Adams	1½
292.	A Christmas Song ..	Thomas Adams	1½
293.	A lowly Babe	Alfred Hollins	2
294.	The Blessed Virgin ..	E. C. Bairstow	2
295.	Christ is born.. ..	E. T. Sweeting	1
296.	Christian children ..	E. T. Sweeting	1
297.	Ring out, wild bells ..	E. Vine Hall	1
298.	Christmas bells ..	W. H. Longhurst	2
299.	In tuneful voices sing ..	Ferris Tozer	1
300.	Shepherds, hear	Ferris Tozer	1
301.	Not in courts of regal splendour	Hall	1
302.	Many hundred years ago	G. C. Martin	1
303.	The Nativity	Charles Erskine	1
304.	A Cradle Song ..	Charles Erskine	1
305.	As on the Night ..	B. W. Horner	2
306.	It fell upon a winter's day	Sidebotham	1
307.	The night is dark	Sidebotham	1
308.	Carol, carol, Christians ..	Sidebotham	1
309.	The loving heart ..	Charles Erskine	1
310.	I hear along our street	T. R. Matthews	1
311.	In Bethlehem's Ancient City	J. E. West
312.	Can man forget the story	A. H. Brewer	1
313.	Who are these from Bozrah	Goodhart	1
314.	Morning dawns, the flocks are	Wetton
315.	Sweete was the songe ..	Percy Pitt
316.	Now once again our hearts we raise	Arr.
*317.	Three kings once lived (S.S.A.)	Cowen
318.	Once in Royal David's City	H. J. Gauntlett	1
319.	The Night of Nowell ..	A. H. Brown	1
320.	Awake, O earth	A. H. Brown	1
321.	Whence comes this light	A. H. Brewer
322.	Glory in Excelsis (In the field)	Goodhart	1
323.	The Shepherds' Song	John E. West	1
324.	Christ is born	H. E. Button	1
325.	The Babe in manger laid	H. E. Button	1

* All Carols marked with an asterisk are also published separately in Tonic Sol-fa.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED

(August, 1925.)

No. 434. NOVELLO'S CHRISTMAS CAROLS. Price (1½*d.*).

WHILE SHEPHERDS WATCHED

Composed by C. LEE WILLIAMS.

Stainer, John } CAROLS,
Bramley, H. R. } NEW AND OLD.

FIRST SERIES. Three-halfpence each.
Tonic Sol-fa (complete), 1/6.

*1. God rest you merry, gentlemen .. Traditional
*2. The Manger Throne .. .. .. C. Steggall
3. A Virgin unspotted .. .. .. Traditional
*4. Come, ye lofty .. .. Elvey
*5. Come, tune your hearts .. .. Ouseley
*6. The First Nowell .. .. .. Traditional
*7. Jesu, hail .. .. J. Stainer
*8. Good Christian men .. .. .. Old German
*9. Sleep, holy Babe .. .. Dykes
10. Good King Wenceslas .. .. Traditional
*11. When I view the Mother .. .. J. Barnby
*12 The seven joys of Mary .. .. Traditional
*13. On the Birthday of the Lord .. .. Dykes
*14. What Child is this? .. .. .. Old English
15. Glorious, beauteous .. .. Maria Tiddeman
*16. Waken! Christian Children } 1½d. S.C. Hammerton
*17. A Child this day is born } .. Traditional
*18. Carol for Christmas Eve .. .. Ouseley
*19. When Christ was born .. A. H. Brown
20. Christmas Morning Hymn .. .. J. Barnby

SECOND SERIES. Three-halfpence each.

*21. Carol for Christmas Eve .. .. Traditional
22. Jesus in the Manger .. .. .. H. Smart
*23. The Holly and the Ivy } 1½d. .. Old French
24. The Moon shines bright } .. Traditional
*25. The Virgin and Child .. .. C. Steggall
26. The Incarnation .. .. .. Traditional
*27. Christmas Day .. .. .. J. Stainer
28. The Cherry-Tree Carol .. .. Traditional
29. God's dear Son .. .. .. Traditional
*30. See, amid the winter's snow .. .. Goss
31. The Babe of Bethlehem .. .. Traditional
32. In Bethlehem, that noble place .. Ouseley
*33. A Cradle Song of the Blessed Virgin J. Barnby
34. Christmas Song .. .. Dykes
35. Jacob's Ladder .. .. .. Traditional
36. The Story of the Shepherd .. .. J. Barnby
*37. The Wassail Song .. .. .. Traditional
*38. In terrâ pax .. .. Dykes
39. Dives and Lazarus .. .. .. Traditional
*40. From far away .. .. Dykes
*41. Carol for Christmas Day .. .. A. Sullivan
42. The Child Jesus in the Garden .. J. Stainer

THIRD SERIES. Three-halfpence each.

43. What soul-inspiring music .. Har. by J. S.
44. In the country nigh to Bethlehem .. G. Hine
45. We three Kings of Orient are Har. by J. S.
46. Emmanuel, God with us .. .. H. Gadsby
47. New Prince, new pomp } 1½d. .. C. Steggall
48. A Babe is born } Har. by J. S
49. Come, let us all sweet Carols sing F. Champneys
50. Let music break on this blest morn J. B. Calkin
51. Carol for New Year's Day .. A. H. Brown
52. The Angel Gabriel .. .. Har. by J. S.
53. The Shepherds amazed .. A. H. Brown
54. Noël! Noël! .. .. .. Har. by J. S.
55. I sing the birth .. .. G. C. Martin
56. Christmas Night .. .. A. H. Brown
57. The Christmas Celebration .. .. E. Prout
58. Arise and hail the Sacred Day A. H. Brown
59. The Holy Well .. .. Har. by J. S.
60. The Angel and the Shepherds E. H. Thorne
61. The Coventry Carol .. .. Har. by J. S.
62. The Morning Star .. .. .. J. F. Bridge
63. The Shepherds went .. .. J. F. Barnett
64. I saw three ships .. .. Har. by J. S.
65. Mountains, bow your heads W. H. Cummings
66. Luther's Carol .. .. .. J. Higgs
67. The Boy's Dream .. .. W. H. Monk
68. Legends of the Infancy .. J. F. Bridge
69. Let Christians all } 1½d. .. Traditional
70. Immortal Babe }

	s.	d.
The above 70 Carols, complete, cloth, gilt	6	0
Library Edition, with Historical Preface Roxburgh binding	11	6
Illustrated Edition, 1st and 2nd Series ..	11	6
Three Series (cloth, gilt, 3s.) .. each	1	6
Words only, complete	0	6
Words, each Series	0	2

Helmore, T. } CAROLS,
Neale, J. M. } Set to Ancient Melodies.

71. Here is joy for every age.
72. Earthly friends will change.
73. Gabriel's message.
74. Christ was born on Christmas Day.
75. Earth to-day rejoices.
76. Good Christian men, rejoice.
77. From church to church.
78. In the ending of the year.
79. Royal day that chasest gloom.
80. O'er the hill and o'er the vale.
81. Good King Wenceslas.
82. Toll! toll! because there ends. } 1½d. each.

	s.	d.
The above 12 carols, complete	1	6
Folio, with pianoforte accompaniment ..	7	0
Treble part	0	8
Words only	0	2

Twelve Carols.—Words by S. WENSLEY.
Twopence each.

83. O holy star .. .. J. Stainer
84. The shepherds .. .. Eaton Faning
85. Hymn of the angels .. .. G. M. Garrett
*86. The anthem of peace .. .. .. J. Barnby
87. The desert .. .. .. Emma Mundella
88. Bethlehem .. .. .. Myles B. Foster
89. Daybreak .. .. .. Berthold Tours
90. In the manger .. .. J. Barnby
91. The mother and child .. Myles B. Foster
92. Christ is born .. .. J. F. Bridge
93. Christmas Day .. .. Battison Haynes
*94. Sweet Christmas Bells .. .. J. Stainer
Complete, 1/6. Tonic Sol-fa, 1/-. Words only, 3d.

Ten Carols. Twopence each.

95. Now join we all with holy mirth .. J. Stainer
96. Softly the night .. .. J. M. Crament
97. Sleep, Holy Babe .. .. .. J. T. Field
98. Now dies in David's City .. .. J. Swire
99. There dwelt in Old Judea .. .. R. Jackson
100. Good people, give ear .. .. J. Swire
101. Carol for Christmas Day .. .. J. T. Field
102. Ye stars of night .. .. .. J. Swire
103. Ring out, ye bells .. .. J. H. Wallis
104. Two thousand troubled years J. F. Bridge
Complete, 1/6. Tonic Sol-fa, 1/- Words only, 3d.

* All Carols marked with an asterisk are also published separately in Tonic Sol-fa.

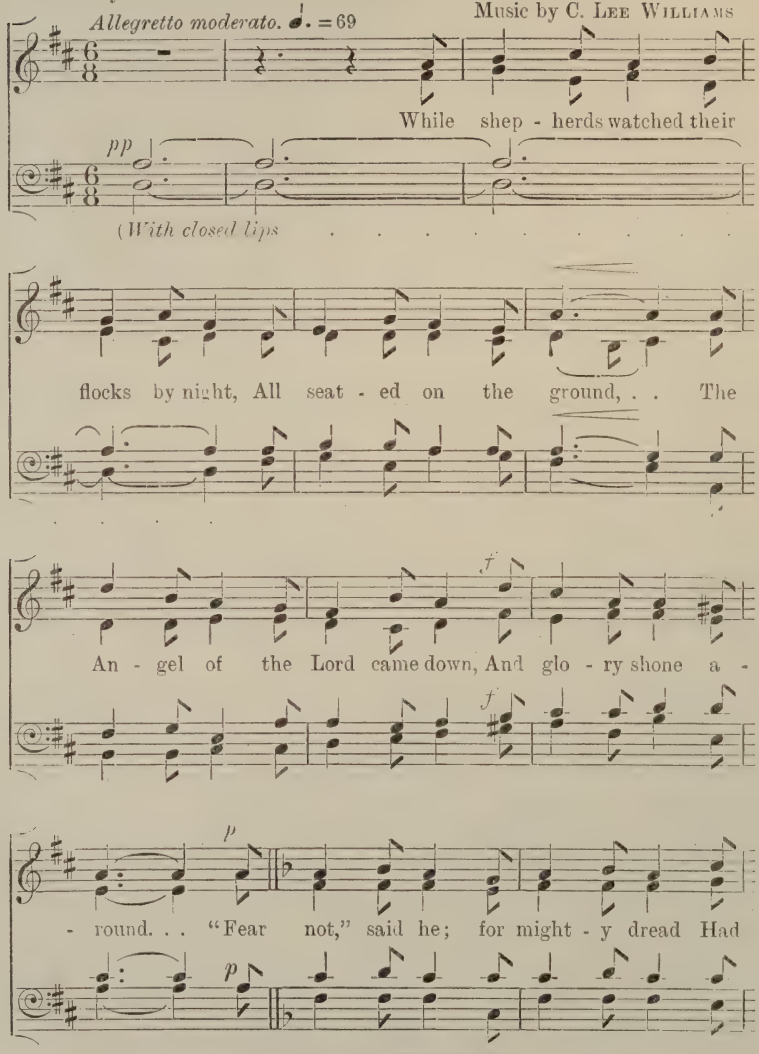
LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

(August, 1925.) MADE IN ENGLAND

While shepherds watched their flocks

Words by NAHUM TATE

Music by C. LEE WILLIAMS



Allegretto moderato. ♩. = 69
While shep - herds watched their
pp
(With closed lips flocks by night, All seat - ed on the ground, . . The An - gel of the Lord came down, And glo - ry shone a - f
f
p
- round. . . "Fear not," said he; for might - y dread Had
p

Copyright, 1926, by Novello and Company, Limited

"To you in David's town this day
Is born of David's line
A Saviour, Who is Christ the Lord;
And this shall be the sign:

"The heavenly Babe you there shall find
To human view display'd,
All meanly wrapp'd in swathing bands,
And in a manger laid."

Thus spake the seraph; and forthwith
Appear'd a shining throng
Of Angels praising God, who thus Address'd their joyful song:

"All glory be to God on high,
And to the earth be peace;
Good-will henceforth from heav'n to men
Begin and never cease."

NOVELLO'S
CHRISTMAS CAROLS.

Stainer, John (Adapted and arranged by).
TWELVE OLD CAROLS. Three-halfpence each.

*105. Shepherds! shake off your drowsy sleep.
106. Come, shepherds, come! shake off your sleep.
107. Now sing we all full sweetly.
108. The good men all of Chastres.
109. Whence comes this rush of wings afar?
110. Come with us, sweet flowers, and worship. / Infant so gentle, so pure, and so sweet! — 1½d.
*111. O night, peaceful and blest!
112. Of the Father's love begotten.
113. We saw a light shine out afar.
114. Christmas hath made an end.
115. Now farewell, good Christmas.

Complete, 1/6. Tonic Sol-fa, 8d. Words only, 1½d.

Martin, G. C. (Harmonised by).—CAROLS.
Three-halfpence each.

PART I. (Old Breton Melodies).

116. Hail! Christmas Bells.
117. O'er her Child the Virgin weeps. / The stars are bright. — 1½d.
118. On this day was born.
119. Glad hymns, with one accord.
120. Outside the city gates.
121. On Asia Minor's sunny shore.
*122. Across the desert sands by night.

Complete, 8d. Words only, 1½d.

PART II. (Old French Melodies).

123. The Shepherds glad.
124. Merrily ring the Christmas bells.
125. The sombre shadows darker fall.
126. Poising bright on golden wing.
127. Round the Virgin gently sleeping.
128. The Circumcision.
129. In the golden lands afar.
130. A Legend of the Flight.

Complete, 8d. Words only, 1½d.

Stainer, John. / Bramley, H. R. CAROLS, NEW AND OLD.
Arranged for Men's Voices.

Complete, 3s.; each, 2d. Words only, complete, 3d.

131. A Virgin unspotted .. .. .. Traditional
132. The Manger Throne .. .. C. Steggall
133. Sleep, Holy Babe .. .. Dykes
134. Good Christian men, rejoice .. Old German
135. 'Twas in the winter cold .. .. J. Barnby
136. Good King Wenceslas .. Helmore's Carols
137. Come! ye lofty .. .. Elvey
138. God rest you merry, gentlemen .. Traditional
139. Listen, Lordings .. .. .. Ouseley
140. The First Nowell .. .. .. Traditional
141. When Christ was born .. Arthur H. Brown
142. Jesu, hail! O God most holy .. J. Stainer
143. The seven joys of Mary .. .. Traditional
144. What Child is this? .. .. .. Old English
145. The Waits' Song .. .. .. Traditional
146. The Virgin and Child .. .. C. Steggall
147. The Holly and the Ivy .. .. Old French
148. The Lord at first .. .. .. Traditional
149. The Incarnation .. .. .. Traditional
150. The Cherry-Tree Carol .. .. Traditional
151. A Cradle-song of the Blessed Virgin J. Barnby
152. Jacob's Ladder .. .. .. Traditional
153. Dives and Lazarus .. .. .. Traditional
154. The Wassail Song .. .. .. Traditional

Stainer, John. / Bramley, H. R. CAROLS. NEW AND OLI
Arranged for Two-part. 2d. each.

155. Good King Wenceslas.
156. Good Christian men, rejoice.
157. Christmas hath made an end.
158. God rest you merry, gentlemen.
159. The First Nowell.
160. A Virgin unspotted.
161. The Wassail Song.
162. I hear along our street. / The Boar's Head Carol. — 2d.
163. The seven joys of Mary.
164. Hark! how sweetly the bells.
165. The Holly and the Ivy.

Complete, 8d. Tonic Sol-fa, 8d. Words onl

Fox, G.—CAROLS. For Little Singers. Ea

166. Good King Wenceslas.
167. I hear along our street.
168. Brightly shone the Eastern star.
169. As Joseph was a-walking.
170. Hark! what mean those holy voices.
171. The Holy Well.
172. While Shepherds watched.
173. God rest you merry, gentlemen.
174. Hark! how sweetly the bells.
175. A little robin.
176. As I sat on a sunny bank.
177. Why in tones so sweet and tender.
178. The moon shone bright. / All you that in this house. — 2d.
179. Clearly in the East it shone.
180. Shepherds at the Grange. / These good people. — 2d.
181. Nuns in frigid cells. / Washerwomen old. — 2d.
182. The Holly and the Ivy.
183. How grand and how bright. / Hosanna to the living Lord. — 2d.
184. Lo! a heavenly form appearing. / The Boar's Head Carol. / In excelsis gloria. — 2d.

Legge, R. H.—TWELVE NEW CAROLS
Unison. Words by A. E. ALSTON. Each,

185. Præludium.
186. The Midnight Masse.
187. The bells of Christmas.
188. Pastor Bonus.
189. Rejoice! Christian men.
190. A Children's Carol.
191. Caraula Pastorum.
192. Wassail Song.
193. Kings of Orient.
194. Good Christians all.
195. Cometh the day.
196. Ye Angelus Bell.

Complete, 1/6. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. Words onl

*197. The Anthem of Peace .. J. Barnby
On Christmas Morn A. C. Mackenzie
Across the desert sands .. G. C. Martin
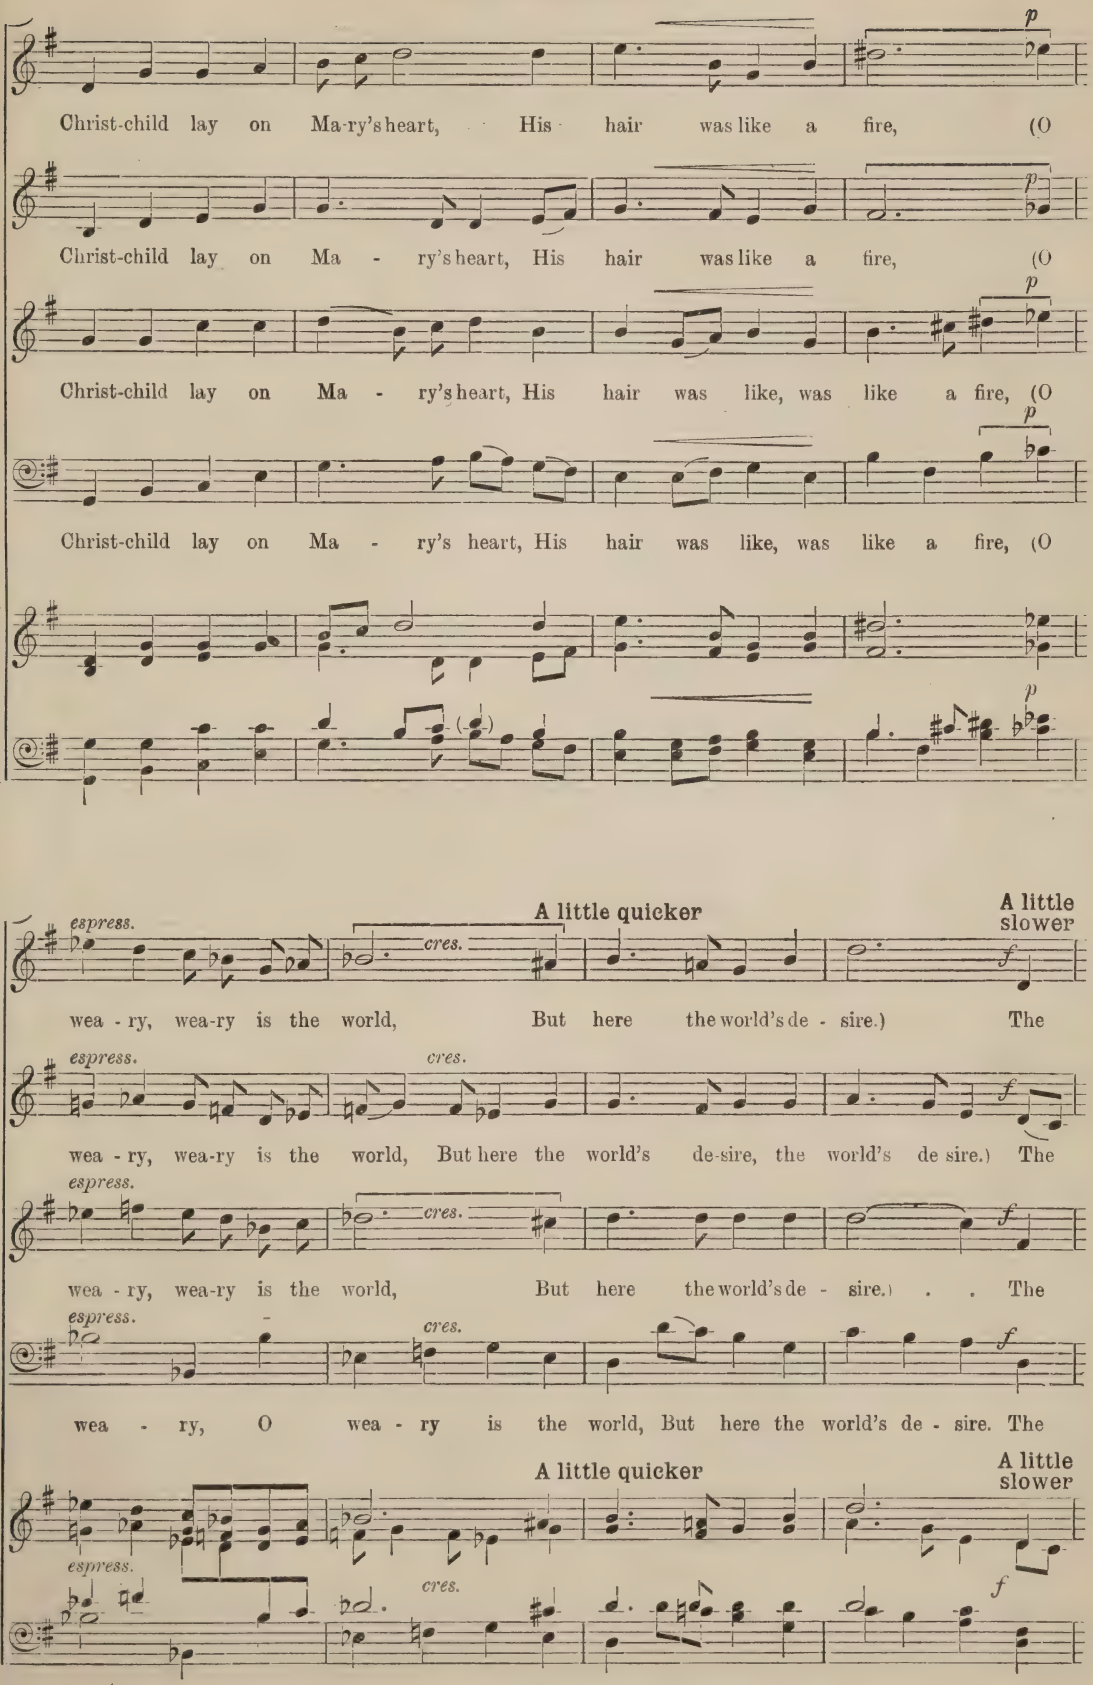
Shepherds! shake off your drowsy sleep .. .. .. J. Stainer

(Words only, 4s. per 100.)

 All Carols marked with an asterisk are also published separately in Tonic Sol-fa.*

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

(August, 1925.)



p
Christ-child lay on Ma-ry's heart, His hair was like a fire, (O
Christ-child lay on Ma - ry's heart, His hair was like a fire, (O
Christ-child lay on Ma - ry's heart, His hair was like, was like a fire, (O Christ-child lay on Ma - ry's heart, His hair was like, was like a fire, (O
espress.
A little quicker
cres.
A little slower
f wea - ry, wea-ry is the world, But here the world's de - sire.) The wea - ry, wea-ry is the world, But here the world's de-sire, the world's de sire.) The wea - ry, wea-ry is the world, But here the world's de - sire. . . The wea - ry, O wea - ry is the world, But here the world's de - sire. The broader poco rit. e dim.

Christ-child sat on Ma-ry's knee, His hair was like a crown, And broader
poco rit. e dim.
Christ-child sat on Ma - ry's knee, His hair was like a crown, And broader
poco rit. e dim.
Christ-child sat on Ma - ry's knee, His hair was like, was like a crown, And broader
poco rit. e dim.
Christ-child sat on Ma - ry's knee, His hair was like, was like a crown, And broader poco rit. e dim.

espress.
pp
rit.
all the flowers looked up at Him, And all the stars looked down.
espress.
pp
rit.
all the flowers looked up at Him, And all the stars looked down.
espress.
pp
rit.
all the flowers looked up at Him, And all the stars, the stars looked down.
espress.
pp
rit.
all the flowers looked up, And all the stars looked down.
espress.
pp
rit.

signatures. The time changes frequently, often with every bar, and one sees that constantly writing new signatures must have become a great nuisance to the composer. Certainly it becomes a great nuisance to the player when he has to stop frequently and count up the number of quavers in a bar. After considerable work on it, the music is still almost meaningless to me, and the constant dissonance is wearying in the extreme. There is rhythmic energy in the theme, however, and some short-lived moments of beauty in the quiet passages on pages 5 and 7. There is contrapuntal writing, too —skill, one might have said, except that where any note may come up against any other without restriction, the combination of numberless themes becomes child's work, and complicated canon merely a question of writing the notes. But there is nothing else. It would be easy to stomach the difficulties and the harshness if any impression of intense feeling emerged. The only intense feeling that emerges for me is boredom, which one can get without so much trouble as this Sonata involves.

What a relief to turn to music that speaks more simply, and is quite sure of what it wants to say! York Bowen's Nocturne (Oxford University Press) is well-written for the instrument, and has a great deal of charm and sensitive beauty. It shows the composer in a restrained and particularly attractive mood.

Charm, too, is the word for Bainton's 'White Hyacinth,' from the same press, which has the feeling of a slow, reflective dance, with real grace of movement and rhythm; and, again, some effective pianoforte writing. Both these pieces are moderately difficult.

Larger in scale and intention is Paul Corder's 'Spanish Waters,' which is based on a quotation from Masefield's poem of the same title, and shows dramatic imagination as well as emotional intensity, and the power to build up a climax rather in the manner of Strauss. The writing, whilst perhaps less essentially pianistic than that of the foregoing pieces, is strong and effective in its own way and for its own purpose; and, unlike some new music, it does not present unnecessary or unprofitable difficulties. This number, again, is from the Oxford University Press.

From Paxton's comes a very attractive little 'Study in the Style of Scarlatti,' by J. Stuart Archer, in which the composer has used the methods of his model not only in pianoforte style, but also in form and general atmosphere. The result is a very entertaining and sprightly little jeu d'esprit, and a useful study in that particular branch of technique and interpretation. T. A.

VIOLIN

Only one important work for the violin has reached us this month—Ernst von Dohnányi's Concerto (E. W. Organ, Birmingham), which need not be discussed, since it has been heard on the concert-platform not once, but many times. All that need be said is that the print is clear and the price (16*s*.) high. Joseph Achron's 'Auf Flügen des Gesanges' (same publisher) is a 'free' adaptation of Mendelssohn's Lied (Op. 34, No. 2). The adapter has not made it any less sugary and cloying than is the original, nor has he kept within the range of the amateur, and I very much doubt whether any player skilled enough to do justice technically to this arrangement will care to use his skill on such nauseous, sentimental stuff. The Old French Gavotte and Musette by Issay Barnas (E. W. Organ) is far more pleasing, and easy enough for a player who knows his third position well. Frederick Humphries's Idyll for violin with pianoforte accompaniment (Joseph Williams), simple and straightforward, should find admirers amongst amateurs in search of something 'sweet and low' which does not make too heavy a demand on their technical ability or on their interpretative powers. B. V.

DUETS

Duets for violins are under a cloud at present. There is no duet class in any of our competitive festivals, even though, I imagine, no student is allowed to leave college or academy without having gone through Mazas and Spohr. This is to be regretted, for the string duet represents the first step towards the string quartet. I welcome hence the Five Duets by Bach (E. W. Organ, Birmingham), which provide not only capital practice in ensemble playing, but form also an ideal introduction to Bach. Like the rest of his music, they are admirable not only æsthetically, but also for teaching purposes. He who understands Bach thoroughly need never fear the most cunning rhythmic device of the moderns. Any new departure (so long as it has a real purpose, and is not merely a music-hall turn) must be derived from the basic laws of rhythm, which no one has exemplified better than J. S. Bach.

The Suite for two 'cellos by J. R. Horton (from the same firm) belongs to a different class, for the two players frequently resort to melody and accompaniment, in which one has the lion's share while the other plays second fiddle. They are pleasing enough, if somewhat amorphous. There is no reason why we should not depart from the usual form if we can improve it and enlarge it by doing so. But it may be questioned whether the Scherzo (No. 6) gains in any way by the oddity of its construction.

VIOLA

Some interest attaches to the 'Rêverie' for viola with pianoforte accompaniment which Henry Wieniawski left unfinished at his death, and which is now published, the gap having been filled with some skill by Herr H. Weickmann, to whom the work is dedicated. It is typical Wieniawski — promising beginning, short-breathed phrase, tremolando excitement in the middle, all complete. But for all these and other weaknesses Wieniawski had a feeling for the instrument which others ignore to their cost. A. Weickmann's 'Wiegenlied' and 'Gebet' (anglice 'Cradle Song' and 'Prayer') reflect a minor poet's thoughts on these homely themes. They are of easy execution, and the 'Prayer' might serve aspiring violists as a practical introduction to the key of D flat.

The 'Practical Method for the Viola,' of Harry Schloming (in two parts), leaves me a little uncertain as to its practicability. The author has condensed all the chief principles of the art of viola playing with judgment, and considerately. But he covers too wide a field. He presupposes no knowledge of any kind in the student, and describes not only the position of the body but of the toes of both feet (with diagram)—so that we are justified in deducting the absence of a teacher. In these circumstances the studies seem far too few. For instance, there is only one page of trill studies. The time has gone when only incompetent violinists took to the viola. Composers to-day write for the viola music in every way as difficult as for the violin, and it cannot be seriously maintained that while the violinist must work through an elementary school, a preparatory school, classical studies of Kreutzer, Rode, Fiorillo, Gaviniés, and Dont, these two brief volumes will give the unaided student of the viola all that he needs to know. If on the other hand the 'Practical Method' is meant for the use of violinists who want another four strings to their bow, then the studies are too many and not specially indicated for the chief purpose which, under the circumstances, is to familiarise the student with the alto clef.

All these come to us through Edward W. Organ, of Birmingham. B. V.

FOR THE YOUNGSTERS AT CHRISTMAS

Robin Milford's 'The Shoemaker' is a Christmas opera for children, founded on Grimm's fairy-tale. The orchestra used is a string quartet, flute, and pianoforte. A pianoforte-vocal score is published. Both dialogue and music have a fresh and attractive quality rarely found in such works. The performers may be young, but must be musicians (Oxford University Press).

'Teddy Bear' and other songs from 'When we were very young,' is a further joint effort of A. A. Milne, H. Fraser-Simson, and E. H. Shepard, and is well up to the standard of its delightful predecessors. The music is the least distinguished part of the performance, but that is perhaps understandable: the task is the most difficult of the three. Only one real failure has to be noted, however. A pretty little fancy called 'Daffadowndilly' is set stickily and sentimentally. Here we feel the need of the Stanford touch (Methuen). H. G.

CHURCH MUSIC

Two admirable examples of modern English Church music come from the Oxford University Press—Harold E. Darke's setting of the Communion Service in F major and Ernest Bullock's anthem, 'Christ, the fair glory of the Holy Angels' (Hymn 242, 'E. H.'), for St. Michael and All Angels' Day, or for general use. The former is well suited to the needs of the average church choir. The writing for the voices is effective, and always interesting; but neither in this or in the excellent organ part is there any undue elaboration. Many will wish that the composer had included a nine-fold form of the Kyrie. Dr. Bullock's anthem is a strong, diatonic work, features of which are broad, dignified writing for the voices, and some massive, flowing work for the organ. The pianissimo ending should be impressive. There are numerous changes of time-signature—5-4 is frequent—and a free and elastic rhythmic treatment is called for.

Also to be recommended are two anthems from Stainer & Bell, by J. A. Sowerbutts. 'Keep, we beseech Thee, O Lord' (Collect for the fifteenth Sunday after Trinity) is an expressive setting for solo treble and four-part chorus. The free organ part is skilfully managed. A Motet, 'If we believe that Jesus died,' is for unaccompanied singing. It is an impressive little work which needs a good choir to do it full justice.

From Paxton's come two carols by Gerrard Williams which are off the beaten track. 'When Christ was born of Mary free' is for four voices unaccompanied. In the second and fourth verses the melody is given to the tenors and basses in unison for the first half, otherwise the setting is the same for each verse. It is in 5-4 time, and the harmonic treatment is interesting. 'From far away' is another setting of the Old English words (modernised), also for unaccompanied singing. The narrative is delivered throughout by a single part through the medium of two phrases repeated for each verse. In the first half the sopranos tell the story, the other voices entering under the prolonged final note of each phrase with a pianissimo refrain. In the second half the tenors carry on the narrative, and the refrain is supplied by the basses and the two upper parts (in parallel fifths).

A set of Five New Carols, by Godfrey Sceats, issued by the Junior Work Department, S.P.G., will be found useful. They are well-written, tuneful settings of Arthur Cripps's 'Star Carol,' Frances Chesterton's 'How far is it to Bethlehem?' Eleanor Farjeon's 'The Shepherd and the King,' Margaret Bishop's 'The dim lights,' and Emily Howson Taylor's 'The Waits.' Any of these may also be obtained separately.

Some works from Italy (G. Zanibon, Padova) bear no indication of any English firm through which they are obtainable. A number of Introits, Graduals, &c., for three voices, unaccompanied, under the title 'Proprium Missae,' are by A. Bottazzo. They are feeble things, quite lacking in interest. P. C. Pasini's 'Scendi dal Cielo!' is a melodiously-written Pastorale for two voices. The voices flow easily in thirds and sixths, and a florid organ part supplies work for a soft solo stop. Also for two voices is a Mass by Giocondo Fino. The voice parts here are treated with more independence, though the music is always quite easy. Much in advance of any of the above is a Mass by Oreste Ravanello. It is for four voices (T.T.B.B.), and, both vocally and instrumentally, is an effectively-written work. G. G.

The Musician's Bookshelf

'Terpander; or, Music and the Future.' By Edward J. Dent.

[Kegan Paul, 2*s.* 6*d.*]

Terpander added three strings to the formerly four-stringed Grecian lyre—he was the Emanuel Moor of the ancients, in fact.

Emanuel Moor is not named by Mr. Dent. His little book, indeed, is too chary of proper nouns. No one else in England knows so much about the new men of music, who they are, and what they are up to. It is, therefore, a trifle disappointing to be left in the half-dark with general indications like this:

> Some of the composers of the present day appear to be pursuing adventure in a definitely intellectual spirit comparable almost to that of the mediæval Netherlanders.

This sentence seems to picture a crew of musicians setting sail in a joint enterprise. Dictionaries are compiled in that way, no doubt; but is not musical composition rather the affair of an individual?

Is there 'a spirit' common to a number of composers? One would have thought an artist's spirit to be as difficult to share as his dreams. We are only asking, not arguing; but we wish Mr. Dent would really tell us if the new young composers of Mittel Europa are working as gangs, in shifts.

That would be an interesting indication of the music of the future. Sir Thomas Beecham has already suggested that all known British composers who have failed to write successful operas individually should collaborate, each contributing his mite towards a composite opera.

No doubt currents and influences and Zeitgeists have a great deal to do with the making of music, but what really counts, after all, is the individual composer, is it not? That is why the music of the absolute future is impredictable—and Mr. Dent naturally does not concern himself with it. But there is the relative future—our future, which is Mr. Dent's present. What Salzburg thought in 1922, we may come round to in time.

In brilliant phrases Mr. Dent refers to contemporary movements; but we do not believe much in the art of 'movements.'* The music we have cared for most was the work of clean-cut, separate men, and what this booklet lacks, unless the newer music is indeed a communal effort, is an indication from Mr. Dent—whose judgment weighs so much with all of us—of a few actual men who may, in his opinion, have some interest for the future.

Probably Mr. Dent is cramped by the smallness of his space. On p. 69 he starts a gallant hare:

> The present age revolts from the music of the past century because of its insincerity and pretentiousness.

This should be good fun. But Mr. Dent has not time to play it out. In his haste he does not (may we go so far as to say?) play fair. He airily pretends he has caught his hare in these words:

> By the irony of fate the music of the last century, when it was designed to edify, has become vapid and tedious; what has survived, quaintly artificial though its freshness may be, is the music that was made only for ephemeral entertainment. 'La Belle Hélène' has outlived 'Les Béatitudes.'

The fact remains that 'La Belle Hélène' has not survived Verdi's 'Requiem,' and this surely makes hay of the argument.

We fear that a rather too incautious an approach spoils the persuasiveness of the very first page. Here the unintelligibility of new music is confused with the feeling of antipathy towards it. When Wagner, Franck, Debussy, and Stravinsky first came out there were surely persons who grasped the sense but at the same time heartily disliked it. Is to dislike a new music the same thing as to fail to understand it? Are we not to be allowed to feel that while we know what Auric is getting at, it is hardly worth getting?

Needless to say, there are quantities of good things in the book. But it is too summary. Mr. Dent disposes of the 19th century in a way too airy for the English public. No doubt such sayings are a commonplace on the Continent, and the point was not one to be laboured by an elegant writer. But most of us live in Mr. Dent's past, and we should have liked a more patient description of our future.

C.

* They do at Paris. They prefer it. There are French literary movements that consist of nothing but theories and manifestos. And thus the critic Thibaudet: 'Criticism may find itself up against what I will call pure movements, that is to say, literary movements that come in their due time, and mark out a channel for themselves, and allow the critic to wander freely in the world of ideas, without his ever being disturbed by men of genius, whose irrational personality upsets everything.'

'Additional Exercises to Elementary Harmony.' By C. H. Kitson.

[Oxford University Press, 3*s.* 6*d.*]

Those who use Prof. Kitson's handy little 'Elementary Harmony' will be glad to know that a book of additional exercises is now obtainable. Every teacher knows the importance of laying sure foundations in the teaching of harmony. Nothing is more fatal to sound progress than to push on too fast. This book of exercises is intended to be used in conjunction with Part 1 of 'Elementary Harmony.' Particularly welcome is the prominence given to ear-training. Teachers will find here plenty of material for ear-tests and for dictation purposes—melodies, basses, two-part progressions, chords, and chordal progressions in four parts. Each chapter in 'Elementary Harmony' is here provided with a chapter of additional material for practice, and a few pages of miscellaneous exercises are also included.

G. G.

'The Life of Jenny Lind.' By Mrs. Raymond Maude.

[Cassell, 10*s.* 6*d.*]

This is the life of an Eminent Victorian, treated in the Victorian manner and not in that of Strachey or Guedalla.

The narrative, by the great singer's daughter, is short and unassuming, without either flowers of speech or analytical excursions. It is an interesting, if not a dramatic story.

Jenny Lind sang as a small child, and at nine she was admitted into the Royal Theatre School at Stockholm. At twelve she was a brilliant singer, but her training was as much histrionic as musical, and when she was sixteen she was offered a salary of £60 as an actress. She was seventeen (March, 1838) when she first appeared in opera (Agathe in 'Freischütz'). 'I got up that morning one creature,' she said, 'and went to bed another, for I had found my vocation.'

But was opera her vocation? She won great operatic successes, but she never loved the opera house. Her daughter puts this down, in part, to the puritanical traditions of her family. Later on, in England, Jenny Lind abandoned the stage altogether, when she was at the height of her powers. An analytical biographer would have made more of this extraordinary step. One can think of no other case in which such success was scored with so little enthusiasm on the singer's part.

Jenny Lind was a serious, sensible, and devout woman, with a cultivated musical taste and a noble interest in charitable works. But she might have been born to be a parson's wife, so little inclination had she for cabotinage. Some ironical fairy must have presented her with the gifts that made critical early-Victorian opera-goers rave about her, while the singer herself was longing for a quiet life where she could carry on good works in obscurity.

It is tantalising that we should have no idea of what Jenny Lind's singing was like. Mrs. Maude has not quoted any really full technical account of her art, such as must, one would have thought, have been available. But perhaps she thought that singing being, after all, indescribable, her mother's wondrous tones were best left to the imagination.

The imagination boggles. No sort of singing we hear to-day excites the rapture that this prim and rather dowdy little person* caused on her progress. We get a hint in the fact of Stanford's having remembered all his life the impression made on him as a boy of seven, by her singing of the words 'And they were sore afraid,' in 'The Messiah,' in a whisper that went round the whole hall pianissimo. Manuel Garcia described her singing of the opening phrase of 'Come unto Me,' as > . . . so full, so pure, so true in pitch, that the preceding ritornel was made to seem out of tune.

Mrs. Maude says:

> By nature her voice was not flexible; only perseverance and unremitting practice had made it so. Her breathing capacity was also not naturally great, but she renewed her breath so quietly and cleverly that the closest observer could not detect her doing it, and the outside world credited her with abnormal lung capacity.

It is obvious that she was more musical than most of the famous singers of the time. Her singing must have been exquisite. But the mobs that lionised her cannot be credited with the taste to appreciate her fine points, whatever the few may have done. The few delighted in her art; the crowd idolised her as an incarnation of the contemporary ideal of womanhood.

She was a good woman — an eminently and naturally good one. She was earnest by temperament. She naturally disliked frivolity and detested raffishness. She was devout, and she was endlessly generous in the cause of charity. The fact that this paragon of Victorian womanhood sang beautifully was an excuse for the public worship, in her, of the virtues she was known to possess.

Her possession of them was no secret, thanks to the astute Lumley, in England, and, in America, Barnum. Our Powells and Holts could have taught little to those early but dashing impresarios. London was all agog over Jenny Lind before she had sung a note here. The American tour in 1850-52 remains to this day the classic type of such enterprises. It has never been outdone, and the legend of it still goes strong.

Jenny Lind threw up the stage when she was twenty-eight. Her last appearance was as Alice, in Meyerbeer's 'Robert the Devil,' in London, on May 10, 1849. During the American tour she married, at Boston, in 1852, Otto Goldschmidt, who was to found the London Bach Choir. Before this she had parted company with the mighty Barnum, paying him £6,400 to break the contract. The biography puts it thus:

> By this time (May, 1851, after ninety-five concerts) both parties were tired out with the constant exertion and excitement, and were quite ready to end the contract.

Jenny Lind, however, continued the tour on her own account.

The later years were domestic and happy and uneventful. Jenny Lind died at Malvern in 1887:

> She greeted the sunshine which came into her room on the last morning of her life with some bars of Schumann's 'Sonnenschein.'

C.

* 'She never was a good dresser, and selected materials more for their quality than their beauty' (p. 208)

'Concise Technical Studies for Singers.' By Dawson Freer. [Winthrop Rogers, 3*s.* 6*d.*]

'A Short Practical Text-Book on the Singing Voice.' By Bantock Pierpoint. [Ashdown, 2*s.*]

Mr. Dawson Freer has compiled an excellent collection of studies which may be unreservedly commended to the notice of singers. Most of the studies have been transposed into several keys, and so may be used by any voice. Not the least valuable part of the book is the introductory chapter, in which some helpful advice is given. The book does not claim to be a 'method,' but . . .

> . . . is rather a collection of exercises that all singers should find helpful when seeking to acquire a sound technique.

The studies are graded under their respective headings — scales, florid passages, &c. Useful exercises on vowels, diphthongs, and consonants are also included, and a chapter on 'runs' or 'divisions' illustrates by examples from Handel how the study of these may usefully be approached.

Mr. Pierpoint's book is a brief exposition of his own methods with pupils. The author has not allowed himself much space—his motto is 'an ounce of practice is worth a ton of theory'—but he has managed to convey to the reader quite a number of practical hints, supplemented by many exercises. Teachers, of course, do not all think alike. There are many, for example, who strongly disapprove of the use of a spoon, or other mechanical means, in order to keep the tongue down. The book—which is a somewhat slender one for the price—would have gained in practical value had the writer allowed himself a few more pages.

G. G.

BOOKS RECEIVED

[Mention in this list neither implies nor precludes review in a future issue.]

Purcell's 'Dido and Æneas.' English text with German translation. Pp. 29. Oxford University Press, 1*s.* 6*d.*

Reeves's 'Dictionary of Musicians.' Edited by Edmondstoune Duncan. Pp. 253. William Reeves, 3*s.* 6*d.*

'The "Central Point" in Beautiful Voice-Production.' By H. Travers Adams. Pp. 24. William Reeves, 1*s.*

'Proceedings of the Musical Association.' Fifty-second session, 1925-26. Pp. 124. Leeds: Whitehead & Miller, £1 1*s.*

'Gramophone Tips.' 1927 Edition. By H. T. Barnett. Pp. 46. The Author, 123, High Street, Old Portsmouth, 1*s.*

'A Guide to the Study of Musical History.' By Annette Joelson. Pp. 125. Claude Stacey, 2*s.*

'The Responsive Psalter.' By the Rev. James Eckersley. Pp. 545. Novello, 5*s.*

'Father Smith.' By Andrew Freeman. Pp. 80. Musical Opinion Office, 7*s.* 6*d.*

'From a Music-Lover's Armchair.' By R. W. S. Mendl. Pp. 189. Philip Allan, 6*s.*

'Receive It So.' By Basil Maine. Pp. 95. Noel Douglas, 5*s.*

'Spoken Poetry in the Schools.' By Marjorie I. M. Gullan. Pp. 116. Methuen, 3*s.* 6*d.*

'Musical Portsmouth.' Edited by F. Pedrick Harvey. With a Foreword by Prof. Granville Bantock. The Author, 5, Alexandra Place, Mutley, Portsmouth, 6*d.*

A Lullaby Carol

Words by Frances Chesterton Music by Geoffrey Shaw

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited; New York: THE H. W. GRAY CO., Sole Agents for the U.S.A.

Allegretto moderato
Soprano
Alto
Tenor
Bass
mp
Rap soft on the door, then o - pen it wide: What shall we find if we
(For practice only) peep in - side? A Babe in the hay— a fa - ther near by, A Mo - ther who sings a peep in - side? A Babe in the hay. . . . A Mo - ther who sings a peep in - side? A Babe in the hay, . . . A Mo - ther who sings a peep in - side? A Babe in the hay, . . . A Mo - ther who sings a

Copyright, 1926, by Novello and Company, Limited

poco rit.
mp a tempo
child's lul - la - by, a child's lul - la - by. "Lit-tle child Je - sus, Je - sus, dear Child; child's lul - la - by, . . lul - la - by. "Lit-tle child Je - sus, Je - sus, dear Child;
child's lul - la - by, . . lul - la - by. "Lit-tle child Je - sus, Je - sus, dear Child;
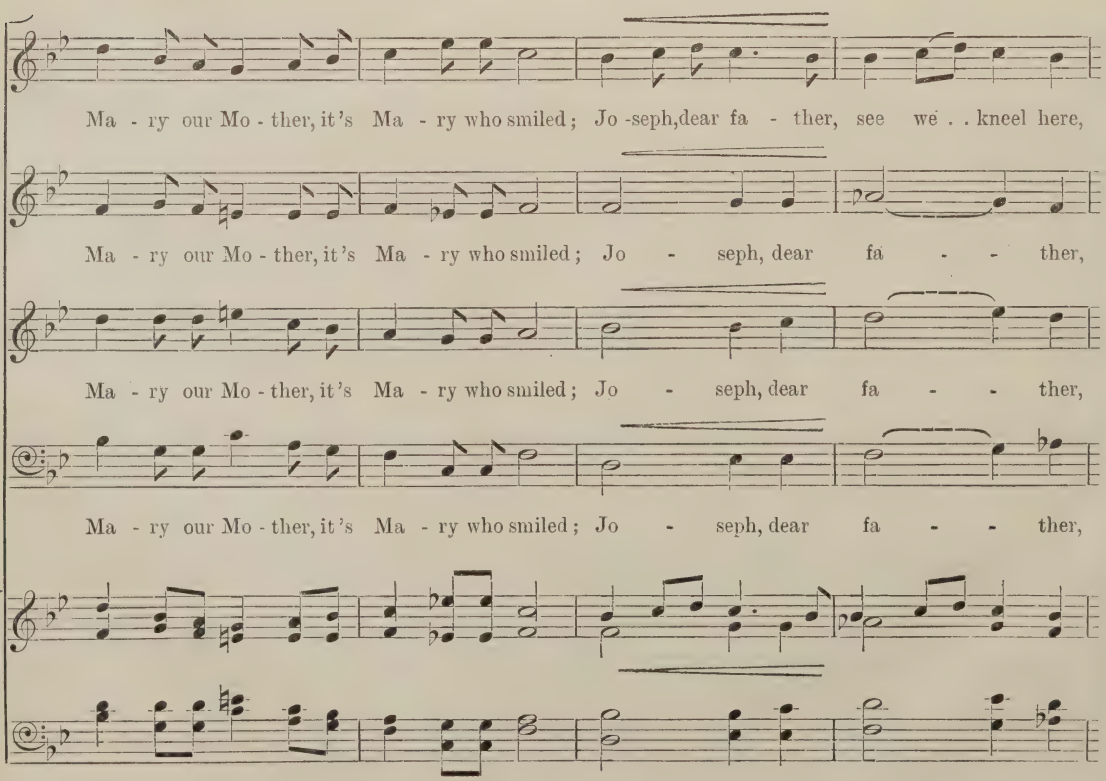
child's lul - la - by, lul - la - by. "Lit-tle child Je - sus, Je - sus, dear Child;



Ma - ry our Mo - ther, it's Ma - ry who smiled; Jo-seph, dear fa - ther, see we . . kneel here,
Ma - ry our Mo - ther, it's Ma - ry who smiled; Jo - seph, dear fa - - ther,
Ma - ry our Mo - ther, it's Ma - ry who smiled; Jo - seph, dear fa - - ther,
Ma - ry our Mo - ther, it's Ma - ry who smiled; Jo - seph, dear fa - - ther, poco rit.

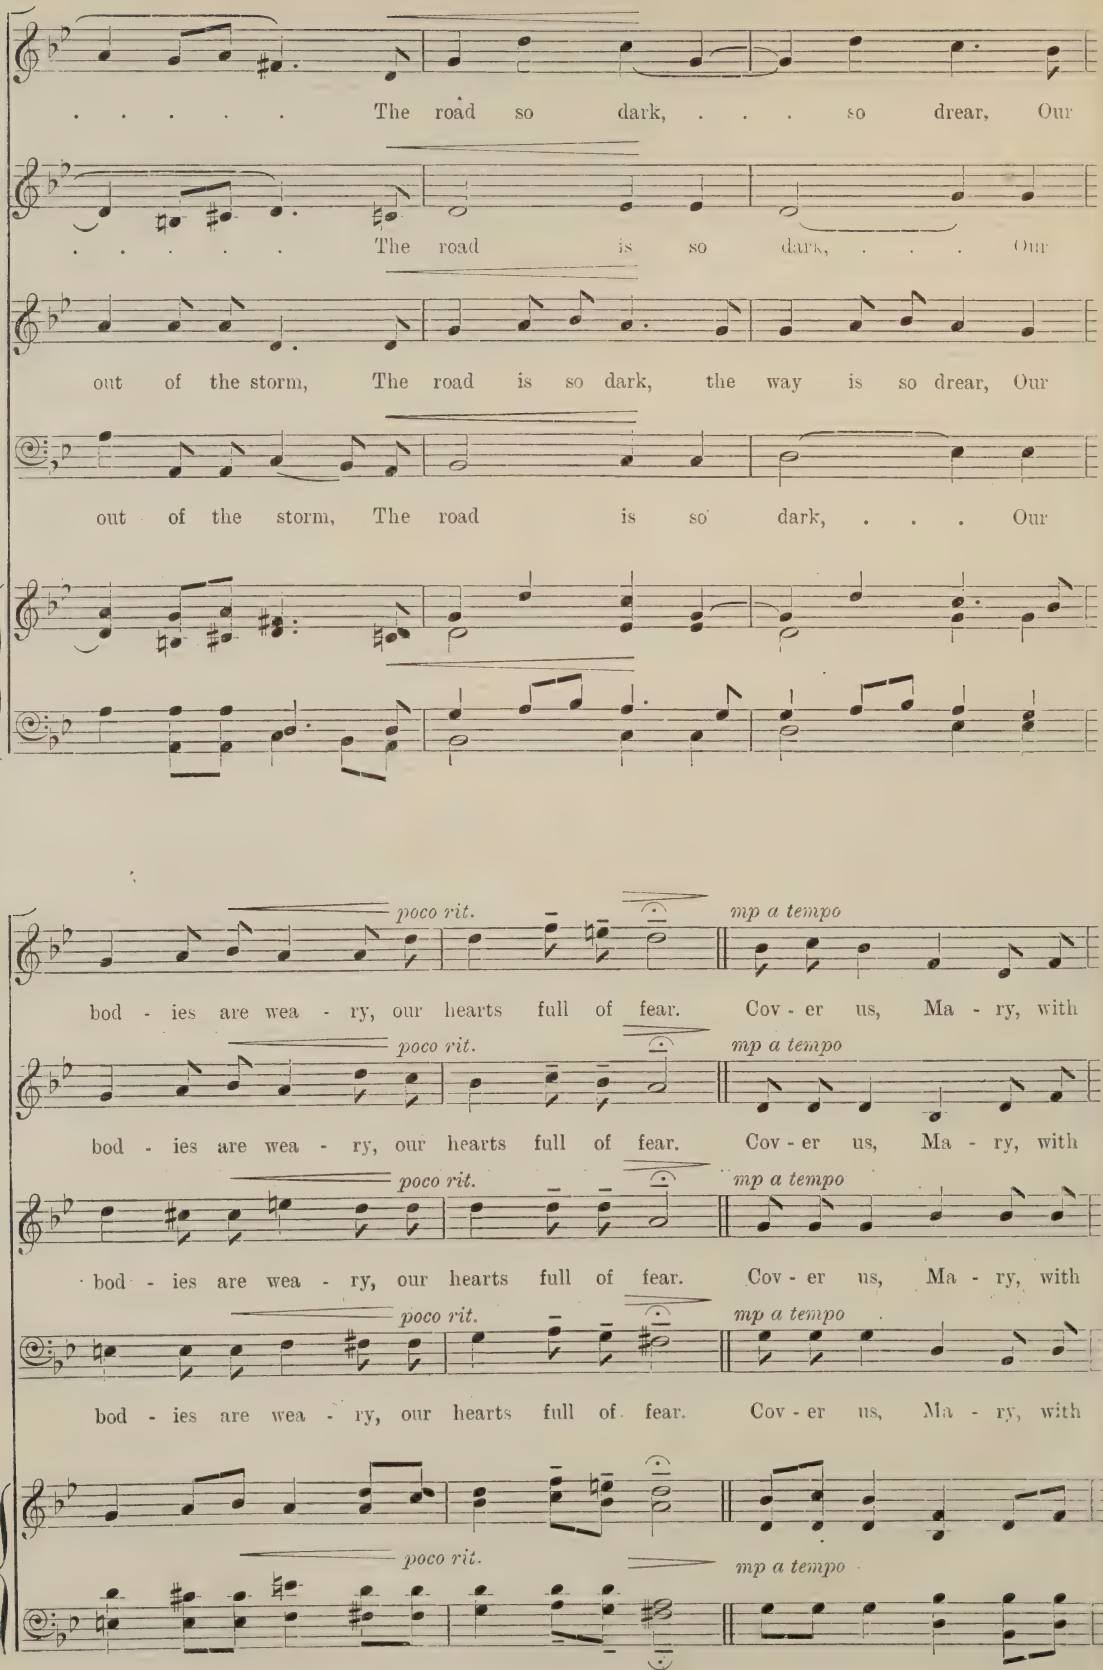
p
Tell us, oh tell us, may we draw near, may we draw near?"
Tell us, oh tell us, may we draw near, . . may we draw near?"
Tell us, oh tell us, may we draw near, . . may we draw near?"
Tell us, oh tell us, may we draw near, may we draw near?"
a tempo
mf
'm . . . . . 'm . . . . .
The wind blows so cold, the sta - ble is warm; Give shel - ter to - night



. . . . . The road so dark, . . . so drear, Our
. . . . . The road is so dark, . . . Our out of the storm, The road is so dark, the way is so drear, Our out of the storm, The road is so dark, . . . Our poco rit.
mp a tempo bod - ies are wea - ry, our hearts full of fear. Cov - er us, Ma - ry, with poco rit.
mp a tempo bod - ies are wea - ry, our hearts full of fear. Cov - er us, Ma - ry, with poco rit.
mp a tempo bod - ies are wea - ry, our hearts full of fear. Cov - er us, Ma - ry, with poco rit.
mp a tempo bod - ies are wea - ry, our hearts full of fear. Cov - er us, Ma - ry, with poco rit.
mp a tempo

fresh scent-ed hay, And sing us to sleep; and Saint Jo - seph lay Kind fresh scent-ed hay, And sing us to sleep; and Saint Jo - seph lay Kind fresh scent-ed hay, And sing us to sleep; and Saint Jo - seph lay Kind fresh scent-ed hay, And sing us to sleep; and Saint Jo - seph lay Kind hands in . . bless - ing, for chil - dren we are, . . Lone - ly and home - less, who hands . . . . in bless - - - - ing, Lone - ly and home - less, who hands in bless - - - - ing, Lone - ly and home - less, who hands . . . in bless - - - ing, Lone - ly and home - less, who poco rit.

a tempo
mf
p
fol - lowed a star, fol - lowed a star. 'm . . . . . .
fol - lowed a star, . . who fol - lowed a star. Lit - tle child Je - sus, greet with a smile fol - lowed a star, . . who fol - lowed a star. 'm . . . . . .
fol - lowed a star, a star.
'm . . . . . Dreamed of His love, His Poor lit - tle bro - thers who all the long while Dreamed of His
'm . . . . . Dreamed of His Dreamed of His warmth and His light, In the low raft - ered sta - ble, out of the night.

love, . . . In the low raft - ered sta - ble, out of the night.
love, His warmth and His light, In the sta - ble, out of the night.
love, . . . and His light, In the sta - ble, out of the night.
mf
Here, here is . . com - fort for one and for all, Warmth in the man - ger,
mf
Here, here is . . com - fort for one and for all, Warmth in the man - ger,
mf
Here, here is . . com - fort for one and for all, Warmth in the man - ger,
mf
Here, here is . . com - fort for one and for all, Warmth in the man - ger,
mf

food in the stall, Ma - ry and Jo - seph a night watch to keep O - ver food in the stall, Ma - ry a watch to keep O - ver
food in the stall, Ma - ry a watch to keep O - ver food in the stall, Ma - ry a watch to keep O - ver mp poco rit.
p
tired . . . chil - dren. who dream - less shall sleep, dream - less shall sleep.
tired chil - dren, who dream - less shall sleep, . . . dream - less shall sleep.
tired . . . chil - dren, who dream - less shall sleep, . . . dream - less shall sleep.
tired . . chil - dren, who dream- less shall sleep, sleep.

Occasional Notes

For some time past this country has taken an increasingly prominent part in Bach research, and in some respects—notably in regard to the choral works, large and small—our scholars appear to have left Germany behind. For example, Prof. Sanford Terry's recently-issued monumental work on the Cantatas contained a reconstruction of the Leipsic Liturgy of Bach's time. This piece of research has excited a good deal of interest in Germany, and as a result a service was held in the Fraumünster, at Zürich, on the ninth Sunday after Trinity (October 10), and repeated on the following day. The order of service followed exactly the lines set forth in Prof. Terry's book, and handsome acknowledgment was made to that source. The service was conducted by Pastor Max Heinz, of Rüschlikon, the choir was that of the Fraumünster, with the orchestra of the Conservatorium, augmented by members of the Tonhalle and Winterthur Orchestras. The organ voluntaries, the Motet, the Cantata (No. 105), and the settings of most of the hymns were by Bach. There was a congregation of two thousand five hundred. This remarkable service was arranged by Ernst Isler, the organist, and report describes it as being most impressive.

On October 29 M. de Fleurian, the French Ambassador, on behalf of the President of the Republic, conferred on Sir Henry Wood the Cross of Officer of the Legion of Honour, in recognition of his services to music.

The Oxford University Opera Club will revive Gluck's 'Alceste' at the Playhouse, Oxford, on December 6-11, with an extra performance (matinée) on December 11. This is the first venture of the Club—a newly-formed body whose object is the production of neglected works of historic and musical interest. An article on 'Alceste' appears elsewhere in this journal.

Apparently, there is something to learn, even in the writing of testimonials. For example, here is one from a recent issue of the American Diapason, the writer being a young lady, described as a 'Nationally-Known Organist.' We admire the neatness with which she hands the organ-builders a bouquet, at the same time keeping a few blossoms for herself:

> Let me congratulate you on your marvelous four-manual installation in the First Baptist Church, Jacksonville, Florida. It is one of the finest church organs on which I have ever played. Without such an instrument in my recent recital there, it would have been impossible to have brought out the delicate pastel color-tones and tremendous climaxes which were so enthusiastically received by my audience. I consider this one of the few really great organs in the South.

And myself as one of the few really great organists in any part of the compass.

Sir Thomas Beecham's vehement attack on broadcasting and musical conditions generally in this country, and his decision to desert the sinking ship and go to America for good and all, have provided lively 'copy' for the press. The populace, however, remains calm; and even musicians show surprisingly little concern. The fact is, Sir Thomas is now merely a 'star' turn with the baton, and so counts for a good deal less than in the old days when he did such brilliant things in the operatic world. Having now joined the prima donna and 'international celebrity' order of being, nothing is more natural than that he should go with the rest of his kind to the only country where opportunities for coruscation are as frequent as can be desired. The old Country, not unmindful of benefits received, wishes her erratic genius bon voyage and (despite his avowed intention to have done with us) a speedy return—for it is difficult to imagine Sir Thomas finding musical conditions in America all his fancy paints them. In the matter of broadcasting alone, his leap is merely from the frying-pan into a much hotter place.

As we go to press we hear of the possibility of an arrangement between the B.B.C. and the B.N.O.C., which may well point the road to a solution of the difficulties of the latter. One thing is clear: the way to permanent English opera will be found to be elsewhere than through mammoth schemes involving the raising of vast sums of money. The article on page 1094 of this issue, written by one conversant with musical life in Belgium and France, makes it hard to believe that London and other large cities in this country cannot do what is done in such a centre as Brussels, for example. Substantial support from the broadcasting authorities would be in effect a form of Government subsidy. If such a desirable arrangement comes about, it will be yet one more example of the national genius for successful compromise.

There have been so many complaints as to the non-use of the Albert Hall organ as a solo instrument, that, in fairness to the management, we think the following, from a daily paper, should be quoted:

> The organ at the Albert Hall, London, which has before proved useful during boxing contests, was once more played with considerable force last night to drown the sustained booing that greeted the referee's verdict after the 15-rounds fight between Phil Lolosky, of Aldgate, and Petit Biquet, the fly-weight champion of Belgium.

Unfortunately the report does not tell us who the organist was, or what he played.

Seeing that it is one of the most delightful of short choral works, opportunities of hearing 'Acis and Galatea' are less frequent than one would expect them to be. Readers should therefore note that it will be performed by the Harold Brooke Choir, at Bishopsgate Institute, on December 2, at 8, with Miss Isabel Ianson, Messrs. H. W. Parsons, Roland Jackson, and Joseph Farrington as soloists, and Mr. Gerald Cooper at the harpsichord. The programme includes also the first performance of three part-songs for female voices and strings, by Gustav Holst.

Dr. W. H. Harris has been appointed to succeed Sir Hugh Allen as conductor of the Oxford Bach Choir. Sir Hugh, however, will retain his connection with the Choir, having been elected chairman of the committee.

Player-Piano Notes

ÆOLIAN

Duo-Art.—Though musically the least interesting of the three movements, the third roll of Chopin's E minor Concerto (Rondo Vivace), played by Josef Hoffmann, is a brilliant piece of work. The arrangement of this is very well planned, and is entirely satisfactory (6918).

There is some very delicate playing by Cyril Scott in his charming little 'Butterfly Waltz' (0246)—so good is it, that one is sorry it is not longer.

An attractive roll is that of Grieg's Norwegian Dance, Op. 35, No. 2, played by Carolyn Cone Baldwin, though there is hardly enough contrast in tone between the opening Allegretto grazioso and the Allegro section, where more power is needed (6891).

With the exception of one place on the roll where the pedalling is badly blurred, Sapellnikov's delightful Gavotte, Op. 5, No. 2, is well played by Rudolph Ganz (6993).

Brahms's Intermezzo in A (6971) receives most expressive treatment at the hands of Arthur Rubinstein, with a rubato of a type too rare—one that never interferes with the general flow of the piece as a whole.

A very lively performance of 'The Merrymakers' Dance' from German's 'Nell Gwynn' Suite, comes from Robert Armbruster; some of the quick passages, however, are not so clean as they might be (6995).

Hand-played.—Robert Armbruster also gives us two rolls in this section, both very well played—a selection from 'Cavalleria Rusticana' (A933*e*) and a very ordinary 'Chanson,' by Friml (A935*d*). Why does so able a pianist waste his time and talent on this style of thing?

Salon music, and not of the best, is Wollenhaupt's 'The Whispering Wind,' the effect of which, through no fault of the player, Geneviève Pitot, is gusty rather than whispering (A931*a*).

Huston Ray has added some arpeggi in the bass and a few rapid chromatic scales in the treble of Massenet's 'Elégie,' and plays the result as a concert transcription. The effect is somewhat ludicrous, and those who care for this particular piece will, I should imagine, prefer it plain (A937*d*).

Metrostyle.—Four good rolls this month for the avid player. Even a novice could make quite a brilliant show with Moszkowski's 'Esquisse Vénitienne,' Op. 73, No. 1 (T30293*b*).

Schubert's Impromptu in F minor, Op. 142, is well-edited, but like so much of Schubert, it suffers from over-repetition (T30285*c*).

'Abendlied,' by Edward German (T30292*b*), needs nice manipulation of the levers. There is also a Bach Prelude and Fugue in A (No. 19, from Book 1), which in places appears to be less well-cut than usual (T24687*b*).

Song-Rolls.—There is plenty of spirit in Lane Wilson's 'Carmen'—a Waltz Ballad played by Templeton Murray (26703). Charles Blackmore over-sentimentalises 'God's Garden,' by F. Lambert (26704), and in Easthope Martin's 'Absence' it is a little difficult at times to fit the words to the melody. Albert Fream is the pianist (26702). There are one or two misprints in the words on Roll 5 of the 'When we were very young' series (26671)—'Politeness' and 'Market Square.'

The dance rolls are a good level lot, and consist of two Duo-Art—'Where'd you get those eyes?' (Donaldson), played by Ernest Leith (0756), 'To-night's my night with baby' (Meyer-Buttenuth), played by A. Moran and R. Bloom (0755), and three Metrostyle—'That Night in Araby' (Snyder) and 'Ting-a-ling' (Little) on L24800*a*; 'Sweet Child' (Whiting-Lewis-Simon) and 'That's why I love you' (Donaldson-Ash), on L24799*a*; 'Falling in love with you (Meyer) and 'On the Riviera' (van Loan-Rich) on L24801*a*.

BLÜTHNER

Animatic.—The roll that heads the list, 'Etudes Symphoniques,' by Schumann, played by Teresa Carreño, is unaccountably disappointing in places. At times the playing is magnificent, but there are some dry spots which fail to hold the attention of the hearer. It is good, however, to have a lasting and faithful reproduction of this fine player's (57361).

Schumann's song, 'Mondnacht,' Op. 39, No. 5, suffers inevitably from transcription, though Felix Gieseking does all that is possible in regard to performance (59424).

Walter Niemann gives his own stately 'Menuet à la cour,' Op. 91. The ending is reminiscent of Brahms, and, although there is perhaps overmuch repetition of the opening bars, it makes good hearing, and is well played (59202).

After a spirited beginning, Oswin Keller has a bad relapse in the middle section of Rachmaninov's 'Polichinelle.' The Agitato is converted into an Andantino, and dramatised almost out of recognition. It is difficult to imagine how such a misconception of the composer's obvious intentions could have been possible.

A roll of Schütt's 'Papillon-Valse,' played by Franz Wagner, although quite pleasing, would have shown to better advantage with a less pronounced rubato (58373).

The tempo of all the foregoing rolls is on the slow side, but no amount of mechanical quickening can hide such technical faults as halting scale-passages, distorted time-values, &c. The roll reproduces a player's vagaries in this way only too faithfully.

Ordinary.—There are three in this batch. Most attractive, and with plenty of scope for nice manipulation, is Moriz Rosenthal's happy 'Les Papillons' (54341), a light 'Staccato Caprice' (50468), by Max Vogrich (which, by the way, has been cut with more rubato than is necessary), and Toselli's sentimental 'Serenata' (58251). D. G.

Gramophone Notes

BY 'DISCUS'

COLUMBIA

For accuracy's sake I must correct a slip in my note on the new Columbia gramophone—the Viva-Tonal (see p. 919, October issue): the player in the pianoforte record so highly praised was not Irene Scharrer, but Percy Grainger, and the work was Chopin's B minor Sonata.

The Hallé Orchestra, conducted by Sir Hamilton Harty, is recorded in Mozart's 'Haffner' Symphony, complete (L1783-5). The finish and clarity of the playing are such as to remind us that this orchestra now seems to be in a class by itself so far as this country is concerned. Incidentally, the records demonstrate the great advance made in the elimination of surface noises. Much of the playing is little more than a whisper, yet not a detail is lost, whereas a few years ago these quiet passages would have been scratched out. The only fault I have to find with this set is that the playing is too consistently on the soft side. In a long work the result is apt to become somewhat pallid. This is a view that will not be generally taken, I admit. For many gramophonists anything above a mezzo-forte is a horrid noise, and even a fibre needle picks up too much tone. (I believe the extremists of the pianissimo brigade will not be really satisfied till somebody brings out a needle made of some such soothing and apologetic substance as soap.)

The records of Debussy's Petite Suite, played by the London Symphony Orchestra, under Sir Dan Godfrey, are a trifle disappointing. There is no definite fault, yet the music has lost something. It has somehow become prosaic (L1786-7).

The pick of the basket in this month's Columbia is Mendelssohn's C minor Trio, played by Sammons, Tertis, and Murdoch (L1755-8). The handing over of the violoncello part to a viola is justified by results, the occasional loss of string bass being more than compensated by the beauty of the more melodic passages. Playing and recording alike are first-rate. As for the work itself, one need not be a Mendelssohn enthusiast in order to enjoy its fluency, tunefulness, and certainty of touch. It is music which 'comes off' so conclusively as to make a good deal of probably better work seem almost fumbling in comparison. The Scherzo especially is a sprightly affair of a type which might almost be described as an invention and copyright of Mendelssohn's.

Brilliant violin-playing is that of Joseph Szigeti, in Hubay's 'Zephyr' and Francœur's 'Siciliano and Rigaudon' (L1788), and Beethoven's well-known Minuet in G and the curiously perverse 'Saudades de Brazil,' of Milhaud (D1527). But the 'Zephyr' is surely too suggestive of a stiff breeze at times.

The Sheffield Choir's singing of 'The heavens are telling' is excited and over-strenuous. 'Hail, bright abode' is better in every way. Sir Henry Coward conducts (9128).

The vocal records are a good level lot, and the only deficiency is a general lack of clarity in diction: Norman Allin ('Hear me, ye winds and waves' and ''Tis jolly to hunt,' from 'The May Queen,' L1790); William Martin ('Che gelida manina,' from 'La Bohème,' and 'Salut demeure,' from Gounod's 'Faust,' L1789); Dora Labbette ('My mother bids me bind my hair' and 'Who is Sylvia?' D1553); Cecil Sherwood (excerpts from 'Marta' and 'Rigoletto,' 4074); and Dennis Noble ('Passing by'—a dull song alleged to be by Purcell, but obviously by another composer of the same name—and Graham Peel's 'Ettrick,' 4073).

H.M.V.

As might be expected, 'Scheherazade' loses nothing of its vivid colour under the conducting of Eugène Goossens. Indeed, one perhaps gets a surfeit of brilliance with four sides of such garish music. However, this is a matter of taste. The orchestra is that of the Covent Garden Opera (C1287-8). The recent high level of chamber music playing is well maintained in the latest example—Dvorák's Quartet in F (the 'Nigger'), played by the Budapest Quartet (D1124-6). The players' form here strikes me as being a great improvement on that shown previously. No doubt they have here music that specially suits them, and the result is a delight.

The variability of choral recording is once more demonstrated in a couple of records of the Royal Choral Society in the B minor Mass. The Sanctus is as near a complete triumph as has been achieved in music of such complexity. Not only are the details surprisingly clear; there is much of the right feeling of bigness—a kind of multitudinous effect that lays hold of one. The vocal tone is always musical; the sopranos deserve a medal for their avoidance of shrillness, set off by a bad mark for some occasional diffidence in taking top notes. There is a capital balance between choir and orchestra (D1123). The other record is of the Gloria in Excelsis, and is less good in almost every way, though it is still far from being bad (D1127). As a pair, they show a distinct advance towards the solution of a very difficult problem. Dr. Bairstow conducted the performance at which these records were made.

The best of the vocal records appears to be that of the Love Duet from 'The Valkyrie,' sung by Gota Ljungberg and Walter Widdop, at whose hands the amorous frenzy of the climax is given full value (DB963).

An excellent musical voice is shown by Rachel Morton in the 'Habanera,' from 'Carmen,' and 'Love and music, these have I lived for,' from 'Tosca,' but characterisation is weak. The 'Habanera' suggests no Carmen (E440). Other vocal records are of Rosa Ponselle and Giovanni Martinelli, with chorus (an extract from 'Aïda,' DA809); Beniamino Gigli (a Neapolitan Serenade and a poor extract from a poor opera, 'L'Elisir d'amore,' DA797); Browning Mummery (Logan's 'Pale Moon' and Quilter's 'Now sleeps the crimson petal,' B2355); and John Brownlee ('Ich grolle nicht' and Massenet's 'Elegie,' E439).

Something of a curiosity, but one that perhaps opens up a new field, is a record of Alvin D. Keech with his banjulele banjo. Mr. Keech delivers instructions, with illustrations, and those who want to know how to vamp the three or four chords which may be made to do duty as accompaniment for a simple tune may learn from this record. One of the tunes used is the 'Keel Row,' and another is Rubinstein's Melody in F. It goes without saying that the latter has its harmonic wings drastically cut in the process, though whether the fox-trot jingle that is imposed on it may be taken as compensation depends on whether the hearer is a musician or a dancer. Mr. Keech's hustling method and trans-atlantic diction give an amusing side to this record (B2356). But if elementary instruction on the banjulele may be given thus, why not some on a musical instrument? Here is a line that is capable of development, surely.

The mid-November list gave us another example of the way the companies hit on a work simultaneously. The Columbia 'Après-midi d'un Faune' is followed by one from H.M.V. In this the players are the Albert Hall Orchestra, conducted by Sir Landon Ronald (D1128). The detail and colouring are first-rate, but the general effect is too loud and strenuous, I feel.

Better justice is done to No. 4 of 'The Planets'—'Jupiter'—conducted by Albert Coates. The straightforward tunes and bold rhythms are just the thing for the gramophone (D1129).

A really big enterprise is the issue of a set of records of Chopin's Twenty-Four Preludes, complete, played by Alfred Cortôt (DB957-960). This is Chopin at his best. Inevitably in so large a set the pianoforte has its ups and downs. Its tendency to become plunketty and banjoey is shown specially in the eerie little No. 2 in A minor. On the whole, I feel that the virtues in this set are in the music and playing rather than in the recording. Happily, both are so fine as to help us to overlook tonal shortcomings. For the benefit of readers who are unable to launch out in a purchase of the whole lot, I add that the twenty-four pieces are grouped thus: 1-6; 7-14; 15-18; 19-24.

Another fine pianoforte record is of Mark Hambourg in Chopin's G minor Ballade (C1290). The tone strikes me as being better than in the Preludes, but I do not dogmatise on the point, as instruments, surfaces, and needles vary so much. But as to the excellence of the playing, there can be little question.

The Coldstream Guards Band is recorded in a 'Yeomen of the Guard' selection (C1289); but for a rousing band record give me that of Sousa's little lot in a couple of J.P.'s own Marches—'Stars and Stripes for ever' and 'The fairest of the fair' (B2370).

VOCALION

No orchestral or chamber music records are in this month's parcel. There is, however, a first-rate pianoforte record—York Bowen in Schumann's 'Carnival in Vienna' (K05269). Mr. Bowen's playing is admirably clear and dexterous, and the tone-reproduction is unusually good.

The Life Guards Band provides stirring moments with a string of famous regimental marches (K05273).

There is a not very convincing choral record—a massed choir singing in Æolian Hall, with organ accompaniment, the 'Recessional,' set to Dykes's 'Melita,' and 'Jerusalem.' The latter is sung in harmony, with the first part treated solo-wise by baritone and soprano—not an improvement, I think. 'Jerusalem' is a tune for a big crowd in unison. There are fine voices in this choir, especially among the basses. The organ part comes through only moderately well (K05265).

Olga Haley's singing of 'Dido's Lament' and Easthope Martin's 'The Holy Child' is not quite so good as her performance of the Schubert songs noticed last month. Her steady, pure tone is delightful, but the result here is rather colourless, apparently through a want of clearness in diction. Consonants and vowel shapes—what factors they are in giving variety and colour! (K05268).

No need to say what Frank Titterton and Malcolm McEachern make of such duets as 'The Larboard Watch' and 'Excelsior'—the latter as unintentionally amusing as ever in its platitudinous pointing of the moral. Yet if you doubt the existence of a large public ready to take it as a profound piece of poetry and music, try it (with two good voices) on an average audience (K05267).

THE ORGAN AND THE GRAMOPHONE

The recording companies are taking up the organ with a will, and, judging from their announcements, and from some reviews, they would seem to have conquered that awkward instrument. But I doubt if the results as a whole will satisfy any gramophonists who are really familiar with the instrument, and who apply to its records the same critical test as is given to the reproduction of other instrumental music. Only occasionally do we get the real thing, and this mere approximation will continue till the problem of the pedals has been solved. The vagueness, and sometimes complete absence, of the bass of the harmony is fatal, as are also the presence of all sorts of harmonics in connection with the upper parts. Here are particulars of records issued during the past month: G. D. Cunningham, on the Kingsway Hall organ, Bach's Toccata and Fugue in D minor (H.M.V., C1291); Arthur Meale, at Central Hall, Westminster, his own 'Twilight Melody' and 'Marche Festive' (H.M.V., B2363); Edgar Smith, on the Æolian Hall organ, a series of Christmas Hymns (Voc., X9903); W. G. Webber, at Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road, Bach's Fantasia in G minor—mislabelled 'The Great C minor'—and the Toccata in C, with the pedal solo mercifully 'cut' (Col., 9133); J. Edgar Humphreys, at St. Mary-le-Bow, Schubert's 'Litany' and the Duetto from the 'Songs without Words' (Col., 9134); Arthur Meale, at Central Hall, Schubert's 'Marche Militaire' and Lemare's Andantino (H.M.V., B2353); G. T. Pattman, at the Liberal Jewish Synagogue, 'In a Monastery Garden' (with bell) and (again!) Lemare's Andantino, here sanctified by being called 'Song of the Soul' (Col., 9135); G. T. Pattman, at the Synagogue aforesaid, Bach's D minor Toccata and Fugue (Col., 9136); and Reginald Foort, at the New Gallery Kinema, 'In a Monastery Garden' (with two bells), and 'In a Persian Market' (H.M.V., C1285). The playing generally is first-rate, but the recording very streaky. In some examples it does so little justice to instrument and performer that it seems a pity the companies are not content to experiment a good deal more before issuing organ records. In any case, I believe most organ enthusiasts will agree with me in hoping that a more critical attitude will be adopted by those responsible for the issue of organ records. There will be a very considerable public for organ music via the gramophone—if it is not choked off at the start by poor recording and indifferent music, and by the insistence on a mere handful of works, good and bad.

Church and Organ Music

ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS

DISTRIBUTION OF DIPLOMAS

Members and friends are cordially invited to attend the distribution of diplomas to successful candidates on Saturday, January 22, 1927, at 3 p.m. The president, Dr. W. G. Alcock, will deliver an address, after which Dr. W. H. Harris, organist of New College, Oxford, will play upon the College organ pieces selected for the July Examination, 1927. There will be an informal conversazione after the recital, to which members and friends are invited.

LECTURE

Under the auspices of the College a lecture entitled 'Organ Music in the Cinema' will be given by Mr. Reginald Foort, on Saturday, December 11, at 11 a.m., at the New Gallery Cinema, 123, Regent Street (by kind permission of the managing director). Illustrations upon the Wurlitzer-Hope-Jones organ and also by films. Mr. Cart de Lafontaine will preside. Admission free, no tickets required.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Secretary.

UNIVERSITY OF GLASGOW

A series of monthly organ recitals has been arranged (Saturdays at 3), the players including Sir Ivor Atkins, Dr. W. G. Alcock, Mr. Henry Goss Custard, Dr. Henry Ley, and Mr. A. M. Henderson. Dr. Ley gave the opening recital on November 6, with a programme that included Bach's Passacaglia and Fugue, Franck's Choral in A minor, Handel's G minor Concerto, Howell's D flat Rhapsody, Charles Wood's Prelude on 'St. Mary,' &c. At each recital a choir drawn from Westbourne Church and the University Chapel will sing a cappella works. (By the by, we are sorry to see one of the players described on the prospectus as 'The Prince of English Organists.' This kind of label should be left to vocal and cinema 'stars.')

THE ROTUNDA

The third issue of the Rotunda (Messrs. Henry Willis, Brixton) maintains its high standard of interest and artistic production. Henry Willis writes on the removal and re-erection of the St. Paul's Cathedral organ; Lynnwood Farnam makes interesting suggestions on the equipment of the modern console; there is an account of the Liverpool Cathedral organ, by Harry Goss Custard; Stanley Marchant gives good advice concerning the use of organ with orchestra; Harvey Grace continues his discussion of 'Modern English Organ Music'; and there are other articles covering a wide field. The illustrations are numerous and admirably reproduced.

SOUTHWARK CATHEDRAL

Excellent performances of Brahms's 'Requiem' and Elgar's 'For the Fallen' were given at the monthly musical service on November 6. On December 18 the programme will consist of Benjamin Dale's 'Before the Paling of the Stars,' Armstrong Gibbs's 'Before Dawn,' Vaughan Williams's Fantasia on Christmas Carols, and Handel's G minor Organ Concerto. The London Symphony Orchestra will play. A new feature is a weekly organ recital—Mondays, one till two.

ST. ANNE'S, SOHO

A Musical Festival will be held on December 11 and 18, the programme on the former date being devoted to Handel (choruses from the Dettingen Te Deum, 'Samson,' and 'Israel in Egypt,' the twelfth Chandos Anthem, and organ solos). On December 18 a Samuel Sebastian Wesley scheme is promised (Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in E, 'The Wilderness,' five other anthems, and organ solos). Mr. Albert Orton will play and conduct.

WHERE WILL IT END?

Hardly have folk finished acclaiming the Liverpool Cathedral organ as 'the largest in the world' when news comes of a monster being built by Messrs. G. F. Steinmayer, of Oettingen and Nuremberg, for the Cathedral at Passau, Bavaria. This will have five manuals and two hundred stops. How long will this remain 'the largest'?

NONCONFORMIST CHOIR UNION: CHANGE OF TITLE

At the thirty-eighth annual general meeting, on October 27, it was decided unanimously that this organization should henceforth be known as 'The Free Church Choir Union.'

The third Festival Service and eighteenth Festival of the Liverpool Church Choir Association was held in Liverpool Cathedral on November 4. The singers numbered three hundred and fifty, drawn from twenty Church choirs, including the Cathedral. The chief choral items were: Introit, 'O Lord, the Maker of all thing' (Mundy); Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in C (Attwood); anthem, 'The Wilderness' (S. S. Wesley), of which a memorably fine performance was given; and the festival chorus, 'All people that on earth do dwell' (Bach-Ravenscroft-Holst), which gave special opportunity for the mighty organ to be heard, masterfully played by Mr. H. Goss Custard. The Precentor was the Rev. H. Dams, Vicar of Knowsley, and the conductor was Mr. Branscombe. The sermon was preached by Canon Head, Sub-Dean, and there was an immense congregation.

On October 23, a choir of five hundred, composed of members of the Diocesan Church-Music Society in and near Manchester, took part in an impressive service at Manchester Cathedral, singing works by Bach, Cornelius, Dowland, and Stanford. Mr. Norman Cocker was at the organ, and Dr. A. W. Wilson conducted. There was a small congregation—one of several signs that the cause of Church music is poorly supported in this district.

From an essay by an eleven-year-old Streatham boy:

'There are three kinds of clergymen, bishups, recters, and curats, the bishups tell the recters to work, and the curats have to do it. The curat is a thin married man, but when he is a recter he gets fuller and can preach longer sermons and becums a good man.'

A new three-manual organ, built by Messrs. Brindley, has been opened at St. Ambrose's, Westbourne, Bournemouth, by Mr. Ralph T. Morgan, his programme including the Fugue from Rheinberger's 'Pastoral' Sonata, Stanford's Intermezzo on the 'Londonderry Air,' Bach's D minor Toccata, Harvey Grace's Rhapsody, Widor's Toccata, &c.

Messrs. Driver & Haigh, of Bradford, have rebuilt the organ at Horton Lane Congregational Church, Bradford, and the instrument is now a three-manual of forty-one stops. Mr. G. D. Cunningham gave the opening recital, playing Bach's Prelude and Fugue in D, Lemare's Fantasia on 'Hanover,' Gigout's Scherzo, the Reubke Fugue, &c.

Mr. H. V. Spanner will give a recital at the National Institute for the Blind, 224, Great Portland Street, W., on December 1, at 3, when his programme will be made up from the pieces set for the R.C.O. examinations. The fact of the organ being a replica of that at the College makes the recital of special interest to students.

The organ at St. Benedict's, Glastonbury, was re-opened on November 3, when Mr. C. H. Trevor gave a recital, playing Bach's Prelude in B minor, Stanley's Introduction and Allegro in G, Dupont's Meditation, three pieces by Purcell, &c.

A well-varied Bach recital was given at St. Ninian's, Glasgow, on October 15, organ and pianoforte solos being played by Mr. J. D. Macrae, arias from the cantatas sung by Miss Anne Ballantine, and violin solos given by Miss Clara Brost.

Dr. Caradog Roberts gave the opening recital on the new organ at City Road Wesleyan Methodist Church, Chester, on October 27. Recitals were also given by Mr. Herbert F. Ellingford.

Mr. E. T. Cook gave a recital at All Saints', Hertford, on the occasion of the re-opening of the organ. His programme included Franck's Prelude, Fugue, and Variation, Blow's Toccata, and the 'St. Anne' Prelude and Fugue.

On November 10, at St. John's Church, High Wycombe, a Festival of village choirs was held, conducted by Mr. Noel Ponsonby. An address on Church music ideas was given by the Rev. Maurice Bell.

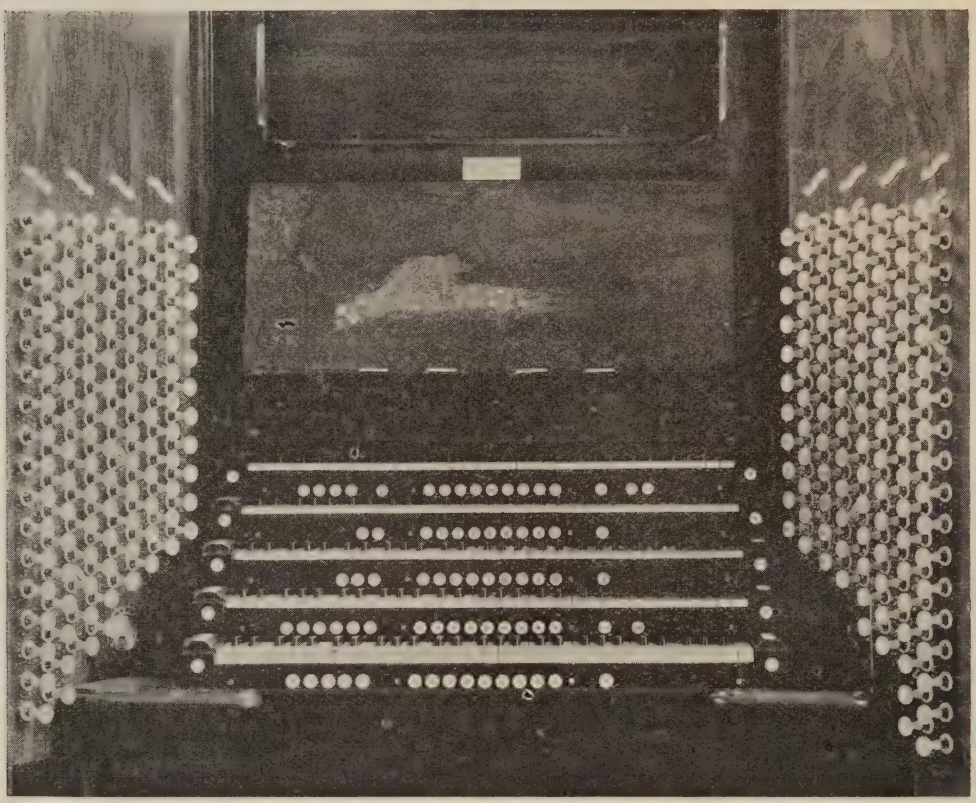
Parts 1 and 2 of the 'Christmas' Oratorio will be sung at Church End Congregational Church, Finchley, on Sunday, December 19, at 6.30.

A new organ of three manuals and thirty-three speaking stops has just been built by Messrs. Henry Willis, for St. John's, Sidcup.

Bach's Magnificat was performed by the choir and orchestra of All Saints', Clifton, Bristol, on November 5.

LIVERPOOL CATHEDRAL

SPECIFICATION OF THE 'WILLIS' ORGAN



THE CONSOLE

The instrument consists of 5 manuals, CC to C, 61 notes, and a 'Willis' pedal board, CCC to G, 32 notes. There are 168 speaking stops, and 49 couplers, &c., together with 5 spares, making a total of 222 drawstop knobs.

Pedal Organ—35 Stops (partially enclosed).

			Wind press. ft.	inch
1	Resultant Bass (20 from No. 2)	w	64	10
2	Double Open Bass (20 from 6)	w	32	10
3	Double Open Diap. (20 from 9)	m	32	10
4	Contra Violone (from 59 Gt.)	m	32	6
5	Double Quint (20 from 15)	stp. w	21⅓	6
6	Open Bass No. 1	w	16	10
7	Open Bass No. 2	w	16	6
8	Tibia (from 61 Gt.)	w	16	5
9	Open Diapason	m	16	6
10	Contra Basso	m	16	10
11*	Geigen	m	16	6
12*	Violon	m	16	6
13	Dolce	m	16	6
14	Bourdon	stp. w	16	6
15	Quint	stp. w	10⅔	6
16	Octave (20 from 6)	w	8	10
17	Principal (20 from 9)	m	8	10
18*	Violoncello	m	8	6
19	Stopped Flute (20 from 14)	stp. w	8	6
20*	Open Flute	w	8	6
21	Twelfth (20 from 15)	stp. w	5⅓	6
22	Fifteenth (20 from 9 and 17)	m	4	10
23*	Flûte Triangulaire	w	4	16
24	Mixture 17, 19, 22	m	3 rks	6
25	Fourniture 15, 19, 22, 26, 29	m	5 rks	6
26*	Fagotto	m	16	6
27*	Octave Bassoon	m	8	6
28*	Contra Trombone	m	32	20
29*	Trombone	m	16	20
30	Ophicleide	m	16	20
31	Clarion	m	8	20
32	Contra Bombarde (20 from 33)	m	32	30
33	Bombarde	m	16	30
34	Bombarde (20 from 33)	m	8	30
35	Bombarde (20 from 34)	m	4	30

Stops Nos. 11, 12, 18, 20, 23, 26, 27, 28, 29 (marked *) are enclosed in a separate swell-box.

Choir Organ—23 Stops (partially enclosed).

	Unenclosed Section				Enclosed Section
36	Contra Dulciana	m	16	4	43 Contra Viola	m	16	4
37	Open Diapason	m	8	4	44 Violin Diapason	m	8	4
38	Rohr Flöte	stp. m	8	4	45 Viola	m	8	4
39	Dulciana	m	8	4	46 Claribel Flute	w	8	4
40	Flûte Ouverte	m	4	4	47 Unda Maris (FF)	w	8	4
41	Dulcet	m	4	4	48 Octave Viola	m	4	4
42	Dulcina	m	2	4	49 Suabe Flöte	w	4	4
					50 Lieblich Piccolo	stp. m	2

			Wind press. ft.	inch
51	Dulciana Mixture 10, 12, 17, 19, 22	m	5 rks	4
52	Bass Clarinet	m	16	4
53	Baryton	m	16	4
54	Corno di bassetto	m	8	4
55	Cor Anglais	m	8	4
56	Vox Humana	m	8	4
57	Trumpet } harmonic	m	8	7
58	Clarion } harmonic	m	4	7

Great Organ—29 Stops.

59	Contra Violone	m	32	6
60	Double Open Diapason	m	16	10
61	Contra Tibia	w	16	5
62	Bourdon	stp. w	16	5
63	Double Quint	stp. w	10⅔	5
64	Open Diapason No. 1	m	8	10
65	Open Diapason No. 2	m	8	10
66	Open Diapason No. 3	m	8	5
67	Open Diapason No. 4	m	8	5
68	Open Diapason No. 5	m	8	5
69	Tibia	w	8	5
70	Doppel Flöte	w	8	5
71	Stopped Diapason	stp. w	8	5
72	Quint	m	5⅓	5
73	Octave No. 1	m	4	10
74	Octave No. 2	m	4	5
75	Principal	m	4	5
76	Flûte Harmonique	m	4	5
77	Flûte Couverte	stp. w	4	5
78	Tenth	m	3	5
79	Twelfth	m	2⅔	5
80	Super Octave	m	2	10
81	Fifteenth	m	2	5
82	Mixture 12, 17, 19, 21, 22	m	5 rks	5
83	Fourniture 19, 22, 24, 26, 29	m	5 rks	5
84	Double Trumpet (Harm. trebs.)	m	16	15
85	Trompette Harmonique	m	8	15
86	Trumpet } harmonic	m	8	15
87	Clarion } trebles	m	4	15

SWELL ORGAN—31 Stops.

		Wind press. ft.	inch.
88	Contra Geigen ... ... m	16	5
89	Contra Salicional ... ... m	16	5
90	Lieblich Bordun stp. w & m	16	5
91	Open Diapason ... ... m	8	5
92	Geigen ... ... m	8	5
93	Tibia ... ... w	8	7
94	Flauto Traverso (harmonic) m	8	5
95	Wald Flöte ... ... w	8	5
96	Lieblich Gedackt ... stp. m	8	5
97	Echo Viola ... ... m	8	5
98	Salicional ... ... m	8	5
99	Vox Angelica ... ... (FF) m	8	5
100	Octave ... ... m	4	5
101	Octave Geigen ... ... m	4	5
102	Salicet ... ... m	4	5
103	Lieblich Flöte ... ... stp. m	4	5
104	Nazard ... ... stp. m	2⅔	5
105	Fifteenth ... ... m	2	5
106	Seventeenth ... ... stp. m	1⅗	5
107	Sesquialtera 10, 12, 17, 19, 22 m	5 rks	5
108	Mixture 15, 19, 22, 26, 29 ... m	5 rks	5
109	Contra Hautboy ... ... m	16	7
110	Hautboy ... ... m	8	7
111	Krummhorn ... ... m	8	7
112	Waldhorn ... ... m	16	10
113	Cornopean } harmonic ... m	8	10
114	Clarion } ... ... m	4	10
115	Double Trumpet (harm. trebs.) ... ... m	16	15
116	Trompette Harmonique ... m	8	15
117	Trumpet } harm. ... m	8	15
118	Octave trump. } trebs. ... m	4	15

SOLO ORGAN—22 stops and 1 Coupler (partially enclosed).

UNENCLOSED SECTION

119	Contra Hohl Flöte ... ... w	16		10
120	Hohl Flöte ... ... w	8		13
121	Octave Hohl Flöte ... ... w	4		10

ENCLOSED SECTION

122	Contra Viole ... ... (tin) m	16		10
123	Viole-de-Gambe ... (tin) m	8		10
124	Viole d'Orchestre ... (tin) m	8		10
125	Violes Célestes (tin), (FF) m	8		10
126	Flûte Harmonique ... ... m	8		10
127	Octave Viole ... ... (tin) m	4		10
128	Concert Flute (harmonic) ... m	4		10
129	Violette ... ... (tin) m	2		10
130	Piccolo Harmonique ... m	2		10
131	Cornet de Violes (tin) 10, 12, 15 ... ... m	3 rks		10
132	Cor Anglais ... ... m	16		10
133	Clarinet (orchestral) ... m	8		10
134	Oboe (orchestral) ... ... m	8		10
135	Bassoon (orchestral) ... m	8		10
136	French Horn ... ... m	8		10
137	Contra Tromba } harmonic ... m	16		20
138	Tromba Réal } harmonic ... m	8		20
139	Tromba } harmonic ... m	8		20
140	Tromba Clarion } harmonic ... m	4		20
141	Solo Trombas on Great

BOMBARDE ORGAN—5 Stops and one Coupler (unenclosed).

142	Grand Chorus: Sub-unison: unison 5, 8, 12, 15, 19, 22, 26, 29 ... ... m	10 rks		10
143	Contra Tuba } harmonic ... m	16		30
144	Tuba } harmonic ... m	8		30
145	Tuba Clarion } harmonic ... m	4		30
146	Tuba Magna } harmonic ... m	8		50
147	Grand Chorus on Great

Played from the fifth keyboard, the action being controlled by drawstop knob 'Bombarde on.'

ECHO ORGAN—4 Pedal and 19 Manual Stops (enclosed).

ECHO PEDAL

148	Salicional ... ... w	16		3½
149	Echo Bass ... ... stp. w	16		3½
150	Fugara ... ... m	8		3½
151	Dulzian (reed) ... ... m	16		7

ECHO MANUAL

152	Quintaton ... ... stp. m	16		3½
153	Echo Diapason ... ... m	8		3½
154	Cor-de-Nuit ... ... stp. m	8		3½
155	Carillon (gongs. Tenor C) ... m	8
156	Flauto Amabile ... ... m	8		3½
157	Muted Viole ... ... m	8		3½
158	Æoline Celeste (FF) ... m	8		3½
159	Célestina ... ... w	4		3½
160	Fern Flöte ... ... stp. m	4		3½
161	Rohr Nasat ... ... stp. m	2⅔		3½
162	Flautina ... ... m	2		3½
163	Harmonica Ætheria, 10, 12, 15 ... ... m	3 rks		3½
164	Chalumeau ... ... m	16		7
165	Trompette ... ... m	8		7
166	Cor Harmonique ... ... m	8		7
167	Musette ... ... m	8		3½
168	Hautbois d'Amour ... ... m	8		3½
169	Voix Humaine ... ... m	8		3½
170	Hautbois Octaviante ... m	4		3½

Manual stops played from fifth Keyboard, the action being controlled by drawstop knob 'Echo on.'

COUPLERS, ETC.

171	Choir to Pedal	188	Echo to Solo	205	Echo 'on'
172	Great to Pedal	189	Choir octave	206	Bombarde 'on'
173	Swell to Pedal	190	Choir unison off	207	Tremulant to Choir
174	Solo to Pedal	191	Choir sub-octave	208	Tremulant to Swell (5-in. wind)
175	Solo, tenor solo to Pedal	192	Swell octave	209	Tremulant to Swell (7-in. wind) (wood-wind)
176	Bombarde and Echo to Pedal	193	Swell unison off	210	Tremulant to Solo
177	Swell to Choir	194	Swell sub-octave	211	Tremulant to Echo
178	Solo to Choir	195	Solo octave	212	Great adjustable piston lock
179	Echo to Choir	196	Solo unison off	213	Swell adjustable piston lock
180	Bombade to Choir	197	Solo sub-octave	214	Choir adjustable piston lock
181	Choir to Great	198	Echo octave	215	Solo adustable piston lock
182	Swell to Great	199	Echo unison off	216	Echo adjustable piston lock
183	Solo to Great	200	Echo sub-octave	217	Pedal adjustable piston lock
184	Bombarde to Great	201	Great pistons to Pedal pistons		Five spare knobs.
185	Echo to Great	202	Pedal box on Swell pedal
186	Solo to Swell	203	Pedal box on Solo pedal
187	Echo to Swell	204	Pedal box on Choir pedal

ACCESSORIES: MANUAL

GREAT (in key slip).

9 pistons to Great organ (adjustable at switchboard).
1 adjustable piston (with locking knob).
*6 reversible pistons to Great to Pedal, Swell to Great, Choir to Great, Solo to Great, Bombarde to Great, and solo trombas on Great.

SWELL (in key slip).

9 pistons to Swell organ (adjustable at switchboard).
1 adjustable piston (with locking knob).
3 reversible pistons to Swell to Pedal, Echo to Swell, Solo to Swell.

CHOIR (in key slip).

9 pistons to Choir organ (adjustable at switchboard).
1 adjustable piston (with locking knob).
5 reversible pistons to Choir to Pedal, Bombarde to Choir, Echo to Choir, Solo to Choir, and Swell to Choir.

SOLO (in key slip).

9 pistons to Solo organ (adjustable at switchboard).
1 adjustable piston (with locking knob).
2 reversible pistons to Solo to Pedal and Echo to Solo.

BOMBARDE AND ECHO (in key slip).

4 pistons to Bombarde organ.

9 pistons to Echo organ (adjustable at switchboard).
1 adjustable piston to Echo (with locking knob).
1 reversible piston to Bombarde and Echo to Pedal.
9 pistons (three each in tops of Choir, Great, and Swell bass key-frames, giving Great and Pedal combinations, 1 to 9. These pistons are duplicated in the treble frames).
5 adjustable pistons in fronts of treble key-frames (and duplicated also in the bass key-frames), giving special combinations on manuals, pedals, and couplers.

ACCESSORIES: PEDAL

2 pedal pistons to Pedal organ (adjustable at switchboard).
1 adjustable piston (with locking knob).
† 10 pedal pistons duplicating Swell pistons.
3 reversible pedals, duplicating reversible pistons, Great to Pedal, Bombarde to Pedal, and Bombarde to Great.

4 reversible pedals to Solo, Swell, Choir, and Echo tremulants.
1 reversible pedal to Great and Pedal combinations coupled.
2 pedals (crescendo and decrescendo respectively), actuating Great and Pedal organs simultaneously.

Balanced crescendo Pedals to Swell, Solo, Echo, and Pedal boxes.

ANALYSIS OF CONTENTS.

	Speaking Stops.	Pipes.
Pedal organ	35	996
Choir organ	23	1,642
Great organ	29	2,257
Swell organ	31	2,374
Solo organ	22	1,459
Bombarde organ ...	5	854
Echo organ	23	1,343

Total: Speaking Stops, 168; Pipes, 10,925.

Couplers, &c., 49. Gongs 49. Spares 5. Total number drawstop knobs, 222.

* These Great pistons also control the four Solo trombas together with the coupler Solo trombas on Great and also the Bombarde grand chorus and the coupler grand chorus on Great.

† These Pedal pistons in addition to duplicating the Swell pistons actuate suitable Pedal combinations which are separately adjustable at a special switchboard and entirely independent of the normal Pedal combinations.

RECITALS

Dr. C. H. Moody, Bolton Abbey—Sonata No. 1, Mendelssohn; Gavotte Nuptiale, Lemare; Pastorale, Bossi; Canzona, Rheinberger.

Mr. Allanson Brown, Alnwick Parish Church—Légende, Dvorák; Good Friday Music, 'Parsifal'; Allegro (Sonata No. 1), Bach; Marche Pontificale, Widor.

Mr. Hedley Staniland, St. Stephen's Walbrook—Postlude in D minor, Stanford; Prelude and Fugue in C, Bach; Intermezzo (Sonata No. 8), Rheinberger; Evening Song, Bairstow.

Mr. W. A. Roberts, St. James's, Clacton-on-Sea—Air and Variations, Smart; Preludes on 'From heaven above to earth I come,' Pachelbel and Bach; Festival Postlude on 'Leoni,' Roberts; Fantasia on March Themes, Edward German.

Mr. Eric Brough, St. Mary-le-Bow—Prelude in F minor and Prelude and Fugue in A minor, Bach; Prelude on a Theme of Tallis, Darke; Final in B flat, Franck.

Mr. Allan Brown, Central Hall, Southampton—Introduction and Fugue, Reubke; Overture, 'The Mastersingers'; Pastorale in E, Franck; Toccata in F, Bach.

Mr. Arthur R. Saunders, St. Stephen's Walbrook—Prelude and Fugue in A minor, Bach; 'Il Sposalizio,' Liszt; Scherzo in C minor, Guilmant; Festival Toccata, Fletcher.

Mr. Geoffrey N. Leeds, Windsor Parish Church—Allegro Marziale, Frank Bridge; Overture, 'Athalia'; Toccata and Fugue in F, Bach; Slow movement (String Quartet), Debussy; Villanella, Ireland.

Mr. C. H. Collins, St. Hilda's, Whitby—Fantaisie in F, Saint-Saëns; Sonata No. 4, Mendelssohn; Sonata in C sharp minor, Harwood; March, 'Ariane,' Guilmant.

Mr. Arthur Jellicoe, Holy Trinity, Llandudno—Prelude on Darwell's 148th, Darke; Sonata Pascale, Lemmens; Dithyramb, Harwood.

Mr. J. Eric Hunt, St. Lawrence Jewry—Prelude in E flat and Fantasia and Fugue in C minor, Bach; Allegretto in E flat, Wolstenholme; Alla marcia, Ireland.

Mr. A. J. Sainsbury, Lausanne Cathedral—Prelude in D, Bach; Offrande Musicale No. 1, de Maleingreau; 'St. Francis preaching to the Birds,' Liszt; Grand Chœur in C, Franck.

Mr. Philip Miles, All Saints', Eastbourne—Verse, Christopher Gibbons; Chaconne, Purcell; Presto (Sonata in G), Elgar; Minuet (Sonata in F), Stanford; Dithyramb, Harwood.

Mr. H. Moreton, Plymouth Guildhall—'West Wind' and 'East Wind,' Rowley; Carillon, Mansfield; 'Harmonies du Soir,' Karg-Elert; Finale (Symphony No. 1), Vierne; Caprice, Wolstenholme; Introduction and Variations on a Theme of Beethoven, Merkel.

Mr. Arthur Hayden, All Saints', Oxford Road, Manchester—Prelude and Fugue in E minor, Bach; Suite in E minor, Borowski; Trumpet Tune and Air, Purcell; Grand Chœur in D, Guilmant.

Mr. Godfrey Sceats, Christ Church, Isle-of-Dogs—Preludes on Welsh Hymn-Tunes, Vaughan Williams; Pastoral in C, and Sketches in G minor and G major, Wolstenholme; Symphonic Choral No. 2, Karg-Elert.

Dr. Harold Darke, Central Hall, Westminster—Prelude and Fugue in D, Bach; Fantasia in F minor and major, Mozart; Rhapsody, Darke; Scherzo, Grace; Prière, Jongen.

Mr. H. Cyril Robinson, St. John's, Barmouth—Three Miniatures, Pullein; Scherzo (Symphony in C minor), Holloway; Toccata Prelude on 'Pange Lingua,' Bairstow; Dithyramb, Harwood; Preludes by Bach, Parry, Farrar, and Vaughan Williams.

APPOINTMENTS

Mr. R. M. Brunker, choirmaster and organist, St. Bartholomew's, Battersea.

Mr. Maurice B. Coplestone, choirmaster and organist, Barbican Congregational Church, New North Road, N.1.

Mr. Cyril Winn, choirmaster and organist, West Norwood Parish Church.

Mr. Edward G. Yeo, choirmaster and organist, Christ Church, Westminster.

Letters to the Editor

'PEDANTRY IN EXAMINATIONS

Sir,—My gratitude to you for publishing Mr. Julius Harrison's article in your November issue, must be my excuse for writing further upon the same subject. I agree heartily with Mr. Harrison. At a certain Northern University, the counterpoint papers in particular have for some years past been a perfect study in musical archæology. At the moment there are faint signs of a broader outlook, due, no doubt, to the new regulations now in force at the R.C.O. and at Oxford University, which are bound to have a beneficent influence.

Some time ago you appeared rather to snub a correspondent who asked your advice with regard to a libretto for a Mus. Bac. Exercise. May I say that my sympathies are entirely with the candidate? It is extremely difficult to find good words which will arrest the attention of the examiners.

One is advised to leave the Psalms alone: they have been 'set' ad nauseam, and so have all the standard lyrical and other poems. Repetition of words beyond a certain point is inadvisable, so many fine modern poems (Bridge's Sonnets and Newbolt's works) prove too short for the requirements. What are we to do?

Holst and Vaughan Williams must do a tremendous amount of 'digging' to get hold of their fine libretti. I wonder if Holst's 'Two Psalms' would pass the degree examiners, or if they would be marked 'insufficient,' and yet, what could be finer than these? Or, say, Parry's 'Songs of Farewell'? But how many Universities would consider them seriously?

If your correspondent will communicate with me I can let him have one or two suggestions for Mus. Bac. Exercise which he may find useful or suggestive.

And dare I ask you to allow readers to suggest works which are not hackneyed, and which might be suitable for Mus. Doc. Exercises? I have even heard of good compositions being turned down at the Universities on the ground of 'unsatisfactory libretto'!

Sneering at degrees and the sound diplomas (R.C.O., R.C.M., R.A.M., &c.) is very undesirable, to say the least. A man who holds a reputable degree shows that he has been through the mill, has studied earnestly and seriously, and has not been ashamed or afraid to submit to the judgment of duly qualified musicians of standing. Earnest and serious study never impairs a man's talent, if it be along the right lines, and it is the duty of the powers-that-be to see that the lines are right, and that students are not misled.—Yours, &c.,

133, Ware Road,
Hertford, Herts. William J. Comley.

Sir,—Mr. Julius Harrison is hardly fair to University examiners. His article in your November issue reveals an attitude towards musical degrees which is not justified by the facts. His statement, 'Reduce your musicianship and stick rigidly to the dry-as-dust formulæ of your art, and we may pass you, say the old pundits,' is quite misleading. The truth is that any candidate who did this would most certainly fail. Exercises nowadays must show musicianship of a very high order. Further, if the composer of the failed Exercise in question really 'stultified his imagination in order to write his Exercise down' to a certain level, as Mr. Harrison tells us he did, he simply asked for failure. Examiners to-day expect an Exercise to show imaginative qualities, in addition to the observance of technical rules.

It was my privilege to coach one of the two candidates who passed the Final Mus. Doc. this year at Durham; and no one who saw his Exercise (also accepted this year) could say it lacked either imagination or those better features of modern music upon which Mr. Harrison and I are in complete agreement. But this candidate had learned to discipline his imagination, which is a different thing from 'stultifying' it.

The quotations given by Mr. Harrison are reasonable enough, as music, excepting the one by Dr. John Blow, which is vile; but are these the worst to be found in the failed Exercise? Mr. Harrison admits there are at least a score more. And what of the general construction of the Exercise, admittedly 'written down' by a 'stultified imagination'?

His plea for the justification of consecutive fifths and false relations because Bach very rarely wrote them is rather beside the point. It raises an issue which can only be decided by a round table conference between University professors, musical graduates, and composers of repute like Mr. Harrison.

The real point is that the ploughed candidate must have known these things would be blue-pencilled, if he was properly advised by his coach. If he took the risk, and 'stultified his imagination' in the larger issues involved, he ought not to blame those who decided that such things were not worthy the distinction of a musical degree.—Yours, &c.,

FREDERIC H. WOOD.

252, Hornby Road,
Blackpool.

MUSIC AND TEARS

SIR,—With reference to the recent articles, &c., as to the tear-producing effect of certain passages in music, I wonder if any of your readers have been moved to tears over the wireless. It was a near thing with me one Saturday afternoon last summer when the Charter Day celebration at Bridgwater, in Somerset, was being broadcast. The particular item which affected me was the singing of Parry's setting of 'Jerusalem' by a choir of children.

I do not know why this should have occurred, as I have never been within fifty miles of the town, so that there is no question of 'home-town' sentiment.

Although as susceptible to its power as the average man, I have never been actually brought into a lachrymose condition by music; but if anything could move me, I think it would be the chorale in the 'Christmas' Oratorio, sung by soprano voices only (not as a solo), to the words 'To us from Heaven He cometh poor.' For sheer ethereal beauty and 'other-worldliness' I do not know anything else in music to equal it.—Yours, &c.,

J. S.

A PIANOPHONE

SIR,—Referring to a note by 'Feste' in the October issue concerning the lack of sostenuto in the pianoforte, may I suggest that this might perhaps be remedied by adding to the same a set of organ-pipes voiced to match the tone of the strings.

The tone from these pipes would coalesce with that of the strings, from which it would be indistinguishable.

Such an instrument would possess the inestimable advantage of yielding digital expression and sostenuto.

With electric action the touch of the pianoforte would not be appreciably affected. When required the pipes could quickly be tuned to the pianoforte.

What would organists not give for a good pedal pianophone of 16-ft. and 8-ft. pitch?—Yours, &c.,

THOMAS ELLISTON.

Siam House, Sudbury, Suffolk.

COLOUR MUSIC

SIR,—Apropos of the article on this subject in the November issue of the Musical Times, it is strange that Mr. Badger did not look up 'Fétis' under 'Castel et Rameau,' where he would have found an account of the true inventor of the instrument he describes. Needless to say, it is not accurate to write that 'about the year 1815 a Frenchman, named Castel, constructed an instrument for the performance of music in terms of colour.' The actual inventor was Father Louis Bertrand Castel, S.J., a distinguished French Jesuit, born at Montpellier on November 11, 1688, and who died at Paris on January 11, 1757. He elaborated the idea set forth by Sir Isaac Newton, and constructed a 'clavecin oculaire' or luminous harpsichord, which he described in the Mercure de France in 1725—over two hundred years ago. This colour music scheme attracted the attention of musicologists, and, in 1735 it was improved on by the Jesuit inventor. Four years later, Telemann published a German translation of Castel's invention (1739). Castel may be said to have discovered Rameau. The interested reader can profitably consult a French work, 'Esprit, saillies, et singularités de P. Castel,' published in 1763, though it is well known that Voltaire called the inventor 'the Don Quixote of mathematics.' However, he paved the way for Rimington and Scriabin.—Yours, &c.,

W. H. GRATTAN FLOOD.

'INEXPENSIVE' AND OTHER COUNTERFEITS

Sir,—Isn't 'Ariel' in last month's 'Wireless Notes' a trifle peevish in his reference to the recent 'whole hour of A. W. Ketèlbey' (including the '!')? Are not all so-called Oriental pieces written by westerners bound to be more or less pseudo-Oriental? Isn't the Orientalism of Rimsky-Korsakov in 'Scheherazade,' or Beethoven in the 'Turkish March,' or Verdi in 'Aïda,' equally as pseudo as the Orientalism in the 'Persian Market'? If 'Ariel' says it is not, perhaps he will tell me why.

'Ariel' may, or may not, be interested to learn that the Orientalism of the 'Persian Market' is perhaps not quite so pseudo as he would have your readers believe, if I may rely upon the evidence of my own ears when I was recently in the East (or very near it), and also upon the evidence of a native gentleman who, having heard the 'Persian Market' played, told the conductor afterwards that the 'Beggars' Theme' was an actual Eastern melody. This is as may be; but I presume a native ought to know, and even if untrue it evidently sounded genuine enough to satisfy him!

While we are on 'pseudo' characteristics, what is the difference between my pseudo-Orientalism and the pseudo-modalism of Vaughan Williams? If one is 'inexpensive' (neat word!) because it is pseudo, so must the other be also!—Yours, &c.,

ALBERT W. KETÈLBEY.

15, Lindfield Gardens,
Hampstead, N.W.3.

['ARIEL' writes: 'The use of a genuine Oriental theme does not insure a composer against a charge of pseudo-Orientalism. The deciding factor is not the theme, but the composer's use of it. The test is in the hearing, and I can only say that my epithet was used as a result of the impression made on me by several performances of the music. Mr. Ketèlbey's closing paragraph opens up a question that would require an article for its discussion. Perhaps even then we should be unable to account for the fact that the adoption of mediæval idiom by Vaughan Williams's pupils leads to "psuedo" results, whereas, in his Mass in G minor it is productive of one of the most beautiful of choral works. Perhaps the explanation lies in the one word, "sincerity." The Mass strikes us as a genuine expression; the students' works as imitations of their teacher.']

DISINGENUOUS JOURNALISM

SIR,—The American Musical Courier, in July, 1920, described at length the operatic successes of a certain luscious contralto, and went on to say that the lady in London during war-time took up 'the recital field of musical endeavour' for the first time. In this American musical journalistic jargon you may or may not recognise 'concert work.'

Last month (September, 1926) some records were issued of the lady's singing, accompanied by a delicious note in the monthly list of the Company concerned, in which we are first, as always, again informed of the lady's Hyperborean, Patagonian, Ultima-Thuleian, and Atlantean ancestry, and then told that starting her career first as a concert singer, it was long before she could overcome her humanitarian, ethical, sociological, moral, or what not objections to the operatic stage.

But the American periodical still has the English recording company beaten to a frazzle in its astonishing description of the lady's London activities, whereby four or five appearances at most in one season became 'twelve recitals in Queen's Hall' and 'six recitals in Queen's Hall and Albert Hall in less than two months'!

But the climax, with true art, is reserved for the last. I quote:

> 'She was particularly happy in her interpretations of the songs of Claude Debussy, according them a different treatment from other so-called Debussy interpreters — thereby winning the approval of the composer to such an extent that twice he crossed specially from Paris to London to act as her accompanist.'

Sheer fiction, of course. When the lady was starting her London activities, Debussy was dying at Paris; and if there be one singer whose methods he, who loathed the exaggerated emphasis, crude dramatisation, and slap-on colour methods that make up this lady's 'art' (Apollo, forgive me!) would have execrated, it would have been hers.—Yours, &c., Kaikhosru Sorabji.

A CORRECTION

Sir,—Allow me to say that in your quotation from the New York Times, on p. 987, Schönberg's 'Op. 2' should read 'Op. 11.' The New York compositor took my Arabic for a Roman numeral.—Yours, &c.,

Richard Capell.

STANDARD PITCH

Sir,—The movement set on foot by the wood-wind instrument firm, J. Mollenhauer & Sons, of Fulda, has received strong international support, and we learn from a reliable source that the subject will now have the attention of the Art Commission of the League of Nations.—Yours, &c.,

4 & 5, Old Change, Cheapside, E.C.4. Faupel Bros.

The Amateurs' Exchange

Under this heading we insert, free of charge, announcements by amateur musicians who wish to co-operate with others.

Experienced pianist wishes to meet another for two-pianoforte practice. Also violinist and 'cellist for sonatas.—A. V. Hoar, 15, Hanover Park, S.E.15.

Young lady vocalist wishes to meet accompanist for mutual practice. S.E. district.—A. M., c/o Musical Times.

Alto (male) wishes to meet soprano, tenor, baritone, and bass for mixed- and male-voice quartets. Soprano and baritone pianists preferred.—F. Ellett, 30, Sainsbury Road, S.E.19.

Violinist wishes to meet pianist (gentleman) for mutual practice at home. Wimbledon.—K. T. M., c/o Musical Times.

Violinist (gentleman) wishes to meet 'cellist and violist to form quartet.—A. R., 34, Kerbela Street, E.2.

Lady violin player (W. London) wishes to meet other string players to form quartet for practice.—F. G. T., c/o Musical Times.

Sharps and Flats

'My heart ever faithful.' J. Septimus Bach.—Paris Daily Mail.

Since learning to sing correctly I have never had a single day's illness. I have never even had a cold or a sore throat. At the present moment I ride to hounds, fence, box, row, climb mountains, and play golf. Even after four or five hours' continuous singing I do not feel really tired. In fact, I feel better than I have ever felt in my life.—Eric Marshall.

I have sung many hundreds of songs during my career, and I do not think I have sung any bad ones.—Dame Clara Butt.

Organ Voluntary, 'Cow Spirits.' Smart.—Local paper.

Concerts have no future in this country. I have no future in this country. There is only one thing for any music-loving Englishman to do to-day, since broadcasting has been subsidised by the Government, and that is to get out of the country and go to America. I am off very soon. —Sir Thomas Beecham.

We have a suspicion that music—and broadcasting—will continue to survive and flourish after this very loud speaker has closed down so far as his native land is concerned.—Star.

. . . Bach's Prelude and Fugue in A minor, a famous piece to all music-lovers, where its prelude opened with a soft semi-square movement for the manuals only, introducing an arpeggio figure which is treated chromatically over a descant of two octaves.—Local Paper.

SOCIETY OF WOMEN MUSICIANS

The opening meeting of the Society's winter season had a special appropriateness about its date, October 16, that being the date in the year 1885 on which its president, Miss Fanny Davies, made her first appearance. The débût of an English girl pianist in those days was a very unusual affair, and the sensation created by Miss Davies's playing of the G major Beethoven Concerto at the first Crystal Palace concert of that season, under Adolf Manns, was an auspicious beginning to her great career. Members of the S.W.M. were privileged to hear a pianoforte recital by their president on this year's anniversary. Miss Davies began her programme with the solo which she played after the Concerto at her first concert—the Romance in F sharp, by Schumann, and a Gigue in B flat minor, by Graun. She followed this by the encore which she gave at the first Monday 'Pop.' a fortnight later—Mendelssohn's 'Characteristic Piece,' Op. 7, No. 7. A noble performance of Beethoven's Sonata in A flat, Op. 110, was perhaps the outstanding feature of the rest of the programme, which included a group by Brahms, Schumann's 'Kinderscenen,' Debussy's Toccata, and a couple of typical Czecho-Slovak pieces by Joseph Suk.

An interesting programme of autumn fixtures has been arranged, including a lecture on December 11, by Mrs. Rosa Newmarch, on 'Modern Czech Music.' Full details of the Society, and of the coming events, are obtainable from the Secretary, at 74, Grosvenor Street, W.1.

VISIT OF A FAMOUS CZECH CHOIR: THE PRAGUE TEACHERS

After an interval of seven years, the leading male-voice choir of Czecho-Slovakia (the Choral Society of Prague Teachers) visited us once again, and gave a concert of national music at Queen's Hall, on October 26. The choir came to us for the first time in May, 1919, within a few months of the proclamation of the independence of Czecho-Slovakia, and the visit had then a certain political and propagandist significance. This time its aims were purely artistic. Unfortunately, in this long interval the public had forgotten the excellence of the choir, and the deep impression made on the occasion of its first appearance had faded out. The attendance at the London concert was not very good, but those who heard were stirred to unusual enthusiasm. A second concert, had the choir's engagements permitted, would have attracted a much larger audience.

The chief change in the personnel of the choir since 1919 is in the new conductor, Prof. Metod Dolezil, who also has charge of the choral class of the Prague Conservatoire. He has great personal magnetism and a sure and subtle rhythmic sense; he uses no baton, and his time-beating is almost imperceptible. Unlike his predecessor, he does not treat the choir as an orchestra, but is content to get perfectly legitimate—though sometimes unusual—vocal effects. In the older examples of choral music, such as Krizkovsky's ballad of 'The Drowned Maiden,' or Smetana's 'Song of the Sea,' or Foerster's 'On the field path,' the music itself came through to us without superfluous emphasis or undue 'pointfulness.' Certain effects which jolt our English ears must be attributed to the peculiarities of the Czech language, with its detonating accent on the first syllable of each word and its tendency to thicken and roughen some of the consonants.

The technique of the Czech male-voice choirs is so perfect that such societies as the choir of Prague teachers, and their fraternal rivals the Moravian teachers, as in the case of our own singers, crave new difficulties to overcome. Janácek's strong, realistic settings of impassioned and declamatory texts by the labour poet, Peter Bezruc, once considered hopelessly unvocal, gave them something to bite upon for a time. But now they sing such terse and savage expostulations as '70,000'—the cry of the Silesian miners against spiritual and physical extinction—with such ease that the younger composers are entering into competition to supply choral music of far more complex fabric. An example of the most modern type is Jaroslav Kricka's exceedingly harrowing, but only half-musical, double chorus 'The Grim Guest,' in which the apparition of a Russian friend reproaches the poet (who is one with the composer) with his indifference to the horrible sufferings of his people during the Revolution. The two choirs carry on the broken and gruesome dialogue, but finally unite in a chorale on the Russian words of the Kyrie, 'Hospodi ponieluj!' We can imagine that some of our Midland and Northern choirs would accept this work as a test of their virtuosity, but the average human being turns with relief to the lighter folk-song element in the Prague teachers' repertory, sung with a freshness and verve that carries all before it. It was delightful to hear such crisp, humorous singing as in the trifle arranged by Dvorák called 'The Sparrows' Party,' and to listen again to the old favourite of seven years ago, the wild little dance tune with its untranslatable jingling text about dancing and prancing, and tipsy gipsy, which always had to be repeated, and sent the listeners away haunted by its fascinating syncopated rhythm.

The Prague teachers were invited to the Royal College of Music on the last day of their visit. They were cordially welcomed, and gave a most enjoyable programme. They greatly appreciated meeting Mr. Gustav Holst, whose work is well-known at Prague. In the evening they sailed for Denmark, where they are touring. Early in 1928 the Prague teachers will celebrate the tenth anniversary of the independence of Czecho-Slovakia by a visit to America.

R. N.

THE BRISTOL OPERA SEASON

It is curious that while in the commercial world people are constantly discussing combines, cartels, amalgamations, &c., musical enterprise is almost invariably the effort of a single individual. There is a 'founder' of the Eastbourne Festival; there is—or there was—a founder and general director of the Glastonbury Festival. The short season of opera given at Bristol last month was also due to the enterprise of one man—Mr. Napier Miles. To him we owe a number of exceedingly attractive performances, well thought out, adequately rehearsed and, above all, well-balanced. There was no star and no stupidity; every member of the company worked for the common good. Perhaps Mr. W. Johnstone Douglas deserves the greatest measure of praise, since he not only took part in the performances but shouldered the whole responsibility for the producing. But the work that was actually done on the stage was never below a very high level of competence and intelligence, and never rose to the point in which competence may become virtuosity. The general desire seemed to be to do justice to the composer to the utmost capacity of the interpreter—not to outshine one another and dazzle the listener. On the stage Mr. Johnstone Douglas was admirable, but not more than, say, Mr. Steuart Wilson, whose singing of some Mozart arias revealed the very unusual depth of his temperament and sensibilities.

Mozart's 'Così fan tutte' was undoubtedly the most delightful of the works produced. De Falla's 'Puppet Show' thrilled us with its cunning, its daring, and its merciless irony. Vaughan Williams's 'The Shepherds of the Delectable Mountains' brought in the theatre a breath of perfumed air from walled convent gardens. But 'Così fan tutte' is of the theatre. It accepts every convention without apology; it seeks nothing more than to charm with its guileless plot and the exquisite simplicity of its music. In a theatre which is small, old, and tastefully rather than lavishly constructed and adorned, its appeal was simply irresistible. In this production moreover the company had the advantage of Prof. Dent's advice, which meant not only authority, but a speed which was neither so great as to rob us of details nor so slow that our interest could flag at any time. It moved on well-oiled wheels: conventionality acted as a 'shock absorber'; it gave us a feeling of security. We felt certain that nothing would be allowed to stand in the way of our enjoyment, that the theme would be dealt with with a light hand, that neither sex complex nor the claims of the younger generation would intrude and remind us of the least attractive features of our time. Does not such an opera fulfil most admirably the first function of the theatre, which is to take us out of our environment and interest us in something different? What more refreshing experience than this can be expected?

Of the other operas, Stanford's 'Travelling Companion' obtained its first performance in the South of England, and the second anywhere. But it is an opera which, to be adequately performed, demands Drury Lane and its paraphernalia, and, unless I am mistaken, it was as a spectacular, quasi-pantomimic show that Stanford conceived it. Dame Ethel Smyth's 'Entente Cordiale' amused us as we were intended to be amused by it, even though its music is not by any means equal to that of 'The Boatswain's Mate.' Mr. Napier Miles's 'Markheim' is already known to our readers, having been given in London some time ago.

F. B.

EASTBOURNE MUSICAL FESTIVAL

Johnson is reported as having said that you can do much good with a Scotsman—if you catch him young. It is because musical festivals at Eastbourne and other South Coast towns are young that I venture upon adverse criticism, in the hope that much good may come of it. To begin with, let us say that the Eastbourne venture was wholly successful so far as it went, and that while Captain Amers and his orchestra won much credit with their disciplined performances of such music as the 'Beni-Mora' Suite of Holst and the sixth Symphony of Glazounov, visiting conductors—Sir Thomas Beecham, Sir Henry Wood—soloists like Arthur Catterall and Elisabeth Schumann, and the presence, on November 11, of Sir Edward Elgar, gave considerable lustre to the undertaking. Something was also conceded to popular taste, and Miss Edna Thomas ('The Lady from Louisiana'), Miss Muriel George, and Mr. Ernest Butcher were, no doubt, meant to satisfy the craving for something 'light,' after the fashion of the music-halls, where Miss Thomas, Miss George, and Mr. Butcher won their well-deserved laurels. Miss Thomas indeed evidently doubts our capacity for understanding even the light trifles we have heard for twenty years in the halls and out of the halls, for every song was prefaced by an explanation longer than the song itself. We are not, however, concerned with Miss Thomas, but with the policy of compromise her contributions seemed to reveal. It seemed all of a piece with the bringing of the orchestra to full strength (fifty-five players) by the addition of amateurs. And the question which actually arises is whether such desperate caution is really necessary. Of course, it is difficult for an outsider to know exactly what the local conditions are, and what obstacles have to be surmounted. But it seems incredible that while a good performance is considered advisable and beneficial to the prosperity of the town, a better performance should be thought insignificant and financially unsound. Choral performances, again, were admitted at only two out of the nine ooncerts. Now, considering that choral music has been for centuries the staple food of the musical Briton, would it not have been wise to give a greater share to the choirs? Of course, the South is not famous for choral singing, like the North. But we cannot believe that while in the North there are many first-class choirs, it is impossible to form one good choir in the South. Such centres as Eastbourne or Bournemouth should give encouragement to choral singing. If Eastbourne is not considered a large enough city to provide a festival choir, it could be pointed out that Hereford and Gloucester are still smaller, and that but a few miles separate one South coast town from another. Nothing would be easier than to join forces and to get together a choir from the pick of Brighton, Eastbourne, and Lewes choristers.

Good music adds to the reputation of any town, and a good reputation means a greater number of visitors. Excellent music might add still more to the reputation, and a greater reputation would certainly increase further the number of visitors. But a half-hearted attempt can never be as effective as a decisive blow. Londoners who have the choice naturally give preference to a town where the entertainments are most promising. But an attractive and original scheme embodying musical performances of first-class quality must draw to the town not only those who seek good air, but also those—and they are not a few—who look upon music as the greatest attraction that can be offered. This was the burden of the speech Sir Thomas Beecham made to his audience during the interval of the first concert which he conducted. It is well worth considering seriously. Captain Amers must know the value of a strategical move and of determination. The Eastbourne Festival has been successful artistically and financially. The question now is whether the success is going to be frittered away, or be used as a stepping-stone to a Festival that will not only equal the meetings that are held elsewhere, but surpass them and establish a reputation.

F.B.

THE NEW BUILDINGS AT THE ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

General satisfaction has been expressed that the extension of the Royal Academy buildings in Marylebone Road is at long last an accomplished fact. From the point of view of accommodation space alone, they were badly needed, for the number of students had outgrown the housing capabilities of the original structure. It may be said, moreover, that, so far as it goes, the addition is both useful and ornamental. But at the same time the suggestion first put forward was of a far more ambitious nature. It comprised a theatre sufficiently roomy in stage and auditorium to permit of operatic performances on a large scale, and it is obvious that had this enterprise been possible, results of far-reaching importance might have been obtained not only for the Academy itself, but also for the cause of opera in England and English opera. Lack of funds—an old story in this country, where music is concerned—necessitated a drastic modification of the plans, and the only thing to be said is that half a loaf is better than nothing at all. It is to be hoped, however, that the dream that has been dreamed may not be ruthlessly abandoned, and that some day a theatre will be built of such a nature as to encourage and make use of the latent talent that undoubtedly exists in the students of our premier musical institution.

Meanwhile much valuable work should be possible in the new theatre, for it is a theatre, even if in miniature, and many of the smaller and lesser operas may well be satisfactorily presented. The seating capacity is two hundred and fifty, there is a sunk orchestra, after the model of Bayreuth, capable of holding fifty performers, and the well can be boarded over when an orchestra is not required. The stage is fitted with many of the necessary appliances for scenery. The design of the theatre is chaste and charming, and the general effect, as may be seen from the photograph, is most pleasing. I know that Mr. Julius Harrison, the director of the opera class, is greatly pleased, and looks forward to largely increased activities in his particular sphere of usefulness. In addition to the theatre, there is an admirable lecture-hall, which may be used for a variety of purposes. Dancing classes and exhibitions of dancing will be held in it, and attached are shower-baths of the latest design. A highly practical system of heating and ventilation has been installed, whereby foul air may be expelled and fresh air admitted at will; incidentally the machinery and contrivances for this especial purpose are well

Photo by] [Alexander Corbett, Baker Street,

NEW LECTURE HALL

Photo by] [Alexander Corbett, Baker Street.

NEW THEATRE

worth seeing. A number of class-rooms are also included in the annex, all double-windowed and sound-proof; they will prove an invaluable addition in relieving the present congestion. The Academy authorities are to be warmly congratulated on the handsome and manifestly useful extension, of which the President, H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught, expressed his enthusiastic appreciation when he opened the new buildings on October 19. J. A. F.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

The programme of the students' chamber concert given on Monday afternoon, November 1, contained one or two items of unusual interest. The Trio of Beethoven for two oboes and English horn deserves especial mention. It may not perhaps be Beethoven at his greatest, but it is Beethoven in a charming mood, and is worth hearing for the cleverness of the construction. It received a quite unexceptionable performance by Mr. Terence McDonagh, Miss Mary Keel, and Miss Helen Gaskell. Debussy's Dances for harp and strings seemed somehow to miss fire. These tiny cameos really require a tiny hall to allow the finest effects of the harp to be enjoyed. This in no way discredits the performance, for Miss Julia Wolfe did ample justice to the solo part, and the orchestra, under Mr. Philip Frossard, played with the utmost discreetness. Miss Guirne Creith, a student, has constructed a String Quartet in one movement. It is a pleasing work, and the young composer is rapidly getting beyond the promising stage. It was well played by a quartet of ladies. Among the vocal items Miss Gwendolene Embley gave a finished performance of Bizet's 'Cavatine de Léila.' In addition to a good voice, the singer has some gift of temperament, as her intelligent interpretation showed. Miss Gwenyth Misselbrooke, a fluent pianist, played a Chaconne by Bach-Busoni. Personally Bach is preferable as a composer to Busoni, but the pianist was evidently not of this opinion. The concert began with a short Requiem for three 'cellos, by Popper, In memoriam three members of the Academy who have recently died—Arthur Thompson, Carlo Albanesi, and H. Wessely.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC

The College has had the pleasure of renewing its old friendship with the members of the Czecho-Slovakian Choir of Prague teachers. Remembering their former visit about seven years ago, Sir Hugh Allen, the Director, welcomed the opportunity offered by their presence in England, and invited the Choir, through the courtesy of the Czecho-Slovak Minister, to honour the College again. This happy idea materialised on November 4, when, welcomed enthusiastically by a large crowd of students, the Choir gave a taste, or rather a banquet, of its quality, singing in its own inimitable style representative works of Czech composers written for male voices, from Smetana to Janacek. The singers' range of tone was remarkable, and their virtuosity a revelation.

The most important College concert of the month was naturally that given by the First Orchestra, under the conductorship of Dr. Malcolm Sargent. The programme included Pianoforte Concertos by Tailleferre and Liszt, played by Miss Constance Spencer and Mr. Isadore Goodman respectively, and Elgar's Symphony in A flat. This work offered one of the most stimulating, though exacting, tasks the orchestra has been called upon to undertake, and it is gratifying to be able to record that the achievement did not belie the hopes and ambitions of the performers.

The anniversary of the Armistice was commemorated as usual by the reading of the Roll of Honour in the presence of the whole College, and the singing of Parry's 'Jerusalem.' The Director, before reading the names, said: 'We are met on this day of remembrance that we may pay our homage to those who died for their country in the Great War, which ended on this day eight years ago. More chiefly are we bound to remember those men of the Royal College of Music who, in giving their lives for a great cause, have given us so great an example for all noble service. [The names were then read.] Let us hold them ever in honour and gratitude.'

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC

The congratulations of the College are extended to Mr. H. Lamerton on his election as Mayor of Bodmin. Mr. Lamerton has held the post of local secretary to the Bodmin centre for some years.

The College Board has conferred an honorary Fellowship diploma on Mr. Louis Pecskai, the well-known violinist, and a professor at the College. The Chairman of the Board (Prof. J. C. Bridge), in presenting the diploma to Mr. Pecskai, referred to his long and loyal services to the College, and to his artistic talents, which have gained him such a high position in the musical world.

The programme of the orchestral concert at Queen's Hall on December 11 includes: Overture, 'Iphigenia in Aulis,' Gluck; Concerto in A major for violin and orchestra, Glazounov; Orchestral Suite in A major, W. Lovelock; Symphony No. 4, Tchaikovsky; and vocal music.

The terminal chamber music concert takes place at Grotrian Hall on December 9.

Prof. J. C. Bridge gave a lecture at the University of Durham on November 16, when the programme of illustrations was performed by Messrs. Wilfred Parry and Harry Blech, both scholars of the College.

Successful distributions have taken place at Manchester, Sunderland, Southport, and Birmingham. At the last-named centre a demonstration programme from the syllabus was performed by students of the College under the direction of Dr. E. F. Horner, Director of Examinations.

The current term ends on December 11; and the Lent term commences on January 10.

The Diploma examinations will be held at the College and Home Centres in the week beginning January 3.

London Concerts

ROYAL PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY

Sir Henry Wood is too rarely in charge at Philharmonic concerts. It was a real pleasure to see him step into the rostrum on October 28 (so punctually that many were caught in the lobby). The programme was well calculated to demonstrate his powers—the 'Oberon' Overture, 'En Saga,' the 'London' Symphony, 'Nights in the Gardens of Spain, and Ravel's 'Rapsodie Espagnole'—a topographical scheme that took us to the Germany of romance, Finland, our own 'home town,' and Spain, as seen by a Spaniard and a Frenchman. The Sibelius work made us wish for more of such stark stuff: this is the real 'Finlandia,' surely! Arthur Rubinstein played brilliantly in the de Falla work, though the orchestra at times seemed to hold the view that pianists, like little boys, should be seen and not heard. As an extra, he gave a dazzling performance of more de Falla—the 'Fire Ritual' Dance. The 'London' Symphony and its composer were acclaimed. A brilliant evening, altogether. But topography was overdone. Midway one hearer at least longed for a bit of straight music, free from labels and local colour—just music, with no nonsense about it. H. G.

BEECHAM CONCERTS

Sir Thomas Beecham gave two Sunday concerts with the London Symphony Orchestra, at the Albert Hall. He has been dejected of late, so he has been telling the world, but there was no sign of low spirits. He is now a better conductor than ever, and the public gave him handsome testimony of its esteem, particularly after the extraordinarily brilliant performance of the Fifth Symphony. We look forward to the first concert to be given by this orchestra under Sir Thomas on their return from their tour with him. It should be the best of the season.

The first concert was rather Bacchanalian—'Venusberg,' Borodin, Tchaikovsky. Miss Martha Baird showed pretty taste in a Mozart Pianoforte Concerto.

At the second, Sir Thomas introduced an Orchestral Fugue by Lord Berners, one of that composer's best things. Why, when a modern fugue is written, is it considered necessary to refer to 'the rules'? One doesn't, over a symphony or a suite. This fugue is 'craggy,' and rather freakish, but it is well worth hearing. The last trumpet note is one of the many clever things in it.

Miss Ethel Frank sang agreeably, but in Mozart and 'My lovely Celia' she put h's in the middle of vowels, and several high notes were uneasily produced. C.

B.B.C. CONCERTS

Dr. Richard Strauss conducted his 'Alpine' Symphony, 'Don Juan,' 'Salome's Dance,' and Festal Prelude at the B.B.C. concert at the Albert Hall, on November 9. The audience was large and cordial.

The best thing in the Symphony is near the beginning, in the working of the ascending theme, which is, however, only a feebler version of the corresponding themes in 'Don Juan' and the 'Hero's Life.' The rest is very long, and sometimes shamelessly bad—mere pot-boiling, in fact. 'Don Juan' is, of course, good stuff, and was well played. But his Salome is just a Viennese minx waltzing in fancy dress. As for the Prelude, there is a part in it for everything except, as someone said, the escalator; but nothing that matters. Reduce this composition to essentials, and there is nothing left at all. Equal temperament (the organ's—if it was equal) and orchestral temperament did not agree.

After this Symphony and this Prelude, Dr. Strauss had better write another musical description of his critics. C.

At the previous Albert Hall National Concert, on October 21, Mr. Albert Coates conducted some Wagner, the 'Enigma' Variations, and the 'Emperor' Concerto, to Mr. Frederic Lamond's playing.

The Grotrian Hall chamber concerts of foreign music have so far proved less happy in practice than worthy in principle. Neither of the new works by Labroca and Guarnieri that the Venetian Quartet played was of any stature as music, and the long song-cycle of Malipiero, 'The Italian Seasons,' which Miss Kathleen Lafla sang to Mr. Hubert Foss's pianoforte accompaniment, brought more credit to the singer than to the composer, who seemed to be attitudinising. M.

PAUL DUKAS AT QUEEN'S HALL

The Queen's Hall concert on November 6 was overshadowed by the death of Robert Newman, in whose memory Chopin's March was played.

M. Paul Dukas was the guest of the afternoon. He conducted his 'Peri' and 'The Sorcerer's Prentice.' We applauded, but could not help wondering that he could not bring out something newer or more substantial for the occasion. Self-criticism is a good thing. Never speak when you have nothing to say. Agreed. But the Dukas case suggests something like penury.

'The Peri' is well-written, but a trifle dull. The famous Scherzo is a gem. After all, it is perhaps better to have done just one first-rate thing than to overtop your Op. 100 without ever having hit the mark. Miss Irene Scharrer played in Schumann's Pianoforte Concerto. C.

GUY WARRACK

Young conductors have this handicap, that they must learn their art in public. Mr. Guy Warrack, who conducted a small and select orchestra at Æolian Hall on October 27, had certainly learnt a good deal in private, and will go on his way with the lively good wishes of those who heard him. He did well in Haydn—in a captivating little early Symphony, 'Le Matin' (1761).

The programme was tasteful. It was pleasant to hear Arthur Bliss's Carnegie 'Rhapsody,' though the music has not the characteristic vivacity of the composer's later things. The wordless vocal parts (sung by Miss Odette de Foras and Mr. Archibald Winter) showed up the unsatisfactoriness of this experiment. Voices are meant to utter words. A little piece, 'Champêtre,' by Mr. Constant Lambert, a young hopeful of the R.C.M., said nothing much in a rather knowing and engaging way. Miss de Foras sang Mozart with ability, but we believed there was a more interesting voice within her than we heard, in her present lack of an ideal freedom of production. C.

BACH CANTATA CLUB

In the concert hall of the Royal College of Music the Bach Cantata Club met on October 26, to hear solos by Madame Adila Fachiri, Mr. Harold Samuel, and Mr. Joseph Slater, and a string orchestra conducted by Mr. C. Kennedy Scott. The selection of the performers and the programme was unimpeachable, and promised great things. Unfortunately, however, the highest hopes were not realised, probably because the inclement weather did not stimulate or encourage concentration. Mr. Samuel played as beautifully as he always does, but there was no just balance between the solo and the orchestra, with the result that the performance left an impression of restlessness and unevenness, fatal to anything so sanely conceived and so sagely carried out as the Bach Concerto in F minor. The same impression was conveyed to the listener by the performance of the Suite for flute and string orchestra, in B minor, with Mr. Slater as soloist. The young fiddlers in the orchestra were a little too eager to make themselves heard and to assert the claims of the younger generation; in consequence, the elder and wiser people of the basses, providing a firm foundation to the musical structure, were not given a fair hearing. Madame Fachiri's solo consisted of the 'Chaconne,' of which she gave a somewhat unequal reading. She was excellent in the lighter variations, but seemed slightly heavy in the great successions of chordal passages. B. V.

THE ST. MICHAEL'S SINGERS

Pretty full particulars of the programmes of this event (November 14-18) were given in advance in our November issue, so little remains but to record the highly successful carrying-out of an extensive and ambitious scheme. Dr. Harold Darke's new work, 'Ring out, ye crystal spheres,' produced at the first concert, made a decided impression. The revival of Parry's neglected 'Vision of Life' was another outstanding event. The secular concert at the Bishopsgate Institute was notable for the playing of Bach's Concerto in C for two pianofortes, by Mr. Thalben Ball and Dr. Darke. (A repetition being demanded, they changed instruments and parts.)

The choir came through an exacting series of tests always with credit, and often with distinction. The soloists were Mesdames Margaret Rees, Janet Powell, Thelma Reiss-Smith, Elsie Suddaby, Elizabeth Mellor, and Etty Ferguson, and Messrs. John Adams, Keith Falkner, E. Bebb, and George Parker, with, as organ recitalists, Dr. Harold E. Darke himself, Mr. Stanley Roper, Mr. Henry G. Ley, and Mr. G. D. Cunningham. With its programmes of impeccable taste and its atmosphere of hearty endeavour, this music-making by City workers has in a few seasons established itself as one of the most notable events of the year.

KREISLER

Is it too much to hope that the success of Kreisler at Queen's Hall on November 3 will persuade this great fiddler that Albert Hall concerts, Albert Hall programmes, and Albert Hall fees can give but little satisfaction in comparison with a really good bill, a really good programme, and the gratitude of those who really care about music? Surely the wonderful performance of Elgar's and Brahms's Concertos, which gave us such keen pleasure, must also have given some satisfaction to the performer—at least a greater satisfaction than he can possibly derive from playing for the *n*th time a tricky accompaniment of a sentimental valse or serenade or 'Moment,' + or − musical. It must be a long time since we last heard him either in Elgar or in Brahms. His interpretation has changed but little. There is perhaps a little more restraint in his playing, but he still has all the old rich eloquence, the execution, all his old brilliance. The senseless demand for an encore forced him to add Bach's Prelude in E to the rest of that heavy and exacting programme. He played it as well as a tired man could be expected to do. B. V.

CATTERALL QUARTET

Mozart, Armstrong Gibbs, and Tchaikovsky provided the programme of the recital given by the Catterall Quartet at the meeting of the Kensington Music Club, on October 25. The Quartet has improved since we last heard it, and the change in the second violin, now taken by Mr. Leonard Hirsch, has resulted in greater sympathy and flexibility. The outstanding personality is still that of the leader, whose exquisite sense of phrasing drew out finely the sweetness of Mozart's music. The players found an equally good field in the first movement of the Armstrong Gibbs Quartet. The second movement, slightly reminiscent of 'Carmen,' is more popular and less attractive, and the third does not restore the balance, for in spite of some happy pages, it lacks the charm or the clear outline of the first. Tchaikovsky's string music invariably suggests the orchestra, and it would not be surprising if fifty years hence the only work of his to survive were to be the 'Pathetic' Symphony. Not only is this the most finished and effective of his compositions; it also summarises all the rest. In spite of an exceedingly fine performance, the Quartet seemed but a study, a sketch for a large canvas. B. V.

KUTCHER QUARTET

The programme of the Kutcher Quartet at Wigmore Hall showed a distinct bias for modernity—which is no more than one would expect from a player whose style is so typical of the post-Kreisler era as is Mr. Kutcher's. This does not mean that Mr. Kutcher is a mere imitator, but rather that his style is derived from the brilliant school of which the Viennese master is the greatest exponent. Now it is right and proper that interpreters should select the music that suits them best, and in the case of Messrs. Samuel Kutcher, George Whitaker, James Lockyer, and Ambrose Gauntlett, after their performances of Haydn, Dohnányi, and Casella, it is impossible to dispute the fact that Dohnányi and Casella suit them far better than Haydn. But we would beg them to exercise greater discrimination in the choice of modern music. Dohnányi's Quartet had warmth and sanity; it convinced and delighted us by its sincerity, distinction, and its clearness of outline. The Casella Concerto was a much more questionable affair. In England, at any rate, musicians ought to think twice before playing such frigid music at this season of the year. With the thermometer at freezing-point, the icy atmosphere of such things as the Siciliana and Minuetto may well have grave consequences for the listener. B. V.

KRUSE QUARTET

Mr. Johann Kruse, long years ago Joachim's second violin, led a newly-founded quartet in a series of concerts at Leighton House. The collaborators were Messrs. Whitaker, Rubinstein, and Sisserman. They played Haydn, Mozart, and Beethoven (the second 'Rasoumovsky') on the first evening.

The outer parts were stronger than the inner. Nos. 1 and 4 drew with big, bold strokes, as though the room had been ten times as large. Nos. 2 and 3 had drawing-room manners. The leader's left hand was not irreproachable. (Time has a worse malice for the violinist than for any other musician.) But there was a reminder, in the bold carving of many of his phrases, of the good old days, before quartet-playing had become a daintier business than walking on eggs. C.

ADILA FACHIRI

Two recitals have been given during the month by Madame Adila Fachiri at Wigmore Hall. The first took place on November 6; the second, in conjunction with Mr. Harold Samuel, on November 16. The general impression of these two tests was that the player's style has ripened considerably of late and acquired greater authority and finish. Her tone is still more notable for volume and sonority than for sweetness, just has her readings show greater sympathy for impassioned music than for pure lyricism. That is perhaps the reason why her interpretation of Spohr's 'Gesangsscene' at the first concert was so extraordinarily good. The fire and energy of the playing acted as a powerful tonic—mustard and pepper on the somewhat fat melodies and the cloy sentimentality of the composer. She also played on the same evening Bach's Chaconne far better than she had done a few days before at the Royal College of Music.

The second concert showed that Bach is not yet her strongest card. She understands his sterner moods to perfection, but the more tender aspects of his music do not appear to interest her to the same extent that they interest Mr. Samuel. The little-known Sonata in A major of Beethoven (little known to the virtuoso) was much more easily within range, and it was good to find that the tempo of the Andante was neither fast nor deliberate, but gave each theme just enough speed to move with utmost grace. A restless Sonata by Leos Janacek seemed rather out of place in a scheme otherwise most steadfast and demure.

B. V.

CHAMBER MUSIC

Again we are fortunate in having a run of concerts by the Léner Quartet. These players show no sign of the wear and tear that might come of so much travelling through history and through the shires. They have been touring England, and their London scheme ranges from ancient to modern in eight programmes.

On November 4 the Venetian Quartet, at a concert of the Contemporary Music Centre, played works of Max Butting (a Berliner) and Malipiero, and Charles Wood's fifth Quintet, in D.

The Erhart Chamber Orchestra, which opened a series of three concerts at Mortimer Hall on November 9, has a capable conductor in Miss Dorothy Erhart, and follows the spirit of adventure in its programmes. The first of these included a Suite, 'Rakastava,' by Sibelius, and 'Six Old Italian Dances,' by Peter Warlock.

Concerts of a good standard have also been given by the Snow String Quartet.

PIANISTS OF THE MONTH

Mr. Harold Samuel gave his Bach week at Æolian Hall from October 18-23. To specify what he played would take about a column, and to describe how he played it would mean a long and difficult dissertation on rhythm and touch. Perhaps the best thing is to treat Mr. Samuel and his Bach week as a recurring event that needs no accompaniment of recurring comment, and to add that age cannot wither, &c.

Mr. Walter Gieseking is the problem pianist of the day. He makes schism among the critics. Putting it in summary terms, all agree that (con) he blurts too much, and (pro) he is in most things more intensely right than other pianists. Disagreement lies in the weight given to pros and cons. In this column the cons count for very little. Mr. Gieseking's blurtings are part of his rebellion against smugness in pianoforte playing. It comes to this (as Mr. Gieseking tells us through his fingers): 'Composers (say, Beethoven, Chopin, and Brahms), pianists (Liszt, Paderewski, and Bauer), and people who talk and write about music, have for a hundred years kept up the pretence that the heart and colour of things can be politely extracted from a lot of stretched strings by the application of ten fingers. You take the cloying, changing tone of the pianoforte, a set of musical ideas that are prey at any moment to the limitations of anatomy, set to work with copy-book habits of "expression" and imagine you are giving life to an art. Humbug! Well, I cannot help in the matter of instrument or fingers, but here is a sort of idea of what that Symphony in sound, Beethoven's Op. 111, is trying to be like, of what it would be like but for its having to be a mere pianoforte solo. Excuse me if this apparatus does not behave well. I'm trying to be cosmic.'

Possibly this was not actually running through Mr. Gieseking's mind, but something of the kind was running through his fingers when he gave that startling and tremendous performance of the Sonata. It was aspiring and searching, a straining against the bonds of restrictive fact, a not too literally thumping unorthodoxy that gave us the big soul of Beethoven.

Other music in the same programme (this was at Grotrian Hall on October 19) lent itself more naturally to Mr. Gieseking's hobby of making the pianoforte do what it was never meant to do. The B flat Partita of Bach was a direct invitation to make it imitate the Bachian instrument. Every possibility and licence peculiar to the modern instrument was expunged and the result was a delightful piece of character playing, unlike the care-free style of Harold Samuel, and very winning. In the case of Debussy the opportunity was clear—more colour, depth, distance, and fantasy. Mr. Gieseking attended to these matters as one who wanted to get away from the bare pianoforte style, not only for Debussy's sake but for principle's sake; a double incentive and double care given to it. Add to it all that Mr. Gieseking is a first-class pianist apart from his excursions in style.

Harold Bauer emerges from these picturings as one of the humbugs. Rather let him be dignified as a leader of the orthodox, the high priest of the safer cult and its best apologist. Wherever there is a fine mind in music, be it Brahms or Mozart (Grotrian Hall, October 30), or Schumann (Wigmore Hall, November 5), it can be read in his playing. Nobody wants to question the aristocracy of the pianoforte and its music while he is discoursing. In the presence of this consummate, urbane artist problems disappear; the only one that remains is to know why other people who play the pianoforte make such a song about it.

Several young Englishmen have made their autumn bid for esteem. Mr. Reginald Paul (Wigmore Hall, October 28) won the largest share. He is a musical thinker who says it through the pianoforte. He chose Beethoven's Sonata in E minor, Op. 90, for reasons that were not borrowed from the habits of others, and showed on what thorough acquaintance he had come to like it. Mr. Harold Rutland (Æolian Hall, November 5) was delectable in Mozart—a not uncommon virtue, but achieved in his case by an uncommon appreciation of points in the music. Mr. Clifford Curzon (Grotrian Hall, November 17) rode that war-horse, Liszt's B minor Sonata, without ever looking like a cavalryman. He kept his seat, however. Both he and Mr. Paul played the second Sonata of Arnold Bax, which appears to be congenial to pianists.

Paula Hegner, apparently tired (what pianist of spirit wouldn't be!) of being told that she was an 'also ran,' as accompanist, in the shadow of Gerhardt, took a fling by herself at Æolian Hall on November 18. Her Mozart was also the best she had to give. For the rest she was a bright, eager interpreter of music with a stock of ready means for putting a superficial colouring on anything that came along. That is to say, she was less distinguished as a recital pianist than in the more difficult sphere in which she usually reigns.

Respects to Mr. Robert Casadesus, who won new and good opinions at Wigmore Hall on October 29, and to Mr. Moriz Rosenthal, who renewed old ones at Queen's Hall on November 9. Mr. Arthur Rubinstein, whom we did not hear in his modern programme at Queen's Hall on October 19, had a later recital in store which, in writing this, we hope to attend.

M.

SOME SINGERS OF THE MONTH

Miss Nancy Holland and Mr. John Hayman between them sang no fewer than thirty-three songs (apart from encores) on October 18, at Wigmore Hall. If there had been less to do, it might have been better done. Both artists were, one felt, fighting against odds. Early in the engagement, Mr. Hayman was swamped by the 'winds and waves' of Handel's majestic song. He made an interesting choice in six sacred songs of Beethoven, of which only 'Nature's Praise' was well known. But his appearance must be said to have been premature, although in his second group, which included items by Schubert, Schumann, and Mozart, there was some improvement.

Miss Holland sang a varied selection—Handel's 'Dove sei,' Purcell's 'Mad Bess,' some Dvorák, and some Schumann, to start with. She is a contralto with an upward inclination. Contained by adequate technics, her passionate expression would have had no small value, but too often she allowed her considerable voice to drift. Yet it was not always intolerant of rule. In Dvorák's 'God is my Shepherd'—to name one of her successes—she became suddenly mistress of herself. But in Schumann she could not disguise changes of register, and her German was not very good. Among some Russian songs, Miss Holland was excellent in Moussorgsky's 'Gopak,' a song that lent itself to her rather boisterous treatment.

Miss Ysabella Rynie sang (Æolian Hall, October 25) with an unassuming softness. Her tone was sweet, and her verbal flow easy, but as soon as she became animated the quality was harsh. However, she did not often draw a venturesome bow. She sang songs of Mozart and Scarlatti with soothing effect. Three of Holst's 'Songs for Voice and Violin' were in the interesting programme.

Miss Lillian Wilson, a Canadian soprano, filled Wigmore Hall with big, bright, telling tones. Her singing had the frills and flounces proper to the adornment of the high soprano's art, and there was much to admire in her skill. She soared easily to her top notes, and was certain of her poise when up aloft. It was not a voice of many colours, but it was a voice of one piece. It may be hinted that she 'pinched' the ends of some of her phrases, and she can learn to give a little more distinctness to her Italian vowels, but both faults were slight. Intonation was not entirely blameless. Her voice well suited Rimsky-Korsakov's 'Hymn to the Sun.' There was, however, some lack of the qualities of fullness and sensuousness wanted for Mozart's 'Ah! lo so' ('Magic Flute') and Strauss's 'Heimkehr.' At present, then, Miss Wilson is a singer of principally external effect. Musical experience may teach her to reach to the heart of the songs of Wolf, which she failed to touch at this concert.

Miss Vivien Lambelet at Wigmore Hall sang in several languages, including modern Greek. The best of the new Hellenic music was a song of Riadis. Miss Lambelet's scale was even, and her attack clean. She had, too, a feeling for a phrase. It was not great singing. The voice had no grandeur or ecstasy, but so neat and sensible a performance possessed real artistic merit. Miss Lambelet had a cold, or perhaps she would have expressed a more joyous temperament.

Miss Sybil Scanes's singing at Wigmore Hall of Ravel's songs about the cricket and the peacock deserved a compliment. True, in 'Le Paon' she suffered a lapse of memory, but her French was dainty and pointed. She disapointed us in 'Hear ye, Israel.' Here she was not always in tune, her diction was not good, and the high notes were hard. In 'Caro nome' her staccato was not enough marked, but the scales ran smoothly and sweetly. Other songs that suited this well-strung high soprano were Bax's amusing arrangement of 'O dear, what can the matter be?' and some Spanish, Swiss, and French folk-songs. It was a well-considered programme.

A promising singer of the month was Miss Phyllis Woolfe (Grotrian Hall, October 26). Her tone was bold. She began well with Handel's 'Rend' il sereno al ciglio.' She intended her diction to count. Some consonants stood out almost too prominently. In Purcell's 'When I am laid in earth,' Miss Woolfe sang too much as though she were in perfervid Italian opera. Conviction is a good thing, but here was miscalculation. H. J. K.

Mr. Reinhold von Warlich sang Schumann's 'Dichterliebe' and 'Liederkreis,' at Wigmore Hall, on November 11. His type is rare. He knows exactly the relative values of the words and the music of a song. He gave neither an exhibition of vocal gymnastics nor a purely musical monologue. Every song he sang was worked out with infinite care, and with a refinement bordering on repression. In fact, he might well have allowed his feelings a little more full-blooded expression without any suspicion of vulgarity. Mr. von Warlich's voice is a small baritone. With a little more pressure on his diaphragm he might have given us a more intense tone, and at the same time have rid himself of a woolliness on certain notes. Now and then a high note was flat, and this rather spoilt some otherwise delicate phrases. One may hint that Mr. von Warlich's characteristic restraint was pushed to excess, and that an occasional full-throated outburst would have animated the concert. But still, what a pleasure it was to hear 'Ich grolle nicht' without the usual extravagant fortissimos! Mr. Berkeley Mason played the pianoforte in just the right sense.

Miss Elisabeth Schumann, who sang at Wigmore Hall on November 10, has become one of the most popular of concert singers. The audience overflowed to the stage, and she deserved it. She sang in a way that placed her in the first rank of German singers—and their standard, so far as women's voices are concerned, is the highest. Her defect, when she last sang, of allowing the breath to tail off at the end of notes, seemed to have disappeared. Her breathing was this time so controlled that she could and did take liberties with it safely. She has indeed reached the point where technics can be forgotten and interpretation be her whole care.

The programme consisted of Handel, Schubert, Erich Anders, and Pfitzner. Schubert's 'Frühlingstraum' was not a good choice. It is a man's song, and in places it calls for a much heavier tone than a light soprano can possibly produce. There was compensation in 'Die Vögel,' which was sung with lightness and charm. The 'Kinderlieder' of Erich Anders, showed us Miss Schumann's fascinating vein of humour. Mr. George Reeves accompanied with all consideration.

Madame Lotte Lehmann sang a programme of German songs and operatic excerpts at the Albert Hall on November 14, with Bruno Walter at the pianoforte. It was an afternoon of great but not quite unmixed pleasure, for while Madame Lehmann was brilliant in singing arias from 'Der Freischütz' and 'Oberon,' her Brahms and Strauss left still something to be desired. This may be partly accounted for by the fact, surprising enough, that singer and accompanist were rather inclined to wait for each other.

The first song, 'Softly sighs,' from 'Der Freischütz,' was the most satisfactory of the whole afternoon. Had we never heard Madame Lehmann before, such singing would have made a name for her. Her tone seemed suspended in almost perilous perfection. The singer was braced up to a point at which breath is secure, and she kept her stream of music flowing uninterruptedly from first to last. Almost as much can be said of the last song, 'Ocean, thou mighty monster' (the original English text of which Madame Lehmann might take the trouble to learn, now that she is such a favourite here). The perfection of the first song had, however, set so high a standard that by comparison Madame Lehmann seemed not at home in the shorter lyrics. She breathed rather too audibly, and some consonants bothered her. An explosive st in 'bestehn' did not point out the word so well as a little crescendo on the following vowel would have done. This may appear hypercritical, but Madame Lehmann's art is worthy of the whole of the critic's armoury. H. O. C.

CHORAL CONCERTS

On October 23 the Royal Choral Society opened its season, as usual, with 'Elijah.' Mr. Coates let nothing drag, or even swing along with its accustomed comfort, and the general effect of his spirited ways was to awaken an unusual spirit in the choir. The solo parts were sung by Miss Florence Austral, Miss Edna Thornton, Mr. Frank Webster, and Mr. Howard Fry.

The Westminster Choral Society, ably conducted by Mr. Vincent Thomas, added good points to an already good record by singing the Te Deum of Stanford, and coupling it in the same programme with Bach's Magnificat. The task was carried through successfully, with the aid of the British Women's Symphony Orchestra.

The London Labour Choral Union, a massed choir that met after competition at Queen's Hall, on November 10, gave some very agreeable singing under Mr. Rutland Boughton, especially in Wilbye's 'Sweet honey-sucking bees.'

LONDON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

These players indulged in a Wagner concert on November 1, with a fine array of Nibelung brass and other ballast. The chief function of these was to assist at Siegfried's funeral, after Mr. Walter Widdop and Mr. Albert Coates had carried the hunting-feast through to the death. In the duet of betrothal, Mr. Widdop's singing was to Miss Austral's as the heady stripling Siegfried was to Brunnhilde, the woman of the world. The distinction was less appropriate in the Act 2 music of 'Tristan'; but Mr. Widdop was up to his task. Mr. Coates showed us his gift of Wagnerian effectiveness.

The concert of October 23 gave the audience much of Dohnányi to ponder—a pleasant diversion. The five new 'Ruralia Hungarica' are poetical and deftly-made pieces. Mr. Backer-Gröndahl played the favourite 'Variations on a Nursery Song.' M. Marcel Dupré earned good applause, and was condemned by organists, for his handling of a Handel Concerto for organ and orchestra. M.

Competition Festival Record

BLACKPOOL FESTIVAL

(FROM A SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT)

Any estimate of Blackpool's week of music would certainly single out three factors as contributing materially to its success—the sustained high standard of the music used; the all-round evidence of higher attainment, both in executive ability and interpretative power; and the big numbers present, both as competitors and as audience, in an area which must have felt the full force of economic depression and even privation. Although livelihood may be precarious, these folk have a tenacious grip on that aspect of life affected by music. The music presented revealed a definite classical bias, coupled with a recognition of the claims to representation of works which may never attain a great vogue, but which received, when adequately performed, abundant approval from the crowd—one has in mind particularly Delius.

The four branches of study most recently grafted on to the parent stock—chamber work, the Tudor solo and ensemble, wind instruments, and folk-dancing—have shown vigorous growth. This year they blossomed quite freely, and though the fruitage be small for the moment it will assuredly ripen to maturity.

The six vocalists who emerged from the six hundred participating in the early rounds, probably got advertisement enough to turn heads less well-balanced, but they appeared most modest, and even excessively anxious. Probably they realised that they had now got a foot on the bottom rung of the ladder, for it had been noted that at this Festival a considerable number of students were present, who, having got into the semi-final rounds in previous years, had come along once more for further stimulus and advice. Mr. Plunket Greene listened for two hours to a recital by these six singers of the eighteen songs prepared for the Festival—Bach, Handel, Beethoven, Mozart, Wagner. Schubert, Purcell, Verdi, Meyerbeer, Rimsky-Korsakov, Wolf, Strauss, Granados, Holbrooke—and an hour before midnight started a thirty minutes' exposition and examination of the songs and their interpretation—searching, vividly-phrased, illuminated by brilliant flashes of Hibernian wit, packed full of human and artistic understanding and sympathy, then going on to make the award to a mill-girl soprano from Todmorden. And all this to a house, packed from floor to ceiling, whose members had been there at least five hours, waiting not merely to know who had won the Rose Bowl, but to learn why; and you could not move very far next morning on promenade or in café without overhearing many private adjudications on the adjudicator! It is just this impact of first-rate music on keen, fresh minds, often striking flashes of quite remarkable perception from intelligences probably not otherwise at all remarkable, that makes a visit to this Festival so stimulating. With such artistic vitality about you, despondency dissolves like mist before sunlight.

Although, in comparison with other years, industrial conditions prevented many choirs from attendance on the closing day, there was still abundant provision even for the veriest musical glutton. More to be regretted was the absence of the numerous full orchestras heard in other years. Three of the works given were inscribed to the Festival executive; two more, by Delius, and one by Elgar, had not before received public performance, so that the moderns claimed fair representation alongside the compositions of the classic and romantic schools. The female-voice choirs fell into sharply defined classes, only a few marks separating the first four choirs, and then a steep decline to a level of a dozen or more marks below—the task of furnishing a choir of thirty-five voices sufficiently well-balanced to meet the demands of Harrison's S.S.S.S.C.C. setting of 'Music, when soft voices die' and Eric Fogg's S.S.C.C. 'Meg Merrilees' evidently accounting for the variable level of standard. Once again Bantock's 'Kubla Khan' shone forth among the most brilliant planets in the male-voice firmament, and one cannot envy the temperament which remains unresponsive in the presence of this supreme work as the men of North-East Lancashire or of Manchester bring all the resources of their splendid art to its performance. Elgar's 'The Herald,' if not so highly or richly coloured, was revealed as a vivid bit of characterisation, and, in its closing phrase, charged with high emotional intensity. Delius's 'Wanderer's Song,' sung by these men, and 'The Splendour Falls,' by the best mixed-voice choirs, presented subject-matter sufficient for discussion for many a long day, for Delius's idiom is no more easy of acquisition to-day than was that of, say, 'Gerontius' twenty-five years ago. Some choirs at Blackpool had sufficient grip of the harmonic complexities of Delius's speech as to utter his message with fluency, and so made him comprehensible and even enjoyable to the average musical listener. Where choirs did not enjoy this mastery they merely stammered or, at best, spoke in faltering tones, but these can safely be left to time and a more intimate understanding.

The massive and architectural phases of the day's music were furnished by the Motets of Palestrina, Bach, and C. Lee Williams, and the massed performance of Bach's 'Now shall the grace,' placed the corner-stone on the structure of the week's music. There may be more brilliant tone to be heard in these isles than that provided by these wearers of the Roses of York and Lancaster met in friendly rivalry; if so, it would be worth a long journey, and many would echo Sir Richard Terry's dictum that he would be proud to conduct the lowest-placed of those mixed-voice choirs. Was it not Frederick Corder who, long years ago, spoke of them as 'the crowning glory of the North'?

Music in the Provinces

BIRMINGHAM AND DISTRICT.—The Schubert C major Symphony was the principal work at the Sunday concert on October 31. The performance was well directed by Mr. Adrian Boult, who avoided, by well-judged climaxes, the feeling of dullness which can easily creep into a work of such length. The 'Prince Igor' Overture and Holst's two 'Songs without Words' were heard in the same programme. Miss Joan Elwes was the soloist, and sang songs by Bach, Bainton, and others. Her voice is pure and beautiful; there is, however, a slight sense of effort. Debussy's 'L'Après-midi d'un Faune' is a favourite work with Mr. Boult; he always conducts it extremely well. It was heard in the same programme as Beethoven's second Symphony and 'The Wasps' Overture of Vaughan Williams at the concert on November 7. A Fantaisie by Napier Miles was given the same evening.——A performance of Tchaikovsky's E minor Symphony made a pleasant break at the concert on November 14. More string tone was needed, and at times the tempo was on the slow side. Guy Warrack's Variations were also given. The work is well scored, and has a certain gentle beauty. Miss Katie Goldsmith played Bach's Violin Concerto, and Mr. Topliss Green sang Wotan's 'Farewell' and a group of songs with signal insight.——The second of the City Orchestra's Symphony concerts was given on November 9. The programme was almost entirely English—Bantock, Holst, and Elgar being the composers chiefly represented. Mr. Albert Sammons was the soloist in Elgar's Violin Concerto in B minor. Warm, full tone, and phrasing which was at once delicate and significant, made his performance an enjoyable one. Four movements—'Mars,' 'Venus,' 'Uranus,' and 'Jupiter'—from Holst's 'The Planets,' were given in the same programme. ——Louis Godowsky and Percival Garratt were associated at a mid-day concert on October 26. The programme provided was not of the usual standard heard at these concerts; several novelties were given, however—a 'Tango' by Poldowski for violin and pianoforte, and Francoeur's 'Sicilienne and Rigaudon,' which Mr. Godowsky played with much skill. Mr. Garratt played some little pieces of his own.——The Birmingham Ladies' String Quartet made its first appearance at these concerts on October 20. It is too early to criticise the ensemble, as the combination has only just come into being, but the tone-quality of the individual players and their performance of a Sonata by Mozart promised well for their future success.——Schubert's Trio in B flat was the principal work given by the Beatrice Hewitt Trio at the mid-day concert on October 5.——The annual series of concerts by the Birmingham Police Band took place on November 3 and 4. Three concerts were given, and at each there were several soloists of outstanding merit. Miss Winifred Browne, Miss Miranda Sugden, and M. Melsa appeared on the evening of the second day, and the Police Male-Voice Choir was also heard to great advantage. The playing of the band attained a good standard, and the choice of pieces was ambitious.——Two of a series of three organ recitals by Mr. G. D. Cunningham have been given at Birmingham University on Sunday afternoons. His playing is a marvel of technical skill, and he is a master of registration. The programmes have been varied, and have included examples of the finest music written for the instrument. On each occasion there has been a big audience. ——One of the outstanding events of the month was a pianoforte recital by Mr. Tom Bromley, at the Midland Institute, on October 28. His programme ranged from Bach to Scriabin in the usual manner, but was notable for its omission of works by Chopin. In passing by the Polish composer Mr. Bromley was well advised, for his style is scarcely lyrical enough. Mr. Bromley's greatest achievement was in Beethoven's Sonata, Op. 111.—— A concert of chamber music was given by the Tookey Trio on November 10. The programme included a Sonata for 'cello and pianoforte by Hurlstone, Ireland's Phantasy Trio in A minor, and Brahms's Horn Trio.

G. W.

BOLTON.—The Choral Union, conducted by Mr. Thomas Booth, gave its second performance of 'The Dream of Gerontius' at Victoria Hall on October 20, with the assistance of the Hallé Orchestra. The principals were Miss Margaret Balfour, Mr. Tudor Davies, and Mr. Thomas Booth.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Mr. Josef Holbrooke played a prominent part in the Symphony concert on October 28. He was soloist in his Four Dances for pianoforte and strings (an early work of which, one gathers, this was the first performance), and he conducted his Violin Concerto, in which M. Miroslav played the solo part. The concert ended with a Symphony in C minor by Kopylof.

BRADFORD.—Eastbrook Choir gave 'Acis and Galatea' on October 16, under Mr. Oliver Knapton's direction.—— Mr. Keith Douglas conducted the Philharmonic Orchestra on October 24 in two new 'Portuguese Fantasies' of his own, which were well received.——The string players of the Orchestra, under Mr. Douglas, were heard at a B.M.S. concert in Mozart's 'Nachtmusik' and Holst's 'St. Paul's' Suite. —— At the opening subscription concert, on October 29, the Hallé Orchestra played Beethoven's fifth Symphony, Strauss's 'Don Juan,' and Delius's 'Dance Rhapsody,' under Sir Hamilton Harty.——De Falla's 'Psyche' was given at the Philharmonic concert on November 7, the singer being Anne Thursfield.

BRIGHTON.—The Brighton and Hove Harmonic Society held a Centenary Festival at the Dome on November 2, 4, and 6. Mr. Percy Taylor conducted 'The Dream of Gerontius,' 'The Golden Legend,' and 'Elijah,' and a Wagner programme was given by the full Queen's Hall Orchestra under Sir Henry Wood.

CHICHESTER.—The Orchestral Society, conducted by Mr. F. J. W. Crowe, opened its season recently with a programme of well-known works, including the second movement of Tchaikovsky's fifth Symphony.

DERBY.—The first of the four evening concerts arranged by the Derby Municipal and County Chamber Concerts Committee was held on October 15, and took the form of a recital by Josef Hofmann.——The second programme, on November 12, included Arnold Bax's Harp and String Quintet, played by the Virtuoso String Quartet and Miss Marie Korchinska.

EXETER.—At a Bach concert given by the Chamber Music Club, on October 26, the D minor Concerto for three pianofortes and orchestra was played by Dr. and Mrs. Ernest Bullock and Mrs. G. L. Horrox.

EXMOUTH.—The Exmouth Orchestral Society, opening its session under Mr. A. Raymond Wilmot, on November 3, played Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony and the Allegretto from Beethoven's Seventh.

HALIFAX.—On October 21, Mr. and Mrs. Herman van Dyk gave an unconventional recital of music for two pianofortes ('Hommage à Handel,' by Moscheles) and one pianoforte (a Sonata by Sibelius).

HUDDERSFIELD. — Sir Henry Coward and the Huddersfield Choral Society gave an important concert on November 12, and played their part in it worthily. Dr. Vaughan Williams conducted the choir and the Hallé Orchestra in his 'Sea' Symphony, and Sir Henry Coward himself conducted the 'Stabat Mater' of Dvorák. The solo parts were sung by Miss Elsie Suddaby, Miss Margaret Balfour, Mr. Walter Hyde, and Mr. Horace Stevens.—— The Glee and Madrigal Society celebrated its jubilee on October 26, and sang a number of madrigals and part-songs under Dr. T. E. Pearson's direction. This was the Society's hundred and forty-eighth concert.——The A. W. Kaye Symphony Orchestra, assisted by Hallé wind players, gave Tchaikovsky's 'Pathetic' Symphony on October 23.

HULL.—'King Olaf' and 'Blest Pair of Sirens' were performed by the Vocal Society on November 10, under the direction of Sir Henry Coward.

LEEDS.—The first of six concerts which the Leeds Symphony Orchestra is giving under the Saturday concerts scheme, occurred on October 30. Mr. Julius Harrison conducted a Wagner programme.

LEICESTER.—Franck's Symphony was played by the Leicester Symphony Orchestra, under Dr. Malcolm Sargent, on November 2.

LIVERPOOL.—The first Max Mossel concert was a recital by Suggia and Arthur Rubinstein.——Sir Henry Wood, who has been engaged by the Philharmonic Society for six concerts, conducted the first of them on October 19. The Symphony was Beethoven's fourth.——At the second concert, on November 3, there were two Symphonies—Mozart's E flat and Mendelssohn's 'Italian'—and Bach's C major Concerto for two pianofortes was played by Miss Harriet Cohen and Mr. Arthur Benjamin.——Seven local composers were represented at the British Music Society's concert on November 11.

MANCHESTER.—Many interesting things were done at the Hallé concerts in the course of five characteristic Hamilton Harty programmes (October 21 to November 11). The first of these opened with two out-of-the-way works of Bach—the Prelude for trumpets and strings from the seventy-fifth Cantata, and the March from a music-drama for 'drums' and strings—and proceeded with Brahms's first Symphony. The next was an ordinary ('Meistersinger'—C minor—'Brandenburg'—'Don Juan') programme. On November 5 the unusual music was Weber's 'Abu Hassan' Overture, Mozart's eleventh Divertimento (horns and strings), and the Polonaise, Arietta, and Passacaglia, selected from Handel and scored by Harty. November 12 was a Berlioz night—the 'Messe des Morts,' two bits from 'Romeo and Juliet,' and the 'Rakoczy March.' In this its second performance of the Mass, the Hallé chorus sang better than ever.——The Brand Lane concerts have provided Paderewski on October 16, the Don Cossacks on October 23, Strauss and Elisabeth Schumann on November 6.——Berlioz's 'Faust' was conducted by Sir Hamilton Harty at the Municipal Concert of November 8.——The first of six Catterall Quartet Concerts, on October 20, was devoted to Mozart.——The Debussy, Respighi ('Doric'), and Ravel Quartets were played by the Léner party at the Edward Isaacs concert on October 16.

NEWCASTLE.—The Philharmonic Orchestra opened its season on October 31 with a Wagner concert, under Mr. Edgar Bainton.——Dr. Whittaker conducted the Bach Choir in a miscellaneous programme on November 6.

NORWICH.—Mr. Cyril Pearce arranged a Bach Festival at St. Mary's Lecture Hall on October 13 and 14, and in the Church on October 15, when two Cantatas were sung. ——A Bach concert was also given at the Royal Hotel on October 22 by the Village, Country Town, and School Concert Society, under the guidance of Miss Mary Paget.

OXFORD.—Dr. W. H. Harris has been appointed conductor of the Bach Choir in succession to Sir Hugh Allen.

PAINSWICK.—The Virtuoso Quartet and Mr. Léon Goossens played the Bax Oboe Quintet at a concert of the Music Club.

ST. ALBANS.—The programme of the first of Mr. Claude Powell's orchestral concerts at the Grand Cinema, on October 21, included Beethoven's fourth Symphony.

SHEFFIELD.—Among a number of chamber concerts the most considerable has been that of the Yorkshire String Quartet on October 29, in a a programme of Beethoven, Ravel, and Haydn.——The 'Foxon Five o'clocks' were resumed on October 27 with the hundred and fifty-third concert.

SOUTHEND.—The programme of the Chamber Music Society's second concert, on November 9, consisted of Debussy's Quartet, Ravel's Introduction and Allegro for harp, flute, clarinet, and strings, and Brahms's Clarinet Quintet.

Music in Scotland

EDINBURGH.—The Paterson orchestral concerts made a brilliant start for the season, with the Scottish Orchestra, under Vaclav Talich, in capital form, and the irresistible Elisabeth Schumann as solo vocalist. The programme was identical with that of the first Tuesday concert at Glasgow, noticed below.——In the absence abroad of Prof. Tovey, Mr. Gustav Holst and Miss Mary Grierson shared the duties of conductor at the opening concert of the Edinburgh Reid Symphony Orchestra's eleventh season. Mr. Holst conducted with enthusiasm and authority his 'Fugal Concerto,' 'Fugal Overture,' 'St. Paul's' Suite, the Ballet music from 'The Perfect Fool,' and the 'Ode to a Grecian Urn,' in the last-named of which the choir from St. Giles's Cathedral assisted. Miss Grierson showed an improved technique as conductor in Beethoven's 'Prometheus' Overture and second Symphony.——Also in Prof. Tovey's absence, the first four of his Sunday evening concerts were carried through under the capable direction of Miss Mary Grierson. The Reid Orchestra provided the first of these, with Miss Grierson as conductor and Mr. Frank Moyes as vocalist. At the next, Mr. Watt Jupp (violin) and Miss Grierson (pianoforte) were associated. The programme included a Sonata for pianoforte and violin by an Edinburgh musician, Mr. Paul Della Torre. At the third concert, the Scottish Chamber Music Players, a recently-formed Edinburgh combination, presented a classical programme; and at the fourth, the Fauré Pianoforte Quartet, a Mozart Quartet for flute and strings, and a Beethoven Trio for flute, violin, and viola were played.——A fourth season of six lecture-concerts for school children has been arranged by the Edinburgh Education Authority in conjunction with Messrs. Paterson, the well-known music dealers, who generously undertake the entire financial risk. The concerts are directed by Mr. Herbert Wiseman, Director of Music to the Education Authority. At the first, Mr. Wiseman spoke about 'colour in music' and 'the instruments of the orchestra,' a complete orchestra providing illustrations and entertainment. At the second, Mr. Wiseman lectured on 'melody making,' Mr. Warren Wynne sang folk-songs and art-songs as illustrations, and there was some community singing. At the third, the music of the 16th and 17th centuries was discussed, old keyboard instruments were shown and explained, and illustrations were provided by voice (Miss Alice M'Lauchlan), harpsichord, and organ.——Miss Ursula Greville (soprano) and Mr. Dale Smith (baritone) gave a recital of modern British and folk-songs.——The Falconer String Quartet played Quartets by Boccherini, Haydn, and Mozart at the first of its series of three chamber concerts.——The Edinburgh Gaelic Choir gave its annual 'Highland' concert.

GLASGOW.—The Scottish Orchestra began the season brilliantly under Vaclav Talich. There are few changes in personnel. Mr. Loris Blofield and Mr. David F. M'Callum are in place of Mr. Horace Fellowes and Mr. Connabeer as leader and deputy-leader respectively, and another newcomer, Mr. John M. Fraser, succeeds the late Walter Haigh as principal viola. At the first Saturday concert there was an overflowing house. The programme included the 'Italian' Symphony of Mendelssohn, and works by Wagner, Elgar, Handel-Harty, Nicolai, and Rimsky-Korsakov. The superb singing of Elisabeth Schumann, the Viennese soprano, in Mozart's tripartite Motet, 'Exultate! Jubilate!' and Lieder by Strauss and Schubert, aroused much enthusiasm. At the first Tuesday concert, Madame Schumann sang with equal success Mozart's 'L'Amero' aria and another group of Strauss Lieder. The orchestral items were the eighth Symphony and 'Egmont' Overture of Beethoven, a Concerto Grosso No. 6, in G minor, by Handel, and lesser works by Cimarosa and Roussel. At both concerts Mr. Wilfrid Senior gave conspicuously fine service as accompanist to Madame Schumann.——An interesting recital of music for two pianofortes by Mr. Senior and Mr. A. M. Henderson included unfamiliar works by Bach, Mozart, Reinecke, Aubert, and Rachmaninov, and the lovely and characteristic 'Moy Mell' of Arnold Bax, which we thought specially well suited to its medium.——The first of a series of special orchestral concerts to be given in St. Andrew's Hall by the British Broadcasting Company's Glasgow Station Symphony Orchestra brought out a very small audience. The only unfamiliar work presented was an 'Oriental Rhapsody' by the conductor of the evening, Mr. Percy Pitt. Miss Katherine Goodson played Liszt's E flat Pianoforte Concerto and some solos.——A new series of monthly organ recitals at the Bute Hall, at Glasgow University, had a notable send-off with Dr. H. G. Ley, of Eton College, as organist. Other recitalists to follow are Sir Ivor Atkins, of Worcester Cathedral; Dr. W. G. Alcock, of Salisbury Cathedral; Mr. H. Goss Custard, of Liverpool Cathedral; and Mr. A. M. Henderson, the University organist at Glasgow.——Miss Denne Parker gave a vocal recital. The programme, which she repeated at Edinburgh, consisted of modern art-songs by English, Russian, German, Norwegian, and Finnish composers. Miss Parker was most successful in a group of Hugo Wolf Lieder, but her vocal equipment and control were frequently not equal to the demands of her musical intelligence.——Two Glasgow players of more than local reputation, the sisters Miss Winifred Macbride (pianoforte) and Miss Florence Macbride (violin) gave a joint recital, of which the most ambitious number was the César Franck Sonata for pianoforte and violin. The elder sister is a pianist with considerable technical facility and resource, and sound musicianship. The younger has a solidly-founded violin technique and a natural feeling for her instrument, but lacks purity of style and variety both in colour and weight of tone.——A vocal recital given at Glasgow and Edinburgh by Mr. Rupert Bruce (baritone) and Mr. William Gwin (tenor) derived special interest from the unhackneyed programme ranging from Purcell to De Falla, the sensitiveness and finish of the individual singing, and the charm of the duet-singing.——Miss Norah Sandeman, a young 'cellist who has been studying with Madame Suggia, showed gifts of technique and musicianship at her recital at Bearsden. ——Miss Isabel Elliott, a West of Scotland mezzo-soprano, gave a first recital, and succeeded most where her songs were not such as to make heavy demands on her vocal resources. Mr. John Horner, an accompanist and solo pianist, was safe rather than responsive.

GREENOCK.—At a Scots concert given by the Greenock Festival Choir (Mr. W. McLeod Nicholson), several choral arrangements of Scots folk-songs by Mr. Kenneth Finlay, of Greenock, were sung.

KILWINNING.—Kilwinning Musical Society opened its season with an operatic concert by principals of the British National Opera Company.

GENERAL.—At the first of the 'international celebrity' concerts at Glasgow, Edinburgh, and Dundee, Kreisler sustained the entire programme. Starting rather perfunctorily in the D major Sonata of Handel, he warmed up in the Pugnani Prelude and Allegro, and went on to a performance of the Mendelssohn Concerto so fine as to make the absence of an orchestra almost tolerable. The latter half of the recital consisted of the usual trifles and encores, played with a finish and nonchalance which appeared to endow some of them with a value out of all proportion to their merits. At the second concert, Madame Clara Butt sang very much as Madame Clara Butt does sing. The choral singing of the Don Cossack Choir of men's voices was a tour-de-force in control and flexibility, but it became a little tiresome after the first novelty had worn off, carrying too strong a suggestion of stunt-singing to sustain any purely musical interest. The members of the Cherniavsky Trio (pianoforte, violin, and 'cello) played instrumental solos agreeably, but they cannot be classed musically as 'international celebrities.'——At the first of the Max Mossel series of concerts at Glasgow, Edinburgh, and (for the first time) Aberdeen, Madame Suggia ('cello) and Mr. Arthur Rubinstein (pianoforte) provided between them a delightful programme, which attracted large and appreciative audiences in all three towns. SEBASTIAN.

Music in Wales

ABERYSTWYTH.—The weekly College concerts of the new session began on October 7, when the College Orchestral Union, conducted by Dr. de Lloyd, played the Overture to 'The Magic Flute' at the beginning, and that to 'Der Freischütz' at the end. Miss Evelyn Cooke (violin), Mr. Arthur Williams ('cello), and Sir Walford Davies (pianoforte) gave Brahms's Pianoforte Trio in C minor, and Miss Cooke and Sir Walford played the same composer's Violin Sonata in A major. Songs were contributed by Mr. T. J. Pickering and Mr. W. R. Allen.——On October 13, the programme consisted of Haydn's String Quartet in C, Op. 33, No. 3, Handel's Passacaglia (arranged by Halvorsen), and Dvorák's 'Dumky' Trio for pianoforte and strings. The executants were Mrs. Arthur Williams (pianoforte), Miss Evelyn Cooke and Miss Esme Silver (violins), Mr. Kenneth Harding (viola), and Mr. Arthur Williams ('cello).——At the choral concert on October 28 a selection from Bach's 'Christmas' Oratorio and a number of part-songs were given by the College Choral Union, conducted by Dr. de Lloyd. Some more delicate numbers, including Weelkes's 'On the Plains,' were sung by a small choir conducted by Mr. W. R Allen, and Mr. C. H. Clements contributed a group of pianoforte solos by Scarlatti, Purcell, and Handel.——On November 4, orchestral items bulked largely, viz., Weber's 'Oberon' Overture, Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony, two numbers from his 'Rosamunde' music, and items by Parry, Boccherini, and Tchaikovsky. Mr. J. W. Phillips contributed 'Thus when the song,' from Handel's 'Samson,' and songs by Purcell and Liddle.——The chamber music concert on November 11 consisted of Beethoven's String Quartet in C, Op. 18, a Fantasia on Three Welsh Melodies, by Hubert Davies, Grainger's 'Molly on the Shore,' and Mozart's String Quartet in C.

BANGOR.—The usual weekly concerts at University College during this session will include six special events, at which some important works to be given later by eminent artists visiting the Bangor Musical Club will receive a preliminary performance. The advantages of this arrangement, especially where new works are concerned, will be obvious. These preliminary performances are supplemented by lecture-notes delivered by the College Director of Music (Mr. E. T. Davies), which take the place of annotated programmes. The first special concert was given on October 21, when the College String Quartet was heard in enjoyable performances of Beethoven's Quartet in B flat, Op. 18, No. 6, and McEwen's 'Biscay' Quartet. Miss Verna Roberts sang songs by Haydn and Handel. On October 26, Brahms's Trio in C minor and Mozart's in C major, together with some of Bach's '48,' were performed. Special interest attached to the concert on November 4, when Mr. Harold Craxton visited the College. At six o'clock Mr. Craxton gave a short recital to the students, confining himself to early English keyboard music. At 8.30, in the presence of a large audience which included the members of the Musical Club, Mr. Craxton gave an illuminating lecture-recital on the 'Development of Pianoforte Music.' In addition to his well-known powers as a player, Mr. Craxton showed himself to be a lucid and often humorous lecturer.——At the second special concert the Aberystwyth-Bangor String Quartet played Mozart's Quartet in C and Beethoven's Quartet in E flat, Op. 127.——During the month the Kutcher Quartet, playing Beethoven, McEwen, and Dohnányi, and Anne Thursfield, accompanied by Miss Daisy Bucktrout, have paid welcome visits to the concerts of the Bangor Musical Club.

CARDIFF.—The College weekly concerts have been taking place since the beginning of the session, and a plan of work has been mapped out for the winter. On October 25 the programme consisted of Beethoven's music, beginning with his Trio in E flat (Op. 70, No. 2), which was played by Mrs. David Evans (violin), Miss Joan Willis ('cello), and Mr. Joseph Morgan (pianoforte); the same executants took part in the second and last movements of the juvenile Trio in E flat, with which the concert ended. The 'Cello Sonata in E was given by Miss Willis and Mr. Joseph Morgan; Miss Clarisse Duckett played a Pianoforte Sonata; and Miss Florence Butler sang 'Contrition.' Sir Walford Davies spoke of the pleasure it gave him to see that the best music provided at these concerts was so well appreciated. He emphasised the importance of attentive listening.——On October 30 Mr. Joseph Morgan and Miss Eluned Leyshon played Schumann's Andante with Variations for two pianofortes, and Mr. Morgan and Mr. A. E. Price played Saint-Saëns's Variations on a Theme of Beethoven, also for two pianofortes. Mrs. David Evans and Mr. Morgan gave Beethoven's Violin Sonata in F; Miss Joyce Case sang Schubert's 'My Resting Place'; and a special choir, conducted by Prof. David Evans, sang Palestrina's 'Missa Brevis.'——On October 30, Kreisler drew a large audience for his violin recital, which included Handel's Sonata in F major, a Prelude and Allegro by Paganini, Mendelssohn's Concerto in E minor, and other numbers by Tchaikovsky, Debussy, Cyril Scott, &c. Mr. Charles Keith accompanied.——On November 8, Miss Ursula Greville and Mr. Dale Smith gave a recital of songs and folk-songs, a number of sea shanties, and a group of 18th-century songs collected by Miss Greville and arranged by Mr. Owen Mase, who accompanied.

NEWTOWN.—The Montgomeryshire Festival Committee has selected Handel's 'Judas Maccabæus' as the chief work for the next Festival, together with Mendelssohn's 'Hear my Prayer.' The chorus, 'In tears of grief,' from Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion, is to be sung in memory of the late W. H. Leslie, who was chairman of the committee, and an ardent supporter of the Festival. Sir Walford Davies has been elected chairman of the committee in his place, and the conductors at the next Festival will be Mr. Adrian Boult and Mr. W. R. Allen.

PORT TALBOT.—On October 28, Mr. Reginald Goss Custard gave an organ recital at the Church of St. Theodore, under the auspices of the Port Talbot Musical Club. His programme included Bach's Prelude and Fugue in G major, the first movement of Rheinberger's Sonata No. 6, the Prelude to 'Lohengrin,' and other numbers. Miss Mattei sang several vocal items. The Port Talbot Musical Club has been founded with the object of fostering good music by means of chamber concerts, lectures, recitals, and discussions.

Music in Ireland

BELFAST.—A fine performance of 'Elijah' was given in the Cooke Centenary Church, on October 17, under the direction of Mr. James Crozier, who also presided at the organ.——Kreisler drew a vast audience, at Ulster Hall, on October 18, repeating former triumphs, especially in his playing of Mendelssohn's E minor Concerto and his own 'Caprice Viennoise.'——The first concert for the season 1926-27 took place at Ulster Hall on October 22, under the direction of Mr. Godfrey Brown, the two outstanding attractions being Mr. Dale Smith (baritone) and M. Leff Pouishnov (pianoforte). It is gratifying to chronicle that every seat in the hall was filled. George Rathbone's 'Choral Prelude' was sung as a tribute to the late Sir Charles Brett, Dr. Koeller, and Dr. Charles Wood. The only other choral item was Wood's 'Glory and Honour and Laud.' Pouishnov's performance of the 'Emperor' Concerto was memorable, and Mr. J. H. MacBratney proved, as he always does, an admirable accompanist.——A glance at the syllabus of the forthcoming Belfast Musical Competitions reveals a high standard. There is no change from last season in the adjudicators, except in the case of the choirs; this post will be undertaken by Mr. Herbert Wiseman, musical adviser to the Edinburgh Education Authority.——The second 'celebrity' concert, at Ulster Hall, on November 5, afforded a rich treat, including items by Dame Clara Butt, the Don Cossacks, and the Cherniavsky Trio. Apparently the Don Cossacks were the lions of the night, the 'Volga Boat Song' being clamantly received.——On November 12 the Philharmonic Society's programme included Act 2 of Gluck's 'Orpheus' and a selection from Bach's B minor Mass, with Miss Olga Haley and Miss Winifred Brady, under the direction of Mr. Godfrey Brown. Among the orchestral items were Beethoven's Overture to 'Prometheus' and the 'Jupiter' Symphony. Mr. J. H. MacBratney lent valuable assistance at the organ.

DUBLIN.—Kreisler was the magnet at the 'celebrity' concert at the Theatre Royal, on October 16. He had a wonderful reception, his astonishing technique being shown specially in the Tartini Variations.—— Dr. Esposito's second recital, on October 18, included Beethoven's 'Funeral March' and the Sonatas in D minor and E major. At his third and last recital, on October 25, Beethoven's 'Les Adieux' and 'Appassionata' received adequate interpretations.—— Dr. G. H. P. Hewson continued his interesting organ recitals at St. Patrick's Cathedral, on October 26 and 27. ——Mrs. O'C. Miley's Pianoforte Quartet gave a remarkably fine interpretation of Brahms in G minor and Mozarr, Op. 77, at Engineers' Hall, on October 27, with songs by M. Jean Bertin.——The chamber music recitals under the auspices of the Royal Dublin Society opened on November 1, when two performances by the Léner String Quartet (of Budapest) afforded pleasure to large audiences. In particular, the Brahms Quartet in B flat was a sheer delight, and Beethoven's C sharp minor Quartet, Op. 131, was admirably interpreted.——On October 30, a number of pupils and friends of Commendatore Esposito assembled at Mills Hall to present the famous musician (now over forty-four years at Dublin) with his portrait, painted by Miss S. C. Harrison. The gathering was presided over by Sir Philip Hanson. He expressed pleasure at assisting at the presentation, which was made by Sir Hamilton Harty, who highly praised the Dublin school of pianoforte playing founded by Commendatore Esposito. An interesting musical programme followed, the participants being Sir Hamilton Harty, Mr. Clyde Twelvetrees, Dr. Esposito, and Misses Reddy, Clarke, Copeman, Curran, Bell, and Ruthven.——A large audience visited the Theatre Royal, on November 6, to hear the 'international celebrity' concert given by Dame Clara Butt, the Don Cossacks, and the Cherniavsky Trio.——On November 8, the R.D.S. chamber concert programme included Jelly d'Aranyi and her sister, Adila Fachiri, with Mrs. Hawtrey as an excellent accompanist. At both matinée and evening performances there were crowded audiences. The Bach Concerto in D minor, for two violins and pianoforte, was an outstanding item. —— On November 14, the Army Band No. 1, under Col. Fritz Brase, gave an enjoyable concert at the Theatre Royal, with Mr. T. W. Hall as vocalist.

Musical Notes from Abroad

GERMANY

'CARDILLAC,' BY PAUL HINDEMITH, AT THE DRESDEN STATE OPERA

It had been long since Hindemith wrote an opera. Three one-Act operas belong to the first period of his creative work. In the meantime he was fully absorbed by the composition of chamber music, and even when writing for orchestra he remained faithful to his ideal of a smaller orchestra, that should present an ensemble of soloists. More and more it became clear that he was a representative of Bachian polyphony filled with contemporary spirit. His never failing rhythmical force and sense of sonority were the impress of his own strong personality. It cannot be denied that among the younger German composers Hindemith had gained the position which, thirty years ago, was occupied by Richard Strauss.

No wonder, then, that 'Cardillac,' Hindemith's recent opera, aroused the utmost curiosity. It is significant that some thirty opera houses had accepted the work for performance. The first, however, to produce it, was the Dresden State Opera, already in the forefront in presentations of new works. The performance of 'Cardillac' (November 9) proved disappointing to all who had anticipated a demonstration of Hindemith's dramatic gifts. The score was revealed as nothing less than a misuse of polyphony in the realm of opera. It may serve to sustain the composer's consistency, in so far as it represents the continuation of his chamber music production; for, with all the craftsmanship that he disposes, Hindemith seems only to have given us an example of how an opera can be deprived of its effect by writing eighteen pieces more or less interesting in themselves, but making the music a rather monotonous accompaniment of what might have been a very good libretto. The story of the goldsmith Cardillac, a man unable to part with what he has created, the murderer of those who buy his jewels, the magician who keeps under his spell all around him, till his daughter and her lover checkmate him, so that he is brought to death, provides no bad scheme for an opera. What a pity that the musician so obstinately insisted on making the protagonist a boresome stick! We may loudly praise the score for the style in which it is written, but we must confess that no man of genius would have chosen this method of setting to music a libretto that demands the emphasizing of the demoniac element. This opera in chamber music style is not destined for a long life, in spite of the apparently successful efforts of Fritz Busch, the conductor, and of the chorus and singers (who have very little to sing) of the Dresden State Opera.

NEW MUSIC AT BERLIN

Should we complain if new music that formerly had been a mere private affair has found an audience among the greater public? On the contrary, we ought to approve, though, maybe, some concerts specially devoted to the production of new works may suffer by the deprivation of their exclusiveness. This seems to be the case with the International Society for Contemporary Music. There is so much new music to be heard at Berlin, that concert-goers are not in need of particular institutions for making it known.

The performance of a piece called 'Morgenklangspiel,' by Philip Jarnach, at a Philharmonic concert, presented the young musician who, so far, had almost exclusively written chamber music, as a composer of an orchestral piece. In his former works Jarnach has certainly been more radical than here; which affords proof of how cautiously he proceeds when writing for orchestra. Though avoiding the usual sonata scheme, he employs the form of sinfonietta, laying special stress on a pleasant sonority.

'Morgenklangspiel' was very kindly received. A Quartet by Ernst Toch; a Trio for violin, 'cello, and saxophone, by Ernst Roters; some Hebrew pieces by Ernest Bloch, which the excellent 'cellist Alexandre Barjansky had put on the programme of his recital, are some instances of what is being done in Berlin concert rooms.

ADOLF WEISSMANN.

HOLLAND

The long-promised experiment with Gluck's 'Orpheus' was somewhat different from what had been expected, and as a performance had only a very limited success. Purely as an experiment, however, it suggested much greater possibilities given more favourable circumstances. The essence of the idea was that the singers as well as the orchestra were out of sight behind the scenes. Thus the music came through as a single unit, and instead of hearing the orchestra from one place and the singers from another, they were heard together in a solid mass, just as is the case (or as it is supposed to be) with a concert performance. The action of the drama was performed in mute show, an excellent though not altogether successful attempt being made to secure a precise co-operation of the two. Some of the concurrent details—e.g., the movements of the lips of the dancers—were, however, of too obvious and artificial a character to be effective. Also it was very evident in some parts that the performers were working on strange ground. This was partly to be accounted for by the fact that, with the exception of the principals, the cast comprised only students and amateurs. The great drawback from the purely musical aspect was that the heavy curtains which formed the background of the scenes veiled the sound, or even made it slightly confused. Most of the local critics condemned the experiment on these grounds, in which, it seems to me, they showed some lack of realisation of their functions. Every opera-goer in Holland knows the limitations as well as the qualities of the members of Co-Opera-tie, and that their own principal singers are better suited to the works of Wagner or of Puccini than to those of Gluck. Whatever the resultant defects in this production, the performance did, to my thinking, prove that certain advantages are to be gained by the method employed, provided always that it is applied to the right type of opera, and also that the stage hangings are of a kind that will not too greatly veil the sound; also, that sufficient rehearsal of competent dancers and posers is possible. It is even a question whether Mr. Alexander Poolman, to whom the scheme owes its inception, was the best person to carry it out, though there is less doubt as to the rightness of Mr. Albert van Raalte to undertake the musical direction. He is a tower of strength to the company, and his conducting frequently adds distinction to performances which in every other respect are commonplace. Eugène d'Albert's 'Tiefland' formed the subject of what was easily the best performance the company has given. The work is on conventional lines, but it is technically strong, and provides opportunities of a kind which the Dutch artists were well capable of seizing. For singers and orchestra, and still more for Messrs. Poolman and van Raalte, it was a real success. Willem Pijper is to a large extent the man of the moment, his new Symphony receiving a number of performances at Amsterdam and The Hague, under Pierre Monteux, his earlier Sextet for wind instruments and pianoforte being played by the Concertgebouw Sextet, his songs being sung at many concerts and recitals, and he himself winning success with his new journal and gaining respect for the scholarship of his lectures on modern harmony. The Symphony was to me personally a disappointment. There can be no question that technically it is a decided advance on its predecessor, and in that respect probably forms the high-water mark of Pijper's present achievement. Its lack of geniality and of grace in the melodic matter, and its somewhat close following of Stravinsky in the orchestration, were drawbacks. On the other hand, its rhythmic structure is compact and convincing, and it is a work in which one imagines orchestral players will revel. The public is divided as to the kind of reception it deserves. So far the work has been denied more than hearty applause by a few and hisses by a still smaller number, the majority being too puzzled or too indifferent to join in either demonstration. The Sextet is much more attractive in character, though technically less compact. The number of distinguished visitors this season is a very large one, but as they are all being heard in the same works at other centres, there is little call for comment. An exception may be made with the first visit of Mesdames Jelly d'Aranyi and Ethel Hobday, who surprised and delighted their Dutch audiences with Ravel's 'Tzigane,' a work which presented the composer in a vein quite unfamiliar here. Music of all kinds enters very intimately into the life of Holland, and we have as much proportionately of the inferior sorts of dance music as well as of better class vocal and instrumental music, as other countries. It is therefore all the more worthy of note that during the recent rejoicings in connection with the fifty-years' jubilee of the North Sea Canal, the employment of jazz bands and jazz music was forbidden, and also that a number of leading hotels have forbidden the dancing of the Charleston—though as to whether the latter is a musical matter, I am doubtful.

HERBERT ANTCLIFFE.

TORONTO

Our season has commenced under the finest auspices. Musically we are introduced this year by the Exhibition Chorus of two thousand voices, under Dr. H. A. Fricker. This organization holds four concerts in the huge Coliseum, sings to a total of nearly fifty thousand people, and is the outstanding feature of the Canadian National Exhibition, so far as music is concerned. This year the Chorus was fortunate in being able to use, for accompanying purposes, your very efficient Coldstream Guards Band, under Lieut. Evans. Never can we hope to enjoy finer co-operation, both artistically and from a purely technical standpoint, than existed this year between our foremost Canadian chorus and the famous English band. So inspiring was the experience to the choir that a degree of finished performance was obtained quite on a par with the traditions established by the Mendelssohn Choir. The singing of the Exhibition Chorus is an example to the whole of Eastern Canada of what can be done in simple choralism, and is spreading an influence which confidently may be predicted to produce a nationalism in Canadian music second to none.

Every taste is catered for, as may be seen from a programme that included two Chorales of J. S. Bach; 'Lullaby' and 'The Dance' (from the 'Bavarian Highlands'), Elgar; Overture, 'William Tell'; Soldiers' Chorus from 'Faust'; 'Lullaby,' Bral ms; 'Old King Cole,' Forsyth; 'The Drums of Freedom,' H. E. Crimp; Overture, 'Merry Wives of Windsor'; 'The Goslings,' Bridge; 'Barcarolle' from 'Tales of Hoffmann'; selections from the operas of Gilbert and Sullivan; March and Chorus from 'Tannhäuser'; 'Rule, Britannia,' arranged by A. S. Vogt; 'Hail, Canada,' H. H. Murray. A word about the concerts given at the Exhibition by the Coldstream Band. This year our public has realised, perhaps for the first time, what a highly-trained organization with traditions behind it can produce in the way of inspired musicianship. One questioned certain methods of interpretation, but the fact remained that these Guardsmen, apart from their technical precision and martial discipline, revealed an instinct for music which was as refined as it was inspiring.

The Exhibition authorities this year endeavoured to introduce to the masses excerpts from some of the leading operas of the Italian school, sung by Frances Alda and Edward Johnson, both of the Metropolitan Opera, New York. A small orchestra accompanied the singers. Unfortunately the vast Coliseum was the only building available, and the project, from an acoustical point of view, was a failure.

Our Massey Music Hall events opened with a most satisfying recital by Sophie Braslau, the American contralto, a superb artist who is becoming a great favourite here. She was followed a week or so later by Rosa Ponselle. For lovers of concert-platform opera excerpts, Miss Ponselle provided a rare treat. Her songs, however, were less pleasing.

It is good to be able to record that Toronto still possesses a symphony orchestra, and that the first concert of the season was an artistic as well as a financial success. Mr. von Kunits gave capital readings of a Beethoven Symphony and the Chopin Pianoforte Concerto, the soloist being Ernest Seitz, our most promising Canadian pianist. The concert finished with the 'Siegfried' Funeral March, played In memoriam the late Dr. A. S. Vogt.

Everywhere we are being impressed with the fact that 1927 is the Beethoven centennial year. The Hart House String Quartet, a young body which has rapidly sprung into fame on both sides of the line, presented at its first concert this season four Beethoven Quartets—Op. 18, Nos. 2 and 4; Op. 74, in E flat; and Op. 135, in F major. Experience is giving to this ensemble a tone and poise worthy of the highest praise, and of which Canada is justly proud.

Wherever the English speaking peoples have embraced choral singing, the name of Hugh S. Roberton has become distinguished in connection with a cappella work. Recently Toronto was fortunate in being able to hear Mr. Roberton's famous Orpheus Choir. Only about fifty members of the Choir are on tour, but the impression made was of the purest and most finished unaccompanied choralism. Richer tone, purer diction, or more subtle technique are difficult to imagine. Of course a small choir of this nature is of necessity limited in scope, as choral music stands to-day. But the Glasgow choir is teaching this continent a great lesson, one of real beauty in singing and interpretation.

It is fitting to add a few words about Dr. A. S. Vogt, one of the greatest figures in the short history of Canadian music, who died here a few weeks ago. Apart from his work in organizing and establishing the Mendelssohn Choir, Dr. Vogt took a lead, with extraordinary success, in placing the profession of music-teaching in Canada upon a sound and business-like footing. So well had he organized the staff of Toronto Conservatory (now affiliated with the University of Toronto) that music is now looked upon as an honourable profession rather than as an idle artistic indulgence for the well-to-do or a meagre method of livelihood for the down-at-heel. As a man of dauntless personality and indefatigable energy, who blazed a trail for music never before even attempted here, Dr. Vogt will long be remembered by Canadian historians. We are thankful that his work was so splendidly completed when he died.

H. C. F.

VIENNA

PUCCINI'S 'TURANDOT' AT THE OPERA

The season opened at the Staatsoper with a production of Puccini's 'Turandot' which, according to the verdict of those who should know, is stated to have far excelled for brilliancy, vocal finish, and stage direction, not only the German première at Dresden, but also the memorable first production at La Scala, Milan. Lavishness and taste were to be expected from Alfred Roller, the scenic designer, although a younger artist might have achieved more in the way of originality; and Dr. Lothar Wallerstein, at present stage-manager at Frankfort (like most of the great talents in Germany, he is an Austrian by birth), imparted life and colour to the action and even infused something like genuine enthusiasm into the hardened choristers.

It is perhaps superfluous at this date to dwell much upon Puccini's last work. But it may be said, however, that it is surely his chef d'œuvre, and the supreme artistic effort of his life. No doubt 'Turandot' is far superior to any of the composer's earlier operas for earnestness of purpose as well as for grandeur and depth of utterance. True that much of its charm rests in the application of exotic Oriental elements. But if the Japanese flavour of 'Madame Butterfly' was merely a piquant ingredient to season Puccini's usual and often sweetish melodies, the 'ethnographical' element of his last piece reveals the deep student and serious musician. Unwonted modernism is shown in the free use of 'polytonality' and the juxtaposition of unrelated keys. What a departure from the language of, e.g., 'La Bohème'! What delightful lightness and wit; what freedom of rhythm and imagination, speak from the scenes of the 'Masks,' the merry trio of ministers borrowed from the old commedia dell' arte. Though Richard Strauss, in his 'Ariadne,' has probably treated this sort of 'improvised comedy' with more esprit and sense of contrast, and though the Interlude of the Masks (the type of Intermezzo which the old Italian stage interpolated between the tragic scenes, and which later developed into the opéra comique as we know it) smacks somewhat of literary experiment, one cannot but admire the versatility with which Puccini's essentially lyric and pathetic talent is here applied to light comedy.

The fact cannot be obscured that in this work Puccini's high ambitions to some extent impaired his otherwise unfailing instinct for the theatre. Only in the barbaric splendour of the Imperial March and in the deftly graded tension of the 'Riddle Scene' do we sense the hand of the supreme theatrical craftsman that he was. As with many great artists of mature age, Puccini's inventive powers did not keep pace with his growing aims. It is almost tragic to think that his spontaneity should have failed just when his technical mastery had reached its highest point. And tragic, too, that another than the master himself should have completed the closing scenes which were to have provided the apotheosis of 'Turandot.' Franco Alfano, facing the alternative of asserting his own ideas or following faithfully Puccini's own and somewhat blurred sketches, chose the latter alternative—which, however noble it may have been, was not advantageous to the musical and theatrical effect.

A NEW TENOR

The incidental sensation of the Staatsoper's 'Turandot' performance was the impersonation of Kalaf by Jan Kiepura, a twenty-four year old Polish tenor who has taken Vienna by storm. The young man made his début a short time ago in 'Tosca,' when his brilliant high tones and vocal opulence shone brightly beside the Tosca of Jeritza, who in this rôle, for the sake of originality, resorts more and more to a method of declamation which, apart from a few top tones, comes close to mere realistic speech. Against Madame Jeritza's histrionic exaggerations, the spontaneous, unaffected acting of the new tenor proved refreshing and appealing. In Kiepura's later rôles it became apparent that his voice excels more in volume and range than in beauty, and that his outstanding quality reveals less a cultured vocalism than a marvellous raw material. It is uncoined gold, as it were, and the young singer's haste in coining it into Austrian and German currency inspires misgivings as to the durability of his stock of the precious metal. Within a few weeks, Kiepura has become the operatic sensation of Central Europe. If he will turn from easy laurels to further earnest study, he bids fair to become one of the great tenors of his age.

OPERATIC CONDITIONS

Since the opening of the season, director Schalk has been earnestly pursuing his scheme for a re-organization of the Staatsoper, the general standard of the performances revealing ardent rehearsal work, and the programmes for the next few months promising interesting premières and revivals. Many cherish great hopes concerning the return here of Richard Strauss, who will make his re-appearance early in December, for the first time since he relinquished the directorship exactly two years ago. While Strauss's activities as director of the Staatsoper were unhappily detrimental to its morale and standard, one may well welcome him back in the limited capacity of a guest-conductor, chiefly of his own operas. One of the encouraging features of the current season is the increasing attendances at the Staatsoper, due no doubt to the more attractive répertoire.

Prosperity also reigns at the Volksoper, which has once more re-opened its doors after an interval of several months. The artistic level of the house is rather low at present; but this is an outcome of its unsettled condition. In order again to become a serious factor in the musical life of the city, and to develop from a provincial playhouse into an educational asset for the masses, the Volksoper will have to effect a general re-organization. A theatre whose audiences are attracted solely by its very low prices, instead of by the quality of its productions, has no legitimate place in the life of a musical metropolis.

ORCHESTRAL ACTIVITIES

As was to be expected, Vienna, the city of Beethoven, this year indulges its Beethoven cult even more freely than in other seasons. Both the Philharmonic Orchestra, under Weingartner, and the Konzertverein, under Dirk Foch, are building their programmes around Beethoven's Symphonies, and the master's name furnishes for many conductors a welcome pretence to ignore contemporary production in favour of the dead classic, who requires (according to their belief) less study and rehearsal. The Beethoven performances of the Philharmonic Orchestra are, of course, of the excellent quality to be expected from Weingartner and his great band. For the sake of these orthodox readings one even pardons the absence of more than only a very few important new works from the season's prospectus. But so much could not be said for the balance of the Beethoven readings perpetrated this season in the name of 'reverence,' and Foch's 'festival cycle' is, generally speaking, even below the usual standard of ill-rehearsed, routine-worn performances which form the nucleus of the leading Viennese orchestral programmes year in, year out. The Tonkünstler Orchestra alone has refrained from adding another Beethoven cycle to the already long list. Facing the alternative of indulging in the 'classic tradition' or breaking a path for modern productions, the Society found a compromise by taking refuge in a complete cycle of the works of Richard Strauss, who stands midway between the classics of the last generation and the moderns who may, perhaps, be the classics of the next. Messrs. Clemens Krauss, Hans Knappertsbusch, and Robert Heger are sharing the direction of an undertaking which, so far, has drawn only medium-sized audiences.

THE DECAY OF A VIRTUOSO

A comforting symptom of growing musical taste and culture is the passing of the virtuoso as contrasted with the artist, or musician. In this epoch of the Hubermans and Szigetis, Vasa Prihoda is the sole representative of a happily obsolete type of platform artist in Central Europe. Strange enthusiasts have termed him a 'new Kubelik.' How doubtful is this compliment was conclusively shown when Kubelik himself emerged once more from oblivion for a number of concerts at Vienna. One might well pardon the deterioration of his once stupendous technique, had this former wizard but acquired some of the subtler qualities of taste and depth that often fall to artists at mature age. But nothing of this sort was the case, his performances of the Brahms Concerto being deficient in musicianship and artistic intelligence. His daughter, Annie, who made a successful début on this occasion, proved the superior partner in Bach's Double Concerto. Of late, Kubelik has taken to composition. Three or four of his loquacious Violin Concertos, lacking musical substance, have been heard here in recent years. The latest example is perhaps somewhat less talkative than its predecessors, but is not of more musical value.

PAUL BECHERT.

FRANCIS KOELLER: AN APPRECIATION

The death of Dr. Francis Koeller, on September 6, removes from amongst us a great musician, the best of whose life was spent in the service of Belfast music, and whose own fame was, indeed, sacrificed to some extent to that service. It is not too much to say that the measure of Dr. Koeller's achievement for the progress of the art at Belfast was also the measure of his comparative obscurity so far as the outside world was concerned. Elsewhere his great gifts might have won for him enduring renown; as it is, his name will survive most probably by reason of the work he accomplished in an uncongenial sphere: work, the fruits of which we enjoy now with gratitude, but work which in its seed-time was scantily supported, and still more scantily appreciated.

Only those who can recall what Belfast was musically, thirty, or (as I can) even twenty years ago, can realise its tremendous progress, both in taste and accomplishment. Doubtless, many other influences have been at work, notably that of the Competition Festival movement; but the influence of Koeller, his enthusiasm, his brilliance as a conductor, and the driving force of his personality, loom over all else as making Belfast what it is—not, nor ever likely to be, a Manchester or an Edinburgh, but at least a community where, amidst the manufacture of linens and the building of ships, music thrives and has a worthy and abiding place in the lives of many.

Koeller's life may be divided into three periods, with two short intervening episodes. A native of Aix-la-Chapelle and trained at Dresden, Berlin, and Paris (a pupil of Sivori for violin), he was in early life an orchestral and solo violinist, touring extensively in Germany and France. His career as a violinist was suddenly cut short by a nervous affection of the bow-arm. Undaunted, he came to England in his early twenties, and embarked upon a course of study with James Higgs. Already well versed in free composition, he had apparently neglected the more academic side; and in later days he often spoke appreciatively of the help received from Higgs in strict counterpoint, &c. For a short time organist at Taunton (he never had a brilliant technique on organ or pianoforte), he entered upon the second 'period' when he came to Belfast, in 1887, as conductor of the Philharmonic, a post he held until 1912. What he achieved in that period we know best who have the memory of the 'Gerontius' performances in 1905 and 1907 (which many, including the English soloists, felt to be far superior to, and more truly Elgarian than, the early attempts in England) or of his swan-song, the memorable reading of Act 3 of 'Parsifal,' in March, 1912.

FRANCIS KOELLER

Since then the Philharmonic has progressed under Mr. Godfrey Brown, and now ranks amongst the best amateur societies in the United Kingdom. It is, however, no depreciation of Mr. Brown's good work, but merely justice to his predecessor, to point out the vast difference of the present resources from those of twenty years ago. Then, not only the amateur strings, but the best obtainable wind were very inferior to those of to-day; indeed the start of good orchestral string playing, of which Belfast is not unjustly proud, dates from the advent of Koeller. As an instructor, he was, like so many gifted men, eccentric and somewhat unmethodical, relying upon impulse and mood. In a word, he lived for the inspiration of the glorious moment—and more, he imparted it by that wonderful magnetic force which, had his lot been thrown elsewhere, would have placed him amongst the world's famous conductors. How often did we despair at the afternoon rehearsal! How often he made us surpass our own best hopes at the evening concert! I recall one occasion in particular—the Mass in D—when our own limited efforts in the orchestra were very poorly supported by second-rate soloists from London, who barely knew their parts. The result at the concert was not ideal; but Koeller pulled us through, and averted disaster again and again in a way that left us gasping with thankfulness at the close. His beat was quiet, his style unobtrusive; only those in front of him knew the power of that glance and that left hand. His memory and grip of a score were remarkable: often did I see him, as I have seen Wood in later days, conduct for five minutes without glancing at the score, and then turn over a dozen or so pages with the utmost sang-froid. Indeed his never-failing 'leads' tempted us to be slothful at times. As a fellow-member said to me long afterwards, 'You could always go out for a drink at the fifty bars' rest, and depend upon Koeller to bring you in.'

Koeller graduated Mus.B. Oxon., in 1886, and Mus.D. in 1898; but it is safe to say that 'Mus.D. Oxon.,' though he was proud of it, was no real indication of his powers. As a 'coach' he was pitiably orthodox and a slave to petty rules: in that respect the victim of the age he lived in. But, away from examination work, no greater iconoclast ever breathed. He loved to overthrow the ancient citadels of academicism, and have a tilt at the school-men. The real value of his teaching was his way of 'You must not . . .'; then, throwing aside the text-book, 'Of course, when the examination is over you may . . .,' and he would dash down an illuminating false relation or pair of consecutives, or some brilliant touch of unorthodox orchestration which would have scandalised the Oxford of Stainer's day. As conductor, so as teacher, ever at his best when, untrammelled by precept, he could act by the force of the inner impulse.

As a composer he was born twenty years too soon. Full of romantic feeling, and instinct with dramatic vitality, his best work was worlds superior to that of most of his British contemporaries; but, like his conducting, fated to pass unnoticed. 'Reullura' (his Mus.Doc. Exercise, and also the prize cantata of the second year of the Feis Ceoil—a work of which Parratt spoke glowingly) and the Ode for the opening of the Belfast City Hall were the two largest; but there were also several fine orchestral works. He was a master of orchestration, and in that respect alone, apart from its melodic charm, and the great beauty of its choral sections, 'Reullura' deserved a longer life. Had he been born late enough to feel the influence which has permeated the school of Vaughan Williams (with whom he had, indeed, much in common, spiritually), Koeller might have reached a fuller maturity. As it was, he stopped at Wagner—his idol of idols; and that (plus the dash of Victorian sentimentalism and the cramping environment of Belfast) induced for the listener a sense of tentativeness in all but his best work.

Ill-health brought his retirement in 1912, and an ill-considered emigration to Australia. After three years there, he returned to Belfast, where he spent the last period in semi-obscurity, still teaching by force of necessity, but amongst a new generation who knew not Moses. Of his eccentricities (many of them merely groundless rumours), or of the charm and the nobility of thought revealed only to those who really knew him, this is not the place to speak; and only passing allusion can be made to his labours amongst the poor and disabled, such as his work with the Cripples' Choir, where he achieved wonderful results.

A sad history, it may be: the history of genius warped and thwarted by its time and environment. But, withal, the history of a great man, loved by the few and revered by all, even by his enemies; a man whose story is the story of a mighty work for art in the North of Ireland. E. N. H.

The 'Destra' Choir and West London Choral Union, conducted by Mr. William S. Lewis, performed Cliffe's 'Ode to the North-East Wind,' on November 5. Their future programmes include 'Phaudig Crohoore' and the abridged concert edition of 'Carmen.'

Obituary

We regret to record the following deaths:

Robert Newman, at Hampstead, on November 4, in his sixty-eighth year. The London musical public's debt to him is second only to that it owes to Sir Henry Wood. Perhaps it would be true to say that the obligation is due to them as a pair, rather than as individuals, for their association at Queen's Hall lasted for over thirty years, during which the Promenade and Symphony Concerts, and other enterprises, have been among the most deservedly popular of London music-makings. Newman began his career as a singer, studying at the Royal Academy of Music, and making some appearances as a bass. The opening of Queen's Hall, in 1893, turned the singer into a manager, and two years later he started the 'Proms.,' with the youthful Henry Wood as conductor. Soon after came the Saturday afternoon Symphony Concerts, and the Sunday afternoon series. There were financial vicissitudes (one ending in bankruptcy, due to an unlucky venture into theatrical management), and as a result a syndicate, with Sir Edgar Speyer as head, took over the enterprise, Newman being appointed manager. This arrangement came to an end soon after the outbreak of the war, when Messrs. Chappell became proprietors of the Orchestra, which added the word 'New' to its title. At the back of all these changes, and through all the difficulties of the past twelve years, the influence of Robert Newman and his ally, Wood, was a stable factor, and the artistic ideals that had been at the back of the concern from the start were never surrendered, though the difficult times led to some inevitable concessions to commerce. Newman did more than manage Queen's Hall: he attended the concerts, and was to be seen regularly in his seat in the back row of the circle. His sterling character, and his long and faithful service to the London musical public, deserve to be commemorated on that spot, and we suggest that the bust of Gervase Elwes should soon have for company one of Robert Newman.

Horton Allison, on October 17, in his eighty-first year. At the early age of ten he entered the Royal Academy of Music, of which institution he later became a Fellow. He studied also at the Leipsic Conservatory, where he greatly distinguished himself, being awarded the chief prize at the close of his three years' course. Returning to London, he began a successful career as a pianoforte recitalist. Soon after he entered St. John's College, Cambridge, where he graduated Mus. Bac. Later he obtained the degree of Mus. Doc. Dublin. Dr. Allison was appointed Professor at the Manchester School of Music on its foundation in 1892. As an examiner and teacher his fame extended to the remote parts of the Empire.

Frank Kidson, at Leeds, on November 7, aged seventy-one. The revival of our national song owes far more to him than is generally recognised. He was one of the founders of the Folk-Song Society, in 1898, and wrote many valuable articles for the Society's Journal. He was part-editor of some excellent collections of folk-songs, and his wide knowledge of old music generally was shown in his numerous contributions to the second edition of 'Grove.' His antiquarian research was not confined to music. It extended to literature, and even to china-ware, his book on 'Leeds Pottery' being a standard work among collectors. His publications also included 'British Music Publishers' and (with Miss Mary Neal) 'English Dance and Song.'

Henry Martin Dowson, at Oxford, on October 31, in his seventieth year. A business man—he was manager of a brewery at Oxford—he was also an enthusiastic and accomplished musician. Soon after his arrival at Oxford, in 1890, he was made an honorary member of the University Musical Club. His favourite instrument was the viola, and as a player he was much in demand, giving valuable help to the undergraduates' ensemble classes and the Oxford Orchestra, of which body he was treasurer. During the latter years of his life he took up painting with much success.

Miscellaneous

MUSICIANS' CLUB

The annual dinner took place at Wharncliffe Rooms on November 1. Sir Frederic Cowen was chairman, and in proposing the toast of the Club pointed out that in four years the membership had increased from four hundred to very nearly a thousand. They would soon be able to consider the question of Club premises. Now that Queen's Hall was to be turned into a cinema, Wigmore Hall into a garage (laughter), and Albert Hall into a circus (laughter), the musicians would want a place of their own, where they could literally blow their own trumpet and make their own music. Sir Landon Ronald, Sir David Murray, and Mr. J. W. Ivimey, the hon. secretary, also spoke.

The new Music School at Cambridge is the first building allotted to music since the foundation of the University. It is used for lectures, orchestral and choral rehearsals, and for the housing of the large library bequeathed by the late Richard Pendlebury. The Music Club has a spacious room on the upper floor, where concerts are held on Saturday evenings. There is a Duo-Art Pianola, on permanent loan from the Æolian Company, which is used to illustrate the University lectures of Dr. Cyril Rootham. The programme of the Musical Society includes 'Israel in Egypt' in February, Parry's 'Prometheus Unbound,' and Vaughan Williams's 'Sea' Symphony in June.

Messrs. Ibbs & Tillett ask us to state that owing to the serious illness of his mother, Mr. John Coates has cancelled the visit to America arranged for the New Year, and will therefore be in England for the whole season.

Mr. Arnold Bax was the guest of the Blackheath Pioneer Music Group on October 28, when ten of his songs were sung by Miss Ethel Waddington.

Answers to Correspondents

SPOHR.—(1.) It is not possible to say definitely that your violin can or cannot be treated successfully. It all depends on how far the mischief has gone. It has been claimed that practice checks to some extent the activities of the wood-worm, but it would not be wise to trust to playing as a cure. Your best plan is to send the instrument to some London expert repairer and ask for a report. (2.) Vincenzo Panormo is a well-known maker, and his best instruments command a good price. There are no peculiarities attached to his models, which mostly imitated closely and successfully the large pattern Stradivari. Neatness and finished workmanship are his characteristics —well cut f holes and scrolls. You may find in an authentic label the arms of the city of Palermo, at the right-hand side. (3.) We do not know that any Spohr concerto has been recorded for the gramophone. (4.) For obvious reasons we cannot give advice as to the choice of teacher.

E. P.—(1.) A sense of time and rhythm can be cultivated only by suitable studies. Begin by playing and hearing music with strong and direct rhythmical schemes. Get a friend to play or tap out ear-tests in rhythm, which you should write down. Aim at being able to think of a piece of music in terms of rhythm as you now think of it in terms of melody and harmony. (2.) Decidedly you should know something about the various bowings before attempting to write for strings. Read a good violin tutor on this point, and get a player to illustrate; also study the string-writing in standard music. (3.) We know of no analytical edition of the Haydn and Mendelssohn Trios. Why not study Musical Form and Analysis (a very attractive and not over-difficult subject), and so be able to get to the heart of things yourself?

A. G.—The academical dress of the R.C.O. diplomées is: for Associates, cap and gown; for Fellows, cap, gown and hood.

AMBITIOUS.—Certainly you should register with the Teachers' Registration Council. As for your prospects, we should say that musically, and in view of your youth, they seem to be good. But you will, we are sure (or at least we hope) not be offended if we remind you of the importance of general culture. If you aspire to be music mistress in a good school you will find there is much that matters outside music. Your letter strikes us as being, in caligraphy and diction, about two years younger than your years. We feel bound to tell you this. Such things are important, not only in themselves, but as signs. Forgive us! It is for your own good.

T. S.—Have nothing to do with publishers who make demands such as those you describe. You will be simply throwing your money away. We are bound to say that we don't see much of an opening for you as a composer, seeing that you are able to do no more than write unaccompanied dance-melodies. Get them harmonized and properly arranged before submitting them to a publisher. You say you are 'unemployed, and in a bad way as regards money.' You have our sympathy and good wishes, but we do not advise you to build great hopes on composition as a means of livelihood.

NARKY.—(1.) Novello's publish a collection of the sort you inquire about—'Twelve Introits or Short Anthems,' by Arcadelt, Armes, Ouseley, Palestrina, Tye, Stainer, Wesley, &c. For Bach chorales with English words, try the Novello set of thirteen. (2.) Novello's will send selections of anthems which you may retain for a fortnight on approval. When asking for such a selection, give particulars as to the style, length, and degree of difficulty required.

ANXIOUS.—You 'know all the scales from memory,' and appear to be a capable pianist; and now you 'want to get into the song-and-dance line.' Your best plan seems to be to prepare a batch of up-to-date dances, and get a conductor, or a dancing instructor, or proprietor of a dance hall, to hear what you can do. You wonder if your age is against you. What? Too old at thirty-seven? Ridic!

R. H.—In all the matters you inquire about we think you should act on the advice of your 'coach.' We cannot undertake to recommend a teacher. Good correspondence tutors abound, and you must choose the one whose advertised qualifications seem most suited to your needs. Having made your selection, place yourself in his hands as to choice of degree, &c.

GUIDA.—It is difficult to say exactly where the 'slides' come. We should say that in both cases they should be played on the beat. But in actual performance it might be only an approximation. We do not think you need worry about it. If your playing of the passages is spirited and rhythmical, you can't very well be wrong.

SCHERZO.—(Accompanist for A.R.C.M. flute examination.) (1.) The College will give you a list of accompanists, but you must make your own arrangements with the chosen one as to terms and rehearsal. (2.) The pianofortes at the College are tuned to low pitch.

D. H. A.—Try the following from Novello's Music Primers Series: 'Musical Forms,' Pauer; 'Harmony,' Stainer; 'Counterpoint,' Bridge; 'Analysis of Form, as displayed in Beethoven's Pianoforte Sonatas,' Harding; and 'Musical Appreciation,' Foxell.

NOTATION.—The tenor clef is rarely used in modern English choral music. It is, of course, to be preferred to the customary treble clef, marked 8ve lower, but custom is too strong for logic, and publishers have to toe the line accordingly.

J. M. F.-C.—We cannot here go fully into the questions of whole-tone and duodecuple scale systems. You will find them discussed, with many kindred matters, in Eaglefield-Hull's 'Modern Harmony' (Augener).

E. R. T.—You will find ample information for your purpose in 'Carols: their Origin, Music, and connection with Mystery Plays,' by J. W. Phillips (Routledge). Look up the article in 'Grove' as well.

SUPERTONIC SEVENTH.—Of the first two distinctions you mention, the L.R.A.M. diploma is by far the higher. The third is of little value.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE.
Gustav Holst: Notes for a Biography (I.). By Richard Capell	1073
Some Notes on 'My Ladye Nevells Booke.' By Charles van den Borren	1075
Music with Tears. By Frank Howes	1076
Wireless and the Concert-Goer. By Thomas Armstrong	1078
Theoretical Teaching: Some Suggestions for Reform. By Cyril Bradley Rootham	1080
Ad Libitum. By 'Feste'	1081
Dr. Blow's Church Music and its Deformities. By Heathcote D. Statham (concluded)	1083
Points from Lectures	1085
Ravel's Pianoforte Technique. By Henri Gil-Marchex	1087
Music in the Foreign Press. By M.-D. Calvocoressi	1090
A Neglected Opera: Gluck's 'Alceste.' By L. N. C. Barnaby	1091
Permanent British Opera in London. By Mrs. Albert de Belleroche	1094
New Music	1095
The Musician's Bookshelf	1098
Occasional Notes	1109
Player-Piano Notes	1110
Gramophone Notes. By 'Discus'	1110
Church and Organ Music	1112
Royal College of Organists	1112
Liverpool Cathedral.—Specification of the Organ (illustrated)	1114
Letters to the Editor	1116
The Amateurs' Exchange	1118
Sharps and Flats	1118
Society of Women Musicians	1118
Visit of a Famous Czech Choir: The Prague Teachers	1118
The Bristol Opera Season	1119
Eastbourne Musical Festival	1119
The New Buildings of the Royal Academy of Music (illustrated)	1120
Royal Academy of Music	1121
Royal College of Music	1121
Trinity College of Music	1122
London Concerts	1122
Competition Festival Record	1126
Blackpool Festival	1126
Music in the Provinces	1126
Music in Scotland	1128
Music in Wales	1129
Music in Ireland	1130
Musical Notes from Abroad	1130
Francis Koeller: An Appreciation (with portrait)	1133
Obituary	1134
Miscellaneous	1135
Answers to Correspondents	1135

MUSIC.

'A Lullaby Carol.' By Geoffrey Shaw	1101

FOUR EXTRA SUPPLEMENTS given with this number:

(1.) Organ in Liverpool Cathedral.

(2.) 'While shepherds watched their flocks.' Carol. By C. Lee Williams.

(3.) 'O lovely voices of the sky.' Carol. By H. A. Chambers.

(4.) 'The Christ-Child.' Carol. Arranged for S.A.T.B. By George Rathbone.

DURING THE LAST MONTH.

Published by NOVELLO & CO., LIMITED.

BACH, J. S.—"Now at Thy feet creation lies." Chorale from the Cantata, "Praise our God Who reigns." (No. 254, Novello's Short Anthems.) 2d.

BIZET, G.—"Carmen." Concert Edition. Book of Words. 4Is. 8d. per 100.

CHAMBERS, H. A.—"Hush! for amid our tears." Hymn for an Armistice (or Memorial) Service. (No. 1146, Novello's Parish Choir Book.) 1½d.

ECKERSLEY, REV. J.—The Responsive Psalter, containing the Psalms set to Chant-Forms, in accordance with the Parallelisms of Hebrew Poetry. Edited and Revised by JOHN BROOK and GEORGE OLDROYD. Cloth. 5s. net.

ELGAR, EDWARD.—"The Reveille." Part-song arranged for S.A.T.B. (No. 1431, Novello's Part-song Book.) 8d.

GERMAN, EDWARD.—"It was a lover and his lass." Two-part Song. (No. 228, Novello's Two-part Songs.) 4d.

HANDEL.—"There let Hymen oft appear." Air for Tenor, from "L'Allegro." (No. 466, Series of Handel's Songs, Duets, &c.) 1s.

HARWOOD, BASIL.—Processional. Op. 44 (No. 19, Harwood's Original Compositions for the Organ.) 2s.

HAVERGAL, CECILIA.—"God's Christmas is come." Carol. 1d.

HOLST, GUSTAV.—Part-songs for Female Voices and Strings. Op. 44.

No. 1. "Say, who is this?" (No. 509, Novello's Trios, Quartets, &c.) 4d.

2. "O love, I complain." (No. 510, Novello's Trios, Quartets, &c.) 3d.

3. "Angel Spirits of Sleep." (No. 511, Novello's Trios, Quartets, &c.) 3d.

4. "When first we met." (No. 512, Novello's Trios, Quartets, &c.) 4d.

5. "Sorrow and Joy." (No. 513, Novello's Trios, Quartets, &c.) 3d.

6. "Love on my heart from Heaven fell." (No. 514, Novello's Trios, Quartets, &c.) 3d.

LAMBERT, J.—Vesper Hymn ("Draw near, O Lord"). On card. 1½d.

MASSER, J. T.—Vesper ("Saviour, breathe an evening blessing"). 3d.

MONCKTON, EDWARD.—"Bright and cheerful is the morn." Carol. 1½.

NOVELLO'S CHRISTMAS CAROLS:

No. 431. "O lovely voices of the sky." H. A. CHAMBERS 1½d.

432. "The Christ-Child." Arr. for S.A.T.B. G. RATHBONE 2d.

434. "While shepherds watched their flocks." C. LEE WILLIAMS 1½d.

PICKARD-CAMBRIDGE, W. H.—"Remember, O thou man." Carol for Unaccompanied Voices. Old English words and melody arranged. 4d.

—— Three Carols for Unaccompanied Voices:

No. 1. "O Son of our God, O Son of a Maid."
2. "Jewry came to Jebus-Salem."
3. "There is no rose of such virtue."
(Complete.) 3d.

SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW, No. 414, contains the following music in both notations:—"O Holy Night." Arr. for Soprano Solo and Two-part Chorus. ADOLPHE ADAM. "The Shepherd." Unison Song. C. M. VON WEBER. 2d.

SCHOOL SONGS.—Published in two forms. A. Voice Parts in Staff and Tonic Sol-fa Notations, with Pianoforte Accompaniment (8vo). B. Voice Parts only, in Tonic Sol-fa Notation.

Book 173.	Six Classical Songs by Various Composers.	8d.	—
No. 1406.	"It was a lover and his lass." Two-part Song. EDWARD GERMAN	—	3d.
No. 1439.	"Sweeter than Songs of Summer." Carol. Arr. as a Unison Song, with ad lib. second part. J. F. BRIDGE	3d.	—

SHAW, GEOFFREY.—A Lullaby Carol. S.A.T.B. (No. 1006, The Musical Times.) 2d.

—— "While shepherds watched their flocks." Hymn for Christmas. Tune, "Winchester Old," Arr. with Descant. (No. 1117, Novello's Parish Choir Book.) 1½d.

TONIC SOL-FA SERIES:

No. 2522. "The Reveille." Part-song arr. for S.A.T.B. EDWARD ELGAR 6d.

WATSON, EDWARD.—"Braille" Music-Notation. Elementary Lessons and Exercises. (No. 59, Novello's Music Primers and Educational Series.) 2s. 6d. net.

WEBER, C. M. VON.—"Chorus of Elves," from "Oberon." Arr. as a Trio for Female Voices. (No. 516, Novello's Trios, Quartets, &c.) 3d.

DURING THE LAST MONTH—(Continued).
PUBLISHED FOR
THE H. W. GRAY CO., NEW YORK.

ALLEN, R.—"The Quest Eternal." Christmas Carol. Mixed Voices. (No. 843, Church Music Review.) 15 cents (8d.).

BAUER, W.—Te Deum Laudamus, in E flat. (No. 816, Church Music Review.) 20 cents (10d.).

GEER, E. H.—"Noël." Women's Voices. (No. 822, Church Music Review.) 12 cents (6d.).

HALL, J. H.—"Sleeping the Christ-Child lay." Carol. Alto Solo and Mixed Voices. (No. 832, Church Music Review.) 12 cents (6d.).

JEWELL, L.—"The Bells of Youth." Part-song for Women's Voices, with Soprano Solo. (No. 334, Modern Series.) 15 cents (8d.).

MACKINNON, H. A. — A Bethlehem Carol. Women's Voices. (No. 835, Church Music Review.) 12 cents (6d.).

VORIS, W. R.—"O Brightness of the Immortal Father's Face." Anthem for Mixed Voices. (No. 838, Church Music Review.) 10 cents (6d.).

WEBBE, W. Y.—"Jesu, be to me a Saviour." Anthem. (No. 836, Church Music Review.) 10 cents (6d.).

WILLIAMS, D. McK. — "Darest thou now, O soul." Anthem for General Use. (No. 846, Church Music Review.) 12 cents (6d.).

WYATT, E. W.—The Children's Eucharist. Unison. (No. 811, Church Music Review.) 20 cents (10d.).

A. BUTCHART
(TENOR, Paris, Milan).
Specialises in Voice Production (voce libera), Italian, French, Operas, Moderns, &c.
Studios: 65, Wigmore Street, W.1.

WANTED.—EFFICIENT ORGANIST for Christ Church, Cockfosters. Salary by arrangement, according to qualifications. Apply, with copies of testimonials, to Rev. B. C. Hopson, The Vicarage, Cockfosters, Barnet.

ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER for S.W. London Church. Three-manual organ. Sunday Services. Opportunity for Musical Society. Salary, £22 per annum. Reply, "Alpha," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street W.1.

TENOR (Second) WANTED for St. Peter's, Bayswater. £12 per annum. Good reader. Write, Leonard Butler, 28, St. Stephen's Avenue, Ealing, W.13.

TENOR WANTED for St. Mark's Church, Surbiton. £20. Apply, R. Frederic Tyler, F.R.C.O., 8, Lingfield Avenue, Kingston-on-Thames.

TENOR WANTED for Free Church Choir, in N.W. London. Two Sunday Services and Friday evening practice. Address, "C. N. A.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

CHRIST CHURCH, CHELSEA. ALTO WANTED. £15 per annum. Write, "Alto," 5, Oakley Crescent, Chelsea, S.W.3.

REGINALD A. JEVONS, R.C.M. (Brussels), A.R.C.M. Intending candidates for R.C.M., R.A.M., T.C.L. Exams, see November issue, Musical Times. Prospectus, 33, Braydon Road, London, N.16.

"NOVELTY" VIOLIN BRIDGE. 2*s*. Beautiful effect. Testimonials and particulars, for stamp. Miss White, Penmere Terrace, Falmouth.

HARPIST-VOCALIST GIVES LESSONS. Terms mod. Mrs. Selway, 131, Highbury New Park, N.5.

WANTED TO PURCHASE IMMEDIATELY by Mus. Bac., A.R.C.O. A teaching connection, country preferred. "G. F. A.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ON SALE.—Vocal scores—"Messiah," "Creation," "Hymn of Praise"; Prout's "Orchestra," "Musical Form," "Applied Form," "Fugal Analysis." Organ and Orchestral Music. Fletcher, 6, Brown Street, Manchester.

BAILLIE HAMILTON ORGAN FOR SALE.—Twelve Stops, two Manuals and Pedals. With electric motor. Magnificent instrument. For particulars apply, "F. A. E.," 47, Queens Road, Wimbledon, S.W.19.

WILL C. P. LANDI communicate with Haulfryn, Rhyl?

HOW TO SING
HOW TO TEACH SINGING
These Intensive Courses reveal the "SECRET" of Vocal Success (Performer and Teacher), showing clearly why so many Teachers fail to obtain the satisfactory results they wish from their pupils.
PERSONAL TUITION. CORRESPONDENCE TUITION.
Twenty-Seven years' unbroken success.
A recent testimonial: "Your lessons throw light on every difficulty and leave an open path for the teacher."
WILLIAM WOLLER,
37, CASTLETOWN ROAD, BARON'S COURT, LONDON, W.14.

A PROGRAMME NOVELTY.

SIX ORGAN RECITAL PIECES
BY BRITISH BLIND COMPOSERS.

		s.	d.
BOHEMESQUE (Written in 15-8 time)	William Wolstenholme	2	6
(Performed by Dr. Alfred Hollins at the Opening of the Grand Organ, Johannesburg Town Hall, South Africa.)
RONDINO (D flat) ...	William Wolstenholme	2	0
MINUET ANTIQUE (D flat)	Horace F. Watling	2	0
MARCHE HÉROÏQUE (E flat) (Written for the opening of Johannesburg Town Hall Organ.)	Horace F. Watling	2	6
TOCCATA in D minor	T. G. Osborn	2	6
FANTASIA in E	T. G. Osborn	2	6

Many of the great Organ Recitalists of the day—e.g., Mr. H. L. BALFOUR, Mr. G. D. CUNNINGHAM, Mr. CLARENCE EDDY, Mr. H. F. ELLINGFORD, Mr. REGINALD GOSS-CUSTARD, Dr. ALFRED HOLLINS, Mr. ARTHUR MEALE, Mr. HERBERT WALTON—are including the above Organ Works very frequently in their programmes.

ROLAND DIGGLE, Mus. Doc., Los Angeles, California, writes:
"I am sure you will be pleased to know that the Six Organ Pieces that you publish for the National Institute for the Blind have proved the most popular pieces that I have played during the past season, in fact I am continually getting requests to include some of them in my programmes."

RYALLS & JONES, LTD., Music Publishers,
107-109, GRANGE ROAD, BIRKENHEAD.
London Agents: EVANS & CO. (Wells Castle), LTD.,
72, Wells Street, Oxford Street, London, W.1.

THE "SIMPLEXA" FINGER TRAINER
(Registered No. 692810.)
FOR ALL INSTRUMENTALISTS.
A SIMPLE AND VERY EFFECTIVE APPLIANCE FOR GIVING STRENGTH AND FLEXIBILITY TO THE FINGERS.

Extract from "Musical Times."—"We have given a trial to the 'Simplexa Pocket Finger Trainer,' and have no hesitation in recommending it to our readers as a means of stretching the fingers and keeping them generally in good playing condition. Instrumentalists who are travelling, or unable to obtain regular practice, will find the appliance a boon. It is well-named, being simplicity itself, and so portable that it can be carried in the waistcoat pocket."
IMPROVED MODEL, 2*s*. 6*d*., POST FREE.
1, LONGFORD TERRACE, FOLKESTONE.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

To insure insertion in their proper positions, Advertisements for the next issue should reach the Office, 160, Wardour Street, London, W.1, not later than FRIDAY, DECEMBER 17 (FIRST POST).

CANTATAS FOR CHRISTMAS

THE HOLY CHILD

FOR SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BASS SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORGAN

THE MUSIC BY

T. ADAMS.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence;
Tonic Sol-fa, Eightpence.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

THE NATIVITY

FOR SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BASS SOLI AND CHORUS

With Hymns to be sung by the Congregation
(THE WORDS AND HYMNS SELECTED)

THE MUSIC BY

T. ADAMS.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence;
Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

†CHRISTMAS ORATORIO

THE MUSIC BY

J. S. BACH.

Divided into six sections, intended originally for separate performance on the three days of Christmas, New Year's Day, New Year's Sunday, and the Festival of the Epiphany.

Price, Paper Cover, Three Shillings.
Boards, 4s.; Cloth, 6s.
Vocal Parts, One Shilling and Sixpence each.
Parts 1 and 2, 1s. 6d.; Parts 3 and 4, 1s. 6d.
Parts 5 and 6, 1s. 6d.
Tonic Sol-fa (Parts 1 and 2), 8d.
Book of Words, complete (per 100), 12s. 6d.
Books of Words, Parts 1 and 2 (per 100), 6s. 6d.

†CHRISTIANS, GRAVE YE THIS GLAD DAY

(CHRISTEN ÄTZET DIESEN TAG!)

A Christmas-Day Cantata (S.A.T.B. Soli)

Edited by J. E. WEST. English Words by C. AVELING.

THE MUSIC BY

J. S. BACH.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

†BEFORE THE PALING OF THE STARS

A CHRISTMAS HYMN

(FOR VOICES AND ORCHESTRA)

THE WORDS BY

C. ROSSETTI.

THE MUSIC BY

B. J. DALE.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.
Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling.

THE COMING OF THE KING

CANTATA FOR FEMALE VOICES

THE WORDS BY

H. M. BURNSIDE.

THE MUSIC BY

M. B. FOSTER.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence;
Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling.
Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.

†CHRISTMAS EVE

FOR CONTRALTO SOLO, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

THE MUSIC BY

N. W. GADE.

Price, Paper Cover, One Shilling and Sixpence.
Boards, Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Tonic Sol-fa, Sixpence.

CHRISTMAS CANTATA

FOR SOLI AND CHORUS

THE WORDS BY

R. D. BETJEMANN.

THE MUSIC BY

J. HARRISON.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.
Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.

†FIRST CHRISTMAS MORN

THE WORDS BY

S. J. STONE.

THE MUSIC BY

H. LESLIE.

Price, Vocal Score, Four Shillings.
Vocal Parts, Eightpence each.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

BETHLEHEM

FOR FOUR SOLO VOICES AND CHORUS

Interspersed with Hymns to be sung by the Congregation.

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND ARRANGED BY

E. C. NUNN.

THE MUSIC BY

J. H. MAUNDER.

Price Three Shillings;
Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling and Sixpence.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

†THE STORY OF BETHLEHEM

FOR SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BASS SOLI CHORUS AND ORGAN

THE WORDS BY

S. WENSLEY.

THE MUSIC BY

J. E. WEST.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence;
Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

† Full Score and Orchestral Parts may be had.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

ANTHEMS, &c., FOR CHRISTMAS.

JUST PUBLISHED.

H. W. JONES.

THERE WERE SHEPHERDS.

Price Fourpence.

RECENTLY PUBLISHED.

P. E. FLETCHER.

NOW ONCE AGAIN

CAROL-ANTHEM.

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.
Ditto, Female Voices, Fourpence.

G. RATHBONE.

AND WE BEHELD HIS GLORY

Price Fourpence: Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

SELECTED LIST.

A. ADAM.

O HOLY NIGHT

ARRANGED AS ANTHEM FOR SOPRANO (OR TENOR) SOLO AND CHORUS.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

T. ADAMS.

ARISE, SHINE, O JERUSALEM

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

T. ADAMS.

THOU ART MY SON

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

W. G. ALCOCK.

BREAK FORTH INTO JOY

Price Fourpence.

E. C. BAIRSTOW.

OF THE FATHER'S LOVE BEGOTTEN

Price Fourpence.

C. BAYLEY.

GLORY TO GOD IN THE HIGHEST

Price Twopence: Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

J. F. BRIDGE.

IN THAT DAY

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

E. BUNNETT.

ARISE, SHINE, FOR THY LIGHT IS COME

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

E. BUNNETT.

BEHOLD, I BRING YOU GOOD TIDINGS

Price Threepence.

E. BUNNETT.

IN THE BEGINNING WAS THE WORD

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

H. A. CHAMBERS.

ARISE, SHINE, FOR THY LIGHT IS COME

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

P. E. FLETCHER.

RING OUT, WILD BELLS

FESTIVAL CAROL

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Fourpence.
Ditto, T.T.B.B., Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Fourpence.
Ditto, S.S.A., Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.
Ditto, S.A., Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

M. B. FOSTER.

CHRIST'S INCARNATION

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

CH. GOUNOD.

NAZARETH

ARRANGED FOR BARITONE SOLO AND CHORUS.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

E. V. HALL.

WHILE SHEPHERDS WATCHED

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

A. HOLLINS.

SING, O HEAVENS

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

C. H. LLOYD.

REJOICE GREATLY, O DAUGHTER OF ZION

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

A. W. MARCHANT.

O COME, REDEEMER OF MANKIND

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

J. H. MAUNDER.

SING, O HEAVENS

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

G. SHAW.

HOW FAR IS IT TO BETHLEHEM

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.
Ditto, Unison Setting, Twopence.
Ditto, S.S.C., Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

C. V. STANFORD.

WHILE SHEPHERDS WATCHED

Price Fourpence.

B. STEANE.

LET US NOW GO EVEN UNTO BETHLEHEM

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

B. STEANE.

SING, O HEAVENS

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

A. S. SULLIVAN.

SING, O HEAVENS

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

J. E. WEST.

A SONG OF JOY

Price Fourpence: Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

A. W. WILSON.

WITH ALL THY HOSTS

Price Twopence.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NOVELLO'S LIST OF WORKS SUITABLE FOR PRESENTS.

	s.	d.
BACH, J. S.—His Work and Influence on the Music of Germany, 1685-1750. By PHILIPP SPITTA. Three Vols. net	26	6
—— Chorales. Collected and arranged in melodic order by H. E. BUTTON	10	6
—— Solos from the Church Cantatas. Twelve Books... each	1	6
BARNBY, JOSEPH—Original Hymn Tunes ... ... cloth	5	6
BEETHOVEN—Sonatas. A. ZIMMERMANN. Folio, cloth, 20s.; 8vo, cloth, 11s. 6d.; 8vo, Rutland roan	13	6
BENNETT, STERNDALE—Twelve Songs ... ... cloth	4	0
BERLIOZ—A Treatise on Modern Instrumentation and Orchestration ... ... cloth, net	11	6
BORREN, CHARLES VAN DEN.—The Sources of Keyboard Music in England ... ... cloth, net	10	6
BRIDGE, J. F.—A Westminster Pilgrim. A record of Service in Church, Cathedral, University, and Concert-Room paper cover, net	10	6
—— The Old Cryes of London. With numerous illustrations and musical examples ... ... paper cover, net	7	0
—— AND FRANK J. SAWYER—A Course of Harmony ...	5	6
BURGESS, FRANCIS.—The Teaching and Accompaniment of Plainsong ... ... cloth, net	5	6
CATALOGUE OF THE MUSIC LOAN EXHIBITION BY THE WORSHIPFUL COMPANY OF MUSICIANS. 1904. Illustrated ... ... paper cover, net	42	0
CHOPIN, FREDERICK—As a Man and Musician. By FREDERICK NIECKS. Two Vols. ... ... net	25	0
CATHEDRAL PRAYER BOOK (with Music):—
No. 1. Demy 8vo, 628 pp., large type. With Canticles and Psalter pointed for chanting cloth, bevelled, red edges, net	9	0
Ditto... ... ... red basil, red edges, net	12	0
No. 2. Demy 8vo, 600 pp., large type. With Canticles and Psalter pointed, set to appropriate Chants (Cathedral Psalter Chants) ... ... cloth, bevelled, red edges, net	9	0
Ditto... ... ... red basil, red edges, net	12	0
No. 3. Imperial 32mo, 696 pp. Pocket Edition. With Canticles and Psalter pointed for chanting cloth, bevelled, red edges, net, 5s. 6d.; red basil, red edges, net	7	6
(A large selection of Special Bindings and India Paper Editions always in Stock.)
CHRISTMAS CAROLS NEW AND OLD— Library Edition, with Historical Preface Roxburgh binding, net	11	6
Ordinary Edition... ... ... cloth, gilt	6	0
—— Ditto. Beautifully Illustrated (Series 1 and 2 only) cloth, gilt, net	11	6
COWARD, HENRY.—Choral Technique and Interpretation. cloth, net	7	6
CUMMINGS, W. H.—God save the King. The Origin and History of the Music and Words ... cloth, gilt, net	5	6
—— Dr. Arne and "Rule, Britannia" ... cloth, gilt, net	5	6
DESCANT HYMN TUNE-BOOK ... Books 1 and 2... each	2	0
Vocal Parts only, each	0	8
DAY, CAPTAIN C. R.—The Music and Musical Instruments of Southern India and the Deccan. Illustrated with Seventeen Plates. Handsomely bound ... ... net	73	6
—— Ditto. Artist's proof copies, on finest Japanese paper net	147	0
DOLMETSCH, ARNOLD.—The Interpretation of the Music of the 17th and 18th Centuries ... ... cloth	15	0
DYKES, J. B.—Hymn Tunes and Litanies ... cloth, gilt	7	6
ELLIOTT, J. W.—National Nursery Rhymes paper boards, net, 5s. 6d.; cloth, gilt, net	7	6
—— Hymn Tunes ... ... cloth, gilt	2	6
ENGEL, CARL.—Researches into the Early History of the Violin Family ... ... cloth, net	11	6
ENGLISH PSALTER ... ... Demy 8vo, net	4	0
Imperial 32mo net	1	6
GRACE, HARVEY—The Organ Works of Bach cloth, net	9	0
—— The Organ Works of Rheinberger ... ... cloth, net	5	0
GROVE, SIR GEORGE—Beethoven and his Nine Symphonies cloth, net	9	0
HANDEL—"Messiah" ... ... folio, cloth	15	0
—— Ditto. Facsimile of the Autograph Full Score cloth, red edges	26	6
HANSLICK, EDUARD—"The Beautiful in Music." Translated by GUSTAV COHEN ... ... cloth, net	6	0
HAUPTMANN, MORITZ—The Letters of a Leipzig Cantor. Translated and arranged by A. D. COLERIDGE. Two Vols. ... ... cloth, gilt, net	26	6
KIMMINS, G. T.—Songs from the Plays of Shakespeare: with Dances and Incidental Music ... lined paper cover	7	6
LEEDS, AGNES HONORIA—My First Piano Lessons. 108 pp., oblong folio, profusely illustrated in colours, bound in coloured paper board covers ... cloth back	7	6
MACKENZIE, A. C.—Eighteen Songs ... ... cloth, gilt	11	6
MARTIN, G. C.—Hymn Tunes ... ... cloth	5	6
MENDELSSOHN—Pianoforte Works (complete). Folio, cloth, gilt, 22s. 6d.; Rutland roan	30	0
8vo, cloth, gilt	10	6
—— Lieder ohne Worte. Complete edition. Eight books. Folio, cloth, gilt, 9s.; Rutland roan	16	6
8vo, cloth, gilt	7	0
—— Ditto. Edited by KARL KLINDWORTH. The Eight Books, Royal 4to, paper, 7s. 6d.; cloth, gilt, 11s. 6d.; Rutland roan	16	6
—— Symphonies ... (Solo), folio, 16s.; (Duet), folio	19	0
—— Overtures ... ... (Solo), folio, 16s.; (Duet), folio	19	0
—— Songs... ... ... folio, cloth, gilt	26	6
8vo, cloth, gilt	9	0
—— Ditto. Deep Voice ... ... 8vo, cloth, gilt	9	0
MOORE—Irish Melodies ... ... folio, cloth, gilt	26	6
MOZART—SONATAS... ... ... folio, cloth, gilt	19	0
8vo, cloth, gilt, 7s. 6d.; Rutland roan	10	6
NIECKS, FREDERICK—Programme Music ... ... net	16	0
PROCESSIONAL HYMN TUNES ... ... cloth, gilt	3	0
RANDEGGER, A.—Sacred Songs for Little Singers. Words by FRANCES RIDLEY HAVERGAL. Illustrated cloth, gilt	7	6
RUBINSTEIN—Eighteen Two-part Songs ... cloth, gilt	7	0
SCHUMANN—Original Compositions for the Pianoforte. Edited by A. ZIMMERMANN. In Three Folio Vols., cloth, gilt, each	20	0
—— Ditto., Vol. I. ... ... 8vo, cloth, gilt	11	6
—— Pianoforte Album for the Young ... ... cloth, gilt	7	0
—— Songs. Edited by N. MACFARREN ... folio, cloth, gilt	16	0
—— Vocal Album. Containing thirty of his most celebrated Songs ... ... cloth, gilt	7	0
SHIRLAW, MATTHEW.—The Theory of Harmony: An Inquiry into the Natural Principles of Harmony. cloth, net	15	0
STAINER, J.—A Theory of Harmony. With Questions and Exercises for the use of Students ... ... cloth	11	6
—— A Dictionary of Musical Terms. By J. STAINER and W. A. BARRETT. Revised (1898) Edition cloth, gilt, net	11	6
STAINER, J.—The Music of the Bible. New edition with additional illustrations and supplementary notes by the REV. F. W. GALPIN, M.A., F.L.S. ... ... cloth, net	7	6
STAINER, J., J. F. R., AND C., AND E. W. B. NICHOLSON—Dufay and his Contemporaries. Fifty Compositions, with Facsimiles ... ... net	42	0
—— Early Bodleian Music. Vol. I. containing 110 Facsimiles of MS. Music. Vol. II. containing their transcriptions into Modern Notation. The Two Vols., large folio, half morocco, net	126	0
STAINER, J. F. R., and E. W. B. NICHOLSON—Early Bodleian Music (Vol. III.). Introduction to the study of some of the Oldest Latin Musical MSS. With 71 Collotype Facsimiles ... ... net	63	0
STANIFORTH, T. W.—Hymn Tunes ... ... cloth, gilt	2	6
SULLIVAN, ARTHUR—Hymn Tunes ... ... cloth, gilt	2	6
THE PSALTER NOTED—To Gregorian Tones (SOLESMES SYSTEM). Edited by H. B. BRIGGS, REV. W. H. FRERE, and JOHN STAINER ... demy 8vo, cloth, gilt, 7s.; Words edition, 2s. 6d. ACCOMPANYING HARMONIES. By W. G. A. SHEBBEARE ... ... super royal 8vo, cloth, net	5	6
TAYLOR, FRANKLIN—Technique and Expression in Pianoforte Playing ... ... cloth, gilt lettered, net	7	6
THAYER, W. A.—Life of Beethoven. Edited by H. E. KREHBIEL. Three Vols. ... ... cloth, net	105	0
WEST, JOHN E.—Cathedral Organists, Past and Present net	7	0

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

VOLUMES OF ORGAN MUSIC

SUITABLE FOR PRESENTS.

ALBUMS FOR THE ORGAN. s. d.
SELECTED PIECES. Nine Vols. paper, each 5 6
DITTO cloth, each 7 6

ALCOCK, W. G.
THE ORGAN ... ... paper 6 0
DITTO ... ... paper boards 7 0

ARCHER, FREDERIC.
THE ORGANIST'S JOURNAL ... cloth 19 0
THE ORGAN. A Theoretical and Practical Treatise ... ... paper 7 6
DITTO ... ... cloth 11 6

BACH, J. S.
GRAND STUDIES. Consisting of Preludes, Fugues, Toccatas, &c. 16 6
THE ORGAN WORKS. Edited by J. F. BRIDGE, JAMES HIGGS, &c.
Vol. I. (Containing Books 1-5) cloth 15 0
Vol. II. (Containing Books 6-10) cloth 15 0
Vol. III. (Containing Books 11-14) cloth 15 0
THE CHURCH PRELUDES:
Book XV. Orgelbüchlein 7 6
Book XVI.-XIX. ... ... each 5 6
Book XX. The Chorales only ... 5 6

BEST, W. T.
ARRANGEMENTS FROM SCORES OF THE GREAT MASTERS. 5 Vols., cloth, each 36 0
FIFTEEN CELEBRATED MARCHES. Arranged from Scores of the Great Masters ... ... paper 7 6
DITTO ... ... cloth 10 6
COLLECTION OF PIECES FOR CHURCH USE ... ... cloth 11 6
SIX CONCERT PIECES 12 0
ART OF ORGAN-PLAYING ... ...Part I. 4 6
DITTO ... ... Part II. 11 6

GOUNOD, CH.
A SELECTION OF MOVEMENTS FROM "THE REDEMPTION." Arr. by G. C. MARTIN 7 6
A SELECTION OF MOVEMENTS FROM "MORS ET VITA." Arr. by G. C. MARTIN ... 7 6

HANDEL.
SIX ORGAN CONCERTOS ... ... paper 7 6
DITTO ... ... cloth 11 6

HILES, JOHN.
SHORT VOLUNTARIES. Five Vols., cloth, ea. 7 6

HOLLINS, ALFRED.
ORIGINAL COMPOSITIONS ... ... paper 11 6
DITTO ... ... cloth 15 0

LÉFÈBURE-WÉLY.
SIX GRAND OFFERTOIRES 4 0
THE MODERN ORGANIST ... ... cloth 15 0

LEMMENS, J.
FOUR ORGAN PIECES IN THE FREE STYLE 6 0
TROIS SONATES 11 6

LEMARE, EDWIN H.
THE RECITAL SERIES OF ORIGINAL COMPOSITIONS FOR THE ORGAN: s. d.
Vol. I. (Nos. 1-6) ... ... cloth 11 6
Vol. II. (Nos. 7-12) ... ... „ 11 6
Vol. III. (Nos. 13-18) ... ... „ 11 6
Vol. IV. (Nos. 19-24) ... ... „ 11 6
Vol. V. (Nos. 25-30) ... ... „ 11 6
Vol. VI. (Nos. 31-36) ... ... „ 11 6
Vol. VII. (Nos. 37-42) ... ... „ 11 6
Vol. VIII. (Nos. 43-48) ... ... „ 11 6

MENDELSSOHN.
SIX GRAND SONATAS, AND THREE PRELUDES AND FUGUES. Edited by W. T. Best ... ... paper 7 6
DITTO ... ... cloth 11 6
TWELVE LIEDER OHNE WORTE. Arranged for Organ ... Paper cover, oblong 4 6

POPULAR MARCHES FOR THE ORGAN.
In Four Vols. ... ... paper, each 7 0
DITTO, DITTO ... ... cloth, each 10 0

RHEINBERGER, JOSEF.
ORIGINAL COMPOSITIONS FOR THE ORGAN:
In Two Vols ... ... paper, each 9 0
DITTO ... cloth, gilt lettered, each 13 0

RINK, C. H.
PRACTICAL ORGAN SCHOOL. Edited by W. T. BEST ... ... cloth 16 0

SMART, HENRY.
ORGAN WORKS. Two Vols. ... each 11 6
DITTO ... ... cloth, gilt, each 16 0

SPARK, W.
THE ORGANIST'S QUARTERLY JOURNAL. Nine Vols. ... ... cloth, each 26 0

THE VILLAGE ORGANIST.
Vol. I. (Books 1-6) Elegantly bound in cloth 9 0
Vol. II. (Books 7-12) ... Ditto, ditto 9 0
Vol. III. (Books 13-18) ... „ „ 9 0
Vol. IV. (Books 19-24) ... „ „ 9 0
Vol. V. (Books 25-30) ... „ „ 9 0
Vol. VI. (Books 31-36) ... „ „ 9 0
Vol. VII. (Books 37-42) ... „ „ 9 0
Vol. VIII. (Books 43-48) ... „ „ 9 0

TWENTY SHORT AND EASY PIECES.
SIX SETS ... ... paper, each 4 0
DITTO ... ... cloth, each 6 0

WESTBROOK, W. J.
VOLUNTARIES FOR THE ORGAN. Three Vols. ... ... cloth, each 16 0
THE YOUNG ORGANIST. Two Vols. cloth, each 11 6

WOLSTENHOLME, W.
ORIGINAL COMPOSITIONS ... ... paper 11 6
DITTO ... ... cloth 15 0

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

"Such settings as these cannot do otherwise than tend to popularise the Church Service."—Musical Standard, June 6, 1891.
"Good, effective, easy, and dignified."—Musical Times, April 1, 1891.
"Admirably adapted to meet the requirements of the majority of choirs and congregations." "Deserve extensive recognition and use."—Musical News, September 4 and 25, 1891.
Also recommended by the Guardian, Church Times, &c., &c.

POPULAR CHURCH MUSIC
BY
J. H. MAUNDER

	Staff Notation.	Tonic Sol-fa.
CHRISTMAS ANTHEMS.
Anthem—Christians, Awake	4d.	3d.
Carol—Once in Bethlehem	3d.	2d.
Two Christmas Carols	4d.	3d.
SERVICES
SERVICE IN G	2s.	1s. 4d.
Or, separately:—
Te Deum	4d.	3d.
Benedicite, omnia Opera	3d.	3d.
Benedictus	3d.	3d.
Jubilate	4d.	3d.
Office for the Holy Communion	10d.	8d.
Pater Noster from the above	3d.	3d.
Amen ditto	1½d.	1½d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis	4d.	3d.
SERVICE IN CHANT FORM (No. 1)	1s. 4d.	10d.
Or, separately:—
Te Deum, &c., with Kyrie	4d.	3d.
Office for the Holy Communion	8d.	6d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis	4d.	3d.
Te Deum in B flat	4d.	3d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in C (partly Unison)	4d.	2d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in D	4d.	3d.
ORGAN.
Voix Seraphique (for Recitals)	2s. 6d.	—
CHURCH CANTATA.
Penitence, Pardon, and Peace (for general use)	2s.	1s. 4d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

TEXT-BOOKS
BY
ALBERT HAM, MUS. DOC., F.R.C.O.

OUTLINES OF MUSICAL FORM
WITH ANALYSES FROM
WELL-KNOWN CLASSICAL WORKS.

Price ... Five Shillings.

"In all respects this is an admirable little work, with no waste, no hiatus of a serious nature, handy in size, and with a practical scheme well carried through."—Musical Times.

DR. C. W. PEARCE, in alluding to the above work, says:

"Quite the best I have ever seen, and I shall lose no opportunity for recommending it."

THE RUDIMENTS OF MUSIC AND ELEMENTARY HARMONY.
THIRD EDITION.

Price ... Five Shillings.

"Dr. Ham's admirable little work may be cordially recommended."—Musical Times.

	s.	d.
MINUET AND TRIO FOR ORGAN	2	0
PEDAL AND MANUAL SCALES AND ARPEGGIOS	2	6
ANTHEMS: The desert shall rejoice. S. or T. Solo and Chorus (S.A.T.B.)	0	3
I heard the Voice of Jesus say. Bar. Solo and Chorus (T.T.B.B.)	0	4
PART-SONG: Music, when soft voices die (S.A.T.B.)	0	3

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

CAROLS BY JOSEPH C. BRIDGE.

M.A., D. Mus. Oxon. et Dunelm.; F.S.A.; Chairman of the Board of Trinity College, London: Professor of Music in the University of Durham.

1. ON CHRISTMAS NIGHT	3d.
2. AWAY WITH GRIEF	3d.
3. THE MERRY CHRISTMAS MORN	3d.
4. HOLY NIGHT	2d.
5. AWAKE THE VOICE (S.S.A. only)	4d.
6. CHRISTMAS IN THE FIELDS (Béarnais Melody)	2d.
7. WHEN CHRIST WAS BORN (Chester Mystery Play)	3d.
8. REJOICE WITH HEART AND VOICE (Old French Melody)	2d.
9. THE SHEPHERDS' CAROL (Coventry Mystery Play)	2d.
10. LULLABY (Coventry Mystery Play)	2d.
11. ACROSS THE SNOW	2d.
12. THE SHEPHERDS HAD AN ANGEL (S.S. only)	2d.
13. ON BETHLEHEM'S HILL	3d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

TWO CAROL MOTETS
FOR EPIPHANY.
"Shine, Calm, and Bright"
AND
"A Carol of the Three Kings"
BY
W. D. V. DUNCOMBE.

WEEKES & Co., 14, HANOVER STREET, W.1.

JUST PUBLISHED.

FINAL BOOK
OF THE
BREARE VOCAL SERIES
No. 5,
"VOCAL ANALYSES:
SENSITISING BREATH—
EMOTIONAL EVOLUTION."

Price 5*s.*, by Post, 5*s.* 4½*d.*

Previous Books of the Series—No. 1, "Vocalism: Its Structure and Culture, from an English Standpoint." No. 2, "Elocution: Its First Principles." No. 3, "Vocal Faults and their Remedies." No. 4, "Vocal Technique: How it Feels to Sing."

Books No. 1 to No. 4, price 3*s.* 6*d.* each, till pre-war editions exhausted.

By W. H. BREARE, J.P., M.I.J., Vocal Adviser.
Address: HERALD BUILDINGS, HARROGATE, ENGLAND.
Publishers—
London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT & Co.
Harrogate: R. ACKRILL, Ltd.

DARLINGTON'S HANDBOOKS.
"Nothing better could be wished for."—British Weekly.

FRENCH AND ITALIAN RIVIERA. 60 Illustrations, Maps and Plans, 6/-.
WEST SWITZERLAND. 100 Illustrations, Maps and Plans, 4/-.
2/- Paris, Lyons, and Rhone Valley.
2/- Chamonix and Environs.
2/- Lake Geneva, Rhone Valley, and Zermatt.
2/- The French Riviera.
2/- The Italian Riviera.
2/- Bernese Oberland and Lucerne.
NORTH WALES. 60 Illustrations, Maps and Plans, 7/6.
DEVON & CORNWALL. 100 Illustrations, Maps and Plans, 7/6.
NORTH DEVON AND NORTH CORNWALL. 50 Illustrations, 6 Maps, 4/-
SOUTH DEVON AND SOUTH CORNWALL. 50 Illustrations, 6 Maps, 4/-.
THE HOTELS OF THE WORLD. A Handbook to the Leading Hotels throughout the World, 2/6.

List of DARLINGTON'S HANDBOOKS post free.
Llangollen: DARLINGTON & Co. London: SIMPKINS. Railway Bookstalls and all Booksellers.
Paris and New York: BRENTANO'S.

JUST PUBLISHED.

AN ABRIDGED CONCERT EDITION OF

SEMELE

A SECULAR ORATORIO

FOR FOUR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

BY

G. F. HANDEL

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE

TONIC SOL-FA, 1s. 6d.

The time of performance of this edition is about two hours, and the orchestral parts have been so cued that it may be performed with accompaniment of: (1) Strings only; (2) Strings and Pianoforte; (3) Strings, or Strings and Pianoforte, with the addition of any Wind up to the complete Score of 2 Oboes, 2 Bassoons, 2 Horns, 2 Trumpets, Drums.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

JUST PUBLISHED.

AN ABRIDGED

CONCERT EDITION

OF

CARMEN

AN OPERA

BY

GEORGES BIZET.

SELECTED AND ADAPTED

BY

W. McNAUGHT.

THE LIBRETTO FROM THE ENGLISH VERSION OF THE COMPLETE OPERA BY

LUCIA YOUNG.

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS.

Tonic Sol-fa, Price 2s.

Book of Words, price 41s. 8d. per 100.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

AN ABRIDGED

CONCERT EDITION

OF

KING ARTHUR

AN OPERA

LIBRETTO BY

JOHN DRYDEN.

MUSIC BY

HENRY PURCELL.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NEW PUBLICATIONS

SELECTED LIST OF NOVELLO'S SCHOOL SONG BOOKS

Songs contained in these Books are, with a few exceptions, issued separately, at prices ranging from 2d. to 4d. each.

VERY EASY UNISON SONGS

BOOK 278.

TWELVE UNISON SONGS FOR JUNIOR CLASSES.

A MOUSE IN THE MOON	J. M. CAPEL
TREES AND FLOWERS OF MAY	GEOFFREY SHAW
DAFFIES AND TULIPS	E. BOYCE
BABY BROTHER MINE	HUNGARIAN MELODY
A CHILD'S GRACE	ROY THOMPSON
ACORN TEA	ALEC ROWLEY
THE GAS-JET	H. A. CHAMBERS
HAREBELLS	E. NEWTON
VIOLETS	G. RATHBONE
GOOD-BYE, GOOD-BYE TO SUMMER	A. RICHARDS
THE CENTIPEDE	ALEC ROWLEY
A SONG OF BOLD ROBIN HOOD	ALEC ROWLEY

PRICE 1s.

BOOK 279.

TWELVE UNISON SONGS FOR JUNIOR CLASSES.

BELLS AND SHELLS	GEOFFREY SHAW
THORN-APPLE TREE	ALEC ROWLEY
THE DREAM LADY	G. RATHBONE
PAT-A-CAKE	W. TAUBERT
THE SLEEPLESS CHILD	R. H. MACDONALD
THE HAY LOFT	R. H. MACDONALD
THE TORTOISE	E. BOYCE
THE MAN IN THE MOON	R. MCLEOD
JACKY, COME, GIVE ME THE FIDDLE	ROY THOMPSON
THE MERRY FISHERMAN	ALEC ROWLEY
SNOWDROPS	A. RICHARDS
WHEAT CRADLES	ALEC ROWLEY

PRICE 1s.

BOOK 281.

TWELVE UNISON SONGS FOR JUNIOR CLASSES.

STILTON HALL	J. M. CAPEL
WHEN MOTHER READS A FAIRY TALE	H. A. CHAMBERS
BED IN SUMMER	T. P. M. BEVAN
MASTER ASCHAM IS A GOOD MAN	ROY THOMPSON
CUCKOO CLOCK	H. E. HUNT
MY SHIP AND I	R. H. MACDONALD
A TINY CALENDAR	GEOFFREY SHAW
AN AUTUMN SONG	ALEC ROWLEY
MISTER SAILORMAN	ALEC ROWLEY
MY GARDEN FLOWERS	A. RICHARDS
LITTLE BROWN HORSE	E. BOYCE
THE COMING OF SPRING	A. RICHARDS

PRICE 1s.

BOOK 282.

TWELVE UNISON SONGS FOR JUNIOR CLASSES.

LITTLE BOY BLUE	ALLAN BIGGS
WONDERING	ALEC ROWLEY
LADYBIRD	W. TAUBERT
THE OLD WOMAN	BERNARD JOHNSON
THE LITTLE OLD MAN	BERNARD JOHNSON
THE DONKEY RIDE	PERCY BOWIE
SOLDIER LAD	RUSSIAN FOLK-SONG
MANNERS	H. A. CHAMBERS
WHAT BECAME OF THEM	A. RICHARDS
THE RAINBOW	ALEC ROWLEY
THE FAIRY WING	ALEC ROWLEY
THE STAR ELF	ALEC ROWLEY

PRICE 1s.

EASY UNISON SONGS

BOOK 285.

SEVEN EASY UNISON SONGS.

KING BRUCE AND THE SPIDER	PERCY E. FLETCHER
ALL AMONG THE BARLEY	E. STIRLING
A SAD STORY	G. RATHBONE
WHERE THE POOLS ARE BRIGHT AND DEEP	C. H. LLOYD
THE OAK AND THE STREAMLET	G. HENSCHEL
LAUGH A BIT	R. B. ELLIOTT
WINDLASS SONG	ALEC ROWLEY

PRICE 1s.

BOOK 287.

SEVEN EASY UNISON SONGS.

AS I WAS GOING TO BANBURY	ROY THOMPSON
A HILL SONG	ALEC ROWLEY
SLUMBER TOWN	COLIN TAYLOR
THE ROBIN	EDGAR L. BAINTON
LADY DAFFADOWNDILLY	EDGAR L. BAINTON
GOLDEN SLUMBERS	ROY THOMPSON
LEGEND: FAIR WAS THE GARDEN	P. TCHAIKOVSKY

PRICE 8d.

BOOK 288.

SEVEN EASY UNISON SONGS.

THE SQUIRREL	R. MCLEOD
CRADLE SONG	W. TAUBERT
TO A DAISY	W. G. DIETRICH
A FLOWER CHORUS	P. E. FLETCHER
FISHER-MAIDEN'S LULLABY	R. T. WHITE
THE SINGER IN THE NIGHT	C. SHARMAN
SWING SONG	E. MOY

PRICE 8d.

BOOK 289.

SEVEN EASY UNISON SONGS.

GOSSAMER THREADS	ALEC ROWLEY
FAIRY ECHO	R. B. ELLIOTT
WHITHER AWAY	ALEC ROWLEY
BED-TIME (LULLABY)	P. BOWIE
SPRING BELLS	R. B. ELLIOTT
SWEET AND LOW	A. RICHARDS
SWEET SCENTED HAWTHORN	E. NEWTON

PRICE 8d.

BOOK 290.

SEVEN EASY UNISON SONGS.

BALLAD OF SOL AND THE BOY	FROM THE RUSSIAN
AS I LOITERED IN THE WOOD	FRENCH NURSERY RHYME
MILK O!	FELIX WHITE
MY LAND	H. RAWLINSON
OLD FOLKS AT HOME	S. C. FOSTER
SONS OF THE ISLES	W. MCNAUGHT
THE LAND WE'LL NOT FORGET	J. C. FORRESTER

PRICE 8d.

BOOK 291.

SEVEN EASY UNISON SONGS.

SANTA CLAUS	R. MCLEOD
THE LADYBIRD IN THE FIELDS	A. RICHARDS
AN ALPHABET OF FLOWERS	E. BOYCE
QUEEN MAB	C. H. LLOYD
THROUGH LOVE TO LIGHT	A. C. MACKENZIE
WHAT DOES LITTLE BIRDIE SAY?	P. E. FLETCHER
WAKE, BIRD, AWAKE	J. C. FORRESTER

PRICE 1s.

UNISON SONGS SUITABLE FOR HIGHER DIVISIONS

BOOK 284.

SEVEN UNISON SONGS

ORPHEUS WITH HIS LUTE	A. SULLIVAN
AN EMPIRE SONG	PERCY E. FLETCHER
KILLARNEY	W. M. BALFE
THE VILLAGE BLACKSMITH	W. H. WEISS
SIR EGLAMORE	H. BALFOUR GARDINER
SONG OF THE SHOEMAKERS	G. HOLST
WORSHIP	GEOFFREY SHAW

PRICE 1s.

BOOK 283.

SIX UNISON SONGS.

WHERE THE BEE SUCKS	A. SULLIVAN
SONG OF THE SEA KING	PERCY E. FLETCHER
ENGLAND AND HER COLONIES	PERCY E. FLETCHER
THE DRUMS OF FREEDOM	HERBERT E. CRIMP
IN PRAISE OF NEPTUNE	E. GERMAN
TRUTH	GEOFFREY SHAW

PRICE 1s.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NOVELLO'S SCHOOL SONG BOOKS—continued

EASY OR MODERATELY EASY TWO-PART SONGS

BOOK 295.

EIGHT EASY TWO-PART SONGS.

NOW ONCE AGAIN OUR HEARTS WE RAISE	TUNE—"LASST UNS ERFREUEN"
ROBIN, SWEET ROBIN	GRANVILLE BANTOCK
RIDING TO FAIRY-LAND	GRANVILLE BANTOCK
A WIGWAM SONG	ALEC ROWLEY
FORTUNE	SCHUMANN
AWAY WITH MELANCHOLY	MOZART
WEEL MAY THE KEEL ROW	NORTHUMBRIAN SONG
THE CITY CHILD	E. KREUZ

PRICE 8d.

BOOK 294.

SEVEN EASY TWO-PART SONGS.

THE NEW YEAR COMES	P. E. FLETCHER
SING, BONNIE BIRD	SCHUMANN
THERE IS MUSIC BY THE RIVER	PINSUTI
ROBIN HOOD	JOHN E. WEST
APRIL SHOWERS	J. L. HATTON
THREE DOUGHTY MEN	W. W. PEARSON
MARCH AWAY	ALEC ROWLEY

PRICE 8d.

BOOK 297.

SIX EASY TWO-PART SONGS.

THE HOUR OF THE TRANQUIL NIGHT	J. L. ROECKEL
BOATING	T. HUTCHINSON
TIMES AND SEASONS	E. M. BOYCE
HAIL, HAIL, TO WINTER BOLD	P. E. FLETCHER
THE FROG	E. NEWTON
SIR ROGER DE COVERLEY	T. FACER

PRICE 8d.

BOOK 296.

EIGHT EASY TWO-PART SONGS.

BOBBIE SHAFTOE'S GONE TO SEA	ROY THOMPSON
DING, DONG, BELL	ROY THOMPSON
A SONG OF SUNSHINE	G TOOTELL
ELFINTOWN	GRANVILLE BANTOCK
SONG OF THE ZEPHYR	PERCY E. FLEICHER
WHAT DOES LITTLE BIRDIE SAY?	E. KREUZ
THE GLOW OF EVENING TINTS THE BAY	H. SMART
A MORNING SONG	BERLIOZ

PRICE 8d.

BOOK 298.

NATIONAL SONGS AND AIRS.

COME LASSES AND LADS	OLD ENGLISH
WHERE ARE THE JOYS?	SCOTTISH FOLK-MELODY
THE BELLS OF ABERDOVEY	WELSH AIR
OH! WHERE'S THE SLAVE?	IRISH AIR
WITH JOCKEY TO THE FAIR	OLD ENGLISH
THE ASH GROVE	WELSH AIR
ANNIE LAURIE	SCOTTISH AIR
WHEN THROUGH LIFE UNBLEST WE ROVE	IRISH AIR
THE BONNIE BANKS OF LOCH LOMOND	SCOTTISH AIR
THE MEETING OF THE WATERS	IRISH AIR
OH! DEAR! WHAT CAN THE MATTER BE?	OLD ENGLISH

PRICE 8d.

TWO-PART SONGS SUITABLE FOR HIGHER DIVISIONS

BOOK 272.

TWELVE TWO-PART CANONS.

O BEAUTIFUL VIOLET	C. REINECKE
SONG OF THE SHIP-BUILDERS	G. HOLST
MY SHADOW	S. P. WADDINGTON
CLOUDS O'ER THE SUMMER SKY	G. HOLST
FOUNTAINS, WAKEN	A. RICHARDS
TWINKLE, TWINKLE LITTLE STAR	G. RATHBONE
COME TO THE FIELDS	A. RICHARDS
DOWN IN A GREEN AND SHADY BED	K. BOUNDY
WAKEN NOT THE SLEEPER	C. REINECKE
NINETEEN BIRDS	G. RATHBONE
GOOD-NIGHT	C. REINECKE
A CHRISTMAS CAROL	C. REINECKE

PRICE 1s.

BOOK 299.

SIX TWO-PART SONGS.

THE CORNELIUS MARCH	MENDELSSOHN
THE SCISSOR-MAN	G. RATHBONE
ABOUT THE SWEET BAG OF A BEE	H. A. CHAMBERS
HOLY NIGHT	BEETHOVEN
A FAIRY SONG	W. S. DESBOROUGH
SONG SHOULD BREATHE	J. L. HATTON

PRICE 8d.

BOOK 300.

EIGHT SACRED ANTHEMS AND TWO-PART SONGS.

I WAITED FOR THE LORD	MENDELSSOHN
AWAKE, MY SOUL	C. MACPHERSON
AN EASTER SONG	G. RATHBONE
O FOR THE WINGS OF A DOVE	MENDELSSOHN
CHILDREN, PRAY THIS LOVE TO CHERISH	SPOHR
THY WORD IS A LANTERN	A. M. RICHARDSON
THERE IS A GREEN HILL FAR AWAY	GOUNOD
OH HOW AMIABLE ARE THY DWELLINGS	J. H. MAUNDER

PRICE (Staff) 1s.

BOOK 301.

FIVE TWO-PART SONGS.

UP THE AIRY MOUNTAIN	G. RATHBONE
HUMPTY DUMPTY SAT ON A WALL	H. WALFORD DAVIES
YOU SPOTTED SNAKES	MENDELSSOHN
THE SWALLOW	E. BOYCE
IT WAS A LOVER AND HIS LASS	T. MORLEY

PRICE 1s.

BOOK 302.

SIX TWO-PART SONGS.

AUBADE	J. IRELAND
AT DAWN OF DAY	F. H. COWEN
DREAM SONG	G. RATHBONE
THE LONELY KNIGHT	E. BOYCE
MY LADY WIND	A. CARSE
LULLABY	R. B. ELLIOTT

PRICE 1s.

BOOK 303.

SIX TWO-PART SONGS.

THE CAMEL'S HUMP	E. GERMAN
A WET SHEET AND A FLOWING SEA	C. H. LLOYD
RING OUT, WILD BELLS	PERCY E. FLETCHER
THE GOSLINGS	J. F. BRIDGE
TOM-TIT	COLIN TAYLOR
OH, THE SUMMER NIGHT	PERCY E. FLETCHER

PRICE 1s.

BOOK 304.

SIX TWO-PART SONGS.

BEES	PERCY E. FLETCHER
ROLLING DOWN TO RIO	E. GERMAN
ORPHEUS WITH HIS LUTE	G. RATHBONE
CHERRY RIPE	C. E. HORN
SPRING IN THE WOODS	G. RATHBONE
THE FAIRY QUEEN	PERCY E. FLETCHER

PRICE 1s.

BOOK 305.

SEVEN TWO-PART SONGS.

TO SYLVIA	SCHUBERT
PIPER'S SONG	RUTLAND BOUGHTON
WHERE THE BEE SUCKS	ARNE
THE MINUET	A. RICHARDS
OH, THE SPRING	H. LAHEE
RING ON, SWEET ANGELUS	GOUNOD
TWIST YE, TWINE YE	A. REDHEAD

PRICE 8d.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NOVELLO'S EDITIONS

OF THE

FAVOURITE OPERAS

ADAPTED FOR

CONCERT USE.

BALFE.
*THE BOHEMIAN GIRL.
Price 3s.

DONIZETTI.
*THE DAUGHTER OF THE REGIMENT.
Price 3s.

FLOTOW.
*MARTHA.
Price 3s.

GOUNOD.
*FAUST.
Price 2s. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d.

VERDI.
*IL TROVATORE.
Price 3s. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d.

WAGNER.
TANNHÄUSER.
Price 3s.

WALLACE.
MARITANA.
Price 3s.

* Orchestral Parts for Reduced Orchestra may be obtained from the Publishers.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JAMES LYON, Mus. Doc.

ELEMENTS OF HARMONY

3*s.* 6*d.*

Answers to Questions and Exercises on the Elements of Harmony.

2*s.* 6*d.*

BANKS & SON, MUSIC PUBLISHERS, YORK.

THE ENOCH CHORAL SERIES.

Two valuable additions to a Christmas répertoire are:
"O LEAVE YOUR SHEEP" (Quittez, Pasteurs)
For Four-part Singing. Dr. Cecil Hazlehurst.
"THE HOLY CHILD" ... ... Easthope Martin.
For Four-, Three- (Ladies' Voices), and Two-part Singing.
Price each, 6*d.* net.
Send for complete lists to ENOCH & SONS, LTD., Enoch House, 58, Great Marlborough Street, W.1; and at Paris, New York, Berlin, Toronto, and Melbourne.

SUITABLE FOR ALL SEASONS.

Organ Postlude on "WE LOVE THE PLACE, O GOD." Price 2*s.*
"Effective, but not difficult; the composer deserves infinite credit."—Organist and Choirmaster Journal.
Anthem for Men's Voices, "O STRENGTH AND STAY." 3d.
Selected by Sir WALTER PARRATT, C.V.O., Mus. Doc., Oxon., for St. George's Chapel, Windsor.
Anthem, "BEHOLD, HOW GOOD AND JOYFUL." 4*d.*
Sung in many Cathedrals.
Songs, highly reviewed, 2*s.* each. To be had from the Composer, C. E. JULEFF, A.R.C.M., Tower House, Taunton.

JUST PUBLISHED.

LONDON TOWN

SONG.

THE WORDS BY
JOHN MASEFIELD.

THE MUSIC BY EDWARD GERMAN.

IN TWO KEYS.
Price Two Shillings each.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

ON A NANKIN PLATE

SONG.

WORDS BY AUSTIN DOBSON

MUSIC BY HARVEY GRACE.

TWO KEYS.

Price Two Shillings each.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

FOUR TENNYSON LYRICS

SET TO MUSIC BY
PERCY E. FLETCHER.

1. A LULLABY.
2. THE CITY CHILD.
3. THE REIGN OF THE ROSES.
4. THE THROSTLE.

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

No. 100.—NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS.

PRONUNCIATION
FOR VOICE-PRODUCTION
FROM EURHYTHM: THOUGHT IN ACTION

BY
H. H. HULBERT.

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE ENGLISH COUNTRY DANCE

GRADED SERIES

CONTAINING THE DESCRIPTION OF THE DANCES

TOGETHER WITH THE TUNES

BY

CECIL J. SHARP.

VOL. 1.

BRIGHTON CAMP.
GALOPEDE.
NANCY'S FANCY.
THE BLACK NAG.
GATHERING PEASCODS.
RUFTY TUFTY.

VOL. 2.

RIBBON DANCE.
GODDESSES.
THE MARY AND DOROTHY.
IF ALL THE WORLD WERE PAPER.
PICKING UP STICKS.
HASTE TO THE WEDDING.

VOL. 3.

BONNETS SO BLUE.
THE MAID PEEPED OUT AT THE [WINDOW.
CHRISTCHURCH BELLS.
HEY, BOYS, UP GO WE.
SELLENGER'S ROUND.
THE MERRY, MERRY MILKMAIDS.

VOL. 4.

SAGE LEAF.
EPPING FOREST.
CHILDGROVE.
THE OLD MOLE.
HIT AND MISS.
NEWCASTLE.

Price Three Shillings each Volume.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

Recent Organ and Church Music

BY

BASIL HARWOOD.

	s.	d.
FANTASIA, "CHRISTMASTIDE"	3	6
RHAPSODY	3	0
IN AN OLD ABBEY	2	0
WEDDING MARCH	2	0
THREE PRELUDES ON ANGLICAN CHANTS	2	0
VOLUNTARY IN D FLAT	2	0
A SHORT AND EASY COMMUNION SERVICE IN E FLAT ... (Voice part only, for Congregational use, 6*d.*)	1	0

ANTHEMS.

GREAT GOD, WHO, HID FROM MORTAL SIGHT (General use)	0	6
O HOW PLENTIFUL IS THY GOODNESS (Harvest) ...	0	6

HYMNS.

LEAD, KINDLY LIGHT (Tune, "Bradfield College") ...	0	2
AUTHOR OF LIFE DIVINE...	0	2

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

RECENTLY PUBLISHED.

"DREAM SONG"

FOR ORGAN.

BY H. DOUGLAS.

A most attractive Recital number.

TWO SHILLINGS NET.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

"A great acquisition to English Church Music."—Musical News and Herald.

COMMUNION SERVICE

IN F MAJOR.

BY ALFRED ALLEN.

May be sung without organ.

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

HOLY COMMUNION IN C, including AGNUS, BENEDICTUS, ETC.
BY HERBERT ROLFE, F.R.C.O.
Third thousand, 9*d.*
"... One of the most pleasing and devotional compositions of its class with which we have met for some time."—Church Review.
"... thoroughly devotional in tone."—Musical News.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

T. MEE PATTISON'S POPULAR CANTATA

THE ANCIENT MARINER

33rd 1,000.

Vocal Score, 2*s.* 6*d.* Choruses only, 1*s.* 3*d.*

Band Parts may be hired.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

JESUS, THE VERY THOUGHT OF THEE.

SACRED SONG.

THE WORDS BY

BERNARD OF CLAIRVAUX,
tr. E. CASWALL.

THE MUSIC BY

ERIC H. THIMAN.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE GOD OF LOVE MY SHEPHERD IS.

SACRED SONG.

THE WORDS BY

GEORGE HERBERT.

THE MUSIC BY

ERIC H. THIMAN.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NO. 101.—NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS.

EAR-TRAINING

INCLUDING

MUSICAL APPRECIATION AND

RHYTHMIC MOVEMENTS

BY

MABEL CHAMBERLAIN.

COMPLETE, SIX SHILLINGS.
Paper Boards, 7*s.*
Or,
In Two Books: Letterpress and Illustrations, 4*s.*
Music only, 3*s.*

The Ear-Training Course outlined in this book is intended primarily for Class use, but if a judicious selection be made from the exercises, the course can be used with equal benefit by private teachers for individual pupils. Senior pupils and students who desire to Study music, and who have received little or no previous tuition, cannot do better than work rapidly through these progressive exercises and tests. A Prospectus will be sent on application.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

TWELVE INTROITS OR SHORT ANTHEMS

SET 2.

No.
1.	GIVE EAR UNTO MY PRAYER	JACQUES ARCADELT
2.	WE WAIT FOR THY LOVING-KINDNESS	PHILIP ARMES
3.	THE SACRIFICES OF GOD	HUGH BLAIR
4.	ALMIGHTY GOD, WHO HAST ME BROUGHT	THOMAS FORD
5.	SET YOUR AFFECTIONS	ALFRED R. GAUL
6.	O GOD, WHOSE NATURE AND PROPERTY	ALAN GRAY
7.	REND YOUR HEART	F. A. GORE OUSELEY
8.	COME, LET US WORSHIP	PALESTRINA
9.	BEHOLD, GOD IS MY HELPER	JOHN STAINER
10.	I WILL LAY ME DOWN IN PEACE	ARTHUR S. SULLIVAN
11.	O GOD OF BETHEL	CHRISTOPHER TYE
12.	BLESSED ARE THEY	S. S. WESLEY

PRICE ONE SHILLING.
Each Introit may be had separately.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

MUSIC
TO THE LITTLE MINISTER
BY
A. C. MACKENZIE.

OVERTURE.

	s.	d.
String Parts	6	9
Wind Parts (Full Orchestra)	14	8
,, ,, (Small Orchestra)	MS.
Pianoforte Conductor (Just published)	3	0

THREE DANCES.

String Parts	6	9
Wind Parts (Full Orchestra)	16	3
,, ,, (Small Orchestra)	10	5
Pianoforte Conductor (Just published)	4	0

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

SCHOOL MARCHES
FOR PIANOFORTE SOLO
BOOK III.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

CONTENTS.

Arrival of the Visitors	H. Hofmann
Bright and Buxom Lasses, from "Martha"	Flotow
Instrumental Band, The	Percy E. Fletcher
Little March, A	J. D. Davis
March from "Egmont"	Beethoven
March from "St. Polycarp"	F. A. G. Ouseley
March	Th. Kullak
March from "Tannhäuser"	Wagner
Marching off to Bed	Myles B. Foster
March of Priests, from "The Magic Flute"	Mozart
Soldiers' Chorus, from "Il Trovatore"	Verdi
Toy Soldiers' March	Tschaïkowsky

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

PEDAL PLAYING

By T. HAIGH.

In introducing this important and exhaustive treatise, Dr. Haigh makes the following remarks:—

My experience as a teacher of organ-playing for over twenty years has been chiefly with students who had acquired considerable ability as pianists before commencing the study of the organ. In all such cases it is obvious that pedal-technique should be studied separately at the outset without reference to manual work at all. It is to be hoped that the study of the exercises contained in this book will in a short time accustom the student to the pedal-board, and that they will, at the same time, introduce to him a variety of footings, from which he will acquire the necessary style to enable him to cope with any difficulties of pedalling which he may encounter in his future study of organ literature generally.

The first exercises are on the long keys for alternate toes, and the whole pedal board is covered. Then follow exercises for toe and heel, introducing the short keys; after which come Scales, Arpeggi, Changing feet on the same key, Glissandos and Double notes. Part 2 consists of a large number of selected pedal passages from various works which, with the suggested footings, should prove a useful collection of pedal-studies for teachers and students alike.

CONTENTS.

PART I.—First Exercises for Alternate Toes; Arpeggi of Major Common Chords; Minor Common Chords; Changing Feet; Crossing the Feet; Exercises for Toe and Heel; Scales and Arpeggi; The Chromatic Scale; Arpeggi—Common Chords; Arpeggi—Compass One Octave; Dominant Sevenths; Diminished Sevenths; Glissando; Changing Feet Without Re-striking; Changing Feet on Repeated Notes; Double Notes; Double Notes for Both Feet.

PART II.—Thirty-eight Pages containing Ninety-five Excerpts from Standard Organ Works of all Schools, with complete Pedal indications.

PRICE 6/-.

W. PAXTON & CO., LTD., 22, HIGH STREET, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.1.

Send for Complete Graded Organ Catalogue (C. 501) gratis.

JUST PUBLISHED.

TWENTY SHORT AND EASY PIECES
FOR THE ORGAN

SET VI.

No.
1.	ADAGIO FROM SEXTETT (Op. 81)	BEETHOVEN
2.	ALLEGRO GRANDIOSO	HUGH BLAIR
3.	LARGO IN E FLAT	E. BUNNETT
4.	MODERATO	GEORGE CALKIN
5.	BERCEUSE	CÉSAR CUI
6.	ADAGIO IN D	OTTO DIENEL
7.	POSTLUDE	EDMONDSTOUNE DUNCAN
8.	IMPROMPTU IN A	A. M. GOODHART
9.	WEDDING MARCH	A. GUILMANT
10.	MARCH FROM "ODE ON ST. CECILIA'S DAY"	HANDEL
11.	LIEDER OHNE WORTE, No. 9	F. MENDELSSOHN-BARTHOLDY
12.	ALLEGRO IN C	GUSTAV MERKEL
13.	ANDANTE	REISSIGER
14.	POSTLUDE IN F	J. VARLEY ROBERTS
15.	PRELUDE	B. LUARD-SELBY
16.	PRELUDE IN A	HENRY SMART
17.	ANDANTE CON MOTO	CHARLES STEGGALL
18.	ALLEGRETTO GRAZIOSO	BERTHOLD TOURS
19.	COMMUNION IN B FLAT	FERRIS TOZER
20.	CON MOTO	JOHN E. WEST

PRICE FOUR SHILLINGS.
Cloth, Six Shillings.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

PROGRESSIVE STUDIES

FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

EDITED, ARRANGED IN GROUPS, AND THE FINGERING REVISED AND SUPPLEMENTED BY

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

THIS Collection of Studies is intended to illustrate the various elements of a complete course of pianoforte technique, and to provide students with the means of attacking and overcoming the different special difficulties which have to be encountered. With this view, the Studies have been arranged in groups, those in each group being placed in progressive order, and having reference to some one particular difficulty. The greater part of the Studies themselves have been selected from the standard works of the most eminent Study-writers, and with these are included numerous others, which, though of equally great practical utility, have hitherto been less generally accessible.

1.	FIVE-FINGER STUDIES...	Part 1
2.*	,, ,, ...	,, 2
3.	SCALES	Part 1
4.	,, ...	,, 2
5.	BROKEN CHORDS...	Part 1
6.	,, ,, ...	,, 2
7.	,, ,, ...	,, 3
8.	,, ,, ...	,, 4
9.	,, ,, ...	,, 5
10.	LEFT HAND...	Part 1
11.	,, ,, ...	,, 2
12.	,, ,, ...	,, 3
13.	,, ,, ...	,, 4
14.*	ARPEGGIO	Part 1
15.	,, ...	,, 2
16.	,, ...	,, 3
17.	VELOCITY	Part 1
18.	,, ...	,, 2
19.	,, ...	,, 3
20.	,, ...	,, 4
21.	,, ...	,, 5
22.	,, ...	,, 6
23.	,, ...	,, 7
24.	FIGURES IN SEQUENCE	Part 1
25.*	,, ,, ...	,, 2
26.	BROKEN THIRDS, SIXTHS, AND OCTAVES	Part 1
27.	BROKEN THIRDS, SIXTHS, AND OCTAVES	,, 2
28.	SHAKES	Part 1
29.	,, ...	,, 2
30.	,, ...	,, 3
31.	DOUBLE NOTES	Part 1
32.	,, ,, ...	,, 2
33.	,, ,, ...	,, 3
34.	,, ,, ...	,, 4
35.	OCTAVES	Part 1
36.*	,, ...	,, 2
37.	CHORDS	Part 1
38.	,, ...	,, 2
39.*	STACCATO
40.	REPETITION	Part 1
41.*	REPETITION AND TREMOLO	,, 2
42.	,, ,, ...	,, 3
43.*	PART-PLAYING	Part 1
44.	,, ,, ...	,, 2
45.*	ORNAMENTS	Part 1
46.	,, ...	,, 2
47.	ACCOMPANIED MELODY	Part 1
48.	,, ,, ...	,, 2
49.	EXTENSIONS AND SKIPS	Part 1
50.*	,, ,, ...	,, 2
51.	RHYTHM	Part 1
52.*	,, ...	,, 2
53.	EXERCISES FOR THE WEAKER FINGERS. By J. A. O'NEILL.
54.	WRIST STUDIES (Handgelenksübungen). By ARNOLD KRUG.
55.	EXERCISES FOR FACILITATING INDEPENDENCE OF THE FINGERS (Übungen für die Selbständigkeit der Finger). By ARNOLD KRUG.
56.	PRELIMINARY STUDIES IN PLAYING POLYPHONIC MUSIC (Vorübungen für das polyphone Spiel). By ARNOLD KRUG.

 These Books contain Studies composed by Mr. Franklin Taylor specially for this Series.*

FIFTY-SIX BOOKS, PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE EACH.

FROM THE ABOVE:

SELECTED PIANOFORTE STUDIES

PROGRESSIVELY ARRANGED BY

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

THE present collection of Studies is designed to provide teachers with a short course of Pianoforte Technique adapted to the needs of the average pupil, the intention being to spare the teacher the labour of choosing a sufficiently varied selection from the large mass of material existing, and at the same time to ensure that the different departments of technique shall be undertaken in the order which experience has proved to be the most beneficial.

The Studies are grouped in two Sets, and are so arranged that the different Books in which they are contained may be taken in consecutive order, but pupils who are already further advanced than the elementary stage represented by Set I. may commence at once with Set II., which will be found to be complete in itself, and to illustrate all the essential elements of technique.

Where additional studies are desired, or studies on certain subjects which are not touched upon in this series, the larger collection, published under the title of "Progressive Studies" (from which the present examples have been selected), is of course available

IN TWO SETS (EIGHT BOOKS), PRICE TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE EACH BOOK.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

CHAPPELL & CO.'S
LATEST SONG SUCCESSES

GUY D'HARDELOT.
"Dreams o' the Dusk"
"Wings"
"The Curtain Falls"

MONTAGUE F. PHILLIPS.
"April is a Lady"
"The Quest"
"Song of a Nightingale"

TERESA DEL RIEGO.
"My Ship"
"Life is a Caravan"
"If any little Song of Mine"

MOLLY CAREW.
"Piper June"
"Advice"

REGINALD BENYON.
"Life's Summertide"
"If you were in my Garden"

JAMES F. HANLEY.
"Just a Cottage Small"

HERMANN LÖHR.
"The Thought of You"
"The Hills of Heaven"
"Give"

HAYDN WOOD.
"I Look into your Garden"
"Praise"
"Dearest, I love the Morning"

ERNEST LONGSTAFFE.
"When the Sergeant-Major's on Parade."

ERIC COATES.
"Brown Eyes I love"
"Bird Songs at Eventide"
"Song of the Little Folk"

R. CONINGSBY CLARKE.
"Daphne"

OSCAR RASBACH.
"Trees"

JESSIE L. DEPPEN.
"Oh, Miss Hannah"

Price 2s. net each.

"THE MELBA METHOD"—Invaluable to Teachers and Singers.

CHAPPELL & CO., LTD., 50, New Bond Street, London, W.1.

GIFTS OF ARTISTIC MERIT
FOR CHRISTMAS AND THE NEW YEAR.

A well produced volume of good music is always an acceptable present.

All volumes described in this list are excellent examples of the highest class of workmanship and general production, being, in fact "Editions de Luxe" in the full sense of the term.

They represent only a very small section from our catalogue, but any required volume can be bound to order.

We make a speciality of high-class binding of all descriptions.

	s.	d.
EL AMOR BRUJO. Manuel de Falla (Cover design by N. Gontcharova.)	10	0
MASTER PETER'S PUPPET SHOW. Manuel de Falla ... ... (With illustrated Cover and Title-Page.)	15	0
THE THREE CORNERED HAT. Manuel de Falla ... ... (Cover design by Ethelbert White.)	15	0
BORIS GODOUNOV. M. Moussorgsky (Original Version.)	30	0
LA BOUTIQUE FANTASQUE. Rossini-Respighi ... ... (Illustrated by A. Derain.)	10	0
LA BOUTIQUE FANTASQUE. Rossini-Respighi. Suite for Piano (Artistic cover design by Wyndham Payne.)	3	0
THE GOOD HUMOURED LADIES. Scarlatti-Tommasini ... ... (Cover design by A. P. Allinson.)	10	0
LES NOCES. I. Strawinsky	20	0

J. & W. CHESTER, LTD., 11, Great Marlborough Street, London, W.1.

London:—Printed by Novello and Company, Limited, at Novello Works, Soho, and published at 160, Wardour Street, Soho, W.1. Wednesday, December 1, 1926.

THE

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, N.W.1.

INSTITUTED 1822. INCORPORATED BY ROYAL CHARTER, 1830.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT AND STRATHEARN, K.G.

PRINCIPAL—

JOHN B. McEWEN, M.A., MUS.D. OXON., F.R.A.M., F.R.C.M.

THE ACADEMIC YEAR

Divided into three terms, each of 12 weeks. LENT TERM begins 10th January. Entrance Examination begins 5th January.

SCHOLARSHIPS.

69 Scholarships and Exhibitions in active operation. They are obtainable by competition only, and except where the contrary is stated, both Students and non-Students are eligible.

L.R.A.M.

Examinations take place during the Summer, Christmas, and Easter vacations. Open to Musical Composers, Conductors, Performers, and Teachers, whether educated at the Academy or not.

TEACHERS' TRAINING COURSES

Entirely re-organised. The Examination for the SPECIAL DIPLOMA IN TEACHING MUSIC will be held in July, 1927.

CONDUCTORS' CLASSES AND OPERA CLASS.

Special Courses for the Training of Conductors under the supervision of Sir Henry J. Wood, Mus. D., F.R.A.M., Ernest Read, F.R.A.M., &c. OPERA CLASS under the direction of Julius Harrison, Hon. R.A.M.

ENSEMBLE CLASSES.

Under the direction of Lionel Tertis, F.R.A.M., and Herbert Withers, F.R.A.M.

JUNIOR SCHOOL.

Suitable curriculum for pupils under 16. Fees, Seven Guineas per term.

CONCERTS.

Members of the Public are invited to attend the Students' Practice Concerts, which take place every Saturday, at 3 p.m., during the Term. Particulars of the Public Orchestral, Choral, and Chamber Concerts are advertised in the daily Press.

PROSPECTUS,

Entry Forms, and all further information may be obtained on application.

A. ALGER BELL,
Acting-Secretary.

BY APPOINTMENT

TO HER LATE MAJESTY QUEEN ALEXANDRA.

MARSHALL & ROSE PIANOS.
ANGELUS PLAYER-PIANOS.
THE AMPICO
IN THE MARSHALL & ROSE.
THE GRANBY
SIMPLEX PLAYER-PIANOS.
ARTISTYLE MUSIC ROLLS.

SIR HERBERT MARSHALL & SONS LTD

Drawer Type. REPRODUCING MODEL. Electrically Operated.

Marshall & Rose

THE 20TH CENTURY PIANO

SIR HERBERT MARSHALL & SONS, LTD.
ANGELUS HALL, 233, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.1.

C. BECHSTEIN

PIANO CO. LTD.

BECHSTEIN-WELTE MIGNON THE HIGHEST ACHIEVEMENT IN REPRODUCING PIANOS

LARGE FACTORY
FOR RECONDITIONING.
Fully equipped for all Repairs and Renovations.
WHITEFIELD PLACE

NEW MODELS
NOW READY.
LILIPUT & MINIATURE GRANDS.
ALSO UPRIGHT GRANDS.

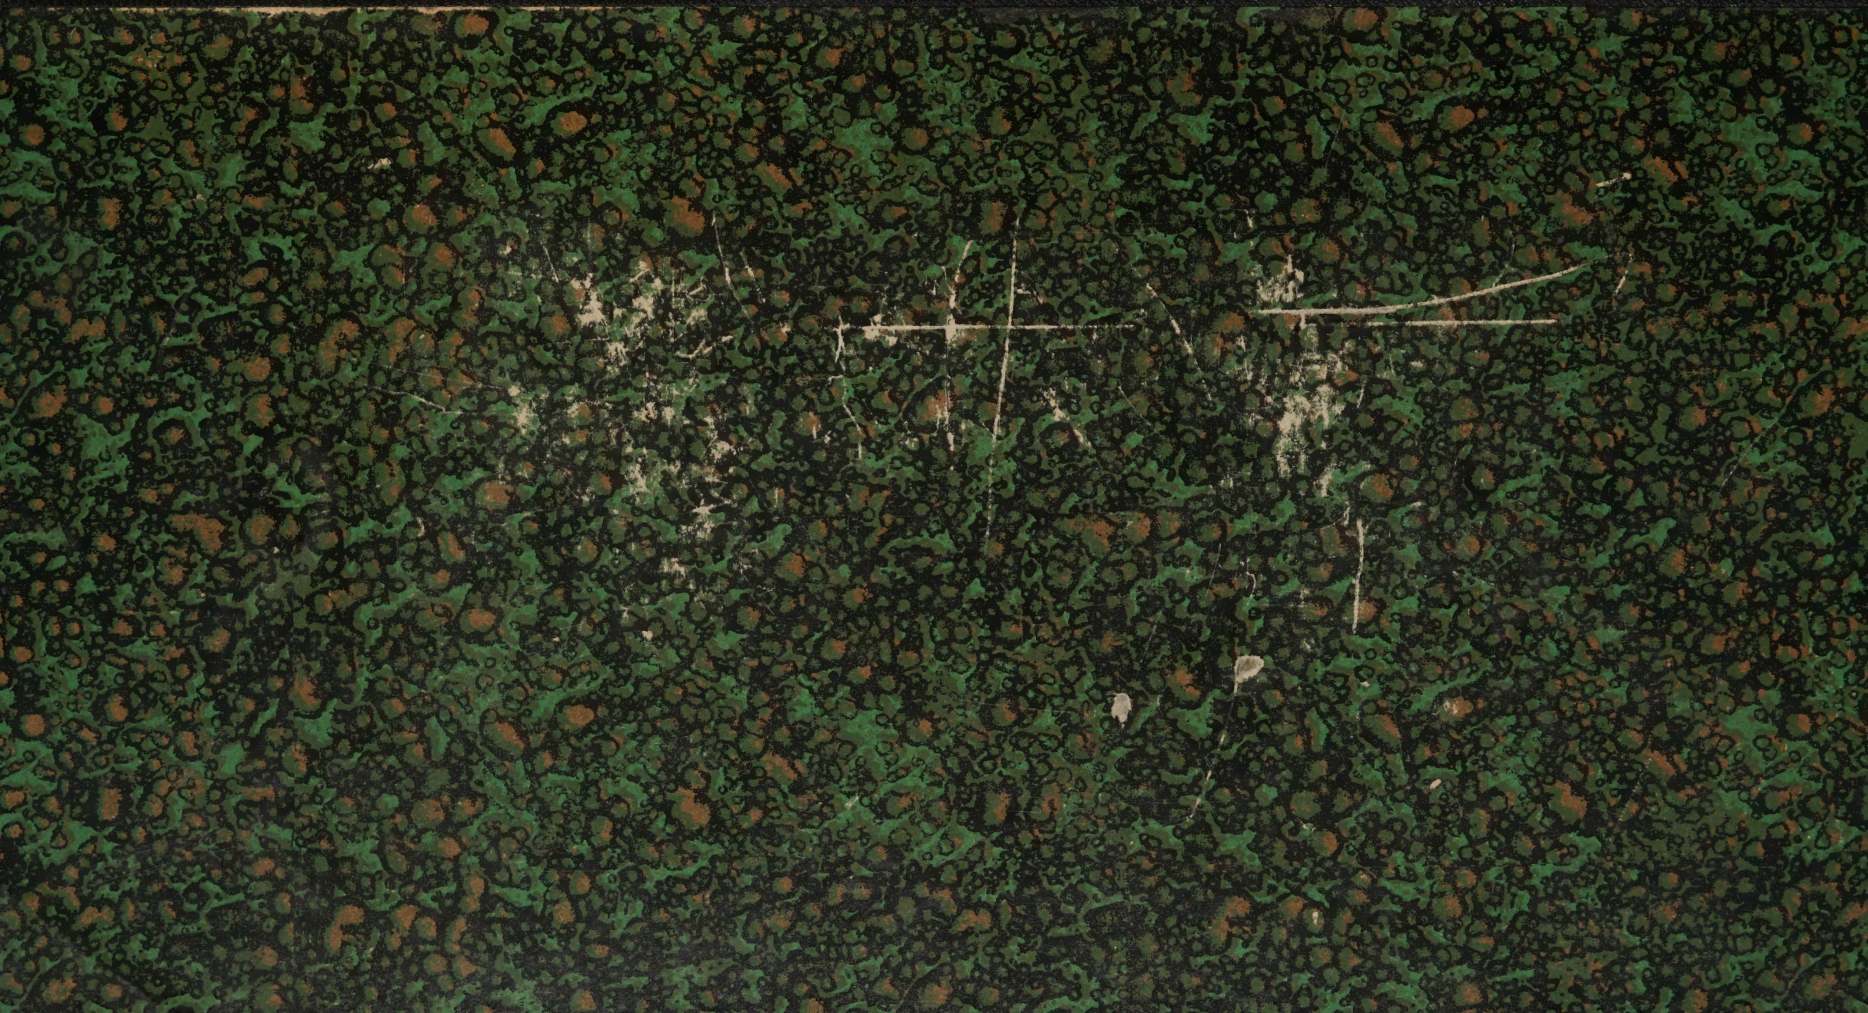
BECHSTEIN HOUSE
65, SOUTH MOLTON STREET,
LONDON, W.1

Telephone: MAYFAIR 1046.
Telegrams: BECHSTEIN, WESDO, LONDON

London:—Printed by NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited, at Novello Works, Soho, and published at 160, Wardour Street, Soho, W.-1, Wednesday, December 1, 1926.

MADE IN ENGLAND

BOSTON PUBLIC LIBRARY
3 9999 08819 016 8


MAR 2 5 1927